16 Even if it does not have legal effect, a Charter agreed by EU Member States and EU institutions setting out a detailed list of rights could be used as a platform for making such rights legally enforceable in the future. Having endorsed them in the Charter, no Member State would be able to deny acceptance of these rights or their 'fundamental' nature.

17 The incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty would bring into existence two parallel systems of human rights protection, thereby blurring the roles of the European Court of Human Rights and the European Court of Justice. The ECJ is already showing signs of overload. An extension of its remit in this way would have major resource implications, given the need for speedy resolution of cases.

Conclusion

18 The EEF supports a declaratory Charter clearly setting out the existing fundamental rights recognised by the EU.

19 The EEF hopes that the concerns of the industry as expressed above will be taken into account by the Convention drafting the Charter and the European Institutions.

Erarbeitung einer EU-Charta der Grundrechte

Appell des Deutschen Städte- und Gemeindebundes nach einem Recht auf Selbstverwaltung in der EU-Charta der Grundrechte

Sehr geehrter Herr Bundespräsident a.D. Professor Dr. Herzog, der Deutsche Städte- und Gemeindebund möchte gerne einen Vorschlag im Rahmen der Erarbeitung einer EU-Charta der Grundrechte unterbreiten.

Die Städte und Gemeinden sind in vielfältiger Weise vom europäischen Integrationsprozess betroffen. Sie legen dabei ein klares Bekenntnis zur Europäischen Union und zum europäischen Einigungsprozess ab. Wenn davon gesprochen wird, ein "Europa der Bürger und Bürgerinnen" errichten zu wollen, so möchten wir in diesem Zusammenhang darauf hinweisen, dass es die kommunale Ebene ist, die dem Bürger am nächsten steht und tagtäglich vor diesen in der Verantwortung, die Politikgestaltung der höheren politischen Ebenen zu vertreten und umzusetzen. Gleichermäßen erlaubt und gewährleistet es die kommunale Selbstverwaltung, die Identifizierung des Bürgers mit dem Staat zu stärken und Demokratie als politische Mitwirkungsmöglichkeit unmittelbar erlebbar zu machen.

Der Deutsche Städte- und Gemeindebund ist daher der Auffassung, dass der Prozess der Erarbeitung einer EU-Charta der Grundrechte auch Anlass sein sollte, über dieses Politikmodell und dessen Zukunft im europäischen Integrationsprozess nachzudenken und entsprechende Schlüsse für die Charta zu ziehen.

Bei der EU-Charta der Grundrechte geht es nicht nur darum, einen Konsens unter den nationalen (verfassungs-)rechtlichen Grundpositionen zu erzeugen. Die supranationalen Handlungsformen der EU haben Frage- und Problemstellungen auch für bürgerschaftliche Rechtspositionen erzeugt, die naturgemäß bisher von den nationalen Rechtsordnungen nicht beantwortet werden mussten. Daher muss eine EU-Charta der Grundrechte notwendigerweise über den Konsens der nationalen Ordnungen hinaus Antworten auf diese europäischen Fragen geben.

Dies betrifft insbesondere das Subsidiaritätsprinzip, das in der sowohl in der Präambel des EU-Vertrages wie auch in Art. 5 des EG-Vertrages unmittelbar im europäischen Primärrecht verankert ist. Da es sich hierbei um ein so tragendes wie grundlegendes Prinzip für die (zukünftige) Entwicklung der Europäischen Union handelt, muss das Subsidiaritätsprinzip auch als bürgerschaftliche Rechtskomponente Aufnahme in die EU-Charta der Grundrechte finden.

Wir schlagen daher vor, dies dadurch anzustreben, dass folgende Textpassage eines "Rechts auf Selbstverwaltung" zur Verwirklichung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips im Verhältnis zum Bürger in die Charta aufgenommen wird:

"Die Europäische Union gewährleistet und fördert das Recht der Bürgerinnen und Bürger, ihre örtlichen Angelegenheiten mit Hilfe kommunaler Gebietskörperschaften selbst effektiv zu gestalten, die über demokratisch legitimierte Beschlussfassungsorgane und eine große Autonomie im Hinblick auf ihre Befugnisse und Mittel verfügen."

Ein bürgerschaftliches Recht auf effektive Gestaltung der örtlichen Angelegenheiten durch demokratisch gewählte Vertretungen ist eine praktische Ausprägung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips. So wie es möglich war, die Inhalte der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention in Artikel 6 des EU-Vertrages aufzunehmen, muss es auch möglich sein, die für die Bürgernähe wesentlichen örtlichen Freiheits- und Gestaltungsrechte in geeigneter Form zu gewährleisten. Dies gilt umsomehr, als die lokale Gestaltung des unmittelbaren Lebensumfeldes ein wichtiger Bestandteil europäischen Kultur- und Politikverständnisses ist.

Vor der Gründung der Nationalstaaten war Europa ein Gebilde aus Städten und Gemeinden. Aus diesen selbstbewussten dezentralen Strukturen ist auch die EU gewachsen. Die in der Charta der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung des Europarates (1988) festgeschriebenen Grundsätze der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung sind allen EU-Mitgliedsstaaten gemein. Diese Charta wurde von nahezu allen EU-Mitgliedsstaaten völkerrechtlich verbindlich ratifiziert. Daher kann bereits davon gesprochen werden, dass die Grundsätze kommunaler Selbstverwaltungstätigkeit zur nationalen Identität der Mitgliedsstaaten im Sinne des Art. 6 Abs. 3 EU-Vertrag zählen.

Der beratende Ausschuss der regionalen und lokalen Gebietskörperschaften in der Europäischen Union (AdR) hat wiederholt ihre Aufnahme in die EG-Verträge gefordert. Dies ist um so notwendiger und nützlicher, als die Charta der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung die erste rechtliche Vereinbarung zwischen europäischen Staaten war, in der das Subsidiaritätsprinzip definiert wird.

Bei dem Subsidiaritätsprinzip handelt es sich um ein sozialphilosophisches Konzept. Es betrifft in grundlegender Weise die Gestaltung einer gesellschaftlichen Kompetenz- und Zuständigkeitsverteilung. Diese Verteilung lässt in erkennbarer Weise Schlüsse für die Zuweisung von Kompetenzen für die über- und untergeordneten Regierungs- und Verwaltungsebenen eines Staates zu. Es wäre somit angemessen, in der EU-Charta der Grundrechte die Grundsätze einer effektiven Gestaltung der örtlichen Lebensverhältnisse als bürgerschaftliche Rechtsposition aufzunehmen.

Der "örtliche Bezug" des Subsidiaritätsprinzips ist bereits heute im EG-Vertrag erwähnt. So gibt bspw. Art. 19 Abs. 1 EG-Vertrag jedem Unionsbürger das aktive und passive Wahlrecht bei Kommunalwahlen. Dieses durch den EG-Vertrag gewährleistete Recht unterstellt denotwendig eine effektive Gestaltung der Lebensverhältnisse vor Ort durch demokratisch gewählte Vertretungen. Es ist daher nur konsequent, diese Komponente auch in der EU-Charta der Grundrechte anzuerkennen. Schließlich bringt es das Subsidiaritätsprinzip schlechthin zum Ausdruck, dass politische Entscheidungen möglichst bürgernah getroffen werden. Mit einem modernen Grundrecht auf Selbstverwaltung und Subsidiarität betritt man also im EG-Recht nicht grundsätzlich "Neuland".

Der AdR hat in seiner Stellungnahme zur Erarbeitung einer EU-Grundrechtecharta (Dokument CdR 327/99 rev. 1) ebenfalls aufgefordert, ein bürgerschaftliches Recht aufzunehmen, nach dem die örtlichen Angelegenheiten von demokratisch gewählten Vertretungen effektiv wahrgenommen werden können. Dies wird zu dem zutreffend in der Initiativstellungnahme des Ausschusses der Regionen zu dem Thema "Unionsbürgerschaft" (Az.: CdR 226/99 rev. 2) zum Ausdruck gebracht.

Gerade im Zusammenhang mit der Erweiterung der EU nach Mittel- und Osteuropa hat dieser Zusammenhang neue Bedeutung erlangt. Die Beitrittsstaaten legen großen Wert auf die Kultivierung lokaler und regionaler Demokratie, gerade und auch im EU-Zusammenhang. Durch eine möglichst bürgernahe Politik in der EU erfolgt zudem eine Stärkung der Europäischen Integration. Der Formulierungsvorschlag des Deutschen Städte- und Gemeindebundes für ein Recht auf Selbstverwaltung als Ausprägung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips überlässt es zudem ganz im Sinne des Subsidiaritätsprinzips den Mitgliedsstaaten und Regionen selbst, wie die konkrete Ausgestaltungen örtlicher Demokratie erfolgen soll.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

(Dr. Gerd Landsberg)

1. The European Union reaffirms that all persons with disabilities - men, women and children - have a right to protection against discrimination by full and equal enjoyment of the international standards on human rights which have been laid down in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.
2. Persons with disabilities have, individually and collectively, a right to equal opportunities and non-discrimination.
 - (a). Human rights are universal and, according to their nature, apply to all human beings, including persons with disabilities, because all people are born equal and have the same inalienable rights to life, education, work, independent living and access to active participation in all aspects of social life in the Member States. Any violation of this fundamental principle of equality and any discrimination or other negative differential treatment of persons with disabilities inconsistent with the UN Standard Rules on Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities is therefore a violation of his or her human rights as a disabled person and citizen in the European Union.
 - (b). Reaffirming The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, Chapter II, B, 6, article 63 and 64, and The Convention on the Rights of the Child, in particular article 23, the Member States reiterate their responsibility for and commitment to enhance equal opportunities for persons with disabilities as stipulated in the UN Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities.
 - (c). While the obligation to implement the UN Standard Rules on Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities lies primarily with the Member States it is also a matter of utmost importance and deep concern for the European Union. The Problems that need to be addressed in creating equal opportunities for persons with disabilities must be raised and solved at international, European, national, regional and local level and in every sector of society, be it public or private, where equal opportunities do not exist.
 - (d). The European Union and the member States are committed to combat and eliminate all socially - determined barriers, be they environmental, financial, social, cultural or psychological, which exclude or restrict disabled persons from full participation, inclusion and mainstreaming in the social life of the society where they live.

3. Persons with disabilities have individually a right to:
 - * Effective medical care and rehabilitation services so that they can reach and sustain their optimum level of independence and function.
 - * Independent living, integration and active participation in all aspects of society.
 - * Access to the physical environment as well as to information and communication.
 - * Access to shelter, infrastructure, means of public transport and all other basic services.
 - * Access to education and studies at all levels in integrated settings – taking into consideration the special needs of e.g. deaf people.
 - * Equal opportunities for productive and gainful employment in the labour market.
 - * Social security and income maintenance if they temporarily or permanently are unable to support their families and themselves.
 - * A right to full participation in the development process and inclusion in poverty eradication programmes.
4. Persons with disabilities have individually and collectively a right to:
 - * Formation and membership of organizations of disabled people and a right for such organizations to speak for and act as legitimate representatives on behalf of their members.
 - * Rehabilitation programmes
 - * Development of regional, national and local plans and programmes, concerning all the target areas for equal participation, in accordance with Rule 1 - 12 of the UN Standard Rules for Equalization of opportunities for Persons with Disabilities.
5. Persons with disabilities should be included in all strategies and plans aiming at eradication of poverty, promoting education and enhancing employment. Such strategies and plans should not only contain special components aiming at persons with disabilities, but also integrate persons with disabilities in the general measures and support offered to the poor and underprivileged parts of the population.

6. (a). Within the European Union and the Member States it is incumbent upon anyone who does not respect, comply with or acts in conformity with the UN Standard Rules on Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities to substantiate that this treatment does not constitute discrimination against disabled persons.
 - (b). No European, national or international legal instrument must be interpreted or construed to place persons with disabilities at a disadvantage in any context or offer them less protection than other persons.
 - (c). Whenever a particular group of vulnerable, marginalized or impoverished persons are mentioned in this Charter or in any other Human Rights instrument the text shall be read to include persons with disabilities belonging to the group.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 24 mai 2000CHARTE 4320/00*CONTRIB 186*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

DROITS FONDAMENTAUX

La COFACE a publié, dans la perspective de la prochaine C.I.G., une déclaration commune avec deux organisations européennes qui défendent les droits des enfants : Euronet et E.F.C.W.

Il y est fait notamment référence aux droits fondamentaux, en ces termes :

"L'Union respectera les droits fondamentaux, comme garantis par la Convention européenne pour la Défense des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4.11.50 et la Convention O.N.U. sur les Droits de l'Enfant, adoptée le 20.11.89".

Au delà de cette déclaration commune, la COFACE, porte-parole des associations familiales des Etats membres de l'U.E., tient à préciser sa position relative au projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux. Sans revenir sur un certain nombre de points déjà très largement admis, elle souhaite en effet formuler des propositions spécifiquement axées sur les droits des familles.

Des principes généraux

1. L'égalité entre tous les citoyens et le rejet de toute forme de discrimination requièrent une reconnaissance explicite de la diversité des modèles familiaux dans les Etats européens.
2. L'égalité entre les enfants implique que tous bénéficient des mêmes droits, sans référence au statut matrimonial de leur(s) parents.
3. Le vieillissement des populations européennes et l'évolution des familles exigent l'organisation d'une "société tous âges" qui prenne largement en compte les besoins de chacun et notamment des personnes âgées en voie de dépendance.

Des droits concrets

1. Protection sociale

Le droit à la protection sociale doit être garanti et prévoir explicitement que :

- tous les enfants ont droit aux soins de santé et à des prestations familiales,
- toutes les personnes âgées doivent pouvoir bénéficier de revenus (retraites) et de services (soins de santé et aide à la vie journalière si nécessaire),
- enfants et adultes handicapés ont droit à un soutien - en argent et/ou en services - répondant à leurs besoins spécifiques,
- un revenu minimum garanti doit compléter les régimes de sécurité sociale, en vue d'assurer un "filet de sécurité" à ceux que les aléas de la vie ont marginalisés.

2. Education - Formation

- Tous les enfants doivent avoir accès à l'école et à une formation qui leur permette de s'insérer dans la vie économique et sociale,
- le droit à une formation "tout au long de la vie" doit permettre à chacun de trouver sa place dans notre société en évolution,
- le processus d'équivalence des diplômes entre pays de l'U.E. doit être amélioré et complété.

3. Emploi

- Dans le cadre des programmes pour l'emploi et l'intégration sociale, il faut assurer aux travailleurs (euses) de réelles possibilités de concilier emploi, vie familiale et insertion sociale,

4. Droit civil

- Dans le contexte du grand marché intérieur et du rejet des discriminations, il importe de garantir non seulement aux citoyens européens mais aussi aux ressortissants des pays tiers séjournant dans les Etats membres de l'U.E. un regroupement familial effectif, ouvert à l'ensemble de leur ménage,
- le respect des droits de l'enfant inclut un règlement équilibré des litiges entre les parents, notamment en cas de divorce ou de séparation de personnes de nationalités différentes.

5. Protection des consommateurs

- Les services d'intérêt général tels que les distributions d'eau et d'énergie, les services postaux et de téléphone, doivent être accessibles à toute la population,
- le consommateur a droit à une information objective sur les biens de consommation mis à sa disposition ; il doit notamment avoir l'assurance que sa sécurité alimentaire fait l'objet de contrôles sérieux au niveau européen,
- l'accès à des soins médicaux de bonne qualité doit être garanti à tous, ce qui suppose un financement adéquat et une bonne répartition géographique des services.

6. Le droit à la parole

- La citoyenneté européenne ne se limite pas au droit de vote ; elle s'exprime aussi par la participation organisée et continue à la construction d'une Europe démocratique. Le droit des O.N.G. à être consultées sur les questions qui concernent les groupes de population qu'elles représentent doit être garanti et assorti de conditions qui permettent à ces O.N.G. d'assumer pleinement leur rôle de porte- parole.

on the Charter of Fundamental Rights

The European Broadcasting Union (EBU/UER)¹ welcomes the consultation organized by the Convention which is drawing up a Charter of Fundamental Rights, and the involvement of civil society in that process. The present contribution concentrates on freedom of expression and other issues related to the media and the information society.

Before addressing those particular issues, however, we would briefly express our general agreement with the Charter project itself and the underlying recognition it gives that the protection of fundamental rights vis-à-vis the institutions of the European Union should be improved. A catalogue of fundamental rights enshrined in a Charter can lead to a stronger commitment on the part of the European institutions to fundamental rights, and to better enforcement of such rights at the European level. It will make the guarantee of fundamental rights more transparent, and readily understandable for European citizens, than in the current wording of Article 6(2) of the EU Treaty.

To achieve these objectives, it will be necessary for the institutions of the European Union to be subject to a binding legal text on fundamental rights, just as the Member States are subject to the European Convention on Human Rights and the fundamental rights enshrined in their national constitutions. Required too will be effective enforcement, through a Court specializing in human rights, open to direct access by citizens. Such a Court already exists in the form of the European Court of Human Rights; in this context, the option of the European Union becoming a party to the European Convention on Human Rights should be considered.

1. Freedom of expression

From the outset we would express satisfaction with Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights as it has been interpreted and applied by the European Court of Human Rights. Article 10 has become one of the cornerstones of democracy, and of a free media system, throughout Europe.

We therefore welcome the clarification in the draft Charter that nothing in the text may be interpreted as placing restrictions on the protection afforded by the European Convention on

Human Rights. For us, this is a very important point to retain; the protection afforded by Article 10 should be regarded as untouchable.

There is no need to "reinvent" Article 10. We believe that the Convention drawing up the Charter has been wise, in formulating the right to freedom of expression in its provisional draft, to retain the wording of Article 10 (i.e. the first two sentences of Article 10, which contain the essence).

Regarding possible limitations on freedom of expression, we appreciate, in particular, the emphasis that the Strasbourg Court of Human Rights has placed on the requirement that any limitation must be "necessary in a democratic society". It is welcome that the current draft takes up, at least in its horizontal rule on limitations, the criterion that any limitations must be necessary for the protection of legitimate interests in a democratic society. This criterion must be maintained.

Our first message, therefore, is that it is important to maintain the "acquis", i.e. Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

2. New issues: Media freedom and pluralism, cultural diversity, access to content

On the other hand, new issues have cropped up in the past 50 years, following the adoption of the Convention, and the Charter is an opportunity to address them in a modern way. The Charter can thus provide added value if it tackles such issues as media freedom, media pluralism, cultural diversity and equal access to information and content. Many of these issues are not really new, and they have been addressed in the framework of freedom of expression, and the case law regarding Article 10. However, in view of increased awareness of their importance, it would seem appropriate to address them now in a more direct way.

A free, pluralistic media system which functions properly is essential for democracy. This applies not only to the new democracies, which now stand on the threshold of the EU, but also to the democratic foundations of the EU itself. Such a system is also a means of fulfilling the political, cultural and social needs of citizens and of society as a whole.

Freedom of expression and information as a right for individuals cannot offer its full benefits for a democratic society unless there is a framework which ensures that the media system functions properly (with sufficient financial resources, a proper legal framework, and well-trained journalists), and unless there are safeguards for media pluralism (and media conglomerates are prevented from becoming dominant and controlling public opinion), as well as safeguards for cultural identity and diversity (so that they are not brushed aside by market forces and globalization). Nor can these benefits be achieved if key political, educational and cultural content is not accessible to all citizens, or if part of the population finds itself excluded from access to the new communications networks.

Consequently, each State must be the guarantor of a free, pluralistic media system, through, in particular, the creation of an appropriate legal and financial framework. One of the greatest challenges here is probably the safeguarding of media pluralism, and digitization makes these challenges even greater. Today we see strong concentrations in digital television (with very few digital television platforms), mega-mergers (as between Time Warner and AOL), and the emergence of new gatekeeper positions (regarding set-top box technology, conditional access systems, navigation systems, electronic programme guides, APIs, etc).

It is for Member States to take the necessary measures to guarantee the freedom of the press, of broadcasting and of other media, and to safeguard media pluralism and cultural diversity, and that should remain the case². We therefore welcome the clarification in the current draft that the provisions of the Charter shall not establish any competence or any new task for the Community or the Union.

What is important is that the European institutions, within their spheres of competence, are bound by these values and objectives, by the obligation to contribute to a free and pluralistic media system and thus underpin the media and cultural policies of the Member States. Within their spheres of competence, the European institutions should contribute positively to the realization of the objectives of media pluralism and cultural diversity. This becomes relevant, for example, in the setting-up and implementation of Community support schemes (not only the MEDIA programme), in the application of internal market rules and, of course, competition rules.

One of the most sensitive areas is the funding of the media. Access to appropriate funding is a basic requirement for any media system, and for media pluralism in particular. In this area the European institutions must not only respect the competence of each Member State but must also ensure that any decisions falling within their spheres of competence and liable to have an impact on funding fully respect media freedom and contribute to media pluralism. This concerns access by the media to all kinds of advertising revenue, and access by public service broadcasters to public or mixed funding, but also taxation on revenue (e.g. reduced VAT rates for cultural or media products).

A final issue is the need to guarantee access for everyone to a diverse, comprehensive choice of content.

Nowadays, much attention is paid to the information society, or knowledge society, and to the importance of giving everyone the possibility to participate. This is not only a matter of access to the Internet. In fact, digital television will play an important role in the democratization of access to the information society, in integration and social cohesion, and in preventing a divide between the information haves and have-nots.

² The competence of the Member States has been reaffirmed, as far as public service broadcasting is concerned, by the Amsterdam Protocol on the system of public broadcasting in the Member States (Protocol No. 32 annexed to the EC Treaty).

The underlying concern is that every citizen should be entitled to participate actively in the political, cultural and social life of society. Today, participation in political or cultural life is less often through personal participation in events than indirectly through the media. It is thus essential for all individuals to have access, via communications networks, to a diverse, comprehensive choice of content relevant to their cultural and social background.

Providing varied and balanced programming for all - and not least political, educational and cultural content - has traditionally been a task for public service broadcasters. It is an example of how public services contribute to the realization of citizens' fundamental freedoms and to equality of chances, and this should be recognized in the Charter. Public service and universal service are means of achieving such equal access to key information resources.

3. Summary

To summarize, we suggest that the Charter should

- reaffirm freedom of expression as enshrined in Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights,
- explicitly guarantee the freedom of the press, of broadcasting and of other media,
- recognize the need to safeguard media pluralism and cultural diversity,
- grant all individuals a right of equal access, via communications networks, to impartial news and information and to a diverse, plural and comprehensive choice of content, covering the range of political, educational, social and cultural interests, while leaving Member States free to determine, in conformity with the Treaty, which institutional arrangements may best contribute to the achievement of this right for their citizens.

Dear Mr. President,

On behalf of the Church and Society Commission of the Conference of European Churches, I am forwarding a statement concerning the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights. This was adopted by the Commission during its meeting earlier this month. I also attach a copy of the initial comment which was submitted to the Convention in April, the points of which were endorsed by the plenary meeting of the Commission.

May I take this opportunity of thanking the Convention for the opportunity afforded to organisations from civil society to present their comments orally at the end of April. I hope that there will be further opportunities for dialogue with civil society as the process continues. Our Commission will certainly continue to follow the work of the Convention with close attention and its members would want to affirm as strongly as possible the importance of a real involvement in the process of the potential new members of the European Union.

With every best wish,
Yours sincerely,

Keith Jenkins.

EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

At its meeting in Moscow from 5th to 9th May, the Church and Society Commission of the Conference of European Churches, covering churches throughout the whole of Europe, was able to give consideration to the submission already made on its behalf to the Convention drafting the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights.

The Commission wishes to endorse all the points made in that submission, of which we enclose a copy. We would like to take this opportunity to give emphasis to some of those points and to add some comments.

The churches represented on the Commission already have a record of commitment to the promotion and defence of human rights, with a special emphasis on social and cultural rights. These are all rooted in genuine Christian tradition. This commitment is expressed through the churches' engagement with European organisations – the OSCE, the Council of Europe and the EU. We therefore welcome the commitment shown by the member states of the EU in launching the process of the development of a Charter of Fundamental Rights.

The Convention has not yet determined how the Charter is to be structured. It is not yet clear what emphasis will be given to social and cultural rights, nor how the defined rights will be limited. In endorsing the view that this Charter should be legally binding, we recognise that the real test of this Charter is the enforcement of the rights contained in it, as much as their formulation. We insist that no provision of this Charter may be interpreted as restricting the scope of the rights guaranteed by European Community law, the law of the member states and international conventions, in particular the European Convention on Human Rights, as interpreted by the case law of the European Court of Human Rights.

We warmly welcome the idea that the Charter should be introduced with a preamble which lays out the common values on which the integration process is based, as outlined in Article 6 of the Treaty of Amsterdam. To this we would add the values of peace, solidarity and participation.

As people coming from the whole of Europe, and not just from the member states of the EU, we stress the importance of extending the process of consultation on this Charter to include the potential member states, beyond the hearing scheduled for June. If the fundamental rights in the Charter are to be expressions of values common to people across Europe, is it not only right that it should be drawn up with the participation of all those likely to be affected by it.

The potential member states are members of the Council of Europe and most have recently undergone the process of drafting their own constitutions. Since the Charter relies not only on European and international legal sources, but also on the national constitutions of the member states, those countries will be well placed to make a precious contribution based on their recent experience.

We look forward to the first complete draft being available soon. We will continue to monitor closely the forthcoming debate, particularly that on social and economic rights.

For the enforcement of the Charter to be successful, it is crucial there should be wide public discussion. We welcome the steps which the Convention has taken towards making this process as transparent and as open as possible. However, we note that in very few of the EU member states represented on our Commission is there adequate public awareness of this development. We therefore encourage members of the Convention to publicise their work more widely, so that their commitment should not be lost in the face of public suspicion and ignorance. We commit ourselves to promoting discussion of the Charter within our churches and beyond.

"THE QUALITY TEST"

Common Statement of NGOs participating in the Hearing on the Charter of Fundamental Rights Brussels, 27 April 2000.

What the Charter needs to be What that requires

1. An EU Charter, shining beacon across Europe on common values and objectives of peoples sharing the same aspiration to peace, development and freedom, belonging to various faiths, beliefs and civilisations and part of the first planetary generation.

2. A Charter for Women and Men

3. A Charter for all: Citizens, Residents, Migrants, Refugees, Undocumented persons

4. A Charter on essential rights from the Council of Europe, the U.N. and I.L.O agreements

5. A Charter on Individual and Collective Rights,

6. A Charter on the Common Good

- To address the universal character of Fundamental Rights.
- To recognise equality between women and men as a founding principle of the Union
- To use inclusive language.
- To recognise the principle of non discrimination
- To protect the rights of minorities, to use their languages and to transmit their cultures and values in accordance with the Charter
- Never to fall short of agreements even if signed only by some of the EU Member States
- To supplement, strengthen, build on existing rights
- To protect collective rights such as cultural and linguistic rights, the rights of trade unions and associations
- To guarantee a right of consultation for NGOs at the European level
- To recognise access to justice at EU level for NGOs defending the common good and the rights of future generations
- To secure recognition of the common good which is the foundation of a community of persons living together in solidarity and respect
- To give everyone access to the common goods and Public Services, secure transparency in management and participation in the assessment of the management

7. A Charter on civil and political, social, cultural and ecological rights

- To declare that the Charter secures indivisible rights
- To recognise and guarantee the right to local self-government
- To guarantee the key programmatic social, environmental, cultural and education rights for all, for the implementation of which
 - (i) indicators and convergence mechanisms need to be designed
 - (ii) a multiannual implementation programme needs to be developed
 - (iii) a system of monitoring, benchmarking and assessment needs to be in place

8. A Charter on Participatory Democracy at European level

- To secure transparency and access to information
- To define participatory democracy rights at EU as well as at local level
- To recognise the right to a democracy based on equality and parity
- A Charter which defines the criteria for strategic impact assessments of EU policies on all those who find themselves affected by EU actions abroad

9. A Charter which inspires the Union in all its external actions.

10. A legally binding Charter

- The Charter should be legally binding for all the EU Institutions and the Member States.
- Infringement should be examined by the EU Court of Justice and Member State status should be suspended for any State found to be in serious infringement

11. A Charter adopted by a participatory procedure

- To be submitted to an indicative vote by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, involving MPs of all EU Applicant Countries
- To ask for an indicative vote of NGOs on the draft Charter

12. A Charter to be integrated in the Treaty

- To pass the above quality test successfully.

The Signatories request the opportunity to have a real debate with the Members of the Convention on 6 June 2000, at the occasion of the "open doors" day organised by the Convention in the EP.

M. Roman HERZOG, Président de la Convention de la Charte des Droits fondamentaux.

175 rue de la loi
1048 Bruxelles
Belgique

Paris, le 25 avril 2000.

Monsieur le Président,

Les syndicats français ont accueilli avec intérêt le projet de rédaction d'une Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne ; ils ont travaillé en commun au document que vous trouverez en annexe.

Cette Charte doit à nos yeux consacrer les droits des citoyens européens dans les domaines civils et politiques, économiques, sociaux et culturels ; ces droits devraient faire partie intégrante du futur Traité en discussion à la Conférence intergouvernementale, et ainsi constituer une référence claire pour les institutions, y compris la Cour de Justice auxquels les citoyens devraient pouvoir avoir accès en cas de besoin. Ainsi serait consacrée l'effectivité de ces droits fondamentaux.

Du point de vue des syndicats soussignés, la partie concernant les droits économiques et sociaux doit constituer la base juridique du « modèle social » européen et consacrer des droits concrets qui correspondent aux droits effectivement mis en œuvre dans la plupart des états-membres et intégrés dans leurs systèmes juridiques et sociaux, ainsi que les engagements internationaux et régionaux de ces états qui ont presque tous ratifié un nombre élevé de conventions internationales du travail et de traités, notamment au niveau du Conseil de l'Europe, de l'ONU, de l'OIT.

Nous voulons que soit fait référence à tous ces fondements juridiques dans la rédaction de la Charte, par exemple en ce qui concerne la liberté syndicale, le droit de négociation collective, les droits de participation concernant les conditions de travail, l'hygiène, la sécurité, la prévention des accidents de travail et des maladies professionnelles, et l'environnement de travail, au niveau national et transnational, ainsi que la liberté professionnelle et le droit au travail et au repos (congés hebdomadaires et congés annuels payés, durée du travail, services de l'emploi et allocations de chômage total ou partiel), droit à la formation professionnelle initiale et permanente et à la formation tout au long de la vie, salaires minima et droits à pensions et allocations, égalité professionnelle et non discrimination dans l'emploi et la profession, droit au logement, protection de la maternité et des travailleurs handicapés et accidentés du travail, droit à la protection sociale, à la santé, pour rappeler les principaux points de notre document commun.

Sans référence explicite à tous ces droits la Charte serait sans effectivité réelle, et elle serait inférieure aux droits conquis par des décennies d'efforts du mouvement syndical et des organisations sociales des différents pays ;

En outre, la non respect des droits fondamentaux devrait entraîner des sanctions effectives, au même titre par exemple que le non respect du droit de la concurrence.

Une remise en cause du contrat social européen aurait à l'évidence des conséquences sérieuses pour le modèle social européen et constituerait un signal négatif en direction des pays de l'élargissement et également envers les pays du reste du monde, notamment en ce qui concerne les négociations commerciales internationales et l'universalité des traités internationaux relatifs aux droits humains et les conventions fondamentales de l'OIT.

Notre message est en pleine convergence avec la résolution du Comité exécutif de la Confédération Européenne des Syndicats de septembre 1999 et avec la position commune de la CES et de la plateforme des ONGs européennes du secteur social.

Nous espérons que vous transmettez nos préoccupations et nos suggestions à la Convention, et qu'elle saura les traduire dans une rédaction finale qui réponde aux attentes des travailleurs et des autres composantes de la société civile.

Veillez agréer, Monsieur le Président, nos salutations respectueuses et nos sincères vœux de succès dans votre tâche.

Droits fondamentaux

Considérations préliminaires

Les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels (DESC) sont interdépendants avec les droits civils et politiques (DCP) ; ainsi, la liberté syndicale et les libertés de pensée, d'opinion, d'expression et d'association, de réunion et de manifestation, de négociation, sont liées. Si une « distinction entre DCP et DESC est faite à des fins de clarté » (BODY 4), il ne peut s'agir d'une hiérarchie, ni d'un ordre de priorité.

La formulation des DCP et des DESC doit être aussi concrète que possible, tout en étant ramassée, afin d'en faciliter la connaissance et la compréhension par les destinataires, l'interprétation, et en assurer la justiciabilité. Elle ne peut consister en une simple « référence morale » pour le juge, mais doit constituer un ensemble de principes fondamentaux qui s'imposent à lui et que les justiciables peuvent invoquer. A cet égard, il convient de résoudre le problème de l'accès au juge communautaire.

Si l'obligation de respect des droits fondamentaux pèse sur l'Union, elle doit concerner toutes ses institutions et les trois piliers, et s'étendre à la transposition ou à l'application directe du droit dérivé dans l'ordre juridique interne. Le juge national aura donc aussi compétence pour leur mise en œuvre

Si les syndicats sont concernés au premier chef par la liberté syndicale, le droit de négociation collective et les DESC en général, ils ont aussi à faire des remarques sur la formulation de certains DCP du point de vue de leur application aux travailleurs et à leurs organisations, en particulier.

En aucun cas les droits reconnus dans la Charte ne devraient pas être inférieurs ou affaiblir les droits déjà inscrits dans les traités universels de l'ONU et les conventions des organisations internationales, comme celles de l'OIT, dont sont membres et parties les états de l'UE, et ces droits devraient faire intégralement partie de l'acquis que sont tenus de respecter les états désirant devenir membres de l'Union. Les conventions du Conseil de l'Europe relatives aux droits humains et leurs systèmes de contrôle ne devraient pas non plus être affaiblis, car ils sont indispensables à la coopération et à la stabilité dans l'ensemble du continent européen.

Préambule.

(Il faudrait, dans un préambule ou des considérants, préciser ce qui suit).

Les droits humains, en raison de leur universalité et de leur indivisibilité, doivent être applicables à toute personne. Seuls des droits directement liés à l'exercice de la citoyenneté de l'Union peuvent être réservés aux seuls citoyens communautaires.

1. Liste des 9 premiers articles (BODY 4 et CONVENT 5).Art. 1. Dignité de la personne humaine.

3. Nul ne peut être astreint à un travail forcé ou obligatoire, ni être tenu en servitude ou en esclavage.

(remarque : il existe des formes contemporaines d'esclavage, comme la traite des êtres humains à des fins de prostitution ou de pornographie, la servitude pour dettes à l'égard de certains travailleurs migrants clandestins ; cela a aussi une importance en ce qui concerne les relations commerciales extérieures de l'UE, vis à vis de produits fabriqués par une main d'œuvre enfantine ou tenue en servitude pour dettes ; il faut aussi tenir compte de sectes qui réduisent leurs membres à une véritable servitude). [Conventions ONU de 1929, de 1954 contre les formes contemporaines d'esclavage, C. 29, 105 et 182 OIT].

4. Toutes les formes de harcèlement, de pression et de conditionnement psychologiques sont prohibées.

Art. 2. ajouter le secret médical.

Art. 8. Respect de la vie privée ~~et familiale~~ de la confidentialité des communications.

1. Toute personne a droit au respect et à la protection de sa vie privée, de son identité, ~~et de la vie familiale~~, de sa réputation, de son image, de son domicile.

Commentaire : la protection de la réputation concerne la protection contre la diffamation, les injures graves.

2. Le secret des communications, quel qu'en soit le support, est garanti.

Art. 9. Vie familiale.

1. Toute personne dispose du droit de ~~fonder une famille~~ se marier selon les dispositions prévues par la loi du pays de résidence.

Commentaire: il faut un double consentement pour le mariage; la polygamie pose problème car contraire aux droits de l'UE, et ne peut être regardée que comme un état de fait non légalement protégé par l'Union et qui relève, comme les PACs, les mariages homosexuels, des lois nationales.

2. Toute personne a le droit de fonder une famille et le droit au respect et à la protection de sa vie familiale ; en particulier, tous les travailleurs migrants ont droit au rapprochement familial.

3. Toute personne a la faculté de divorcer.

4. Tous les enfants disposent des droits contenus dans la Convention internationale des droits de l'Enfant de l'ONU.

5. Les mineurs et majeurs protégés doivent bénéficier d'une protection adéquate tout en étant traités comme des personnes à part entière ; ils doivent pouvoir participer et influencer sur les questions les concernant personnellement, en fonction de leur niveau de maturité, y compris être représentés et entendus en justice.

2. Liste des articles 10 à 19 (CONVENT 8) :

(Le principe de démocratie, qui doit être maintenu sous peine de sanctions allant jusqu'à la suspension ou l'exclusion de l'UE est en outre un préliminaire fondamental à l'adhésion, avec notamment le droit à des élections libres, art. 12 BODY 4 ainsi que le droit au respect de la démocratie et des droits humains par les gouvernements, caractérisant l'Etat de droit, devrait trouver sa place ici ; retenir aussi, y compris pour les étrangers résidents, selon les modalités prévues dans les traités :

- droit de voter et d'être élu aux élections européennes et municipales dans les pays de résidence,
- droit de pétition au Parlement européen
- droit de s'adresser au Médiateur
- égalité d'accès à la fonction publique
- droit de s'adresser à l'UE et d'obtenir une réponse dans une langue officielle
- protection diplomatique et consulaire).

Art. 10. Liberté de conscience et de religion.

Art. 11 Liberté d'expression: Liberté d'opinion et d'expression

Toute personne a droit à la liberté aux libertés d'opinion et d'expression. Ce droit comprend Ces droits impliquent la liberté de recevoir ou de communiquer des idées ou des informations sans considération de frontière ou de support.

Art. 12 Droit à l'éducation :

1. Toute personne a droit à une éducation et à une formation professionnelle gratuites. selon ses capacités. L'enseignement initial (primaire, secondaire et professionnel) est obligatoire.

Commentaire : Cela signifie qu'un service public d'enseignement doit exister et être accessible gratuitement, sans exclure d'autres modes d'enseignement ou de formation, y compris payants. Les personnes handicapées et les personnes rencontrant des difficultés scolaires doivent bénéficier des moyens spécifiques nécessaires à l'exercice de leurs droits.

- droit à la formation tout au long de la vie, à la reconversion professionnelle

- droit à l'équivalence des diplômes et des formations

2. Le choix de l'établissement du mode d'éducation et de formation professionnelle est libre.

3. Le droit des parents d'assurer l'éducation et l'enseignement de leurs enfants conformément à leurs convictions religieuses et philosophiques est respecté.

Commentaire : dans le respect de la dignité - art. 1- et des droits de l'enfant.

4. L'art, la science, la recherche et l'enseignement sont libres. Les libertés académiques sont respectées; l'égalité des chances dans l'accès à l'enseignement supérieur est garantie.

Art. 13 . Liberté de réunion et d'association.

Toute personne a droit à la liberté de réunion et de manifestation pacifiques, à la liberté d'association, y compris le droit de fonder des partis politiques, des syndicats de travailleurs et d'employeurs, de s'y affilier et de participer à leurs activités, dans l'entreprise comme au plan national, européen et international.

Art 18. Egalité.

Toutes les personnes sont égales devant la loi et ont droit à l'égalité de chances et de traitement dans tous les domaines de la vie et du travail .

Art. 19. Non discrimination.

1. Toute discrimination est interdite, quel qu'en puisse être le fondement et notamment le sexe, la race, la couleur, la nationalité, l'origine ethnique, l'appartenance à un groupe minoritaire, l'origine sociale, la naissance ou la fortune, la langue, la religion, les convictions, l'affiliation et l'activité politique ou syndicale, l'état de santé, le handicap, l'âge, l'orientation sexuelle, ou toute autre base.

2. L'Union cherche à éliminer les inégalités et à promouvoir l'égalité entre les hommes et les femmes.

Art. 14. Droit d'accès aux informations.

Art. 15. Protection des données.

Toute personne physique a droit à la protection de ses données à caractère personnel. Elle dispose à leur égard d'un droit d'accès, d'actualisation et de suppression. Ces données ne peuvent être utilisées à des fins autres que la fin licite pour laquelle elles sont collectées, par des organismes légalement habilités et dans le respect de la proportionnalité. Elles ne peuvent être interconnectées à l'aide d'un identifiant unique et ne peuvent être conservées au-delà du délai strictement nécessaire à l'accomplissement de la fin pour laquelle elles ont été recueillies et enregistrées.

Art. 16. Droit de propriété.

- Ce droit peut s'exercer de manière individuelle, mutualiste, coopérative, sociétaire ou collective, et sous réserve de l'abus de droit. Il ne peut être opposé à l'exercice d'autres libertés fondamentales contenues dans la présente charte.

- Les biens communs universels et les découvertes de la recherche fondamentale ne sont pas susceptibles d'une appropriation privée ni d'être, en tant que tels, l'objet de brevets.

Commentaire: Le droit de propriété est souvent opposé à l'exercice des diverses formes de l'activité syndicale dans l'entreprise : il n'a plus de notre temps le caractère purement individuel et "inviolable et sacré" de la Déclaration de 1789, mais doit, dans un but social, s'équilibrer avec les autres libertés; il conviendrait aussi d'envisager une référence à la notion de biens communs universels, tels que l'air, l'eau, le génome humain, et les génomes animaux et végétaux, (les génomes, le séquençage des chromosomes, doivent être considérés comme des découvertes scientifiques fondamentales, non brevetables par nature, comme la relativité ou la mécanique quantique...), la mer et son rivage ou l'espace et les corps célestes, etc. qui ne peuvent faire l'objet d'une appropriation privée (mais ces découvertes et ces biens peuvent être utilisés ou exploités à des fins licites, y compris éventuellement avec une rémunération pour services, comme la fourniture d'au potable ou de moyens thérapeutiques et de médicaments dérivés de la connaissance du génome).

Art. 17. Droit d'asile et expulsion-Liberté de circulation et d'établissement.

Liberté de circulation. CONVENT 5., non repris par CONVENT 8, mais qui devrait être conservé :

- Toute personne en situation régulière jouit de la liberté de circulation et d'établissement à l'intérieur de l'Union dans les conditions fixées par les traités.

Art. 17 bis. Droit des réfugiés, apatrides et demandeurs d'asile :1. L'Union Européenne respecte le droit d'asile et protège les réfugiés et apatrides.

Commentaire : la persécution par un gouvernement quelconque, mais aussi par des groupes ou par des bandes armées terroristes, maffieuses, intégristes, ethniques, ou autres doit ouvrir accès au droit d'asile; le cas où, par suite de situations politiques particulières entraînant une altération du principe de démocratie, des personnes résidant dans un pays membre, y compris des citoyens de ce pays, peuvent être amenées à se réfugier ou demander asile dans un autre pays membre ne peut être écarté de manière absolue.

2. Les demandeurs d'asile et les personnes réfugiées sur le territoire de l'Union disposent des mêmes droits que les résidents légaux de même nationalité d'origine.

Commentaire : ces personnes doivent pouvoir notamment exercer une activité économique, jouir des droits culturels, bénéficier des prestations et droits sociaux, etc.

3. La détention arbitraire et les expulsions collectives forcées d'étrangers sont interdites.

Commentaire : toute expulsion sans garanties de procédure et exercice des droits de la défense doit être prohibée, de même que ne peuvent être tolérés les centres de rétention placés sous contrôle policier, sans accès pour le juge, les avocats ou les associations de défense.

3. DESC (liste de BODY 4).

Droits économiques, sociaux et culturels (remarque : Reformuler le titre pour reprendre le nom du pacte de l'ONU correspondant. Les indications lapidaires de la liste sont reformulées ; la notion «d'objectif politique», dont la mention dans la charte est en général exclue - référence aux "droits existants"-, doit donc être autant que possible remplacée par la formulation de droits concrets et justiciables).

Commentaire : ces droits concernent tous les salariés, du secteur public ou privé.

- liberté d'association des employeurs et des travailleurs, y compris dans la fonction publique et les services publics. [C. n° 87 de l'OIT]; cette liberté s'exerce sur le lieu de travail, l'entreprise ou le groupe ou le service public, au niveau sectoriel, national, et transfrontière (régions transfrontières, UE, international. (Remarque: la 2e phrase pourrait faire ici l'objet d'un commentaire, car les niveaux d'organisation et d'action ont été traités dans l'art. 13).

- liberté de fonctionnement des syndicats sur les lieux de travail et aux autres niveaux, et protection des représentants des salariés [C. 135 de l'OIT]; facilités à leur accorder dans l'exercice de leurs mandats.

- droits d'action collective et solidaire des salariés à tous les niveaux pour leurs intérêts matériels et moraux, directs et indirects, y compris le droit de grève.

- droit de négociation collective des conditions de travail et d'emploi, des salaires et des garanties collectives. [C. 98, 151 et 154 de l'OIT]

Commentaire : ce droit s'applique éventuellement sous une forme appropriée dans la fonction publique.

- droit de conclure des accords collectifs au niveau européen ou national, interprofessionnel et sectoriel.

Commentaire : le niveau sectoriel peut être celui de l'entreprise, du groupe, d'un territoire; ce droit s'exerce par les organisations représentatives et est soumis au principe de démocratie.

- droits à l'information, à la consultation et à la participation dans l'entreprise et le groupe

Commentaire : ces droits impliquent que les avis et suggestions des travailleurs et de leurs représentants soient effectivement pris en considération - caractère préalable de la consultation, droit de recours à une expertise indépendante à la charge de l'employeur, notamment - ; ils concernent par exemple la marche ou la stratégie de l'entreprise ou du groupe, l'embauche de travailleurs intérimaires, les projets de licenciements collectifs, la formation ou la reconversion, l'amélioration du milieu de travail, en particulier l'application des règles d'hygiène et de sécurité, la prévention et la reconnaissance des maladies professionnelles, etc. Ces droits demandent la création d'institutions spécifiques formées et fonctionnant démocratiquement.

Droit au travail et liberté professionnelle :

Commentaire : l'Union reconnaît le droit au travail et prend avec les états membres les mesures destinées à rendre ce droit effectif en visant à réaliser le plein emploi.

1. Toute personne dispose du libre choix et du droit d'exercer une profession, indépendante ou salariée et de son lieu d'exercice.

Commentaire : ce droit couvre celui d'exercer une profession libérale, l'artisanat ou le commerce, de fonder une entreprise, dans le cadre des règles juridiques et fiscales applicables, y compris les règles spécifiques à l'exercice d'une profession réglementée. Le contrat à durée déterminée constitue la forme générale de la relation d'emploi entre employeurs et travailleurs; les contrats avec de faux travailleurs indépendants doivent être requalifiés en contrats de travail normal. Le recours abusif à des formes précaires d'emploi, le recours permanent à l'intérim et la sous traitance en cascade ne doivent pas être admis. Le travail à temps partiel doit reposer sur une base volontaire.

1 bis. Tout travailleur a droit à un emploi, à une formation rémunérée ou à défaut à un revenu de remplacement.

6. 1 ter. Toute personne à la recherche d'un emploi a le droit d'accéder à un service gratuit de placement ou d'orientation professionnelle et de formation. Nul ne peut être contraint à exercer un emploi déterminé.

1 quater. Tout salarié privé d'emploi a droit à des allocations de chômage

Conditions de travail et d'emploi:

1. une inspection du travail indépendante doit être instaurée pour le contrôle du respect et pour l'application des normes de travail. [C. 81 OIT]

2. une médecine du travail indépendante doit régulièrement surveiller l'état de santé des salariés, signaler les maladies professionnelles et formuler des recommandations concernant les postes de travail.

3. Obligation de reconnaissance et de compensation des maladies professionnelles, des accidents du travail et des incapacités de travail qui peuvent en découler.

2. 4. Tout travailleur a droit à la sécurité et à l'hygiène dans le travail et à des conditions de travail respectant sa santé physique et mentale et sa vie privée, ainsi qu'à la protection contre le harcèlement dans le milieu professionnel et contre tout abus du pouvoir de contrôle et de direction de l'employeur.

Commentaire : la dernière proposition se rapporte notamment au développement des moyens technologiques de contrôle et de surveillance, au su ou à l'insu des salariés, aux déplacements géographiques abusifs, etc.

3. 5. Tout salarié a droit à une rémunération équitable et à un salaire minimal lui permettant, ainsi qu'à ses dépendants, de vivre dans des conditions dignes et d'assurer leur santé et leur bien-être. La rémunération doit évoluer régulièrement en fonction des qualifications, de l'expérience et des diplômes acquis, du niveau des prix et de la productivité du travail.

6. droit à une protection contre toute forme de discrimination dans l'emploi et la profession. Droit à un salaire égal pour un travail de valeur égale ou équivalent. [C. 111 et 100 OIT]

4. 7. Tout salarié a droit à un repos hebdomadaire et à des congés payés d'une durée suffisante, et à une limitation de la durée hebdomadaire du travail [art. 24 DUDH]. (remarque : cette durée devrait être fixée à 35 heures ou à une durée négociée équivalente; le recours à des heures supplémentaires hebdomadaires doit être limité.)

8. Tout salarié a droit à une protection contre les licenciements arbitraires, discriminatoires ou illégaux.

9. Protection du salaire et des accessoires en cas d'insolvabilité de l'employeur,

10. Protection contre le chômage total ou partiel, droit à un revenu de remplacement ou de complément.

11. Tout travailleur ayant atteint l'âge légal de la retraite a droit à une pension lui permettant, ainsi qu'à ses dépendants, de vivre dignement.

12. Le travail des enfants au-dessous de l'âge minimum légal est interdit.

13. Les adolescents en apprentissage ou au travail bénéficient de protections spécifiques contre les risques pouvant affecter leur santé et leur développement, sur le plan physique et psychique.

DROITS SOCIAUX

Protection sociale et sécurité sociale.

1. Tout travailleur et ses ayants-droit ont droit à une protection sociale adéquate et doivent bénéficier de prestations de sécurité sociale d'un niveau suffisant, notamment par rapport au salaire ; les travailleurs indépendants ont droit à une protection équivalente. (proposition FERPA)

2. Protection contre la pauvreté et l'exclusion sociale. Toute personne ne bénéficiant pas d'une source de revenu suffisante a droit à un revenu minimum lui permettant de vivre, ainsi que ses dépendants, de manière digne.

Santé :

1. Toute personne a le droit d'accéder à des services de santé et de bénéficier d'un traitement approprié.

Protection de la maternité :

1. Protection de la femme enceinte et de la mère en congé maternité contre le licenciement,

2. droit à des services de protection maternelle et infantile,

3. droit à des allocations spécifiques,

4. aménagement des conditions de travail (allaitement, horaires de travail, etc.)

Commentaire : notamment prohibition du travail de nuit, des stations debout ou pénible, de l'utilisation de matériaux ou produits nocifs, aménagement des postes de travail).

Conciliation de la vie professionnelle et familiale :

1. accès à des crèches et garderies à un prix abordable, écoles maternelles.
2. congé parental pour élever ou soigner un enfant.

Protection de l'enfance :

1. sécurité, intégrité, développement services sociaux, de santé et d'éducation.
2. allocations familiales et protection économique.
3. protection contre toutes les formes d'exploitation et les mauvais traitements.

Personnes handicapées :

1. droit à des mesures facilitant leur autonomie, leur intégration sociale et professionnelle et leur participation à la vie de la communauté :
 - accès à la formation, à des aides et supports techniques, à l'emploi.
 - pension, assistance, allocations
 - obligation d'embauche.
 - aménagement des cadres de vie et de travail, d'enseignement et de formation.

Droit au logement :

1. droit de toute personne à un logement décent pour elle et sa famille à un prix abordable.
2. droit à des aides au logement en cas d'insuffisance de ressources.

Droit à des services d'intérêt général accessibles, qui constituent des moyens essentiels d'effectivité des droits économiques sociaux et culturels, de croissance durable, de cohésion sociale et territoriale; ces services doivent être gérés de manière transparente et démocratique, et s'adapter en permanence aux évolutions des besoins et au progrès social et technologique.

DROITS CULTURELS

1. droit au respect des langues et cultures régionales et à un enseignement dans ces langues.
2. liberté et autonomie culturelles.
3. droit d'accès aux moyens modernes de communication.

4. Mise en œuvre effective des DESC :

La mise en œuvre des droits économiques, sociaux et culturels exige l'adoption de programmes, de politiques, de moyens et de législations destinés à assurer leur effectivité.

Le Conseil et le Parlement devraient établir périodiquement un plan d'action concernant les objectifs à atteindre et les moyens à mettre en œuvre en ce qui concerne les droits à caractère programmatique, et la Commission faire rapport régulièrement sur les évolutions constatées. Les ONGs compétentes représentatives devraient être associées par les institutions à l'élaboration, à la conduite et à l'évaluation de ces plans.

5. Droits évoqués succinctement dans BODY 4 non repris dans CONVENTs 5 et 8 :

Environnement :

- droit à un environnement sain sur les lieux de vie et de travail
- droit d'alerte des salariés en cas de risques industriels majeurs et de risques de pollution.

- Droits des consommateurs :

- droit à l'information sur l'origine, la composition, la méthode de production des biens et des produits (traçabilité, étiquetage), sur la nature et le coût réel des services et du crédit, sur la portée exacte des obligations et prestations en matière de contrats.
- responsabilité des concepteurs, producteurs, fabricants, distributeurs et autres prestataires du fait de produits ou services défectueux.
- sécurité des produits, des biens et des services, garanties contre les vices cachés et les défauts de fabrication, les pannes.
- protection législative et juridique, droit de recours.
- sécurité alimentaire.
- usage du principe de précaution dans les politiques de gestion des risques, en cas de doute sur l'innocuité d'un produit, d'un bien, d'un processus de fabrication et de ses déchets et effluents.

6. Universalité et indivisibilité des droits humains :

Outre leur prise en compte dans l'acquis communautaire, les droits humains doivent aussi être dûment pris en considération dans les politiques extérieures et les relations commerciales internationales de l'Union.

Charter of basic rights of the European Union

Dear Madam/Sir,

We have been informed about the ongoing work on the charter of the basic rights of the European Union. By this letter we would like to ask you to incorporate the right to object to participate in a war on the basis of a decision of conscience.

These are the main reasons which we would like to be considered thoroughly:

1. Conscientious objectors symbolize the existence of people - men and women, young and old, working for peace by non-violent means. Such an attitude, based on a decision of consciousness represents a main condition for modern societies to organize their democratic life and to organize the relations to other states and people.
2. Conscientious objectors in the past have contributed considerably, in particular by their voluntary services, to foster the common good by their very strong personal convictions.
3. The right to refuse to kill in a war has been accepted in a series of European countries in basic laws and in laws and has had a good influence in these countries. We would especially quote the German example where the position of COs has been strengthened by the constitution.

Sincerely yours,

(Ulrich Frey)
Director

Contribution des syndicats français

CGC, CFTC, CFDT, CGT.

Paris, le 22 mai 2000.

Cette contribution propose des amendements aux dernières rédactions établies par le Presidium. Les syndicats français ayant participé à l'examen des documents soumis à la Convention rappellent d'emblée deux principes essentiels :

- Les droits fondamentaux sont indivisibles et interdépendants.
- La garantie de leur effectivité devra être assurée par leur intégration dans les Traités.

1/ Le document CONVENT 28 du 5 mai traite de l'ensemble des droits civils et politiques et certains des droits culturels. Certains articles devraient être précisés et renforcés.

Article 19, protection des données; la rédaction actuelle semble incomplète, irréaliste, et n'offre pas de garantie de protection de la vie privée, de l'intégrité, de l'identité et des droits de la personne. Nous suggérons : "toute personne a droit à la protection de ses données à caractère personnel. Elle dispose à leur égard d'un droit d'accès, d'actualisation et de suppression. Ces données ne peuvent être utilisées à des fins autres que la fin licite pour laquelle elles ont été collectées par des organismes habilités ni être conservées au delà du délai strictement nécessaire à l'accomplissement de la fin pour laquelle elles ont été recueillies."

La détention arbitraire et les expulsions forcées d'étrangers doivent être interdites.

Concernant le traitement des étrangers, le projet actuel se limite à la prohibition des expulsions collectives; d'autres situations, comme leur rétention arbitraire ou l'expulsion de demandeurs d'asile sans examen de leur demande, ne sont pas couvertes; c'est pourquoi nous proposons une formulation plus large.

Article 22, égalité et non discrimination ; nous suggérons d'ajouter "...les opinions et activités politiques, syndicales ou sociales".

2/ Les droits économiques et sociaux et les clauses horizontales (articles 31 à 50) font l'objet d'une nouvelle rédaction CONVENT 34 (note du présidium, en date du 16 mai 2000).

Article 31. Droits et principes en matière sociale.

Compléter : il manque une clause de non régression.

Exposé des motifs, 5e ligne : "... les partenaires sociaux ... peuvent conclure des accords socio-économiques".

Article 33. Droit à l'information et à la consultation des travailleurs au sein de l'entreprise.

Formulation très restrictive par rapport à CONVENT 18, et qui est inférieure à l'acquis communautaire et aux articles 17 et 18 de la Charte communautaire, qui devraient être cités dans l'exposé des motifs, avec la Charte sociale européenne révisée. Nous proposons : "les travailleurs et leurs représentants ont droit à l'information, à la consultation et à la participation, régulières, effectives, préalables et en temps utile, au travail et à tous les niveaux de l'entreprise, de l'établissement et du groupe, ainsi qu'au niveau national et transnational."

Article 34. Droit de négociation et d'action collective. Remplacer par : "Les employeurs et leurs organisations et les organisations de travailleurs ont le droit de négocier et de conclure des conventions collectives relatives aux conditions de travail et d'emploi, aux rémunérations et aux garanties collectives. Les salariés ont le droit d'agir collectivement et solidairement à tous les niveaux pour la défense et la promotion de leurs intérêts matériels et moraux, y compris de recourir à la grève.".

Article 35. Droit au repos et au congé annuel.

L'exposé des motifs devrait se référer plus impérativement à l'article 2 de la Charte sociale révisée.

Article 36. Santé et sécurité dans le travail. Il convient d'ajouter l'hygiène, et de prévoir une participation des représentants des travailleurs conformément à l'article 19.2 de la Charte communautaire et à l'article 3 de la Charte sociale révisée.

Ajouter également : "les accidents du travail et maladies professionnelles ouvrent droit à des prestations sociales et indemnités".

Article 37. Protection des jeunes..

Revenir à la rédaction de CONVENT 18.

En tout état de cause, supprimer la fin du paragraphe 1 "et sauf dérogations ... légers".

Reformuler le 2e paragraphe comme celui de CONVENT 18 : "Les jeunes en dessous de 18 ans doivent bénéficier de conditions de travail adaptées à leur âge et être protégés contre tout travail susceptible de nuire à leur sécurité, à leur santé ou à leur développement physique, psychologique, moral ou social ou de compromettre leur éducation".

Article 38. Droit à la protection en cas de licenciement.

Reformuler : "tout travailleur a droit à une protection contre tout licenciement injustifié, abusif, discriminatoire ou illégal."

Le cas du licenciement collectif économique n'est pas traité, (voir directive) non plus que le droit au préavis et à indemnités de licenciement et réparation des préjudices.

Article 39. Droit de concilier vie familiale et vie professionnelle. Le congé de maternité doit être payé. Formuler la 2e phrase autrement : "Ce droit comprend une protection spéciale de la maternité et le droit à un congé de maternité payé ...etc.".

Article 40. Droit des travailleurs migrants à l'égalité de traitement.

Changer le titre : "Droit des travailleurs ressortissants des pays tiers à l'égalité de traitement". L'égalité de traitement des travailleurs ressortissants de pays tiers ne peut se limiter aux conditions de travail. Elle doit concerner aussi notamment les droits à rémunération et à pension, la protection sociale, la santé, le logement, la formation, etc.

Article 41. Sécurité sociale et aide sociale. Rajouter "... de handicap...".

Article 43. Personnes handicapées. Remplacer par :

"Toute personne handicapée, quels que soient l'origine et la nature de son handicap, a le droit de bénéficier de mesures concrètes visant à favoriser son intégration sociale et professionnelle".

Questions manquantes:

- droit à l'orientation professionnelle et à la formation tout au long de la vie,
- droit à une rémunération équitable et égale pour un travail de valeur égale,
- droit au travail et droit d'accès à un service public gratuit de placement,
- droit d'accès pour tous aux services d'intérêt général, qui constituent un moyen puissant d'assurer l'effectivité de nombreux droits fondamentaux à caractère social.
- droit à la retraite et à une pension de retraite,
- absence de clause de non régression en matière sociale.

Nous espérons que ces questions feront l'objet d'une inclusion dans la version finale.

Charter on Fundamental Rights: Public Hearing 27 April
European Parliament, Brussels
Intervention by James Wilson, Bass PLC

I restrict my views to the potential impact of the Charter on multinational business and employment. Why should business have a voice in this debate? Because we represent the interests of our shareholders, our employees, our suppliers, our customers and all of the stakeholders in wider society who share the fruits of our endeavours and the benefits of the employment which we create. It is only business that can deliver anything remotely close to an aspiration towards full employment through sheer enterprise, innovation and growth.

The charter should concentrate on civil and political rights

i) We support the broad objective of seeking to protect citizens' rights against the abuse of power by the EU institutions or by national governments in implementing EU policies. We consider that this can best be delivered by concentrating on fundamental political rights and civil liberties. For business, it is essential that the Charter has as a core objective the preservation of a strong competitive environment for innovation and enterprise. Business is global and becoming increasingly more so as the 'new economy' changes the way companies and consumers interact. For the EU to maintain its relative competitive position in the world it must provide the environment in which business can innovate and flourish. This means the preservation of five basic freedoms. Firstly, freedom of thought and stemming directly from that freedom of expression; freedom of enterprise; freedom to trade; freedom to own property and the freedom of establishment. These five freedoms are fundamental to the ability of business to generate the sustainable employment essential for a prosperous society.

The Charter should be declaratory and non-binding

ii) We support the idea of a declaratory Charter, with no legally binding effect. The Charter should be clear and simple for maximum public impact and should set out clearly the fundamental rights that are currently recognised by the EU. This is the best way to add value to existing rights, instruments and systems, without prejudice to legal certainty. We consider that a legally binding Charter, effectively transferring jurisdiction over core fundamental rights from the Human Rights Court at Strasbourg and national courts to the ECJ, would undermine the existing rights system and create legal uncertainty. Such a scenario would be potentially detrimental to EU business, by imposing high litigation costs, damaging restrictions on enterprise and encouraging investment to move offshore to the detriment of EU jobs.

The Charter should not record policy aspirations

iii) The Charter should not seek to record policy aspirations. The application of the Charter should be limited to the EU's Institutions within the framework of the powers and responsibilities assigned to them by the Treaties. The obligation to respect fundamental rights should be a constraint on the Community's action and not a licence to legislate. The Charter should respect present competences of the EU and should not extend existing powers.

The Charter should not deal with aspirational social rights

iv) The Charter must not restrict enterprise. The scope of the Charter should be to deal only with fundamental issues relating to civil, political and cultural rights, the preservation of peace and a clearly stated determination never to resolve conflict by war. It is not the correct constitutional instrument to deal with questions of social rights, which necessarily require full assessment of their economic impact and a democratic analytical debate. The social and employment chapters of the Treaties have already set out the powers of the Union to act on a European level. Any proposals to change these provisions must be dealt with specifically at the level of inter-governmental debate. It is essential to the economic well-being of society that social rights should only be dealt with through the legislative and budgetary process laid down by the Treaties, because:-

- a) Social rights involve costs. The normal democratic legislative and budgetary process is required to determine what these costs are, to assess what the impact will be on job creation and the economy, to calculate how much money is involved, balance this against the desired impact on society, and then decide on the basis of this cost benefit analysis whether society can afford to pay and, if so, how to distribute the tax burden. If you attempt to short cut this process you will strangle enterprise and kill the goose that lays the golden eggs.
- b) Society can only afford social rights if business flourishes, and creates the wealth necessary to generate sufficient tax revenues to underwrite the cost. The discipline necessary to conduct a thorough financial analysis of any new proposals cannot be circumvented. Anyone seeking to restrict business by stealth through the creation of putative social rights without having considered the cost-burden and full economic impact, would sound suspiciously like the first-time home-buyer who discusses with their interior designers the colour of the bed-room carpet for the new penthouse apartment, before they have checked with the builder that they can afford to pay for the foundations of the building.

If it ain't broke don't fix it

Business respects the communities in which it operates. The shared values of our society, (namely: democracy, tolerance, respect for the individual and liberty) have developed historically, under the strong influence of religious ethics. This ethical heritage has shaped modern European society, its culture and its laws. If we attempt to enshrine these common values in a non-secular Charter, there must be respect for the diversity of Europe and its minorities, and we must also consult the applicant states for membership. We must also ensure that the charter is robust enough to cope with the impact of future enlargements – which may encompass states with very different values from the ethical model with which we are familiar. In an increasingly global society, the rights and responsibilities embodied in the Charter should be attractive and acceptable to our trading partners and avoid the tendency to be inward looking within the EU. We must remind ourselves that the ethical model which has developed in Europe over time is one which has enabled enterprise to create prosperity for our society, and which has enabled this debate to take place. It would be irresponsible to destroy such a hard won advantage by unwittingly incorporating into this Charter obstacles which might prove to be disincentives to investment in EU enterprise and employment.

COMMENTS
BY THE EUROPEAN COUNCIL ON REFUGEES AND EXILES (ECRE)
ON THE RIGHT TO ASYLUM IN THE DRAFT CHARTER ON FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

1. At Tampere, the European Council established a body to draw up the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, first mentioned at the Cologne European Council.¹ This body (the Convention) will be meeting on 5 and 6 June 2000 to discuss a draft text² of the Charter, in particular the articles relating to Civil and political rights and citizens' rights, including article 21, which posits a right to asylum.
2. ECRE welcomes the inclusion of a right to asylum in the Charter of Fundamental rights of the European Union. The draft text however refers to asylum for third country nationals only.
3. ECRE recalls that at the Tampere European Council the EU Member States promised “an open and secure European Union, fully committed to the obligations of the Geneva Refugee Convention and other relevant human rights instruments”.³ ECRE would argue that the EU Charter must accord with the Tampere European Council conclusions and reminds the Convention of the commitments made as to a Common European Asylum System. The Presidency Conclusions stated:

“The European Council reaffirms the importance the Union and Member States attach to absolute respect of the right to seek asylum. It has agreed to work towards establishing a Common European Asylum System, based on the full and inclusive application of the Geneva Convention, thus ensuring that nobody is sent back to persecution, i.e. maintaining the principle of non-refoulement.”⁴

4. ECRE is deeply concerned that the restriction of the proposed right to asylum to nationals of third countries is a violation of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees (the Refugee Convention) and the 1967 Protocol (the Protocol).

5. ECRE reminds the Convention that by signing the Refugee Convention and the Protocol all Member States of the EU have adopted a refugee definition without any limitations as to country of origin. ⁵ Limitation of the Refugee Convention's application on grounds of national origin is inconsistent with Article 3 of the Refugee Convention.
6. The current draft introduces, in effect, a geographical reservation to the application of the Refugee Convention. This is incompatible with the Protocol and is prohibited by Article 42 of the Convention, which does not allow reservations to certain provisions, including Articles 1, 3 and 33.
7. ECRE welcomes the importance attached in the proposed draft to the Refugee Convention and Protocol. However, the principle of non-refoulement, as a norm of customary international law, is wider than the Refugee Convention. ECRE therefore welcomes the draft text of article 4 on prohibition of torture and inhuman treatment.
8. ECRE however wishes to stress that the prohibition of refoulement encompasses prohibition of indirect as well as of direct refoulement, and that the principle of non-refoulement applies to persons within the States's territory as well as to persons seeking admission at the border.
9. ECRE would therefore like to see an express provision in the Article on absolute respect for the principle of non-refoulement, as provided, inter alia, in Article 3 of the UN Convention against torture and Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights.
10. ECRE therefore proposes the following as the text of the right to asylum in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union :

“1. Everyone has the right to asylum in the European Union, consistent with the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and other international human rights instruments for the protection of refugees

2. No Member State shall expel or return (“refouler”) a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened.”

May 2000

⁵ The geographical and temporal restrictions in Article 1B(1) of the Refugee Convention can be lifted by a declaration under Article 1B(2) and accession to the 1967 Protocol: all EU States have acceded to the Protocol and have lifted geographical restrictions on application of the Refugee Convention.

Comments by Amnesty International on the new proposal on civil and political rights in the Draft European Charter of Fundamental Rights (Charter 4284/00 of 5 May 2000)

Amnesty International takes note of the new proposal on civil and political rights in the draft European Charter of Fundamental Rights, issued on 5 May 2000.

While Amnesty International welcomes the improvements made in the new text, the organisation remains concerned that the text does not use gender neutral language and some of the draft articles in their current form still do not reflect the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation.

In April 2000, Amnesty International submitted a position paper on the draft European Charter which analyses the issues raised by the adoption of the European Charter as well as the draft articles in their then current form, and advances recommendations with a view to insuring that the Charter would constitute a real improvement in the human rights protection currently afforded by the EU.

In the light of the foreseen amendments to the draft articles, Amnesty International calls the attention of Convention members to its position on the European Charter as set out in the document Charter 4290/00 and calls on them to ensure that the wording of the Charter reflects the highest level of protection of fundamental human rights.

The organisation urges that its recommendations as set out in Amnesty International's document on the Charter in respect of the following draft articles be taken up:

Article 9: Presumption of innocence and rights of defence, Article 11: Right not to be tried or punished twice, Article 14: Freedom of thought, conscience and religion, Article 15: Freedom of expression and Article 17: Freedom of assembly and association.

In addition, Amnesty International urges that the following be noted in relation to the current wording proposed for the following draft articles:

Amnesty International is an independent worldwide movement working for the release of all prisoners of conscience, fair and prompt trials for political prisoners and an end to torture, extrajudicial executions, "disappearances" and the death penalty. It is funded by donations from its members and supporters throughout the world. It has formal relations with the United Nations, Unesco, the Council of Europe, the Organization of African Unity and the Organization of American States.

Article 1. Dignity of the human person

Amnesty International urges that this article include the right of everyone, without discrimination, to equal protection of law and equality before the courts, in accordance with Article 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 26 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR).

Article 2. Right to life

Amnesty International urges that this article also

1. set out the principle that the right to life shall be protected by law as well as the prohibition that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of life, which are enshrined in Article 2 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention) and Article 6 of the ICCPR

2. ensure that the prohibition of the death penalty:

- Sets out in full article 1 of Protocol 6 to the European Convention "The death penalty shall be abolished. No one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed."
- Refers to the abolition of the death penalty as does Article 1 of the Second Optional Protocol to the ICCPR
- Includes a prohibition of enacting or retaining any law which provide for the death penalty as a possible punishment and the prohibition on any authority to apply the death penalty.

Article 4. Prohibition of torture and inhuman treatment

In order to fully reflect the prohibition as enshrined in Article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 7 of the ICCPR Amnesty International urges that this article should also include the prohibition of cruel treatment and punishment.

Amnesty International also urges that the second sentence of Article 4 should read as follows: "no one shall be expelled or extradited to a State where they would be at risk of being subjected to the death penalty or to other serious human rights violations, such as extrajudicial executions, torture, "disappearance", or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, or unfair trial".

Article 6: Right to liberty and security

Amnesty International continues to urge that this article reflect the guarantees recognised in evolving international human rights standards and ensure that the right is non-derogable and includes at least the following safeguards:

- the right to be promptly informed of one's rights, including the right to counsel and the right to lodge complaints about one's treatment
- the right to be brought promptly before a judicial authority after being deprived of one's liberty
- the right to prompt access to a lawyer and to family or friends

- the right to have a lawyer present during questioning
- the right to challenge the lawfulness of detention
- the principles that it should not be the general rule that people are detained prior to trial and that for juveniles, detention should only be used as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate time, enshrined in Article 9(3) of the ICCPR and Article 37(b) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, respectively.
- the right to trial within a reasonable time or release from detention

Article 8: Right to a fair trial

Amnesty International urges that the provision setting out the right to legal aid state clearly that at a minimum this right pertains where the interests of justice so require and without payment if the person lacks sufficient means to pay, as set out in Article 14(3)(d) of the ICCPR.

Article 21. Right to asylum

This article should recognise the right of every person without discrimination to asylum. It should also include a reference to other human rights instruments. Such formulation would be in line with the obligations of Member States under international and EC/EU law.

Amnesty International asks for an express provision on the guarantees that assist individuals in expulsion, extradition, or any other form of forced removal procedures that they may be subjected to in accordance with due process of law. Such provision would be in line with Article 32 of the UN Refugee Convention and Article 13 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (to which all member states are parties) and with the case-law of international monitoring mechanisms, such as the European Court of Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee or the Committee against Torture

Article 22. Equality and non-discrimination

In order to ensure that the prohibition of discrimination in Article 22(1) is at least as protective as Article 26 of the ICCPR the following must be added as prohibited bases of discrimination: national origin, other opinion (inserted after belief); or other status (inserted after birth).

Article 23: Children's rights

In addition to setting out the right of children to be treated as equal individuals and to influence matters pertaining to them (which should include the opportunity to be heard in any proceedings affecting them) Amnesty International believes that this provision should set out the other guiding principles for the treatment of children enshrined in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other international human rights standards. These principles include among others the duty to ensure that the best interests of the child are a primary consideration in all actions concerning children including those undertaken by court, administrative or legislative bodies and the duty ensure the right of each child to the protection by family state and society as required. Les droits et libertés culturelles fondamentales

Proposition

Article X

Toute personne, aussi bien seule qu'en commun a droit:

- a. de choisir et de voir respecter son identité culturelle, dans la diversité de ses modes d'expression;
- b. de connaître et de voir respecter sa propre culture ainsi que les cultures qui, dans leurs diversités, contribuent au patrimoine commun de l'Europe et de l'humanité;
- c. d'accéder aux patrimoines culturels qui constituent des manifestations et expressions significatives des différentes cultures.
- d. de participer librement, sans considération de frontières, à la vie culturelle à travers les activités de son choix.

Ce droit ne peut s'exercer que dans le respect de l'ensemble des libertés et droits fondamentaux.

Exposé des motifs

1. L'identité culturelle est propre au sujet; elle est une expression de sa dignité. Son non-respect est une violation de l'intégrité de la personne humaine (cf. art. 1 et 3 du Projet de Charte), et rend impossible l'exercice effectif d'autres droits de l'homme.

2. La diversité culturelle des pays membres de l'Union constitue son patrimoine et sa richesse, pour autant que cette diversité soit vécue comme interactive dans le respect mutuel. Il s'agit d'un principe général d'identité de l'Union (cf. art.2, al, 2 du Traité de l'UE) qu'il convient de rappeler, ainsi que d'un ensemble de droits individuels.
3. Ce principe fondateur et les droits individuels qui lui correspondent est particulièrement pertinent dans le projet de charte, parce que:
 - les guerres en Europe centrale montrent que la sécurité démocratique passe toujours par le respect des identités individuelles et collectives et par la promotion de l'interculturalité;
 - la globalisation des marchés économiques met en danger les identités européennes, collectives et individuelles, dans les différents aspects de la vie quotidienne comme dans la production scientifique, artistique et industrielle.

Les droits et libertés culturelles fondamentales

Proposition

Article ...

Toute personne a droit:

- a. de choisir et de voir respecter son identité culturelle;
- b. de connaître et de voir respecter sa propre culture ainsi que les cultures qui, dans leurs diversités, contribuent au patrimoine commun de l'Europe et de l'humanité;
- c. de participer librement, sans considération de frontières, à la vie culturelle à travers les activités de son choix.

Exposé des motifs

En l'état actuel le Projet de Charte ne contient aucune disposition relative aux droits culturels pourtant reconnus dans les instruments relatifs aux droits de l'homme, notamment à travers le droit de participer à la vie culturelle (Déclaration universelle, a.27; Pacte international relatif aux droits économiques, sociaux et culturels, a. 15; Convention culturelle européenne). Plusieurs raisons peuvent être invoquées pour inscrire en bonne place ces droits dans le Projet de Charte.

1. Le principe général. La diversité culturelle des pays membres de l'Union constitue son patrimoine et sa richesse.. L'article 151, §.1 (ex-article 128) du Traité instituant la Communauté européenne stipule que "La Communauté contribue à l'épanouissement des cultures des Etats membres dans le respect de leur diversité nationale et régionale, tout en mettant en évidence l'héritage culturel commun". L'ensemble de l'article pourrait être intégralement repris.
2. Le principe des droits individuels. L'identité culturelle fait partie de l'intégrité de la personne. Son non-respect est une violation de cette intégrité (cf. art. 1 et 3 du Projet de Charte), rendant impossible l'exercice effectif d'autres droits de l'homme.
3. Les limitations. Il n'y a pas de risque de débordement puisque ces droits et libertés ne peuvent s'exercer que dans le respect de l'ensemble des libertés et droits fondamentaux, selon les dispositions générales du Projet de Charte.

Commentaire

4. Un choix entre deux options. L'option minimale consiste à rappeler ce principe du respect de la diversité culturelle. Cependant la proposition faite ici est plus exigeante, puisqu'il s'agit de reconnaître des droits individuels correspondants.
 5. Quant au fond et à l'opportunité. Il est particulièrement pertinent et opportun d'insérer dans la Charte ce principe fondateur et les droits individuels qui lui correspondent, notamment parce que:
 - les crises dans le Sud-est de Europe on rappelé que la sécurité démocratique passe par le respect des identités individuelles et collectives et par la promotion de l'interculturalité;
 - la globalisation des marchés économiques met en danger les identités européennes, collectives et individuelles, dans les différents aspects de la vie quotidienne comme dans la production scientifique, artistique et industrielle.

Sur le projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Vers :

Paris, le 22 mai 2000

Rien de ce qui concerne les droits fondamentaux ne peut être étranger à notre organisation qui a toujours milité pour les droits de l'Homme et pour la dignité des femmes et des hommes au travail.

Inhérents à l'individu, droits civils et politiques, et droits économiques, sociaux et culturels sont, dans cette conception, indissociables, car comment exercer son droit à la dignité quand on n'a pas de travail, pas de logement, pas de ressources, ou pas d'accès au soins de santé par impossibilité d'en assumer le coût, que ce soit dans la période active ou dans les moments d'inactivité dus au chômage, au handicap, à l'âge ?

C'est pour ces raisons que Force Ouvrière, sans confondre les rôles, et sans se prendre pour le « constituant » qu'elle n'est ni ne veut être, s'estime concernée par le projet d'élaboration d'une charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne et souhaite vous faire part de ses observations sur la rédaction de ce projet tel qu'il est connu à ce jour.

COMMENTAIRES SUR TEXTE « SN 2158/00 » du 23 MARS

ET TEXTE CONVENT 18 « SN 4192/00 »

SUR LE TEXTE « SN1998 /1/00 »Articles A à K

ET SUR LE TEXTE CONVENT.8 « CHARTE 4137/00 »

ET SUR LES TEXTES CONVENT 26 ET CONVENT 27.

Observations d'ordre général

Sur la forme définitive que prendra la charte :

1) La présentation « en éventail » qui est celle de la Charte Sociale Européenne nous paraît efficace :

la première partie y énonce de façon ramassée et percutante les droits , la deuxième partie en précise le contenu, les autres parties les circonstancient.

Néanmoins, sa nature de traité international lui impose des ratifications parlementaires dont la méthode à la carte très compliquée n'est heureusement pas transposable en droit communautaire.

Nous serions favorables à une telle présentation de la charte européenne des droits fondamentaux, en raison de la grande lisibilité que cela donne au texte, en raison du côté opérationnel que cela donne au texte.

Mais attention : dans le projet de la convention, nous pouvons observer que certains exposés des motifs viennent amoindrir les droits énoncés. Il ne faudrait pas, dans l'hypothèse d'un tel choix que la partie II précisant juridiquement les conditions de la pratique des droits, ne viennent amoindrir juridiquement les droits.

Il nous paraît indispensable de faire figurer dans le corps même de l'énoncé de chaque droit les articles des textes internationaux auxquels les rattachent les exposés des motifs ; il y aurait ainsi plus de clarté sur la portée des droits et moins de risques dans le cas où ce que nous appelons une clause d'amélioration ne serait pas retenue.

2) Pour ce qui concerne les droits économiques et sociaux, le texte doit placer en premier les droits basiques avant d'énoncer les droits dédiés aux conditions de travail.

Nous voulons que soient distingués le titulaire et l'exercice de ces droits. En effet le titulaire de ces droits est l'individu et doit le rester, même si l'exercice des droits est souvent collectif, ainsi le droit de grève est-il un droit individuel.

Pour l'ensemble de ces droits, il est important que l'Union travaille en complémentarité avec les organismes internationaux de normalisation et non en concurrence, afin d'éviter tant le recul des situations conquises par les travailleurs dans les pays membres, que le désintérêt qui pourrait atteindre le travail de ces institutions. La mondialisation des échanges et ses conséquences rendent leur action encore plus nécessaire que par le passé.

Il est indispensable de ne rien écrire dans la charte qui, en matière de droits économiques et sociaux, et particulièrement syndicaux n'ait été passé au crible des conventions de l'OIT.

Il existe un pont juridique possible entre la future charte et la Charte de Turin, très peu utilisé par les rédacteurs dans les projets qui nous ont été soumis jusqu'à présent alors qu'en matière des droits civils et politiques l'usage en est large (Art.136 1°al Traité CE). Cependant, la Charte de 1961 couvre un champ moins large que les conventions de l'OIT qui sont connues de tous les Etats membres .

Nous souhaitons donc que soient prises notamment en considération les conventions OIT n° 87, 135, 98, 151, 154, 14, 132, 140.

Sur le champ d'application :

Une charte pour qui ?

1) Pour tout résident sur le territoire européen, et pour les citoyens européens.

2) Pour des titulaires individuels de droits qui peuvent s'exercer, s'organiser et se gérer aussi collectivement.

Une charte pour quels droits ?

1) Pour des droits de l'Homme, droits civils, politiques, économiques et sociaux inhérents à l'individu, et à ce titre indissociables.

2) Pour des « droits », et non pour des « objectifs ».

3) Pour des droits universels, et non subsidiaires et subordonnés à des circonstances, ou à des zones, susceptibles de les rendre variables en nombre, en nature, en durée, en intensité (pas de possibilité d'y déroger, même partiellement).

4) Une charte pour faire mieux, et non une charte subsidiaire réduite à une « clause sociale » européenne.

5) Pour des droits justiciables (avec sanctions en cas de non respect).

6) Pour des droits transfrontaliers.

Une charte pour quelle utilisation ?

Pour des droits directement évocables par leurs titulaires ou leurs représentants désignés.

Une charte avec quelle force ?

Avec celle du droit communautaire par inscription des droits dans les traités en passant au crible les droits qui y figurent déjà pour ne garder que la rédaction la plus favorable aux intéressés.

Sur l'inclusion des droits dans les traités

Nous considérons qu'une déclaration politique solennelle ne répondrait pas aux besoins et objectifs fixés par le Conseil de Cologne et le processus de Tampere. Une charte des droits fondamentaux doit rassembler tout ce qui fait l'identité et la grandeur européenne et affirmer qu'une autre Europe communautaire existe bien à côté de celle des banquiers, et lui donner de la consistance.

Déjà l'article 7 du traité UE renvoyait à un système de valeurs essentielles, bien qu'elles n'y aient pas été précisées.

Commencée avec l'inclusion du pilier JAI dans le premier pilier et sa mise en œuvre sur un programme en deux étapes de deux et trois ans, la clarification se poursuit avec la charte en préparation.

Sans l'inclusion des droits reconnus par la charte dans le traité, les actes et décisions des organes communautaires ne seraient soumis à aucun contrôle international de légalité en matière de droits de l'Homme. La CJCE n'apprécie en effet que de la conformité des actes aux dispositions des traités. Il y aurait donc persistance d'un vide juridique.

Champ géographique d'application :

Tous les droits doivent être applicables en tous points du territoire de l'Union, sans que puisse être tolérée quelque dérogation géographique ou temporaire que ce soit. Il nous paraît important que cela soit spécifié au moins dans un considérant du préambule de la charte.

Pour la France, il existe encore en effet des disparités d'application de certains droits sociaux entre la métropole et certaines zones ultra-périphériques.

Nous proposons donc la rédaction d'un considérant tel qu'il suit :

Sur les articles A à K concernant les citoyens et les non-citoyens :

Service public et services publics:

Pas de droits sans « bonne gouvernance », notion qui va plus loin que la « bonne administration » car elle garantit l'exercice des droits, et en premier lieu les droits à la vie, à la dignité, à l'intégrité physique, par l'organisation collective d'une fonction publique qualifiée, neutre et indépendante, et des services publics offrant à tous continuité, égalité d'accès et tarifs péréqués.

La charte doit absolument formaliser cette notion déjà acceptée par les Quinze à l'article 16 du traité d'Amsterdam, sans qu'ils en aient encore tiré tous les effets.

Nous ne méconnaissons pas la difficulté qu'il peut y avoir pour une structure comme l'Union à se doter clairement de tels principes, car comme l'énonçait la Déclaration des droits de l'Homme et du citoyen de 1789, « toute société dans laquelle la garantie des droits n'est pas assurée ni la séparation des pouvoirs déterminée, n'a point de constitution », garantie, qui bien sûr, requiert une force publique (cf. encore Déclaration des droits de l'Homme et des citoyens de 1789, art. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16). Or l'Union n'a en effet pas de constitution, pas de force publique et donc pas de vocation à prendre en charge l' « intérêt général ».

PROJET D'ARTICLES SUR LES DROITS DES CITOYENS

La synthèse de l'existant que propose la rédaction actuelle du projet de charte sur les droits du citoyen nous paraît intéressante pour la lisibilité qu'elle peut apporter au citoyen.

Par ailleurs les articles 6 et 7 du TUE font désormais obligation à l'Union de définir les valeurs dans lesquelles elle se reconnaît, et de donner forme au « modèle social européen ».

Quelques remarques :

CONCERNANT LES DROITS DES CITOYENS :

Articles A à K. Document SN/1998/1/00 du 15 mars 2000

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

Article A: Principe de démocratie

« 1) Toute autorité publique émane du peuple.

Observations :

Le principe de démocratie étant pour l'Europe le principe des principes, il serait opportun de distinguer l'essence et l'existence de la démocratie.

En effet, les alinea 1 et 3 qui font exister la démocratie dans l'Union sont de même nature, et appartiennent aux citoyens, quand l'alea 2, qui rappelle l'essence même de la démocratie (liberté, respect des droits de l'homme, Etat de droit), concerne tous les résidents des Etats de l'Union.

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION

Article B; Partis politiques:

"Tout citoyen de l'Union a le droit de fonder avec d'autres des partis politiques et des s'y affilier. Les partis politiques au niveau européen contribuent à la formation d'une conscience européenne et à l'expression de la volonté politique des citoyens de l'Union".

Article C: Droit de participer aux élections européennes;

"Tout citoyen de l'Union résidant dans un Etat membre dont il n'est pas le ressortissant a le droit de vote et d'éligibilité aux élections au Parlement européen dans l'Etat membre où il réside dans les mêmes conditions que les ressortissants de cet Etat. Ce droit s'exerce selon les modalités prévues par le traité instituant la Communauté européenne".

Article D: Droit de participer aux élections municipales.

"Tout citoyen résidant dans un Etat membre dont il n'est pas le ressortissant a le droit de vote et d'éligibilité aux élections municipales dans l'Etat membre où il réside dans les mêmes conditions que les ressortissants de cet Etat. Ce droit s'exerce selon les modalités prévues par le traité instituant la Communauté européenne".

Il convient de vérifier le libellé de cet article qui tel quel change considérablement la portée de l'article 19§1 du traité.

En effet, le traité vise "tout citoyen de l'Union", alors que la version SN/ 1998/1/00 du 15 mars 2000 mentionne le droit de participer aux élections municipales pour "tout citoyen".

Article E: Droit à une bonne administration;

1) "Tout citoyen de l'Union et toute personne résidant dans un Etat membre a le droit de voir ses affaires traitées convenablement, équitablement et dans un délai raisonnable par les institutions et organes de l'Union.

2) Ce droit comporte notamment:

n le droit de toute personne d'être entendue avant qu' une mesure individuelle qui l'affecterait personnellement soit prise à son encontre

n le droit d'accès de toute personne au dossier pour autant que cet accès soit nécessaire pour qu'elle puisse faire valoir ses arguments et dans le respect des intérêts légitimes de la confidentialité de ses affaires n l'obligation pour l'administration d'examiner avec soin tous les aspects pertinents de l'affaire n l'obligation pour l'administration de motiver ses décisions.

3) Tout citoyen peut s'adresser aux institutions et organes de l'Union dans une des langues officielles de l'Union et doit recevoir une réponse dans cette langue".

Article F: Droit d'accès aux documents:

Rédaction de l'Article 14 du texte Convent.8 sous la dénomination droit d'accès aux informations:

"Tout citoyen de l'Union ou toute personne résidant dans l'Union a un droit d'accès aux documents des institutions européennes. Ce droit s'exerce dans les conditions prévues par l'article 255 du traité instituant la Communauté européenne".

Nous proposons pour cet article l'amendement suivant:

"Tout citoyen de l'Union, toute personne physique intéressée, et toute personne morale intéressée ayant son siège dans un Etat membre, a un droit d'accès aux documents des institutions de l'Union européenne....(le reste sans changement)"

L'exposé des motifs évoque une référence à l'article 255 du traité. Or ce dernier accorde ce droit aux personnes morales. Pourquoi faire moins? S'il ne s'agit que d'une question de mise en forme de la charte, laquelle dans ce chapitre a tenté de regrouper les droits des "citoyens", le droit d'accès aux documents pour les personnes morales doit être inscrit ailleurs et être éventuellement réservé aux personnes morales assistant les citoyens agissant pour recouvrer la jouissance de leurs droits fondamentaux bafoués.

A l'époque du développement du dialogue avec la "société civile", cela maintiendrait de la cohérence avec la réalité de la vie des citoyens.

Par ailleurs, la condition de résidence exigée interdit à des personnes extérieures à l'Union mais concernées par son action actuelle ou future (au titre d'accords d'association ou de procédure d'adhésion par exemple) de prendre connaissance d'actes les concernant. C'est la raison pour laquelle nous ajoutons l'adjectif "intéressée".

Article G : Accès au médiateur:

"Tout citoyen de l'Union et toute personne résidant sur le territoire d'un Etat membre a le droit de saisir le médiateur de l'Union des cas de mauvaise administration des institutions et organes communautaires, à l'exception de la Cour de Justice et du Tribunal de Première Instance dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions juridictionnelles. Ce droit s'exerce dans les conditions définies par le traité instituant la Communauté européenne et les dispositions prises pour son application".

Article H: Droit de pétition:

"Tout citoyen de l'Union et toute personne résidant sur le territoire d'un Etat membre a le droit de pétition devant le Parlement européen dans les conditions définies par le traité instituant la Communauté européenne".

Article I: Liberté de mouvement:

"Tout citoyen a le droit de circuler et de séjourner librement sur le territoire des Etats membres selon les limitations et conditions définies par le traité instituant la Communauté européenne".

Article J: Liberté professionnelle:

Article repris à l'article 2 du texte Convent 18 du 27 mars 2000 qui énonce les droits sociaux. Voir nos commentaires sous cet article.

Article K: Non-discrimination:

" Toute discrimination fondée sur la nationalité est interdite entre les citoyens de l'Union".

De la citoyenneté européenne et de son usage:

Les articles B,C,D,I, ne s'appliquent qu'aux citoyens, alors que les articles E, relatif à une bonne administration, et F, G,H,J,K, ne peuvent que concerner toute personne sous peine de faillir au respect des valeurs de la démocratie.

Les articles I et J, par l'application de la convention de Schengen, ont déjà une portée générale à l'égard des résidents en situation estimée régulière par les autorités du territoire de leur point d'entrée dans la Communauté.

Procéder à une classification des droits du «citoyen » européen dans la vie politique européenne, et des droits fondamentaux, apanage de toute personne, y compris du citoyen, permettrait une clarification sans que cette catégorisation n'enlève rien à quiconque ni ne crée de la "non-citoyenneté" où seraient cantonnés les non-résidents.

Aucune citoyenneté ne procède réellement de l'Union ; tout citoyen européen ne l'est que parce qu'il est citoyen d'un Etat membre. La citoyenneté en Europe vient des Etats et non d'une constitution européenne qui en aurait défini les contours par le haut. Or cette situation conditionne l'exercice du droit d'asile, les règles sur les migrations (art.17 de la charte en projet), et même la liberté de circuler qui, au sens de la convention de Schengen veut dire se déplacer, et au sens du traité de Rome, veut dire séjourner, c'est-à-dire selon qu'on est citoyen ou résident.

Par ailleurs, comment concilier l'article B qui assure seulement à « tout citoyen de l'Union le droit de fonder avec d'autres des partis politiques et de s'y affilier », alors que par ailleurs, l'article 13 donne à « toute personne » « la liberté de réunion pacifique et la liberté d'association , y compris le droit de fonder avec d'autres des syndicats et de s'y affilier » ?

Il n'y a pas de manquement aux droits fondamentaux à énoncer dans une introduction la proposition d'amendement suivante :

En outre, l'alinéa 1 de l'article 1 peut poser un problème de conformité constitutionnelle aux Français , particulièrement par rapport à l' article 3 et aux Préambules de la Constitution.

PROJET D'ARTICLES SUR LES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX

Charte 4149/9 du 8 mars 2000

Remarque générale : nous proposons que chaque article reprenne explicitement les références aux textes européens et internationaux mentionnés dans les exposés des motifs.

Sur l'article 1 : Dignité de la personne humaine

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« La dignité de la personne humaine est respectée et protégée en toutes circonstances ».

Comme aux grands textes de droit français du passé, la rédaction condensée donne de la force.

Cet article peut se limiter à cette énonciation puisque les articles et les droits qui suivent en donnent les conditions, dont l'interdiction de l'esclavage, qui fait à juste titre l'objet d'un article spécifique.

Sur l'article 2 : Droit à la vie

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« 1) Toute personne a droit à la vie.

« 2) Nul ne peut être condamné à la peine de mort, ni exécuté ».

Nous approuvons le renoncement à la peine de mort.

Nous notons la divergence entre la rédaction de cet article dans son alinéa 2 et celle de l'article 2 de la CEDH. Le pont que fait entre les deux l'article 6 TUE rend-il les deux systèmes de normes compatibles entre eux, et avec les droits nationaux qui ont aboli la peine de mort ?

Ici il est patent que le dispositif accompagnant l'article est un affaiblissement ; l'amélioration pour tous consiste à proclamer que ce droit est plénier et qu'il ne souffre aucune exception. Si tel n'est pas le cas, il serait plus honnête et transparent de citer soit dans l'article la référence à l'article 2 de la CEDH, soit de faire figurer son contenu dans une partie II dotée de force juridique.

[CEDH ART.2 :« Le droit de toute personne à la vie est protégé par la loi. La mort ne peut être infligée à quiconque intentionnellement, sauf en exécution d'une sentence capitale prononcée par un tribunal au cas où le délit est puni de cette peine par la loi ».

Ceci nous porterait même à faire du droit à la vie un droit constitutionnel, au- dessus de toute loi supposée le protéger.

Sur l'article 3 : Droit au respect de l'intégrité

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« 1) Toute personne à droit au respect de son intégrité physique et mentale.

« 2) Dans le cadre de la médecine et de la biologie, les principes suivants doivent notamment être respectés :

- interdiction des pratiques eugéniques
- respect du consentement éclairé du patient
- interdiction de faire du corps humain et de ses produits une source de profit
- interdiction du clonage des êtres humains ».

Nous soulignons l'attention particulière que portent les magistrats français à l'adverbe « notamment ».

Il faut impérativement ici, si cette forme de l'article est maintenue, que cet adverbe serve à maintenir grande ouverte la porte des adjonctions à cette liste. Il nous paraît cependant, dangereux de lier le principe, droit absolu et universel, avec les progrès de la médecine, par définition contingents, variables, et sujets à divergences d'interprétation.

Il vaudrait mieux ne raisonner qu' en termes de droit.

Nous aimerions mieux de toutes façons que, à l'alinéa 2, l'interdiction de faire du corps humain et de ses produits une source de profits, soit rédigée plutôt sous forme de principe que sous forme d'interdiction :

Proposition d'amendement:

« Le corps humain n'est pas une marchandise ; ni le corps, ni ses produits, comprenant l'enfant en devenir, ne peuvent être sources de profit ».

Sur l'article 4 : Interdiction de la torture et des traitements inhumains

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Nul ne peut être soumis à la torture, ni à des peines et traitements inhumains et dégradants ».

Pas d'observations à cette date, si ce n'est la remarque générale d'introduction..

Sur l'article 5 : Interdiction de l'esclavage et du travail forcé

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« 1) Nul ne peut être tenu en esclavage ni en servitude.

« 2) Nul ne peut être astreint à accomplir un travail forcé ou obligatoire ».

L'exposé des motifs qui renvoie aux articles 4 et 5 de la CEDH ne pose pas de problème sous réserve de son inscription dans le corps de l'article.

Sur l'article 6 : Droit à la liberté et à la sûreté

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Toute personne a droit à la liberté et à la sûreté. Nul ne peut être privé de sa liberté, sauf dans des cas spécifiques et selon les voies légales ».

Le choix de la rédaction d'articles peu circonstanciés mais percutants et qui renvoient pour leur interprétation au contenu de la CEDH par l'article 6 du traité UE, permet probablement un meilleur pyramidage entre les deux systèmes de normes, mais fait manquer l'occasion de moderniser certains éléments, comme le paragraphe e) de l'article 5 de la CEDH alors que la Convention à propos d'un autre droit a bien su changer la référence d'un texte précédent parlant de « nations civilisées » pour « nations démocratiques »(art.10.2).

L'Union devra veiller au strict respect de ces principes dès avant la charte, lorsqu'elle mettra en ouvre de la décision d'Amsterdam d'intégrer le pilier Justice et Affaires Intérieures dans le premier pilier. (Traité d'Amsterdam titre IV).

La remarque générale d'introduction est à faire ici aussi.

Sur l'article 7 : Droit à un recours effectif

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Toute personne dont les droits et les libertés ont été violés a droit à un recours effectif devant un tribunal ».

Pas d'observation à cette date, si ce n'est la remarque générale d'introduction..

Sur l'article 8 :Droit à un tribunal impartial :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Toute personne a droit à ce que sa cause soit entendue équitablement, publiquement et dans un délai raisonnable, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial, établi par la loi. Une aide juridique gratuite est octroyée à ceux qui ne disposent pas de ressources suffisantes dans la mesure où cette aide serait indispensable pour assurer l'effectivité de l'accès à la justice ».

Une référence directe à l'article 5§1 de la CEDH permettrait de faire connaître les limitations de la portée du droit de façon claire (cf. nos remarques générales).

Nous proposons d'amender l'article en lui ajoutant, après le mot « personne », les mots suivants :

Sur l'article 9 : Droits de la défense :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Tout accusé est présumé innocent jusqu'à ce que sa culpabilité ait été légalement établie et a droit au respect des droits de la défense . »

Nous proposons, comme précédemment, d'amender l'article en ajoutant après le mot « défense » :

(Remarque générale d'introduction).

Sur l'article 10 : Pas de peine sans loi

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION/

« 1) Nul ne peut être condamné pour une action ou une omission qui, au moment où elle a été commise, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit national, le droit de l'Union ou le droit international. De même, il n'est infligé aucune peine plus forte que celle qui était applicable au moment où l'infraction a été commise. Si postérieurement à cette infraction, la loi prévoit une peine plus légère, celle-ci doit être appliquée.

2) Le présent article ne porte pas atteinte au jugement et à la punition d'une personne coupable d'une action ou d' omission qui, au moment où elle a été commise, était criminelle d'après les principes généraux du droit reconnus par les nations démocratiques ».

Pas d'observations à cette date, sauf la remarque générale d'introduction..

Sur l'article 11 : Droit à ne pas être jugé ou puni deux fois :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

« Nul ne peut être poursuivi ou puni pénalement en raison d'une infraction pour laquelle il a déjà été acquitté ou condamné par un jugement définitif conformément à la loi ».

Pas d'observation à cette date, sauf la remarque générale d'introduction

Sur l'article 12 :Respect de la vie privée :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Toute personne a droit au respect de sa vie privée, de son honneur, de son domicile et du secret de ses communications ».

Proposition d'amendement:

Nous souhaitons ajouter de façon explicite « le respect de son image » après le mot « honneur ».
Remarque générale d'introduction.

Sur l'article 13 : Vie familiale

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

« 1) Toute personne a droit au respect de sa vie familiale.

Bien que l'Islam n'y soit pas une religion d'Etat, cette religion qui admet la polygamie y est très répandue.

Les familles turques devenues membres de l'Union seront titulaires du droit de circuler librement dans le territoire et devront voir leurs droits respectés.

De quel type de famille parle le texte et parleront les institutions et organes communautaires? N'y aurait-il pas un intérêt à préciser la notion ?

° Ce droit, qui ne fait pas partie des articles A à K relatifs aux citoyens de l'Union, inclut-il les résidents légaux et leur famille ayant bénéficié du rapprochement ?

° Alinéa 2 : la forme nous paraît devoir être reprise pour :

« .de se marier par libre consentement et de fonder une famille selon les lois des Etats membres relatives à l'exercice de ce droit ».

Remarque générale d'introduction.

Sur l'article 14 : Liberté de penser, de conscience, et de religion

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Toute personne a droit à la liberté de pensée, de conscience et de religion ».

L'article 10 du texte antérieur Convent.8 du 24 février 2000 charte 4137/00 circonvenait l'exercice du droit par inclusion dans le texte de l'alinéa 1 de l'article 9 de la CEDH

Nous proposons dans le cas où le maintien de l'ancienne rédaction redeviendrait d'actualité, de ne pas inclure les dispositions de l'article 9 al.1 CEDH sans l'alinéa 2 qui, bien que posant des restrictions au principe de liberté de manifester sa religion ou ses convictions, définit celles-ci limitativement, et nous paraît de nature à préserver la conception française de laïcité.

[CEDH Art.9:

1) Toute personne a droit à la liberté de pensée, de conscience, et de religion; ce droit implique la liberté de changer de religion ou de conviction, ainsi que la liberté de manifester sa religion ou sa conviction individuellement ou collectivement, en public ou en privé, par le culte, l'enseignement, les pratiques et l'accomplissement des rites.

2) La liberté de manifester sa religion ou ses convictions ne peut faire l'objet d'autres restrictions que celles qui, prévues par la loi, constituent des mesures nécessaires, dans une société démocratique, à la sécurité publique, à la protection de l'ordre, de la santé ou de la morale publiques, ou à la protection des droits et libertés d'autrui.]

Sur l'article 15 : Liberté d'expression

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« 1) Toute personne a droit à la liberté d'expression. Ce droit comprend la liberté d'opinion et la liberté de recevoir ou de communiquer des informations ou des idées sans qu'il puisse y avoir d'ingérence d'autorités publiques et sans considération de frontière ».

« 2) L'art, la science et la recherche sont libres »

Il nous paraît plus protecteur d'évoquer dans le texte de manière spécifique la liberté d'opinion en matière philosophique, politique et religieuse, sans restreindre le champ de ce droit à ces seuls aspects. Nous proposons l'amendement suivant:

A.15 al 1 2° phrase « Ce droit comprend tout particulièrement la

liberté d'opinion philosophique, politique, et religieuse, et plus généralement la liberté d'opinion ainsi que celle de recevoir ou de communiquer des informations ou idées sans qu'il puisse y avoir d'ingérence d'autorités publiques et sans considération de frontières. »

Par ailleurs la notion « d'ingérence d'autorités publiques » doit absolument être définie, peut-être dans une partie II. Car selon la définition, ou l'interprétation qui serait donnée par un tribunal, la limitation au droit qu'apporte ce membre de phrase pour être bénigne ou grave.

Remarque générale d'introduction sur l'inclusion nécessaire des textes de référence de l'exposé des motifs..

Sur l'article 16 : Droit à l'éducation

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

1. « Nul ne peut se voir refuser le droit à l'instruction qui comporte notamment la faculté de suivre gratuitement l'enseignement obligatoire.

2. « La création d'établissements d'enseignement est libre.

3. « Le droit des parents d'assurer l'éducation et l'enseignement de leurs enfants, conformément à leurs convictions religieuses et philosophiques, est respecté ».

Nous souhaitons voir inscrite à cet article la mission de l'Etat dans le domaine de l'éducation :

Propositions d'amendement:

A.16 al. 2 : « L'Etat, dans l'exercice de ses fonctions, assume la responsabilité de l'organisation de l'enseignement.

La création d'établissements d'enseignement est libre ».

A.16 al. 3 : A la première ligne, enlever « et l'enseignement » ;

Après « est respecté. », ajouter : « , tant qu'il ne porte pas atteinte aux droits de l'enfant et à l'exercice futur de ses libertés ».

ARTICLES HORS CONVENT.13

NB :

Dans la rédaction dite « Convent. 13 » du 08 mars 2000 qui refond la première rédaction des articles 1 à 12 en articles 1 à 16 ne figurent pas les articles 13 à 19 énoncés par la rédaction du texte dit « Convent.8 » en date du 24 février. Nous ne doutons pas que dans sa forme définitive, la charte les mentionne, car ils sont de très grande importance. Ceux qui n'ont pas été évoqués supra sont cités ci-dessous dans leur rédaction du 24/02/2000 Doc.4137/00.

Sur l'article 13 Convent.8: la liberté de réunion et d'association:

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

Toute personne a droit à la liberté de réunion pacifique et à la liberté d'association, y compris le droit de fonder avec d'autres des syndicats et de s'y affilier ».

Nous proposons d'amender le texte par ajout de l' alinea suivant:

" Ce droit inclut la liberté de manifestation pacifique".

Sur l'article 14 Convent 8: le droit d'accès aux informations:

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION

"Tout citoyen de l'Union ou toute personne résidant dans l'Union a un droit d'accès aux documents des institutions de l'Union européenne. Ce droit s'exerce dans les conditions prévues par l'article 255 du traité instituant la Communauté européenne".

Sur l'article 15 Convent.8: Protection des données:

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION

"Toute personne physique a droit à la protection de ses données à caractère personnel".

Nous proposons l'amendement suivant:

"Toute personne morale privée ou publique, assujettie au droit communautaire, a droit à la protection des données relatives à l'objet de ses activités licites dans le respect des lois relatives à l'ordre, à la sécurité, à la santé publics, et des droits et libertés individuels des personnes physiques qui concourent à la réalisation de son activité.

"Les données relatives aux personnes physiques et morales ne peuvent que:

- être collectées par des organismes légalement habilités,
- être utilisées à des fins licites et dans l'objet précis de leur collecte,
- être conservées pendant la durée limitée à la réalisation de l'objet de leur collecte.

"Toute personne physique et morale reste propriétaire de ses données, dispose d'un droit permanent d'accès, d'actualisation et de suppression".

Sur l'article 16 Convent. 8 : le droit de propriété:

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION/

"Toute personne a droit au respect de ses biens. Nul ne peut être privé de sa propriété que pour cause d'utilité publique et dans les cas et conditions prévus par une loi et moyennant une juste [et préalable] indemnité".

Nous proposons l'amendement suivant:

"Les biens communs universels naturels indispensables à la vie [tels que l'air, l'eau], et intellectuels [comme la découverte du génome humain^o] ne sont pas susceptibles d'appropriation".

Sur l'article 17 Convent 8: le droit d'asile et l'expulsion

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

1) "Les personnes qui ne sont pas des ressortissants de l'Union ont un droit d'asile dans l'Union européenne [conformément aux règles de la Convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951 et au protocole du 31 janvier 1967 relatifs au statut des réfugiés] [dans les conditions prévues par les traités].

2) "Les expulsions collectives d'étrangers sont interdites".

Les visas, l'asile et l'immigration font maintenant partie des politiques communes, bien que les textes restent à finaliser (titre IV traité d'Amsterdam^o).

Le fait de mêler dans un même article l'asile et la police des étrangers ne grandit pas la proclamation du principe qui devrait plutôt citer succinctement les conditions d'accès au droit d'asile.

Nous proposons un amendement qui sépare les deux alinea en deux articles; le nouvel article s'écrirait comme suit:

"Tout étranger en situation irrégulière dans l'Union peut notamment invoquer les droits énoncés aux articles 1 à 11 [du Convent.8] de la charte communautaire des droits fondamentaux.

Les expulsions collectives d'étrangers sont interdites".

Sur l'article 18 Convent.8: L'égalité

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Toutes les personnes sont égales devant la loi".

Nous proposons l'amendement suivant pour une nouvelle rédaction de l'article de sorte qu'il couvre un large spectre en englobant des données relatives à l'égalité sur lesquelles il y a déjà consensus dans l'Union:

"1) Toutes les personnes naissent libres et égales en dignité et en droit.

2) Elles sont égales devant la loi et ont droit sans discrimination à une égale protection de la loi".

3) Toute discrimination à raison notamment du sexe, de la race, de la couleur ou de l'origine ethnique, de la religion ou des convictions, du handicap, de l'âge, et de l'orientation sexuelle est interdite

4) L'égalité entre les hommes et les femmes doit être assurée dans tous les domaines et particulièrement en matière d'emploi et de travail et de protection sociale ».

Nous conservons le terme de "personne" parce que c'est celui qui est utilisé dans toute le projet de charte.

Sur l'article 19 Convent 8: Non discrimination

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION

"1) Est interdite toute discrimination fondée sur le sexe, la race, la couleur, ou l'origine sociale, la langue, la religion ou les convictions, l'appartenance à une minorité nationale, la fortune, la naissance, un handicap, l'âge ou l'orientation sexuelle.

2) L'Union cherche à éliminer les inégalités et à promouvoir l'égalité entre les hommes et les femmes. [L'égalité des sexes est notamment assurée dans la fixation des rémunérations et des autres conditions de travail conformément au traité et aux textes pris pour son application]".

Nous considérons que la non-discrimination, déjà garantie dans le traité, n'est qu'une facette du principe d'égalité et qu'il est plus fort de l'écrire dans l'article consacré à ce principe.

Par ailleurs, l'alinéa 2 ne doit pas figurer dans une charte des droits fondamentaux; il est programmatique et n'énonce qu'un objectif.

ARTICLES HORIZONTALS

LE CHAMP D'APPLICATION

ARTICLE H 1 CONVENT 27 DU 17.04.2000 :

Sur le champ d'application, voir nos observations générales, et celles formulées sous l'article 1.

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

1. « Les dispositions de la présente Charte s'adressent aux institutions et organes de l'Union dans le cadre des attributions qui leur sont conférées par les traités ainsi qu'aux Etats membres exclusivement dans le cadre de la mise en oeuvre du droit communautaire ».

2. Elles ne créent aucune compétence ni aucune tâche nouvelle pour la Communauté et pour l'Union ».

Nous proposons que soit ajouté l'amendement suivant :

« 4) Les dispositions de la présente Charte ne peuvent être modifiées que selon des procédures d'élaboration et d'adoption identiques à celles qui ont prévalu pour l'élaboration et l'adoption de son texte initial.

ARTICLE H 2(Convent 27) : LIMITATIONS DES DROITS GARANTIS :

ANCIENNE REDACTION DE CET ARTICLE :

« ARTICLE X. LIMITATIONS :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION : première rédaction :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION CONVENT 27:

ARTICLE H 2 :

1. « Les droits et libertés reconnus aux articles. de la présente charte ne peuvent faire l'objet d'aucune limitation.
2. Toute limitation, aux droits et libertés garantis par la présente charte doit être prévue par le législateur. Elle doit respecter le contenu essentiel desdits droits et libertés et rester, dans le respect du principe de proportionnalité, dans des limites nécessaires à la protection d'intérêts légitimes dans une société démocratique. Les limitations prévues par la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme sont applicables à ceux des droits et libertés contenus dans la présente Charte qui sont également garantis par ladite Convention ».

« Les droits garantis par les articles .s'exercent dans les conditions et limites définies par le traité instituant la Communauté européenne »

Les commentaires sous ces trois articles ne peuvent être faits que sous la réserve de connaître les droits qui seront inscrits dans H2 et H3 à la place des points de suspension.

Dans l'état actuel de la rédaction, les articles H2et H3 semblent vouloir préciser les conditions d'exercice des droits en catégorisant entre ceux qui ne subiraient aucune limitation communautaire selon H2 al.1, et ceux qui s'exerceraient dans les conditions et limites définies par le traité CE, c'est-à-dire selon des limites venant des règles économiques communautaires, sans préciser lesquelles ni dans quelles circonstances.

Par ailleurs, l'article qui évoque ceux qui ne subiraient aucune limitation communautaire écrit aussitôt dans son 2° alinea quelles limitations peuvent exister, mais des règles nationales.

Quels droits resteront-t-ils ?

On peut de toutes façons s'interroger sur une approche qui voudrait des droits plus fondamentaux que d'autres. Pour Force Ouvrière il ne peut en tous cas y avoir de limitation dans le nombre des droits fondamentaux pour lesquels aucun « opting out » ne peut être autorisé, ni de limitation dans leur exercice, sauf prévue par le législateur national.

Dans l'état connu de la rédaction du texte au 22 mai 2000, nous proposons l'amendement suivant :

« 1) Les droits et libertés reconnus par la présente charte ne peuvent faire l'objet d'aucune limitation de nature et nombre et de contenu ».

2) Les droits et libertés garantis par la présente Charte s'exercent dans les conditions et limites définies par le traité instituant la Communauté européenne et par le législateur national, sans qu'il puisse être porté atteinte à leur nature et à leur nombre et à leur contenu sous peine de nullité de la mesure.

3) Toute limitation d'exercice aux droits et libertés garantis par la présente Charte doit avoir été prévue par la loi nationale. Elle doit respecter le contenu essentiel desdits droits et libertés et rester, dans le respect du principe de proportionnalité, dans les limites nécessaires à la protection d'intérêts légitimes dans une société démocratique. Les limitations prévues par la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme sont applicables à ceux des droits et libertés contenus dans la présente Charte qui sont également garantis par ladite Convention, sauf loi nationale plus favorable en vigueur dans les Etats membres ».

(Cf. pour la dernière ligne, le cas du droit à la vie, et la peine de mort, art. 2 CEDH et loi française, voir supra sous « droit à la vie »).

ARTICLE H 4 : LE NIVEAU DE PROTECTION :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION, ANCIENNE REDACTION :

ARTICLE Y LE NIVEAU DE PROTECTION :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION , CONVENT 27:

Nous proposons d'amender le texte par un ajout après « Homme » :

Nous annulons cette demande qui n'a plus lieu d'être si la rédaction du texte Convent 27 est retenue.

Mais nous proposons d'ajouter à toute forme de l'article qui ne comporterait pas cette précision l'alinéa suivant:

«2) Toute limitation doit s'interpréter au sens strict ».

ARTICLE H 5 :INTERDICTION DE L'ABUS DE DROIT :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Aucune des dispositions de la présente Charte ne peut être interprétée comme impliquant un droit quelconque de se livrer à une activité ou accomplir un acte visant à la destruction des droits ou libertés reconnus dans la présente Charte ».

Pas de commentaire.

DROITS / OBJECTIFS ECONOMIQUES ET SOCIAUX

Nous préférons à ce titre, même s'il est encore provisoire, celui classique et reconnu qui ne parle que de droits, de:

« DROITS ECONOMIQUES, SOCIAUX, ET CULTURELS »

*dénomination du Pacte de l'ONU

*à reprendre telle quelle pour le titre du chapitre ;

*et s'en tenir aux droits, car les « objectifs » appartiennent aux gouvernements.

A) Droit au travail :

Ce chapitre commence par un vide car le droit au travail n'y est pas inscrit.

Or c'est en France un droit constitutionnel ainsi que celui d'obtenir un emploi. Par contre, atteindre un niveau d'emploi élevé est un objectif qui appartient au politique et ne peut s'analyser comme un droit dont le titulaire est un individu .

L'Union pourrait commencer par prendre à son compte le principe consacré par l'OIT et inscrire dans ses textes une fois pour toutes que :

« Le travail n'est pas une marchandise »

La liberté professionnelle qui est traitée à un autre endroit, viendrait en deuxième volet de ce droit au travail.

La rédaction de l'article 23 de la déclaration des droits de l'Homme qui est dans le style adopté pour les articles 1 à 16 de la charte qui nous intéresse est d'une grande force ,et peut servir ici de modèle avec l'article 6 du Pacte international relatif aux droits économiques, sociaux et culturels.

Nous proposons la création d'un nouvel article selon la rédaction suivante:

"1) Le travail n'est pas une marchandise.

"2) Toute personne [terminologie de la Convention] a droit au travail, c'est-à-dire à la possibilité de gagner sa vie par un travail librement entrepris, à des conditions équitables et satisfaisantes de travail et à la protection contre le chômage".

Nous proposons un amendement sous forme d'une clause générale d'amélioration :

Un pyramidage sans hiérarchie des normes a été introduit dans les textes européens par le traité d'Amsterdam entre les normes sociales européennes; qu'on le veuille ou non, l'article. 136 du traité CE permet aux Quinze de puiser dans patrimoine des Quarante et un du Conseil de l'Europe pour mieux comprendre et interpréter leur propre droit.

Mais la référence ne concerne que la charte de 1961 qui ne comporte que 19 articles, pour certains déjà partie intégrante des droits nationaux; l'échange ne sera donc pas complet.

Par ailleurs la charte en préparation semble vouloir couvrir un champ plus large que ces 19 articles de 1961, englobant au passage (dans la rédaction du projet au 12 avril 2000) la plupart, mais pas tous, des droits de la Charte communautaire des droits sociaux fondamentaux des travailleurs et de la Charte révisée du Conseil de l'Europe; elle n'est, pour le moment, pas destinée à avoir une valeur contraignante pour les Etats membres, mais la plupart des droits listés sont en vigueur dans tous les Etats membres, et l'Union a elle-même rendus contraignants certains des droits de la Charte de Strasbourg.

On peut alors se demander :

1) si la charte en préparation aura de la valeur pour les institutions et organes communautaires auxquels elle est aujourd'hui destinée ;

2) s'il ne serait pas temps de simplifier l'empilage pour le rendre visible aux citoyens et opérationnel pour les praticiens.

Pourquoi ne pas mentionner explicitement dans le préambule la complémentarité de l'ensemble des normes civiles et politiques, économiques et sociales du système onusien (ONU, OIT), du Conseil de l'Europe (CEDH, Charte Sociale Européenne Révisée, et Protocoles) avec celles de l'Union (traités et chartes) ? et indiquer que, en cas de litige, c'est toujours la norme supérieure qui prévaudrait pour dire le droit, y compris si c'est la règle nationale ? Cela éviterait que ne se creusent des divergences de droit et de situation entre les membres de l'Union, et entre eux et les candidats à l'Union . Cela obligerait les Etats membres à ne pas diminuer leurs droits et leur niveau de protection (clause de non-régression de l'état des droits) .

Ce sera un des mérites de cette charte , si elle aboutit, que d'impliquer l'Union européenne dans la sauvegarde des droits fondamentaux presque sur l'ensemble du continent, par un auto-contrôle multilatéral, qui serait, s'il fonctionne bien, une plus grande garantie pour les droits de l'Homme, que l'engagement unilatéral de la constitution d'un Etat vis à vis de ses citoyens.

On imagine mal, en effet, que quinze Etats deviennent fascistes en même temps .

Après, son adoption, il est possible que le texte devienne autonome et prenne le statut de référence pour tous. Il ne sert à rien pour l'Union de se livrer à un exercice de style, si ce n'est pas avec une réelle volonté de faire progresser les droits et leur respect. Ainsi l'aspect transnational de certains droits devrait être admis, comme les droits syndicaux transnationaux, les droits corollaires du principe de libre circulation, et ceux de la citoyenneté européenne .

Une clause d'amélioration de l'état et du niveau des droits aussi bien civils et politiques que économiques et sociaux est nécessaire.

Les Etats membres avaient déjà su accepter, au moment de signer la charte de Strasbourg, une clause de non-régression par rapport à leurs situations existantes.

Enoncer un texte trop basique et trop faible n'aiderait pas les nouveaux membres et menacerait les anciens. Il est inutile d'introduire ou de laisser perdurer des éléments légaux et contre productifs de dumping social entre les pays d'Europe. Il faut que les Etats acceptent de s'engager, comme les y invite le traité CE lui-même, à améliorer les conditions de vie (dont font partie les droits civils et politiques, économiques et sociaux), et de travail de leurs résidents .

Nous proposons que les considérants suivants figurent au préambule :

"...considérant que la proclamation solennelle des droits fondamentaux au niveau de la Communauté européenne ne peut justifier, lors de sa mise en oeuvre, de régression par rapport à la situation existante dans chaque Etat membre ou signataire, et qu'au contraire cette mise en oeuvre doit favoriser une égalisation dans le progrès de tous les droits en nature et en niveau dans l'ensemble des Etats membres et des Etats signataires " ; .

" considérant qu'un des moyens d'y parvenir est d'appliquer la clause de la norme la plus favorisante chaque fois qu'il y aura concomitance de normes nationales ,européennes, et internationales;

" considérant que les Etats membres restent attachés à poursuivre leurs efforts dans le sens d'une amélioration des conditions de vie et de travail au sens de l'article 136 du traité instituant la Communauté européenne;"...

Sur les articles proposés par le texte Convent. 18:
Charte/4192/00 du 27 mars 2000

1) Sur l'article I: Egalité entre les hommes et les femmes :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"L'égalité entre les hommes et les femmes doit être assurée en matière d'emploi et de travail et de protection sociale".

Compétence communautaire, article 137 traité CE)

De plus, le principe d'égalité de traitement entre tous les hommes et toutes les femmes au plan général est inclus dans le principe de non-discrimination qui figure déjà au traité CE dans son article 13. Il doit être inscrit dans la charte :

Cependant, les discriminations qui existent toujours dans tous les aspects du travail y compris chez les fonctionnaires d'Etat en France, justifient qu'un autre article réaffirme le principe d'égalité entre les sexes dans le domaine particulier du travail et de sa rémunération.

2) Sur l'article II: Liberté professionnelle :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION

"Toute personne a le droit de choisir et d'exercer sa profession et ses activités commerciales, sans préjudice des règles du traité relatives à la libre circulation des personnes".

Ce droit est à la fois une liberté fondamentale et un élément constitutif du droit au travail dont il doit être rendu indissociable.

Il n'y a aucune raison pour le rendre dépendant des règles communautaires de la libre circulation des personnes, ni pour l'associer expressément, et donc restrictivement à des activités commerciales, ni pour effacer du texte l'adverbe "librement" qui figurait à la rédaction de l'article J du SN.REV1 du 15 mars relatif aux droits des citoyens.

Nous proposons une nouvelle rédaction de l'article comme suit:

1.« Dans le cadre de l'exercice de son droit au travail, toute personne a le droit de choisir et d'exercer librement sa profession ».

2. « Toute personne a le droit d'accéder à un service gratuit de placement».

3) Sur l'article III: le droit à l'information-consultation des travailleurs:

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Les travailleurs et leurs représentants ont le droit à une consultation effective au sein de l'entreprise qui les emploie, notamment dans le cadre des procédures de licenciement collectif et des décisions relatives aux conditions de travail et au milieu de travail".

L'ensemble des pays de l'Union pratiquent maintenant ce droit, au moins dans les Comités d'entreprise européens. Pour une proposition d'amendement, l'écriture peut donc s'inspirer de celle de la directive :

dirigeants de l'entreprise qui les emploie, préalablement à toute prise de décisions susceptibles d'affecter substantiellement leurs intérêts matériels et moraux, et particulièrement celles pouvant entraîner des conséquences importantes sur la situation de l'emploi dans l'entreprise, ainsi que sur celles relatives à l'amélioration de leurs conditions de travail et de leur milieu de travail ».

4) Sur l'article IV: le droit d'association , de négociation et d'action collective :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

IV.al.1) -La liberté syndicale.

"Les employeurs et les travailleurs ont le droit de s'associer librement, y compris au niveau de l'Union, en vue de constituer les organisations professionnelles de leur choix pour la défense de leurs intérêts économiques et sociaux".

Tout employeur et tout travailleur a la liberté d'adhérer ou de ne pas adhérer à ces organisations, sans qu'il puisse en résulter pour lui un dommage personnel ou professionnel".

Nous estimons que comme l'OIT l'a fait, il convient de consacrer un article plénier à la liberté syndicale. Les droits syndicaux sont des droits fondamentaux , des droits de l'Homme, qui « méritent » autant que le droit à la vie ou le droit de propriété d'être individualisés ; ils ne sont pas un magma social, et doivent bénéficier de la même lisibilité que les autres droits fondamentaux.

Nous proposons l'amendement suivant pour une nouvelle rédaction:

(le « et » introduit ainsi dans le texte l'art.5 de la C°87 OIT).

Nous citons les intérêts « moraux » qui réfèrent à la dignité des travailleurs en général et en particulier à tout ce qui concerne les pressions psychologiques et morales qu'ils subissent de manière renforcée dans la période contemporaine.

Droit d'interpellation collective

Nous souhaitons que, en l'absence d'un contrôle du respect et de la bonne application des droits économiques et sociaux dans les Etats membres par une inspection du travail européenne , et par parallélisme d'idée avec ce qu'ont déjà décidé entre eux les Etats de l'Union dans l'enceinte du Conseil de l'Europe, soit institué un droit d'interpellation collective.

La pratique d'une « médiation » de type ombudsman ne suffisant pas en matière sociale, nous nous inspirons à la fois de l'article 232 du traité CE et du Protocole additionnel à la Charte sociale européenne prévoyant un système de réclamations collectives.

Le titulaire du droit serait la personne lésée ; celle-ci pourrait subroger une organisation collective syndicale nationale ou internationale (ou patronale, par parallélisme avec le Protocole) dans son droit à agir.

L'organisation collective syndicale nationale ou internationale (ou patronale) serait également titulaire d'un droit à agir au nom du groupe de personnes qu'elle représente.

L'interpellation viserait soit l'Etat membre pour non exécution de ses engagements nés de la ratification de traités internationaux, soit l'Union européenne pour non exécution de leurs obligations par les institutions.

Ce droit d'interpellation permettrait d'asseoir la reconnaissance du fait syndical, ferait entrer les droits fondamentaux dans l'acquis communautaire, les rendrait visibles pour tous, et par cette surveillance des Européens eux-mêmes, conforterait le fonctionnement de la démocratie.

Nous souhaitons donc que la Convention fasse sienne cette proposition de rédaction :

Article 4 paragraphe 1 ,ajout d'un 3°alinea :

Les organisations nationales représentatives d'employeurs et de travailleurs ont le droit d'interpeller leurs institutions nationales ainsi que les institutions de l'Union européenne devant la CJCE sur le respect et l'application des droits fondamentaux contenus dans la charte communautaire des droits fondamentaux ».

IV.al.2)-Le droit à la négociation collective.

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"2) Les employeurs ou les organisations d'employeurs, d'une part' et les organisations de travailleurs, d'autre part, ont le droit, dans les conditions prévues par les législations et pratiques nationales, de négocier et de conclure des conventions collectives, y compris au niveau de l'Union".

Nous souhaitons que l'article soit rédigé selon la proposition d'amendement suivante:

IV.al.3) -Le droit à l'action collective et le droit de grève.

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Les travailleurs et les employeurs ont le droit de recourir en cas de conflits d'intérêts, à des actions collectives, éventuellement au niveau de l'Union, y compris le droit de grève".

La rédaction suivante qui est celle du SN 2158 nous paraît meilleure car ce droit ne peut concerner que les travailleurs ; s'il existe un droit collectif au lock out, il faut l'écrire en tant que tel, ailleurs dans la charte :

5) Sur l'article V: le droit à une rémunération égale pour un travail égal :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Le droit à une rémunération égale pour un travail de valeur égale est garanti à tout travailleur".

Ce droit est un des volets du principe de non-discrimination (Articles 13 et 141 du traité CE).

*soit lui être rattaché directement et figurer en complément de l'article 1) ci-dessus, et s'énoncer sous la forme d'un ajout à la formulation proposée ci-dessus :

« Toute discrimination, y compris concernant le travail et sa rémunération,..(le reste sans changement) » ;

*soit être englobé dans une approche plus large de la notion de salaire.

En effet le principe du salaire égal pour un travail égal ne suffit pas pour la charte. Même si la rémunération est expressément exclue des compétences de l'Union, une proclamation de droits doit au moins faire référence au fait qu'un travail librement entrepris sert d'abord à gagner sa vie décemment et à obtenir un niveau de vie satisfaisant. L'Union a par ailleurs pour objectif d'améliorer les conditions de vie (Art. 136 du traité CE). Dans ce cas, nous proposons l'amendement suivant pour une nouvelle rédaction de l'article:

1)-Tout travail doit être rémunéré.

2)-Le « salaire » est la rémunération, fixée par accord ou par la législation nationale, qui est due en vertu d'un contrat écrit ou verbal par un employeur à un travailleur, soit pour le travail effectué ou devant être effectué, soit pour les services rendus ou devant être rendus.

4)-Le droit à une rémunération décente implique que celle-ci soit suffisante pour assurer un niveau de vie satisfaisant au travailleur et à sa famille, et qu'un minimum soit fixé collectivement par la loi ou les pratiques nationales.

5)-Le droit à une rémunération égale pour un travail égal ou de même valeur est garanti à tout travailleur ».

Les éléments complémentaires que contiennent la charte du Conseil de l'Europe et la charte communautaire sont à prendre en considération (CSE Article 4, Parties I et II; article 5 de la charte de Strasbourg)) et peuvent être rappelés par une référence à l'article 136 du traité CE).

6) Sur l'article VI: le droit au repos et au congé annuel :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Tout travailleur a droit à un repos hebdomadaire ainsi qu'à une période de congés payés".

Compétence communautaire (article 137 Traité CE).

Notre proposition d'amendement est la suivante :

La durée légale européenne de 48 heures par semaine est un maximum qui devrait être révisé.

Le congé annuel « d'au moins » quatre semaines est déjà inscrit à la charte sociale européenne révisée depuis 1996.

Par ailleurs, il doit être tenu compte de la pratique sociale et culturelle de chaque Etat pour le choix des 2 jours consécutifs .

7) Sur l'article VII: le droit à la sécurité et à l'hygiène dans le travail :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Tout travailleur a droit à la sécurité et à l'hygiène dans le travail".

Compétence communautaire (.article 137 traité CE).

Notre proposition d'amendement pour une nouvelle rédaction est la suivante :

1)« Tout travailleur a droit à la sécurité et à la santé dans le travail ».

2)« Tout employeur est responsable de la mise en oeuvre de tous moyens y compris préventifs pour assurer la sécurité et la santé des travailleurs dans le travail ».

8) Sur l'article VIII: la protection des enfants et des adolescents :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"L'âge minimal d'admission au travail ne doit pas être inférieur à l'âge auquel cesse la période de scolarité obligatoire ni, en tous cas, à quinze ans.

Les jeunes au-dessous de 18 ans doivent bénéficier de conditions de travail adaptées à leur âge et être spécialement protégés contre tout travail susceptible de nuire à leur sécurité, à leur santé ou à leur développement physique, psychologique, moral ou social ou de compromettre leur éducation".

Pour être en conformité avec ses ambitions en matière de valorisation des ressources humaines vers une société cognitive, de développement des formations destinées à rattraper le retard pris sur d'autres parties du monde (comme en matière de société de l'information), l'Union européenne doit accorder à l'enfance le temps le plus long possible pour parvenir au développement physique et mental complet de chacun.

Cette période correspond sensiblement à la période de minorité légale qui est généralement plus longue que celle de scolarité obligatoire .

L'exemple des pays les plus avancés doit servir de modèle en termes de scolarité obligatoire.

Tout travail effectué par un mineur serait ainsi dérogatoire et assorti de conditions spécifiques susceptibles d'être contrôlées par les autorités administratives.

Notre proposition d'amendement est la suivante :

« L'âge minimal d'admission au travail ne doit pas être inférieur à l'âge auquel cesse la période de minorité légale, ni en tous cas à quinze ans.

Les mineurs, et en tous cas les jeunes en dessous de dix huit ans, doivent bénéficier de conditions de travail adaptées à leur âge et être spécialement protégés contre tout travail susceptible de nuire à leur sécurité, à leur santé et à leur développement physique, psychologique, moral, social, ou de compromettre leur éducation ».

9) Sur le droit à la protection en cas de licenciement :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION/

"Les travailleurs ont le droit à ne pas être licenciés sans motif valable, ainsi qu'à une indemnité adéquate ou autre réparation appropriée en cas de licenciement sans motif valable".

Notre proposition d'amendement est la suivante pour une nouvelle rédaction de l'article:

1)-« Aucun travailleur ne peut être licencié sans que lui en soit notifié le motif ; celui-ci doit être fondé, et le cas échéant, doit être pouvoir être soumis à l'appréciation d'un juge qui peut condamner l'employeur à verser à l'intéressé une indemnité adéquate ou une autre réparation appropriée ».

2)-« Sont notamment considérés comme motifs irrecevables de licenciement, la race, l'origine ethnique, le sexe, la religion ou les convictions, le handicap, l'âge, l'orientation sexuelle, l'affiliation syndicale ou la participation à des activités syndicales, le fait de solliciter, d'exercer ou d'avoir exercé un mandat de représentation des travailleurs».

10) Sur l'article X : le droit à la formation professionnelle :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Toute personne doit avoir accès sans discrimination à une formation et à une orientation professionnelle adéquate et en bénéficier tout au long de sa vie active".

Notre proposition de nouvelle rédaction de l'article est la suivante :

2)« Tout travailleur peut bénéficier de formations professionnelles rémunérées».

11) Sur l'article XI: le droit des travailleuses à la protection de la maternité :

PROPOSITION DE LA CONVENTION

"Toute travailleuse a droit à un congé de maternité d'au moins quatorze semaines, avant et/ou après l'accouchement".

Notre proposition d'amendement pour une nouvelle rédaction de l'article est la suivante :

1)« Toute travailleuse a droit à un congé de maternité rémunéré d'au moins quatorze semaines, avant et/ou après l'accouchement, dont une période prénatale obligatoire d'au moins six semaines ».

2)« Le congé de maternité ne peut être un motif valable de licenciement ».

3)« L'état de grossesse justifie une protection de la travailleuse contre les travaux pénibles et dangereux, son changement de poste avec maintien du salaire pour un poste adapté à son état, et son éviction du travail de nuit ».

12) Sur l'article XII : le droit au congé parental :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Tout travailleur a droit à un congé parental d'au moins 3 mois à la suite de la naissance ou de l'adoption de son enfant".

Pas d'observation à cette date.

13) Sur l'article XIII: le droit à la sécurité sociale

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Tout travailleur et ses ayants droits [toute personne] a droit, selon les modalités propres à chaque Etat, à une protection sociale comportant, notamment des prestations d'un niveau suffisant".

Les droits à la protection sociale et particulièrement à la sécurité sociale sont des droits dont les titulaires sont individuels et dont l'organisation est collective et fondée sur le principe de la solidarité nationale, et nous tenons à ce que l'Europe demeure pour le reste du monde « le » continent de la protection sociale collective.

Toute mesure qui diminue les protections collectives diminue aussi les protections individuelles, que ce soit en nature ou en niveau de droits.

Nous estimons par ailleurs que l'Union doit prendre en considération les conséquences de ses propres textes et faire un sort particulier aux droits de ses travailleurs migrants en matière de sécurité sociale, qu'il appartiennent au secteur public ou au secteur privé..

Notre proposition d'amendement est la suivante :

« Tout travailleur et ses ayants droits, selon les modalités propres à chaque Etat, a droit à une protection sociale comportant, notamment, des prestations sociales susceptibles de rétablir la capacité du travailleur à gagner sa vie, ou de compenser, pour lui-même et ses ayants droits, la perte de gains due à la maladie, à la perte d'emploi, aux charges de famille, à la vieillesse ».

Dans l'Union européenne, pour le calcul des prestations qui leur sont dues, les travailleurs migrants ont le droit de transférer d'un Etat membre d'origine vers un Etat membre d'accueil, la durée des périodes travaillées ».

14) Sur l'article XIV: le droit à l'aide sociale :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Toute personne qui ne dispose pas de ressources suffisantes[et qui n'est pas en mesure de se les procurer ou de les recevoir d'une autre source] doit percevoir une aide sociale appropriée lui permettant de vivre dans la dignité".

Notre proposition d'amendement est la suivante :

« Toute personne qui ne dispose pas de ressources suffisantes notamment en raison du chômage, de l'âge, du handicap, doit percevoir une aide sociale appropriée lui permettant de vivre dans la dignité, et au moins équivalente à 40% du PIB par tête d'habitant pour ce qui concerne le minimum de ressources, à 50% du PIB par habitant pour ce qui concerne le minimum de pension ».».

15) Sur l'article XV: le droit à l'accès aux soins de santé :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION:

"Toute personne doit pouvoir bénéficier des mesures de prévention sanitaire et, en cas de maladie, accéder aux soins de santé".

Notre proposition d'amendement est la suivante :

« Toute personne doit pouvoir bénéficier sans discrimination ni restriction

des mesures de prévention sanitaire et, en cas de maladie, accéder à l'ensemble des soins de santé de qualité nécessaires au recouvrement de sa santé

La France pratique déjà une discrimination par rapport à l'âge en termes de prix de la santé (au-delà de 75 ans pour les affections de longue durée, un surcoût est affecté aux actes médicaux); certains pourraient imaginer des arbitrages entre les différentes maladies ou entre les durées des affections, etc .

Cet amendement vise à protéger l'avenir de la santé de chacun.

16) Sur l'article XVI (Convent 26): le droit des personnes âgées à la protection sociale :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

1. « Tout travailleur doit, au moment de sa retraite, être en mesure de jouir de ressources lui assurant un niveau de vie convenable ;
2. « Toute personne ayant atteint l'âge de la retraite sans avoir droit à une pension ou sans disposer d'autres moyens de subsistance doit avoir droit à des ressources suffisantes ainsi qu'à une aide médicale et sociale adaptée spécifiquement à ses besoins ».

Nous proposons de modifier cet article par l'amendement suivant :

« Art.XVI :

« 1) Tout travailleur, ou ses ayants-droit, au moment de la retraite, jouit, en remplacement de son revenu d'activité, d'un droit à ses pension et retraite lui assurant le maintien de son niveau de vie, et en tous cas, pas moins que 50% du PIB par habitant.

« 2) Toute personne ayant atteint l'âge de la retraite sans avoir de droit à pension ou sans disposer de ressources personnelles, doit pouvoir bénéficier de moyens de subsistance suffisants, d'un accès aux soins de santé ainsi que de l'aide sociale.

« 3) Toute personne en situation de dépendance a droit à une prestation permettant de compenser les charges financières liées à sa perte d'autonomie et de bénéficier de l'aide d'une tierce personne».

Le deuxième alinea de cet article doit rester sous le numéro XVI car les destinataires sont différents de ceux de l'article XIV puisque ce sont spécifiquement les personnes atteintes par l'âge.

Nos références ici sont à la fois l'article 23 de la CSE.R du Conseil de l'Europe et la Convention 128 de l'OIT.

17) Sur l'article XVII (Convent 26): le droit des personnes handicapées à l'insertion sociale et professionnelle.

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Toute personne handicapée, quelles que soient l'origine et la nature de son handicap, a le droit de bénéficier de mesures concrètes supplémentaires visant à améliorer son intégration sociale et professionnelle ».

Nous proposons l'amendement suivant :

Après « a le droit », écrire l'article comme suit :

« à la protection sociale ainsi que, dans l'objectif d'accéder à la plus large autonomie possible, à bénéficier de tout système de formation de son choix et de mesures concrètes supplémentaires visant à trouver, à conserver un emploi, et à améliorer sa situation professionnelle et son intégration sociale».

Nos références sont l'article 15 de la CSE du Conseil de l'Europe et la Convention 159 de l'OIT.

18) Sur l'article XVIII (Convent 26): le droit des travailleurs migrants à l'égalité de traitement :

PROJET DE LA CONVENTION :

« Les travailleurs originaires de pays tiers qui résident légalement sur le territoire des Etats membres ont le droit à un traitement non moins favorable que celui dont bénéficient les travailleurs de l'Union européenne en matière de conditions de travail ».

Nous proposons l'amendement suivant :

PROYECTO DE CARTA DE LOS DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES DE LA UNIÓN EUROPEAfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruselas, 31 de mayo de 2000 (05.06)
(OR. FR/ES)*CHARTE 4336/00*CONTRIB 200*NOTA DE TRANSMISIÓN

Asunto: Proyecto de Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales de la Unión Europea

CARTA DE LOS DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES DE LA UE

En el Consejo Europeo de junio de 1999, los Jefes de Estado y de Gobierno decidieron poner en marcha la redacción de una Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales de la Unión Europea con el fin de dar visibilidad a los derechos y libertades de los ciudadanos y ciudadanas en la Unión Europea.

Posteriormente, en el Consejo de Helsinki, en diciembre de 1999, se decidió la composición del órgano que habría de redactar esta Carta al tiempo que se establecían los principios de transparencia en los trabajos y participación de otros agentes sociales.

En la actualidad, este órgano redactor, llamado no sin cierto simbolismo revolucionario, Convención, está elaborando un documento que recopila los principales derechos fundamentales existentes en las tradiciones constitucionales de los países de la UE junto con los ya recogidos en la Convención Europea de Salvaguarda de los Derechos Fundamentales del Consejo de Europa.

Los trabajos se encuentran bastante avanzados ya que los plazos así lo exigen. No en vano, el objetivo es aprobar esta Carta en el Consejo Europeo de Niza en diciembre del 2000 bajo presidencia francesa.

Las primeras dudas que asaltan al atento observador de estos trabajos son las siguientes: ¿tendrá la Carta carácter vinculante o será una mera declaración de principios?; ¿su contenido formará parte del Tratado, o será un protocolo anexo sólo vinculante para quienes la suscriban?; ¿cuáles serán los contenidos materiales de la Carta, recogerá los llamados derechos de cuarta generación?; ¿qué pasará con la Convención Europea de Salvaguarda de los Derechos Fundamentales, no corremos un riesgo de solapamiento de las garantías jurídicas transnacionales?. Estas son las principales dificultades con las que se encuentra la Convención, hasta la fecha, este órgano parece decidido a incluir la Carta en los Tratados como parte de su articulado y que ésta tenga carácter vinculante y sea oponible por parte de los ciudadanos ante los tribunales nacionales y en última instancia ante el Tribunal Europeo de Luxemburgo.

Desde la Confederación de Asociaciones de Vecinos Consumidores y Usuarios del Estado Español (CAVE), pensamos que no podemos hablar de ciudadanía europea si no hay un acervo de derechos fundamentales europeos que protejan a los ciudadanos en sus relaciones con la sociedad y con el estado. La construcción de la UE como instrumento superador o al menos como complemento de los actuales estados, requiere naturalmente, la recopilación y garantía de unos derechos fundamentales iguales para todos. En este sentido, esperamos que el silencio del gobierno español en este asunto, no implique una postura contraria a su inclusión en el futuro Tratado de Niza.

Pero si importante es el hecho de la puesta en marcha de este proceso y su inclusión en el Tratado, no menos importante es el contenido material de esta carta de derechos y sus sistema de garantías, en este sentido conviene recordar las palabras del insigne jurista Wallestein cuando afirmaba que “un derecho vale lo que valga su sistema de garantías” y es que un derecho sin posibilidades de ser oponible ante los tribunales se convierte en una declaración de intenciones.

En este sentido, desde CAVE proponemos la inclusión de una amplia batería de derechos cívicos y sociales al tiempo que se da entrada a los llamados derechos de “cuarta generación” es decir, el derecho al acceso a las nuevas tecnologías, la seguridad alimenticia, la bioética o la garantía de la privacidad en la Red. Más en concreto desde CAVE pensamos que hay que incluir el derecho de asociación europeo, el derecho a voto en las elecciones nacionales y europeas en base a un procedimiento electoral uniforme, el derecho a la salud, a la educación, a una vivienda digna, a unas prestaciones mínimas de integración, al medio ambiente, al deporte.....

Sólo una amplia gama de derechos cívicos y sociales puede dar sentido a esta iniciativa del Consejo. Si nos quedamos simplemente en los derechos procesales tipo “Non bid in idem” o el “Habeas copus” creo que se habrá avanzado muy poco y que el meritorio trabajo de la Convención caerá en saco roto.

En otro orden de cosas, pensamos que no se está cumpliendo mucho con el principio de transparencia y participación de otros agentes. La página Web habilitada por el Presidium de la Convención no contiene los últimos textos lo que dificulta las aportaciones de la sociedad civil que pueden estar ya superadas por los trabajos “no publicados” de la convención. Tampoco podemos decir que por publicar unos trabajos en una página Web que con gusto citamos (<http://europa.eu.int>) ya se cubren las necesidades informativas y de participación. Desde CAVE pensamos que hay que llegar más al fondo y trabajar también con los muchos ciudadanos que todavía no tienen acceso a Internet. Lo ideal sería abrir un gran debate social en torno a la Carta con el fin de popularizar el documento y fomentar la participación ciudadana. Esto se conseguiría si los Estados acordasen someter a referéndum el Tratado que salga de la cumbre de Niza en diciembre del 2000. Sin embargo, nos tememos que esta voluntad no esta en la mente de los actuales líderes de la UE.

PROPUESTAS DE CAVE DE CARA AL DEBATE EN TORNO A LA CARTA EUROPEA DE LOS DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES

La Confederación de Asociaciones de Vecinos Consumidores y Usuarios de España (CAVE) se felicita por la decisión del Consejo Europeo de Colonia de comenzar la elaboración de una Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales de la UE con el fin de dar visibilidad y coherencia al conjunto de derechos de los ciudadanos de la UE.

Desde la CAVE también nos felicitamos por las conclusiones del Consejo Europeo de Tampere en donde se hizo mención a la transparencia de los trabajos y a la colaboración de los agentes sociales de cara a la elaboración de la Carta. No obstante, queremos señalar que esa transparencia no es completa, la página web habilitada no recoge los últimos documentos y tampoco son demasiado transparentes las convocatorias a las reuniones abiertas en el Parlamento Europeo.

1.- Cuestiones generales:

La CAVE defiende la inclusión de la Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales de la UE en el futuro tratado de la Unión una vez concluyan las negociaciones en torno a la Conferencia Intergubernamental. Una Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales como anexo al futuro Tratado, mandaría un mensaje muy contraproducente a la ciudadanía ya que supondría situar a los Derechos Fundamentales por debajo de las normas reguladoras del mercado único o de la Política Exterior y de Seguridad Común, lo cual tiene muy difícil explicación técnica y política.

La Carta debe implicar unos derechos oponibles ante los tribunales nacionales y en última instancia, ante el Tribunal de Justicia de Luxemburgo. Sólo así se dará contenido real, y no sólo simbólico, al concepto de ciudadanía europea.

La Carta ha de ser compatible con el Convenio Europeo de Derechos Fundamentales del Consejo de Europa, es más, éste debe ser la base material de la futura Carta. Se trataría en definitiva de extender y reforzar el sistema de garantías del Consejo de Europa a la Unión Europea.

La Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales no puede limitarse únicamente a los ciudadanos de la UE sino que debe ampliarse a los residentes legales con el fin de evitar discriminaciones y diferencias en función de la mayor o menor “generosidad” de las legislaciones nacionales.

La Carta debe recoger los derechos fundamentales de forma clara y sistemática evitando un lenguaje que hiciera difícil su interpretación. Cada uno de estos derechos debe completarse, cuando así sea necesario, por un reglamento europeo.

2.- Cuestiones materiales.

La CAVE considera imprescindible la inclusión de los siguientes derechos fundamentales en la futura Carta.

2.1 Derechos de la persona:

- Derecho a la vida
- Derecho a la dignidad de la persona
- Derecho a la libertad y a la seguridad
- Derecho a la asistencia jurídica y a un juicio justo
- Derecho al asilo

2.2 Derechos cívicos:

- Derecho al voto de los residentes legales en todos los ámbitos de decisión política incluyendo el nacional.
- Derecho de asociación y de reunión.
- Derecho a la participación política a través de partidos políticos.
- Derecho a la participación ciudadana en los medios de comunicación.

2.3 Derechos sociales:

- Derecho a la huelga y a la libre sindicación.
- Derecho al empleo y a un salario justo.
- Derecho a una pensión digna de jubilación.
- Derecho a una vivienda digna.
- Derecho a un salario mínimo de inserción.
- Derecho a la asistencia sanitaria gratuita.
- Derecho a la educación.
- Derecho de acceso a los bienes culturales.
- Derecho a un medio ambiente sostenible.
- Derecho a la participación de los consumidores.
- Derecho de acceso a los Servicios de Interés General.

2.4 Derechos de nueva generación:

- Derecho de acceso a Internet.
- Derecho a la privacidad e interdicción de la delación en la Red.
- Derecho a la seguridad alimenticia y al principio de precaución en materia de innovación biotecnológica.
- Garantía de la explotación en beneficio de la humanidad del genoma humano.

et du Collectif pour la Charte des droits fondamentaux (c/o Ligue des droits de l'homme)

Madame, Monsieur,

Lors de la réunion de la CNCDH à Paris, cette semaine, Monsieur Braibant nous a précisé qu'il reste fort peu de temps pour tenter d'orienter les travaux de la Convention et nous a conseillé de faire des suggestions d'amendements très précises. Les associations ci dessus énumérées ont bien noté les modifications déjà apportées par la Convention à l'article 21.1 (anciennement 17) de la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'UE, intitulé « Droit d'asile et expulsion », depuis le début de ses travaux, mais elles cherchent encore à faire évoluer ce texte en proposant un amendement.

D'une part, sur cette question du droit d'asile, il nous paraît préférable de reprendre la formulation utilisée pour un grand nombre des articles du projet de Charte « Toute personne a droit à .. » ; dans la version du 11 mai dernier, cette formulation est utilisée par exemple pour les droits civils et politiques suivants :

- droit au respect de son intégrité (3), de sa vie privée (12) et de sa vie familiale (13) ;
- droit à la liberté (6), à un recours (7) et à l'éducation (16) ;
- droit à la liberté de pensée (14), d'expression (15), de réunion (17).

D'autre part, il nous paraît important de distinguer le premier alinéa de cet article relatif à l'asile du second dont le thème est tout à fait différent, en l'occurrence l'expulsion.

Pour l'article de la Charte sur le « Droit d'asile » ou le « Droit à l'asile », nous proposons la formulation suivante : « Toute personne a droit à l'asile dans l'Union européenne conformément aux règles de la Convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951 et du protocole du 31 janvier 1967 relatifs au statut des réfugiés et d'autres textes relatifs aux droits de l'homme ».

Bien évidemment, je suis prêt à discuter de cette proposition si vous le souhaitez utile, vous pouvez me joindre par e mail ou par téléphone à mon domicile, au 01 46 45 98 18.

Avec nos remerciements

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution de la Confédération Française des Travailleurs Chrétiens (syndicat CFTC) sur la rémunération et les services d'intérêt général. ¹

Contribution du syndicat CFTC (Confédération Française des Travailleurs Chrétiens) en complément de celle envoyée le 23 mai au Présidium par les syndicats CGC – CFTC – CFDT – CGT et proposant des amendements aux articles rédigés dans les documents CONVENT 28 et CONVENT 34.

La contribution CFTC ne porte que sur deux points relatifs aux droits économiques et sociaux, droit à une rémunération équitable, et accès aux services d'intérêt général.

① Droit à une rémunération égale et équitable

Proposition

- Tout travailleur, quel que soit son sexe et son origine, a droit à une rémunération égale pour un travail de valeur égale.
- Tout travailleur a droit à une rémunération équitable suffisante pour lui permettre, ainsi qu'aux siens, un niveau de vie décent.

Commentaire

Ces droits sont mentionnés à l'article 4 de la charte sociale révisée ainsi qu'aux articles 5 et 16 de la charte des droits fondamentaux des travailleurs.

② Services d'intérêt général

Proposition

- Toute personne a droit à des services d'intérêt général de qualité.
- L'accès à ces services d'intérêt général participe à l'exercice réel des droits fondamentaux.
- Ces services, dont l'accessibilité à un prix abordable et dont la qualité et la continuité sont des impératifs essentiels, doivent pouvoir être évalués de façon continue et démocratique afin de vérifier qu'ils s'adaptent en permanence aux évolutions des besoins ainsi qu'au progrès social et technologique.

Commentaire

L'article 16 de la version consolidée du traité instituant la charte européenne précise : « La communauté et ses Etats membres ... veillent à ce que les services (services d'intérêt économique général) fonctionnent sur la base de principes et dans les conditions qui leur permettent d'accomplir leurs missions.

Ces principes ont été précisés dans la déclaration n° 13 annexée à l'article final : « Les dispositions de l'article 7d (devenu l'article 16) relatives aux services publics sont mises en œuvre dans le plein respect de la jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice, en ce qui concerne, entre autres, les principes d'égalité de traitement, ainsi que de qualité et de continuité de ces services. ».

En outre, l'article 153 de la version consolidée du traité instituant la charte européenne précise :

1. « Afin de promouvoir les intérêts des consommateurs ... la communauté contribue à la protection de la santé, de la sécurité, et des intérêts économiques des consommateurs ainsi qu'à la promotion de leur droit à l'information, à l'éducation et s'organise afin de préserver leurs intérêts. »
2. « Les exigences de la protection des consommateurs sont prises en considération dans la définition et la mise en œuvre des autres politiques et actions de la communauté »

Par ailleurs, un plan d'action triennal 1999-2001 pour la politique des consommateurs a été adopté à l'issue du conseil consommateur du 14 avril 1999. Dans la résolution adoptée ce jour-là, le conseil, afin d'aider les consommateurs à mieux se faire entendre, invite la commission au renforcement des organisations qui les représentent au niveau européen. Il conviendra d'assurer la diffusion des meilleures pratiques et de consolider le rôle des représentants des consommateurs, d'encourager le dialogue entre les organisations de consommateurs et les acteurs économiques ... un dialogue plus approfondi entre la commission et les Etats membres ainsi que l'évaluation régulière des progrès réalisés dans la mise en œuvre de cette résolution devront concourir à l'efficacité accrue de la politique des consommateurs à l'échelle européenne.

A noter, par ailleurs, que lors du conseil consommateurs du 8 nov. 99, le conseil, à propos de la protection des consommateurs et des services d'intérêt général, a procédé à un débat (ouvert au public) qui a mis en évidence l'opportunité de mieux définir le concept de service d'intérêt général (qui recouvre des réalités différentes dans les Etats membres) en vue d'une approche législative globale adaptée à l'exigence des citoyens de bénéficier des services de base de qualité à des prix accessibles, dans un contexte de libéralisation et de globalisation des marchés et développements technologiques constants.

En outre, le conseil européen de Lisbonne des 23 et 24 mars 2000 « estime qu'il est essentiel, dans le cadre du marché intérieur et d'une économie de la connaissance, de tenir pleinement compte des dispositions du traité relatives aux services d'intérêt économique général et aux entreprises chargées de la gestion de ces services. Il invite la commission de mettre à jour sa communication de 1996 compte tenu des dispositions du traité » (§19 des conclusions de la présidence).

Compte tenu de ce qui précède, c'est donc « à bon droit » (puisque'il s'agit, pour l'essentiel, de textes communautaires) que les usagers des services d'intérêt général peuvent exiger un contrôle permanent et démocratique de la qualité de ces services

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution from the High Commissioner for Refugees of the United Nations with a letter and comments on the Right of Asylum.

19 May

Dear Mr. Jacque,

It has come to our attention that the Convention drawing up the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights will consider a draft of the first 30 articles of the Charter at its meeting of 5 and 6 June. These draft articles include a provision on the right to asylum which UNHCR holds to be inconsistent with agreed principles of international refugee law. UNHCR therefore has prepared alternative wording for the relevant provision which you will find in annex to this letter.

We would very much appreciate it if UNHCR's observations could be taken into consideration in any further discussions related to the draft Charter provision on asylum and we would be happy to discuss our views on this matter with you in more detail at your earliest possible convenience.

Yours sincerely,

Raymond Hall

UNHCR Comments on the Right of Asylum under the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

1. UNHCR welcomes the proposal to include the right of asylum in the draft Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union. This will be consistent with the well-established European tradition of granting asylum to refugees and other persons in need of international protection, as well as with fundamental humanitarian principles that are part of the European human rights heritage.
2. All Member States of the European Union are States Parties to the 1951 Convention/1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and have thus adopted the refugee definition contained therein without restrictions on any ground. The universal and unconditional application of these international refugee instruments has repeatedly been emphasised by the international community. Most recently, the European Council, at its meeting in Tampere, reaffirmed the importance the Union and Member States attach to “absolute respect of the right to seek asylum.”
3. As currently drafted, the Charter’s provision on the right of asylum restricts access to this right in a manner which could be tantamount to discrimination on the basis of country of nationality. To avoid any inconsistency with the 1951 Convention/1967 Protocol, UNHCR wishes to propose for the consideration of the drafters of the Charter the following revision of the draft text on the right of asylum:

The absolute respect for the right of asylum will be fully ensured in the European Union, consistent with the 1951 Convention/1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and other international instruments for the protection of refugees.

Statement of reasons

- (i) Article 14(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights provides that “everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution”. This right is elaborated in the 1967 United Nations Declaration on Territorial Asylum and is reaffirmed in numerous other resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations, as well in Conclusions of the Executive Committee of UNHCR.
- (ii) The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe has reaffirmed the principles of asylum in several instruments, including in Resolution 14/67 on Asylum to Persons in Danger of Persecution and in the Declaration on Territorial Asylum of 18 November 1977.

- (iii) Article 63(1) of the Amsterdam Treaty provides that the Council shall adopt measures on asylum, in accordance with the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and other relevant treaties.
- (iv) The Conclusions adopted by the European Council at its Tampere meeting of 15-16 October 1999 reaffirmed the importance that the Union and Member States attach to “absolute respect of the right to seek asylum”.

Subject : ~~Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union~~
~~International Rehabilitation~~
Council for Torture Victims
(IRCI)

Please find hereafter a contribution by the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims (IRCT) with the statement presented at the hearing on 27 April 2000 and the proposal for an amendment to article 4. ¹

Mr Chairman

I speak on behalf of the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims (IRCT). We would like to speak on two points: the importance of prevention of torture and the rehabilitation of torture victims.

The IRCT is a medically based organisation, supporting approximately 200 centres and programmes for rehabilitation of victims of torture world-wide.

The IRCT welcomes this important initiative from the EU with regard to its Human Rights obligations. The recognition and observance of fundamental human rights such as the prohibition of torture is a cornerstone in any democratic society with an aim of sustainable development. This has to be acknowledged in the process of accepting new member states and in the relations of the European Union with third countries. A charter on fundamental rights and freedoms will provide the necessary framework in which observance of these rights and freedoms can be implemented.

The IRCT supports 47 centres in 11 member states of the European Union. These rehabilitation centres provide a vital service for those people fleeing persecution in their own country and seeking refuge in Europe. Within the European Union, rehabilitation of tortured refugees will be instrumental in their social and economic reintegration. Torture as an experience carries many consequences such as social isolation, loss of self-confidence and anger. Left untreated, these people will not be able to adapt to the new society and will not be able to provide either for themselves or for their families. On the contrary, feelings of anger and hopelessness may turn into aggressive behaviour that may ultimately create dissonance in the society in which they live.

For this reason, we are pleased to see in the latest version of the draft charter that the prohibition against torture is now placed in a separate article.

However, we would like to see the inclusion of:

1. the right to rehabilitation, similar to article 14 of the Convention against Torture
2. the prohibition against the return of asylum seekers in danger of being tortured similar to the provisions in Article 33 in the Refugee Convention and Article 3 in the UN Convention Against Torture

We would further like to see that the highest standard possible be the aim of the Convention. Thus care should be taken to include all relevant developments in regard to the prohibition of torture such as case-law not only from the European Court on Human Rights but also other regional and international bodies.

The Charter should also take care to include into the right to reparation the right to a judicial remedy, compensation and restitution. Moreover, the Charter should include an article on training of relevant personnel as in article 10 of the UN Convention Against Torture.

We hope that these recommendations will become part of this important discussion and we thank the Convention for giving us this opportunity for presenting our views.

Thank you

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONProposed amendment to Article: 4

Submitted by: IRCT (International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims)

The IRCT is a medically based organisation, supporting approximately 200 centres and programmes for rehabilitation of victims of torture world-wide.

Proposed text:

- 1. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
- 2. No one may be expelled or extradited to a State where he would be in danger of being subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman treatment.
- 3. The victim of an act of torture shall have an enforceable right to as full rehabilitation as possible, including the means for social reintegration.

ARTICLE X:

Public authorities shall ensure that education and information regarding these rights and freedoms are fully included in the training of law enforcement personnel, civil or military, medical personnel, public officials and other public officers.

Reasons: The IRCT bases its suggestions on provisions found in other fundamental texts such as the Convention against Torture (Articles 10 and 14).

Conférence des Notariats de l'Union Européenne

La Conférence des Notariats de l'Union Européenne a adopté lors de son Assemblée extraordinaire le 19 mai 2000 à Bruxelles la résolution suivante:

La Conférence des Notariats de l'Union Européenne

- se déclare favorable à la décision prise par le Conseil européen de Cologne, d'élaborer un projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne, d'ici le Conseil européen de décembre 2000;
- partage l'avis selon lequel un catalogue des droits fondamentaux européens à caractère contraignant peut contribuer dans une large mesure, à renforcer le processus de l'intégration européenne;
- suit avec intérêt les travaux de la convention.

Afin de réaliser le but qui vise à assurer aux citoyens d'Europe une large protection des droits fondamentaux, la Conférence des Notariats de l'Union Européenne propose à la convention d'examiner les amendements suivants, numérotés de un à trois, et de les intégrer au projet de la Charte:

1. L'article 8 - Droit à un tribunal impartial (Convent 28; Charte 4284/00) est complété par un alinéa 3 ainsi rédigé:

(3) Toute personne a droit de se faire conseiller et de se faire assister en matière judiciaire et extrajudiciaire par le professionnel compétent.

Le titre de l'article 8 est complété par la notion "et à l'assistance".

2. L'article 8 – Droit à un tribunal impartial (Convent 28; Charte 4284/00) est complété par la disposition suivante:

Article 8 bis - Droit à la justice et à l'administration impartiale de la justice
L'existence des institutions indépendantes et impartiales de la justice et de son administration doit être garantie.

Toute personne doit pouvoir bénéficier de services juridiques et avoir accès à la justice et à l'administration indépendante et impartiale de celle-ci.

3. L'article 19 - Protection des données (Convent 28; Charte 4284/00) est complété par la disposition suivante:

Article 19 bis - Droit à la discrétion

Toute personne a droit à ce que les faits confiés à un professionnel du droit, ou dont celui-ci a pris connaissance du fait de sa qualité professionnelle, ne soient pas divulgués.

Medienfreiheit in der EU-Grundrechtscharta: Art.10 EMRK ergänzen und modernisieren!

Von Martin Stock

I. Ein kühnes Projekt der Europäischen Union

Auf deutsches Drängen hat der Europäische Rat auf dem EU-Gipfel in Köln im Juni 1999 die Ausarbeitung einer „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ beschlossen. Ein Entwurf einer solchen Charta soll von einem Gremium erstellt werden, dessen Zusammensetzung und Arbeitsweise die Staats- und Regierungschefs der EU-Mitgliedstaaten sodann auf dem Gipfel in Tampere (Finnland) im Oktober 1999 näher geregelt haben. Es handelt sich um ein in dieser Form neuartiges Gremium (nach dessen eigenem Sprachgebrauch: „Konvent“) mit breiter nationaler und supranationaler parlamentarischer Rückkoppelung. Das Gremium ist im Dezember 1999 in Brüssel zu seiner konstituierenden Sitzung zusammengetreten und hat den früheren deutschen Bundespräsidenten und Verfassungsrechtsexperten Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog zu seinem Vorsitzenden gewählt. Im März dieses Jahres hat es mit den Beratungen über einen Grundrechtskatalog begonnen. Parallel dazu haben sich das Europäische Parlament sowie Bundesrat und Bundestag mit diesem kühnen und weitläufigen Vorhaben befaßt und es grundsätzlich positiv bewertet. Im Juni wird Herzog den Staats- und Regierungschefs über den Sachstand berichten, und bis zur Sommerpause (ca. Mitte Juli) soll der Grundrechtskonvent dem Europäischen Rat einen vorläufigen Gesamtentwurf vorlegen. Im Dezember 2000 soll die neue Charta dann auf dem EU-Gipfel in Nizza - zunächst nur im Sinn einer politischen Deklaration - feierlich verkündet werden. Anschließend soll sie eventuell mittels Vertragsänderung rechtsverbindlich gemacht werden.

Der Europäische Rat hat dem Konvent einen Arbeitsauftrag erteilt, in welchem sich ein groß angelegtes und anspruchsvolles rechtspolitisches Vorhaben der EU ankündigt. Ob daraus ein weiterer großer Schritt in Richtung auf eine veritable EU-Verfassung werden kann und auch werden sollte, wird zur Zeit unterschiedlich beurteilt. In der Grundrechtsdebatte spiegeln sich konkurrierende europapolitische Konzepte und Ideen wider, wie sie heute - nach mancherlei Brüsseler Krisen und vor neuen Herausforderungen (Osterweiterung) - auch auf organisatorisch-institutioneller Ebene eine Rolle spielen. Nach dem Kölner Mandat hat der Grundrechtskonvent wohl einen gewissen konzeptionellen Spielraum im Vorfeld möglicher all-gemeiner Verfassungsgebung. Er neigt allerdings dazu, politisch-demokratische konstitutionelle Bezüge des Grundrechtskatalogs vorerst auszuklammern, und operiert diesbezüglich sehr vorsichtig. Als hinderlich stellt sich im übrigen vor allem der enorme Zeitdruck dar, unter dem das Gremium nach den Vorgaben der Staats- und Regierungschefs und den Wünschen der jetzigen und der nächsten Präsidentschaft (Portugal, Frankreich) steht. Ob es die Hoffnungen, die von gesellschaftlichen und politischen Akteuren auf seine Arbeit gesetzt werden, tatsächlich erfüllen kann, wird sich erst noch erweisen müssen.

II. Medienfreiheit als europäisches Grundrecht - Typik und Inhalt

Das eben Gesagte gilt auch für die Medienfreiheit, die von der EU-Rechtsprechung bisher - über Art. 6 Abs. 2 des Vertrages über die Europäische Union (EUV), der gewisse richterrechtliche Freiheiten impliziert - aus Art. 10 der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention (EMRK) hergeleitet wird. Der Gerichtshof der Gemeinschaft (EuGH) greift dabei gern auf die Judikatur des (auf Europaratsebene angesiedelten) Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte (EGMR) zurück. Art.10 EMRK wird vom EuGH indes stärker ökonomisiert und in pressenspezifischer Weise mit der Dienstleistungsfreiheit nach den Art. 49 ff. des Vertrags zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft (EGV) kombiniert: Medienfreiheit als Gewerbe- und Tendenzfreiheit. Und im Grundrechtskonvent steht man jetzt vor der Frage:

Soll insoweit alles beim alten bleiben oder soll ein Mediengrundrecht als künftiges genuines EU-Grundrecht neu konzipiert und tunlichst auf eine supranationale konstitutionelle Weiterentwicklung der Union zugeschnitten werden? Soll sich diese neue Medienfreiheit auf Europa als nach und nach immer staatsähnlicher werdendes konföderatives Gebilde beziehen, und soll sie den Integrationsprozeß auf ihre Weise voranbringen und intensivieren? Dies ist geradezu ein exemplarisches, für das Kodifikationsprojekt insgesamt charakteristisches Grundrechtsproblem, das besondere Aufmerksamkeit verdient. Dazu noch ein paar nähere Informationen und Thesen.

III. Art.10 EMRK als veraltetes Leitbild

Wenn man bei der erstgenannten Option bleiben, also alles beim alten lassen will, muß man mit einem Menschenrechtsartikel vorlieb nehmen, der schon älteren Datums ist und aus heutiger Sicht ziemlich rückständig und simpel erscheint. Er normiert eine Medienfreiheit nicht einmal ausdrücklich, vielmehr kann sie in ihm nur im Auslegungsweg und nur in rudimentärer Form vorgefunden werden, nämlich als sogenannter Unterfall individueller Meinungsverbreitungsfreiheit derjenigen Personen, welche jeweils als Medienträger (Verleger, Veranstalter) fungieren. Dieser Ansatz geht an der Typik binnenplural-öffentlicher Medien gänzlich vorbei. Er eignet sich am ehesten für marktorientierte private Tendenzmedien geringer Größenordnung, etwa für die letzten heute noch vorhandenen Reste lokaler Richtungspressen. Faktisch drängt sich gegenwärtig jedoch ein privat-kommerzieller Typus ganz anderer Art in den Vordergrund, der zu mancherlei Fehlentwicklungen führen kann und von dem älteren regulatorischen Ansatz der EMRK nicht adäquat erfaßt wird. Im Rundfunkbereich haben wir es nunmehr typischerweise mit einer rein erwerbswirtschaftlich betätigten, für kommunikative Verarmung und massive Vermachtung anfälligen Medienunternehmerfreiheit zu tun, beispielsweise in einer transnationalen, konkreter Gebiets- und Verbandsbezüge immer mehr ermangelnden globalisierten Variante. Für ein derartiges kommerzialisiertes Menschenrecht -womöglich als einzige europaweit eingeführte Grundrechtsvariante - gibt es in der Tat ein paar machtbewußte Global Players als reale Anwärtler, und daneben zahlreiche beflissene Fürsprecher und Wegbereiter, auch in der Rechtswissenschaft und im politischen Raum. Auch die Medienpolitik der EU-Kommission litt noch unlängst an entsprechenden Simplifikationen und Einseitigkeiten. Neuerdings scheint die Kommission indes andere Wege einzuschlagen, wie sich insbesondere aus ihrer Mitteilung „Grundsätze und Leitlinien für die audiovisuelle Politik der Gemeinschaft im digitalen Zeitalter“ vom 14.12.1999, KOM (1999) 657 endg., ergibt. Darin ist jetzt auch ein anderes, differenzierteres Grundrechtskonzept angelegt.

IV. Vom kommerzialisierten Menschenrecht zum Funktionsgrundrecht

Damit sind wir auch schon bei der zweiten Option angekommen, kurz gesagt: Medienfreiheit als europäisches Funktionsgrundrecht, ungefähr nach dem Bilde des Art. 5 Abs. 1 Satz 2 GG in der (freilich auch ihrerseits erneuerungsbedürftigen) Interpretation des Bundesverfassungsgerichts. Darin hat sich die Public-Service-Idee nun auch grundrechtlich ausgeformt und in unverwechselbarer Weise konkretisiert. Die damit angesprochene konstitutionell wichtige, öffentlich-„dienende“ Medienfunktion läßt sich anhand der Karlsruher „Medium und Faktor“-Formel (etwa BVerfGE 57, S. 295, 319 ff.) verdeutlichen, was auch europäisch-integrative Adaptionen und Nutzenanwendungen zugunsten einer künftigen EU-Verfassung erlaubt. Dabei geht es hauptsächlich um den jeweiligen öffentlichen Rundfunk, daneben aber auch - mit Abstrichen - um den privat-kommerziellen, d.h. insgesamt um duale Systeme. Neben innerstaatlich-nationalen Programmen kann dabei auch an ein relativ autonomes supranationales „Europäisches Fernsehen“ gedacht werden, wie es im Europäischen Parlament - etwa von dem deutschen Abgeordneten Wilhelm Hahn - schon in den frühen achtziger Jahren gefordert worden ist. Auf dem Boden des funktionalen Ansatzes wird sich auch die künftige EU-Medienfreiheit klarer bestimmen und rechtlich konsolidieren lassen.. Auch die Regulierungsprobleme der Multimedia-Entwicklung wird man so in den Griff bekommen können.

V. Alter Wein in neuen Schläuchen?

Das Präsidium des EU-Grundrechtskonvents hat sich schon frühzeitig auf Art. 10 EMRK als Basisnorm und Ausgangspunkt der einschlägigen Beratungen festgelegt. Bei dieser Vorgabe ist es dann - anscheinend aus pragmatischen Gründen und zum Zweck der Arbeitserleichterung - bis heute geblieben. In der derzeit letzten Fassung des Präsidiumsentwurfs (Dokument CONVENT 28 vom 5.5.2000) findet sich in Art. 15 unter der verkürzenden Überschrift „Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung“ immer noch lediglich folgender Normtext:

Dies deckt sich inhaltlich mit Art. 10 Abs. 1 Sätze 1 und 2 EMRK. Schrankenregelungen sollen einer allgemein gehaltenen, „horizontalen“ Bestimmung (derzeit Art. 47 laut Präsidiumsentwurf Dokument CONVENT 34 vom 16.5.2000) vorbehalten bleiben, die insoweit auf Art. 10 EMRK verweist. Darum sind Art. 10 Abs. 1 Satz 3 und Abs. 2 EMRK nicht in Art. 15 des Entwurfs übernommen worden. Im übrigen sind diese Gewährleistungen entsprechend dem völkerrechtlichen Charakter der (vom Europarat geschaffenen) Menschenrechtskonvention nach wie vor inter- und nicht supranational orientiert, so als ginge es nur um Free Flow innerhalb des EG-Binnenmarkts als einer Art Freihandelszone, eines politisch und publizistisch gestaltlosen „audiovisuellen Raums“ o.ä. Von Rundfunk als „Medium und Faktor“ europäischer diskursivischer Öffentlichkeit, nunmehr auch als Triebkraft fortschreitender Konstitutionalisierung und Verfassungsentwicklung, weiß der Präsidiumsentwurf noch gar nichts. So modern und verdienstvoll er sich in anderen Teilen darstellt - hier fehlt ihm jegliche Inspiration. Etwa veranlaßte Ergänzungen und Aufbesserungen des bejahrten EMRK-Artikels scheint das Präsidium nicht aktiv zu betreiben, vielmehr will es die Initiative wohl anderen überlassen.

Als erster hat der vom Deutschen Bundestag in den Konvent entsandte SPD-Abgeordnete Prof. Dr. Jürgen Meyer dieses Defizit bemerkt und darauf mit dem Vorschlag reagiert, Presse- und Rundfunkfreiheit explizit zu gewährleisten (vgl. Dokument CONTRIB 60 vom 28.3.2000). Ähnlich dann ARD und ZDF, die zu einer Brüsseler Anhörung im April dieses Jahres einen eigenen Alternativentwurf für ein „europäisches Grundrecht der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit“ (inklusive Medienfreiheit) vorgelegt haben (Dokument CONTRIB 103 vom 18.4.2000). Auch die deutschen Länder sehen hier neuerdings Diskussionsbedarf (vgl. Dokument CONTRIB 177 vom 17.5.2000). Dem Vernehmen nach haben sie jüngst ebenfalls vorgeschlagen, Presse- und Rundfunkfreiheit ausdrücklich in Art. 15 des Entwurfs aufzunehmen. Wie sich das Präsidium dazu stellen wird, bleibt abzuwarten. Es leitet aus dem Beschluß von Tampere für sich selbst, zumal für Herzog als Vorsitzenden, eine sehr großzügig bemessene, für eine quasi-verfassungsgebende Versammlung ganz ungewöhnliche Einschätzungsprärogative her, was die Zustimmungsfähigkeit des Entwurfs „für alle Seiten“ betrifft. Bei günstigem Verlauf mag die EU-Charta anhand der erwähnten Vorschläge textmäßig wenigstens ungefähr auf den Stand des Art. 5 Abs. 1 Satz 2 GG gebracht werden können - nur wird Karlsruhe insoweit nicht mehr die Interpretationshoheit haben, und vom EuGH weiß heute niemand, ob er fähig sein wird, seine bisherigen ökonomisch-wirtschaftsrechtlichen Prioritäten und Beengtheiten nach und nach zu überwinden. Was er kürzlich über öffentliche Zuwendungen an das Portugiesische Fernsehen (RTP) als eventuell wettbewerbswidrige staatliche Beihilfen verlauten ließ (epd 38/2000), klingt noch recht unbeholfen und rückwärtsgerichtet.

VI. Eine bessere Alternative

Mithin ist es höchste Zeit, die Diskussion über EU-Kommunikationsgrundrechte medienpezifisch zu vertiefen und zu verbreitern, also auch mehr wissenschaftliches und öffentliches Interesse für diese Dinge zu wecken. Vielleicht könnte jemand auch einmal die Staats- und Regierungschefs dafür interessieren und sie daran erinnern, was sie 1997 in dem neunten Protokoll zum Vertrag von Amsterdam festgelegt und sodann 1999 bekräftigt haben: „daß der öffentlich-rechtliche Rundfunk mit seinen kulturellen, sozialen und demokratischen Aufgaben, die er zum Wohle der Allgemeinheit erfüllt, von entscheidender Bedeutung für Demokratie, Pluralismus, sozialen Zusammenhalt, kulturelle und sprachliche Vielfalt ist“ (so die Entschliebung des EU-Ministerrats und des Europäischen Rats über den öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunk vom 25.1.1999, Amtsblatt der EG Nr. C 30 vom 5.2.1999, S. 1). Daraufhin wird in dem - leider wenig bekannten - Grundsatzpapier der einhellige Wille der Mitgliedstaaten betont, unter Gesichtspunkten programmlicher Qualitätssicherung „die Rolle des öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunks herauszustellen“. Solche Einsichten und guten Vorsätze wären jetzt endlich einmal auch für die werdende europäische Grundrechtsdogmatik zu rezipieren und umzusetzen.

Wer das tun will, der kann nicht einfach bei Art. 10 EMRK bleiben und damit für ein schwächliches Marktmodell à la „Fernsehen ohne Grenzen“ optieren. Wenn man Art. 10 EMRK überhaupt als Ausgangspunkt beibehalten will, wird man jedenfalls nicht ohne weitreichende funktionale Ergänzungen und Modernisierungen des bisherigen Wortlauts auskommen. Mögliche Textbeispiele dafür gibt es in Europa in Hülle und Fülle, vor allem dort, wo das Public-Service-Prinzip noch geläufig ist und in Blüte steht. Eine avancierte EU-Medienfreiheit könnte in der Grundrechtscharta beispielsweise durch folgende Einfügung in Art. 15 verankert werden:

Abs. 2 lehnt sich an den ARD/ZDF-Vorschlag an. In Abs. 3 sind u.a. Passagen aus dem Rundfunkrecht deutscher Länder (Bayern, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Sachsen) enthalten, welche zu den für Art. 6 Abs. 2 EUV relevanten mitgliedstaatlichen Verfassungstraditionen gehören, wie sie nach dem Kölner Mandat auch der Grundrechtskonvent zu berücksichtigen hat. Die programmliche Unabhängigkeit des Rundfunks wird insbesondere im österreichischen und im Schweizer Verfassungsrecht angesprochen - beides Staaten mit einer ebenfalls hochentwickelten, dem Public-Service-Gedanken verpflichteten Medienrechtskultur. Hinzugefügt werden könnten eventuell noch strukturpolitische Richtwerte nach Art der Präambel des deutschen Rundfunkstaatsvertrags von 1991, etwa der Satz: „Anzustreben ist ein leistungsfähiges europäisches duales Rundfunksystem.“ Und wer noch ein übriges tun will, mag auch anfügen: „Auf rundfunkähnliche neue Mediendienste sind diese Bestimmungen entsprechend anzuwenden.“ (Auch die Schrankenregelungen sollten nicht einfach aus der Menschenrechtskonvention übernommen werden.) Warum also nicht Art. 10 EMRK in dieser Weise ergänzen und modernisieren?

Hier bietet sich unversehens eine gute Gelegenheit, den europäischen Grundrechtsschutz des Rundfunks erheblich zu verbessern, gerade auch im Blick auf die Zukunft des öffentlichen Sektors unter Konvergenzbedingungen. Denn man könnte jetzt ein paar neue Pflöcke einschlagen: zugunsten einer kontinuierlichen und energischen, europaweit wirksamen programmlichen Qualitätsvorsorge, zugunsten der Bewahrung kultureller Vielfalt und Offenheit, auch zugunsten weiterer Selbstfindung und innerer Kräftigung der Union in politicis. Europa in „guter Verfassung“, auch kraft einer guten Rundfunkverfassung - warum diese Chance verschlafen?

Der EU-Grundrechtskonvent hat eine eigene Website eingerichtet, die in allen Amtssprachen angeboten wird und die Öffentlichkeit über Zeitplan und Inhalt der Beratungen des Gremiums informieren soll. Die dem Gremium vorgelegten deutschsprachigen Dokumente sind einsehbar unter http://db.consilium.eu.int/df/listall.asp?lang=en&slang=de&BTN_ALL. Dort finden sich auch die in diesem Beitrag genannten Dokumente. Der Beitrag gibt in kurzer Form Überlegungen wieder, die vom Autor weiter ausgeführt worden sind in der demnächst erscheinenden Schrift: Medienfreiheit in der EU-Grundrechtscharta: Art. 10 EMRK ergänzen und modernisieren! DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 5 June 2000CHARTE 4343/00*CONTRIB 207*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution from the European Children's Network (Euronet) regarding CONVENT 28 and 34. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS IN THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Briefing on EU Charter of Fundamental Rights Euronet's position with regard to Convent 28 and 34

Civil and Political Rights- Convent 28 of 5 May 2000

Article 23 – Children's Rights

Euronet, the European Children's Network welcomes the inclusion of an article on children's rights - Article 23 in Convent 28 of 5 May 2000 and is pleased that this article is based on the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. However, Euronet believes that a clear reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child within the Article is necessary, since this is the most comprehensive statement of children's rights and has almost universal recognition. In this respect we support the amendment underlined below tabled by Mrs Maij-Weggen MEP:

Existing article 23 plus amendment by Mrs Maij-Weggen MEP

Children must be treated as equal individuals, they must be allowed to influence matters pertaining to their person to a degree corresponding to their maturity. The European Union shall ensure that all EU activities are fully compatible with the principle of the best interests of the child as expressed in the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

The above amendment is our preferred option.

However, if this is not possible our second preference would be the amendment tabled by Mr Cornillet, Member of the Convention, since this includes the two main principles on the rights of the child as set out in the UN Convention on the rights of the Child.

Article 23 amendment by Mr Cornillet

1. In all decisions affecting children, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration
2. Each child who is capable of forming his or her own views, has the right to express these views freely in all matters affecting the child and the views of the child shall be given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child.

Article 13- Family Life - Convent 28 of 5 May 2000

Euronet supports article 13 on family life which is drawn from the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. However, another important principle of the Convention on the Rights of the Child is to support the family to protect and give special care to children. We therefore suggest the following additions, which are underlined:

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his or her family life.
2. Everyone has the right to marry and to found a family, according to the national laws governing the exercise of this right.
- 3. The family shall enjoy legal economic and social protection and be supported in giving children the care and protection they need.

Economic and Social Rights- Convent 34 of 16 May 2000

Article 37- Protection of young people

Article 37 refers to the protection of young people in employment. The current title is the protection of young people we believe that in line with the European Social Charter, the title should be changed to :

The protection of children and young people.

According to the Convention on the Rights of the Child the definition of a child is all persons under 18 years.

And the following should be added to Article 37 – drawn from Article 7 of the European Social Charter.

Children and young people shall be protected against physical and moral dangers to which they are exposed and particularly those resulting directly or indirectly from their work.

Statement of reasons

We also believe that the statement of reason should contain a reference to ILO Convention 182 which aims to ban the worst forms of child labour.

Preamble to the EU Charter of Fundamental rights

Euronet believes it is important that an explicit reference is made to children as holders of rights in the Preamble of the Charter. Children are a particularly vulnerable group within the EU and are not always explicitly recognised as EU citizens.

Vorbemerkung

Der PARITÄTISCHE Wohlfahrtsverband ist Dachverband von über 9300 rechtlich selbständigen Mitgliedsorganisationen, die soziale Arbeit als Hilfe für andere oder als Selbsthilfe leisten. Der PARITÄTISCHE ist Dienstleister für die ihm angeschlossenen Vereine und Organisationen der sozialen Arbeit und vertritt deren Interessen und die der von ihm betreuten Menschen gegenüber Öffentlichkeit, Politik und Verwaltung.

Mit diesem Mandat setzt sich der PARITÄTISCHE gemäß seinen im Oktober 1989 verabschiedeten Grundsätzen der Verbandspolitik ein

- für die Rechte der Menschen auf soziale Hilfen, wenn sie sich in Not befinden;
- für eine Politik, die auf die Beseitigung der Ursachen sozialer Not und sozialer Benachteiligung zielt;
- für das Initiativrecht freier Vereinigungen in der Wohlfahrtspflege und den Vorrang des mitbürgerlichen Engagements und der Selbsthilfe vor staatlichen Initiativen.

Währungs-, Wirtschafts- und Sozialpolitik stehen in einem engen Zusammenhang. Eine zukunftsweisende EU-Grundrechtscharta hat daher Europa auch als Sozialraum in den Blick zu nehmen. Dabei sind aus Sicht des PARITÄTISCHEN Zielformulierungen und Schutzrechte unabdingbar, die soweit wie möglich

- die Teilhabe der Bürgerinnen und Bürger an Arbeit, Wohnen und Bildung sichern;
- die Rechte der Bürgerinnen und Bürger auf soziale Hilfen, gesundheitliche Versorgung und Betreuung sichern, sofern sie dieser bedürfen;
- die Diskriminierung von Bevölkerungsgruppen ausschließen, die historisch oder aktuell in besonderer Weise der Gefahr der Diskriminierung unterliegen;
- den Vorrang des freien Bürgerengagements gegenüber staatlichen Initiativen in der Wohlfahrtspflege sicherstellen;
- das Wunsch- und Wahlrecht auch bei der Inanspruchnahme von sozialen Diensten berücksichtigen.

Vor diesem Hintergrund und unter Berücksichtigung der zwischen den EU-Mitgliedsstaaten bereits getroffenen vertraglichen Vereinbarungen sowie der bereits vorliegenden verschiedenen Ausarbeitungen für eine EU-Charta der Grundrechte schlägt der PARITÄTISCHE folgende Formulierungen für die oben genannten Aspekte vor:

Wichtiger Hinweis: In den Fußnoten wird an vielen Stellen auf Dokumente des "Konventes" verwiesen; diese sind im Internet unter folgender Adresse abgelegt:

<http://db.consilium.eu.int/df/default.asp?lang=de>

Die Dokumente finden sich dann unter "Datenbank / Suche".

A) Nichtdiskriminierung

- 1) Diskriminierungen wegen des Geschlechts, der Rasse, der Hautfarbe, der ethnischen oder sozialen Herkunft, der Sprache, der Religion oder der Weltanschauung, der Zugehörigkeit zu einer nationalen Minderheit, des Vermögens, der Geburt, einer Behinderung, des Alters oder der sexuellen Ausrichtung sind verboten.¹
- 2) Die Union wirkt darauf hin, Chancenungleichheiten zu beseitigen und die Gleichstellung von Männern und Frauen sowie von Menschen mit und ohne Behinderung zu fördern.²

B) Familienleben³

- 1) Jede Person hat das Recht auf Gründung einer Familie und Achtung des Familienlebens.
- 2) Pflege und Erziehung der Kinder sind das natürliche Recht der Eltern und die primär ihnen obliegende Pflicht. Die staatliche Gemeinschaft schützt und fördert darüber hinaus jede Lebensgemeinschaft, in der Kinder und Jugendliche aufwachsen, bei ihrer selbstverantwortlichen Aufgabenerfüllung.
- 3) Kinder und Jugendliche haben darüber hinaus Anspruch auf besonderen Schutz der Unversehrtheit ihrer Person und ihrer Entwicklung. Sie haben insbesondere Anspruch, auf Angelegenheiten, die sie selbst betreffen, entsprechend dem Grad ihrer persönlichen Reife Einfluß zu nehmen.

C) Hilfe in Notlagen

Wer in Not gerät, hat Anspruch auf Hilfe und Betreuung und auf die Mittel, die für ein menschenwürdiges Dasein und für eine Teilhabe an der Gesellschaft unerlässlich sind ⁴.

D) Gesundheitliche Versorgung

Jede Person hat ein Recht auf gesundheitliche Versorgung⁵. Niemandem dürfen wegen seiner wirtschaftlichen Situation oder aus anderen Gründen notwendige Leistungen der gesundheitlichen Versorgung vorenthalten werden.

E) Arbeit

Die Europäische Union (und ihre Mitgliedstaaten) setzen sich im Rahmen ihrer Zuständigkeit dafür ein, dass arbeitsfähige Menschen Arbeit unter angemessenen Arbeitsbedingungen finden oder entsprechende Verhältnisse selbst schaffen können.⁶

F) Bildung

- 1) Jede Person hat das Recht auf Bildung und Ausbildung gemäß ihrer Fähigkeiten.⁷
- 2) Angehörige nationaler oder ethnischer Minderheiten haben das Recht, ihre Muttersprache zu lernen und eigene Schulen zu gründen und zu unterhalten.⁸

G) Wohnen

Jede Person hat das Recht auf eine Unterbringung, die seiner Menschenwürde entspricht.⁹

H) Wahlrecht bei Bildung, Erziehung und sozialen Diensten

Das Wunsch- und Wahlrecht der Personen, die soziale Diensten oder Einrichtungen der Erziehung, Bildung, Ausbildung und der Gesundheitsversorgung in Anspruch nehmen, bzw. ihrer Erziehungsberechtigten ist zu achten.

I) Stellung freier Vereinigungen in Bildung, Erziehung, Versorgung mit sozialen Diensten ¹⁰

- 1) Das Initiativrecht freier Vereinigungen im Bereich der Bildung, der Erziehung und der Versorgung mit sozialen Diensten wird geachtet.¹¹
- 2) Öffentliche Schulen in freier Trägerschaft sind staatlichen Schulen unbeschadet der staatlichen Planungs- und Versorgungsverantwortung gleichgestellt.
- 3) Die Vorrangstellung der Wohlfahrtsverbände und anderer freier dem Gemeinwohl verpflichteter Träger im Bereich der Wohlfahrtspflege und der Erziehung gegenüber staatlich vorgehaltenen sozialen Diensten ist unbeschadet der staatlichen Planungs- und Versorgungsverantwortung zu achten.¹²
- 4) Die Verbände der freien Träger von Einrichtungen der Bildung, Erziehung und der Wohlfahrtspflege sind bei der politischen Gestaltung der Bereiche Bildung, Erziehung und soziale Dienste einzubeziehen.

Paritätischer Wohlfahrtsverband Gesamtverband

Frankfurt am Main, 13.05.2000

Grundrecht der Pressefreiheit

Sehr geehrter Herr Vorsitzender, sehr geehrte Damen und Herren Mitglieder des Konvents, im Auftrag der Stiftervereinigung der Presse e.V. und der Stiftung Freiheit der Presse hat Herr Prof. Dr. Christoph Engel das beigefügte Rechtsgutachten "Die Europäische Grundrechtscharta und die Presse" erstellt.

Ausgehend von der Darstellung des Schutzbedarfs der Presse angesichts gegenwärtiger, vergangener und möglicher zukünftiger Konflikte sowie der Effekte einer Grundrechtscharta auf das Institutionsgefüge in Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten zieht Herr Prof. Dr. Engel normative Folgerungen für die Verankerung des Schutzes der Pressefreiheit in der EU-Grundrechtecharta.

In den Schlußfolgerungen der Untersuchung heißt es u.a.:

"Grundrechte sind in ihrem Kern Abwehrrechte gegen hoheitliches Handeln. Das gilt auch und gerade für die Pressefreiheit. Die schlechthin konstituierende Bedeutung der Presse für ein demokratisches Gemeinwesen führt nicht etwa zu einem anderen Verständnis dieses Grundrechts, sondern zu einer Verstärkung des Freiheitsrechts. Denn Freiheit ist die Voraussetzung dafür, daß die Presse ihre demokratische Aufgabe wahrnehmen kann.

Bislang beschränkt sich der Entwurf auf den allgemeinen Schutz der Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit. Rechtstechnisch mag das genügen, den besonderen Schutzbedarf der Presse zu erfüllen und den Schutzstandard der Grundrechtstradition der Mitgliedstaaten auch gegenüber der Europäischen Gemeinschaft zu sichern. Eine ausdrückliche Garantie der Pressefreiheit würde aber jeden Zweifel hieran ausräumen. Sie wird unverzichtbar, wenn sich der Rundfunk mit dem Wunsch nach einer separaten Garantie durchsetzt. Erwägenswert ist es, Abgrenzungsschwierigkeiten durch eine allgemeine Medienfreiheit vorzubeugen.

Der Entwurf sieht ein recht kompliziertes System der Grundrechtsschranken vor. Wie jedes Grundrecht der Charta unterläge die Pressefreiheit zunächst der allgemeinen, unbenannten Schranke aus Art. H.2 II 2. Weil sie Teil der in Art. 10 EMRK garantierten Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit ist, wären nach Art. H.2 II 3 zusätzlich die benannten Schranken aus Art. 10 II EMRK zu beachten. Schließlich darf der Grundrechtsschutz nach Art. H.4 nicht hinter dem Schutzstandard von Art. 10 EMRK zurückbleiben. Die Auslegung ist zu beachten, die der Straßburger Menschenrechtsgerichtshof dieser Norm gegeben hat. Bei richtiger Handhabung führt dieses System der Schranken nicht zu Unzuträglichkeiten. Die Grundrechtsanwendung würde aber sehr vereinfacht, wenn die Pressefreiheit unmittelbar die benannten Schranken aus Art. 10 II EMRK erhalte.

Die Presse steht nicht nur in einem Spannungsfeld zum Staat, sondern auch zu anderen Grundrechtsträgern. Daß die Grundrechtscharta viele dieser Personen schützt, etwa die Ehre als Schutzgut gesondert ausweist, darf aber nicht mißdeutet werden. Auch soweit aus den europäischen Grundrechten Schutzpflichten folgen, erweitern sich die Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft nicht. Die meisten der potentiellen Grundrechtskonflikte werden aus diesem Grunde nicht aktuell. Die Zuständigkeit zu ihrer Bewältigung bleibt bei den Mitgliedstaaten.

Vorsorglich müssen die europäischen Grundrechte gleichwohl so ausgestaltet werden, daß ein gerechter Ausgleich der widerstreitenden Belange möglich wird, sollte die Gemeinschaft für einen Teilbereich zuständig sein oder werden. Praktisch kommt es vor allem darauf an, wie die Schranken dieser Grundrechte ausgestaltet werden. Sie müssen dem Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber gestatten, diese Grundrechte zu Gunsten der berechtigten Anliegen der Presse zu beschränken.

Nach dem augenblicklichen Stand der Entwürfe ist das im Prinzip schon deshalb gewährleistet, weil Art. H.2 II 2 ja Grundrechtseingriffe zur Verfolgung jedes legitimen Ziels zuläßt. Der genaueren Überprüfung bedürfen aber die Schranken der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention, auf die Art. H.2 II 3 und Art. H.4 verweisen. Daß die Presse dort nirgends ausdrücklich erwähnt ist, ist unschädlich. Es muß aber zumindest sichergestellt sein, daß überall ein Vorbehalt für die "Rechte anderer" vorhanden ist. Darauf wäre auch zu achten, wenn sich der Grundrechtskonvent doch noch entschließt, selbst allen Grundrechten benannte Schranken zuzuweisen."

Die deutschen Zeitungsverleger bitten Sie, sehr geehrter Herr Vorsitzender, und den gesamten Konvent, die Ausführungen von Herrn Prof. Dr. Engel bei den Beratungen zur EU-Grundrechtecharta und speziell der Formulierung des Grundrechts, das die Freiheit der Presse garantiert, zu berücksichtigen.

Eine in die englische Sprache übersetzte Fassung des Rechtsgutachtens werden wir alsbald nachreichen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Dr. Volker Schulze

I. Fragestellung

Gute Verfassungen sind kurz und dunkel. Das erleichtert die Einigung auf den Verfassungstext. Niemand weiß so ganz genau, worauf er sich da gerade einläßt. Die Verfassungsväter ziehen vor den ohnehin schon dichten Schleier der Zukunft noch einen weiteren, künstlichen Schleier des Unwissens³. Die Römischen Verträge, auf denen die Europäische Wirtschaftsgemeinschaft ursprünglich beruhte, sind sogar noch weiter gegangen. Die Materialien sind bewußt nie veröffentlicht worden. Im Gegenteil hat der Vertrag seine Auslegung einem machtvollen internationalen Gericht überantwortet, dem Europäischen Gerichtshof.

Die Geschichte hat den Vätern der Römischen Verträge Recht gegeben. Welche Herausforderungen die Natur oder das Ausland an ein Gemeinwesen herantragen werden, ist ebensowenig vorhersehbar wie die politischen Prozesse und die Entwicklung der Mentalitäten im Inneren. Auch sind Verfassungen notwendig Kompromisse zwischen unterschiedlichen, ja fundamental unvereinbaren Blickwinkeln, von denen aus die Welt verstanden und bewertet werden kann⁴. Eine Verfassung tut gut daran, sich nicht auf einen dieser Blickwinkel festzulegen. Sie sollte stattdessen nach Instrumenten suchen, die es erlauben, die Bilder der sozialen Wirklichkeit immer neu übereinander zu legen, die aus diesen unterschiedlichen Blickwinkeln gezeichnet werden.

Die Europäische Union schickt sich an, ihrer Verfassung eine Grundrechtscharta beizufügen. Den Anstoß gab der Europäische Rat, also das Organ der Staats- und Regierungschefs⁵. Zu diesem Zweck hat der Rat einen Konvent einberufen, dem Roman Herzog vorsteht⁶. Das Präsidium des Konvents hat Textentwürfe vorgelegt, nach denen sich die Europäische Grundrechtscharta aus drei Teilen zusammensetzen würde: Freiheitsrechten, demokratischen Rechten, sowie wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Rechten⁷.

Diese Entwürfe halten sich an die eingangs genannten Klugheitsregeln. Das macht es für einen Weitere Textentwürfe von einzelnen Mitgliedern des Konvents und von außenstehenden Personen und Einrichtungen sind auf der in der vorigen FN genannten Website nachgewiesen.

Wirtschaftszweig wie die Presse nicht einfach, im Verfahren der Verfassungsgebung seine Interessen zu wahren. Die Aufnahme konkreter Ergebnisse, etwa des arbeitsrechtlichen Tendenzschutzes, in den Verfassungstext würde den Charakter einer Grundrechtscharta sprengen. Es muß deshalb darum gehen, die Pressefreiheit auch auf der Ebene der Europäischen Union angemessen zu verankern und den Text dadurch für die Bewältigung der schon bekannten und der vorhersehbaren Konflikte vorzubereiten.

Eine zweite Besonderheit tritt hinzu. Die Europäische Union gibt sich nur für ihre eigenen Zwecke Grundrechte⁸. Die Harmonisierung der Grundrechtskataloge in den Mitgliedstaaten ist nicht beabsichtigt. Scheinbar mindert das die Bedeutung der Grundrechtscharta für die Presse. Denn eine eigene Pressepolitik hat die Europäische Union bislang nicht entwickelt. Die Presse ist jedoch schon in der Vergangenheit immer wieder von allgemeinen Politiken der EG betroffen gewesen. Sie ist dafür regelmäßig ein ganz ungewöhnlicher Sonderfall. Gerade für die Bewältigung atypischer Konstellationen sind Grundrechte besonders gut geeignet. In der Zukunft könnte sich der Schutzbedarf noch vergrößern. Insbesondere könnte die Europäische Gemeinschaft versucht sein, ihre Politiken für andere Medien unter dem Vorwand auch auf die Presse zu erstrecken, daß die Presseinhalte nicht mehr nur auf Papier, sondern auch elektronisch dargeboten werden. Dies wird im einzelnen darzulegen sein⁹.

Eine Europäische Grundrechtscharta birgt für die Presse aber nicht nur Chancen, sondern auch Gefahren. Diese Gefahren liegen auf zwei unterschiedlichen Ebenen. Eine Grundrechtscharta schützt die Individuen nicht nur besser vor dem Zugriff des europäischen Gesetzgebers. Vielmehr verändert sie zugleich das Institutionengefüge in der Gemeinschaft und im Verhältnis zu den Mitgliedstaaten. Auch wenn es gelingen sollte, eine rechtliche Ausweitung der Kompetenzen zu verhindern, wird sich doch politisch das Gewicht von Europa zu Lasten der Mitgliedstaaten erhöhen. Dem wird sich auf Dauer auch die Pressepolitik nicht entziehen können. Sie wird sich auf andere, zumindest aber komplexere Opportunity Structures einstellen müssen. Die Grundrechtscharta muß vorbeugend so ausgestaltet werden, daß die Presse auch in diesem Institutionengefüge ihre legitimen Interessen wahrnehmen kann.

Die zweite Gefahr ergibt sich letztlich aus dem multipolaren Charakter der meisten Regelungskonflikte. Ihrem gedanklichen Ursprung nach sind die Grundrechte bipolar gedacht. Der Staat greift von hoher Hand auf Freiheit oder Eigentum der Bürger zu. Unter Berufung auf seine Grundrechte weist der Bürger den Staat in seine Schranken. Solche Konflikte gibt es nach wie vor. Ein pressenspezifisches Beispiel ist der Versuch der Strafgerichte, einen Journalisten zur Offenbarung seines Informanten zu zwingen¹⁰. Die meisten presserechtlichen Normen regeln aber Konflikte zwischen der Presse und anderen Individuen. Ein Standardbeispiel ist der Persönlichkeitsschutz¹¹. Diese Normen bleiben natürlich Staatsakte. Wenn der Staat einseitig den Dritten schützt, ohne die legitimen Interessen der Presse zu achten, kann sich die Presse dagegen mit einem Grundrecht wehren, das als Abwehrrecht ausgestaltet ist¹². Der multipolare Charakter des zugrundeliegenden Konflikts wirkt sich dann dogmatisch auf die Bestimmung des legitimen Ziels und auf die Höhe des Schutzniveaus aus¹³. Oft können die Dritten dieselbe Norm aber auch als Eingriff in ihren grundrechtlich geschützten Freiheitsbereich erfassen. So liegt es etwa, wenn der Katalog ein Grundrecht auf Schutz der Privatsphäre enthält¹⁴. Dann kommt es für die Presse grundrechtsdogmatisch zunächst einmal darauf an, daß ihre legitimen Belange auch Schranken der konkurrierenden Grundrechte darstellen. Noch anspruchsvoller wird es dogmatisch wie rechtspolitisch, wenn der Grundrechtskatalog nicht bloß Abwehrrechte enthält, sondern einzelnen oder allen Grundrechten auch andere Funktionen zuweist¹⁵.

Aus diesen Vorüberlegungen leitet sich der Gang der Untersuchung ab. Sie bestimmt zunächst den Schutzbedarf der Presse (II), die Effekte einer Grundrechtscharta auf das Institutionengefüge in der Gemeinschaft und im Verhältnis zu den Mitgliedstaaten (III). Aus beidem zieht sie grundrechtsdogmatische Folgerungen (IV) und bedenkt schließlich, wie die offenen Flanken geschlossen werden können, die danach für einen Schutz der Presse noch verbleiben (V).

II. Schutzbedarf

Die Presse ist kein Wirtschaftszweig wie jeder andere. Sie bedarf des intensiven verfassungsrechtlichen Schutzes, um ihre Funktion für ein demokratisches Gemeinwesen erfüllen zu können (1) Die Presse braucht den Schutz der Grundrechte zuerst und vor allem dort, wo der Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber in der Vergangenheit bereits regulierend eingegriffen hat (2). Grundrechte werden aber nicht für den Tag geschrieben. Auch wenn die Gründungsverträge der Europäischen Union häufiger und fundamentaler geändert werden als nationale Verfassungen, ist doch nicht sehr wahrscheinlich, daß ein einmal verabschiedeter Grundrechtskatalog alsbald umgeschrieben würde. Der Grundrechtskatalog sollte deshalb so gefaßt sein, daß er der Presse auch bei künftigen Interventionen des europäischen Gesetzgebers Schutz bietet. Solche Interventionen sind naturgemäß nicht mit Sicherheit vorherzusehen. Drei europapolitische Linien lassen sich aber fortdenken. Der europäische Gesetzgeber könnte Presserecht mit dem Argument harmonisieren, das erleichtere den Marktzutritt ausländischer Anbieter. Die rechtsvergleichende Umschau im Presserecht der Mitgliedstaaten verschafft einen Eindruck von der Bandbreite möglicher harmonisierter Regeln (3). Der europäische Gesetzgeber könnte sich auch auf die Konvergenz zwischen Print-Medien und elektronischen Medien berufen. Mit diesem Argument könnte er Politiken auf die Presse erstrecken, die er für die elektronischen Medien entwickelt hat (4). Schließlich könnten andere Politikfelder der Gemeinschaft auf die Presse ausgedehnt werden (5).

Eine Klarstellung ist angezeigt: die folgenden Überlegungen enthalten weder eine rechtspolitische Empfehlung noch eine rechtsdogmatische Aussage zu den Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft. Sie sagen weder, daß die Gemeinschaft in der beschriebenen Weise tätig werden sollte, noch daß sie es nach dem EG-Vertrag überhaupt dürfte. Vielmehr gehorcht dieser Abschnitt einem Vorsichtsprinzip. Die neuen Grundrechte sollten so ausgestaltet sein, daß sie gegen alle Interventionen schützen, die wenigstens vorstellbar erscheinen. Ganz kostenlos ist diese Vorsicht nicht. Der Text der Grundrechtscharta mag noch so deutlich herausstellen, daß daraus keine zusätzlichen Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft abgeleitet werden können¹⁶. Politisch wird unvermeidlich die Frage aufkommen, warum die Grundrechtscharta denn gegen ein Verhalten schützen sollte, zu dem die Gemeinschaft überhaupt nicht befugt ist. Trotzdem wäre es nicht klug, auf solche Sicherungen allein deshalb zu verzichten, damit dieses Argument nicht vorgebracht werden kann. Seit sie besteht, hat die Gemeinschaft ihren Zuständigkeitsbereich beständig zu Lasten der Mitgliedstaaten erweitert. Die Verankerung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips im EG-Vertrag hat diesen Prozeß nur verlangsamt und erschwert, aber nicht aufgehalten.

¹⁴ Näher unten IV 4.

1. Die Aufgabe der Presse

Die Grundrechte schützen Freiheit um ihrer selbst willen. Grundrechtsschutz ist voraussetzungslos. Der Grundrechtsträger muß nicht darlegen, warum der Gebrauch seiner Freiheit Dritten oder der Allgemeinheit nützt. All das gilt auch für die Pressefreiheit.

Daß sich Unternehmen finden, die von dieser Freiheit Gebrauch machen, ist für ein demokratisches Gemeinwesen aber von schlechthin konstituierender Bedeutung. Die Volkssouveränität bleibt ein bloßes staatstheoretisches Konstrukt, wenn nicht Intermediäre dafür sorgen, daß die Inhaber politischer Macht wirklich als Regierung für das Volk handeln. Parteien und Medien teilen sich in diese Aufgabe. Die Parteien organisieren Macht und machen dadurch die Demokratie für ein Volk von 80 Millionen Menschen überhaupt erst möglich. Parteien müssen Interessen zu diesem Zweck jedoch bündeln und zwischen unterschiedlichen Ideen ausgleichen. Zwischen Wahlen und Abstimmungen handeln die von den Parteien getragenen Organe in einer repräsentativen Demokratie gerade unabhängig von der direkten Einwirkung des Volkes. Für die repräsentative Demokratie sprechen gute Gründe. Sie birgt jedoch ein doppeltes Risiko: die Mandatsträger können die Wünsche ihrer Wähler falsch wahrnehmen. Und sie können ihre Entscheidungsfreiheit mißbrauchen. Sie können etwa ihre persönliche Ideologie als den Wählerwillen ausgeben, dem Einfluß gut organisierter Interessen nachgeben oder den Erhalt der Macht über die Richtigkeit der Entscheidung in der Sache stellen.

Eine repräsentative Demokratie bedarf deshalb der Medien. Sie sind zunächst einmal das Sprachrohr der Bürger. Weil Medien Interessen nicht bündeln und zwischen Ideen nicht ausgleichen müssen, können sie den Wählerwillen viel differenzierter abbilden als die Parteien. Sie können neuen Strömungen viel früher ein Forum bieten als der Parteienwettbewerb. Außerdem sprechen die Bürger durch die Medien beständig, nicht nur am Wahltag und bei Abstimmungen. Zugleich wäre die Kontrolle der Regierenden ohne die Medien stumpf. Die Medien informieren die Bürger über das Handeln von Staat und Politik. Weil Information immer reicher zur Verfügung steht, wird das immer mehr eine Aufgabe der Selektion und der Organisation öffentlicher Aufmerksamkeit. Wenn die Medien einen Mißstand anprangern, ist das schließlich die wirksamste Form der Sanktion, die den Bürgern zu Gebote steht. Diese Sanktion ist sogar noch wirksamer als die Wahlentscheidung. Denn Wahlentscheidungen sind Entscheidungen für die Zukunft. Vergangene schlechte Arbeit ist nicht mehr als ein Indiz für die Qualität des Regierens in der nächsten Legislaturperiode. Vor allem entscheiden die Wähler aber nicht nur über die Qualität der Mandatsträger, sondern untrennbar zugleich auch über deren ideologische Orientierung. Letzteres ist ihnen meist wichtiger. Das Wächteramt liegt deshalb zentral bei den Medien.

Diese Einsichten sind oft mißdeutet worden. Die Medienfreiheiten sind als bloße Instrumente interpretiert worden, das demokratische Ziel zu erreichen. Umgekehrt ist es richtig: nur wenn und weil die Medien frei sind, können sie die ihnen zugeordnete Aufgabe erfüllen. Die öffentliche Aufgabe der Medien ist nicht der Schutzzweck der Mediengrundrechte, sondern ein Reflex. Auch die Medien sind um ihrer selbst willen frei. Wenn sie es vorziehen, sich den Künsten, esoterischen Gedanken oder dem Unterhaltungsbedürfnis ihrer Rezipienten zu verschreiben, ist dagegen von Verfassungen wegen nichts zu erinnern. So sehr das deutschem Sicherheitsbedürfnis widerstrebt: die demokratische Funktion der Medien erhält der Staat nur dann, wenn er sie nicht befiehlt, sondern entstehen läßt. Die Geschichte zeigt, daß dem Staat dabei nicht bang zu sein braucht. Die Bürger wollen über politisches Handeln informiert werden und darauf durch die Medien Einfluß nehmen.

Auch wenn der Staat die demokratische Funktion der Medien nicht befehlen darf, so braucht er dieser ihm nützlichen Funktion gegenüber doch auch nicht blind zu sein. Je intensiver sich ein Medium aus eigener Entscheidung an dieser Aufgabe beteiligt, desto intensiveren Schutz verdient seine Freiheit vor staatlicher Intervention. Das hat für die Presse besondere Bedeutung. Denn weder Rundfunk noch Internet haben etwas daran geändert, daß die demokratische Funktion der Medien vor allem von der Presse wahrgenommen wird.

2. Gegenwärtige und vergangene Konflikte

In den vergangenen Jahrzehnten hat es manches Scharmützel zwischen der Presse und dem Europäischen Gesetzgeber gegeben. Regelmäßig haben die Kontrahenten ihre Kräfte nicht nur in der politischen Arena gemessen, sondern auch ihre Juristen gegeneinander aufgefahren. Der Europäische Gerichtshof hat seit langem aus dem Vergleich der mitgliedstaatlichen Verfassungen europäische Grundrechte entwickelt¹⁷. Er hat sich dabei jedenfalls theoretisch auch auf die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention gestützt¹⁸. Art. F II des Maastrichter Unionsvertrags hat diese Praxis des Gerichtshofs sanktioniert. Der Amsterdamer Vertrag hat diese Regel in Art. 6 II EUV übernommen. Die meisten Konflikte sind deshalb auch in der Vergangenheit schon als Grundrechtsfragen diskutiert worden. Entsprechend kurz können sie hier behandelt werden.

Folgende gesetzgeberische Aktivitäten der Gemeinschaft haben schon in der Vergangenheit zu Konflikten mit der Presse geführt: das Arbeitsrecht (a), Regeln über die Medienkonzentration (b), das Urheberrecht (c), der Datenschutz (d), das Werberecht (e), das Vertriebsrecht (f), Vorgaben für die nationale Presseförderung (g), die Anwendung des europäischen Kartellrechts (h) und schließlich die Frage des Informantenschutzes bei der Anwendung von europäischem Verwaltungsrecht (i).

a) Pressearbeitsrecht

Zu den Kernelementen des deutschen Pressearbeitsrechts gehört der Tendenzschutz. Weder die unternehmerische noch die betriebliche Mitbestimmung darf das Recht des Verlegers beeinträchtigen, die Ausrichtung der Zeitung oder Zeitschrift zu bestimmen¹⁹. Auf Drängen der deutschen Verleger enthält auch die Richtlinie über die Einsetzung eines Europäischen Betriebsrats einen Vorbehalt, der es den Mitgliedstaaten erlaubt, an dem bisherigen Tendenzschutz festzuhalten²⁰. Auch die Arbeitsschutzrichtlinie der Gemeinschaft verweist wegen des Tendenzschutzes auf die jeweiligen nationalen Regeln²¹.

Auch die bis heute ergebnislosen Bemühungen der EG-Kommission um europäische Regeln über die Medienkonzentration haben eine arbeitsrechtliche Dimension. In seinen Entschlüssen aus den Jahren 1990 und 1992 wollte das Europäische Parlament die sog. „Innere Pressefreiheit“ verwirklichen. Es wollte also den Journalisten vom Verleger nicht kontrollierte publizistische Freiräume einräumen, die sie zur schleichenden Änderung der Ausrichtung hätten nutzen können²². Das Parlament greift damit einen Vorschlag aus der deutschen Diskussion der 70er Jahre auf, der sich damals nicht durchsetzen konnte, weil er gegen das Grundrecht der Pressefreiheit verstößt. Der europäische Vorschlag ist intensiv an den ungeschriebenen europäischen Grundrechten und an der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention gemessen worden²³.

b) Medienkonzentration

Die EG-Kommission hat zu den Vorreitern eines publizistisch konzipierten Rechts der Medienkonzentrationskontrolle gehört²⁴. Sie hat auch die deutsche Diskussion stark beeinflusst. Für den Rundfunk hat der Rundfunkstaatsvertrag das von der EG-Kommission favorisierte Zuschauermarktanteilsmodell verwirklicht²⁵. Auf europäischer Ebene ist es bislang dagegen zu keiner Regelung gekommen²⁶. Die Pläne der EG-Kommission waren von Anfang an ambitioniert.

Sie wollte sich nicht auf das Fernsehen beschränken, sondern ein medienübergreifendes Recht der Konzentrationskontrolle schaffen und dabei auch die Presse einbeziehen²⁷. Auch diese Frage hat zu einer intensiven grundrechtlichen Diskussion geführt²⁸.

c) Urheberrecht

Die Harmonisierung des Urheberrechts der Mitgliedstaaten hat erst relativ spät eingesetzt. Mittlerweile schreitet sie aber rasch voran²⁹. In der Vergangenheit hat es einmal einen Konflikt auf der Grenzlinie zwischen Arbeitsrecht und Urheberrecht gegeben. Die Verlage haben erreicht, daß die Möglichkeit erhalten bleibt, durch Manteltarifvertrag klarzustellen, daß ein Redakteur sein urheberrechtliches Nutzungsrecht durch Abschluß des Arbeitsvertrags auf den Verlag überträgt³⁰. Für die Zukunft dürften Konflikte vor allem bei der europäischen Ausgestaltung des Urheberrechts in der Informationsgesellschaft zu erwarten sein³¹. Ein Beispiel ist der in Deutschland bereits ausgebrochene Streit um elektronische Pressespiegel³².

d) Datenschutz

Das deutsche Bundesdatenschutzgesetz enthält seit jeher ein Medienprivileg³³. Die Medien sollen personenbezogene Daten sammeln dürfen, ohne daß der Betroffene zustimmen müßte, Löschung verlangen könnte oder vorab informiert werden müßte. Das soll ihnen erlauben, die Kritik von Politikern oder anderen Personen des öffentlichen Lebens sorgsam vorzubereiten. Der Betroffene soll sie nicht mit Hilfe des Datenschutzes daran hindern können. Außerdem dient das Medienprivileg dem Schutz der Presseinformanten. Die Datenschutzrichtlinie der EG enthält kein vergleichbares Privileg³⁴. Obwohl die Umsetzungsfrist seit langem abgelaufen ist³⁵, ist die Richtlinie bislang nicht in deutsches Recht umgesetzt³⁶. Dafür ist auch das Problem des Mediendatenschutzes verantwortlich³⁷.

e) Werberecht

Eine cause célèbre des europäischen Grundrechtsschutzes der Presse ist das vollständige Verbot der Werbung für Tabak, das die Union verhängt hat³⁸. Es hat eine ganze Flut grundrechtlicher Untersuchungen ausgelöst³⁹. Gegen die Richtlinie schwebt eine Klage der Bundesrepublik Deutschland vor dem Europäischen Gerichtshof⁴⁰. Zwei englische Gerichte haben Vorabentscheidungsersuchen an den Gerichtshof gerichtet⁴¹. Schließlich haben Medienunternehmen Klage vor dem Gericht Erster Instanz erhoben⁴².

Die rechtspolitischen Vorstellungen der Mitgliedstaaten über Grenzen für die Zulässigkeit von Werbung weichen stark von einander ab⁴³. Gleichwohl hat die Gemeinschaft bislang nur ein kleines Segment des Werberechts harmonisiert: die irreführende Werbung⁴⁴, wozu eine Änderungsrichtlinie nun auch die vergleichende Werbung rechnet⁴⁵. Zunächst sah es so aus, als würde die

Warenverkehrsfreiheit die restriktiven Werberechte, allen voran also das deutsche Lauterkeitsrecht, erschüttern können⁴⁶. In der berühmten Keck-Entscheidung hat der Gerichtshof nicht diskriminierende Verkaufsmodalitäten aber bekanntlich aus dem Schutzbereich der Warenverkehrsfreiheit ausgenommen⁴⁷. Das geschah gerade, um den Mitgliedstaaten bei der Ausgestaltung des Lauterkeitsrechts größere Freiräume zu belassen. Dieser Umstand ist dafür verantwortlich, daß die Diskussion über die Vereinbarkeit von Werbebeschränkungen mit Grundrechten nunmehr an den Straßburger Gerichtshof abgewandert ist⁴⁸.

f) Vertriebsrecht

Die EG hat ihre Rechtsangleichungszuständigkeiten seit langem für den Verbraucherschutz genutzt. Seit dem Maastrichter Vertrag hat sie auch eine originäre Verbraucherschutzzuständigkeit⁴⁹. In Ausnutzung dieser Zuständigkeiten hat die Gemeinschaft Richtlinien erlassen, die auch für den Vertrieb von Zeitungs- und Zeitschriftenabonnements Bedeutung haben. Das gilt vor allem für die Richtlinie über Haustürgeschäfte⁵⁰, aber auch für die AGB-Richtlinie⁵¹. Auch das Primärrecht wirkt auf den Pressevertrieb ein. So hat der Gerichtshof entschieden, daß das österreichische Verbot von Preisausschreiben in Zeitschriften gegen die Warenverkehrsfreiheit verstößt⁵².

g) Nationale Presseförderung

Alle Mitgliedstaaten haben mehr oder minder weitreichende Instrumente zur Förderung der Presse. Weitverbreitet sind Mehrwertsteuerprivilegien. In Deutschland fällt etwa nur der Mehrwertsteuersatz von 7 % an, im Vereinigten Königreich⁵³ und in Finnland⁵⁴ sind Presseerzeugnisse sogar ganz von der Umsatzsteuer befreit. Das ist nur solange möglich, wie die einschlägige europäische Richtlinie Steuerbefreiungen zuläßt⁵⁵. Traditionell förderten die

Mitgliedstaaten die Presse häufiger auch durch Vorzugskonditionen für den Postzeitungsdienst⁵⁶. Mittlerweile hat die Gemeinschaft jedoch die Privatisierung und Deregulierung der Postunternehmen erzwungen⁵⁷. Die einschlägige Richtlinie gibt den Mitgliedstaaten zwar die Möglichkeit, einen Universaldienst vorzuschreiben⁵⁸. Ein besonderer Postzeitungsdienst ist dort aber nicht genannt⁵⁹.

Andere Mitgliedstaaten fördern die Presse durch weit überhöhte Zahlungen für den Abdruck öffentlicher Bekanntmachungen⁶⁰. Solche Praktiken müssen sich an den harmonisierten europäischen Regeln für die Vergabe öffentlicher Aufträge messen lassen⁶¹. Denn harmonisiert ist auch die Vergabe öffentlicher Dienstleistungsaufträge⁶².

Andere Mitgliedstaaten fördern die Presse offen und mit erheblichen Summen aus dem öffentlichen Haushalt. So liegt es insbesondere in Frankreich⁶³, in Italien⁶⁴ und in Österreich⁶⁵. Finnland nutzt Zahlungen an die Parteipresse als ein Instrument der indirekten Parteifinanzierung⁶⁶. Schweden erhält regionale und lokale Zweitzeitungen durch öffentliche Subventionen am Leben⁶⁷. Traditionell hat sich die Kommission bei der Anwendung der europäischen Beihilferegeln auf Maßnahmen zur Förderung von Kultur und Publizistik sehr zurückgehalten. Beim Rundfunk hat sich das bekanntlich aber geändert⁶⁸. Unter dem Einfluß des Gerichts Erster Instanz könnte auch die Beihilfeaufsicht über die Presse zunehmen. Das Gericht hat die Kommission schon gezwungen, die französische Praxis der Exportsubventionen für Bücher der Beihilfekontrolle zu unterwerfen⁶⁹.

h) Europäisches Kartellrecht

Auch die Anwendung des europäischen Kartellrechts führt immer wieder zu Konflikten mit Verlagen und der nationalen Pressepolitik. Das Gemeinschaftsrecht läßt selektive Vertriebsbindungen zwar grundsätzlich zu, achtet jedoch darauf, daß sie nicht diskriminierend ausgestaltet werden⁷⁰. Auch gegenüber der Preisbindung zweiter Hand ist die Kommission kritisch⁷¹. Zusammenschlüsse von Verlagshäusern hatte die Kommission bisher selten zu prüfen. In den untersuchten Fällen hatte sie keine Einwendungen⁷². Deshalb ist auch noch nicht abschließend geklärt, welche Freiräume der Medienvorbehalt in § 21 III Fusionskontrollverordnung den Mitgliedstaaten verschafft⁷³.

i) Informantenschutz und Europäisches Verwaltungsrecht

Das Europäische Verwaltungsrecht setzt die Akzente anders als das deutsche. Das Interesse am wirksamen Vollzug des öffentlichen Anliegens setzt sich viel häufiger gegen rechtsstaatliche Bedenken durch als im deutschen Recht⁷⁴. Dazu gehört auch, daß die Gemeinschaft umfangreiche Ermittlungsbefugnisse in Anspruch nimmt⁷⁵. Das macht wahrscheinlich, daß die Gemeinschaft auch geneigt wäre, den Schutz von Presseinformanten zurückzustellen. Das Spannungsverhältnis zwischen Verwaltungseffizienz und dem Bestreben des Europarats nach mehr Informantenschutz ist also noch nicht ausgestanden⁷⁶.

3. Mögliche Konflikte aus der Erleichterung des Marktzutritts für ausländische Anbieter

Niemand kann Sicherheit über die künftige Entwicklung des Gemeinschaftsrechts und der Gemeinschaftspolitik haben. Gleichwohl macht es Sinn, Entwicklungstrends des Gemeinschaftsrechts fortzudenken. Nach wie vor ist die Europäische Gemeinschaft vor allem eine Wirtschaftsgemeinschaft, gerichtet auf die Schaffung und Sicherung eines Binnenmarkts. Bislang hat die Gemeinschaft daraus nicht die Folgerung einer eigenen Pressepolitik gezogen. Das lag gleich aus zwei Gründen nahe: die meisten Mitgliedstaaten halten sich traditionell bei der Regulierung der Presse sehr zurück, es gibt also wenig Handelshemmnisse. Überdies werden Presseerzeugnisse nur in kleinen Stückzahlen über die Landesgrenzen hinaus gehandelt. Denn die

Presse ist an die Sprach- und Mentalitätsgrenzen gebunden und schreibt in der Regel für ein nationales (oder sogar regionales oder lokales) Publikum. Vorsorglich soll gleichwohl unterstellt werden, daß die Gemeinschaft künftig tätig würde, um die Märkte stärker für den Zutritt ausländischer Anbieter zu öffnen (a). Nach dem Vorbild der Europäischen Fernsehrichtlinie könnte sie sich auch veranlaßt sehen, die nationalen Regeln für die Presseinhalte zu harmonisieren (b), das Vertriebsrecht zu vereinheitlichen (c) oder gar in die nationalen Verfassungspolitiken der Medien einzugreifen (d). Schließlich könnte die Gemeinschaft an den Unterschieden zwischen den Regulierungsinstitutionen der Mitgliedstaaten ansetzen (e).

a) Marktöffnung

Offen diskriminierende Regeln für den Marktzutritt ausländischer Anbieter sind so zweifelsfrei gemeinschaftsrechtswidrig, daß die Mitgliedstaaten darauf normalerweise von selbst verzichten. Immerhin sah das portugiesische Recht aber vor, daß nicht mehr als 10 % des Eigentums an einem portugiesischem Verlag in ausländischer Hand liegen dürfen und daß das Unternehmen seinen Sitz im Lande haben muß⁷⁷. Auch zeigt die Pressegesetzgebung der Beitrittsstaaten in der Mitte Europas, daß die liberale westeuropäische Tradition des Presserechts dort nicht gleichermaßen selbstverständlich ist. So hat das tschechische Pressegesetz erst unter fühlbarer Einwirkung des Europarats eine Fassung gefunden, die im wesentlichen den westeuropäischen Standards genügt⁷⁸.

b) Harmonisierung der Inhalte

Das zentrale Anliegen der Fernsehrichtlinie ist die Harmonisierung der Vorgaben für den Inhalt von Fernsehprogrammen⁷⁹. Die nationalen Vorgaben für den Inhalt von Presseerzeugnissen sind nicht weniger unterschiedlich. Das gilt etwa für den Persönlichkeitsschutz⁸⁰ und das Recht der Gegendarstellung⁸¹. Deutschland hat aufgrund seiner Geschichte nationalsozialistische Propaganda unter Strafe gestellt⁸². Irland begründet sein Verbot der Werbung für Schwangerschaftsabbrüche mit seinem katholischen Hintergrund⁸³. Das englische Recht faßt die strafrechtlich- und zivilrechtlich

c) Harmonisierung des Werbe- und Vertriebsrechts

Weniger weit streuen die Regeln der Mitgliedstaaten über den Absatz der publizistischen Leistung an Werbetreibende und Zeitungsleser. So kennt Frankreich etwa restriktive Regeln über Product Placement⁸⁷. Im niederländischen Recht sind die Regeln für ideelle Werbung viel strenger als für kommerzielle⁸⁸. Das dänische Recht unterwirft alle Verleger einem allgemeinen Kontrahierungszwang gegenüber Anzeigenkunden⁸⁹. Das französische Recht zwingt die Verleger, alle Rabatte offenzulegen, die sie einzelnen Werbekunden gewährt haben⁹⁰. Media Agenturen müssen dort die ihnen gewährten Provisionen den Werbetreibenden gegenüber offenlegen⁹¹.

Auch beim Vertrieb gegenüber den Lesern gibt es manche Unterschiede. So dürfen Presseverkäufer in Frankreich ihre Vergütung mit dem Verlag nicht frei aushandeln⁹². Das deutsche und das österreichische Lauterkeitsrecht ziehen den Marketingstrategien der Verlage enge Grenzen⁹³.

d) Harmonisierung nationaler Verfassungspolitik der Medien

Die Presse erfüllt nicht nur ein Informations- und Unterhaltungsbedürfnis ihrer Leser, sondern sie ist zugleich auch ein Intermediär zwischen Staat und Gesellschaft. Nur auf diesem hohen Abstraktionsniveau besteht aber Einigkeit zwischen den Mitgliedstaaten. In der Ausgestaltung sind die Unterschiede groß. So nutzt Italien die Pressefinanzierung etwa als Vorwand für die Parteienfinanzierung⁹⁴. Auch in Schweden haben Parteizeitungen einen großen Marktanteil⁹⁵.

Schweden legt zugleich großen Wert auf die Überwachungsfunktion der Presse. Deshalb hat jeder öffentliche Bedienstete das Recht, die Presse zu informieren, wenn er einen Mißstand vermutet. Sein Dienstherr darf daraus keine nachteiligen Folgerungen ziehen. Der Informant darf auch anonym bleiben⁹⁶. Hierher gehören aber vor allem die sehr unterschiedlichen Auffassungen der Mitgliedstaaten über die Transparenz der Eigentumsverhältnisse an Verlagen. Frankreich hat strenge Regeln⁹⁷. Griechenland verpflichtet die Verleger sogar, jährlich ihre Vermögensverhältnisse offenzulegen⁹⁸ und läßt als flankierenden Schutz bei einer Presseaktiengesellschaft nur Namensaktien zu⁹⁹. Portugal¹⁰⁰, Italien¹⁰¹ und Griechenland haben einschlägige Vorschriften in ihre Verfassungen aufgenommen¹⁰². Das deutsche Recht kennt bekanntlich keine dieser Vorschriften.

e) Angleichung der Regulierungsinstitutionen

Schließlich unterscheiden sich auch die Institutionen erheblich, denen die Mitgliedstaaten die Bildung und Anwendung des Presserechts übertragen haben. Das gilt insbesondere für Ausmaß und Befugnisse der Selbstkontrolle. In Schweden hat sie eine lange Tradition¹⁰³. Dänemark vertraut dem Selbstkontrollorgan sogar die Entscheidung von Streitigkeiten zwischen Chefredakteur und Journalisten an¹⁰⁴. In den Niederlanden ist es zum Streit darüber gekommen, ob der Presserat überhaupt strengere Maßstäbe anlegen darf als das Gesetz¹⁰⁵. In England hat die Selbstkontrolle der Presse dagegen nach wie vor eine eher schwache Stellung¹⁰⁶. In Frankreich gibt es gar keine Einrichtung nach der Art des Deutschen Presserats¹⁰⁷.

Manche Mitgliedstaaten haben auch halbstaatliche Regulierungsinstitutionen geschaffen. So hat Italien 1990 einen unabhängigen Kommissar bestellt¹⁰⁸. Und das schwedische Recht hat Entscheidungen über den Ehrschutz einer Jury vorbehalten¹⁰⁹.

4. Mögliche künftige Konflikte aus der Ausstrahlung anderer Medienpolitiken

Der letzte Abschnitt hat Unterschiede zwischen dem Presserecht der Mitgliedstaaten zusammengetragen. Diese Unterschiede mag die Kommission eines Tages als Hemmnisse für einen europäischen Pressemarkt interpretieren und deshalb Harmonisierungsvorschläge machen. Sie müßte dann aber von ihrer bisherigen Überzeugung abgehen, eine europäische Pressepolitik sei nicht erforderlich. Zudem bräuchte sie eine Gesetzgebungskompetenz. Sehr viel wahrscheinlicher ist ein europäisches Presserecht dort, wo die Presse mit anderen Medien verschmilzt. Dazu kommt es vor allem durch die elektronische Erfassung der Inhalte, ihre Digitalisierung und den Vertrieb über elektronische Netze¹¹⁰. Die EG hat darauf vielfältig reagiert. Die Telekommunikationsnetze und –dienste sowie die darüber transportierten Inhalte sind eines der wichtigsten gegenwärtigen Politikfelder der Gemeinschaft¹¹¹. Viele der schon erlassenen oder geplanten Regeln gelten auch für Presse. Verwiesen sei stellvertretend nur auf das Grünbuch Konvergenz¹¹².

5. Mögliche künftige Konflikte aus der Ausstrahlung anderer Politiken

Schließlich werden auch in der Zukunft aus anderen Politiken der Gemeinschaft Konflikte mit der Presse entstehen. Ein Gegenstand sei beispielhaft herausgegriffen. Das deutsche Recht hält sich traditionell mit der Gewährung von Informationsansprüchen an den Staat oder an gesellschaftliche Akteure sehr zurück. Die wichtigste Ausnahme, das Umweltinformationsgesetz, beruht gerade auf einer Richtlinie der Europäischen Gemeinschaft¹¹³. In anderen Mitgliedstaaten ist das ganz anders. Schweden kennt solche Ansprüche schon seit Jahrhunderten¹¹⁴. In Portugal ist der Informationsanspruch in der Verfassung garantiert¹¹⁵. Art. 255 EGV in der Fassung des Amsterdamer Vertrags gibt jedem Bürger einen Informationsanspruch gegen die Gemeinschaft. Die Kommission hat ein Grünbuch über Informationen des öffentlichen Sektors in der Informationsgesellschaft verabschiedet¹¹⁶. Diese Entwicklung muß der Presse nicht nur nützen. Öffentliche Stellen könnten versucht sein, auch Journalisten auf den allgemeinen Informationsanspruch zu verweisen. Dann stünden sie sich im Ergebnis schlechter als nach den deutschen Landespressgesetzen.

III. Effekte einer Grundrechtscharta auf das Institutionengefüge in Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten

1. Einführung

Der Europäische Rat hat den Auftrag des Konvents darauf beschränkt, einen Grundrechtskatalog zu entwerfen, der weder Teil des EG- oder EU-Vertrages wird noch ein unabhängiges internationales Organ zu seiner Anwendung besitzt¹¹⁷. Wenn es auf Dauer dabei bliebe, wäre die Grundrechtscharta kaum mehr als eine Bekundung guten Willens. Das macht vor allem eine Unterscheidung von Robert Alexy deutlich. Er verweist darauf, daß die meisten Grundrechte Prinzipien sind, nicht Regeln. Sie enthalten also ein Finalprogramm, kein Konditionalprogramm. Grundrechte machen keine Wenn-Dann-Aussagen, sondern geben dem Adressaten Ziele vor, nach denen er sich auszurichten hat¹¹⁸. Ohne ein Verfahren zu ihrer authentischen Anwendung sind Grundrechte deshalb – zumindest juristisch¹¹⁹ - wertloser Text.

Die deutschen Initiatoren der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta wollten deshalb auch von vornherein mehr¹²⁰. Auch wenn die Gemeinschaft zunächst wirklich nur eine Deklaration beschließt, könnte sie damit doch auf einem juristischen oder einem politischen Wege Erfolg haben. Der Europäische Gerichtshof entnimmt dem ungeschriebenen Primärrecht der Gemeinschaft bekanntlich seit langem Grundrechte¹²¹. Der Gerichtshof könnte aussprechen, daß die Grundrechtscharta diese ungeschriebenen Grundrechte des Gemeinschaftsrechts kodifiziert¹²². Die politische Hoffnung setzt darauf, daß die Gemeinschaft Widerstände der Mitgliedstaaten seit jeher mit einer Art Salomitaktik überwindet¹²³. Sie entlockt den Mitgliedstaaten zunächst einmal die Zustimmung zum Prinzip. Eine Weile später zieht sie daraus dann konkrete politische Folgerungen und beruft sich darauf, das Prinzip stehe ja außer Streit¹²⁴. Im Folgenden wird deshalb unterstellt, daß die Grundrechtscharta schließlich zum justitiablen Bestandteil des primären Gemeinschaftsrechts geworden ist.

Auf den ersten Blick scheint die Presse durch solch eine justitiable Charta nur zu gewinnen. Sie könnte sich künftig gegen Übergriffe des europäischen Gesetzgebers in ihre Freiheit mit einem machtvollen Instrument wehren. Das ist besonders dann wichtig, wenn der Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber mit Mehrheit entschieden und dabei den Einwand eines Mitgliedstaats ignoriert hat, die Garantie der Pressefreiheit in seiner nationalen Verfassung lasse die Zustimmung zu dem Vorschlag der Kommission nicht zu. Justitiable Grundrechte bringen jedoch auch neue

Nachteile und Gefahren für die Presse mit sich. Die Gefahren liegen auf zwei Ebenen. Personen, mit denen die Presse im Konflikt liegt, erhalten ebenfalls Grundrechte und richten sie gegen die Presse. Diese Gefahr ist rechtsdogmatischer Natur und wird deshalb im Zusammenhang mit der Dogmatik der Grundrechtscharta behandelt¹²⁵. Die zweite Gefahr ist weniger offensichtlich, aber nicht weniger erheblich. Sie wird vorab behandelt, weil zu ihrem Verständnis politikwissenschaftliche Kategorien benötigt werden.

Justitiable Grundrechte haben erhebliche Wirkungen auf das Institutionengefüge in der Gemeinschaft selbst, im Verhältnis zu ihren Mitgliedstaaten und im Innern der Mitgliedstaaten. Sie ändern auf all diesen Ebenen die Opportunity Structures (2). Die Wirkung unterscheidet sich von den Grundrechtskatalogen in nationalen Verfassungen. Denn das Gemeinschaftshandeln ist viel schwächer demokratisch legitimiert (3). Wegen des Prinzips der begrenzten Einzelermächtigung findet europäische Politik außerdem stets in einem Mehrebenensystem statt. Die europäischen Grundrechte erfassen nur einen Teil dieses Systems (4). Sie haben das Potential, die Staatlichkeit der Europäischen Union zu verändern (5).

2. Änderung der Opportunity Structure

Funktional betrachtet verändert ein justitierbarer Grundrechtskatalog die Verfassung der Gemeinschaft. Durch den veränderten institutionellen Rahmen verschieben sich die Bedingungen, unter denen im Verhältnis von Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten (a), im Verhältnis der Mitgliedstaaten zueinander (b), im Verhältnis der Organe der Gemeinschaft zueinander (c) und im Verhältnis zu den politischen Akteuren Politik gemacht wird (d).

a) EU und Mitgliedstaaten

Die verfassungspolitische Diskussion um die Europäische Grundrechtscharta ist von der Sorge um eine Ausweitung der Gemeinschaftskompetenzen beherrscht. Um dieser Besorgnis entgegenzutreten, soll Art. H.1 II den folgenden Satz enthalten:

„Die Charta begründet weder neue Aufgaben oder Zuständigkeiten noch erweitert sie bestehende Aufgaben oder Zuständigkeiten“¹²⁶.

Juristisch wäre diese Klarstellung wohl nicht einmal erforderlich. Der Grundsatz der begrenzten Einzelermächtigung würde durch die Aufnahme eines Grundrechtskatalogs in den EG- oder EU-Vertrag nicht tangiert. Im übrigen verpflichtet Art. 6 II EUV die Gemeinschaft ohnehin auf die Grundrechte¹²⁷.

Gleichwohl wird die Grundrechtscharta unvermeidlich einen unitarischen Effekt haben. Das belegt gerade die Erfahrung des Grundgesetzes. Durch immer dichtere verfassungsrechtliche Standards wird der formal nicht angetastete Kompetenzbereich der Länder zur Gesetzgebung materiell immer weiter ausgehöhlt. Das offensichtlichste Beispiel ist der Rundfunk. Die Rechtsprechung des Bundesverfassungsgerichts zu Art. 5 I 2 GG hat von der Rundfunkgesetzgebungskompetenz der Länder nicht viel übrig gelassen¹²⁸.

Die politischen Effekte der Grundrechtscharta sind weniger eindeutig. Denn sie schaffen nicht nur für die Gemeinschaft ein neues politisches Window of Opportunity¹²⁹, sondern auch für die Mitgliedstaaten, die Unternehmen und die Bürger. Die Folgen für die Staatlichkeit der Europäischen Union werden uns im Anschluß noch näher beschäftigen¹³⁰. Daraus kann der Gemeinschaft ein größeres politisches Gewicht zuwachsen. Wenn der Gerichtshof die Grundrechte offensiv nutzt, gewinnt er ein zusätzliches Instrument zur Überwindung politischer Blockaden, so wie er das in der Vergangenheit schon häufig mit den Grundfreiheiten getan hat. Je nach dem, wie das Initiativrecht ausgestaltet wird, könnte die Kommission eine Entscheidung von Rat und Parlament mit der Begründung vor den Gerichtshof bringen, sie verstoße gegen Gemeinschaftsgrundrechte. Das würde ihr erlauben, den politischen Konflikt mit den Mitgliedstaaten vom Rat in ein Forum zu verlagern, in dem sie sich größere Chancen ausrechnet.

Das Initiativrecht würde aber sicher nicht ausschließlich der Kommission eingeräumt, sondern zumindest auch den Mitgliedstaaten. Logisch wäre es, auch eine Verfassungsbeschwerde von Unternehmen und Bürgern zuzulassen¹³¹. Sonst gäbe es im Grunde keine europäischen Grundrechte, sondern – völkerrechtlich gesprochen – bloß ein europäisches Fremdenrecht. Die Individuen wären nicht selbst geschützt, sondern bräuchten gleichsam Schutzmächte. Politisch ist die Entscheidung über das Initiativrecht bedeutsam, weil es seinen Inhabern die Möglichkeit gibt, der Gemeinschaft mit Hilfe des Gerichtshofs eine andere politische Agenda zu diktieren. Wenn der Gerichtshof mitwirkt, könnten sie auch Formelkompromisse und symbolische Politik frühzeitig entlarven¹³². Die politischen Organe der Gemeinschaft werden solche Klagen antizipieren. Auch ohne daß der Gerichtshof tatsächlich interveniert, wird sich ihr Verhalten folglich ändern.

Sollte die veränderte Opportunity Structure dazu führen, daß die Gemeinschaft eine aktivere Pressepolitik betreibt – soweit sie das nach der Kompetenzordnung überhaupt kann – hätte das voraussichtlich negative Folgen für die Presse. Denn die Gemeinschaft selbst ist bisher ja kaum regulierend tätig geworden¹³³. Auch das Recht der Mitgliedstaaten hat sich relativ stark zurückgehalten. Von einem aktiveren Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber hätte die Presse deshalb kaum eine weitere Liberalisierung der nationalen Rechtslage zu erwarten. Auch das Interesse der Presse an einem europaweiten Level Playing Field dürfte nicht groß sein. Die Pressemärkte sind nach wie vor im wesentlichen national, wenn nicht gar regional oder lokal. Wenn Presseerzeugnisse in anderen Ländern einen namhaften Marktanteil erringen, tun sie das üblicherweise mit adaptierten Ausgaben.

b) Mitgliedstaaten zueinander

Justitiable Grundrechte verändern auch das Verhältnis der Mitgliedstaaten zueinander. Denn die glaubhafte Drohung, einen Akt des Gemeinschaftsgesetzgebers mit Hilfe der europäischen Grundrechte anzugreifen, gibt einem Mitgliedstaat zusätzliche Verhandlungsmacht. Mit diesem Pfund kann er bei den Verhandlungen im Rat wuchern. Er kann aber auch schon im Vorwege auf die Kommission einwirken, um einen Verordnungs- oder Richtlinienentwurf zu verhindern, der seinen Interessen widerspricht. Diese Drohung eignet sich besonders in zwei Konstellationen. Beide Konstellationen sind am Beispiel des Umweltrechts gut untersucht.

In der ersten Konstellation unterscheidet sich das Umweltrecht der Mitgliedstaaten im Schutzniveau. Einige Staaten haben strenge Regeln, andere viel großzügigere. Da besserer Umweltschutz im Normalfall auch teurer ist, legen die hochregulierten Staaten Wert darauf, ihre strengen Regeln durch harmonisiertes europäisches Recht auch den Konkurrenten aus anderen Mitgliedstaaten aufzuerlegen. Lange Zeit war die deutsche Umweltpolitik mit dieser Strategie erfolgreich¹³⁴. Wettbewerbsverzerrungen sind jedoch auch dann möglich, wenn die Mitgliedstaaten sich über das Schutzanliegen und das Schutzniveau im wesentlichen einig sind, traditionell aber ganz unterschiedliche Instrumente einsetzen. Wenn die Gemeinschaft dann das Instrument eines Mitgliedstaats zum europäischen Standard erhebt, erlegt sie allen anderen Mitgliedstaaten Anpassungslasten und damit Wettbewerbsnachteile auf. Diese Erfahrung hat die Bundesrepublik in den vergangenen Jahren immer wieder gemacht. In der europäischen Umweltpolitik hat sich immer stärker das englische Denken durchgesetzt. Beispiele sind das Ökoaudit oder der integrierte Umweltschutz¹³⁵.

Grundrechte eignen sich allerdings auch in Verhandlungen besser, um eine Regelung zu verhindern, als um sie zu erzwingen. Anders ist das nur, wenn aus ihnen Schutz- oder Leistungspflichten abgeleitet werden können¹³⁶, oder wenn ein Mitgliedstaat die grundrechtliche Verhinderungsmacht an der einen Stelle als Pfand einsetzt, um ein aktives Handeln der Gemeinschaft an anderer Stelle zu erzwingen. Die Folgen der Grundrechte für das Verhältnis der Mitgliedstaaten zueinander haben für die niedrig regulierte Presse deshalb geringeres Gewicht als für andere Branchen.

c) Organe in der Europäischen Union

Welche Effekte ein Grundrechtskatalog für die politischen Organe der Gemeinschaft hat, hängt zunächst einmal von der Verteilung des Initiativrechts ab. Werden die Grundrechte in den EG- oder EU-Vertrag aufgenommen, liegt es nahe, daß auch die Kommission, das Parlament und der Rat Grundrechtsverletzungen vor den Gerichtshof bringen können. Eine Klage des Rats gegen eines der anderen Organe ist nach den bisherigen Erfahrungen wenig wahrscheinlich. Spektakuläre Klagen des Parlaments hat es dagegen gegeben, etwa in der Transportpolitik¹³⁷. Auch die Kommission hat sich dieses Instruments immer wieder bedient. Würde das Initiativrecht dagegen den Grundrechtsträgern vorbehalten, wäre der Effekt kleiner. Immerhin könnten das Parlament oder die Kommission in ihren Verhandlungen mit dem Rat aber darauf verweisen, daß eine beabsichtigte Regelung grundrechtswidrig und eine Beschwerde dagegen wahrscheinlich sei.

Vor allem hätten justitiable Grundrechte aber Folgen für die Stellung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs und des Gerichts Erster Instanz im Institutionengefüge der Gemeinschaft. Auf den ersten Blick scheint es offensichtlich, daß die europäischen Gerichte durch diese zusätzliche Kompetenz gestärkt würden. Sieht man näher hin, liegen die Dinge komplizierter. Denn Gemeinschaftsgrundrechte sind dem Grundgedanken nach ja eher gegen die Gemeinschaftspolitik gerichtet. Bislang hat sich der Gerichtshof dagegen eher als Motor der Integration definiert. In seinem Selbstverständnis war er weniger ein Rechtsprechungsorgan als ein politisches Organ. Seine wichtigste Aufgabe sah er darin, institutionelle Blockaden aufzubrechen und so das Zusammenwachsen der Mitgliedstaaten zu einem einheitlichen Europa zu fördern¹³⁸. Zu diesem Selbstverständnis paßt es, daß der Gerichtshof aus den Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten bislang wenig gemacht hat. Auf die hochdifferenzierte Dogmatik des Straßburger Menschenrechtsgerichtshofs¹³⁹ hat er sich nie eingelassen. Man wird den Eindruck nicht los, daß die Grundrechte dem Gerichtshof nach wie vor als „querrelle allemande“ erscheinen, zu denen er nur pflichtschuldig ein paar folgenlose Bemerkungen einstreut. Das muß natürlich nicht auf Dauer so bleiben. Die Aufnahme der Grundrechte in den EG- oder EU-Vertrag könnte eine Signalwirkung haben, der sich schließlich auch der Gerichtshof nicht entziehen kann. Selbst das dogmatisch wenig gehaltvolle Subsidiaritätsprinzip hat den Gerichtshof ja vorsichtiger werden lassen¹⁴⁰. Das Gericht Erster Instanz hat seine Aufgabe von vornherein eher rechtsstaatlich als politisch definiert. Gewiß ist ein solcher Wandel des Selbstverständnisses aber nicht.

Selbst wenn sich der Gerichtshof dazu entschlösse, müßte er die Rückwirkungen der neuen auf die fortbestehenden älteren Aufgaben bedenken. Nach den deutschen Erfahrungen mit der Verfassungsbeschwerde würde der Gerichtshof dann mit so vielen Klagen überschwemmt, daß er ein offenes oder verstecktes Annahmeverfahren einführen müßte. Bislang konnte der Gerichtshof dem Problem ausweichen, weil der EG-Vertrag die Nichtigkeits- oder Untätigkeitsklage von Individuen an relativ enge Voraussetzungen geknüpft hat. Wenn der Gerichtshof künftig immer wieder Rechtsschutz verweigern müßte, würde er auch einen Teil seiner Legitimität verlieren. Das könnte auch Auswirkungen auf andere Aufgaben des Gerichtshofs und auf seine Reputation in der Gemeinschaft und gegenüber den Gemeinschaftsbürgern haben.

d) Politische Akteure

Schließlich geben justitiable Grundrechte den nationalen und europäischen politischen Akteuren neue Wirkungsmöglichkeiten. Das folgt wiederum vor allem aus einem Recht zur Grundrechtsbeschwerde an den EuGH. Denn die Grundrechte geben dem Gerichtshof politisch ja die Möglichkeit, Akte des Gemeinschaftsgesetzgebers aufzuheben, im Wege der grundrechtskonformen Interpretation zu verändern und die politische Agenda der Gemeinschaft umzuschreiben. All das konnte der Gerichtshof unter Berufung auf das Primärrecht schon bislang. Bislang war das Initiativrecht zum Gerichtshof aber eng limitiert. Es bestand oft deshalb die Aussicht, mißliebige Klagen im Vorfeld durch politischen Druck zu verhindern. Bei einer allgemeinen Verfassungsbeschwerde sind die Aussichten dafür gering. Das Initiativrecht ist der politischen Kontrolle praktisch entzogen. Diesen Umstand können politische Akteure nutzen, um sich mit dem Gerichtshof gegen die Mehrheit im Rat, das Parlament, die Kommission oder einzelne Mitgliedstaaten zu verbünden. Man kann es auch so sagen: die Grundrechtsbeschwerde macht den Gerichtshof zu einer subsidiären politischen Arena, in der die Gewichte anders verteilt sind¹⁴¹.

¹⁴¹ Vgl. Héritier Deadlock (FN 123) 20 f.

3. Grundrechte bei schwacher demokratischer Legitimation

Deutsche Beobachter beklagen nicht nur den unzureichenden Grundrechtsschutz, sondern auch die geringe demokratische Legitimation des Gemeinschaftshandelns. Das Bundesverfassungsgericht hat sich diese Sorge im Maastricht-Urteil bekanntlich zu eigen gemacht¹⁴². Durch die Direktwahl des Europäischen Parlaments und die Ausweitung der Kodezision von Rat und Parlament hat das Ausmaß der direkten demokratischen Legitimation zwar zugenommen. Nach wie vor ist die demokratische Legitimation europäischer Normsetzung aber vornehmlich eine indirekte, vermittelt über die nationalen Parlamente und die von ihnen kontrollierten Regierungen.

Hinzu kommt ein politischer Grund. Seit dem Maastrichter Vertrag spricht die EG zwar programmatisch von einer Unionsbürgerschaft¹⁴³. Gleichwohl empfinden sich die Bürger in ihrer großen Mehrheit nach wie vor nur als Angehörige ihrer Mitgliedstaaten. Es gibt bestenfalls Rudimente einer gemeineuropäischen Solidarität. Selbst wo ein formaler Legitimationsstrang bis zu den Völkern der Mitgliedstaaten führt, ist seine Legitimationskraft deshalb gering. Die Bereitschaft, eine Entscheidung allein deshalb zu akzeptieren, weil sie dem Willen der Mehrheit aller Unionsbürger entspricht, ist kaum vorhanden¹⁴⁴.

In einem politischen System mit derart schwacher demokratischer Legitimation wie der Europäischen Gemeinschaft sind die Grundrechte ein viel schneidigeres Instrument als etwa in Deutschland. Dort nimmt das Bundesverfassungsgericht in vielfältiger Weise Rücksicht auf den demokratisch gewählten Gesetzgeber. Es gesteht ihm Beurteilungs- und Prognosespielräume zu, nimmt die Kontrolldichte zurück und gesteht dem Gesetzgeber vor allem viel Freiheit bei der Bestimmung der Ziele zu, um derentwillen er in die Grundrechte der Bürger eingreift¹⁴⁵. Dann werden die Grundrechte ein ziemlich stumpfes Instrument. Ein passendes Ziel läßt sich für fast jeden Grundrechtseingriff finden. Zu solcher Selbstbeschränkung der Grundrechtsdogmatik besteht kein Anlaß, wenn der Gesetzgeber bestenfalls marginal mehr demokratische Legitimation aufbieten kann als der Richter¹⁴⁶. Auch in Europa ist der Rat als das politische Organ allerdings besser als der Gerichtshof im Stande, die normativen Erwartungen der Beteiligten zu erheben und zu bündeln. Wegen der geringen demokratischen Legitimation muß der Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber jedoch vornehmlich mit der Sachangemessenheit der Regeln argumentieren, nicht so sehr mit dem Austarieren der widerstreitenden Kräfte im politischen Prozeß¹⁴⁷. Über die Sachangemessenheit kann sich der Gerichtshof viel eher ein abweichendes Urteil erlauben¹⁴⁸.

4. Grundrechte für ein Mehrebenensystem

Die Europäische Union ist kein Staat. Das folgt vor allem aus dem Grundsatz der begrenzten Einzelmächtigung. Der Amsterdamer Vertrag hat ihn in Art. 5 I EGV erneut bekräftigt. Diese Kompetenzen sind im Normalfall zwar keine ausschließlichen¹⁴⁹. Gleichwohl verlieren die Mitgliedstaaten dadurch ihre Allzuständigkeit. Eine ökonomische Metapher macht die Folgen deutlich. Sie begreift den Staat als einen Anbieter öffentlicher Güter. Durch die Zuständigkeiten der Gemeinschaft verlieren die Staaten ihr Angebotsmonopol. Es kommt zu einem vertikalen Institutionenwettbewerb zwischen Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten¹⁵⁰. Die politischen Wissenschaften sprechen davon, daß politische Entscheidungen nun in einem Mehrebenensystem getroffen werden¹⁵¹.

In solch einem Mehrebenensystem haben Grundrechte eine andere Wirkung als in einem einheitlichen, monopolistischen Staat. Daß politische Akteure sie dazu instrumentalisieren können, politische Konflikte von der einen auf die andere Ebene zu transponieren, haben wir gerade schon gesehen. Auch die Grundrechte selbst sind in einem solchen System aber schwächer. Dem Bürger ist nicht mehr geholfen, wenn er seine Freiheit nur noch auf einer dieser Ebenen durchsetzen kann¹⁵². An die Stelle der einen Verfassung tritt „ein Netzwerk von Verfassungselementen“¹⁵³. Deutlicher formuliert: nicht nur der Nationalstaat verliert sein Monopol, sondern auch die nationalen Grundrechte. Die dogmatischen Folgen werden uns noch beschäftigen¹⁵⁴.

5. Folgen für die Staatlichkeit der Europäischen Union

Die Europäische Union ist ein unfertiges politisches System, dessen Strukturen beständig in Bewegung sind¹⁵⁵. Die Grundrechtscharta, ihrer Aufnahme in den EG- oder EU-Vertrag und die Zuständigkeit des Europäischen Gerichtshofs zur authentischen Interpretation der Grundrechte wären weitere Schritte auf dem Wege zu Staatlichkeit von Europa. Die deutschen Initiatoren¹⁵⁶ und das Europäische Parlament sprechen das auch ganz offen aus¹⁵⁷.

Die Grundrechte werden zugleich die Staatlichkeit Europas aber auch verändern. Die Organe der Gemeinschaft können künftig die politische Agenda nicht mehr unkontrolliert bestimmen¹⁵⁸. Ihre Fähigkeit, Politik unterhalb der Wahrnehmungsschwelle zu machen, wird abnehmen¹⁵⁹. Bedeutsam sind die Veränderungen aber vor allem im Lichte der Unterscheidung von Interessen und Ideen¹⁶⁰. Grundrechte etablieren neue regulative Ideen¹⁶¹. Der Streit um die Grundrechte vor dem Europäischen Gerichtshof schafft neue Gelegenheiten zur Deliberation. Solche Prozesse stärken das Gewicht regulativer Ideen und vermindern die Bedeutung des Abgleichs des widerstreitenden Interessen im politischen Prozeß der Gemeinschaft¹⁶².

Grundrechte haben das Potential, politische Konflikte in rechtliche zu verwandeln. Dann kommt es zu einem juristischen Paralleldiskurs politischer Fragen. Er zieht die teilweise Juridifizierung europäischer Politik nach sich.

Schließlich verschaffen justitiable Grundrechte der Europäischen Gemeinschaft zusätzliche Legitimation. Wiederum hilft ein politikwissenschaftliches Begriffspaar, die Wirkungen präziser zu benennen. Die politischen Wissenschaften unterscheiden zwischen Input- und Output-Legitimation¹⁶³. Input-Legitimation wird vermittelt durch das, was die Juristen eine geschlossene Kette demokratischer Legitimation nennen. Aus den schon erwähnten Gründen steht diese Form der Legitimation dem europäischen Gesetzgeber nur in sehr engen Grenzen zur Verfügung. Output-Legitimation beruht demgegenüber darauf, daß es dem Gesetzgeber gelingt, die Rechtsunterworfenen für seine Entscheidungen zu gewinnen. Dazu trägt die europäische Grundrechtscharta auf mehrfache Weise bei. Die Kontrolle von Entscheidungen des Rats, des Parlaments und der Kommission anhand der Grundrechte macht es für gut organisierte Gruppen schwerer, ihre Interessen durchzusetzen und dabei Verteilungsgewinne zu Lasten der Mehrheit zu erzielen. Die Chance steigt also, daß europäische Gesetzgebung auch wirklich dem europäischen Gemeinwohl dient. Weil das so ist, erhöht sich zugleich die Problemlösungskapazität des Gemeinschaftsrechts¹⁶⁴. Auf mittlere Frist kann vielleicht sogar die europäische Identität gestärkt werden, weil sich die Unionsbürger als Mitglieder einer Rechtsgemeinschaft empfinden, die von gemeinsamen Werten zusammengehalten wird¹⁶⁵. Dann würde mehr Output-Legitimation schließlich zu mehr Input-Legitimation führen.

Zu einem Legitimationsgewinn für die Gemeinschaft führen Grundrechte aber auch deshalb, weil sie den Bürgern Klagerechte verschaffen¹⁶⁶. Schließlich erhöhen die Verfahren vor dem Gerichtshof die Transparenz der Gemeinschaftsgesetzgebung. Auch das verschafft ihr zusätzliche Legitimation.

IV. Normative Folgerungen

Wir haben nun einen Eindruck von vergangenen und möglichen künftigen pressepolitischen Konflikten und von den Effekten europäischer Grundrechte auf die Verfassung der Europäischen Union. Aus beidem können wir nun normative Folgerungen ziehen. Wir müssen dabei noch einmal prognostisch werden und die Dogmatik noch gar nicht beschlossener Grundrechte skizzieren. Das ist aber keine allzu spekulative Tätigkeit. Wir können uns dabei nicht nur auf die schon vorhandenen Textvorschläge stützen, sondern auch auf die Grundrechtsrechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs und vor allem auf die Menschenrechtsrechtsprechung des Straßburger Gerichtshofs. Diese Vorlagen gilt es, in einer geeigneten Weise für die Kontrolle des Gemeinschaftsrechts zu adaptieren. Im Zentrum steht dabei naturgemäß die Dogmatik der Pressefreiheit (1). Die Verlage sind aber auch durch andere Grundrechte geschützt (2). Andere Grundrechtsträger flankieren den Schutz (3). Zugleich sind aber auch Konflikte zwischen der Presse und anderen Grundrechten zu erwarten (4). Schließlich gilt es, das dogmatische Verhältnis der neuen europäischen Grundrechte zu anderem Primärrecht (5) und zu anderen Grundrechtsordnungen auszuloten (6).

1. Dogmatik der Pressefreiheit

Diese Untersuchung erscheint, während die Beratungen in dem Konvent voranschreiten. Der Stand dieser Beratungen ist der Ausgangspunkt für die Überlegungen zur Pressefreiheit (a). Die Pressefreiheit ist aber auch in anderen, für das Gemeinschaftsrecht erheblichen Quellen geschützt (b). Die Dogmatik dieses Grundrechts muß die Adressaten und angreifbaren Akte bestimmen (c), den Grundrechtsträger (d), den sachlichen Schutzbereich (e), das Konzept des Eingriffs (f), die formellen (g) und die materiellen Schranken (h). Dabei wird das vom Straßburger Gerichtshof entwickelte Konzept der Margin of Appreciation Bedeutung erlangen (i). Schließlich fragt sich, ob aus dem Grundrecht auch Schutzpflichten zu entnehmen sind (k).

a) Textvorschläge

In der momentan letzten Fassung des Entwurfs lautet das einschlägige Grundrecht wie folgt:

„Art. 15. Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung
(1) Jede Person hat das Recht auf freie Meinungsäußerung. Dieses Recht schließt die Meinungsfreiheit und die Freiheit ein, Informationen ohne behördliche Eingriffe und ohne Rücksicht auf Staatsgrenzen zu empfangen und weiterzugeben“¹⁶⁷.

Spezifische Schranken sind diesem Grundrecht nicht beigegeben. Die Schranken ergeben sich aus zwei Normen, die einheitlich für alle Rechte gelten sollen:

„Art. H.2 – Einschränkung der gewährleisteten Rechte

(1) Die in den Artikeln ... dieser Charta festgelegten Rechte und Freiheiten dürfen in keiner Weise eingeschränkt werden.

„Art. H.4 – Schutzniveau

Diese Charta darf nicht als Einschränkung der Tragweite der durch das Recht der Union, das Recht der Mitgliedstaaten, das Völkerrecht und die von den Mitgliedstaaten ratifizierten internationalen Übereinkommen, darunter die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention in ihrer Auslegung durch die Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte gewährleisteten Rechte ausgelegt werden“¹⁶⁸.

Zwei deutsche Mitglieder des Konvents haben abweichende Textvorschläge vorlegt. Der Abgeordnete des Deutschen Bundestages Meyer möchte Art. 15 einen neuen Absatz 2 mit folgendem Wortlaut beifügen:

Das Mitglied des Europäischen Parlaments Sylvia Kaufmann schlägt einen Text mit folgendem Wortlaut vor:

„Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit

(1) Jeder Mensch hat das Recht auf freie Meinungsäußerung. Die Pressefreiheit und die Freiheit der Berichterstattung durch Hörfunk, Fernsehen und Film werden gewährleistet.

(2) Diese Rechte schließen die Freiheit ein, sich aus allgemein zugänglichen oder anderen, rechtmäßig erschließbaren Quellen ungehindert zu unterrichten.

(3) Diese Rechte finden ihre Schranken in den gesetzlichen Bestimmungen zum Schutz der Jugend, zur Wahrung der Würde der Frau und in den Persönlichkeitsrechten des Einzelnen.

(4) Kriegspropaganda ist verboten. Jedes Eintreten für nationalen und religiösen Haß sowie nationalistische, rassistische, faschistische, antisemitische, sexistische Propaganda sind verboten“¹⁷⁰.

b) Andere Quellen

Der Gerichtshof hat mehrfach ausgesprochen, daß die Meinungs-, Presse- und Informationsfreiheit zu den ungeschriebenen Grundrechten des Gemeinschaftsrechts gehören¹⁷¹. Art. 10 EMRK schützt die Äußerungs-, Empfangs- und Informationsfreiheit¹⁷². Eine Entscheidung des Straßburger Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte hat vor kurzem die Bedeutung der Menschenrechtskonvention für das Handeln der Europäischen Gemeinschaft sogar noch vermehrt. Die Gemeinschaft hat sich nicht nur in Art. 6 II EGV autonom verpflichtet, die Rechte der Menschenrechtskonvention zu achten. Vielmehr hat der Straßburger Gerichtshof auch entschieden:

„The Court observes that acts of the EC as such cannot be challenged before the Court because the EC is not a Contracting Party. The Convention does not exclude the transfer of competencies to international organisations provided that Convention rights continue to be ‘secured’. Member States’ responsibility therefore continues even after such a transfer”¹⁷³.

Auch der Verfassungsvergleich belegt, daß die Meinungsfreiheit¹⁷⁴, die Medienfreiheiten¹⁷⁵ und insbesondere die Pressefreiheit in all den Mitgliedstaaten geschützt sind, die überhaupt entwickelte Grundrechtskataloge haben¹⁷⁶.

c) Adressaten und angreifbare Akte

Wie erwähnt will die Grundrechtscharta ausdrücklich klarstellen, daß sie keinen Prüfungsmaßstab für das autonome Handeln der Mitgliedstaaten darstellt¹⁷⁷. Entscheidend ist deshalb nicht die Bestimmung der Adressaten; dazu werden nicht nur die Organe der Gemeinschaft gehören, sondern auch die Mitgliedstaaten. Entscheidend ist vielmehr, welche Hoheitsakte angegriffen werden können. Das muß davon abhängen, ob das hoheitliche Handeln jedenfalls auch der Europäischen Gemeinschaft zugerechnet werden kann. Das ist nicht nur im Bereich der ausschließlichen, sondern auch der konkurrierenden Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft möglich¹⁷⁸. Insbesondere gehört auch die Anwendung und der Vollzug von Verordnungen und Entscheidungen der Gemeinschaft durch die Mitgliedstaaten hierher¹⁷⁹. Das entspricht der bisherigen Grundrechtsrechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs¹⁸⁰. Ebenso liegt es an sich, wenn Richtlinien nach Ablauf der Umsetzungsfrist unmittelbar anwendbar werden¹⁸¹. Dieser Fall kann allerdings nicht leicht praktisch werden, weil der Europäische Gerichtshof die horizontale Drittwirkung von Grundrechten ja gerade ausschließt¹⁸².

Im übrigen liegt es schwieriger, weil die Richtlinie den Mitgliedstaaten ja einen Freiraum zur Umsetzung läßt¹⁸³. Bei der Lösung sind die Eigenheiten von Grundrechten in einem Mehrebenensystem zu beachten¹⁸⁴. Wollte man allein den Umsetzungsakt der Mitgliedstaaten an ihren jeweiligen Grundrechtsordnungen messen, entstünde eine doppelte Schutzlücke. Zum einen könnte der nationale Gesetzgeber einwenden, er habe seine eigene Entscheidung im wesentlichen gar nicht zu verantworten. Er habe ja nur der Umsetzungspflicht des Gemeinschaftsrechts gehorcht. Selbst wenn das nationale Verfassungsrecht diesen Einwand nicht gelten ließe, würden auf die Richtlinie aber allein die Maßstäbe der nationalen Grundrechte angewendet. Sie unterscheiden sich von Mitgliedstaat zu Mitgliedstaat. Die Kommission erhielte einen Anreiz, von der Verordnung zur Richtlinie überzugehen und so die europäischen Grundrechte stumpf zu machen.

Die eleganteste Lösung liegt im Prozeßrecht. Sie würde den Unionsbürgern erlauben, gegen die Richtlinie Grundrechtsbeschwerde zum Europäischen Gerichtshof zu erheben, obwohl sie davon gar nicht selbst und unmittelbar betroffen sind. Sind solche Beschwerden bereits vor Ablauf der Umsetzungsfrist zulässig, könnte der EuGH sie allerdings nutzen, um den Umsetzungsfreiraum der Mitgliedstaaten einzuschränken. Will man das vermeiden, müßte vorgeschrieben werden, daß die Grundrechtsbeschwerde an den EuGH erst nach Ablauf der Umsetzungsfrist zulässig ist. Dieselben Grundsätze passen auch für die Grundrechtskontrolle von Entscheidungen der Gemeinschaft, die nicht an Individuen adressiert sind, sondern an die Mitgliedstaaten.

Noch etwas schwieriger wird es, wenn sich die Kommission darauf beschränkt, die Anwendung des Gemeinschaftsrechts in den Mitgliedstaaten durch Leitlinien zu lenken. So möchte sie künftig insbesondere mit dem Kartellverbot verfahren¹⁸⁵. Im deutschen Rechtsraum bestünde kein Zweifel, daß Rechtsschutz gegen solche allgemeinen Verwaltungsvorschriften ausgeschlossen ist. Er könnte sich nur gegen deren Anwendung im Einzelfall richten. Im Verhältnis zwischen Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten würde das aber zu denselben Schutzlücken führen, die wir gerade für die Richtlinie herausgearbeitet haben. Nur die prozeßrechtliche Bewältigung ist schwieriger. Denn die Leitlinien sind ja nicht nur im Verhältnis zu den Bürgern unverbindlich, sondern auch im Verhältnis zu den Mitgliedstaaten. Trotzdem dürfte die bessere Lösung auch hier in der Eröffnung der Grundrechtsbeschwerde gegen die Leitlinien an den EuGH bestehen. Denn nur die Leitlinien können ja der Gemeinschaft zugerechnet werden, nicht die einzelnen Kartellrechtsentscheidungen in den Mitgliedstaaten.

Mit dem Gedanken der Zurechnung gelingt es auch, eine weitere Konstellation abzugrenzen. Verordnungen und Richtlinien der Gemeinschaft verweisen für Detailfragen manchmal auf das Recht der Mitgliedstaaten. So war das etwa bei der Richtlinie über die Durchführung von Maßnahmen zur Verbesserung der Sicherheit und des Gesundheitsschutzes der Arbeitnehmer bei der Arbeit, die auch für die Presse gilt¹⁸⁶. Insoweit übernimmt die Gemeinschaft gerade keine Verantwortung für den Inhalt der Regeln. Sie können deshalb ausschließlich an den Grundrechten der Mitgliedstaaten gemessen werden.

d) Träger

Nach den Entwürfen des Präsidiums bestimmen die einzelnen europäischen Grundrechte jeweils, welchen Personen sie zustehen. Während die politischen Rechte jeweils nur den Unionsbürgern zustehen sollen¹⁸⁷, sind die Freiheitsrechte als Jedermann-Rechte ausgestaltet. Das gilt nach der Entwurfsfassung auch für die Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung¹⁸⁸. Geschützt sind deshalb auch Anbieter aus Drittstaaten.

Die bisherigen Entwürfe sprechen nicht ausdrücklich aus, daß die europäischen Grundrechte auch juristische Personen schützen. Dies entspricht aber der bisherigen Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs zu den ungeschriebenen Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten¹⁸⁹ und der Rechtsprechung der Straßburger Organe¹⁹⁰.

e) Sachlicher Schutzbereich

Der Entwurf des Präsidiums sieht eine allgemeine Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit vor¹⁹¹. Die Entwürfe der Abgeordneten Meyer und Kaufmann wollen dagegen der deutschen Tradition folgen und daneben die Pressefreiheit ausdrücklich schützen¹⁹². Beide Lösungen lassen sich vertreten, wenn sichergestellt ist, daß die Pressefreiheit umfassend geschützt ist und das Schutzniveau nicht hinter die Tradition der Verfassungen der Mitgliedstaaten zurückfällt. verschiedenen Medien führen unvermeidlich zu Abgrenzungsstreitigkeiten; davon legt das deutsche Verfassungsrecht beredtes Zeugnis ab¹⁹³. Die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention hat mit einer einheitlichen Meinungsfreiheit nicht unbedingt schlechte Erfahrungen gemacht¹⁹⁴. Andererseits drängen die Rundfunkveranstalter, wie man hört, mit Macht auf eine separate Garantie der Rundfunkfreiheit. Dann wäre es in der Tat nicht hinnehmbar, wenn die Pressefreiheit nicht auch ausdrücklich garantiert würde. Sonst könnte schließlich sogar das Mißverständnis entstehen, nur der Rundfunk, nicht die Presse verdiene besonderen Schutz. Eine vermittelnde Lösung könnte darin bestehen, neben der allgemeinen Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung die Freiheit eigens zu erwähnen, Medien zu veranstalten. Das wäre vor allem als Fingerzeig für die Interpretation der Freiheit sinnvoll: wegen ihrer fundamentalen Bedeutung für ein demokratisches Gemeinwesen brauchen und verdienen die Medien stärkeren Schutz¹⁹⁵.

In den nationalen Grundrechtsordnungen war immer wieder umstritten, ob sich der Schutz der Pressefreiheit auch auf rein kommerzielle Inhalte und auf die finanziellen Grundlagen der Presse erstreckt¹⁹⁶. Die Rechtsprechung des Straßburger Menschenrechtsgerichtshofs tendiert in diese Richtung¹⁹⁷. Wenn der europäische Grundrechtskatalog die Form des gegenwärtigen Entwurfs behält, besteht an der Einbeziehung der finanziellen Grundlagen in den Schutzbereich der Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit erheblicher Bedarf. Denn die Berufsfreiheit soll nach den augenblicklichen Vorstellungen des Präsidiums nicht als Freiheitsrecht, sondern als bloßes soziales Recht geschützt werden¹⁹⁸. Auch wenn sich das noch ändern sollte, dürfte die Meinungsfreiheit auf höherem Niveau geschützt sein als die Berufsfreiheit. Ohne das ökonomische Substrat kann die Presse ihre publizistische Funktion nicht erfüllen¹⁹⁹. Aus diesem Grunde ist es angemessen, auch ihre ökonomischen Grundlagen auf höherem Niveau zu schützen als bei anderen Branchen. Das ist am ehesten gesichert, wenn auch das ökonomische Substrat in den Schutzbereich der Meinungsfreiheit fällt. Dazu gehört nicht nur der Absatz von Werbeflächen, sondern auch der Vertrieb an die Leser. Geschützt ist schließlich auch die zur Herstellung und Vertrieb erforderliche Technik²⁰⁰. Je stärker Presse elektronisch verbreitet wird, desto bedeutsamer wird das werden.

f) Eingriff

Im deutschen Verfassungsrecht ranken sich um das Konzept des Grundrechtseingriffs immer kompliziertere Überlegungen²⁰¹. Auch der Straßburger Menschenrechtsgerichtshof hat der Versuchung nicht ganz widerstanden²⁰². Sie verneinen einen Eingriff in die Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit etwa dann, wenn der Verleger die gleiche publizistische Wirkung auch auf einem anderen zumutbaren Wege erreichen kann²⁰³. In seinem Kern dient das dogmatische Konzept des Grundrechtseingriffs dazu, dem Staat und insbesondere dem Gesetzgeber im sachlichen Anwendungsbereich der Grundrechte einen Freiraum zu verschaffen, der nicht vom Verhältnismäßigkeitsgrundsatz kontrolliert ist. Das ist schon im Verfassungsrecht ein problematisches Unterfangen. Vor allem paßt dieses Anliegen aber nicht gegenüber einem Gesetzgeber, dem die demokratische Legitimation weitgehend abgeht²⁰⁴.

Praktische Bedeutung hat für die Presse vor allem die Figur des mittelbaren Eingriffs. Sie wird etwa gebraucht zur Abwehr von wettbewerbsverzerrenden Subventionen²⁰⁵. Auch staatliche Maßnahmen, die den Redakteuren eine Schere in den Kopf setzen, erfaßt man am besten als mittelbaren Eingriff²⁰⁶.

g) Formelle Schranken

Art. H.2 II 1 aus dem Entwurf des Präsidiums der Konvention lehnt sich an eine Formulierung an, die die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention verwendet. „Jedwede Einschränkung der in dieser Charta gewährleisteten Rechte und Pflichten ist vom Gesetzgeber vorzusehen“. Aus dieser Formulierung haben die Straßburger Organe die formellen Schranken der Menschenrechte entwickelt²⁰⁷. Manche Maßstäbe des Straßburger Gerichtshofs lassen sich ohne weiteres auf die Europäische Grundrechtscharta übertragen. Auch im Gemeinschaftsrecht muß die Norm ausreichend zugänglich sein, auf die eine hoheitliche Intervention gestützt ist²⁰⁸. Da die Gemeinschaft ihr Recht nur ausnahmsweise durch eigene Organe vollzieht, hat das vor allem für den Vollzug durch die Mitgliedstaaten Bedeutung. Angesichts der großzügigen Veröffentlichungspraxis der Gemeinschaft wird daraus aber auch nur selten ein Problem entstehen. Übertragen läßt sich auch ein zweites Erfordernis, das der Straßburger Gerichtshof aus dem Erfordernis „vom Gesetz vorgesehen“ ableitet: der Eingriff muß für den Betroffenen ausreichend vorhersehbar gewesen sein²⁰⁹. In seiner späteren Rechtsprechung hat der Straßburger Gerichtshof das zu einem differenzierten Bestimmtheitsgrundsatz ausgestaltet²¹⁰.

Schwerer fällt die Übertragung bei den beiden anderen Folgerungen, die der Straßburger Gerichtshof aus dem Tatbestandsmerkmal gezogen hat. Zunächst rankt sich eine differenzierte Rechtsprechung um die Frage, was denn im Sinne der Konvention überhaupt als „Gesetz“ anzusehen sei. Der Straßburger Gerichtshof sieht sich zu einem Eiertanz genötigt, damit er das englische Common Law nicht in Bausch und Bogen verwerfen muß²¹¹. Gegenüber dem Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber besteht kein Anlaß zu solcher Zurückhaltung. Nach dem EG-Vertrag kann er nur durch Verordnung, mittelbar auch durch Richtlinie oder staatterichtete Entscheidung tätig werden. Greift er in anderen Formen oder auf anderer Grundlage in die grundrechtlich geschützte Sphäre ein, ist das mit den formellen Grundrechtsschranken nicht zu vereinbaren.

Schließlich folgern die Straßburger Organe aus dem Tatbestandsmerkmal „vom Gesetz vorgesehen“, daß die nationalen Stellen das anwendbare Recht nicht offensichtlich falsch angewendet haben dürfen²¹². An sich sind die Straßburger Organe dabei sehr zurückhaltend²¹³. Durch diese Zurückhaltung verhindert der Straßburger Gerichtshof, daß er in die Rolle einer Superrevisionsinstanz für alle Rechtsordnungen der Mitgliedstaaten gedrängt wird. Das Bundesverfassungsgericht faßt die formellen Grundrechtsschranken bekanntlich deutlich strenger. Besonders klar läßt sich das an der Rechtsprechung ablesen, die aus Art. 2 I GG ein Allgemeines Freiheitsrecht ableitet²¹⁴. Solch ein allgemeines Recht hat unvermeidlich auch sehr weite materielle Schranken. Seine praktische Wirkung besteht deshalb vor allem darin, Verletzungen objektiven Verfassungsrechts zu subjektivieren, also der Verfassungsbeschwerde zugänglich zu machen.

Diese Entscheidung ist schon unter dem Grundgesetz richtig. Im Gemeinschaftsrecht ist sie noch besser begründet. Da der Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber nur so schwach demokratisch legitimiert ist²¹⁵, besteht auch kein Grund zu seiner Schonung. Im Gegenteil wird die Gemeinschaft als Rechtsgemeinschaft gestärkt und gewinnt zusätzliche Legitimität, wenn auch die Bürger Kompetenzüberschreitungen vor den Gerichtshof bringen können. Wegen der fundamentalen Bedeutung der Pressefreiheit für ein demokratisches Gemeinwesen gilt das erst recht für Grundrechtsbeschwerden der Verlage. Die formellen Grundrechtsschranken werden dadurch zu dem dogmatischen Instrument, um den Grundsatz der begrenzten Einzelermächtigung und das Subsidiaritätsprinzip als Maßstäbe des Grundrechtsschutzes zu etablieren.

h) Materielle Schranken

Der Entwurf des Präsidiums geht für die materiellen Grundrechtsschranken einen scheinbar eleganten, im Ergebnis aber wenig ratsamen Weg. Art. H.2 II 2 stellt zunächst alle Freiheitsrechte einheitlich unter die Garantie von Wesensgehalt und Verhältnismäßigkeit und lehnt sich dabei an eine Formulierung an, die sich vielfach in der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention findet. Die Gemeinschaft ist auf die Maßnahmen beschränkt, „die für den Schutz legitimer Interessen in einer demokratischen Gesellschaft erforderlich sind“²¹⁶. Art. H.2 II 3 erstreckt überdies die Schranken der parallelen Rechte aus der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention. Art. H.4 legt überdies fest, daß keine Vorschrift der Grundrechtscharta als Beschränkung des Schutzes interpretiert werden darf, den internationale Übereinkommen und insbesondere die Menschenrechtskonvention vermitteln.

²¹⁶ Der volle Wortlaut der Vorschrift findet sich oben a).

Für allgemeine Schranken scheint zu sprechen, daß die Straßburger Organe die materiellen Schranken der Menschenrechte in ihrer Rechtsprechung trotz unterschiedlichem Wortlaut immer stärker aneinander angenähert haben²¹⁷. Sieht man näher hin, führt der Vorschlag allerdings in einen dogmatischen Irrgarten. Schon nach ihrem Wortlaut sind die Grundrechte der Charta und die parallelen Menschenrechte nicht vollständig identisch. So läßt der Entwurf des Präsidiums etwa – in der Sache ganz zu Recht – die verwirrende Rundfunkklausel aus Art. 10 I 3 EMRK weg²¹⁸. Sobald die Auslegung der Grundrechtscharta einem europäischen Gericht überantwortet wird, werden sich selbst bei gleichem Wortlaut Unterschiede ergeben. Die Regelungstechnik des Entwurfs ist deshalb die Einladung an jeden findigen Anwalt, auf dem Klavier des doppelten Geltungsgrunds bzw. wegen Art. H.2 II 3 der doppelten Schranken zu spielen. Ganz läßt sich das ohnehin nicht verhindern. Wenn aber allein die Menschenrechtskonvention benannte Schranken kennt, wird es in nahezu jedem praktischen Fall zur doppelten Grund- und Menschenrechtsprüfung kommen. Stimmt die Umschreibung des Schutzbereichs eines Rechts in der Menschenrechtskonvention und in der Charta nicht vollständig überein, kann es überdies zu Qualifikationsstreitigkeiten kommen. Das ist auch dann zu bedenken, wenn die Pressefreiheit separat geschützt würde. Denn die Menschenrechtskonvention enthält, wie erwähnt, nur eine allgemeine Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit. Das Problem würde sich aber wohl relativ einfach lösen lassen, indem man die Pressefreiheit der Europäischen Gemeinschaft als einen Teil der Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit im Sinne von Art. 10 EMRK begreift. Dann hätte Art. H.2 II 3 zur Folge, daß der Katalog legitimer Ziele aus Art. 10 II EMRK auch für die Pressefreiheit des Gemeinschaftsrechts gilt.

Wichtiger als dieser rechtstechnische ist aber ein materieller Grund. Die praktische Bedeutung des Verhältnismäßigkeitsgrundsatzes steht und fällt mit der Definition des legitimen Ziels. Wenn die Grundrechtsdogmatik dem Gesetzgeber hier Freiheiten einräumt, ist das Verhältnismäßigkeitsprinzip wenig mehr als ein rhetorisches Exerzitium. Ein geeignetes Ziel läßt sich praktisch jeder staatlichen Intervention unterlegen. Das ist schon unter dem Grundgesetz ein Problem von Gewicht. Dort mag man gewisse Freiheiten des Gesetzgebers aber wenigstens noch mit seiner direkten demokratischen Legitimation rechtfertigen. Daran fehlt es, wie mehrfach erwähnt, beim Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber im wesentlichen²¹⁹. Output-Legitimation für Entscheidungen des Gemeinschaftsgesetzgebers verschaffen allein benannte Grundrechtsschranken.

Aus dem rechtstechnischen und dem verfassungspolitischen Grunde sollte sich die Gemeinschaft deshalb an den benannten Schranken orientieren, die in der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention enthalten sind. Das würde der Grundrechtsanwendung auch bei der Konkretisierung helfen. Im Zweifel und solange der Europäische Gerichtshof keine abweichenden Maßstäbe entwickelt hat, könnte die Praxis sich an der differenzierten Rechtssprechung der Straßburger Organe orientieren²²⁰. Einen weiteren Orientierungspunkt könnten vielleicht auch die „zwingenden Erfordernisse“ bilden, die der Europäische Gerichtshof der Warenverkehrs- und der Dienstleistungsfreiheit entnommen hat²²¹.

Ein weiteres Problem des deutschen Verfassungsrechts ist in der Europäischen Gemeinschaft dagegen gelöst. Die Unbestimmtheit des legitimen Ziels verkürzt den Grundrechtsschutz in Deutschland deshalb zusätzlich, weil der Gesetzgeber nicht gezwungen ist, die Absichten zu definieren, die er mit seiner Intervention verfolgt²²². Art. 253 EGV verpflichtet den europäischen Gesetzgeber dagegen, seine Entscheidungen mit Gründen zu versehen. Tatsächlich sind Richtlinien und Verordnungen regelmäßig auch ausführliche Begründungen vorangestellt. An den Zielen, die der Gesetzgeber dort festlegt, muß er sich dann auch bei der Grundrechtsprüfung festhalten lassen. Ein wohlgesonnener Richter kann deshalb nicht nachträglich ein passendes Ziel unterschieben.

Bei der Bestimmung der legitimen Ziele sind schließlich die Besonderheiten von Grundrechten im Mehrebenenystem zu beachten²²³. Der bloße Wille zur Harmonisierung kann als Rechtfertigungsgrund nicht genügen²²⁴. Das wäre nämlich ein inhaltsleeres Ziel. Jede beliebige Intervention führt zu einem Level Playing Field. Auch die Sachentscheidung des europäischen Gesetzgebers muß deshalb mit dem einschlägigen Grundrecht zu vereinbaren sein. Noch weniger kann genügen, daß ein Kompromiß im Rat oder mit dem Parlament nur durch das Schnüren eines Pakets zu erzielen war. Die Grundrechte sollen ja gerade davor schützen, daß ihre Träger im politischen Prozeß unter die Räder geraten. Das Problem reicht aber noch tiefer. In der normativen ökonomischen Diskussion gilt seit langem nicht mehr als ausgemacht, daß ein Wettbewerb der Institutionen zwischen den Mitgliedstaaten von Nachteil ist²²⁵. Eine Grundrechtscharta verrechtlicht auch diese Frage. Der Institutionenwettbewerb wird künftig vor den Schranken des zuständigen europäischen Gerichts verhandelt werden müssen.

All das hat für die Presse besondere Bedeutung. Denn in den Mitgliedstaaten ist Pressepolitik zugleich immer auch Verfassungspolitik. Es läßt sich abstrakt nicht bestreiten, daß aus Unterschieden in der Verfassungspolitik der Mitgliedstaaten Handelshindernisse für einen ungehinderten europäischen Pressemarkt entstehen können. Es ist aber mehr als fraglich, ob daraus eine europäische Harmonisierung der nationalen Verfassungspolitiken abgeleitet werden dürfte. Denn den Mitgliedstaaten würde auf diese Weise ja nicht nur ein einzelnes politisches Instrument aus der Hand geschlagen, sondern sie würden zu einer Änderung ihres inneren politischen Systems gezwungen. Damit wäre die Grenze des Art. 6 III EUV überschritten. Diese Vorschrift verpflichtet die Gemeinschaft, die nationale Identität der Mitgliedstaaten zu achten. Einstweilen dürfte sich die Bewertung auch nicht mit Blick auf die Teile der Politik ändern, die in Europa gemacht werden. Richtig ist zwar, daß die Presse auch für das Verhältnis zwischen europäischen Organen und Unionsbürgern die Funktion eines Intermediärs wahrnimmt. Bisläng ist eine genuin europäische Presse aber nicht entstanden. Vielmehr wird auch diese Intermediationsaufgabe von der jeweiligen nationalen Presse wahrgenommen. Das entspricht der Erkenntnis, daß die Völker der Mitgliedstaaten noch nicht zu einem europäischen Volk mit einer einheitlichen Identität verwachsen sind²²⁶.

²²² In jüngeren Gesetzen tut er das allerdings zunehmend freiwillig, s. etwa § 1 TKG oder § 1 KrWAbfG.

i) Schutzniveau

Grundrechtsschutz ist eine Frage von Grad und Maß. Überziehen die Gerichte, findet Gesetzgebung und Verwaltung schließlich nur noch vor ihren Schranken statt. Wiederum hat dieses Anliegen allerdings gegenüber dem europäischen Gesetzgeber weniger Gewicht als gegenüber den nationalen Gesetzgebern. Da er nur ganz schwach demokratisch legitimiert ist, darf, ja muß der Grundrechtsschutz strikter ausgestaltet werden²²⁷. Der Straßburger Gerichtshof hat für diese Aufgabe ein elegantes dogmatisches Instrument entwickelt, die Margin of Appreciation²²⁸. Art. H.2 II 2 des Präsidiumsentwurfs der Grundrechtscharta bezieht sich ausdrücklich auf diese Rechtsprechung. Denn die Vorschrift schließt mit dem Tatbestandsmerkmal „in einer demokratischen Gesellschaft erforderlich“. Genau daraus hat der Straßburger Gerichtshof seine Doktrin entwickelt.

Die Margin of Appreciation leistet noch mehr. Sie nimmt all die Topoi auf, mit deren Hilfe das Schutzniveau eines Grundrechts differenziert werden kann. Das nutzen die Straßburger Organe etwa, um kommerziellen Äußerungen geringeren Schutz zu gewähren als ideellen²²⁹. Umgekehrt sind die Medien um so stärker geschützt, je mehr zugleich auch ihre demokratische Aufgabe der Vermittlung zwischen Staat und Gesellschaft beeinträchtigt oder gefährdet wird²³⁰.

Das Konzept der Margin of Appreciation erlaubt außerdem, das Schutzniveau nach Maßgabe der jeweiligen kulturellen Prägung und Regulierungstradition zu differenzieren²³¹. Für die Gemeinschaftsgrundrechte hat das scheinbar kaum eine Bedeutung. Denn für das autonome Handeln der Mitgliedstaaten sollen sie ja ohnehin nicht gelten. Die nationale Differenzierung des Schutzniveaus hilft aber einmal zur Rechtfertigung von Unterschieden beim Vollzug von Gemeinschaftsrecht durch die Mitgliedstaaten. Auch eine europäische Grundrechtscharta würde die Gemeinschaft also nicht dazu zwingen, den Vollzug ihres Rechts rigoros zu vereinheitlichen. Vor allem liefert die regionale Differenzierung des Schutzniveaus aber die Rechtfertigung dafür, daß die Gemeinschaft den Mitgliedstaaten Regelungsspielräume beläßt oder im Bereich ihrer ausschließlichen Zuständigkeit erst eröffnet.

Schließlich hilft die Margin of Appreciation noch zur Bewältigung eines letzten Problems. Allen Lippenbekenntnissen in den Entscheidungen des Europäischen Gerichtshofs zum Trotz spielen die Grundrechte als Grenze für den Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber bisher praktisch keine Rolle. Eine rechtlich verbindliche und gerichtlich durchsetzbare Grundrechtscharta verlangt den Gemeinschaftsorganen deswegen eine erhebliche Veränderung ihres Verhaltens und ihrer Mentalität ab. Das wird nicht von heute auf morgen zu bewerkstelligen sein. Gegenüber den Mitgliedstaaten der Menschenrechtskonvention hat der Straßburger Gerichtshof die Margin of Appreciation deshalb als Hilfsmittel genutzt, um den Grundrechtsstandard nicht abrupt, sondern schrittweise anzuheben²³². Gegenüber den Gemeinschaftsorganen hat dieses Anliegen allerdings geringeres Gewicht als gegenüber den Mitgliedstaaten der Menschenrechtskonvention. Wegen der geringen demokratischen Legitimation des europäischen Gesetzgebers geht es im wesentlichen nur um ein pragmatisches Problem. Wenn der Europäische Gerichtshof bei der Anwendung der Grundrechtscharta zu forsich vorangeht, provoziert er vielleicht Widerstand oder riskiert gar, daß der Rechtsschutz bei der nächsten Vertragsänderung wieder eingeschränkt wird.

j) Umgehungsschutz

Solche Vorsicht ist auch deshalb angeraten, weil die politischen Organe der Gemeinschaft sonst einen Anreiz erhalten, den neuen Grundrechtsschutz zu umgehen. Dazu gibt es viele Möglichkeiten. Wo das zulässig ist, können sie von der Verordnung zur Richtlinie übergehen und die grundrechtlich problematischen Entscheidungen den Mitgliedstaaten überlassen. Je geringer der Grundrechtsschutz in einem Mitgliedstaat ausgestaltet ist, desto größere Freiräume entstehen dadurch. Die Gemeinschaft könnte schließlich Politiken sogar ganz offen renationalisieren. Die zweite Ausweichstrategie setzt an den Handlungsformen an. Die Gemeinschaft kann sich darauf beschränken, rechtlich unverbindliche Guidelines zu veröffentlichen²³³. Sie kann bloß noch mit Regulierung drohen und darauf setzen, daß die Verbände ausgehandelte Regeln in ihrem Inneren durchsetzen²³⁴. Sie kann sich auch, wie beim Ökoadit oder beim Datenschutzaudit, darauf beschränken, die Unternehmen zur Selbstkontrolle anzuhalten.

Für solch einen Wechsel der Handlungsform gibt es natürlich nicht nur strategische Gründe. Auch die nationalen Grundrechtsordnungen haben noch keine wirklich befriedigenden Lösungen für den Grundrechtsschutz solcher bloß vom Staat veranlaßter gesellschaftlicher Macht gefunden. Würde sich der Grundrechtsschutz allein auf die staatliche Einwirkungshandlung erstrecken, wäre er weitgehend wirkungslos. Oft fehlt es sogar an förmlichem staatlichen Handeln. Der Staat beschränkt sich auf eine Politik der hochgezogenen Augenbraue. Auch wo er seine Versprechungen oder Drohungen formalisiert, liefe ein Grundrechtsschutz aus justizpolitischen Gründen weitgehend leer, der sich allein hierauf erstreckt. Denn er bringt das zur Grundrechtsanwendung berufene Gericht in eine unmögliche Lage. Es steht vor einer Alles oder Nichts – Entscheidung. Es muß die staatliche Einwirkung entweder passieren lassen oder dem Staat sein Lock- oder Drohmittel ganz aus der Hand schlagen.

An dieser Stelle kann die Grundrechtsdogmatik nicht stehen bleiben. Sie müßte dann zusehen, wie aus der durch Grundrechte kontrollierten staatlichen Macht vom Staat veranlaßte, durch Grundrechte aber nicht mehr kontrollierte gesellschaftliche Macht wird. Theoretisch ist Abhilfe auf drei Wegen möglich. Auf dem ersten Weg würde auch die vom Staat veranlaßte gesellschaftliche Macht für die Zwecke der Grundrechtsanwendung dem Staat zugerechnet. Dann würden die Grundrechte die Trennung zwischen Staat und Gesellschaft in diesen Fällen aber aufheben. Der zweite Weg ist ein Klassiker der Grundrechtsdiskussion: die Drittwirkung der Grundrechte. Auch das vom Staat veranlaßte gesellschaftliche Handeln wird in dieser Vorstellung nicht zu staatlichem. Es werden nur die für den Staat geltenden Maßstäbe hierauf erstreckt. Derselbe Gedanke liegt auch dem Verwaltungsprivatrecht zugrunde. Die Grundrechtsdiskussion der vergangenen Jahrzehnte war gegenüber der Drittwirkungslehre aber zurecht zurückhaltend. Sie macht zwar nicht dogmatisch, wohl aber funktionell gesellschaftliches wieder zu staatlichem Handeln. Auch dann, wenn gesellschaftliche Macht nicht aus der Gesellschaft heraus entsteht, sondern auf staatliche Veranlassung, sind Schutzpflichten deshalb die angemessene Lösung. Das gesellschaftliche Verhalten kommt nicht direkt in den Geltungsbereich der Grundrechte. Die Grundrechte verpflichten den Staat aber, dem Mißbrauch gesellschaftlicher Macht nicht einfach zuzusehen. Das gilt in besonderem Maße, wenn er, wie in den hier betrachteten Fällen, selbst erst für die Entstehung der gesellschaftlichen Macht gesorgt hat.

k) Schutzpflichten

Den deutschen Grundrechten entnimmt das Bundesverfassungsgericht seit langem Schutzpflichten²³⁵. Auch der Straßburger Gerichtshof geht so vor²³⁶. Dazu hat er insbesondere das Recht aus Art. 8 I EMRK auf Achtung des Privatlebens genutzt²³⁷. Art. 12 des Präsidiumsentswurfs der Grundrechtcharta enthält eine Norm, die sich eng an Art. 8 I EMRK anlehnt²³⁸. Es liegt nahe, daß der Europäische Gerichtshof an diese Tradition anknüpft, wenn ihm die Anwendung europäischer Grundrechte übertragen wird²³⁹.

In ein Mehrebenensystem sind Schutzpflichten allerdings schwerer zu integrieren als Abwehrrechte²⁴⁰. Zunächst sind auch hier die Zurechnungsregeln zu beachten²⁴¹. Folgt aus den gemeinschaftlichen Grundrechten eine Pflicht zur Gesetzgebung, ist sie von den Organen der Gemeinschaft zu erfüllen, nicht von den Mitgliedstaaten. Eine gemeinschaftsrechtliche Schutzpflicht der Mitgliedstaaten kommt nur dann in Betracht, wenn sie gerade durch den Vollzug des Gemeinschaftsrechts zu erfüllen ist. Dazu könnte es insbesondere kommen, wenn die Gemeinschaft den Vollzug ihres Kartellrechts wirklich weitgehend den Mitgliedstaaten überträgt²⁴².

Gewichtiger ist die zweite Besonderheit. Sie wird im Vergleich zu einem föderalen Staat deutlich. Nehmen wir an, daß die Bundesverfassung Grundrechte enthält, die für den gesamten Staat gelten. Entnimmt das Verfassungsgericht diesen Grundrechten eine Schutzpflicht, ändert das nichts an der föderalen Kompetenzverteilung. Fällt der Gegenstand in die Gesetzgebungs- oder Verwaltungskompetenz der Gliedstaaten, sind sie auch Adressaten der Schutzpflicht.

Auch im Verhältnis von Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten dürfen grundrechtliche Schutzpflichten die Kompetenzordnung nicht verändern. Dieser Satz hat nur viel einschneidendere Wirkungen als in einem föderalen Staat. Er entscheidet regelmäßig nicht nur darüber, wer die Schutzpflicht erfüllt, sondern ob sie überhaupt erfüllt wird. Das liegt an der Eigenart von Grundrechten im Mehrebenensystem²⁴³. Nicht nur dem Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber fehlt das Monopol, sondern auch dem Gemeinschaftsgrundrecht. Der vollständige Grundrechtsschutz des Individuums setzt sich in diesem Mehrebenensystem erst aus den Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten und den Grundrechten der nationalen Verfassungen sowie prozessual aus der Verfassungsbeschwerde an ein europäisches Gericht und an das nationale Verfassungsgericht zusammen.

Im Ergebnis kann es deshalb zu Schutzlücken kommen. Sie ergeben sich, wenn die Grundrechte oder die Möglichkeiten zu ihrer Durchsetzung in einem Mitgliedstaat weniger weit gehen oder anders ausgestaltet sind als in der Gemeinschaft. Das führt zu einer letzten Besonderheit. An sich sind die Kompetenzen zwischen Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten nach einem anderen Prinzip verteilt als die Kompetenzen von Bund und Ländern unter dem Grundgesetz. Das Grundgesetz verteilt Kompetenzen nach Materien. Die Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft sind dagegen funktional gedacht. Die Gemeinschaft ist zuständig, wenn das erforderlich ist, um eines der Ziele zu erfüllen, die ihr der EG-Vertrag überträgt.

Dieser Gedanke darf jedoch auf die Schutzpflichten nicht übertragen werden, die den Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten entnommen werden. Denn als Abwehrrechte müssen die Gemeinschaftsgrundrechte umfassend sein. Sie müssen den Bürgern gerade auch dort helfen, wo die Gemeinschaft in Lebensbereiche eingreifen will, deren Regelung dem nationalen Gesetzgeber zusteht. Auch als Schutzpflichten sind die Gemeinschaftsgrundrechte also kein versteckter Kompetenztitel. Vielmehr beschränken sie den Handlungsfreiraum der Gemeinschaft, dort wo die Verträge ihn überhaupt eröffnet haben. Anders gewendet: aus den Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten folgen nie unbedingte Schutzpflichten. Vielmehr geht es immer nur um eine Pflicht zum Einschreiten, falls der Gemeinschaft aus einem anderen Grunde die Zuständigkeit zusteht, etwa zur Verwirklichung des Binnenmarkts.

2. Schutz der Verlage durch andere Grundrechte

Die Verlage können sich nicht nur mit Hilfe der Pressefreiheit gegen europäische Hoheitsakte zur Wehr setzen. Vielmehr steht ihnen zugleich eine ganze Liste anderer Grundrechte zu Gebote, die in den vorliegenden Entwürfen enthalten sind. Im einzelnen sind das die Informationsfreiheit (a), Informationsansprüche (b) und der Datenschutz (c), die Berufsfreiheit (d) und das Eigentum (e), der Schutz der Geschäftsräume (f) und der Vertraulichkeit (g), die strafrechtlichen Grundrechte (h), der Gleichheitssatz (i) und die demokratischen Grundrechte (j).

Wir hatten gesehen, daß ihnen die Pressefreiheit einen weit gespannten Schutz verschafft, der insbesondere auch die vorbereitenden journalistische Tätigkeit und den Absatz an Abonnenten und Werbekunden umfaßt. Letztlich führen alle im folgenden betrachteten Grundrechte deshalb dazu, daß ein und derselbe Akt der Gemeinschaft an mehreren Grundrechte zugleich gemessen werden muß. Dieser Umstand bietet der Presse aber nicht nur Sicherheit vor – unangebrachten – restriktiven Interpretationen der Pressefreiheit. Wenn der Staat in mehrere Grundrechte eines Verlages zugleich eingreift, erhöht das vielmehr auch das Schutzniveau²⁴⁴. Die Waagschale neigt sich bei der Verhältnismäßigkeitsprüfung früher zu Gunsten der Verlage.

a) Informationsfreiheit

Art. 15 des Präsidiumsentwurfs schützt nicht nur die Meinungsfreiheit, sondern auch die Freiheit, „Informationen ohne behördliche Eingriffe und ohne Rücksicht auf Staatsgrenzen zu empfangen“²⁴⁵. Dieses Recht soll jedermann zustehen, also auch den Verlagen. Es stellt ein Abwehrrecht dar, schützt also vor staatlichen Eingriffen in Kommunikationsvorgänge²⁴⁶.

Die Recherchetätigkeit der Presse ist also nicht nur als Vorbereitungshandlung für spätere Meinungsäußerungen geschützt²⁴⁷, sondern auch unmittelbar.

b) Informationsansprüche

Art. 14 des Präsidiumsentswurfs lautet:

„Jeder Unionsbürger und jede Unionsbürgerin sowie jede Person mit Wohnsitz in der Union hat das Recht auf Zugang zu Dokumenten der Organe der Europäischen Union. Die Ausübung dieses Rechts erfolgt unter den in Artikel 255 des Vertrages zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft vorgesehenen Bedingungen“²⁴⁸.

Dieses Recht schützt auch die Presse. Der Abgeordnete Meyer will darüber hinaus einen Auskunftsanspruch der Presse in der Grundrechtscharta verankern²⁴⁹. Das würde der Rechtslage nach den deutschen Landespressegesetzen entsprechen. Ob für solch eine Sonderregel Bedarf besteht, hängt von der Ausgestaltung der Bedingungen für den allgemeinen Informationsanspruch ab. In der Grundtendenz ist die Gemeinschaft sehr viel großzügiger als deutsche Behörden und Gerichte. Sie folgt im Grundsatz der skandinavischen und der amerikanischen Tradition²⁵⁰.

c) Datenschutz

Art. 15 des Präsidiumsentswurfs soll lauten:

„Jede natürliche Person hat Anspruch auf Schutz ihrer personenbezogenen Daten“²⁵¹.

Zur Begründung verweist der Entwurf auf Art. 286 EGV. Auch dort ist der Schutz auf natürliche Personen beschränkt. Dagegen ist solange nichts einzuwenden, wie der Schutz von Geschäftsgeheimnissen durch andere Grundrechte gesichert wird.

d) Berufsfreiheit

Sehr viel problematischer ist der ausgesprochen schwache Schutz der Berufsfreiheit. Die einschlägige Vorschrift des Präsidiumsentswurfs findet sich nicht bei den Freiheitsrechten, sondern bei den sozialen und wirtschaftlichen Rechten. Art. II lautet:

²⁴⁸ Dok. 4137/00.

Das entspricht zwar dem Recht des Europarats. Auch die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention enthält keine Garantie der Berufs- und Gewerbefreiheit. Berufsbezogene Rechte gibt es nur in der Europäischen Sozialcharta²⁵³. Das widerspricht aber der Verfassungstradition vieler Mitgliedstaaten²⁵⁴. Vor allem würde die Europäische Grundrechtscharta damit aber hinter die ständige Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs zu den ungeschriebenen Grundrechten des Gemeinschaftsrechts zurückfallen²⁵⁵.

Bislang äußert sich der Präsidiumsentswurf weder zu den Schranken der Sozialrechte noch zu den Mechanismen für ihre Durchsetzung. Anzuerkennen ist zwar das Bemühen des Präsidiums, den bestenfalls justitiablen Kern solcher Rechte herauszuschälen²⁵⁶. Trotzdem ist der Stellenwert der Berufsfreiheit viel prekärer, wenn sie nicht als Freiheits-, sondern nur als Sozialrecht garantiert ist. Die systematische Stellung könnte außerdem dazu verführen, den persönlichen Schutzbereich des Grundrechts eng zu fassen und es nur natürlichen Personen zuzugestehen.

Es kann kein Trost sein, daß die Folgen für die Presse weniger gravierend wären als für andere Branchen. Wir hatten ja schon gesehen, daß auch das ökonomische Substrat zum Schutzbereich der Pressefreiheit gehört²⁵⁷. Der Vergleich zum amerikanischen Verfassungsrecht zeigt, daß dies eine stabile dogmatische Grundlage für einen Schutz auch der ökonomischen Seite der Presse darstellen kann²⁵⁸. Gewiß ist das aber nicht. Es steht zu befürchten, daß der schwächere Schutz der Berufsfreiheit als Argument für eine restriktive Interpretation der Pressefreiheit instrumentalisiert wird.

e) Eigentum

Art. 16 des Präsidiumsentwurfs lautet:

„Jede Person hat das Recht auf Achtung ihres Eigentums. Niemandem darf sein Eigentum entzogen werden, es sei denn aus Gründen des öffentlichen Interesses und nur in Fällen und unter Bedingungen, die durch Gesetz vorgesehen sind, sowie gegen eine angemessene [„vorherige“] Entschädigung“²⁵⁹.

Das entspricht der Verfassungstradition der Mitgliedstaaten²⁶⁰, der Grundrechtsrechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs²⁶¹ sowie Art. 1 des 1. Zusatzprotokolls zur Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention. Wiederum wäre der Grundrechtsschutz der Verlage letztlich auch mit Hilfe einer weit interpretierten Pressefreiheit zu bewerkstelligen. Greift ein Hoheitsakt der Gemeinschaft zugleich in die Pressefreiheit und in das Eigentumsgrundrecht ein, erhöht das das Schutzniveau der Grundrechte.

f) Schutz der Geschäftsräume

Nach Art. 8 II des Präsidiumsentwurfs ist „die Achtung [...] der Wohnung [...] gewährleistet“²⁶³. Für deutsche Ohren klingt das zureichend. Das Bundesverfassungsgericht legt den Begriff der Wohnung in Art. 13 I GG bekanntlich weit aus und rechnet auch Geschäftsräume dazu²⁶⁴. Der Europäische Gerichtshof hat den Grundrechtsschutz der Geschäftsräume im Hoechst-Urteil jedoch ausdrücklich verneint²⁶⁵. Auch die – mittlerweile aufgelöste – Europäische Menschenrechtskommission war lange Zeit zweifelnd²⁶⁶. Mittlerweile hat der Menschenrechtsgerichtshof die Büroräume eines Rechtsanwalts jedoch in den Schutz von Art. 8 EMRK einbezogen²⁶⁷. Deshalb wäre es ratsam, daß die Geschäftsräume in Art. 8 II der Konvention ausdrücklich erwähnt werden. Dann könnte sich die Presse gegen die Durchsuchung einer Redaktion nicht bloß mit Hilfe der Pressefreiheit verteidigen. Die Redaktionsräume wären also nicht bloß deshalb grundrechtlich geschützt, weil sie zur Vorbereitung der publizistischen Tätigkeit der Presse dienen²⁶⁸.

g) Vertraulichkeitsschutz

Ganz parallele Fragen stellen sich auch beim Vertraulichkeitsschutz. Nach Art. 8 II des Präsidiumsentwurfs ist auch „die Achtung der Privatsphäre [...] und der Vertraulichkeit des Post- und Fernmeldeverkehrs ungeachtet des Informationsträgers [...] gewährleistet“²⁶⁹. Ein wohlwollender Gerichtshof könnte aus diesem Wortlaut angemessene Schlüsse ziehen. Er könnte insbesondere zur „Privatsphäre“ auch die Binnensphäre eines Unternehmens rechnen und die „Vertraulichkeit“ auch für die geschäftliche Kommunikation garantieren. Ersteres hat vor allem für das Innenverhältnis zwischen Verlagsleitung und Journalisten Bedeutung, letzteres vor allem für das Verhältnis der Journalisten zu den Informanten. Letztlich ließe sich dieser Schutz wiederum auch mit Hilfe der Pressefreiheit bewerkstelligen²⁷⁰. Besser wäre es aber, wenn auch diese Punkte in dem Grundrechtskatalog ausdrücklich klargelegt würden.

h) Strafrechtliche Grundrechte

Der Präsidiumsentswurf folgt der Tradition der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention und enthält eine Vielzahl von Rechten für das Strafverfahren²⁷¹. Ihre unmittelbare Bedeutung ist für das Gemeinschaftsrecht einstweilen gering. Denn der Gemeinschaft fehlt die eigene Strafgewalt. Auch der Einfluß des Gemeinschaftsrechts auf das nationale Strafrecht war bislang gering. Das könnte sich in der Zukunft allerdings einmal ändern. Dann möchten auch diese Garantien Bedeutung für die Presse erhalten.

i) Gleichheitssatz

In Art. 18 des Präsidiumsentswurfs heißt es: „Alle Menschen sind vor dem Recht gleich“²⁷². Das entspricht der Verfassungstradition der Mitgliedstaaten²⁷³ und der Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs zu den ungeschriebenen Grundrechten des Gemeinschaftsrechts²⁷⁴. In der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention fehlt dagegen ein allgemeiner Gleichheitssatz. Art. 14 EMRK schützt nur vor der Ungleichbehandlung im sachlichen Anwendungsbereich benannter Freiheitsrechte²⁷⁵. An dieser abweichenden Tradition liegt es wohl, daß die vorliegenden Entwürfe ein ganzes Verwirrspiel von Gleichheitsrechten enthalten. Zunächst enthält Art. 19 I des Präsidiumsentswurfs eine Liste von (absoluten?) Diskriminierungsverboten und Art. 19 II das Gebot der positiven Diskriminierung zugunsten der Frauen²⁷⁶. Art. I des Präsidiumsentswurfs der Sozialrechte verbietet für diese Rechte die Ungleichbehandlung²⁷⁷. Schließlich heißt es in Art. J des Präsidiumsentswurfs der Bürgerrechte:

Wenn sich der Konvent nicht entschließen kann, einen einheitlichen, für sämtliche Grundrechtsbelange geltenden Gleichheitssatz zu schaffen, sollte er zumindest das Verhältnis dieser Gleichheitssätze zueinander klarstellen.

j) Demokratische Grundrechte

In Art. B des Präsidiumsentswurfs der Bürgerrechte heißt es zu den politischen Parteien:

„Sie tragen dazu bei, ein europäisches Bewußtsein herauszubilden und den politischen Willen der Bürger und Bürgerinnen der Union zum Ausdruck zu bringen“²⁷⁹.

²⁷¹ S. insbesondere Art. 6: Recht auf Freiheit und Sicherheit; Art. 8: Recht auf ein unparteiisches Gericht, Art. 9: Rechte der Verteidigung, Art. 10: Keine Strafe ohne Gesetz, Art. 11: Recht, wegen derselben Sache nicht zweimal vor Gericht gestellt oder bestraft zu werden, Dok. 4149/00.

Nicht nur die Parteien, auch die Medien sind Intermediäre zwischen Staat und Bürger. Das paßt auch für das Verhältnis zwischen den Gemeinschaftsbürgern und der europäischen Hoheitsgewalt²⁸⁰. Gleichwohl empfiehlt es sich nicht, die Presse an dieser Stelle zu erwähnen. Die Presse braucht diesen Schutz ebenso wenig wie eine ausdrückliche institutionelle Garantie. Die Gefahr ist groß, daß er ihr schließlich nicht nützen, sondern schaden würde. Die Rundfunkrechtsprechung des Bundesverfassungsgerichts belegt, daß das Individualgrundrecht schließlich nur noch nach Maßgabe seiner demokratischen Nützlichkeit gewährt werden könnte²⁸¹.

3. Schutz der Presse in der Person anderer Grundrechtsträger

Wenn die europäische Hoheitsgewalt die Presse treffen will, braucht sie den Eingriff nicht notwendig an den Verlag zu adressieren. Sie kann statt dessen auch die Freiheit von Journalisten, Nachrichtenagenturen, Lesern, Werbetreibenden oder Financiers beeinträchtigen. Da die Pressefreiheit auch vor mittelbaren Eingriffen schützt²⁸², kann sich die Presse auch dagegen zur Wehr setzen. Die genannten Personengruppen sind aber auch selbst Grundrechtsträger. Oft gilt auch der spiegelbildliche Zusammenhang: ein Eingriff, der an die Verlage adressiert ist, greift mittelbar zugleich in die Grundrechte dieser Grundrechtsträger ein²⁸³. Diese Zusammenhänge haben vor allem prozessuale Bedeutung. Wenn eine europäische Verfassungsbeschwerde geschaffen würde, könnte sie von jedem dieser Grundrechtsträger eingelegt werden. Daß nicht nur der Verleger beeinträchtigt ist, sondern weitere Klassen von Grundrechtsträgern, erhöht außerdem das Schutzniveau der Grundrechte²⁸⁴.

4. Konflikte mit anderen Grundrechten

Die Presse steht nicht nur in einem Spannungsfeld zum Staat, sondern auch zu anderen Grundrechtsträgern. Daß die Grundrechtscharta viele dieser Personen schützt, etwa die Ehre als Schutzgut gesondert ausweist, darf aber nicht mißdeutet werden. Auch soweit aus den europäischen Grundrechten Schutzpflichten folgen²⁸⁵, erweitern sich die Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft nicht. Die meisten der potentiellen Grundrechtskonflikte werden aus diesem Grunde nicht aktuell. Die Zuständigkeit zu ihrer Bewältigung bleibt bei den Mitgliedstaaten.

Vorsorglich müssen die europäischen Grundrechte gleichwohl so ausgestaltet werden, daß ein gerechter Ausgleich der widerstreitenden Belange möglich wird, sollte die Gemeinschaft für einen Teilbereich zuständig sein oder werden. Praktisch kommt es darauf an, daß die Schranken der widerstreitenden Grundrechte so ausgestaltet sind, daß die Gemeinschaft sie grundsätzlich zu Gunsten der Presse beschränken darf.

Nach dem augenblicklichen Stand der Entwürfe ist das im Prinzip schon deshalb gewährleistet, weil Art. H.2 II 2 ja Grundrechtseingriffe zur Verfolgung jedes legitimen Ziels zuläßt. Der genaueren Überprüfung bedürfen aber die Schranken der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention, auf die Art. H.2 II 3 und Art. H.4 verweisen. Daß die Presse dort nirgends ausdrücklich erwähnt ist, ist unschädlich. Es muß aber zumindest sichergestellt sein, daß überall ein Vorbehalt für die „Rechte anderer“ vorhanden ist. Darauf wäre auch zu achten, wenn sich der Grundrechtskonvent doch noch entschließt, selbst allen Grundrechten benannte Schranken zuzuweisen. Vorsorglich wollen wir im folgenden die vornehmlich in Betracht kommenden Rechte deshalb durchmustern.

Die eingangs geschilderten Konflikte aus dem Pressearbeitsrecht²⁸⁶ könnten sich am Verhältnis der Pressefreiheit zu zwei anderen Grundrechten entzünden. Der menschenrechtliche Kern des Problems ist in der Gewissensfreiheit angesprochen, die Art. 14 des Präsidiumsentswurfs schützt²⁸⁷. Im übrigen wird der Tendenzschutz gegen die Arbeitnehmerrechte abzusichern sein, die als soziale Rechte geschützt sind. Nach dem Präsidiumsentswurf gehört dazu die Pflicht zur Unterrichtung und Anhörung der Arbeitnehmer bei Entscheidungen über die Arbeitsbedingungen und die Arbeitsumwelt, Art. III; das Verbot, aus der Zugehörigkeit zu beruflichen oder gewerkschaftlichen Organisationen persönliche oder berufliche Nachteile abzuleiten, Art. IV (1) 2; das Recht, „auf Ebene der Union nach Maßgabe der einzelstaatlichen Rechtsvorschriften und Gepflogenheiten Tarifverträge auszuhandeln und zu schließen“, Art. IV (2); das Recht, gegebenenfalls auch auf Ebene der Union kollektive Maßnahmen zu ergreifen, die das Streikrecht einschließen“, Art. IV (3); das Recht auf sichere und gesunde Arbeitsbedingungen, Art. VII; das Verbot, Arbeitnehmer ohne triftigen Grund zu entlassen, Art. IX²⁸⁸. Keines dieser Rechte enthält einen Vorbehalt für den Tendenzschutz. Ohne Tendenzschutz kann die Presse ihre demokratische Funktion als Intermediär zwischen Staat und Bürger aber nicht wirksam erfüllen²⁸⁹. Das Schutzniveau der Pressefreiheit ist deshalb hoch²⁹⁰. Über den Vorbehalt der Rechte anderer kann es auch den arbeitsrechtlichen Grundrechten entgegengehalten werden.

Auch der eingangs geschilderte Streit um das Medienprivileg im Datenschutz läßt sich als Grundrechtskonflikt formulieren. Der Präsidiumsentswurf sieht in Art. 15 ein eigenes Grundrecht auf Datenschutz vor²⁹¹. Nach Art. 12 des Entwurfs hat jede Person überdies „Anspruch auf Achtung [...] ihrer Kommunikation“²⁹². Die Straßburger Organe rechnen unter die Parallelvorschrift des Art. 8 I EMRK auch die informationelle Selbstbestimmung²⁹³. Diese Grundrechte müssen aber so ausgestaltet werden, daß die Presse imstande bleibt, ihre publizistische Aufgabe zu erfüllen.

Der Konflikt um die Tabakwerbung ist nicht nur ein Streit um Grundrechte, sondern auch um die Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft. Eine allgemeine Kompetenz zum Schutz der Volksgesundheit hat der EG-Vertrag der Gemeinschaft nicht eingeräumt²⁹⁴. Daran ändert auch die Grundrechtscharta nichts²⁹⁵. Schon aus diesem Grunde kann aus dem Recht auf körperliche und psychische Unversehrtheit, das in Art. 3 I des Präsidiumsentswurfs enthalten ist²⁹⁶, keine neue Rechtfertigung für das vollständige Verbot der Tabakwerbung abgeleitet werden.

Bei den übrigen Konflikten um das Werberecht der Gemeinschaft²⁹⁷, spielt das Kompetenzargument dagegen eine geringere Rolle. Die Gemeinschaft hat zwar nach Art. 153 EGV nur begrenzte Kompetenzen für den Verbraucherschutz. Die Angleichung des Verbraucherschutzrechts der Mitgliedstaaten dient regelmäßig aber zugleich der Verwirklichung des Binnenmarkts. Die einschlägigen Richtlinien sind deshalb typischerweise auch auf Art. 95²⁹⁸ oder auf Art. 47 II EGV²⁹⁹ gestützt. Bislang enthält der Präsidiumsentswurf allerdings kein ausdrückliches Recht auf Verbraucherschutz. Das Sekretariat der Konvention hat den Verbraucherschutz aber in die Liste der Fragen aufgenommen, über die noch zu reden sein wird³⁰⁰.

Wenn es zu einem Grundrecht auf Verbraucherschutz kommen sollte, könnte die Gemeinschaft auch versuchen, dieses Grundrecht als Rechtfertigung für ihre Harmonisierung des Vertriebsrechts einzusetzen³⁰¹.

Sollte die Gemeinschaft beabsichtigen, gegen die nationale Presseförderung vorzugehen³⁰², wäre zunächst einmal die Kompetenz sorgfältig zu prüfen. Die Absicht, den Wettbewerb vor Verzerrungen zu schützen, läßt sich auch als Grundrechtskonflikt zwischen dem begünstigten Unternehmen und der Berufsfreiheit aus Art. II des Präsidiumsentswurfs der sozialen Rechte³⁰³ und zu dem Gleichheitssatz formulieren³⁰⁴. Mit den gleichen Argumenten lassen sich auch Konflikte aus der Anwendung des europäischen Kartellrechts grundrechtlich reformulieren³⁰⁵.

Falls sich die Gemeinschaft in der Zukunft entschließen sollte, die nationalen Normen über Presseinhalte zu harmonisieren³⁰⁶, könnte sie versuchen, auch die neuen Grundrechte als Rechtfertigung zu bemühen. Eine genuine Kompetenz zu einer europäischen Pressepolitik steht ihr allerdings nicht zu. Sie könnte aber versuchen, wie schon beim Werberecht, auch dafür ihre Binnenmarktkompetenzen zu nutzen und sich zur Unterstützung auf Schutzpflichten aus der Grundrechtscharta zu berufen. Wir hatten dargelegt, warum das dogmatisch wie rechtspolitisch falsch wäre³⁰⁷. Wie sonst auch ist diese Untersuchung aber vom Vorsichtsprinzip geleitet.

Das Angebot an einschlägigen Grundrechten ist reichhaltig. Im Zentrum steht Art. 12 des Präsidiumsentswurfs:

Bemerkenswert ist vor allem der ausdrückliche Schutz der Ehre. Der Entwurf weicht insofern bewußt von Art. 8 I EMRK ab³⁰⁹. Überdies schützt Art. 1 des Präsidiumsentswurfs die Würde des Menschen³¹⁰. Art. 3 I des Entwurfs schützt nicht nur die körperliche, sondern auch die „psychische Unversehrtheit“. All das darf nicht als Hindernis für investigativen Journalismus mißdeutet werden.

Auch die Gerichtsberichterstattung könnte zur Grundrechtsfrage gemacht werden. Das war beim ursprünglichen Präsidiumsentswurf der Freiheitsrechte besonders deutlich. Sein Art. 5 sollte die Überschrift tragen: „Recht auf ein gerechtes Verfahren“³¹¹. Auch im augenblicklich letzten Entwurf heißt es in Art. 8 aber:

„Jede Person hat Anspruch darauf, daß ihre Sache in billiger Weise öffentlich und innerhalb einer angemessenen Frist von einem unabhängigen und unparteiischen, auf Gesetz beruhenden Gericht verhandelt wird“³¹².

Art. 9 des Entwurfs legt außerdem die Unschuldsvermutung und den Anspruch auf Achtung der Verteidigungsrechte fest³¹³.

Schließlich könnte die Gemeinschaft versuchen, eine Harmonisierung der Darstellung von Minderheiten auf Art. 19 des Präsidiumsentswurfs zu stützen. Er lautet:

(2) Die Union wirkt darauf hin, Ungleichheiten zu beseitigen und die Gleichstellung von Männern und Frauen zu fördern“³¹⁴.

Würde der Presse all das zur Auflage gemacht, wäre ihr von Rechts wegen eine Art publizistisches Programm vorgegeben. Ihre publizistische Aufgabe könnte sie nicht mehr erfüllen.

Art. 15 I des Präsidiumsentswurfs schützt u.a. auch „die Freiheit [...], Informationen und Ideen ohne behördliche Eingriffe und ohne Rücksicht auf Staatsgrenzen zu empfangen und weiterzugeben“³¹⁵. Gäbe es allein diesen Wortlaut, könnte man versuchen, daraus einen Informationsanspruch gegen Private abzuleiten. Zu diesen Privaten könnten dann auch die Verlage gehören. Diese Interpretation liegt jedoch fern, weil Art. 14 des Entwurfs einen expliziten Informationsanspruch enthält. Er richtet sich nur an die Gemeinschaftsorgane³¹⁶. Vor allem läge ein allgemeiner Informationsanspruch gegen Private aber außerhalb des Kompetenzbereichs der Gemeinschaft. Er kann deshalb auch den Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten nicht entnommen werden³¹⁷.

Ein letztes Anliegen liegt wieder eindeutig außerhalb der Gemeinschaftskompetenzen³¹⁸. Die geplanten Bürgerrechte können nicht als Begründung genutzt werden, um die Verfassungspolitik der Mitgliedstaaten zu harmonisieren³¹⁹. Das gilt auch für die Harmonisierung von Vorschriften über die Medienkonzentration³²⁰.

5. Verhältnis von Europäischen Grundrechten und anderem Primärrecht

Wenn die Europäische Grundrechtscharta schließlich in den EG- oder EU-Vertrag aufgenommen wird, muß auch das dogmatische Verhältnis zwischen den Grundrechten und dem übrigen Primärrecht der Gemeinschaft bewältigt werden. Die Frage hat eine materiellrechtliche und eine prozessuale Seite. Die beiden wichtigsten materiellrechtlichen Probleme haben wir bereits behandelt: Die Grundrechte erweitern die Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft nicht³²¹. Wenn es bei der bisherigen Formulierung bleibt, können die Grundrechte für jedes „legitime Ziel“ beschränkt werden. Dazu würden dann auch die anderen Normen des Gemeinschaftsrechts gehören. Wir haben dargelegt, warum das nicht empfehlenswert ist³²². Lösungsbedürftig ist aber auch das Verhältnis zwischen Grundfreiheiten und Grundrechten. Die Grundfreiheiten sind nach der Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs unmittelbar anwendbar. Sie werden von den Marktbürgern bislang aber vor allem gegen Handelsbeschränkungen durch die Mitgliedstaaten eingesetzt. Das Schrifttum fordert seit langem, den Grundfreiheiten auch Maßstäbe für das Sekundärrecht der Gemeinschaft zu entnehmen³²³. Gelegentlich hat der Gerichtshof erkennen lassen, daß er dieses Anliegen teilt³²⁴. In diesem Lichte sind Grundrechte und Grundfreiheiten dann nicht gegenläufig, sondern ergänzen einander. Schärfer gewendet: der Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber wird künftig beide Schranken beachten müssen. Ebenso verhält es sich zwischen Grundrechten und den ebenfalls unmittelbar anwendbaren Wettbewerbsregeln.

Prozessuale Probleme könnten eintreten, wenn allein für die Grundrechte eine unbeschränkte europäische Verfassungsbeschwerde geschaffen wird³²⁵. Wenn zu den formellen Grundrechtsschranken nämlich auch die Beachtung von objektivem Gemeinschaftsrecht gehört³²⁶, dann wird die Verfassungsbeschwerde zum Instrument, auch die Begrenzungen beim Rechtsschutz wegen der Verletzung von Grundfreiheiten und von anderem objektivem Gemeinschaftsrecht zu überwinden. Die Grundrechte können allerdings immer nur gegen Hoheitshandeln der Gemeinschaft eingesetzt werden³²⁷. Der geschilderte dogmatische Umweg führt also nur zur Ausweitung des Rechtsschutzes gegen den Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber und gegen den Vollzug des Gemeinschaftsrechts durch die Mitgliedstaaten. Eine Beschwerde an den EuGH wegen der Verletzung der Grundfreiheiten durch das autonome Handeln der Mitgliedstaaten wird dadurch nicht erschlossen.

6. Verhältnis zu anderen Grundrechtsordnungen

Die Europäische Grundrechtscharta wird nicht isoliert stehen. Im Verhältnis zu anderen Grundrechtsordnungen stellen sich teils dogmatische, teils justizpolitische Fragen. Die erste Frage hat der verfassungsgebende europäische Gesetzgeber in der Hand. Auch bislang gab es ja schon Grundrechte des Gemeinschaftsrechts. Nach Art. 6 II EUV sind sie aus der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention und den gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten zu gewinnen. Es liegt nahe, diese Vorschrift aufzuheben, wenn die europäische Grundrechtscharta in den EG- oder EU-Vertrag aufgenommen wird. Die Gemeinschaft würde sonst für die Grundrechte „a lawyers paradise“ schaffen.

Wir haben mehrfach betont, daß die Grundrechtscharta Grundrechte ohne Monopol enthalten wird³²⁸. Sie gelten nur für solches hoheitliche Handeln, das der Gemeinschaft zugerechnet werden kann. Das ist nicht etwa ein rechtspolitischer Mangel, der durch eine Zuständigkeit der Gemeinschaft für die Menschenrechtspolitik zu beheben wäre. Vielmehr ist es nur auf diese Weise möglich, einen wirksamen Grundrechtsschutz zu gewährleisten, ohne von Supranationalität zu einem europäischen Bundesstaat überzugehen. Deshalb brauchen wir auch nicht näher zu untersuchen, wie sich die Grundrechtscharta gegenüber konkurrierenden Grundrechtsordnungen behaupten oder wie sie im Konzert mit ihnen gemeinsame Anliegen durchsetzen könnte³²⁹. Denn die Gemeinschaftsgrundrechte sind nur ein Kontrollmaßstab für hoheitliches Handeln, das der Gemeinschaft zugerechnet werden kann³³⁰.

Gleichwohl wird es einen Überschneidungsbereich zwischen der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta, den Grundrechten der nationalen Verfassungen und der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention geben. Er setzt sich aus zwei Elementen zusammen. Wenn die Mitgliedstaaten Gemeinschaftsrecht vollziehen oder Gesetzgebungsaufträge des Gemeinschaftsrechts erfüllen, ist das in den dargelegten Grenzen der Gemeinschaft zuzurechnen³³¹. Zugleich nehmen die Mitgliedstaaten dabei aber auch eigene Hoheitsgewalt in Anspruch. Deshalb unterliegt dieses Handeln auch den Grundrechten der nationalen Verfassungen und der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention. Im Maastricht-Urteil ist das Bundesverfassungsgericht bekanntlich noch weitergegangen. Es nimmt zumindest subsidiär auch die Kontrolle genuiner europäischer Hoheitsgewalt an den deutschen Grundrechten in Anspruch³³². In ähnlicher Weise unterwirft auch der Menschenrechtsgerichtshof die Öffnung des Rechts der Mitgliedstaaten für die Europäische Hoheitsgewalt seiner Kontrolle³³³.

Soweit ein und derselbe Hoheitsakt hiernach mehreren Grundrechtsordnungen unterworfen ist, muß auch das dogmatische Verhältnis dieser Ordnungen zueinander bestimmt werden. Im Kernbereich des Grundrechtsschutzes, also bei der Abwehrfunktion der Grundrechte, ist das zumindest theoretisch nicht schwierig. Die Kontrollmaßstäbe lassen sich verdoppeln. Das Hoheitshandeln muß allen Grundrechtsordnungen zugleich genügen. Daß solch eine Doppelkontrolle auch praktisch funktionieren kann, belegt das Kartellverbot. Art. 81 EGV und die Kartellverbote der nationalen Kartellrechte werden seit jeher nebeneinander angewendet³³⁴. Vor allem aus der Sicht des Gemeinschaftsrechts kann das allerdings zu unerwünschten Ergebnissen führen. Obwohl es mit den Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten vereinbar ist, kann der Gemeinschaft zurechenbares hoheitliches Handeln dann nämlich wirkungslos bleiben. Noch schwieriger wird es, wenn den Grundrechtsordnungen Schutzpflichten entnommen werden. Dann kann ein und derselbe Hoheitsträger einander widersprechenden Anforderungen ausgesetzt sein. Dies wird allerdings aus den bereits dargelegten Gründen nicht allzu häufig der Fall sein. Denn auch die Schutzpflichten aus Gemeinschaftsgrundrechten gelten ja nur für hoheitliches Handeln, das der Gemeinschaft zuzurechnen ist³³⁵. Soweit mehrere Grundrechtsordnungen nebeneinander anwendbar sind, erhalten die Grundrechtsträger eine Chance zum Kampf um das Forum. Sie können in strategischer Absicht versuchen, den Konflikt in ein Forum zu verlagern, von dessen Grundrechten sie sich mehr Chancen versprechen.

Tatsächlich wird der Einfluß der nationalen Grundrechte und vor allem der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention auf die Dogmatik der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta jedoch sehr viel größer sein, als die gerade angestellten dogmatischen Überlegungen vermuten lassen. Denn die Entwicklung einer neuen Grundrechtsdogmatik braucht viele Jahrzehnte. Der Europäische Gerichtshof wäre nicht klug beraten, wenn er damit bei der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta noch einmal vollständig von vorne begännen. Überdies lehnt sich der Entwurf des Präsidiums ja vielfach an den Wortlaut der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention an. Art. H.4 bindet die Europäische Gemeinschaft sogar an die Auslegung, die der Straßburger Menschenrechtsgerichtshof den parallelen Garantien der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention gibt. Ist der Gerichtshof wirklich gewillt, mit dem europäischen Grundrechtsschutz ernst zu machen, wird überdies von den entwickelten Grundrechtsordnungen der Mitgliedstaaten ein Sog ausgehen. Er ist zugleich das wirksamste Instrument, um die Kerngedanken der nationalen Grundrechtsdoktrin auch ins europäische Recht einzupflanzen.

V. Offene Flanken

Zwei Flanken sind noch offen. Dogmatisch ist auch die rechtsfortbildende Tätigkeit des Europäischen Gerichtshofs ein Hoheitsakt der Gemeinschaft³³⁶. Wie soll man aber erreichen, daß sich der Europäische Gerichtshof selbst durch die Grundrechte beschränkt? Außerdem haben wir deutlich gemacht, das europäische Grundrechte die Opportunity Structure zwischen Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten, im Verhältnis der Mitgliedstaaten zueinander, im Verhältnis der Organe der Gemeinschaft zueinander und für politische Akteure verändern³³⁷. Wie sollen die Väter der Grundrechtscharta verhindern, daß dieser Preis für einen wirksamen Grundrechtsschutz schließlich zu hoch ist?

Allein durch die Dogmatik der Europäischen Grundrechte lassen sich diese Flanken schlecht schließen. Denn zur Anwendung und Fortentwicklung dieser Dogmatik ist ja gerade der Europäische Gerichtshof berufen, der sich traditionell als Motor der Integration definiert hat.

³³⁵ S. o. 1 k).

³³⁷ S. o. III 2.

Auf das Kompetenzproblem hat das Präsidium des Konvents bereits mit dem erwähnten Art. H.1 II reagiert. Er soll ausdrücklich darauf hinweisen, daß die Charta den Zuständigkeitsbereich der Gemeinschaft nicht erweitert³³⁸. Wenn die Charta in die europäischen Verträge aufgenommen wird, könnte in gleicher Weise klargelegt werden, daß die Grundrechte auch für die rechtsfortbildende Tätigkeit des Europäischen Gerichtshofs gelten. Man sollte die Wirkung solcher Klauseln nicht unterschätzen. Würde Justizpolitik allein von Interessen bestimmt, wäre ihr Wert allerdings gering. Auch die Justizpolitik wird zugleich aber von Ideen bestimmt³³⁹. Auch das dogmatisch ähnlich hilflose Subsidiaritätsprinzip hat die Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs ja wirklich verändert.

Gleichwohl macht es Sinn, ergänzend auch über die Sicherung der offenen Flanken durch Institutionen nachzudenken. An drei Elementen kann man ansetzen: am Initiativrecht, an der Zuständigkeit zur Anwendung der Grundrechtscharta sowie an der Anwendung konkurrierender Grundrechtsordnungen.

Wenn sich der Europäische Gerichtshof als Motor der Integration betätigt, ist er funktionell ein politisches, kein Justizorgan. Als politisches Organ ist er relativ schwach, weil er warten muß, bis ein geeigneter Fall zu ihm getragen wird. Je enger die Initiative ausgestaltet ist, desto geringer sind die Chancen für einen rechtspolitisch aktiven Gerichtshof. Trotzdem macht die restriktive Ausgestaltung der Grundrechtsinitiative wenig Sinn. Grundrechte ohne Befugnis zur Individualbeschwerde befrieden nicht und verschaffen der Gemeinschaft kaum zusätzliche Legitimität³⁴⁰. Eine Beschränkung des Initiativrechts für die Prüfung an anderen Maßstäben steht ohnehin nicht zur Diskussion. Daß ein weites Initiativrecht trotzdem beschränkend wirken kann, erschließt sich erst aus einer weiteren Voraussetzung für politisches Handeln des Europäischen Gerichtshofs. Er kann politische Macht nur in den Formen des Rechts ausüben. Er muß eine gemeinschaftsrechtliche Norm in einer Weise auslegen, die seinen politischen Absichten dient, und er muß jede Entscheidung kunstgerecht begründen, auch wenn sie zu seinem politischen Ziel nichts beiträgt. Schließlich müssen die Maßstäbe konsistent sein, die er in all seinen Entscheidungen anwendet. Grundrechtsbeschwerden können den Gerichtshof deshalb dazu zwingen, durch eine immer präzisere Dogmatik die eigenen Freiräume für politisches Handeln immer stärker zu beschränken.

Sobald die Gemeinschaftsbürger die Grundrechtsbeschwerde angenommen haben, wird der Europäische Gerichtshof allerdings ein offenes oder verstecktes Annahmeverfahren entwickeln müssen. Anders kann er nach den Erfahrungen der übrigen Grundrechtsordnungen seine eigene Arbeitsfähigkeit nicht bewahren. Das erlaubt ihm dann auch, solche Grundrechtsbeschwerden auszusondern, die ihn für die Zukunft allzu sehr beschränken würden. Aus diesem Grunde empfiehlt es sich, auch den Mitgliedstaaten das Initiativrecht wegen Grundrechtsverletzungen zu geben, und die Vorlagebefugnis nationaler Gerichte auch auf Grundrechtsfragen zu erstrecken.

Eine sehr viel radikalere Lösung bestünde darin, die Anwendung der Europäischen Grundrechte nicht dem Europäischen Gerichtshof zuzuweisen, sondern einem neuen Verfassungsgericht der Gemeinschaft. Dieses Gericht könnte dann auch zur Kontrolle von Entscheidungen des Europäischen Gerichtshofs am Maßstab der Europäischen Grundrechte berufen werden. Da es nur die Grundrechte als Entscheidungsmaßstab hat, wäre wahrscheinlich, daß es sich ein stärker rechtsstaatliches, nicht so sehr ein integrationspolitisches Selbstverständnis zulegt. Ob alle Mitgliedstaaten bereit wären, solch einer Änderung der Europäischen Verträge zuzustimmen, erscheint allerdings fraglich. Dogmatisch stünden die Grundrechte dann zwar nach wie vor auf ein und derselben Stufe der Normenhierarchie wie das übrige primäre Gemeinschaftsrecht. Durch den gespaltenen Gerichtsweg entstünde nach außen hin aber der Eindruck, daß die Gemeinschaft die Grundrechte dem übrigen Primärrecht überordnet. Der Europäische Gerichtshof und das Verfassungsgericht würden in einen Wettbewerb gedrängt, der sich vor allem an der Verzahnung der Grundrechte mit dem übrigen Primärrecht entzünden würde.

Eine begrenztere disziplinierende Wirkung könnte auch von einem Wettbewerb der Interpreten um die richtige Auslegung der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta ausgehen. Er ist schon deshalb schwer zu vermeiden, weil das Gemeinschaftsrecht ja im Normalfall von den Mitgliedstaaten vollzogen wird. Der Adressat kann den Vollzugsakt mit der Begründung vor die Gerichte der Mitgliedstaaten bringen, die vollzogene Norm verstoße gegen die Gemeinschaftsgrundrechte. Nach der Rechtsprechung des Gerichtshofs darf ein nationales Gericht sekundäres Gemeinschaftsrecht zwar nicht selbst für ungültig erklären, sondern muß die Frage dem Gerichtshof zur Entscheidung vorlegen³⁴¹. Das könnte bei einem behaupteten Grundrechtsverstoß nicht anders sein. Zumindest erhalten die Nationalgerichte auf diese Art aber eine eigenständige Prüfungszuständigkeit. Schließlich stehen die nationalen Verfassungsgerichte und der Europäische Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte nach wie vor im Hintergrund in Reserve. Sollte sich herausstellen, daß der Europäische Gerichtshof die Grundrechte nicht ernst nimmt oder für integrationspolitische Ziele mißbraucht, könnte das Bundesverfassungsgericht mit den Grundsätzen des Maastricht-Urteils intervenieren³⁴². Ebenso könnte der Menschenrechtsgerichtshof gegen einen Mitgliedstaat entscheiden, weil er Hoheitsgewalt an die Europäische Gemeinschaft übertragen hat, ohne für einen ausreichenden Schutz der Menschenrechte Sorge zu tragen³⁴³.

VI. Schlußfolgerungen

1. Grundrechte sind in ihrem Kern Abwehrrechte gegen hoheitliches Handeln. Das gilt auch und gerade für die Pressefreiheit. Die schlechthin konstituierende Bedeutung der Presse für ein demokratisches Gemeinwesen führt nicht etwa zu einem anderen Verständnis dieses Grundrechts, sondern zu einer Verstärkung des Freiheitsrechts. Denn Freiheit ist die Voraussetzung dafür, daß die Presse ihre demokratische Aufgabe wahrnehmen kann.
2. Die Europäische Gemeinschaft hat bislang keine eigene Pressepolitik entwickelt. Eine genuine Pressezuständigkeit fehlt der Gemeinschaft. Zur Nutzung ihrer Binnenmarktkompetenzen bestand kein Anlaß, weil der Pressebinnenmarkt nicht nennenswert behindert ist. Bedarf nach einem Grundrechtsschutz gegen den Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber besteht deshalb aktuell vor allem dann, wenn die Gemeinschaft allgemeine Politiken auch auf die Presse anwendet, ohne ausreichend auf die Besonderheiten dieses Wirtschaftszweigs Rücksicht zu nehmen. Der Schutzbedarf der Presse könnte sich in der Zukunft jedoch erhöhen. Daß Presseinhalte auch elektronisch dargeboten werden, könnte die Gemeinschaft zum Vorwand nehmen, Elemente aus der Regulierung anderer Medien, besonders des Rundfunks, auf die Presse auszudehnen. Jedenfalls sollte die Europäische Grundrechtscharta so ausgestaltet werden, daß sie auch gegen einen sehr viel aktiveren europäischen Gesetzgeber Schutz böte; zugleich ist zu verhindern, daß der Gesetzgeber den weitergehenden Schutz als Kompetenzerweiterung mißdeutet.

³⁴³ Näher oben IV 1 b).

3. Maß und Qualität des Grundrechtsschutzes ergibt sich weniger aus dem Text der Grundrechtscharta als aus der Dogmatik. Sie läßt sich nur in sehr engen Grenzen im vorhinein im Text fixieren. Die zentrale Aufgabe dieser Untersuchung bestand darin, aus den vorliegenden Entwürfen eine Dogmatik zu entwickeln, die dem Schutzbedarf der Presse gerecht wird. Dieses Unterfangen war sehr weitgehend erfolgreich. Nur geringe Textanpassungen sind erforderlich oder zumindest wünschenswert.
4. Bislang beschränkt sich der Entwurf auf den allgemeinen Schutz der Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit. Rechtstechnisch mag das genügen, den besonderen Schutzbedarf der Presse zu erfüllen und den Schutzstandard der Grundrechtstradition der Mitgliedstaaten auch gegenüber der Europäischen Gemeinschaft zu sichern. Eine ausdrückliche Garantie der Pressefreiheit würde aber jeden Zweifel hieran ausräumen. Sie wird unverzichtbar, wenn sich der Rundfunk mit dem Wunsch nach einer separaten Garantie durchsetzt. Erwägenswert ist es, Abgrenzungsschwierigkeiten durch eine allgemeine Medienfreiheit vorzubeugen.
5. Der Entwurf sieht ein recht kompliziertes System der Grundrechtsschranken vor. Wie jedes Grundrecht der Charta unterläge die Pressefreiheit zunächst der allgemeinen, unbenannten Schranke aus Art. H.2 II 2. Weil sie Teil der in Art. 10 EMRK garantierten Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit ist, wären nach Art. H.2 II 3 zusätzlich die benannten Schranken aus Art. 10 II EMRK zu beachten. Schließlich darf der Grundrechtsschutz nach Art. H.4 nicht hinter dem Schutzstandard von Art. 10 EMRK zurückbleiben. Die Auslegung ist zu beachten, die der Straßburger Menschenrechtsgerichtshof dieser Norm gegeben hat. Bei richtiger Handhabung führt dieses System der Schranken nicht zu Unzuträglichkeiten. Die Grundrechtsanwendung würde aber sehr vereinfacht, wenn die Pressefreiheit unmittelbar die benannten Schranken aus Art. 10 II EMRK erhielte.

Auch empfiehlt sich die Klarstellung, daß jede Berührung dieses Grundrechts der Rechtfertigung durch die Grundrechtsschranken bedarf. Damit würde verhindert, daß ein enges Konzept des Grundrechtseingriffs dazu eingesetzt wird, den Verhältnismäßigkeitsgrundsatz zu umgehen.

6. Der Schutz der Verlage durch andere Grundrechte hat eine empfindliche Lücke: die Berufsfreiheit ist nur als soziales Grundrecht geschützt. Sie sollte zu einem echten Freiheitsrecht gemacht werden. Außerdem wäre es ratsam, das verwirrende System der Gleichheitsrechte zu vereinfachen.
7. Die Presse steht nicht nur in einem Spannungsfeld zum Staat, sondern auch zu anderen Grundrechtsträgern. Daß die Grundrechtscharta viele dieser Personen schützt, etwa die Ehre als Schutzgut gesondert ausweist, darf aber nicht mißdeutet werden. Auch soweit aus den europäischen Grundrechten Schutzpflichten folgen, erweitern sich die Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft nicht. Die meisten der potentiellen Grundrechtskonflikte werden aus diesem Grunde nicht aktuell. Die Zuständigkeit zu ihrer Bewältigung bleibt bei den Mitgliedstaaten.

Vorsorglich müssen die europäischen Grundrechte gleichwohl so ausgestaltet werden, daß ein gerechter Ausgleich der widerstreitenden Belange möglich wird, sollte die Gemeinschaft für einen Teilbereich zuständig sein oder werden. Praktisch kommt es vor allem darauf an, wie die Schranken dieser Grundrechte ausgestaltet werden. Sie müssen dem Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber gestatten, diese Grundrechte zu Gunsten der berechtigten Anliegen der Presse zu beschränken.

Nach dem augenblicklichen Stand der Entwürfe ist das im Prinzip schon deshalb gewährleistet, weil Art. H.2 II 2 ja Grundrechtseingriffe zur Verfolgung jedes legitimen Ziels zuläßt. Der genaueren Überprüfung bedürfen aber die Schranken der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention, auf die Art. H.2 II 3 und Art. H.4 verweisen. Daß die Presse dort nirgends ausdrücklich erwähnt ist, ist unschädlich. Es muß aber zumindest sichergestellt sein, daß überall ein Vorbehalt für die „Rechte anderer“ vorhanden ist. Darauf wäre auch zu achten, wenn sich der Grundrechtskonvent doch noch entschließt, selbst allen Grundrechten benannte Schranken zuzuweisen.

8. Europäische Grundrechte werden das Verhältnis von Gemeinschaft und Mitgliedstaaten verändern. Nach aller Erfahrung mit Grundrechten in Bundesstaaten werden sie einen unitarischen Effekt haben. Außerdem gewinnt die Gemeinschaft erheblich an Legitimität und damit an politischer Handlungsfreiheit. Grundrechte werden auch das Verhältnis der Organe innerhalb der Gemeinschaft verschieben. Sie werden tendenziell den Rat als das Verhandlungsorgan der Mitgliedstaaten schwächen, die Kommission dagegen stärken. Den Gerichtshof werden sie zwingen, sich stärker als Kontrollorgan und weniger als politisches Organ zu begreifen. Der unitarische Effekt liegt eindeutig nicht im Interesse der Presse. Die beiden anderen Effekte sind ambivalent.

Mit den Mitteln des Rechts lassen sich diese Effekte nur bedingt steuern. Art. H.1 II will ausdrücklich klarstellen, daß die Grundrechtscharta die Kompetenzen der Gemeinschaft nicht erweitert. In gleicher Weise sollte klargestellt werden, daß die Grundrechte auch der rechtsfortbildenden Tätigkeit des Europäischen Gerichtshofs Grenzen setzen.

Wenn aus der Charta justitiable Rechte werden, sollte das Initiativrecht natürlich zuerst bei den Grundrechtsträgern liegen, es sollte also eine europäische Verfassungsbeschwerde geben. Die Flut der Beschwerden könnte das zuständige Gericht jedoch nur mit einem offenen oder versteckten Annahmeverfahren bewältigen. Damit daraus keine Schutzlücken entstehen, sollte parallel auch eine Nichtigkeitsklage der Mitgliedstaaten möglich sein. Auch sollten nationale Gerichte die Befugnis zur Vorlage erhalten.

Der Grundrechtsschutz gegen den Europäischen Gerichtshof wäre am wirksamsten, wenn die Anwendung der europäischen Grundrechte einem eigenen, dem Gerichtshof gegenüber autonomen Europäischen Verfassungsgericht anvertraut würde. Wenn das politisch nicht durchzusetzen ist, braucht man weiterhin das Drohpotential der nationalen Verfassungsgerichte und des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte. Sie können auch am ehesten verhindern, daß der unitarische Effekt ein zu hohes Gewicht erhält.

Position des
Verbandes Privater Rundfunk und
Telekommunikation e. V. (VPRT)

zum Entwurf eines Europäischen Grundrechts der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit in der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta

Der Verband Privater Rundfunk und Telekommunikation e. V. (VPRT) vertritt die Interessen von rund 170 Unternehmen aus den Bereichen Fernsehen, Hörfunk, Multimedia und Telekommunikation. Die Festschreibung eines Rechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit innerhalb der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta ist für die privaten Rundfunkveranstalter in Deutschland von besonderer Bedeutung. Der VPRT bedankt sich daher für die Möglichkeit der Stellungnahme zum Entwurf eines Europäischen Grundrechts der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit in der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta.

I. Allgemeine Anmerkungen

Nach Ansicht der Mitgliedsunternehmen des VPRT ist die Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit für freiheitlich-demokratische Staaten schlechthin konstituierend. So sichern neben Artikel 5 des Grundgesetzes der Bundesrepublik Deutschland auch Artikel 10 der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention (EMRK) und Artikel 19 des Internationalen Pakts über bürgerliche und politische Rechte der Vereinten Nationen (IPbürgR) die Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit in jeweils unterschiedlicher Ausgestaltung ab. Auch der aktuelle Vorschlag des Grundrechtskonvents (Convent 28 vom 05. Mai 2000) sieht unter Artikel 15 ein solches Grundrecht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit vor.

Textvorschlag des Konvents (Convent 28 vom 05. Mai 2000):

Jede Person hat das Recht auf freie Meinungsäußerung. Dieses Recht schließt die Meinungsfreiheit und die Freiheit ein, Informationen und Ideen ohne behördliche Eingriffe und ohne Rücksicht auf Staatsgrenzen zu empfangen und weiterzugeben.

Der Begründung des Konvents kann entnommen werden, dass mit der Abfassung dieses Artikels die Übernahme der Grundsätze des Artikels 10 EMRK unter Berücksichtigung der Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte (EGMR) beabsichtigt sind.

Wir erlauben uns, an dieser Stelle den Textvorschlag des VPRT, der den Vorschlag des Konvents aufgreift und auf diesem aufbaut, gegenüberzustellen. Die unterstrichenen Passagen kennzeichnen die aus unserer Sicht erforderlichen textlichen Erweiterungen bzw. Veränderungen.

Textvorschlag des VPRT:

(2) In diese Rechte darf nur eingegriffen werden, soweit es zum Schutz anderer Rechtsgüter unerlässlich ist.

(3) Eine Zensur findet nicht statt.

1.

Die Mitglieder des VPRT unterstützen den Ansatz des Konvents, das in der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta vorgesehene Recht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit in Anlehnung an den Wortlaut des Artikels 10 Absatz 1 EMRK subjektiv-rechtlich auszugestalten.

Nach unserem Verständnis ist das Recht der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit ein klassisches Freiheitsrecht, das den privaten Medien ebenso wie anderen Trägern des Grundrechts als eigenes, subjektives Recht zuzuordnen ist. Bereits der Abfassung des Artikels 10 Absatz 1 EMRK liegt in seiner subjektiv-rechtlichen Ausgestaltung ein modernes Verständnis der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit zugrunde, das den Grundrechtsträgern vor dem Hintergrund aktueller technologischer Gegebenheiten in ausreichendem Maße Entwicklungsspielraum zubilligt und damit zur kulturellen Vielfaltssicherung und zur Stärkung des Binnenmarktes auf europäischer Ebene beiträgt. Aus der Sicht der privaten Rundfunkveranstalter verdeutlichen insbesondere die Entwicklung der digitalen Übertragungstechnik und die erweiterten Nutzungsmöglichkeiten des Internets die Notwendigkeit, dieses Verständnis der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit als klassisches, subjektives Freiheitsrecht innerhalb der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta fortzusetzen. Auch der Europäische Gerichtshof, der schon in der Rechtssache 4/73 festgestellt hat, dass die EMRK für das Gemeinschaftsrecht zumindest eine „orientierende Funktion“ besitzt (EuGH Slg. 1974, 491, 507), hat den Grundsatz der freien Meinungsäußerung mehrfach bestätigt und geht unter Berücksichtigung der Rechtsprechung des EGMR von einem subjektiven Verständnis dieses Freiheitsrechts aus (erstmalig Rs. C-260/89, EuGH Slg. 1991, I-5485). Die Festschreibung eines Ausgestaltungsvorbehalts, wie ihn beispielsweise Artikel 5 Absatz 1 Satz 2 des Grundgesetzes der Bundesrepublik auf der Grundlage einer objektiv-rechtlichen textlichen Abfassung vorsieht, ist veraltet – eine Sondersituation des Rundfunks, die einen solchen Ausgestaltungsvorbehalt rechtfertigen würde, ist schon lange nicht mehr gegeben: Bereits heute bringen die privaten Rundfunkanbieter in Deutschland und europaweit eine Vielzahl qualitativ hochwertiger Angebote hervor. Durch die Digitalisierung der Übertragungswege und der daraus resultierenden Schaffung neuer Übertragungskapazitäten wird diese Angebotsvielfalt kontinuierlich zunehmen. Diesem Umstand trägt der Konvent durch seine zeitgemäße Haltung, das Grundrecht auf Meinungs- und

Der Konvent hat in seinem Vorschlag vom 05. Mai 2000 zur Abfassung des hier diskutierten Artikels 15 davon abgesehen, die Schrankenregelung des Artikels 10 der EMRK zu übernehmen. Die Beschränkungen für die in der Charta vorgesehenen Freiheitsgrundrechte sollen vielmehr in einer allgemein gehaltenen, horizontalen Bestimmung niedergelegt werden, die ihrerseits jedoch wieder unmittelbar auf die Schrankenregelungen innerhalb der EMRK und damit auch auf die des Artikels 10 verweist (siehe Convent 27 vom 18. April 2000, Artikel H. 2).

Der VPRT möchte im Hinblick auf den Vorschlag des Konvents zu Artikel H. 2 im Zusammenhang mit dem Recht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit anregen, hier von einer allgemeinen, horizontalen Schrankenbestimmung mit einem Verweis auf die EMRK Abstand zu nehmen und sich statt dessen aus Gründen der gesetzgeberischen Präzision auf eine Regelung zu verständigen, welche die für die Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit wesentlichen Schranken in einer in erheblichem Maße vereinfachten und dennoch umfassenden Weise normiert. Hierzu verweist der VPRT auf seinen Textvorschlag zu Absatz 2 des Rechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit, der wie folgt lautet: „In diese Rechte darf nur eingegriffen werden, soweit es zum Schutz anderer Rechtsgüter unerlässlich ist“.

Eingangs möchte der VPRT klarstellen, dass seine Mitglieder selbstverständlich davon ausgehen, dass ein Eingriff in das Grundrecht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit wie bei allen Grundrechten nur dann zulässig sein kann, wenn dies auf der Grundlage eines Gesetzes erfolgt. Dieser Grundsatz entspricht dem bundesdeutschen Grundsatz des Vorbehalts des Gesetzes und ist im vorliegenden Fall zum Schutz des Grundrechts der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit unerlässlich. Der VPRT möchte anregen, diesen Grundsatz innerhalb der allgemeinen Regelungen der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta festzuschreiben. Unter dem Begriff des „Gesetzes“ ist hierbei eine legislative Handlungsform zu verstehen, die sich aus den allgemeinen Regelungen der Grundrechtscharta ergibt.

Des weiteren möchte der VPRT darauf hinweisen, dass der seinem Textvorschlag zu entnehmende Verzicht auf die Festschreibung des Kriteriums „zum Schutz anderer, höherrangiger Rechtsgüter“ rein sprachlicher, nicht jedoch inhaltlicher Natur ist. Keinesfalls soll hierdurch die Eingriffsschwelle in das Grundrecht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit herabgesenkt werden. Der hervorgehobene Bedeutungsgehalt dieses Grundrechts muss vielmehr zwingend im Rahmen einer konkreten Einzelfallabwägung zwischen den in Absatz 1 niedergelegten Rechten und dem jeweiligen anderen Rechtsgut, also innerhalb der Verhältnismäßigkeitsprüfung berücksichtigt werden. Der VPRT trägt durch diesen Ansatz dem Umstand Rechnung, dass dem Verhältnismäßigkeitsgrundsatz im Gemeinschaftsrecht überragende Bedeutung zukommt (vgl. z. B. für Maßnahmen der Gemeinschaft gegenüber den Mitgliedstaaten die Festschreibung in Artikel 5 Absatz 3 n. F. EGV). Eine Maßnahme muss also zur Erreichung des verfolgten Ziels geeignet, erforderlich und angemessen sein. Bei der Prüfung der Verhältnismäßigkeit legt der EuGH regelmäßig das Schwergewicht auf die Erforderlichkeit im Sinne des geringstmöglichen Eingriffs. Es ist also davon auszugehen, dass der Bewertung, ob ein anderes Rechtsgut gegenüber dem Grundrecht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit als höherrangig anzusehen ist, im Rahmen der Verhältnismäßigkeitsprüfung in umfassender Weise Rechnung getragen wird. Ein Eingriff in das Grundrecht ist demnach nur in sehr engen Grenzen gerechtfertigt.

Zudem möchten die Mitglieder des VPRT klarstellen, dass grundsätzlich keine Beschränkung des Rechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit wegen eines bestimmten Meinungsinhalts erfolgen darf. Von diesem Grundsatz können insbesondere dann Ausnahmen erforderlich sein, wenn Bestimmungen zum Schutz der Jugend und zum Schutz der persönlichen Ehre betroffen sind. Auch hier ist jedoch zu berücksichtigen, dass etwa gesetzliche Bestimmungen zum Schutz der Jugend die grundlegende Bedeutung der in Absatz 1 des Textvorschlags des VPRT niedergelegten Rechte und den Grundsatz der Verhältnismäßigkeit wahren müssen. Notwendig ist demnach auch hier eine Güterabwägung zwischen der Forderung nach umfassendem Grundrechtsschutz und dem hervorgerufenen Interesse an einem effektiven Jugendschutz.

Hinsichtlich der Frage nach dem Adressatenkreis und der Trägerschaft des Europäischen Grundrechts der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit spricht sich der VPRT für eine Anwendbarkeit neben der jeweiligen nationalen Verfassung aus. Insoweit möchte der VPRT den in Artikel H.1 niedergelegten Ansatz des Konvents (Convent 27 vom 18. April 2000) unterstützen. Adressaten des Grundrechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit sind demnach sowohl die Europäische Union und ihre Organe als auch die Mitgliedstaaten selbst. Ein klares Nebeneinander beider Grundrechtskataloge würde die Rechtsvereinheitlichung im Binnenmarkt fördern, die vorhandenen Grundrechtskataloge ergänzen und sich letztlich unter Gesichtspunkten des doppelten Grundrechtsschutzes keineswegs nachteilig auswirken.

4.

Da bereits angedacht wurde, die Europäische Grundrechtscharta - möglicherweise durch eine entsprechende Änderung des EG-Vertrages - rechtsverbindlich auszugestalten, möchte der VPRT zur Vermeidung von Zersplitterungen beider Regelungswerke anregen, die Grundrechtscharta in den EG-Vertrag einzubinden. Unter Anknüpfung an die bereits vorhandene Systematik innerhalb des EG-Vertrages erscheint hier die Einbindung in die in Artikel 17 ff n. F. EGV niedergelegten Unionsbürgerrechte ein sinnvoller Ansatz.

Des weiteren spricht sich der VPRT dafür aus, die Justitiabilität der in der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta niedergelegten Rechte festzuschreiben. Nur so können sich die Träger der Grundrechte vor den jeweiligen Gerichten auf diese berufen und ihre Durchsetzung herbeiführen. Der Rechtsschutz auf europäischer Ebene sollte, da es sich um verfassungsrechtliche Streitigkeiten handeln würde, möglichst durch den EuGH sichergestellt werden. Hierzu könnte an die Einrichtung von entsprechenden Spezialkammern für Individualbeschwerden gedacht werden, die sich vorbereitend mit der streitgegenständlichen Materie beschäftigen. Zudem sollte eine Kooperation mit dem EGMR unter besonderer Berücksichtigung seiner subjektiv-rechtlich gefestigten Rechtsprechung zu Artikel 10 EMRK in Betracht gezogen werden.

II. Einzelerläuterungen

1. Absatz 1

Die in Absatz 1 Satz 1 gewählte Formulierung „Jeder“ verdeutlicht zum einen den subjektiv-rechtlichen Charakter des Freiheitsrechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit. Die Formulierung stellt klar, dass dieses Recht und damit auch die in Satz 3 ausdrücklich benannte Medienfreiheit (hierzu ausführlich unten) sowohl den privaten Rundfunkanbietern als auch anderen Grundrechtsträgern uneingeschränkt zusteht. Anders als der von Seiten des Konvents gewählte Ansatz „Jede Person“ lässt der Vorschlag des VPRT in Anlehnung an die Formulierung in Artikel 5 Absatz 1 Satz 1 des Grundgesetzes zudem unmissverständlich erkennen, dass Träger des Grundrechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit nicht nur natürliche Personen, sondern beispielsweise auch juristische Personen oder andere Personenvereinigungen sein können. Die Festschreibung einer solchen Formulierung würde bereits im Vorhinein zur Rechtssicherheit im Hinblick auf mögliche Auslegungsfragen beitragen.

Unter dem in Absatz 1 Satz 1 normierten „Recht auf freie Meinungsäußerung“ ist das Grundrecht auf Äußerung und Verbreitung der Meinung zu verstehen. Hierdurch wird die nach außen gerichtete Handlung, also die Abgabe der Meinung sowie der Prozess der Informationsübertragung geschützt. In Satz 2 wird dann eingangs klargestellt, dass das Recht der freien Meinungsäußerung die Meinungsfreiheit (...) einschließt. Unter der hier separat normierten Meinungsfreiheit ist der innere Vorgang der Meinungsbildung zu verstehen. Zudem möchte der VPRT hierdurch klargestellt wissen, dass die Meinung inhaltlich frei ist („Meinungsneutralität“). Diese Auslegung findet ihre Entsprechung in den Ausführungen des VPRT zum Schrankenvorbehalt (vgl. I., 2.). Hier verdeutlicht der VPRT, dass grundsätzlich keine Beschränkung des Rechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit wegen eines bestimmten Meinungsinhalts erfolgen darf, wobei von diesem Grundsatz insbesondere dann Ausnahmen erforderlich sein können, wenn Bestimmungen zum Schutz der Jugend und zum Schutz der persönlichen Ehre betroffen sind.

Unter der in Satz 2 normierten „Informationsfreiheit“ versteht der VPRT das Recht, sich aus allgemein zugänglichen, vielfältigen Quellen ungehindert zu informieren. Diese Interpretation der Informationsfreiheit trägt vor allem dem Gedanken der Förderung der Informationsgesellschaft auf europäischer Ebene Rechnung. Zudem entspricht sie dem gängigen Verständnis des Artikels 10 EMRK und der Auslegung des entsprechenden Kriteriums in Artikel 5 Absatz 1 Satz 1, 1. HS des Grundgesetzes.

Unter den in Satz 2 normierten Kriterien des „Empfangs und der Weitergabe“ von Informationen und Ideen ist auch und insbesondere die Veranstaltung und Verbreitung von Rundfunk zu verstehen, und zwar unabhängig von dem dieser Informationsweitergabe zugrunde liegenden technischen Übertragungsvorgang. Nach dem Verständnis des VPRT muss die Freiheit des Empfangs und der Weitergabe von Informationen alle wesensmäßig mit der Veranstaltung von Rundfunk zusammenhängenden Tätigkeiten, von der Beschaffung der Information (vgl. vorstehend) und der Produktion der Sendungen bis hin zu ihrer Verbreitung erfassen.

Die Aufnahme des als Satz 3 niedergelegten Textvorschlags des VPRT („Die Medien sind frei“) ist aus der Sicht der privaten Rundfunkanbieter von hoher Wichtigkeit. Durch diese Klarstellung lässt die Systematik des Absatzes 1 unzweifelhaft erkennen, dass das Recht der freien Meinungsäußerung (Satz 1) sowohl das Recht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit (Satz 2) als auch die Medienfreiheit (Satz 3) umfasst. Hierdurch soll zum einen verdeutlicht werden, dass den Medien das Recht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit uneingeschränkt zusteht. Dieser Gedanke steht in unmittelbarem Zusammenhang mit dem unter I., 1. und II., 1. dargelegten Ansatz des subjektiv-rechtlichen Verständnisses des Grundrechts und der daraus folgenden textlichen Klarstellung, dass „jeder“ und damit auch die privaten Medienanbieter Träger des Grundrechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit sind. Zum anderen ist es aus der Sicht der Mitglieder des VPRT vor dem Hintergrund der aktuellen technologischen Entwicklungen unerlässlich, dem Konvergenzgedanken dadurch Rechnung zu tragen, dass für alle Medien, die Träger dieses Grundrechts sein können, ein Oberbegriff gefunden wird, um ein in Teilbereichen schon existentes Zusammenwachsen einzelner Branchen abzusichern. Nur so kann der notwendige Entwicklungsspielraum für bereits vorhandene und in Zukunft aktuell werdende technologische Veränderungen (Internet, Digitalisierung) geschaffen werden. Hierbei sehen die Mitglieder des VPRT es als selbstverständlich an, dass unter die in Satz 3 normierte Medienfreiheit die klassischen elektronischen Medien ebenso wie die Presse und der Film zu fassen sind. Der Anwendungsbereich muss jedoch für die Medien insgesamt geöffnet werden, eine Auflistung einzelner Medienfreiheiten, wie sie etwa in Artikel 5 Absatz 1 Satz 2 des Grundgesetzes erfolgt, erscheint aus den benannten Gründen veraltet. Nur durch eine Verschmelzung der einzelnen Freiheiten zu einer Medienfreiheit, die sich für kein Medium nachteilig auswirken würde, kann das Wachstum der europäischen Informationsgesellschaft langfristig abgesichert werden. Der Gedanke der Konvergenz, der hier manifestiert werden sollte, fördert Wettbewerb und stärkt damit den europäischen Binnenmarkt.

2. Absatz 2

Wie bereits unter I., 2. dargelegt, möchte der VPRT im Hinblick auf den Vorschlag des Konvents zu Artikel H. 2 im Zusammenhang mit dem Recht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit anregen, von der Aufnahme einer allgemeinen, horizontalen Schrankenregelung mit einem Verweis auf die EMRK Abstand zu nehmen und statt dessen eine eigene Schrankenregelung in der folgenden textlichen Fassung aufzunehmen: „In diese Rechte darf nur eingegriffen werden, soweit es zum Schutz anderer Rechtsgüter unerlässlich ist“. Die herausragende Bedeutung des Rechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit erfordert eine konkrete Einzelfallabwägung der in Rede stehenden Rechtsgüter im Rahmen der Verhältnismäßigkeitsprüfung. Zudem muss hier der Grundsatz des effektiven Grundrechtsschutzes berücksichtigt werden. Ein Eingriff ist deshalb nur in sehr engen Grenzen gerechtfertigt.

3. Absatz 3

Der Textvorschlag des VPRT greift in Absatz 3 das Zensurverbot auf. Bereits aus der Begründung des VPRT zum Schrankenvorbehalt (vgl. I., 2.) und der Begründung zur textlichen Fassung des Absatzes 1 (Recht auf Meinungsfreiheit, II., 1.) geht hervor, dass in keinem Fall eine Beschränkung des Rechts auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit wegen eines bestimmten Meinungsinhalts erfolgen darf. Die Meinung muss also inhaltlich frei sein, was mit dem Stichwort der „Meinungsneutralität“ umschrieben werden kann. Zur Vermeidung möglicher Unklarheiten möchte der VPRT anregen, das Zensurverbot, das für die privaten Rundfunkanbieter in Deutschland eine Gewährleistung von hohem Bedeutungsgehalt darstellt, ausdrücklich zu normieren.

Article 26 : Right to vote and to stand as a candidate in municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

The “official heritage and public traditions as to culture, language or religion” of a local community should be recognised by every citizen participating in the elections by means of accepting the following principles:

1. Concerning the “public heritage of a local Community”, like the official language in public life and administration, the official feasting or commemoration days as to culture or religion, all rights and obligations resulting from the present legal situation in a Member State of the Union have to be respected.
(> Status quo principle)
2. Any person who intends to participate as a candidate in municipal elections should have shown in practice that he or she is ready to integrate into the existing local Community and is going to respect the “official cultural heritage” of the place concerned.
(> principle of good will to integrate).
3. Any elected democratic majority having different preferences as to the “official and public traditions” cannot change the legally existing provisions as to the linguistic rights and obligations or as to the official cultural traditions in public life of the municipality, except the concerned “cultural/linguistic group” (historic majority) wants to change the provision or conditions itself.
(> Principle of 'historic' rights/ancienty, or application of the principle: “Treat your neighbour as you want to be treated by him in the same situation!”).

PROPOSAL FOR AMENDING THE DRAFT CHARTER ON FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS concerning “Safeguarding public traditions and cultural heritage”

- > reference: Article 26: “Right to vote and to stand in local elections ...”
Article 30: “Freedom to move and to settle within the Union ...”

EXPOSE DE MOTIF

The European Union constitutes a multi-national, multi-cultural and multi-lingual community. The treaty on the European Union (Maastricht, article 8) introduced the citizenship of the Union for all nationals of the Member states and the right to vote and to stand (for such nationals) as a candidate (not only in common European elections but also) in municipal elections in the Member state of residence.

Common citizenship and the free movement of people of different cultural and linguistic background within the citizenship's common political territory can not only create permanent linguistic conflicts between the different cultural groups of the political entity (Country, State, Community, Union), but also put a permanent strain on local self-government by threatening existing local majorities (ethnic, cultural or linguistic) to become minorities through the immigration of people from other parts of the Union having another cultural background and speaking other languages. (examples within Belgium, France, Spain, eastern European countries, ex-Yugoslavia, Russia etc.)

Thus, common citizenship, free movement of people and the right to participate in elections might, especially on the local level, bring, if there are different languages, cultures and traditions within this political union, two universally accepted principles into a permanent conflict, i. e., the territorial principle versus the democratic principle.

If the language and culture would be of uniformity all over the Union, state or Country, this conflict would not exist.

For a multinational community like the European Union it is therefore of vital interest for its long-term political cohesion that universally accepted principles and rules are applied, especially concerning - in an adequate way - the protection of languages, cultures and traditions. This is in particular true on the local level as the cultural and linguistic identity of people living since generations in a specific area or place can be more easily outvoted through democratic elections by a sufficient number of newcomers having another linguistic and cultural background or other priorities in these fields.

In the context of the EU-citizenship and mobility, everybody who lives and/or works in a commune or town of another Member state can easily join local or regional parties or even create new local or regional groupings. Thus, through mobility and immigration, present local majorities can become new minorities.

Multinational and multi-cultural societies therefore need a general code of conduct for treating with the problem of changing local majorities, respectively of new cultural and linguistic minorities, and this, in the first place, at the local level, i.e., the commune, municipality or town-district level, as they are the smallest democratically elected political entities covering a specifically defined territory.

Existing problems linked to local and regional ethnic minorities can not be solved with this amendment to the Charter, but this amendment can help to avoid new conflicts between indigenous people and new-comers at the local level in the future. Fundamental aspects of minorities at the local and regional level would have to be dealt within the framework of a general European charter on minorities. But the specific problem of a possible switch in the local linguistic and cultural majority in a specific municipality due to a large number of residents of other Member States who can now participate in this local balloting must be solved within the general framework of a Charter on Fundamental Rights in the European Union.

The Union level must show to its Member States and to all its citizens that it follows universal principles acceptable by everybody because it follows the ideas of the "categorical imperative" of Immanuel Kant,

'treat your neighbour as you want to be treated by him "

The target of this new article is to avoid future problems or solve them in advance before they generate linguistic, cultural or ethnic tensions within a multi-cultural society. That this is not a theoretical problem show the various national derogations or transitional provisions already foreseen (Luxemburg, Belgium, France) as to the Directive on the participation in municipal elections adopted by the Council in 1994.

The main target of this amendment should be therefore, to take away the fear and the possible negative impression that the European integration process, the mobility of people, common citizenship and the voting right of all citizens of the Union at the local level would lead in the medium and long run to a situation where a democratic elected majority decides a change in the linguistic rights and cultural traditions of the indigenous people which live since generation at that place.

Every citizen of the EU should be aware, that besides his individual and collective civic rights which he or she can enjoy everywhere in the Union, he or she also has to accept the rights and obligations coming from the idea of safeguarding public traditions and cultural heritage in an existing local community. (> idea of guaranteeing diversity within unity!)

Detailed argumentation for the amendment:

“RESPECT FOR PUBLIC TRADITIONS AND CULTURAL HERITAGE”

Objective/Targets

The common citizenship and the right of each citizen of the European Union to participate in municipal (local) elections shall not come out as a threat to the linguistic, cultural and traditional heritage of indigenous people living at a specific place since generations.

The guarantee of the "four freedoms" within the Union (mobility of people having different cultural and linguistic background, free exchange of goods and services as well as free movement of capital) shall be accompanied by an equivalent guarantee of the language used in public administration and of public cultural traditions at the local level.

Principles

In this context the following principles shall apply:

'The one who moves, whether for professional or for private reasons, has to adapt to the rules and public traditions of the place he or she has deliberately chosen to live.'

(General principle of a multi-national and multi-cultural Community, Union or Federation)

a) All rights and obligations resulting from the present legal situation as to the language(s) used in public administration and as to official contacts with local public authorities should be guaranteed. The same should apply to public cultural and religious events within the local community.

b) Any person who intends to stand as a candidate in municipal elections should have shown in practice (by learning and using, for example, the language(s) in public life) that he or she is ready to integrate in the existing local Community and is going to respect the linguistic and cultural traditions which can be considered as a specific right, heritage or identity of the people living often since generations at that place.

(Principle of good will to integrate).

c) A democratically elected majority, having linguistic and cultural preferences which differ from the legally existing situation in the basic local government unit, can only change the elementary linguistic rights and cultural traditions in public life of that place, if the concerned former cultural majority group (historic majority of the concerned political self-governing unit) wants to change the conditions or provisions itself.

(Principle of 'historic' rights/ancienty).

Limitation and Exclusion

Existing ethnic minorities on the local and regional level are not concerned with this Charter article; problems in this context should be subject to a general European charter on rights and obligations of local minorities.

Change in the territorial extension of the basic local government unit

A change in the territory of the basic local government unit can have an important impact on the political, cultural and linguistic majority within this unit; therefore, any change in the territorial extension of the basic local government unit, either by means of a fusion of communes, municipalities, town-districts or through a splitting up into smaller political self-governing units, shall- not only be subject of a mutual agreement between the old and new political majority groups of the original political unit(s), especially, if they are of different cultural and linguistic background, - but also be the result of applying universal criteria to the local level and of objective indicators guaranteeing a viable local self-government such as common interests and sound financial structures of the old and new basic local government units.

A change in the territorial extension of a basic local government unit should at least take into consideration aspects like guaranteeing democratic representativity and secrecy (anonymity in voting procedures), possibility of realising common cultural and linguistic interests, equal treatment of new minorities, average seize in population and territory of the new political unit within the larger political and administrative context (district, canton, Kreis, county, province, departement, region, Land, etc.), administrative efficiency, financial rentability, economic interdependencies, fiscal solidarity, financial perequat on mechanisms, etc.)

Protection of the local cultural and linguistic heritage

a) The protect on of cultural traditions shall include, in particular, the right to maintain publicly decided and/or organized cultural and religious events such as historic commemorations, special cultural and religious holidays, etc. including public subsidies for the conservation of such like traditional cultural heritage.

b) The protect on of linguistic rights shall cover, in particular, a language guarantee in local administration, that are all elementary aspects of official language(s) use in local administration like documents, announcements, public sessions, official meetings, official contacts between the local authorities and the citizens.

The language(s) used in local administration can be the national-wide spoken language, the regional or even a national-wide minority language spoken by the major ty at the concerned place.

In a cultural and linguistic homogeneous state or country, the language used in local administration and in official contacts with the local authorities is the language of (the majority of) the population at the concerned place which coincides with the national-wide spoken language;

In the case of a multi-cultural and multi-linguistic state or country specific linguistic rules on the basis of the territorial principle do already exist at the regional or local level. Mostly, the official language at the local level with the administration and local authorities is the regional or even local language, or the combination of two languages, the local-majority language and the national-wide language.

In a multi-national and multi-lingual Community like the European Union, for reasons of transparency and efficiency, the following guideline dealing with the relationship between the EU citizen and the public sector should become as a general target (as examples in Switzerland (CH) show):

Uni-lingual administration (protect on of the indigenous people and efficiency), but a multi-lingual population (target of integration and respect for cultural diversity within political unity)

CONCERNING: CHARTER ON FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS IN THE EU
EU-CITIZENSHIP AND LANGUAGE RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF THE CITIZEN

1. THE CITIZEN AND THE INSTITUTION OF THE EUROPEAN UNION (EU)

THE BASIC PRINCIPLES ARE:

- "All languages of Member States which have been recognized as official languages of the European Union shall be considered as equal as to their official treatment on the Union's level."
- "Local and regional languages within the EU which are recognized by the concerned member state shall be treated on an equal footing by the European institutions when specific activities or information of the Union are foreseen at the place or region concerned."
- "The acceptance of linguistic diversity is the price of democracy within a multi-ethnic community where everyone wants to keep and safeguard his/her cultural and linguistic identity."

RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF A CITIZEN AND/OR CIVIL SERVANT AS TO EU ACTIVITIES:

1.1. RELATING TO THE EXTERNAL RELATIONS OF THE UNION'S INSTITUTIONS

- CONCERNING CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CITIZEN

Any EU-citizen as the right to address his correspondence to an official body or service of the European Union in his mother tongue as far as his language is recognized as official language of the Union; correspondence in other official languages of Member States as to pass the representative bodies of the concerned Member State at the European level.

The correspondence of the institutions of the European Union is done in the official languages of the Union and in particular in the language of the correspondent if this is known. In general and if there is no specific indication the reply of a service of the Union's institution is done in the language of the previous correspondence by the concerned person.

- CONCERNING DECISIONS OF THE INSTITUTIONS AND THEIR PUBLIC INFORMATION

All official decisions taken within the framework of the European Union like regulations directives recommendations court rules etc. are published in the official languages of the Union. Important information topics shall be in all official languages of the Union; publications for a specific public can be made in the language or languages of the audience concerned.

- CONCERNING MEETINGS OF OFFICIAL POLITICAL MANDATEES AT THE EU-LEVEL:

IN OFFICIAL MEETINGS OF THE EU-PARLIAMENT AND THE UNION'S COUNCIL

As neither an elected member of Parliament nor a representative of a government was appointed on the basis of his language knowledge he must on the Union's level have at least the possibility to speak in one of the official languages of the Union and to get the documents to decide over in the official language of his choice.

This is the right and obligation of every political mandatee (directly or indirectly elected) in the European Union.

IN WORKING AND STUDY GROUPS WITH NATIONAL REPRESENTATIVES

As representatives of Member States nominated for experts meetings on the European and international level should be selected on the basis of their professional capacities their linguistic background should be in general already multi-lingual; but as long as there is no decision about a non-discriminatory inter-ethnic communication language or one official working language within the European institutions each representative must have the right to express himself in one of the official languages of the Union.

1.2. RELATING TO THE INTERNAL RELATIONS OF THE UNION'S INSTITUTIONS

- CONCERNING LINGUISTIC PRECONDITIONS TO BECOME AN EUROPEAN CIVIL SERVANT

Any person who is applying to work in the institutions of the European Union has to bring with him an adequate linguistic background; in principle he or she should besides the mother tongue be capable to understand to speak and to write two other languages of which one should be one of the official languages of the Union.

- CONCERNING THE WORKING LANGUAGES WITHIN THE EU INSTITUTIONS

In principle all official languages of the Union can be used as a working language by a staff member. For reasons of cost time and efficiency as to the need of translation in the medium term only one common working language should be foreseen for internal preparatory work within the services and institutions of the European Union; as long as a national language as to fulfill this function and until final acceptance after thorough experiments and tests by the staff and the competent bodies a non-discriminatory inter-ethnic communication language based on a language model (planned language) shall be placed alongside this national language as the second official working language within the EU institutions in order to balance the disadvantages for all those staff members who do have not the national working language as mother tongue. Thus also those speakers who can work in their mother tongue are obliged to learn and at least understand the second non-discriminatory working language.

2. THE CITIZEN AND THE PUBLIC AUTHORITIE IN MEMBER STATE

THE BASIC PRINCIPLE ARE:

- "The one who moves has to recognize the public (cultural and linguistic) traditions of the place where he or she is going to!"
- " It is in the responsibility of the traveler to make himself understood and not an obligation of a public authority or its representative to be able to understand the language of a foreigner at a specific place."
- “Persons employed in public services should get incentives to speak also other languages!”

RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF A CITIZEN AND/OR CIVIL SERVANT AS TO THE PUBLIC SECTOR:

2.1. IN RELATION TO THE PUBLIC AUTHORITIES IN MEMBER STATES

- WHEN TRAVELING WITHIN MEMBER STATES OF THE EU

Public authorities of Member States are not obliged neither to speak nor to present official documents in another language than the official language at the place concerned. In general it is in the responsibility of everyone to make himself understood in any contact with public authorities although in specific social circumstances the costs of an interpreter or translator might be covered by the public service in question.

- WHEN INVOLVED IN LEGAL PROCEDURES IN MEMBER STATES

Every EU-citizen has the right when being involved in a legal procedure within the territory of the European Union to express himself in the language of his choice; nevertheless if the language chosen by him is neither understood by a competent representative of the legal procedure nor the official language of the place or territory in question all costs of interpretation or translation are at his charge.

- WHEN SETTLING IN WITHIN THE TERRITORY OF A MEMBER STATE

Having the right to travel and to settle without discrimination to a national resident within all Member States of the European Union every citizen of the Union as nevertheless to integrate into the public life of the place of his/her choice in particular as to the official language(s) of administration; although public staff members in specific functions with frequent contacts to clients speaking other languages should in general be multi-lingual public services at the local regional or national level are not obliged for reasons of efficiency to have speakers or documents in a language which is not the official of the place concerned.

2.2. IN RELATION TO LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION WITHIN MEMBER STATES- CONCERNING PUBLIC SCHOOLS

On the basis of an agreement between the ministers of education within the Member States of the European Union every person leaving school within the EU shall in the medium term be able to master besides his mother tongue two other languages. The languages offered at a specific school are the result of the general educational system of the country or region of the local priorities of the school in question and of the language preferences expressed by the parents of the pupils of the school. Elementary instruction in a mother tongue which is not the official or one of the official languages of the place concerned is subject to democratic decisions in the competent political bodies in particular as to the necessary allocation of the human and financial resources.

- CONCERNING PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Language groups which are speaking other languages than that or those officially instructed in public schools can organize themselves in the framework of the constitution and the educational system of the country or region concerned in private schools on their own expenditures; in order to assure a harmonious integration of these language groups into the local cultural and linguistic environment one official language of the place concerned shall be an obligatory instruction subject of the private schools.

Intervention du Forum des Migrants de l'Union européenne à l'occasion de l'audition des ONG devant la "Convention"
Bruxelles, le 27 avril 2000

Monsieur le Président,

Mesdames et Messieurs, membres de la "Convention",

Le Forum des Migrants de l'UE remercie la "Convention" pour la possibilité qui lui a été donnée d'exprimer son opinion par rapport au projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne. La préoccupation du Forum des Migrants de l'Union européenne, en tant qu'organisation représentant les ressortissants des pays tiers résidant dans l'Union européenne, est celle de promouvoir l'égalité de traitement entre les ressortissants des Etats membres et les ressortissants des pays tiers légalement résidant dans l'Union.

L'Union européenne est désormais une communauté bien diversifiée dans laquelle des personnes de différentes langues, cultures, religions, appartenances ethniques, nationalités vivent ensemble. La question de la participation et de la jouissance des droits fondamentaux ne concerne pas uniquement les ressortissants des pays membres de l'Union européenne, mais aussi quelques 14 millions de personnes ressortissants des pays tiers résidant dans l'Union. A tel propos, le Forum des Migrants a à plusieurs reprises mis en évidence les limites du Traité révisé. Il nous semble que le traité de Amsterdam, en introduisant un concept de citoyenneté européenne liée à la nationalité des Etats membres et non pas à la résidence sur le sol de l'Union européenne, ait établi une "discrimination institutionnalisée" entre les ressortissants communautaires et les ressortissants des pays tiers. Un exemple pratique de cette discrimination est montré par le fait que, contrairement aux ressortissants des pays membres de l'Union européenne, les ressortissants des pays tiers qui résident dans un pays de l'Union européenne dont ils n'ont pas la nationalité, ne peuvent pas bénéficier du droit de voter et d'être élus aux élections européennes et municipales (article 19 CE).

La moitié de cette population immigrée, constituée par des enfants, est naturalisée, devenue européenne, mais ne pouvant participer, pour son jeune âge, à la prise de décision concernant son avenir ni par elle-même, ni par ses parents qui ne peuvent voter. A cette occasion, nous souhaitons aussi rappeler que l'article 13 du même traité, pourvoyant à une base légale pour une action contre les discriminations sur le sol de l'Union, ne couvre pas les discriminations fondées sur la nationalité. Donc, aucune base juridique ne saurait pour l'instant couvrir les discriminations les plus graves reposant sur une distinction de nationalité.

Le Forum des Migrants garde l'espoir de voir toutes ou certaines de ces lacunes comblées lors de la CIG 2000 et garde surtout l'espoir que le projet de rédaction d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux ainsi que le travail de la Convention puissent contribuer à avancer dans ce sens. Nous croyons que les deux processus - celui de la rédaction de la Charte et de la Conférence intergouvernementale doivent être considérés comme intimement liés l'un à l'autre et qu'une synergie devrait exister entre le travail de la CIG et celui de la "Convention". Pour cette raison, nous espérons que la Convention puisse idéalement saisir l'occasion de la rédaction de la Charte afin de contribuer à surmonter la discrimination "institutionnalisée" dans le traité de Amsterdam que nous avons dénoncée. Cela devrait être possible si l'on considère que la Convention a, par rapport à la CIG, la particularité de travailler sous l'ongle des droits de l'homme et que les droits de l'homme, entre autres, ont la caractéristique d'être universels et indivisibles.

L'universalité des droits de l'homme exige que toutes les personnes sous la juridiction des Etats membres de l'Union européenne devraient bénéficier des droits fondamentaux énoncés dans la Charte. On ne peut pas établir des catégories de bénéficiaires. La règle doit être l'octroi des droits énoncés à tous les êtres humains, seuls des exceptions très limitées pour certains droits spécifiques pourraient être prévues à caractère exceptionnel. En effet, l'art. 2 de la Déclaration Universelle des droits de l'Homme et l'art. 2,2 du Pacte international sur les droits économiques demandent une application sans distinction par rapport à l'origine nationale. Dans le même sens, la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme à l'art. 1 et le Pacte international des droits civils et politiques à l'art. 2 prévoient, comme champs d'application, toute personne relevant de la juridiction d'un Etat signataire et tous les individus se trouvant sur son territoire. Les droits de l'homme sont indivisibles, ils sont d'égale importance et leur réalisation est intimement liée, qu'il s'agisse des droits civils et politiques ou des droits économiques, sociaux et culturels. En se basant sur ces deux principes, il est difficilement concevable que la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne puisse prévoir des droits réservés à une seule catégorie de résidents dans l'Union européenne, ceux ayant la nationalité d'un des Etats membres.

Le Forum des Migrants se joint à la FIDH concernant l'appelle adressé à la Convention à saisir l'occasion de la rédaction de la Charte pour proposer une extension de la citoyenneté européenne aux personnes résident légalement depuis au moins cinq ans dans un Etat membre. Dans le passé, le Forum des Migrants a plusieurs fois souligné la nécessité d'intégrer une procédure unique pour l'acquisition de ce droit de citoyenneté, sans nécessiter le préalable de la naturalisation. Maintenant la rédaction de la Charte offre la chance de la construction d'une citoyenneté européenne dissociée de la nationalité, basée sur les droits de l'homme et ouverte à tous ceux qui résident et travaillent sur le même territoire.

D'ailleurs, il n'est pas sûr que l'extension des droits des ressortissants des pays tiers légalement résidant dans l'Union européenne exigerait une ultérieure révision du traité. Dans la version actuelle du Traité sur l'Union européenne, il y a, en effet, une ultérieure marge d'action qui permettraient d'avancer vers l'égalité de traitement et notamment sous le titre IV du Traité. L'article 61 précise que la construction d'un espace de liberté, sécurité et justice implique aussi l'adoption de mesures dans les domaines de l'asile, de l'immigration et de la sauvegarde des droits des ressortissants des pays tiers. Le traité de l'Union révisé donne à l'Union la compétence d'adopter des mesures relatives au séjour des ressortissants des pays tiers (art. 63, 3 a) et encore des mesures qui définissent sur la base de quels droits les ressortissants des pays tiers qui résident dans un des Etats membres peuvent résider dans un autre pays membre (libre circulation des ressortissants des pays tiers vers d'autres pays membres (art. 63, 4)).

Tout en restant confiants dans la contribution que potentiellement le projet d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne pourrait donner par rapport à la situation des ressortissants des pays tiers, nous craignons, en considération de l'état actuel des travaux de la Convention, que la Charte puisse finalement confirmer, au lieu de surmonter la discrimination établie par le traité d'Amsterdam. Nous regrettons, par exemple, dans l'exercice de la Charte l'établissement d'une catégorie de droits qui se réfèrent aux droits des citoyens. Nous craignons que cette méthodologie puisse confirmer ou renforcer la différence de traitement entre les nationaux européens et les ressortissants des pays tiers. Nous considérons le principe de l'égalité de traitement entre les ressortissants européens et les ressortissants des pays tiers sur la base de l'universalité et l'indivisibilité des droits de l'homme. Nous croyons, alors, que les droits réservés aux citoyens européens devraient avoir un caractère tout à fait exceptionnel.

Nous nous référons au document „Convent 17“ (Charte 4170/00) et saluons le projet d'octroyer le droit d'accès au médiateur européen et le droit de pétition devant le Parlement européen aux résidents (Article G et Article H). Cette extension est marquée par la formule „Tout citoyen de l'Union et toute personne résidant sur le territoire de l'Union“ contenues dans le même article.

Toutefois, nous souhaiterions voir cette démarche appliquée aussi à d'autres articles, notamment à l'article C (Droit de participer aux élections du Parlement européen après 5 ans de résidence légale) et à l'article D (Droit de participer aux élections municipales). On ne peut pas négliger, à ce propos, que le Parlement européen s'est prononcé à deux reprises dans les derniers mois (le 12 avril 1999 et le 15 février 2000) en faveur de l'extension du droit de vote aux ressortissants des pays tiers légalement résidant dans l'Union. Le Forum des Migrants a plusieurs fois appelé les institutions européenne à envisager d'introduire ce droit dans une Charte européenne des droits fondamentaux.

Nous insistons aussi sur le fait que le droit de circuler et de séjourner librement sur le territoire des Etats membres (article I du même document), actuellement réservé aux personnes possédant la nationalité d'un Etat membre, devrait être étendu aussi aux ressortissants des Etats tiers résidant depuis au moins 5 ans sur le territoire de l'Union européenne. De notre point de vue, l'extension de ce droit aux citoyens extra-communautaires devrait être considérée en tant qu'exigence résultant de la liberté de mouvement au sein des Etats, consacrée dans divers instruments internationaux de protections des droits de l'homme (art. 2 du Protocole 4 à la CEDH, art. 12 du Pacte international sur les droits civils et politiques). Par ailleurs, elle serait aussi conforme aux objectifs qui motivent la création d'un espace intérieur sans frontières.

En conclusion, nous espérons que les membres de la "Convention" voudront bien prendre en considération les remarques du Forum des Migrants de l'UE et saisir l'occasion de la rédaction de la Charte des droits fondamentaux pour contribuer à revoir le statut des ressortissants des pays tiers légalement résidant dans l'Union européenne et remédier, ainsi, aux inégalités de traitement actuelles.

Merci, Monsieur le Président,

Merci, Mesdames et Messieurs, membres de la "Convention"

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 8 June 2000CHARTE 4350/00*CONTRIB 214*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union
Revised contribution submitted by the Engineering Employer's Federation (EEF)

Please find hereafter the revised position of the Engineering Employer's Federation (EEF) on the draft EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.¹

DRAFT EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

EEF COMMENTS ON THE NEW PROPOSALS FOR THE ARTICLES ON ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL RIGHTS AND FOR HORIZONTAL CLAUSES (CHARTER 4316/2000, CONVENT 34)

The Engineering Employers' Federation (EEF) represents over 5,700 companies in the engineering sector which have some 900,000 employees. The EEF and its members have a particular interest in the economic and social provisions of the draft Charter.

General Comments

1. The EEF believes that the new draft represents some improvement on its predecessor (Convent 18 and 19). In particular we are pleased to see that some of the more problematical and ill-defined new "rights", such as that to equal remuneration for work of equal value, have been dropped. The EEF also notes that some rights previously classed as social and economic are now in the section on civil and political rights, i.e. those on vocational training and equality between men and women.
2. The EEF still has considerable difficulties with the proposed text, however. We continue to believe that the Charter should be a brief declaratory document consistent with the original intention of establishing "a Charter of fundamental rights in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens". The current draft Charter shows substantial "mission creep". The draft is lengthy, technical and in our view will change directly and/or indirectly the relationship between the EU and the member states.
3. The current draft contains a number of Articles that are new rights and they will be used as stepping stones to further legislation on topics not yet covered by Directives. An example is Article 38 on "unjustified or abusive" terminations of employment.
4. The current draft also contains a number of Articles which seek to create new general rights out of limited specific rights such as Article 39 about the right of workers to "reconcile their family and professional lives" and Article 33 which seem to create a general unqualified right to information and consultation.
5. The precise way in which the current draft charter and the European Convention of Human Rights will interact is unclear.
6. The current draft charter is written in a way that suggests that it will have full legal status although this issue has not yet been decided. In any event it will have to be observed and implemented by EU institutions and bodies, member states and the social partners at Community level (Article 31).

Specific Points on the Draft Articles

7. Article 31 - This Article now includes reference to "the social partners at Community level", but this is not reflected in other Articles such as Article 46. The impact of the inclusion of the social partners at Community level is unclear. For example, it could be argued that this Article requires UNICE to enter into social dialogue to reach an agreement on "unjustified and abusive" termination of employment. The Article also maintains a distinction between social rights to be observed and social principles to be implemented. The statement of reasons refers only to social rights, and the distinction remains unclear.
8. Article 33 - This Article is an attempt to create a new general right out of limited and specific Directives about consultation and information. The draft Article pre-judges, for example, the discussion about the proposed Directive on information and consultation at national level.
9. Article 34 - This Article includes not only the right to negotiate but also to conclude collective agreements. This is not required by the European Convention on Human Rights and if included in the Charter would probably require a change in UK law. The UK statutory machinery for trade union recognition, including the specified Method of Collective Bargaining Order does not require either party to conclude collective agreements.
10. Article 35 - This Article is curiously worded. It can be argued that Article 35 is not needed when there is Article 36. Article 35 is based on the Working Time Directive that was brought forward as a health and safety measure.
11. Article 38 - This Article is about dismissal and seeks to create a new general right. It is a good example of the Charter moving away from summarising existing, well-recognised EU rights to creating new rights to fill a new Charter. The Article covers both "unjustified" and "abusive" terminations. It is assumed - but not clear - that abusive covers dismissals in breach of procedure rather than merely dismissals where the worker has been reviled at the time of termination.
12. Article 39 - This Article seems to create out of limited specific rights relating to maternity and parental leave a general right that "all workers have the right to reconcile their family and professional lives". It is most unclear what this means. It might, for example, include the right to work part-time.

Aufnahme sozialer Grundrechte in die Grundrechtecharta der Europäischen Union am kommenden Montag wird der Konvent seine Beratungen zum Einzelkapitel soziale Grundrechte auf der Grundlage des Conventes 34 mit einer weiteren Grundsatzausprache fortsetzen. Die Parlamentarische Versammlung des Europarates und der Europarats-Sozialausschuss werden bei ihrer nächsten Sitzung Ende Juni die Frage sozialer Grundrechte in der EU-Grundrechtecharta ebenfalls beraten und eine gemeinsame Erklärung mit dem Europäischen Parlament verabschieden. Diese wird zur Zeit in einer gemeinsamen Arbeitsgruppe der beiden Sozialausschüsse vorbereitet.

Sehr geehrter Herr Professor Herzog,

Ich bitte Sie, dieses Positionspapier den Mitgliedern des Konventes frühestmöglich zur Verfügung zu stellen und auch eine Aufnahme in die im Internet abrufbaren Datenbank zu veranlassen. Eine Übersetzung in englischer und französischer Sprache wird dem Konvent in den nächsten Tagen ebenfalls zugehen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Ihr

Stellungnahme zur Notwendigkeit der Aufnahme sozialer Grundrechte in die Grundrechtecharta der Europäischen Union

1. Die Entscheidung, eine Grundrechtecharta für die Europäische Union zu schaffen, stellt einen Meilenstein in der Geschichte der Europäischen Einigung dar. Die Charta bietet die Chance, dass die Europäische Union am Vorabend ihrer Erweiterung und institutionellen Reform deutlich als Wertegemeinschaft sowohl nach außen als auch gegenüber den Unionsbürgern auftritt. Damit diese auch volle Geltung beanspruchen kann, sind ausdrücklich die Pläne innerhalb des Konventes zu begrüßen, eine Aufnahme der Charta in die Verträge vorzunehmen und dadurch der Charta rechtsverbindlichen und einklagbaren Charakter zu geben.
2. Die hochrangige und kompetente Zusammensetzung des Gremiums zeigt, dass sich die EU der herausragenden Bedeutung der Arbeit und Zielsetzung des Konventes bewusst ist. Dies gilt in besonderem Maße für die Arbeit der Mitglieder des Konventes, die trotz des ehrgeizigen Zeitplanes für die Erarbeitung der Charta ihre Aufgabe mit großer Kompetenz und bewundernswerten Engagement erfüllen.
3. Angesichts des bisherigen Standes der Beratungen zur Frage der sozialen Grundrechte und der Präsidiumsvermerkes Convent 34 erscheint es allerdings notwendig, ausdrücklich auf die grundsätzliche Unteilbarkeit und Universalität der Menschenrechte hinzuweisen. Es entspricht der europäischen und internationalen Rechtsentwicklung des 20. Jahrhunderts, dass soziale Grundrechte nicht im Gegensatz zu den klassisch liberalen Grundrechten stehen, sondern sich die beiden Bereiche gegenseitig bedingen und nur als Einheit dem modernen Grundrechteverständnis entsprechen können
4. Diesem Grundrechtebegriff folgte auch der Kölner Ratsbeschluss indem er die Vorgabe machte : "Bei der Ausarbeitung der Charta sind ferner wirtschaftliche und soziale Rechte zu berücksichtigen, wie sie in der Europäischen Sozialcharta und in der Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer enthalten sind, soweit sie nicht nur Ziele für das Handeln der Union begründen."¹
5. Die vorliegende Fassung des Conventes 34 gibt Anlass zur Sorge, dass der Konvent bei der Ausgestaltung der wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Grundrechte hinter den für die Mitgliedsstaaten bereits geltenden internationalen Standards zurückbleiben wird. Da nicht klar zwischen Rechten und Handlungszielen unterschieden wird, entspricht das Convent 34 nicht dem Kölner Mandat.
6. Diese ernsten Bedenken werden auch vom Sozialausschuss des Europarates ² und dem UN-Ausschuss für wirtschaftliche, soziale und kulturelle Rechte³ geteilt, die in ihren Eingaben darauf hingewiesen haben, dass wirtschaftliche und soziale Grundrechte gleichberechtigt neben den Bürger- und Freiheitsrechten stehen müssen. Besonders ernst sollte der Konvent die

Warnung des UN-Ausschusses nehmen, dass alle EU-Mitgliedstaaten riskieren, ihre Verpflichtungen zu verletzen, die sie in Art. 2, Abs. 1 des Internationalen Paktes über wirtschaftliche, soziale und kulturelle Rechte (ICESCR) eingegangen sind.

7. Die regionale Rechtsentwicklung in der EU ist als Teil des international anerkannten und gültigen Rechtsregimes zu sehen. Ein Zurückbleiben hinter internationalen Standards der Grundrechte trägt die Gefahr in sich, dass die Grundrechtecharta von Anfang an mit erheblichen Legitimitätsproblemen in- und ausserhalb der Union konfrontiert sein wird. Alle bisherigen Äußerungen aus dem Europarat machen deutlich, dass dieser einer Grundrechtecharta, die nicht die Unteilbarkeit und Universalität der Menschenrechte widerspiegelt, keine Zustimmung erteilen wird.
8. Zusammenfassend bitte ich den Konvent eindringlich, seiner Verantwortung gerecht zu werden, indem er

- Den Ratsbeschluss von Köln umsetzt, und die Europäische Sozialcharta sowie die Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer insoweit berücksichtigt, wie es den mittlerweile gültigen nationalen und internationalen Standards entspricht.

Die Revidierte Europäische Sozialcharta, die den neuesten Stand der Rechtsformulierung widerspiegelt, sollte dabei Berücksichtigung finden, um einem schnellen Veralten der Grundrechtecharta vorzubeugen.⁴

- in seinem Entwurf wirtschaftliche, soziale und kulturelle Grundrechte gleichberechtigt mit den Freiheitsrechten in die Grundrechtecharta aufnimmt, indem er die Vorschläge innerhalb des Konventes unterstützt, die von der grundsätzlichen Unteilbarkeit, Interdependenz und Universalität der Grund- und Menschenrechte ausgehen.
- dadurch dem Vorwurf vorbeugt, dass die Europäische Union beabsichtige, einen Sonderweg im Grund- und Menschenrechtsverständnis einzuschlagen und in seinem Entwurf keinen Zweifel daran aufkommen lässt, dass der Konvent die Europäische Grundrechtecharta als integralen Bestandteil des europäischen und internationalen Grund- und Menschenrechtsregimes begreift.

Subject: Charter of Fundamental Rights – Article 21 a

Dear Mr. Fonseca,

UNHCR is pleased to see that the newly proposed text for Article 21 of the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights on the right of asylum follows the amendment proposed by Commissioner Vitorino. We note that an additional sentence has been included to Article 21 a which was not included in Commissioner Vitorino's original amendment. While welcoming this additional sentence, we believe the text could benefit from the inclusion of a reference to persecution for refugee-related reasons and, hence, a prohibition of direct and indirect refoulement.

Please find attached the text of our proposal which we hope Commissioner Vitorino can promote in tomorrow's discussions in the Convention.

Yours sincerely,

Johannes van der Klaauw

La FI.ACAT - Fédération internationale de l'ACAT (Action des Chrétiens pour l'Abolition de la Torture) - est une association œcuménique internationale avec statut consultatif auprès des Nations Unies et du Conseil de l'Europe et statut d'observateur auprès de la Commission africaine des droits de l'Homme et des peuples. Elle regroupe 19 associations ACAT nationales affiliées et 8 autres en cours d'affiliation en Europe, Afrique, Amérique et Asie.

1) Observations à propos de l'article 2 du Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne (Charte 4284/1/00 Rev1 - Convent 28)

L'article 2 alinéa 2 du Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne (Charte 4284/1/00 Rev1; Convent 28) s'oppose d'une façon catégorique à la peine de mort. Cependant l'exposé des motifs du même article autorise des dérogations au principe posé du droit à la vie.

La FI.ACAT considère que l'interdiction de la peine de mort ne saurait souffrir aucune exception. Les exceptions prévues à l'article 2 du protocole n° 6 à la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme autorisant l'application de la peine de mort pour les actes commis en temps de guerre ou de danger éminent de guerre ne peuvent pas être repris dans Charte. Ce serait un retour en arrière par rapport aux avancées réalisées ces dernières années dans le domaine des normes internationales. La FI.ACAT rappelle en effet qu'en vertu du statut de la Cour Pénale Internationale, adopté en juillet 1998 à Rome, la peine de mort est exclue même pour les crimes les plus graves crime contre l'humanité, tels que le génocide et violations de la législation sur les conflits armés. Et le Conseil de Sécurité des Nations Unies n'a pas voulu retenir la peine capitale pour les crimes soumis à la compétence du TPI "ex-Yougoslavie" et le TPI "Rwanda".

2) Proposition d'amendement de l'article 4 du Projet de Charte

La FI.ACAT soutient la proposition suivante (en langue anglaise) soumise par l'IRCT (International rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims) :

Proposed amendment to Article: 4

The IRCT is a medically based organisation, supporting approximately 200 centres and programmes for rehabilitation of victims of torture world-wide.

Proposed text:

1. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. No one may be expelled or extradited to a State where he would be in danger of being subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman treatment.
3. The victim of an act of torture shall have an enforceable right to as full rehabilitation as possible, including the means for social reintegration.

ARTICLE X:

Public authorities shall ensure that education and information regarding these rights and freedoms are fully included in the training of law enforcement personnel, civil or military, medical personnel, public officials and other public officers.

The EU should protect workers' rights!

LO's, TCO's and SACO's demands for changes to the Treaty

The free and common market that has been created in Europe is based on the free movement of goods, services, labour and capital. This single market provides excellent preconditions for growth and new jobs. However, if this market is to work properly and lead to improved welfare and prosperity for all, it must be complemented with social regulations of the type that have long been in existence at the national level. Market forces must be regulated by means of political decisions at the European level.

The steady increase in international competition has in turn increased the vulnerability of companies. Nevertheless, internationalisation and the free movement of capital and companies have strengthened the position of the employers in the short term. Co-operation within the EU, however, is now providing opportunities to control developments by means of political decisions and to introduce regulations that prevent abuses of free mobility and create competition on equal terms. We wish to use this joint political strength to guarantee the civil and trade union rights of employees. By so doing, we can create a better balance between the social partners.

The fact that production and factories can be moved freely between countries entails a risk that employers will be able to play employees off against each other. The employers can move, or threaten to move, jobs to other countries where the employees have been forced to accept poorer terms and conditions. The free movement of goods, services and capital must therefore be supplemented with a "fifth freedom", the freedom of employees to take trade union action across national borders. Without such a freedom, there is a risk that the employers will gradually advance their position to the detriment of employees' living standards, working conditions and other living conditions.

Strengthening the EU system of social regulations is thus a joint challenge for all of the labour-friendly forces within the Member States.

For several years now, we have been demanding that employees' trade union rights should be more strongly protected by Community law. The ETUC Congress of 1991 supported the demand that the right to take sympathy action to support workers in other countries should be guaranteed. In February 1997, LO and TCO wrote to the Swedish government to demand that it should pursue the question of strengthening workers' rights at the then ongoing government conference.

The question now has renewed relevance, as the EU summit meeting held in Cologne in June 1999 decided that a statute on basic rights should be drawn up. A draft is to be presented prior to the summit meeting to be held in December this year. Subsequently, the question of whether the statute will be incorporated into the Treaty, and if so how, will be studied.

A special body, a Convention, with representatives of the heads of state and government, the Commission, the European Parliament and the national parliaments has been appointed to draw up this draft. The Swedish Government has appointed Daniel Tarschys as its representative. Parliament is represented by Göran Magnusson (Social Democratic Party) and Lars Tobisson (Moderate Party).

The strengthening of workers' rights within the EU must become an important part of this work.

What the trade union organisations want

- The EU Member States and the EU's institutions should be obliged to follow the Council of Europe's Convention on Human Rights and the fundamental ILO conventions on the right of association, the right to strike, the right to bargain collectively and the prohibition of child labour and enforced labour.
- An unconditional demand for membership of the EU for both present and future members should be that they ratify and comply with the conventions mentioned above.
- The conventions should continue to be interpreted by the international bodies and courts that have been given this task, i.e. the ILO and the European Court of Human Rights. We do not want duplicate systems.
- Other conventions of a more general nature that concern workers' rights, such as the UN Declaration on Human Rights of 1948 and the Council of Europe's revised Social Statute of 1996, should, due to their form and structure, be stipulated as goals for the work of the EU.
- The workers of Europe should be permitted to co-operate with each other, for example by being allowed to take trade union sympathy action across national borders.

We wish to see our demands realised in the form of binding regulations. At the same time, we wish to prevent power from being transferred from popularly-elected politicians in the Member States to judges in Brussels who cannot be dismissed. The Court of Justice of the European Communities must not therefore be given greater power over the national parliaments. This means that two methods will be required when workers' rights are incorporated into the EU's treaties.

- The institutions of the EU — the Commission, the Council, the Parliament and the Court — should be obliged to respect trade union rights in the course of their work. The Member States and, ultimately, the Court of Justice should be responsible for monitoring this. When interpreting various parts of Community law, for example, the Court should always guarantee the protection of workers' civil and trade union rights.
- On the other hand, it should not be possible to bring Member States before the Court for contravention of this part of the Treaty. It should instead be possible to exert pressure on them and, ultimately, subject them to political measures following a decision by the Council of Ministers if they fail to respect the basic rights protected by the Treaty.

More about protection at the EU level

The institutions of the EU, i.e. the Council, the Parliament, the Commission and the Court should, by means of express regulations in the Treaty, be obliged to always take into account certain basic conventions on civil and trade union rights. These conventions are the Council of Europe's Convention on Human Rights, the UN Convention on Civil and Political Rights and the fundamental ILO conventions on the right of association (including the right to strike), the right to bargain collectively and the prohibition of child and enforced labour.

The freedom of movement of goods, services, capital and labour within the Union must be complemented by a fifth freedom, the freedom of workers to defend their interests by means of trade union activities.

Human rights superordinate to economic rights

At present, the Court of Justice always pays regard to and defends the free movement of goods, services, capital and labour in its judgements. Certain other basic principles are also taken into account, above all that no-one should be discriminated against on the grounds of nationality and the preservation of free competition across national borders.

The Court of Justice has also stipulated that certain basic rights that are common to the Member States are a part of Community law, for example the prohibition of torture, guarantees concerning freedom of thought and expression and the right to a fair trial.

We feel that it is self evident that basic human rights, including the right to organise in trade unions, the right to negotiate freely with employers and the right to take industrial action, should be protected by Community law. We believe that the Court should always take the civil and trade union rights of workers into account in the course of its work. Human rights should, in our view, be superordinate to economic rights.

Such a development is also clearly underway. Particularly worthy of mention here is Council statute 2679/98, the so-called Monti Statute, which stipulates that basic rights, including the right to take industrial action, are superordinate to the free movement of goods. We can also mention directive 96/71 on the stationing of workers abroad, where point 22 of the introduction states that the right to take industrial action is superordinate to the directive. Finally, we can refer to a judgement of the Court of Justice in September 1999 in case C 67/96, the so-called Albany judgement. Here the Court stated that collective agreements that aim to improve employment and working conditions are superordinate to competition law.

It can thus be said that the principle that the civil and trade union rights of workers are superordinate to economic rights has already been established in Community law and that it is now important to clarify this by means of express regulations in the Treaty.

Technical structure etc.

Technically, these regulations should have the following form and structure. The EU's institutions should be obliged to take the trade union rights of workers (as expressed in the conventions mentioned above and as interpreted by the respective monitoring and supervisory bodies) into account in all their activities. A characteristic of these conventions is that they contain relatively specific regulations that can suitably be made legally binding. These rights are also of the type that we feel it is important to preserve and safeguard from a worker's perspective.

The obligation to observe these rights should be incorporated into the Treaty.

In concrete terms, our proposal means that the Court of Justice should be bound to respect the above mentioned conventions and the rights that they protect when the Court interprets Community law. These rights should in principle have priority over, for example, the free movement of goods, services and capital if they happen to come into conflict with each other. Similarly, the Commission should be obliged to respect the conventions when proposing new EU regulations and in the course of its other activities. Parliament and the Council should be bound by the regulations in the Treaty when, for example, they make decisions on new EU regulations.

There are other important conventions and international agreements in addition to those mentioned above. These include, above all, the UN Declaration on Human Rights of 1948, the UN Convention on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of 1966, the UN Convention on Children's Rights of 1989 and the Council of Europe's revised Social Statute of 1996. These international declarations are of great value as documents that can be used when setting goals, but they contain regulations of a fairly general nature. We believe, therefore, that these regulations cannot suitably be made legally binding. They should, on the other hand, be respected as general goals for the work of the EU.

There are also those who believe that the EU should protect a much wider range of rights in the Treaty, such as the right to housing, support, education, culture and so on. We believe, as do most others, that such rights should not be covered by legally binding regulations but by regulations of a very general nature. Such rights should instead be stated as clear goals for the work of the EU. If legally binding regulations are introduced, then they must be very precise. Otherwise, the power of giving the regulations a concrete content will be transferred from popularly-elected politicians to court lawyers.

No duplicate systems

It is important that conflicts do not arise with regard to competence between, above all, the Court of Justice of the European Communities on the one hand and the European Court of Human Rights and the ILO system on the other. It is not tenable to have two systems for human rights with the Member States being obliged to follow both. It is important that the interpretation of the regulations is consistent and uniform. The institutions of the EU should therefore be bound by the interpretations of the respective conventions as determined by the ILO bodies and the European Court of Human Rights.

Obligations of the Member States

The Member States should also be obliged to respect the Council of Europe's Convention on Human Rights, the UN Convention on Civil and Political Rights and the fundamental ILO conventions on the right of association (including the right to strike), the right to bargain collectively and the prohibition of child labour and enforced labour. It should be an unconditional demand for all Member States that they ratify and comply with these conventions. No country that fails to comply with this demand should be granted membership of the EU.

The Member States should also be obliged to permit trade union sympathy action, particularly such action that aims to support industrial action in another country that has been decided upon in line with accepted trade union principles.

Background and technical structure

The strength of the workers lies in being able to act together. If employers are able to play us off against each other we will become weak. The strength and unity of the trade unions has been of decisive importance for the successes we have had in Sweden in promoting and defending the interests of our members. We must now work internationally in a similar way. The right of the trade unions in the EU countries to take sympathy action to support workers in other countries must therefore be extended, and this must become a real possibility. The Member States must be obliged to guarantee the right to take trade union sympathy action both nationally and internationally.

However, the question of whether a Member State is complying with the demands described above or not should not be tried or determined by the Court of Justice. An individual citizen should not, either directly or indirectly, be able to turn to the Court to try the question, for example, of whether or not the right to strike as expressed in the Member State concerned complies with the demands in the Treaty.

A Member State that does not meet its obligations should instead, following a decision by the Council, be liable to political pressure in line with Article 7 of the Treaty.

The reasons for this are as follows.

The labour legislation on the right to bargain collectively, the right to strike and so on varies greatly in the different Member States. In Sweden, for example, there is an almost absolute obligation not to take industrial action while a collective agreement is still valid, while the right to take such action is, on the other hand, very extensive when no collective agreements are in force. In some countries a collective agreement carries no such obligation, which of course does not mean that there are no other, completely different, limitations on the right to take industrial action. It is not possible to harmonise these rights at a common European level as the strength of the trade union organisations, the importance of collective agreements and so on vary greatly between the countries.

A development in which the Court of Justice formulates "an average European right to strike" on the basis of general rules and regulations would be completely unreasonable and would, in the long term, risk seriously weakening the position of our members and their trade union organisations. It would also entail a transfer of power from popularly-elected politicians to irremovable lawyers. It is a political task to resolve conflicting goals in society.

Summary

Concern that the right of association, the right to bargain collectively and the right to take industrial action would no longer be matters for national self-determination but would be transferred to the Court of Justice within a general framework of rules and regulations has previously made us doubtful about the possibility of guaranteeing these rights in the Treaty without undermining the regulations in Sweden. We have now found a technical solution to this problem.

The trade union rights described above should be incorporated into Article 6.1 of the Treaty, in which the fundamental democratic principles on which the EU is based are stipulated. If a country fails to comply with the conventions, the Council should be able to take political measures against the country concerned in line with Article 7 of the Treaty. It should not be possible, however, to have such matters tried by the Court of Justice.

PROYECTO DE CARTA DE LOS DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES
DE LA UNIÓN EUROPEA

Madrid, 1 de junio de 2000

El 25 aniversario de la Declaración Universal de los Derechos Humanos, celebrado en diciembre de 1998, llevó al Consejo Europeo de Colonia del 3 y 4 de junio de 1999 a proponer, para finales del año 2000, la elaboración de una Carta de los derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea. En su Decisión, el Consejo recuerda que en el artículo 6 del TUE “consta que la Unión se basa en los principios de libertad, democracia, respeto de los derechos humanos y de las libertades fundamentales del Estado de Derecho, principios que son comunes a los Estados miembros” y que “la Unión respetará los derechos fundamentales tal y como se garantizan en el Convenio Europeo para la Protección de los Derechos Humanos y las libertades fundamentales (CEDH) y tal y como resultan de las tradiciones constitucionales comunes a los Estados miembros como principios generales del derecho comunitario”. El Consejo también considera en su decisión que al redactar la Carta deberán tenerse en cuenta “los derechos económicos y sociales, la Carta Social Europea y el Carta comunitaria de los derechos sociales fundamentales de los trabajadores”.

Por todo ello, la SGAE entiende que el derecho de autor debe de formar parte de la futura Carta de derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea y, como representante de parte del colectivo de autores españoles y europeos, solicita a la Convención encargada de redactar dicha Carta que, en base a los argumentos que a continuación se exponen, tenga en consideración su petición.

1. El CEDH en su preámbulo:

- “Considera la Declaración Universal de los Derechos del Hombre, proclamada por la Asamblea General de las Naciones Unidas el 10 de diciembre de 1948”;
- Reconoce que el “objetivo del Consejo de Europa es alcanzar una unión más estrecha entre sus miembros y que uno de los medios para conseguirla es mediante la salvaguarda y el desarrollo de los derechos del hombre y de las libertades fundamentales”;
- Insta a los Estados miembro a "tomar las medidas apropiadas para asegurar la garantía colectiva de algunos de los derechos enunciados e n la Declaración Universal de los Derechos del Hombre".

La Declaración Universal de los Derechos del Hombre de 1948 hace referencia de manera explícita al derecho de autor en su artículo 27:

“Toda persona tiene derecho a participar libremente en la vida intelectual de la comunidad, a disfrutar de las artes y a participar en la vida científica y en los beneficios que de él resulten. Toda persona tiene derecho a la protección de los intereses morales y materiales que la correspondan por razón de las producciones científicas, literarias o artísticas de que sea autora”.

Esta Declaración no tiene la fuerza del derecho internacional, pero sí tiene un valor moral. Se considera que forma parte del derecho consuetudinario de las naciones y que vincula moralmente a todos los Estados, sobre todo a aquellos que la firmaron y que firmaron a continuación los dos Pactos de las Naciones Unidas de 16 de diciembre de 1966. De hecho, la obligación legal de respetar el derecho de autor proviene, de uno de esos pactos, el Pacto de Naciones Unidas sobre los Derechos Económicos, Sociales y Culturales, cuyo artículo 15, inciso 1) apartado c) reproduce casi literalmente el artículo 27 de la Declaración. Este Pacto vincula a más de 130 Estados entre los que figuran todos los Estados de la Unión Europea.

Es importante destacar también, como lo ha hecho la Doctrina más especializada ¹, que, si bien el articulado del CEDH no hace alusión expresa al derecho de autor, debe tenerse en cuenta que este Convenio se preocupa fundamentalmente de la protección del ciudadano frente a las intrusiones excesivas del poder público, y que se trata por lo tanto y ante todo, de un texto de “habeas corpus” ampliado. Precisamente, en el Borrador de la futura Carta ², el Consejo deja claro que los objetivos de la misma son más amplios, ya que con ella aspira a alcanzar un principio básico de la Unión Europea: “la salvaguardia de los derechos fundamentales”, para lo cual toma como base “un marco jurídico ya establecido y vinculante”.

2. Varias Constituciones europeas hacen referencia de manera directa o indirecta a la necesidad de salvaguardar los derechos de los creadores para garantizar así libertad de pensamiento y de expresión. La Constitución española reconoce en su artículo 20 el derecho a la creación literaria, artística, científica y técnica. La Constitución Portuguesa consagra el artículo 42 a la Libertad de creación cultural, especificando que esta libertad implica el derecho a la invención, a la producción y a la difusión de obras científicas, literarias o artísticas y que comprende la protección legal de los derechos de autor. La Constitución alemana, en su artículo 5, establece que serán libres el arte y la ciencia, la investigación y la enseñanza. Por último cabe destacar la joven Constitución de la Federación Rusa, nacida en 1993, cuyo artículo 44 garantiza el derecho de todos a la libre creación literaria, artística, científica e intelectual, y establece que la propiedad intelectual deberá estar protegida por la ley.

En Francia, la Comisión Nacional Consultiva de los Derechos del Hombre, en su Opinión de 14 de noviembre de 1996 sobre la “Carta de Internet”, recomendó a los poderes públicos, “teniendo en cuenta que la libre comunicación de pensamientos y de opiniones es uno de los derechos más preciados del hombre y que el artículo 10 de la CEDH consagra la libertad de recibir o de comunicar informaciones e ideas [...]” “que favorezcan la protección de los documentos y estudios protegidos por la propiedad intelectual y por los derechos de autor”.

3. No cabe duda de que el derecho de autor protege a los ciudadanos en la libre expresión de sus ideas y de sus pensamientos, al garantizar la creación de unas obras literarias, artísticas o científicas sin trabas y sin interferencias de los poderes públicos y de los demás ciudadanos. En su dimensión moral, el derecho de autor asegura la libre representación de la personalidad del autor. En su dimensión patrimonial, garantiza la independencia económica indispensable para hacer efectiva esa libertad de expresión y de creación. El Derecho de autor debe de ser considerado por lo tanto como una rama de la libertad de expresión y de creación, la cual, por su carácter fundamental y universal forma parte de los Derechos humanos.

4. Tomando como base el documento del Consejo de 8 de febrero de 2000, de referencia: CHARTE 4149/00 CONVENT 13. La SGAE propone a la Convención la siguiente redacción del artículo 15:

Artículo 15. Libertad de expresión.

Draft of a Charter of Fundamental Rights

Heidelberg, June 2, 2000

FIAN (FoodFirst Information and Action Network) was founded in 1986 as an international human rights organisation working for the implementation of social, economic and cultural human rights (esc-rights), especially the right to adequate food. Currently, FIAN-International has sections and co-ordinating bodies in 20 countries, and members in about 60 countries. FIAN has consultative status with the United Nations, as well as with the OAU and the European human rights system.

FIAN – International - FoodFirst Information and Action Network

Eight proposals for changes or amendments to Convent No. 34 (18.05.00)

Concerning: Draft of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

Summary:

FIAN is proposing eight substantive changes in the wording of the articles concerning economic and social rights. Following this summary, all eight points are presented with the reasoning lying behind the proposed changes:

1. Article 31 should be removed, because it is introducing a differentiation between different sets of human rights, contrary to the internationally recognized indivisibility of all human rights.
2. Article 41 should be renamed as the right to an adequate standard of living. At least three changes of wordings are urgently required, which are described below.
3. The right to work is missing and substituted by the right to the freedom to choose an occupation.
4. The full content of the right to health, as it is part of the international bill of human rights, is considerably restricted to an access to medical care (Article 42). That would be one of the most restrictive definitions of the right to health ever made and a step back of more than 20 years in understanding economic and social rights.
5. In all Articles dealing with rights at work (Articles 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 39) the Draft is only talking about the rights of workers, while in international human rights standards these rights are rights of everyone.
6. The draft is missing any substantive provision concerning non-discrimination at work. Any provision for equal pay for equal work is totally missing.
7. The draft has no provision for guaranteeing the right to fair wages, which is a basic international human rights standard
8. Article 48 should be removed, because it restricts the scope of the charter to the existing treaties of the European Community. A fundamental rights charter cannot by principle be bound by normal legislation - otherwise its fundamental character is undermined.

1. General Comments concerning the inclusion of ESC-Rights into the Draft:

Concerning Article 31: FIAN is strongly in favour of deleting the whole article, which is introducing a differentiation between social rights and principles. This would be a move away from the recognition of the indivisibility of human rights. The EU would initiate a legal interpretation that would severely undermine what all EU-member countries have accepted as modern human rights understanding in the Vienna Human Rights Conference. The pure fact that the substance of ESC-Rights, which has been developed fast in the last ten years through the work of NGOs, UN-expert committees as well as many international Scholars, has not been taken fully into account.

Esc-rights do not essentially obligate states to anything different from civil-political rights:

1. The respect of existing possibilities for participation, both political and economic, meaning the respect of an individual's physical integrity as well as freedom of profession or the access to land (obligation to respect)

2. The protection of the individual by legal systems and the police, for example the freedom to act politically as well as the freedom to use resources for economic purposes (freedom from corruption, security of land titles, protection of the tenant etc.) (obligation to protect).
3. State action to create supportive frameworks for the fulfilment of human rights, this means the reduction of destructive frameworks and the creation of supportive ones (obligation to fulfil).

All human rights have therefore elements that can only be implemented fully progressively. The end of all forms of discrimination against women is part of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Nobody would argue that this can only be seen as a principle because implementation will need some time. The differentiation between rights and principles should not be applied to both groups of human rights, neither to civil and political rights nor to economic, social and cultural rights. FIAN has prepared a detailed background paper in which all relevant arguments, which are used to differentiate between the different sets of human rights are taken up and are discussed. Please consider the paper to rethink the misconceptions that often build up against ESC-rights being full rights.

The inclusion of esc-rights in the Charter will not extend the responsibilities of EU institutions beyond those laid down in the EU treaties. The aim of including esc-rights is firstly to ensure that all the esc-rights of those resident within the EU are not violated by decisions taken on the European level.

Especially in the field of the fulfilment of esc-rights, the EU has already far-reaching legal capabilities. The accountability of policies of all organs of the EU and the member states is very important, especially as the economic frameworks are largely determined at the European level. Esc-rights imply negative rights, protecting all residents in the EU against the possible negative implications of EU-policy on the application of these rights.

2. Comment to Article 41: Social security and social assistance / Right to housing

The right to a income or minimum social security given to everyone to allow a life in dignity is the central objective of all economic and social rights. Therefore article 41 is the core of the social rights part of the planned Charter. Independent from the issue, which entity (EU or national state) has to guarantee social security the intention of article 41 should be that no EU policy is hindering the full enjoyment of an adequate standard of living. Consequently the article should be renamed as the most important social right, the right to adequate standard of living. This right is contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as well as in the International Covenant on ESC-Rights Art. 11: “The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to an adequate standard of living for himself and his family, including adequate food, clothing and housing ...”.

Beside this overall change of the focus of the article the current article has several severe weaknesses. (1) It starts with a limitation of the subject, without first clearly stating the right. (2) At least the wording “in particular” must be added before the vulnerable groups are being mentioned. (“... social security benefits providing protection in particular in the event of maternity....”). (3) The right to housing should be mentioned in a specific article and not together with social assistance. The right to housing requires that the states, or in case of the EU the EU, must secure that all policies are not negatively affecting access to housing. At the minimum an Article should be added guaranteeing the Right to Social Assistance as it was in the Draft from 29th March 2000 (Convent 19) in the former Article XIV “Right to Social Assistance.” “Any person who is without adequate resources (and who is unable to secure such resources by his own efforts or from other sources) must receive appropriate social assistance enabling him to live in dignity.”

3. Comment concerning the right to work:

A substantial limitation is that the draft articles do not contain the right to work. Article 32 guarantees only the right to choose and to engage in an occupation. Article 6 (1) of the ICESCR states: “The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right to work, which includes the right of everyone to the opportunity to gain his living by work which he freely chooses or accepts, and will take appropriate steps to safeguard this right.” The international recognised standards of the right to work is therefore much higher than the standards in the draft of the Charter. The draft has a unnecessary restriction (it does not talk about the “right of everyone to the opportunity to gain his living by work”, which is crucial to guarantee in the long run the core of all human rights work, to guarantee a life in dignity. Also Art. 6 does not require states to give jobs to everybody immediately but to safeguard that the state is not interfering with ones’ opportunity to gain his living by work is essential. Especially when looking into the obligation of states to respect existing access to an opportunity to gain his or her living by work and to protect these opportunities, it must become clear that the right to work has to be an essential element of the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

4. Comment concerning Article 42 and the right to health:

Also missing in the draft of the Charter is a specific article on the right to health. Article 42 (“Everyone shall have access to medical care and prophylactic measures in accordance with each Member State’s rules”) contains only a very small part of the international recognised right to health standard. It seems that the drafters have a severe fear that the recognition of the well established international human rights standards in the Draft Charter would widen the Mandate of the EU. This is in a double sense the wrong approach. Firstly the inclusion of esc-rights in the Charter will not extend the responsibilities of EU institutions beyond those laid down in the EU treaties. Secondly it neglects the real meaning of putting ESC-Rights into the Charter, the negative protection of EU-citizens against possible outcomes of current EU-policies on their rights. The aim of including esc-rights is to ensure that all the esc-rights of those resident within the EU are not violated by decisions taken on the European level, especially concerning the right to health, the enjoyment of which is highly influenced by framework conditions, like good standard for food, water etc. The recent competence of the EU in the economic sector by setting and harmonising standards are highly relevant to an individual’s health situation. In such a situation the limitation of the right to health to the right of access to medical care is not acceptable.

Again the ICESCR provides a formulation much more adequate and it is a standard already recognised by all EU-members: “The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health”. The specification of that right in Art. 12 (2) as well as the interpretation of the right to health in the recent “General Comment” of that right, written by the UN-Committee on ESC-Rights shows, that the right to health is much broader than the current article 42 of the Draft.

5. Comments to the articles dealing with rights at work:

In Article 33, 34, 35, 36, 38 and 39 you are referring to the rights at work by talking about workers. All these rights are in international human rights texts and standards and are not only referred to as rights of workers but as rights of everyone, as you can see in Article 7 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR): “The States Parties of the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of just and favourable conditions of work...” The broader formulation is necessary to secure that these rights are also guaranteed for all people working (also in the informal sector), not only those having an official status as workers. In all the following proposals FIAN is referring in this paper mainly to the text of the ICESCR, firstly because it is one of the two central human rights treaties, which forms together with the Covenant on civil and political rights and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights the International Bill of Rights and secondly because all EU member states have ratified the Covenant and have to guarantee these rights on the national level.

6. Equal pay for equal work:

All the articles concerning the rights at work are missing a non-discrimination clause. Especially the provision concerning equal remuneration for men and women is missing. Guidance for a formulation can be drawn from Art. 2 (2) of the ICESCR where the states parties to the Covenant take the obligation “to guarantee that the rights enunciated in the present Covenant will be exercised without discrimination of any kind”. Similarly is Art. 7 of the ICESCR “The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of just and favourable conditions of work which ensure in particular: (a) remuneration which provides all workers, as a minimum with: (i) Fair wages and equal remuneration for work of equal value without distinction of any kind, in particular women being guaranteed conditions of work not inferior to those enjoyed by men, with equal pay for equal work; ...”. Equal remuneration is also part of the European Social Clause and in the constitutional tradition of EU member states. *

7. Minimum wages:

Moreover, the articles in the draft of the Charter regulating rights at work are missing another central element of international recognised human rights standards, the right of everyone to the enjoyment of just and favourable condition which ensure fair wages. The above mentioned quote of Art. 7 (a) of the ICESCR shows that fair wages “allowing a decent living for workers and their families” (Art. 7. (a) ii) are part of international recognised human rights standards. The right to fair wages is also enshrined in one of the central conventions of the International Labour Organisation. The Draft of the Charter should be amended with a provision containing that right. In general the text of the Art. 7. ICESCR is in many respects more comprehensive than the formulations chosen in the Charter. This for example is apparent when comparing Art. 35 of Convent 34 (Right to rest periods and annual leave) with Article 7 (d) of the ICESCR. Art. 35 of Convent 34 states that “Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave”, while Art 7 (d) of ICESCR states: “Rest, leisure and reasonable limitations of working hours and periodic holiday with pay, as well as remuneration for public holidays.” The comparison shows that the very short Articles of the Draft are missing important elements of the central human rights covenant. The EU should include into its Charter of Fundamental Rights the already recognised international human rights standards and should not leave out central elements. FIAN is proposing to use the language of Art. 7 ICESCR instead of the language in the respective articles of the Draft of the Charter.

In substance the international human rights standards dealing with minimum wages are not requiring states to positively pay these wages, but to set a framework legislation guaranteeing that the respective national laws will secure that decent wages are paid giving the whole family a sufficient income.

8. Comment on Scope and Conditions: Articles 46-48:

Article 48 must be rewritten. Firstly, it refers only to the European Community. The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall cover all work of the European Union. Secondly the formulation is very unfortunate. Fundamental Rights cannot be limited by normal treaty regulations. If fundamental rights are guaranteed by the EU to the people living in the EU they must be the general guidance for the EU-policies, otherwise there is the risk that ordinary treaty provisions override the Charter of Fundamental Rights. The limitation set by article 46 (2) is enough to comply with the reasons given in article 48.

Fair Trade: the right of being human beings

Campaign on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Context

The European Union is now writing a Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union whose higher goal is to constitute the basis on which the reformed Union will be founded. This Charter will define and protect the fundamental rights of all peoples living in the European Union and can become the ethical frame for European Union's political and commercial relations with third Countries.

For all these reasons, the Fair Trade movement - through its organisations in Italy, Spain, Portugal - believe it is important that the Economic and Social Rights, which are the basis of the Fair Trade action, are recognised and reinforced as Fundamental Human Rights, and that Fair Trade is recognised as a way for protecting and promoting these rights all over the World.

We ask you to back this action, by signing the following proposal.

Proposal

We, citizens of the European Union, aware of the importance of the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights, wish to express our support to the Body in charge of its draft and development.

We, citizens of the European Union, require the inclusion of a reference to

- a) Fair Trade as an important instrument of economic and social human rights defence all over the world
- and to preview a
- b) formal consultation of the European Fair Trade organisations to verify the implementation of economic and social rights.

We, citizens of the European Union, support the following requests of the Fair Trade movement, based in the Article 23 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights:

The Charter of Fundamental rights should include:

1. Right to work and to choose an occupation.
2. Right to safety and health at work, favourable conditions of work and protection against unemployment, without any discrimination.
3. Right to a just remuneration, ensuring for the individual and his/her family a dignified life, supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.
4. Right to equal pay for equal work, without any discrimination.
5. Right to weekly rest period, paid holidays and pensions.
7. Right to association and assembly, freedom to form and join trade unions and to join a political party, to collective bargaining and freedom of demonstration and to strike.

- 8 Right to health and social protection, social security, social and medical assistance.
9. Right to protection of children and young persons from any kind of exploitation.
10. Right to integration of disabled people, including construction of social structures and promoting equality in employment.
11. Right to environment and consumer protection: conservation of a healthy environment, principle of precaution and extensive information before introducing Genetically Modified Organisms.

The campaign “Fair Trade: the right of being human beings” is promoted by Pangea (Italy), Associazione delle Botteghe del Mondo (Italy), La Bottega Solidale (Italy), O’ Papepece (Italy), Setem Catalunha (Spain), Cidac (Portugal)

Quels droits fondamentaux européens ?

par Guy LARDEYRET
Président de l'Institut
pour la Démocratie
Conseiller général de la Sarthe

Le Conseil européen de Cologne de juin 1999 a décidé d'ajouter au traité de Maastricht une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne. Il s'agit d'une initiative heureuse.

Une telle charte ferait progresser la construction européenne car elle pourrait constituer, au delà des traités, l'amorce d'une future Constitution européenne. L'objet d'une charte des droits fondamentaux est de fixer dans le marbre les principes supérieurs qui garantissent la nature d'un régime politique et auxquels se soumettent, à plus ou moins long terme, tous les pouvoirs publics. Si l'initiative est heureuse, elle est malheureusement assortie de conditions douteuses.

Le gouvernement voudrait se servir d'une telle charte pour consacrer en Europe des droits prétendument «sociaux». Si l'intention est louable, son effet pourrait être l'inverse de celui souhaité : pérenniser le nombre scandaleusement élevé des chômeurs et des jeunes qui souffrent sur le vieux continent.

Prenons le droit au travail qui faisait la fierté de la Constitution soviétique. Il ne doit pas être confondu avec la liberté du travail, qui repose sur la liberté de l'employeur et du salarié. Les revenus du travail peuvent être insuffisants pour mener une vie décente, mais le légitime complément de ressource relève du devoir d'entraide, non de la rémunération du salarié.

De même, le droit à la santé est une expression impropre pour signifier la garantie donnée à chaque citoyen qu'il sera correctement soigné quelle que soit son niveau de revenu. Le même raisonnement s'applique au droit au logement, à l'instruction, et ainsi de suite. La façon dont le devoir d'entraide s'actualise ne relève pas des droits fondamentaux mais de la loi ordinaire, car elle dépend des ressources disponibles. Or la nouvelle tendance consiste à transférer ces décisions au niveau local pour leur meilleur contrôle par les citoyens.

La France et l'Europe étant engagés dans une compétition internationale désormais sans frontières, notre prospérité future dépendra de la compétitivité de l'environnement institutionnel des gens qui travaillent et produisent la richesse. Ce sont les citoyens qui offriront les services publics au meilleur qualité/prix qui jouiront demain du meilleur niveau de vie. Un point essentiel de la charte sera donc la façon dont nous saurons mieux formuler que les autres la séparation du public et du privé, le critère principal auquel se reconnaît un régime démocratique. Les avantages sociaux sont rendus possibles par l'efficacité économique, qui dépend elle-même du respect des libertés, qui doivent être garanties par une charte et une justice constitutionnelle.

La transcription des lois non écrites de la démocratie en une matière juridique est un travail d'orfèvre en philosophie politique. On aurait pu repérer les quelques experts européens capables de préparer un tel projet. La procédure retenue à Tampere d'en appeler à des représentants des gouvernements et à des délégations parlementaires, donnera-t-elle le résultat escompté ? Plus un sujet des complexe, plus on gagne à séparer la fonction d'expertise et la fonction tribunitienne.

Il faut espérer que l'idée juste à l'origine de cette initiative ne compromettra pas demain la mise en place d'une Constitution européenne dont le besoin se fait de plus en plus sentir.

(convent 34)05.06.00

Stellungnahme des DGB
zum
Vorschlag des Präsidiums des Konvent zur Aufnahme sozialer Rechte in die Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union (CONVENT 34)

1. Der DGB begrüsst die Bestrebungen des Konvents zu einer umfassenden Grundrechtecharta in der EU, die soziale Grundrechte einschliesst. Soziale Grundrechte müssen aus Sicht des DGB einen gleichgewichtigen Stellenwert erhalten. Die EU ist nicht nur eine Wirtschafts-, sondern auch eine soziale Wertegemeinschaft.

2. Der aktuelle Vorschlag des Präsidiums des Konvents für wirtschaftliche und soziale Grundrechte sowie für horizontale Bestimmungen (CONVENT 34) weist aus Sicht des DGB in die richtige Richtung.

Der DGB stimmt mit dem Konvent insbesondere hinsichtlich folgender sozialer Rechte überein:

- gesunde und sichere Arbeitsbedingungen
- Schutz vor ungerechtfertigter oder missbräuchlicher Entlassung
- Schutz der Wanderarbeitnehmer auf Gleichbehandlung

Der DGB teilt gleichfalls die Auffassung, dass die Charta den Gemeinschaftsgesetzgeber, die Gesetzgebung der Mitgliedsstaaten bei der Umsetzung des Gemeinschaftsrechts sowie die Sozialpartner auf Gemeinschaftsebene, die nach Artikel 139 EGV Vereinbarungen auf Gemeinschaftsebene schliessen können, binden.

Angesichts der Dynamik des Integrationsprozesses und des Charakters der Charta als Ausdruck der Werteordnung der Union und der Mitgliedsstaaten sollten die Rechte aber nicht eng auf die gegenwärtigen Zuständigkeiten der Union und der Gemeinschaft begrenzt werden.

Es muss sichergestellt werden, dass die Gewährleistung der EU-Charta nicht nur mit der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention als Mindeststandard kompatibel ist, sondern ebenso das Mindestschutzniveau der revidierten ESC sowie einschlägiger völkerrechtlicher Sozialnormen einhält. Der DGB erinnert daran, dass der neue Vertrag ausdrücklich anerkennt, dass die Menschenrechte die wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Rechte, wie in der revidierten Europäischen Sozialcharta und der Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer von 1989 festgelegt, umfassen (Art. 136 EGV).

3. Zu der vom Präsidium des Konvents vorgelegten Liste sozialer Rechte nimmt der DGB wie folgt Stellung:

Artikel 31: Rechte und Grundsätze für den Sozialbereich

Dieser Artikel gibt zu Besorgnis Anlass, da den sozialen Rechten – im Unterschied zu den bürgerlichen und politischen Rechten – ein spezieller Rahmenartikel mit „Grundsätzen“ vorangestellt wird. Missverständliche Interpretationen wären die zwangsläufige Folge. Die Unteilbarkeit der miteinander verknüpften Menschenrechte macht besondere Rahmenartikel und Grundsätze speziell zu sozialen Rechten obsolet. Auch die vom Konvent bisher erarbeiteten bürgerlichen und politischen Rechte (CONVENT 28) beinhalten vielfach elementare Sozialrechte wie die Koalitionsfreiheit, das Verbot der Diskriminierung oder das Verbot der Zwangsarbeit. Soweit Aussagen zur Bindungswirkung gemacht werden sollen, sind diese in Artikel 46 aufzunehmen, der sich mit dem Anwendungsbereich befasst. Soweit das dynamische Element sozialer Rechte betont wird, sollte dies besser in der Präambel seinen Niederschlag finden. Der Vorschlag von Prof. Jürgen Meyer, Mitglied des Konvents (CONTRIB 144), hierzu ist ein wichtiger Diskussionsbeitrag. Er schlägt vor, den Grundsatz der „Solidarität“ in die Präambel aufzunehmen.

Artikel 32: Berufsfreiheit

Der Vorschlag „und ihr Gewerbe frei zu wählen und auszuüben“ ist missverständlich. Der DGB schlägt vor, das Recht wie folgt zu formulieren:

Artikel 33: Pflicht zur Unterrichtung und Anhörung der Arbeitnehmer im Unternehmen

Der DGB ist der Auffassung, dass das vom Konvent vorgeschlagene Recht zur Unterrichtung und Anhörung der Arbeitnehmer und ihrer Interessenvertretungen um ein Recht auf Mitwirkung erweitert werden muss. Die EU-Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer sieht dies ausdrücklich in Artikel 17 und 18 vor. Der Text sollte daher wie folgt lauten:

Artikel 34: Recht auf Kollektivverhandlungen und Kollektivmassnahmen

Dieses zentrale Recht der Arbeitswelt zählt zweifelsfrei zu den unveräußerlichen völkerrechtlichen Menschenrechten. Es muss daher sichergestellt werden, dass die ESC und die einschlägigen Übereinkommen der IAO einschliesslich der jeweiligen Spruchpraxis der zuständigen Kontrollorgane als Mindestschutzniveau eingehalten werden.

Der Vorschlag des Präsidiums des Konvents kann dies jedoch nicht sicherstellen. In Artikel 6 Abs. 4 der ESC wird z. B. im Unterschied zum Vorschlag des Konvents das Streikrecht explizit gewährleistet. In den Vorschlägen des Präsidiums vom 27. März 2000 (Convent 18) wurde das Streikrecht in Artikel IV, Abs. 3 noch ausdrücklich genannt.

Nach Auffassung des DGB muss das Recht auf Kollektivverhandlungen zumindest folgendes sicherstellen:

(2) Arbeitnehmer dürfen wegen gewerkschaftlicher Betätigung einschließlich einer Teilnahme an einem Streik nicht benachteiligt werden.“

Artikel 35: Recht auf Ruhezeit und Jahresurlaub

Neben der Anpassung der Überschrift sollte dieses Recht wie folgt präzisiert werden:

Artikel 37: Schutz der Jugendlichen

Dem Vorschlag des Dokuments CONVENT 18 folgend sollte das Mindestalter von 15 Jahren in den Artikel und nicht nur in die Begründung aufgenommen werden.

Artikel 39: Recht, Familien- und Berufsleben miteinander in Einklang zu bringen

Zu diesem Recht sollte auch „ein angemessener Mutterschutz“ aufgenommen werden.

Durch eine ergänzende Regelung sollte klargestellt werden: „Arbeitnehmer mit Familienpflichten dürfen in der Arbeitswelt nicht benachteiligt werden.“

Artikel 41: Soziale Sicherheit und soziale Unterstützung

Der Katalog der aufgelisteten Leistungen der sozialen Sicherheit ist unvollständig und sollte zumindest um zentrale Elemente wie Unfallschutz, Schutz bei Berufskrankheiten sowie bei Invalidität erweitert werden. Der Text sollte lauten:

Absatz (1): „Entsprechend den jeweiligen Gegebenheiten der einzelnen Mitgliedsstaaten werden Leistungen der sozialen Sicherheit von ausreichendem Umfang vorgesehen, die insbesondere bei Arbeitsunfällen, bei Berufskrankheiten, bei Mutterschaft, bei Krankheit, bei Pflegebedürftigkeit, bei Invalidität oder im Alter sowie bei Arbeitslosigkeit Schutz gewährleisten.“

Absatz (2): zum Recht auf Sozialhilfe wurde im Dokument CONVENT 19 besser beschrieben:

Ergänzt werden sollte dieser Text wie folgt:

Artikel 42: Gesundheitsschutz

Der Vorschlag in CONVENT 34 fällt gleichfalls hinter den Vorschlag in CONVENT 19 zurück.
Der ursprüngliche Vorschlag sollte wieder aufgegriffen werden:

Artikel 43: Behinderte

Der vorgeschlagene Artikel ist weniger aussagefähig als der Text in CONVENT 26. Die Übernahme aus CONVENT 26 wird empfohlen:

Artikel 47: Einschränkung der gewährleisteten Rechte

Es wird die Bestimmung unterstützt, dass Einschränkungen nicht über die im Rahmen der Europäischen Konvention zum Schutz der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten zulässigen Einschränkungen hinausgehen. Durch Bezugnahme auf die revidierte ESC muss dies aber auch für diese Charta des Europarates gelten.

Artikel 49: Schutzniveau

Ziel dieser Bestimmung ist es, das Mindestschutzniveau von europäischen und völkerrechtlichen Konventionen sicherzustellen. In der Bestimmung selbst wird aber nur die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention aufgenommen. Zur Präzisierung sollte der letzte Halbsatz daher wie folgt ergänzt werden:

... alle Mitgliedsstaaten gehören. „Die Charta gewährleistet jedenfalls das Schutzniveau der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention und der revidierten Europäischen Sozialcharta sowie der einschlägigen Pakte und Konventionen der Vereinten Nationen und Übereinkommen der Internationalen Arbeitsorganisation.“

Auch in der Begründung sollte als Mindestschutzniveau nicht nur auf die EMRK sondern ebenso auf die revidierte ESC (einschl. des Europäischen Komitees der sozialen Rechte) sowie die einschlägigen Übereinkommen der IAO und anderen Pakte und Konventionen der Vereinten Nationen sowie auf die Spruchpraxis der jeweils zuständigen Kontrollorgane Bezug genommen werden.

Zusätzliche bisher vom Konvent nicht aufgegriffene Sozialrechte.

Obwohl die revidierte ESC quasi die „EMRK“ auf sozialem Gebiet ist und auch das Präsidium selbst bei vielen seiner Vorschläge darauf Bezug nimmt, fehlen bisher wichtige Sozialnormen der revidierten ESC. Hierzu zählen insbesondere

- das Recht auf Arbeit. Der Text des von allen Mitgliedsstaaten ratifizierten Artikels 1 der ESC sollte aufgegriffen oder zumindest die von Prof. Meyer vorgeschlagene Bestimmung aufgenommen werden. Das Recht auf Arbeit garantiert zwar kein einklagbares Recht auf einen konkreten Arbeitsplatz, jedoch leiten sich daraus staatliche Förderungspflichten ab, beispielsweise nach einer unentgeltlichen und neutralen Arbeitsvermittlung und der Integration benachteiligter Gruppen in den Arbeitsmarkt.

- das Recht des Arbeitnehmers auf Schutz bei Zahlungsunfähigkeit ihres Arbeitgebers. Dieses Recht lehnt sich nicht nur an das IAO-Übereinkommen Nr. 173 (Insolvenzschutz) sondern vor allem an die Richtlinie 80/987/EWG zur Angleichung der Rechtsvorschriften der Mitgliedsstaaten über den Schutz der Forderungen der Arbeitnehmer bei Zahlungsunfähigkeit ihres Arbeitgebers an.

 - das Recht auf Würde am Arbeitsplatz. Mit der entsprechenden Empfehlung wurde bereits ein wichtiger Schritt zu einer Entwicklung dieses Rechts unternommen.

 - das Recht der Arbeitnehmervertreter auf Schutz im Betrieb und Erleichterungen, die ihnen zu gewähren sind. Hier handelt es sich um eine wichtige Absicherung der Informations-, Anhörungs- und Mitwirkungsrechte, wie sie im übrigen bereits auch im IAO-Übereinkommen Nr. 135 gewährleistet sind.

Founded in 1961 in Axenstein
(Switzerland)
Granted consultative status with the Council of Europe

The European Centre of the International Council of Women (ECICW), a non-governmental organisation, is a federation composed of the National Councils affiliated to the International Council of Women (ICW) in those countries which make up ICW's European Regional Group.

ECICW has affiliated Councils in Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Great-Britain, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Russia, Spain, Switzerland, Turkey.

▪ Its aim

To encourage and achieve equal rights and opportunities for women in all fields.

▪ Its principal tasks

- To increase collaboration between the affiliated organisations and the International Council of Women as well as between the National Councils themselves.

- To make the voices of women heard and to promote their participation in European decision-making institutions.

▪ Its organisation

- Each National Council affiliated to ECICW has the right to appoint a delegate.

- The President, Vice-Presidents, Permanent Delegates to European institutions and the Treasurer are elected by the General Assembly every two years.

- The General Assembly meets twice a year.

- ECICW's administrative address is that of the President.

▪ Activities of ECICW

- To study all questions relating to the situation of women in Europe and their active participation in every aspect of life and society.

- To initiate and to organise seminars on human rights, education and the economic, legal and social position of women in Europe. These occasions give an opportunity for ECICW's National Councils to exchange views and experiences.

- Seminars

During recent years the following subjects have been dealt with in seminars :

- Women and poverty
- Women in decision-making positions.
- Equal opportunities for women and men – comparison of the legislative basis and programmes in the European Union and Russia.
- Women in public domain – sustainable development in the field of habitat and the role and active participation of women on the local level.
- Women and economics.
- Democracy and the enlargement of the European Union.

A. Preliminary note on ECICW's Contribution.

1. The European Centre of the International Council of Women (ECICW) proposes this contribution to the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Members of the Convention.
2. ECICW supports several paragraphs of the contribution by the Association of Women of Southern Europe (AFEM) introduced on 13 March 2000 (Charte 4157/00 contrib 42) and 18 April 2000 (Charte 4131/00 contrib 105).
3. In the following document ECICW refers to parts of the AFEM contributions, so as to manifest our agreement with these paragraphs.

B. General Remarks on the proposed Charter provisions

I. EU Charter on fundamental rights

Referring to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (June 1993) ECICW wants to underline that : “All human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated” and that “Women’s Rights are Human Rights”.

Considering that human rights are guaranteed to every human being, this EU Charter should be adopted and implemented by every Member State. The accession to this Charter should be a conditio sine qua non for the entry of new member states into the EU.

ECICW insists that the EU Charter must not contain less rights than the existing International Human Rights Treaties which are already ratified by most, if not all, EU Member States. The EU Charter cannot be regressive compared to other human rights instruments, on the contrary, it should be complementary to these.

II. International Complaint Procedure

In the text under discussion too little attention is paid to the need and possibilities to seek redress and compensation for infringements of human rights by a State Party.

In order to inform individuals, men and women, about the implementation of their human rights, and about the possibilities to lodge a complaint for infringements of these rights against a State party, reference must be made to several international legal instruments providing international complaint procedures.

In order to allow for individual complaints, an Optional Protocol was added and adopted to the following UN human rights instruments :

- to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR)
- to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW)

The Optional Protocols to ICCPR and to CEDAW provide provisions to enable the Human Rights Commission or the CEDAW Committee to receive and consider communications from individuals, or groups of individuals, claiming to be victims of violations of any of the rights set forth in these two documents.

Other Conventions have included a complaint procedure in the text of the treaty itself :

- The European Convention on Human Rights (1950) Art. 25
- The Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination (1965) Art. 14
- The Convention against Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (1984) Art. 22
- The International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (1990) Art. 77

Who can lodge a complaint with an International/EU special Commission or Court ?

Only individuals or groups of individuals claiming to be directly affected by a failure of a State Party to comply with its obligations. The communication must be introduced with the consent of the victim, unless the author(s) can justify the absence of consent.

This is the rule for every Convention mentioned above.

Why ?

During the drafting of the Optional Protocol to the CEDAW-convention (adoption in 1999) after a discussion in depth, the Assembly agreed to accept only complaints from individuals or groups of individuals instead of “groups“ or “NGOs”.

Indeed, if complaints are lodged by NGOs this can cause difficulties with regard to their representation :

- Are they national NGOs - or international or regional NGOs ?
- Do they have a Consultative Status – or not ?

Further NGOs will have to act on behalf of and/or in the interest of the victim whose human rights are violated. Conflicting interests might occur between the victim and the NGO lodging the complaint. Indeed, NGOs might have professional, religious, or ideological interests.

Also the necessary follow-up of the case and the support of the victim until the final decision can cause problems. Indeed, NGOs are living associations with periodic changes in their officers (presidents, members of the board, etc ...), even in their policies, constitution and bylaws. Consequently the question of "sufficient interest" arises.

ECICW states that :

The new EU document on Fundamental Human Rights should contain an article on a complaint procedure allowing for redress of violations of the rights laid down in this EU Charter. Complaints will be lodged by individuals or groups of individuals having sufficient interest and acting on behalf of the victim.

III. Gender equality

During recent years there have been some changes in terminology, including in UN jargon, when referring to equality. The word “sex” has been replaced by “gender”; so for example : “gender equality” instead of “sex equality”.

Moreover, provisions should be gender neutral or refer to both sexes.

IV. Family

“The Family” as a natural and fundamental unit of society, has never been clearly defined. The family, as a unit, cannot claim “group rights”. Only individuals, members of the family, can claim individual human rights.

The lack of a clear definition of “the family” is the major reason why the “International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families” is not yet in force, although dating from December 1990. This convention refers to married persons and the members of their family. Defining the “members of their family” the Convention refers to their dependent children and other dependent persons, who are recognised as members of the family by applicable legislation or applicable bilateral or multilateral agreements between the states concerned.

This may bring about a lot of confusion as in certain regions “the family” is extended and comprises mainly a large range of dependents, while in other regions “the family” is small and includes only the dependent children, the father and mother, the sister and brother of the individual.

In the international legal order a new discussion started concerning the interest of the child regarding his/her genetic material (see recommendation of the Council of Europe on Bio-ethics R(97)5 and R(92).

See further remarks on Article 13.3 of the Draft EU Charter re. “Family life”.

V. The child

Not enough attention is given to the rights of the child.

Children shall be treated as individuals and shall be permitted to influence matters affecting them. We would drop “according to their degree of maturity”. Indeed, who will define the degree of maturity ? Is it linked to age ? Intelligence ? Behaviour ?

See further comments article 23.

VI. Respect for Juridical Acquis

1. AFEM and ECICW underline the need to take into consideration the EU and the international acquis (treaties ratified by all Member States), as well as the constitutional acquis common to the Member States, as minimum standards, and to ensure an advancement in relation to these documents.

2. The EU Member States will thus prove their dedication to the universal principles proclaimed by Article 6(1) EU Treaty ¹ and their determination to ensure that neither this provision nor those of Articles 7² and 49³ of this Treaty become a dead letter. They will thus confirm that they really want to be a Community based on the rule of law and it will strengthen their credibility vis-à-vis their citizens and the international community.
3. AFEM and ECICW recall the solemn declarations of the EU according to which :
- “economic success cannot be ensured unless human rights are observed and guaranteed”;
 - the EU “insists” on the “equivalence”, the “interdependence” and “inter-relatedness” of all human rights, including economic, social and cultural rights which judicial protection they want to promote⁴.
4. It is common knowledge that general non-discrimination clauses do not suffice to eradicate direct and indirect discrimination on the ground of sex, in particular against women, and to establish substantive equality between women and men. The acknowledgement of this fact has led :
- a. At international level :
- To the adoption of special international instruments guaranteeing fundamental rights of women⁵.
 - To the inclusion of specific provisions prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of sex in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) and its Optional Protocol on individual complaints and the International Covenant on Economic and Cultural Rights.
 - To the adoption and the ratification (now by all but 27 Member States of the UN) of the CEDAW Convention and the adoption of the Optional Protocol for individual complaints during the 43rd Session of the Commission on the Status of Women and the confirmation by the General Assembly in 1999.
- b. At community level :
- To the enshrinement of equality between women and men as a general principle and a specific fundamental right (well-established European Court of Justice (ECJ) case law);
 - To the proclamation of equality between women and men as a fundamental mission and objective of the Community which it undertakes to promote in all areas of its jurisdiction (Articles 2, 3(2), 137 EC Treaty);

¹ Article 6(1) EU Treaty : “The Union is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law, principles which are common to the Member States.”

² Sanctions against Member States which violate the principles proclaimed by Article 6(1) EU Treaty.

³ The respect of these principles constitutes a fundamental condition of admission to the EU

⁴ Annual Report of the EU on human rights (1999), paras. 5.1., 5.2., Statement by Mr. J. Fisher on behalf of the EU to the Commission of Human Rights annexed to this Report.

⁵ The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) and the Conventions on the political rights of women, on the nationality of married women etc.

- To the development of an acquis deriving from legislation and case law in respect of equality between women and men and of the prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination based on sex, including any kind of unfavourable treatment on the ground of pregnancy or maternity or the responsibility of child care.
 - To the development of an acquis deriving from legislation and case law and concerning judicial protection such as the rights of individual complaint against direct and indirect sex discrimination by a member state.
- c. At national level : to explicit and specific constitutional guarantees of equality between women and men.

VII. Gender equality

However, in spite of all that, substantive equality between women and men has not been achieved as yet. In order to remedy this situation :

- The Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against women (Art. (1)) provides for positive action in favour of women and the Commission which monitors the application of this Convention insists on the necessity of such action and the ratification and implementation of the Optional Protocol to this Convention;
- The organs which monitor the application of the two International Covenants insist on the necessity of positive action in favour of women;
- An increasing number of national constitutions guarantee substantive equality between women and men and legitimise positive action⁶, thus forming a “constitutional tradition common to the Member States”;
- Article 141(4) EC Treaty provides for positive action “with a view to ensuring full equality in practice between men and women in working life” and Declaration No 28 annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam specifies that such action “should, in the first instance, aim at improving the situation of women”;
- Specific EU directives and Community action programmes for promoting substantive equality between women and men are being adopted and implemented;
- The EU proclaims officially and solemnly “the need to emphasise women’s rights”, including those of the “girl child”⁷ (cf. 12th Critical area of concern of the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing 1995).
- After the UN General Assembly had adopted the Optional Protocol to the CEDAW convention, which provides for individual complaints; the EU pledged in the EU Report on Human Rights op. cit., par. 5.12 that it is “now working for the early entry into force of this new instrument” which will happen after the ratification of the 10th UN Member State.
- It is thus obvious that if the Charter is limited to a general non-discrimination clause, without explicitly enshrining substantive gender equality, it will constitute a regression in respect of equality between women and men which certainly nobody wishes. Discrimination on the grounds of sex is of a particular, structural nature and affects mainly women. Women are not a minority, but more than half of the European population and often suffer multiple discrimination. They have the right to enjoy effectively all fundamental rights and freedoms and be full citizens, in all areas.

C. Amendments and comments on specific articles

The ECICW fully agrees with the introductory comments of AFEM and its comments on Article 1 and 2 of the Draft Charter :

- quote -

Article preceding proposed Article 1

The Union and the Community as well as Member States secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the effective enjoyment of the rights and freedoms defined in the following Articles, which may be relied upon as against their organs and institutions as well as against individuals, in all areas of Union and Community jurisdiction. (Art. 1 ECHR , Horizontal Questions (BODY 3), para, 8).

Comments :

We consider that, since there is a kind of dualism between the EU and the EC and since there are doubts as to whether the EU possesses a legal personality, it would be preferable that reference should be made to both. Besides, it is obvious that, without vertical and horizontal direct effect, the provisions of the Charter will be a dead letter.

Article 1. Dignity of the human person

Everyone has the right to the respect and protection of his/her dignity. The human body or any part thereof is not for trade, regardless of whether the person concerned has consented. (Art. 1 Proposal; Art. 1 EP Decl.)

Comments :

We consider that the exemption of the human body from trade, so that nobody may derive profit or any other benefit therefrom, is a way of implementing respect and protection of human dignity rather than a corollary of the right to life. Consequently, this provision should not be limited to the area of medicine and biology, but should have a more general scope which should also include the prohibition of trafficking in persons, in particular in women and children, for the purpose of forced labour or sexual exploitation, so that the well-known and constantly increasing problems of trafficking in women and children throughout Europe are dealt with. It is indispensable to specify that the consent of the person concerned is irrelevant, since it is obvious and confirmed by common experience that it is impossible to know whether this consent has been freely given. Moreover, extensive research on the matter has proved that, in the great majority of cases, women engaging in prostitution, as least at the outset, do not act with their free consent.

For the rest, we agree with para. 3 of Article 1 of the Praesidium's Proposal. As concerns para. 2 of Article 1 of this Proposal, see infra, Comments under Article 2.

Article 2 : Right to life

Everyone has the right to the protection of his/her life and of his/her physical, psychological and genetic integrity. Torture or inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment, such as sexual mutilations, as well as any other kind of physical or moral violence, including violence within the family, are in particular prohibited. (Art. 1 , 2 Proposal; Art. 2 , 3 ECHR; Art. 6 , 7 CCPR; Art. 2 EP Decl.)

Comments :

The prohibition of torture may be included in Article 2 or in Article 1 as in the Praesidium's Proposal. What is important is the reference to "sexual mutilations" which, as it is well-known, take place even on European territory, as well as the prohibition of "any other kind of physical or moral violence". For the rest, we agree with para 2 of Article 2 of the Praesidium's Proposal, in its alternative wording

- unquote -

Article 3 : Integrity of the person

The integrity of the person must not be protected in medicine only, but also in :

1. Violence in armed conflicts
2. Public or private sphere
3. The trade in human organs and blood.

According to ECICW it is an absolute necessity to add an additional paragraph concerning violence against women

Referring to the UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women adopted by the General Assembly at its 85th Plenary Meeting on 20 December 1993, which provides in Article 1 for the definition of Violence against Women

For the purposes of this Declaration, the term « violence against women » means any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life.

Article 2

The United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women which, in article 2, defines violence as encompassing, but not being limited to "physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring in the family, including battering, sexual abuse of female children in the household, dowry-related violence, marital rape, female genital mutilation and other traditional practices harmful to women".

Referring to Document E/CN.4/1996/53 of 5 February 1996 – Concerning the Commission of Human Rights 52th Session – Item 9 (a) of the Provisional Agenda - Concerning the Further Promotion and Encouragement of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

Report of the Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its causes and consequences, Ms. Radhika Coomaraswamy in accordance with the Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/85.

In paragraph 23 a definition is given of domestic violence :

Domestic violence is violence that occurs within the private sphere, generally between individuals who are related through intimacy, blood or law.

Paragraph 26

The rhetoric of public versus private and the consequent primacy accorded to the public realm has fundamentally affected perceptions of women's rights. In distinguishing certain forms of violence as domestic violence, definitions have arisen out of the original conceptualisation of such violence as private acts within the family. However, an inflexible definition of domestic violence, focusing solely on private actors, legitimises the public/private dichotomy. This construction has continually been challenged and critiqued by women's human rights activists, not least because it neglects a gender-specific dimension. Thus, the development of a comprehensive framework clearly depicting the relation between the nature of the violence perpetrated against women and their private personae is important in an effort to move beyond a private/public distinction in addressing violence.

Paragraph 29

It is the duty of State to ensure that there exists no impunity for the perpetrators of such violence. "In the case of intimate violence, male supremacy, ideology and conditions, rather than a distinct, consciously co-ordinated military establishment, confer upon men the sense of entitlement, if not the duty, to chastise their wives. Wife-beating is, therefore, not an individual isolated, or aberrant act, but a social license, a duty or sign of masculinity, deeply ingrained in culture, widely practised, denied and completely or largely immune from legal sanction".

<6> It is, therefore, argued that the role of State in action in the perpetuation of the violence combined with the gender-specific nature of domestic violence require that domestic violence be classified and treated as a human rights concern rather than as a mere domestic criminal justice concern.

Conclusions ECICW :

ECICW was represented at the 10th UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Vienna 10-17 April 2000).

In the statement of Antonio Costa – speaking on behalf of the European Union and Associated Countries – the EU pledged to develop legal measures to combat violence (see further in comments on paragraph 5) and to ensure the integrity of the person in the private sphere.

Article 5 – para 3 (added in Convent 36) : Traffic in human beings is prohibited

Referring to the Statement of Antonio Costa, Minister of Justice of Portugal. Speaking on behalf of the European Union and Associated Countries at the 10th UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, he stated that countries are threatened by criminal acts. These matters need to be urgently addressed not only by individual states, but with the maximum amount of international co-operation. In this context the European Union has adopted a mobilising goal of creating an area of freedom, security and justice. It is a requirement for membership of the Union that all its member states must respect the rule of law as a common principle. The Union has been actively seeking to develop legal and other measures to strengthen the rule of law in criminal justice.

The theme of organised crime has been receiving significant attention from the Union. At its recent meeting, the European Council has affirmed its deep commitment to reinforcing the fight against serious and transnational crime.

The need to safeguard the rights of victims has attracted increasing attention.

Many delegations have underlined the interconnection between crime and human rights. It is therefore fully justified that both the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Commission on Human Rights deal with some topics. Their co-operation and exchange of information are of vital importance.

Comments :

ECICW strongly recommends to extend article 5 para 3 :

- Stating that transnational criminal groups are a threat to humanity;
- The protection of victims is part of their human rights;
- The traffic of human beings must be punished;

ECICW urges that all efforts be made to prevent enforced involuntary disappearances in times of armed conflict and/or in times of peace perpetrated by criminals.

Therefore ECICW proposes the addition of an article to the Draft EU charter on Fundamental rights :

Referring to the UN Declaration on the Protection of All Persons of enforced disappearance (proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992).

Article 2

1. No State shall practice, permit or tolerate enforced disappearances;
2. States shall act at national and regional levels to contribute by all means to the prevention and eradication of enforced disappearance.

Article 3

Each State shall take effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent and terminate acts of enforced disappearance in any territory under its jurisdiction.

Article 12 : Respect and Protection of Privacy

ECICW wants to refer to the following threats to “the right of privacy” :

1. Referring to the Convention of Human Rights and Bio-Medicine (April 1997)

In Article 5 it is mentioned that the consent of the individual does not offer not enough protection, that the person must not only give his/her free consent but also his/her informed consent. In several UN documents, such as e.g. the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (Cairo, 1994) dealing with reproductive rights and in the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women of Beijing, special attention is given to informed consent.

2. The erosion of the right of privacy is a growing global problem. Violations of this fundamental right very often occur in the media, at the workplace, in processing personal data in computer networks, etc ..
3. The right to privacy also means the right of personal liberty to self-determination. So for instance in the medical field, in bio-ethics (see recommendation of the Council of Europe R(97)5, ethical and judicial conflicts may arise with reference to the protection of genetic information in the field of employment, insurance and social security, criminal proceedings.

Attention should also be given to possible conflicting interests between the individual and society. Legal documents should be elaborated at European and national levels for a number of conflict situations such as money laundering, violence within the family, ...

Conclusion

- With regard to the evolutions in the field of technology and science, new problems have arisen concerning the fundamental rights of privacy;
- Referring to the Conclusions of the 10th UN Congress on Crime Prevention and the Treatment of Offenders;
- Noting that in this intergovernmental meeting the urgency of combating transnational organised crime was stressed;
- ECICW insists that the members of the Convention prepare an innovative tekst on the Fundamental Rights of Privacy. This will prevent a situation of lawlessness in Europe and an inclination towards a society without legal security and protection against criminals.

Article 13 concerning family life

Referring to recommendation R (85) 4 of the Council of Europe on Violence in the Family;

Considering that the family is the basic unit of society ;

Considering that the defence of the family involves the protection of all its members against any form of violence, which all too often occurs among them ;

Considering that there is violence in any act or omission which prejudices the life, the physical or psychological integrity or the liberty of a person or which seriously harms the development of his/her personality ;

Considering that such violence perpetrated within the family affects in particular children on the one side and women on the other, though in different ways ;

Considering that children are entitled to special protection by society against any form of discrimination or oppression and against any abuse of authority in the family and other institutions ;

Considering that the same is true for women as victims and as perpetrators ;

Considering that women insofar as they are subject to certain de facto inequalities which hamper the reporting of any violence of which they are victims ;

Referring to resolution (78) 37 of the Council of Europe on the Equality of spouses in civil law ;

Referring to the recommendation no R (79)17 of the Council of Europe concerning the protection of children against ill-treatment ;

Referring to the proceedings of the Council of Europe's 4th Criminological Colloquy on the ill-treatment of children in the family ;

Referring to recommendation 561 (1969) of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe, on the protection of minors against ill-treatment ;
 Referring to recommendation R (85) 4 of the Council of Europe on Violence in the Family ;

The Council of Europe recommends that the governments of member states :

I. With regard to the prevention of violence in the family :

1. Considering the seriousness and the specific characteristics of violence in the family, the member states should take measures to combat this phenomenon ;
2. Promote the early detection of potentially conflict situations and the settlement of interpersonal and intra-family conflicts ;
3. Governments should help and assist the victims of violent family situations, with due respect for the privacy of others ;
4. Set up administrative departments or multidisciplinary boards with the task of looking after victims of violence in the family and with powers to deal with such cases.

Their powers might include the following :

- to receive reports of acts of violence in the family
 - to arrange for medical examinations at the victim's request
 - to help, care for and advise the various parties involved in cases of violence against the family and to that end to carry out social inquiries
 - to pass on, either to the family and children's courts to the prosecuting authorities, information which the department or board deems should be submitted to one or another of those authorities.
5. Impose strict rules on these departments or boards concerning the divulging information to which they have access in the exercise of their powers ;

II. With regard to the reporting of acts of violence in the family :

6. Calculate specific information on the advisability and feasibility for persons who become aware of cases of violence in the family of reporting them to the competent bodies, particularly those mentioned in paragraphs 4 and 5 above, or of directly intervening to assist the person in danger ;
7. Considering the possibility to removing the obligation of secrecy from the members of certain professions so as to enable them to disclose to the bodies mentioned paragraph 5 above any information concerning cases of violence in the family ;

III. With regard to state intervention following acts of violence in the family :

8. Take steps to ensure that, in cases of violence in the family, the appropriate measures can be quickly taken, even if only provisionally, to protect the victim and prevent similar incidents from occurring ;
9. Take measures to insure that, in any case resulting from a conflict between a couple, measures are available for the purpose of protecting the children against any violence to which the conflict exposes them and which may seriously harm the development of their personality ;

10. Take measures to ensure that the victim's interests are not prejudiced by interference between civil, administrative and criminal measures, it being understood that criminal measures should be taken only as a last resort ;
11. Review their legislation on the power to punish children in order to limit or indeed prohibit corporal punishment, even if violation of such a prohibition does not necessarily entail a criminal penalty ;
12. Study the possibility of entrusting cases of violence in the family only to specialist members of prosecuting or investigating authorities or of trial courts ;
13. Take steps to ensure that, as a general rule, a psycho-social inquiry is carried out into such cases and that, particularly on the basis of the findings of the inquiry and in accordance with criteria that take account of the interests of the victim as well as the children of the family, the prosecuting authority or the court is able to propose or take measures other than criminal ones, especially when the suspect or accused agrees to submit to the supervision of the competent social, medico-social or probation authorities;
14. Do not institute proceedings in cases of violence in the family unless the victim so requests or the public interest so requires;
15. Take measures to ensure protection against any external pressures on members of the family giving evidence in cases of violence in the family. In particular, minors should be assisted by appropriate counsel. Moreover, the weight of such evidence should not be diminished by rules relating to the oath ;
16. Consider the advisability of adopting specific incriminations for offences committed within the family.

Referring to the UN Convention on the Consent to Marriage, Minimum Age for Marriage and Registration of Marriage (entry into force 9 December 1964)

The Contracting States,

Desiring, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

Recalling that Article 16 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that :

1. Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.
2. Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses.

Reaffirming that all States should ensure, inter alia, complete freedom in the choice of a spouse, eliminating completely child marriages and the betrothal of young girls before the age of puberty, establishing appropriate penalties where necessary and establishing a civil or other register in which all marriages will be recorded.

Comments and recommendations of ECICW :

1. Article 13 para 2 should read : “Every person has the right to found a family being married or not.
2. If a marriage is concluded this will only be with the free and full consent of the spouses
3. Child marriage should be prohibited.

Article 21 – Right to asylumECICW proposes :

A third subparagraph should be added concerning the protection of trafficked persons (illegal migrants, trafficked persons especially women and children for slavery, labour and prostitution).

Motivation :

Trafficked persons should receive the same treatment and legal protection as refugees. Up till now only persons fearing to be persecuted for their race, religion, nationality and political opinion can be granted the status of refugee.

Referring to the UN Convention relating to the Status of Refugees (entry into force : 22 April 1954)Article 1 - Definition of the term “refugee”.

For the purposes of the present convention the term “refugee” shall apply to any person who owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, is outside the country of his nationality and is unable, or owing to such fear, is unwilling to avail himself of the protection of that country; or who, not having a nationality and being outside the country of his former habitual residence as a result of such events, is unable or, owing to such fear, is unwilling to return to it.

In the case of a person who has more than one nationality, the term “the country of his nationality” shall mean each of the countries of which he is a national, and a person shall not be deemed to be lacking the protection of the country of his nationality if, without any valid reason based on well-founded fear, he has not availed himself of the protection of one of the countries of which he is a national.

Article 3 : Non-discrimination

The contracting states shall apply the provisions of this convention to refugees without discrimination as to race, religion or country of origin.

Comments and recommendations of ECICW :

1. More and more women are also falling under the definition of this Convention.
2. Trafficked persons, mainly women and children, should also fall under this definition. The traffic in human beings for “slavery, labour or prostitution” should be included and given attention and protection in the new European Charter of Fundamental Rights.
3. State Parties shall take appropriate measures to ensure that the child, who is seeking refugee status or who is considered a refugee, in accordance with applicable domestic law procedures shall, whether unaccompanied or accompanied by his/her parents, or by any other person, receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance.

Article 22 - Equality and non-discrimination

According to ECICW para 3 should read :

The Union will combat the inequalities and will realise equality between women and men. Gender equality will be assured in the employment of the remunerations and working conditions, but should also be a rule for the political participation, the power functions in economy and politics, in society and in private life.

Artikel 23 – Rights of the Child (singular as we speak of individual rights)Comments and recommendations of ECICW

National and international law have to evolve from child and youth protection to juvenile rights.

Children shall be treated as individuals and shall be permitted to influence matters affecting them. ECICW wants to drop “according to their degree of maturity”.

The Charter should not only guarantee children’s civil rights but also their economic and social rights. The treaty should also provide children with a number of guarantees in the area of criminal justice in order to combat the lucrative international trade in children.

The Charter should also grant children the right to preserve their identity, and to express their opinions.

In the international legal order a new discussion has started concerning the interest of the child regarding his/her genetic material (see recommendation of the Council of Europe on Bio-ethics R(97)5 and R(92).

For these reasons ECICW wants to extend article 23 with the following paragraphs :

- State Parties shall ensure the rights of the child without discrimination of any kind based on race, sex, language, religion, opinions, nationality, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status ; and this independent of the child’s parents, legal guardians or family members;

- Referring to article 3.1 of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child;
In all actions concerning children, whether undertaken by public and private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities or legislative bodies, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration;
 - The child shall have the right to have a name, the right to acquire a nationality, in particular where the child would otherwise be stateless;
 - State Parties should respect the right of the child to preserve his or her identity, including nationality, name and family relations;
 - When a child is legally deprived of these rights, the State Parties shall provide appropriate assistance and protection;
 - State Parties shall take measures to combat the illicit transfer and non-return of children abroad;
 - The child shall have the right to freedom of expression in these matters;
 - State Parties shall take all appropriate legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to protect the child from all forms of physical or mental menace, injury or abuse, neglect, maltreatment or exploitation, including sexual abuse (see art. 19 (1) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child);
 - State Parties shall take appropriate measures to ensure that the child, who is seeking refugee status or who is considered a refugee, in accordance with applicable domestic law procedures shall, whether unaccompanied or accompanied by his/her parents, or by any other person receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance.

The European Charter of Fundamental Rights - and Freedom of Religion or Belief

The Church of Scientology has several million members throughout Europe and is involved with human rights and social reform programmes in many countries around the world.

It is clearly important that European citizens see a real application of fundamental human rights principles and not just another round of grand sounding words which take months if not years to agree upon but have little practical application.

It is this concern which fires our contribution to the Charter of Fundamental Rights. Countries of Western Europe have all signed and ratified conventions, declarations and wonderfully idealistic statements on how things should be. This is of course correct as without the ideal there is nothing to head for.

However, it is, of course, but a first stage. What really counts is the application of these principles to the citizens of Europe. Our experience in the field of religious minorities is that in a number of countries members of religious and philosophical groups are seriously concerned that their survival is threatened by the very bodies who have signed these conventions and declarations but are doing nothing to enforce the duties and responsibilities they have to protect those rights.

For example, in the last two months, there has been a series of hearings where members of religious and philosophical groups have testified about discrimination in France and Belgium. Approximately 100 testimonies from 40 different groups were heard during this time and for each person who testified there are at least 10 more that were not heard. Multiply this by the number of people (family members, friends) that were affected through each individual incident and it amounts to thousands of people who are suffering simply because of their belief. Often the authorities are party to, either directly or tacitly, the discrimination.

Of course, similar experiences are found with other minorities and any discrimination which occurs on the basis of colour, sex, ethnic background or other arbitrary criteria is not acceptable. None of these are more or less important than the other but because our experience has been in the field of religion this submission is more tailored to this category. A short background summary will be helpful to understand the background to the problem and consequently why certain wordings have been proposed.

Background

There have been attempts to discredit the subject of religious minority rights from some sectors during the last five years - an attempt which has not succeeded but which has gained a certain amount of currency in some quarters. The main vehicles which have been used in the attempt to undermine religious freedom rights are analysed as follows :

a) Propaganda through assigning a derogatory meaning to a word

By assigning a derogatory meaning to the word "sect" or "cult" and equating as many religious minorities as possible with this categorization is a standard propaganda exercise which has been carried out on religious minorities before. By doing so there is an attempt to differentiate, and drive a wedge between traditional or modern, large or small and theistic or non-theistic religious groups. Nowadays, the word "sect" especially, as used in everyday language and almost constantly by the media, has a negative connotation which is broadly and freely used to categorize any minority religious group in an unfavourable light. Yet international standards on this subject emphasize quite the contrary.

The United Nations, religious experts, and UN treaty-based bodies have consistently found that the expression "religion or belief," as well as the individual terms "religion" and "belief," must be construed broadly to include non-traditional religions and all forms of belief. This was the opinion articulated in two studies prepared by the first two Special Rapporteurs on freedom of religion of the UN Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and expressly confirmed in the Working Paper, drafted by the third Special Rapporteur.

Likewise, the Human Rights Committee, in its General Comment No. 22 on Art. 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, notes that:

"Article 18 protects theistic, non-theistic and atheistic beliefs, as well as the right not to profess any religion or belief. The terms belief and religion are to be broadly construed. Article 18 is not limited in its application to traditional religions or to religions and beliefs with institutional characteristics or practices analogous to those of traditional religions. The Committee therefore views with concern any tendency to discriminate against any religion or belief for any reason, including the fact that they are newly established, or represent religious minorities that may be the subject of hostility by a predominant religious community." (Para. 2)

Moreover, the 1996 Annual Report by the Special Rapporteur on Religious Intolerance to the United Nations Human Rights Commission provides the Rapporteur's opinion on the broad scope of the term religion and the need for equal treatment of all religions, including so called "sects." The Special Rapporteur notes that:

"Religions cannot be distinguished from sects on the basis of quantitative considerations saying that a sect, unlike a religion, has a small number of followers. This is in fact not always the case. It runs absolutely counter to the principle of respect and protection of minorities, which is upheld by domestic and international law and morality. Besides, following this line of argument, what are the major religions if not successful sects?"

"Again, one cannot say that sects should not benefit from the protection given to religion just because they have no chance to demonstrate their durability. History contains many examples of dissident movements, schisms, heresies and reforms that have suddenly given birth to religions or religious movements." As to governmental efforts to distinguish between religions and sects, the Rapporteur concludes that: "All in all, the distinction between a religion and a sect is too contrived to be acceptable. A sect that goes beyond simple belief and appeals to a divinity, or at the very least, to the supernatural the transcendent, the absolute, or the sacred, enters into the religious sphere and should enjoy the protection afforded to religions."

b) Generalization : Making the acts of a few equate to the acts of many

To emphasise and dramatize the very few but certainly horrific events that have occurred with several minority groups is quite illogical and discriminatory. These actions are truly deserving of condemnation but to generalize about all religious or philosophical minorities and create a negative climate by painting all such groups with the same brush is unacceptable and purposefully done. The inherent bias of an "Observatory" into religious minorities which was established by the French government is graphically illustrated with the sweeping and utterly unfounded conclusion in its final report that

"Sects represent a real threat for the State, the society and individuals; it is therefore the task of the Observatory to fight against this threat."

The report relies on sweeping generalizations, serious factual inaccuracies, and vague or unsupported allegations to reach a conclusion that special and drastic governmental measures should be employed against minority religious groups classified by the pejorative term "sect".

The International Helsinki Federation in its 1999 international religious intolerance report, concluded in no uncertain terms that religious intolerance has reached alarming proportions in France:

"While other reports abroad (Swedish parliamentary report and report of the canton of Tessin) recommend dialogue with so-called sects, France has chosen open confrontation. This has led to slanderous reports in the media, to professional prohibitions, to religious discrimination by the French authorities and to increasing intolerance from civil society towards ordinary people on the grounds of their personal religious beliefs."

c) Spreading outright lies or, more often, misrepresentation of events and statements from the groups.

This is exemplified by the entirely false and unscientific reports of the French and Belgian Parliaments which held hearings without allowing the possibility of any correct response by the groups concerned and itemized almost 200 groups as "dangerous" (the Belgian Parliament never formally adopted their list but by the time it was withdrawn the damage was done and it is still used today to discriminatory effect).

That parliamentary bodies would even endorse such an approach is a cause for serious concern. The parliamentary committees acted as judge and jury without even presenting specific allegations to the groups concerned and allowing them to respond. Yet there were no external checks possible of these reports due to parliamentary confidentiality and/or privilege which was invoked to "protect" their work so it could not be challenged in any direct way.

Consequently, without any serious evidence, and certainly no opportunity for the groups concerned to respond to specific allegations, the parliaments of two countries sent a biased and intolerant message to their citizens and to the world in general.

The International Helsinki Federation stated in its 1999 report :

Currently, Austrian, Belgian, French, and German policies in this regard are completely founded on the distinction between "sects" and religions. The Parliamentary Assembly [of the Council of Europe] considers this to be a "pitfall, which the authorities must avoid." Its warning is extremely clear, and calls the neutrality and secularity of the four countries into question.

d) Justifying acts of intolerance by pseudo-scientific reasoning

To justify acts of intolerance or "explain" why people remain members of religious groups is attempted by passing off the theory, as though it were a fact, that such groups are somehow able to brainwash, control or coercively manipulate the minds and wills of their followers.

This theory has no scientific substantiation yet it can often be seen in media articles (and sometimes supposedly serious studies) as "reason" for taking discriminatory actions or making derogatory statements.

As Dr. Benjamin Beit-Hallahmi stated, as part of an American Psychological Association memorandum on the subject "The term 'brainwashing' is not a recognized theoretical concept, and is just a sensationalist 'explanation' more suitable to 'cultists' and revival preachers. It should not be used by psychologists, since it does not explain anything" (1987)

Professors James T. Richardson and Gerald Ginsburg (University of Nevada, Reno) further explained this in a paper originally prepared for presentation at Law and Science Seminar, presented by the Faculty of Laws, University College London, June 30, July 1, 1997 and later published in Law and Science: Oxford University Press, entitled "A Critique Of 'Brainwashing' Evidence In Light Of Daubert: Science And Unpopular Religions"

"Given the problematic nature of scientific support for brainwashing based theories as they are applied to participants in new religions, it is reasonable to ask why such evidence was ever admitted, and why it is sometimes still admitted (Richardson, 1996; Anthony and Robbins, 1995). The most plausible answer has to do with the operation of biases, prejudices, and misinformation in these cases that involve controversial parties and issues or, as Kassin and Wrightsman (1988) say: cases "involving emotional topics over which public opinion is polarized.""

e) Administrative and legislative actions based on the premise that "sects are a danger to society"

Of course, religion or belief is no justification for committing a crime or abusing the good intentions of an individual. Any violations of the law should be properly dealt with by the correct authorities. There exists, certainly within European Union countries, adequate basis for prosecuting anyone who breaks the law and so prosecution should be taken regardless of the religious or other beliefs of any individual or group involved.

What is discriminatory is the trend to propose legislation directed solely at curtailing activities which are religious with the intent of making this a crime, or alternatively, creating "shortcuts" with the intent of persecuting religious groups.

One example of this occurred at the end of last year when the French Senate passed a law which would amend a 1936 law which was passed at that time to curtail the activities of armed militia groups. On December 16, 1999, the French Senate, the upper house of the French legislative system, passed legislation designed to create a means to dissolve groups which, in the opinion of the government, "cause trouble to public order." This proposal was not made public prior to the 15th December 1999, the same day that it was adopted by the Law Commission of the Senate and the day prior to it being voted by the Senate. This almost unheard of attempt to covertly slide non-urgent legislation through the legislative process without the possibility of public scrutiny did not speak well of the intentions or actions of those proposing this legislation.

Perhaps the most telling statement came from one of the Senators supporting the amendment when she said "The dissolution, which is a political decision, also gives the advantage of not using the judicial procedures in which sects are so skillful in manoeuvring."

The proposed law passed its first major legislative hurdle and is now sitting with the National Assembly for possible enactment. To his credit, it has been opposed by the French Interior Minister and so is currently "pending" but not specifically rejected.

Other examples of discriminatory administrative (i.e. government) "stops" are the use of discriminatory materials against religious minorities in schools (examples in Germany and France), the use of "sect filters" - demanding that a person is not a member of a specific religious group (in use in some German Lander), the use of the tax administration and other government bodies to give special attention to religious groups with the intention of harassing (France, Belgium and Germany), special "enlightenment" campaigns to "educate" magistrates, judges and other public officials about the "dangers of sects" (France and Germany). [Details available on request.]

Once the above techniques have been used and repeated often enough even supposedly responsible members of society tend to believe that there is some kind of hidden menace. When media do not allow equal space to refute the allegations, and often ignore such statements altogether, there becomes reason for serious concern. Some of the attempted legislation which has been proposed during the last few years is as follows :

Government responsibility to actively prevent discrimination

International instruments which all members of the European Union have signed make it quite clear that religious freedom is a right guaranteed to all, not to be defined, controlled or otherwise manipulated government. Government even has the active obligation to protect these freedoms and not stand by when discrimination occurs.

The Final Helsinki Act which is at the core of the principles supported by the OSCE states that governments should not only

"recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practise, alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience" but expects that governments "recognize and respect the right of persons belonging to such minorities to equality before the law, will afford them the full opportunity for the actual enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and will, in this manner, protect their legitimate interests in this sphere."

The Concluding document from the Vienna Conference of the OSCE makes this even clearer by stating that the member states will

"take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination against individuals or communities on the grounds of religion or belief in the recognition, exercise or enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all fields of civil, political, economic, social and cultural life and ensure the effective equality between believers and non-believers."

It also calls on them to

"foster a climate of mutual tolerance and respect between believers of different communities as well as between believers and non-believers."

There have been enough warnings from various human rights bodies that these should be taken note of (and indeed have by many European governments who have refused to countenance the measures outlined above).

For example the International Helsinki Federation stated in 1999 that :

All major international human rights conventions as well as other international conventions to which Austria, Belgium, France, and Germany are signatories include a clause that prohibits discrimination on the basis of religion.

The OSCE participating states, which comprise all European countries except the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, have pledged not only to prohibit discrimination but to "take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination against individuals or communities on the grounds of religion or belief in the recognition, exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all fields of civil, political, economic, social and cultural life, and to ensure the effective equality between believers and non-believers." (Article 16 of the Vienna Concluding Document)

The OSCE participating states also have taken upon themselves the affirmative obligation of promoting tolerance. As the 1989 Vienna Concluding Document provides, all participating states shall "foster a climate of mutual tolerance and respect between believers of different communities as well as between believers and non-believers." (Article 16.2 of the Vienna Concluding Document) Therefore, Austria, Belgium, France and Germany and the other member states of the OSCE must respect and implement the provisions of these international instruments which fully guarantee the freedom of religion and belief of their citizens.

The acclaimed University of Essex Human Rights Centre 1997 study on the subject of freedom of religion finds, after conducting extremely detailed and exhaustive research on the topic, that new religions are a recurring target of discrimination in Europe:

"Freedom of religion therefore is not to be interpreted narrowly by states, for example, to mean traditional world religions only. New religions or religious minorities are entitled to equal protection. This principle is of particular importance in light of the evidence reflected in the Country entries, including those of the European section, revealing that new religious movements are a recurring target for discrimination or repression.

* * * * *

As mentioned earlier, the above mechanisms of discrimination apply, with variations on the same theme, to all minorities and so the principles which should be built into the Charter reflect the protection that should be given to all minorities - not just religious or philosophical ones.

To its credit, the European Commission has already taken steps in this direction with the proposal of anti-discrimination directives. Whilst these are limited to the field of employment it is clearly a move in the right direction done within limitations prescribed by the current treaties. To add an all-inclusive article, which stands alone, to a Charter of Fundamental Rights would obviously be in the spirit of the above international standards which provide a obvious basis for the addition of such an article.

[N.B. Whilst certain countries have been mentioned above it is not the intention here to attempt to isolate them. It is clear that the great majority of their citizens, politicians and government administrators care to establish a real human rights environment. The points are, never-the-less, made to illustrate real problems which exist within the European Union and can be substantiated.]

Article 14 of The Charter

It has been stated that the different articles which have been proposed in the Charter have been purposely stated as concisely as possible in order to provide a relatively short and understandable Charter. Whilst this argument has some validity "conciseness" cannot be used as a justification for reducing (and whilst this is obviously not the intention it may well be the effect) fundamental rights.

It is never the majorities which need protecting but the minorities and to give the Charter more meaning and actual effect in daily life the wording should spell out the implications, duties and responsibilities enshrined in a right rather than leave these open to later interpretation - or perhaps misinterpretation. After all, what is the point of this exercise if it does not advance human rights protection but only re-states it.

It is therefore our opinion that the full range of rights should be spelt out and integrated into the Charter in order for it to have a full effect. Our proposal for a wording for article 14 supports, follows and extends the proposal made by Amnesty International and draws upon the wording of article 16 of the Concluding Document from the Vienna Conference of the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (March 1989) and the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief (November 1981). The following is therefore proposed :

"Freedom of thought, conscience and religion includes the right to conscientious objection and the right to freedom of religion. It includes the right to change one's religion or belief, the freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest one's religion or beliefs in worship, teaching, practice and observance, as well as the right not to hold any religious beliefs or to practice any religion.

Furthermore Governments must take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination against individuals or communities on the grounds of religion or belief in the recognition, exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all fields of civil, political, economic, social and cultural life, and to ensure the effective equality between believers and non-believers;

Governments must foster a climate of mutual tolerance and respect between believers of different communities as well as between believers and non-believers.

Appendix I

United Nations Human Rights Committee and Special Rapporteur on Religious Intolerance (excerpts)

The United Nations, religious experts, and UN treaty-based bodies have consistently found that the expression "religion or belief," as well as the individual terms "religion" and "belief," must be construed broadly to include non-traditional religions and all forms of belief. This was the opinion articulated in two studies prepared by the first two Special Rapporteurs on freedom of religion of the UN Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and expressly confirmed in the Working Paper, drafted by the third Special Rapporteur.

Likewise, the Human Rights Committee, in its General Comment No. 22 on Art. 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, notes that:

"Article 18 protects theistic, non-theistic and atheistic beliefs, as well as the right not to profess any religion or belief. The terms belief and religion are to be broadly construed. Article 18 is not limited in its application to traditional religions or to religions and beliefs with institutional characteristics or practices analogous to those of traditional religions. The Committee therefore views with concern any tendency to discriminate against any religion or belief for any reason, including the fact that they are newly established, or represent religious minorities that may be the subject of hostility by a predominant religious community." (Para. 2)

The Committee goes on to find that:

"The fact that a religion is recognized as a State religion or that it is established as official or traditional or that its followers comprise the majority of the population, shall not result in the impairment of the enjoyment of any of the rights under the Covenant, including articles 18 [freedom of thought, conscience and religion] and 27 [protection of minorities], nor in any discrimination against adherents of other religions or non-believers. In particular, certain measures discriminating against the latter, such as measures restricting eligibility for government service to members of the predominant religion or giving economic privileges to them or imposing special restrictions on the practice of other faiths, are not in accordance with the prohibition of non-discrimination based on religion or belief and the guarantee of equal protection under article 26" (Para. 9)

Moreover, the 1996 Annual Report by the Special Rapporteur on Religious Intolerance to the United Nations Human Rights Commission provides the Rapporteur's opinion on the broad scope of the term religion and the need for equal treatment of all religions, including so called "sects." The Special Rapporteur notes that:

"Religions cannot be distinguished from sects on the basis of quantitative considerations saying that a sect, unlike a religion, has a small number of followers. This is in fact not always the case. It runs absolutely counter to the principle of respect and protection of minorities, which is upheld by domestic and international law and morality. Besides, following this line of argument, what are the major religions if not successful sects?"

*** **

"Again, one cannot say that sects should not benefit from the protection given to religion just because they have no chance to demonstrate their durability. History contains many examples of dissident movements, schisms, heresies and reforms that have suddenly given birth to religions or religious movements." As to governmental efforts to distinguish between religions and sects, the Rapporteur concludes that: "All in all, the distinction between a religion and a sect is too contrived to be acceptable. A sect that goes beyond simple belief and appeals to a divinity, or at the very least, to the supernatural the transcendent, the absolute, or the sacred, enters into the religious sphere and should enjoy the protection afforded to religions."

Appendix II

Concluding Document from the Vienna Conference of the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe, March 1989 (excerpts)

"(16) In order to ensure the freedom of the individual to profess and practise religion or belief, the participating States will, inter alia,

(16.1) - take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination against individuals or communities on the grounds of religion or belief in the recognition, exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all fields of civil, political, economic, social and cultural life, and to ensure the effective equality between believers and non-believers;

(16.2) - foster a climate of mutual tolerance and respect between believers of different communities as well as between believers and non-believers;

(16.3) - grant upon their request to communities of believers, practising or prepared to practise their faith within the constitutional framework of their States, recognition of the status provided for them in their respective countries;

*(16.4) - respect the right of these religious communities to - establish and maintain freely accessible places of worship or assembly, - organize themselves according to their own hierarchical and institutional structure,
- select, appoint and replace their personnel in accordance with their respective requirements and standards as well as with any freely accepted arrangement between them and their State,
- solicit and receive voluntary financial and other contributions;*

(16.5) - engage in consultations with religious faiths, institutions and organizations in order to achieve a better understanding of the requirements of religious freedom;

(16.6) - respect the right of everyone to give and receive religious education in the language of his choice, whether individually or in association with others;

(16.7) - in this context respect, inter alia, the liberty of parents to ensure the religious and moral education of their children in conformity with their own convictions;

(16.8) - allow the training of religious personnel in appropriate institutions;

(16.9) - respect the right of individual believers and communities of believers to acquire, possess, and use sacred books, religious publications in the language of their choice and other articles and materials related to the practice of religion or belief,

(16.10) - allow religious faiths, institutions and organizations to produce, import and disseminate religious publications and materials;

(16.11) - favourably consider the interest of religious communities to participate in public dialogue, including through the mass media.

(17) The participating States recognize that the exercise of the above-mentioned rights relating to the freedom of religion or belief may be subject only to such limitations as are provided by law and consistent with their obligations under international law and with their international commitments. They will ensure in their laws and regulations and in their application the full and effective exercise of the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief.

(18) The participating States will exert sustained efforts to implement the provisions of the Final Act and of the Madrid Concluding Document pertaining to national minorities. They will take all the necessary legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures and apply the relevant international instruments by which they may be bound, to ensure the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons belonging to national minorities within their territory. They will refrain from any discrimination against such persons and will contribute to the realization of their legitimate interests and aspirations in the field of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

(19) They will protect and create conditions for the promotion of the ethnic, cultural, linguistic and religious identity of national minorities on their territory. They will respect the free exercise of rights by persons belonging to such minorities and ensure their full equality with others."

Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief

Proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981

The General Assembly,

Considering that one of the basic principles of the Charter of the United Nations is that of the dignity and equality inherent in all human beings, and that all Member States have pledged themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights proclaim the principles of nondiscrimination and equality before the law and the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief,

Considering that the disregard and infringement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or whatever belief, have brought, directly or indirectly, wars and great suffering to mankind, especially where they serve as a means of foreign interference in the internal affairs of other States and amount to kindling hatred between peoples and nations,

Considering that religion or belief, for anyone who professes either, is one of the fundamental elements in his conception of life and that freedom of religion or belief should be fully respected and guaranteed,

Considering that it is essential to promote understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion and belief and to ensure that the use of religion or belief for ends inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations, other relevant instruments of the United Nations and the purposes and principles of the present Declaration is inadmissible,

Convinced that freedom of religion and belief should also contribute to the attainment of the goals of world peace, social justice and friendship among peoples and to the elimination of ideologies or practices of colonialism and racial discrimination,

Noting with satisfaction the adoption of several, and the coming into force of some, conventions, under the aegis of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies, for the elimination of various forms of discrimination,

Concerned by manifestations of intolerance and by the existence of discrimination in matters of religion or belief still in evidence in some areas of the world,

Resolved to adopt all necessary measures for the speedy elimination of such intolerance in all its forms and manifestations and to prevent and combat discrimination on the ground of religion or belief,

Proclaims this Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief:

Article 1

1. Everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right shall include freedom to have a religion or whatever belief of his choice, and freedom, either individually or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching.
2. No one shall be subject to coercion which would impair his freedom to have a religion or belief of his choice.
3. Freedom to manifest one's religion or belief may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

Article 2

1. No one shall be subject to discrimination by any State, institution, group of persons, or person on the grounds of religion or other belief.

2. For the purposes of the present Declaration, the expression "intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief" means any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on religion or belief and having as its purpose or as its effect nullification or impairment of the recognition, enjoyment or exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms on an equal basis.

Article 3

Discrimination between human being on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and shall be condemned as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and enunciated in detail in the International Covenants on Human Rights, and as an obstacle to friendly and peaceful relations between nations.

Article 4

1. All States shall take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief in the recognition, exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all fields of civil, economic, political, social and cultural life.
2. All States shall make all efforts to enact or rescind legislation where necessary to prohibit any such discrimination, and to take all appropriate measures to combat intolerance on the grounds of religion or other beliefs in this matter.

1. The parents or, as the case may be, the legal guardians of the child have the right to organize the life within the family in accordance with their religion or belief and bearing in mind the moral education in which they believe the child should be brought up.
2. Every child shall enjoy the right to have access to education in the matter of religion or belief in accordance with the wishes of his parents or, as the case may be, legal guardians, and shall not be compelled to receive teaching on religion or belief against the wishes of his parents or legal guardians, the best interests of the child being the guiding principle.
3. The child shall be protected from any form of discrimination on the ground of religion or belief. He shall be brought up in a spirit of understanding, tolerance, friendship among peoples, peace and universal brotherhood, respect for freedom of religion or belief of others, and in full consciousness that his energy and talents should be devoted to the service of his fellow men.
4. In the case of a child who is not under the care either of his parents or of legal guardians, due account shall be taken of their expressed wishes or of any other proof of their wishes in the matter of religion or belief, the best interests of the child being the guiding principle.
5. Practices of a religion or belief in which a child is brought up must not be injurious to his physical or mental health or to his full development, taking into account article 1, paragraph 3, of the present Declaration.

Article 6

In accordance with article I of the present Declaration, and subject to the provisions of article 1, paragraph 3, the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief shall include, inter alia, the following freedoms:

- (a) To worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief, and to establish and maintain places for these purposes;
- (b) To establish and maintain appropriate charitable or humanitarian institutions;
- (c) To make, acquire and use to an adequate extent the necessary articles and materials related to the rites or customs of a religion or belief;

- (d) To write, issue and disseminate relevant publications in these areas;
- (e) To teach a religion or belief in places suitable for these purposes;
- (f) To solicit and receive voluntary financial and other contributions from individuals and institutions;
- (g) To train, appoint, elect or designate by succession appropriate leaders called for by the requirements and standards of any religion or belief;
- (h) To observe days of rest and to celebrate holidays and ceremonies in accordance with the precepts of one's religion or belief;
- (i) To establish and maintain communications with individuals and communities in matters of religion and belief at the national and international levels.

Article 7

The rights and freedoms set forth in the present Declaration shall be accorded in national legislation in such a manner that everyone shall be able to avail himself of such rights and freedoms in practice.

Article 8

Nothing in the present Declaration shall be construed as restricting or derogating from any right defined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights.

CHARTRE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNE

Audition du 27 Avril 2000
Parlement Européen

Contribution d'Eurochambres

Eurochambres, l'Association des Chambres de Commerce et d'Industrie européennes qui représente 14 millions d'entreprises, apporte tout son soutien à la décision du Conseil de Cologne de doter l'Union européenne d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux. En effet, à l'aube d'un élargissement historique et à l'heure de la globalisation de l'économie, la notion d'identité européenne reste encore, pour la majorité des citoyens, un concept flou. La Charte des droits fondamentaux en énonçant les droits des citoyens leur permettra une plus forte prise de conscience de leur appartenance à l'entité européenne.

Offrir aux citoyens les moyens de pleinement jouir de leurs droits

Les Chambres de Commerce et d'Industrie considèrent que la Charte ne devrait pas se limiter à lister ou définir les droits et devoirs des citoyens européens. Sans pour autant conférer de nouvelles compétences aux instances communautaires, la Charte devrait mentionner leurs devoirs de favoriser l'établissement d'un climat économique, social et politique permettant aux citoyens d'accéder à leurs droits et de garantir leur effectivité.

Droits économiques et sociaux : le rôle sociétal de l'entreprise

Les droits économiques et sociaux des citoyens ne pourront trouver leur pleine expression sans l'existence de l'entreprise dont le rôle sociétal doit être mis en exergue.

En effet, celui-ci a fortement évolué. D'outil de production à l'origine, l'entreprise est devenue le moteur de la croissance économique, le premier pourvoyeur d'emplois et le principal créateur d'emplois. L'entreprise participe donc directement au bien être du citoyen.

Au niveau du progrès technologique, le rôle de l'entreprise a également changé. Autrefois l'entreprise était le champ d'application des découvertes. A présent l'entreprise est devenue le laboratoire où nombre d'innovations technologiques importantes ont été réalisées.

Le rôle de l'entreprise mérite d'être encore analysé sous l'angle de la formation. La formation traditionnelle a été fortement critiquée car trop théorique et inapte à répondre aux besoins du marché. La formation en alternance entreprise/ université après avoir fait ses preuves en Allemagne est en passe de se généraliser au niveau européen.

Ainsi, l'entreprise est à présent le creuset où les intérêts économiques, sociaux et technologiques se rejoignent. L'entreprise joue un rôle sociétal primordial qu'il convient de souligner et mettre en évidence, car encore sous-estimé.

Dans ce contexte, l'entreprise doit trouver sa place dans le dialogue que les instances communautaires ont entamé avec la société civile. Les Chambres de Commerce et d'Industrie sont en faveur de l'établissement d'un dialogue structuré et institutionnel afin de renforcer la consultation démocratique dans le processus de prise de décision.

Interface entre les entreprises dont elles représentent les intérêts et les autorités publiques, les Chambres de Commerce et d'Industrie sont les interlocuteurs naturels des instances communautaires. Ce dialogue, dans la perspective de la mise en œuvre d'une « European Governance », sera d'autant plus significatif.

Droits civils et politiques en phase avec l'évolution de la société

Les droits civiques et politiques doivent pouvoir refléter les bouleversements qui ont marqué la société depuis ces dernières décennies.

Les concepts de subsidiarité et de proximité ont été sans nul doute les principes politiques les innovateurs et les plus marquants.

Pour les Chambres de commerce et d'industrie, ces principes doivent être repris dans l'exercice du droit des citoyens à une bonne administration : à savoir une administration efficace et simplifiée. En vertu du principe de subsidiarité et de proximité, l'administration doit être décentralisée et gérée au niveau le plus proche des citoyens, tenant compte de leurs besoins spécifiques et l'environnement économique et local dans lequel ils vivent.

L'administration ne doit pas nécessairement être gérée par les autorités publiques. Certaines de ses fonctions pourraient être assumées par des institutions socio-professionnelles représentatives des intérêts généraux de l'économie telles que les Chambres de Commerce, par exemple, plus aptes, compte tenu de leurs missions et de leurs connaissances du terrain, à les assumer.

Au niveau du droit à la protection juridique, la globalisation des échanges internationaux, le développement du commerce électronique et la mobilité accrue des citoyens auront comme conséquence inévitable l'augmentation des litiges transnationaux.

Or, compte tenu de la lenteur, la complexité des procédures judiciaires et en particulier des problèmes liés à l'exécution des sentences, des formes alternatives de règlements de litiges doivent être promues tel que l'arbitrage, la médiation ou le règlement alternatif des litiges.

Les Chambres de Commerce, en tant qu'institutions non sectorielles et représentatives des intérêts généraux de l'économie, sont idéalement placées pour les promouvoir et pour y jouer un rôle central. Ainsi au niveau européen, les Chambres de commerce sont actuellement entrain d'élaborer un projet de règlement des litiges en ligne.

Quant au droit à l'information, avec le développement du multi média, nous assistons à une augmentation exponentielle de l'information. Le citoyen doit faire face à trois facteurs : (i) savoir que l'information existe (ii) la trouver (iii) la comprendre. Les Chambres de commerce, compte tenu de leur réseau et de leurs compétences, sont par essence même des organes démultiplicateurs de l'information.

Une Charte indissociable du débat sur la réforme des instances institutionnelles

La décision du Conseil de Cologne de doter l'Union d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux représente pour les citoyens et pour le processus d'intégration européenne une avancée considérable.

Cependant, les Chambres de Commerce considèrent que la Charte doit être plus qu'une simple déclaration politique à valeur morale, elle doit avoir une force juridique contraignante. Les droits fondamentaux des citoyens ne doivent pas être écartés de la réflexion sur l'avenir des institutions.

Pour une plus grande sensibilisation des citoyens de l'UE sur les travaux de la Convention

Les citoyens de l'Union européenne, bien que représentés au sein de la Convention par les membres du Parlement européen et par les membres des parlements nationaux, doivent être mieux informés des travaux menés dans leurs intérêts par la Convention.

Dans cet esprit, Eurochambres propose qu'un volet du plan financier adopté par la Commission européenne, pour encourager le débat public sur la Conférence intergouvernementale, soit consacré à la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'UE, les deux actions étant complémentaires.

Eurochambres un réseau de 1300 Chambres au service de l'intégration européenne

Eurochambres rappelle que les 1300 Chambres européennes constituent un réseau profondément enraciné aux niveaux local et régional, qui s'étend sur l'ensemble du territoire européen. C'est ce réseau qu'elle met à la disposition de la Convention pour favoriser la sensibilisation des citoyens.

Conscientes des enjeux décisifs de l'intégration européenne, les Chambres de Commerce européennes, sous l'égide d'Eurochambres, ont signé en octobre 1999, la Charte des Chambres de Commerce et d'Industrie européennes. Cette Charte réaffirme solennellement l'engagement des 1300 Chambres et des 14 millions d'entreprises qu'elles représentent à promouvoir les intérêts généraux de l'économie que ce soit au niveau local, régional, national ou européen.

Le rôle des Chambres est également d'être précurseur et d'anticiper les évolutions économiques. Ainsi, elles offrent aux entreprises des services innovants qui leur permettront de s'adapter à la nouvelle conjoncture. L'exemple le plus illustratif est l'action que mènent les Chambres pour sensibiliser leurs membres aux enjeux de la nouvelle société et plus particulièrement du commerce électronique.

THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EU

Intervention of Comm. Danilo Longhi
Vice President of Eurochambres
President of Unioncamere

Audition on The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU

Brussels, 27th April 2000

I represent here 1300 Chambers of Commerce members of Eurochambres and 14 million businesses registered in the Chambers.

The Chambers of Commerce, defined as promoters of local development are a network of institutions which interpret the new trend emerging in economy and society in Europe and they represent a junction between the State (including the EU level) and the market /businesses, also between public and private sector.

- The Charter for a realignment of society, economy and EU

The objective is presenting some consideration and proposals for the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU.

But why are Chambers of Commerce interested in the Charter of Fundamental Rights?

Since a long time Chambers of Commerce have felt the need of a deep reform of EU Treaties characterized by a realignment between civil society, business and institution. This realignment is necessary because businesses have assumed a new role in today's reality.

Changes have occurred in the international market and in the production organization have emphasized, in a definitive way, a new role and a new function of business, at least under two aspects:

- It expresses not only the needs of who owns the company but is a place of synthesis of different interests (economic, social, technological and professional) of the working world, of "techné", of capital, and of entrepreneurship.
- It's the principal subject of economic and social innovation and guarantees economic growth and social cohesion.

A realignment of institutions to this new “scenario” needs overcoming the sensation of gap between EU institutions and “citizen/business “ because businesses too have to be considered as an organizational network of citizens for the execution of production activities. Filling up this gap means that the answers expected from the European institutions have to be adopted to the new request of citizens and businesses. All that requires a different approach of the European institutions, a different way of administrative management, a different transfer of public powers, a real partnership of organization of relationships between different institutions in the prospect of a new governance.

2. European Chambers of Commerce proposals

The form of our proposals is linked to what has already been said in the introduction.

2.1 Not only entrepreneurs or workers but also businesses in the Charter of fundamental rights

In our opinion it would be important that not only the right of association, negotiation and collective action of employers and workers (which the Charter already mentions¹) but also the introduction of the right of the “new business” to be represented and to hold a dialogue with the institutions of the European Union because it plays today also an institutional role.

It is suitable remembering also how business has always been one of the prime movers of the European integration. To the old threlateral relationship between State/business, citizens/businesses, there has been the substitution with the threlateral relationship between business/national State/EU. Businesses have been, until now, one of the drives of the European integration thanks to the principle of non-discrimination quoted in the Charter². The Italian jurist Cassese defines businesses as “the real spies of market disorder” because they can assert the principle of not discrimination in front of European institutions or, better, the principle of free competition.

In our opinion the Charter is important because we are moving from an idea of rights of freedom created in function of mercantile rights and of the creation of an internal market, to something different where rights do not have their particular foundation on market anymore but they found it in something else. The summit of Tampere on European space of freedom, justice and security has represented a further step in this direction: we moved from an economic space to a constitutional one.

² Art. 19 of Convent 8; art. J of Convent 17.

2.2 Not only a fair administration but a real subsidiarity and proximity

The Charter of fundamental rights states the right to a fair administration³. With regard to this it is suitable to fully supplement this right with the principle of subsidiarity and proximity as fundamental regulation of the relationships between EU and the different bodies of the European Union.

The principle of subsidiarity, already granted in the treaties of Maastricht and Amsterdam (but not enforced in real terms), has to be considered not only in a vertical direction (on the basis of an ascending progression from the smallest territorial scale to the largest one), but also in a horizontal one, as a lever to improve the autonomous ability of action of economic and social subjects.

Knotting again threads between society and European Union means also a significant simplification of relationships in order to assure a better effectiveness to the decisional process and to the administrative one.

2.3 Valorise functional autonomies and networks

We should introduce the following principle: public functions practice do not have necessarily to be reserved to the EU or national-regional institutions, but can be assured also by institutions, corporations or organisms which represent social bodies. This involves the valorisation of what the Italian legal system recognizes as functional autonomies, among which there are the Chambers of Commerce as representations of different interests, but always arising from citizens.

It is the awareness of this autonomy and its general function that motivated European Chambers of Commerce to adopt themselves a Charter of the European Chambers of Commerce, signed last October in Cyprus. Therefore, we have recognized ourselves as a network of local institutions able to independently understand the needs of territory, citizens and enterprises.

To the European Union this point is quite important in order to face properly a polycentric society enlarged to candidate States. And not only for this reason, but also referring to the right of information stated by the Charter that, without “legs” (that is the networks), risks to be hopeless.

3. Final remarks

These proposals and thoughts have been explained briefly and concern only few of the important issues of the Chambers of Commerce, even if they evoke such big topics. If through the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights it will be possible not only to give a contribution to the integration process and consciousness of citizen rights but also to influence the EU institutions reform (obtaining more effectiveness, simplification and an enlargement of autonomies), then we might gain approval from a new and wide public opinion towards the EU institutions and a substantial reconciliation of citizens and enterprise-citizens.

Environmental protection

Concerning environmental protection, the Praesidium of the Convent has proposed the following:

„Article 44. Environmental protection

Union policies shall ensure environmental protection, which involves preserving, protecting and improving the quality of the environment, protecting human health and prudent and rational utilisation of natural resources.“

We propose the following as the text of the right to environmental protection in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union:

Article X. Environmental protection Everyone has the right to the protection of his natural environment. Content and limits of this right shall be prescribed by law.

Reasons:

The proposal of the Praesidium refuses to give the citizens of the European Union a right to the protection of their natural environment. Instead, it suggests only a vague and practically hardly effective declaration of political obligations.

The present proposal gives everyone a genuine and enforceable right to the protection of his natural environment. As a citizen's right it should find its place among the Articles 1 - 30 of the Praesidium's proposal. Only then, the central importance of environmental protection for the citizens of the European Union and for the Union as such will be sufficiently acknowledged and respected.

The limitation of the right, proposed in sentence 2, will ensure, that the definition of the acceptable amount of environmental degradation and of the level of protection remains the prerogative of the legislator. The proposed right to environmental protection will be not more - and not less - than a right to protection according to law.

Droit à l'éducation (Ajouter un alinéa 4 à l'article 16)

« Tout individu a droit à l'accès aux ressources de sens, historiques, littéraires, artistiques, philosophiques et religieuses, qui constituent le patrimoine symbolique de l'humanité, en vue de se constituer comme personne et comme sujet éthique.

Les Etats-membres ont le devoir de veiller à ce que les espaces publics de transmission et d'échange culturels organisés par eux ou auxquels ils participent, qu'il s'agisse du système d'enseignement, de la formation permanente, des médias ou des aides à la production culturelle, assurent la diffusion de ce patrimoine. »

Droit à la pleine activité

« Toute personne adulte dépourvue d'emploi doit se voir offrir la possibilité de participer à une activité d'intérêt général normalement rémunérée. »

Droit au temps choisi

« Dans le cadre contractuel des relations de travail, toute personne a le droit de faire valoir tout au long de sa vie, l'harmonie des temps consacrés à sa vie professionnelle, à sa formation, à l'exercice de ses responsabilités familiales et civiques et à son épanouissement personnel. »

Droit d'asile

« Toute personne craignant une persécution, quels que soient son sexe, son origine géographique, sa nationalité, sa religion, etc... a le droit de trouver asile dans l'Union. Ce droit implique l'accès des demandeurs d'asile à une procédure juste et efficace pour l'examen de leur demande et, par voie de conséquence, l'accès au territoire des Etats membres en tenant compte de leur choix du pays en raison des attaches familiales, culturelles, linguistiques ou autres. Des conditions de vie dignes doivent être assurées dès l'entrée sur le territoire. »

II - Ajout aux traités

Charter of Basic Rights Speech by Frederic Pascal on behalf of CAF ECS at the Convention
27 April 2000

As a member of the advisory committee which was formed in October 1995 under the chairmanship of Mrs. Pintasilgo, the former Prime Minister of Portugal, and at the initiative of the European Commission, I am pleased to see that the essential recommendation of our report regarding the collective development of basic rights for the European Union has been put into action.

As spokesman for Carrefour pour une Europe civique et sociale (CAF ECS), which includes figures from French associations, I would like to present four points and a proposal for this Charter.

1. The Charter must reinforce European identity by ensuring the reality of the rights which it sets forth. It is not enough for Europe to refer to basic rights, it must make them a reality. This means that these rights must be observed by politicians, institutions and in concrete behaviour, not just through texts which present goals for the future. Through concrete application of these rights, Europe can distinguish itself from other countries which speak of rights while allowing humanly unacceptable situations to continue.

2. The democratic model of today's Europe puts the individual at the centre of the political system. But democracy requires a population interested in public affairs, responsible and aware of their rights and responsibilities, ready to think and to debate. This requires transmission of systems of moral, spiritual and cultural values compatible with the multiple forms of secular institutional expression. Such transmission, respecting freedom of conscience, is essential for the development of diverse humanism. This transmission must be included in the media, in education and in culture to guarantee all people the right of access to the meaning and symbolic heritage of humanity. The article regarding the right to education should be modified to take this into account.

3. The right to work must be complemented by: the right to continuing education throughout one's life in order to adapt one's skills and goals to economic possibilities and also a right to time choices in order to harmonise the time devoted to professional activities, training, to family and civic responsibilities and to personal development. A socially-useful activity, with a normal wage, must be offered to all people without employment. The struggle against poverty and exclusion requires that all people have real access to these basic rights. This access is thus, in itself, a basic right which must be expressed and declared as such.

4. The right of association must be formally recognised. It must be distinguished from the right to form unions which reflects labour rights. The right of association must apply to all people living in the European Union. It must be written so that it can later be used to establish the principle of European associations which will give new momentum to civil society on the European level.

The debate concerning the articles already examined by the Convention has revealed difficulties and questions, particularly in scientific and technical areas which are constantly changing, as well as with the current definition of European citizenship linked to nationality. A charter of rights cannot accept that things are forbidden simply because of current fears. It must define basic rights to be protected in all situations.

This debate on the Charter will not be fully resolved at the Nice Council, further work is needed. With the creation of the Convention, we are fortunate to have a new forum for public debate involving organised citizens. We therefore think that it is essential for the Convention to be extended for three years. That is our proposal. This would allow for supplementing some points of the Charter, and especially developing the guiding principles of EU policy and reinforcing the expression of organised civil society which today is rarely, if ever, consulted by EU decision-making bodies.

PART I:
WHY A GREATER EMPHASIS ON ETHICS IS SO ESSENTIAL TO EUROPE?

Contemporary European civilisation is at the same time based on science, technology and multiculturalism. This multiculturalism, however, is moderated by the Graeco-Latin and Judeo-Christian traditions. These are the historical sources of European values, modern science and technology, and the roots of human rights, which ordains the respect of all individuals, including those of a non-European cultural background. Pluralism, tolerance, and open dialogue about cultural and moral differences constitute therefore a distinctive sign of the European idea. Its implementation requires discussion among all parties in a civil society as a primary source of legitimisation of the rules, to be followed by all.

European diversity is a wealth. European acculturation must include enlightening all citizens about multiculturalism, i.e. how vital it is to inculcate a culture that fosters the importance of many cultures getting along well together.

European education must also stress the importance of inculcating the culture of science and technology. Only then can citizens adopt an informed and balanced attitude towards advances in science and technology. Such an attitude is opposite to technophile or technophobe blindness. Science and technology must increase - and not decrease - freedom and choice for everyone.

This increase in freedom and choice not only involves new discoveries and future inventions, but also safeguards the wealth inherited from the past. Science and technology must be at the service of safeguarding human heritage. Insofar as science and technology replace nature and tradition whilst maintaining the idea of democracy and humanity, the legitimacy of this substitution depends on the capacity of this civilisation to show more active generosity than nature and tradition show.

This means that science and technology should strive to alleviate the suffering, inequality, injustice, and discrimination that tradition and nature have brought out. Moreover, science and technology should not introduce new suffering, inequality, injustice, servitude, constraints or discrimination. In this respect science, technology and multiculturalism face many challenges in the field of biotechnology and ICT. These challenges require not only recognition and the promotion of individual autonomy, but also vigilance with regard to social solidarity between all the individuals. This is to say that supporting individual rights does not mean the setting up of an egoistic society. A market economy in Europe must therefore not exclude a safety net, that is protection for all based on strong collective values.

PART II:
THE GROUP'S APPROACH OF THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CITIZENS RIGHTS AND NEW TECHNOLOGIES.

A. Background Sources.

In suggesting provisions establishing the rights of the citizen or of the person when faced with science and new technologies, the Group did not refer only to its own opinions, but also to a variety of international instruments. The first is the European Convention on Human Rights as far as it is part of the body of Community law, reflected in particular by the case law of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg. However the Group has also drawn on other international instruments - binding or declaratory - and on European law concerning its areas of competence covering information technologies and life sciences.

These instruments include for example:

International legal instruments	European legal instruments
biomedicine and genetics:
- UN Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights (1998)	- the Directive on the protection of biotechnological inventions (1998), which excludes the patenting of inventions which should be contrary to public order or morality
- Council of Europe Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine (1997)	- the Directive on in-vitro diagnostic medical devices (1998) which refers to the protection of the integrity of human persons
information technologies:
- Council of Europe Convention on Data Protection (1981).	- the Directive on the data protection (1995), which refers to the principle of respect for privacy

The Opinions of the Group are the following:

EGE opinions

- N°1.- Use of Performance-Enhancers in Agriculture and Fisheries (12/03/93);
N°2.- Products derived from Human Blood or Human Plasma (12/03/93);
N°3.- Legal Protection of Biotechnological Inventions (30/09/93)
N°4.- Gene Therapy (13/12/94)
N°5.- Labelling of Food derived from Modern Biotechnology (05/05/95)
N°6.- Prenatal Diagnosis (20/02/96)
N°7.- Genetic Modifications of Animals (21/05/96)
N°8.- Patenting of Inventions involving elements of Human Origin (25/09/96)
N°9.- Cloning Techniques (28/05/97)
N° 10 - The 5th Research Framework Programme (11/12/99)
N° 11 - Human Tissue Banks (21/07/98)
N° 12 - Human Embryo research (23/11/98)
N° 13 - Healthcare and information Society (30/07/99)
N° 14 - Doping in Sport (11/11/99)

Furthermore, the Group refers also to the opinions and reports published by the national ethics committees in the Member States or other relevant national bodies. The work carried out by these committees on a wide range of issues constitutes a useful source of inspiration for deliberations on ethics, and contributes to define ethical norms to be taken into account in national regulations or national policies. The Group urges the European Commission to make this information widely available and usable.

B. Basic ethical principles emerging from EGE Opinions

In its advisory task, the Group has identified ethical issues arising from the use of new technologies, both biotechnology and information and communication technology (ICT). It has done so with a view to helping European decision-makers both on legal and policy matters.

The Group considers the following starting points, which reflect Europe's social dimension:

1. - the Charter should highlight the two basic ideas, which are hallmarks of European society: dignity and freedom.
2. - the Charter cannot but refer explicitly to those technologies that deeply affect people's lives. In particular, ICT is increasingly pervasive, transforming people's lifestyles, identities, and choices on many levels, and contributes to changing education, health, social services, culture, etc.
3. - the Charter must not be confined, as the European Convention on Human Rights is, to stressing individual rights, rather it should include social rights according to the fundamental European value of solidarity.
4. - it is no longer enough to simply state "vertical" rights intended to protect citizens in their relations with public authorities. Therefore the Group also proposes listing "horizontal" rights to protect people's rights in their everyday life, vis-à-vis public and private bodies.

In its proposals, the Group expresses key ideas regarding the different areas in question:

Molecular genetics and biotechnology

Here the Group wishes to emphasise three particularly serious types of risk:

- "merchandising" the human body, its components and products;
- new forms of discrimination stemming from the knowledge of the genetic characteristics of humans;
- the instrumentalisation of the human beings through genetic manipulation of human beings, which the Group has deemed ethically unacceptable but which could become a reality at a time when human power over life is increasing considerably.

Information and communication technologies

These technologies are increasingly ubiquitous, permeating individual and social activities as well as objects of everyday use, influencing many aspects of daily life and work. Given the many opportunities these technologies offer, including the combination of genetic and ICT (eg. biobanks), it is vital to watch over their problematic aspects and in particular:

- to improve the protection of privacy (data protection), respecting people's right to maintain boundaries, but also to preserve privacy, autonomy, confidentiality, and solitude;
- to arm individuals against the introduction of systems likely to reduce their freedom and autonomy (video surveillance, behaviour control, and personal profiling based on Internet transactions) or likely to increase people's dependency on selection and decision mechanisms which are not transparent or understandable.

The ethics of responsibility

The Group wants to emphasise the major importance of the ethics of responsibility, which is a corollary of the risks linked to science and new technologies. Technoscience makes us more powerful but at the same time more vulnerable. This is shown by the damage recently caused in the course of new experimentation such as gene therapy or by the disastrous consequences of viruses on the web. Modern technology demands more accountability and even liability. It requires affirming for instance:

- the consumer's right to food safety, a principle which is considered by the Group as "an ethical imperative" (see the Opinion concerning "the labelling of foods derived from modern biotechnology"- 5/5/1995).
- the individual's right to information security, in the same way deemed "an ethical imperative to ensure the respect for human rights and freedoms of the individual, in particular the confidentiality of data..."(see the Opinion about "ethical issues of healthcare in the information society" 30/7/99).

Thus in the Group's view the precautionary principle commonly related to environmental law is applicable to all kind of fields, especially new technologies. It entails the moral duty of risk assessment pertaining to research and new technologies as well as the individual's right to fair reparation in case of damage. If not mentioned specifically in the Charter itself, such an approach with all its legal consequences must still be kept in mind. It is the expression of prudence as a genuine ethical virtue.

C. Towards a Charter with binding legal effect

The Group declared it was in favour of a Charter with binding legal effect. If not included in the Treaty itself, the Charter could at least be annexed to the Treaty in a declaration having the same binding legal effect. It is timely to assert legally the fundamental rights which underpin European identity. It is essential to launch a strong political message regarding the founding values of the European construction towards European citizens particularly in the context of enlargement. Furthermore, the use of new technologies, which are not confined to national borders, should be framed by binding rules based on clear common ethical values.

For the rest, the Group has bowed to the constraints of a Charter that is intended to be a permanent reference instrument. The group has limited itself to short, operational provisions. Two additional factors encouraged the Group in this approach. First, the rapidly progressing nature of the life sciences and information technology make it impossible to lay down very detailed provisions which fairly soon could become obsolete; second, the Group took account of the need to preserve the multicultural nature of European society which precludes issuing strict prohibitions.

PART III: SPECIFIC PROPOSALS AND COMMENTS

The Group has considered the Draft Charter (CHARTE 4149/00 CONVENT 13), examined the articles relevant within its mandate, and proposes the following alternatives and comments.

Article 1

Draft Charter: "Dignity of the human person"

The dignity of the human person shall be respected and protected in all circumstances.

EGE proposal: "Dignity and freedom of the human person"

Everyone's dignity and freedom must be respected.

Comments:

The respect of the dignity of the human person is at the root of the ethics of science and new technologies as well as of human rights. It is clear that by asserting "the inherently equal dignity of all members of the human family", the Preamble to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is aimed at prohibiting all acts which do not conform to the ideas of humanity. Dignity, although a strong juridical and ethical concept in Europe, is a delicate idea when transposed into legal language. Indeed it states that humans have inalienable value, neither specifying who the person or the human being is, nor what the actions and situations which affect this intangible value are. "Any human being is all humanity". Jean-Paul Sartre summarised the scope of the principle of dignity, which is different from all other principles of law and rights.

Other rights and liberties are “neither general nor absolute”, as is commonly stated by European Constitutional Courts.

The right to dignity, on the other hand, is impossible to restrict in any way for the reasons above mentioned. There is nevertheless a philosophical debate about the real meaning of such a principle.

- According to some people, all rights and freedoms stem from dignity, as an inherent value of the human person. Thus ideally there should be no conflict between dignity and freedom.

- But it cannot be denied that there are conflicts between this idea in the current debate. The bioethical discussion in particular illustrates this kind of conflict in a wide range of issues such as abortion and euthanasia.

The Group believes that clearly associating the ideas of dignity and freedom is the best way to ensure that the principle of dignity does not lead to an authoritarian society. In associating dignity and freedom, the Group underlines the necessity to debate what appears contrary to dignity according to society and to the person concerned.

This does not mean of course that the Group does not recognise the unique value of dignity as a principle of law. The Group referred many times to it in its diverse opinions. (see its Opinion on the Fifth Research Program (11/12/97) which states that the dignity of the human being has to be respected by researchers; see also its Opinion on healthcare information (30/7/99) which notes that amongst the ethical principles involved “human dignity serves as a basis for requirement of privacy, confidentiality and medical secrecy”; and its Opinion on doping in sport (11/11/99) which suggests that doping can be contrary to the dignity of the athlete).

The balanced approach of the Group associating dignity and freedom in the same article of the Charter is thus aimed at supporting a European society open to the debate.

Article 2

Draft Charter: “Right to life”

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to execution.

Comments:

The Group fully agrees with this belief already mentioned in Article 2 of the ECHR.

Nevertheless, it has some remarks to make on its use in the context of bioethics.

1. The principle of the right to life is not used in international texts on bioethics such as the Council of Europe’s Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine and the UN Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights. This is not by chance. It is because the recognition of the right to life in the context of bioethics raises a number of delicate questions, for instance “to whom does this right apply?” “is this right applicable to the unborn child, as seems to be the case under article 40 of the Irish Constitution?” Is this right likely to be imposed by law if the person concerned is willing to shorten his/her life for personal reasons? These questions directly refer to the difficult issues of the status of the embryo and of euthanasia.

2. As stipulated in the Group’s Opinion on human embryo research (23/11/98), “The respect for different philosophical, moral or legal approaches and for diverse national cultures is essential to the building of Europe”. In this same Opinion, the Group avoided to use the expression “the right to life” which appeared as rather ambiguous. That is why the opinion in question refers to “the respect for human life, from the embryonic stage”.

3. It should thus be pointed out that in establishing the right to life, in general, without associating it more explicitly with the prohibition of death penalty (that is to say in the same paragraph of the article concerned), the risk is that the Charter could lead to jurisprudence which might be the basis of European harmonisation on these controversial issues, which may be undesirable at the present time.

Article 3

Draft Charter: “Right to the respect of integrity”

- 1. Everyone has the right to the respect of his physical and mental integrity.
- 2. In the fields of medicine and biology, the following principles in particular must be respected:
 - prohibition of eugenic practices
 - respect of the informed consent of the patient
 - prohibiting the making of the human body and its products a source of financial gain
 - prohibition of the cloning of human beings

EGE proposal: “Right to the respect of integrity”

- 3.2 (a) - respect of the informed consent of the person.

Comments:

Unlike the right to life, the principle of informed consent does not raise specific difficulties in the context of bioethics. On the contrary, this principle is at the very origin of modern biomedical ethics. It was introduced in law firstly to condemn the horrific experiments carried out during the last world war on human guinea pigs. It has been since reaffirmed in a number of later international forums, such as the World Medical Association (which published in 1964 the well-known Declaration of Helsinki). It is noticeable that the only provision, which deals with bioethics in the UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of December 16, 1966 (article 7) states that “ no one shall be subjected without his/her free consent to medical or scientific experimentation”.

That means that before consent is sought, information must be given specifying the alternatives, risks, and benefits for those involved in a way they understand. When such information has been given, free and informed consent must be obtained. Depending on the nature of the intervention (or research), different consent procedures may be used. When the persons informed have reduced autonomy, special rules apply. Indeed vulnerable persons deserve special consideration and protection by the law.

Several Opinions of the Group refer to the principle of informed consent in very diverse circumstances. For instance, in its Opinion on prenatal diagnosis (2/2/96), the Group states that “tests should be done only at the request of the woman or couple after they have been fully informed, namely by genetic counselling”. The Opinion on patents (25/9/96) stresses the fact that “the ethical principle of informed and free consent of the person from whom retrievals [of cells as sources of DNA] are performed, must be respected. This principle includes making the information about this person complete and specific, in particular the potential patent application on the invention, which could be made from the use of this element...”.

In the same way, the Opinion on human tissue banking (21/7/98) states that “in order to be informed, the donor’s consent must have been given on the basis of information provided in as clear and precise lay terms as possible by the doctor supervising the procurement”.

- The Group suggests using “person” instead of “patient”. Indeed there is an increasing number of persons who are not ill and who participate in scientific experimentation, for example healthy volunteers taking part in clinical trials.
- The Group recalls that consent is not sufficient, as other rights also have to be considered. For instance, the right to respect privacy and confidentiality, and to fair access to healthcare. These specific rights are guaranteed in the European Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine as in the UN Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights.

3.2(b) - the individual's body and its parts cannot be traded.

Comments:

Financial gain from the use of the human body and its products is one of the most delicate questions in bioethics. The prohibition against financial gain from the human body and its products is now mentioned in the two main international instruments on bioethics:

- article 21 of the European Convention on Biomedicine and Human Rights states that "the human body and its parts shall not, as such, give rise to financial gain";
- article 4 of the UN Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights provides that "the human genome in its natural state shall not give rise to financial gain".

Nevertheless these provisions do not clarify the questions raised by the widespread industrial use of human body products to make pharmaceuticals or genetic tests kits.

- Does it preclude patenting human genes? Certainly not, at least according to the recent Parliament and Council Directive 98/44 on the legal Protection of Biotechnology inventions. This directive states that "an element isolated from the human body or otherwise produced by means of a technical process, including the sequence or partial sequence of a gene, may constitute a patentable invention, even if the structure of that element is identical to that of a natural element"(article 6.2.).
- Does it refer to the traditional distinction between patentable invention and simple discovery that are not patentable? Perhaps. In so doing it is in conformity with the Opinion of the Group on the ethical aspects of patenting inventions involving elements of human origin (25/9/96), which states that "this distinction...involves, in the field of biotechnology, a particular dimension. Which means that "the simple knowledge of the complete or partial structure of a gene cannot be patented". But it is doubtful that the provision in question will only be interpreted as referring to the distinction between invention and discovery which in the field of life sciences is by the way more and more flawed.

- Does it mean that the Charter reaffirms the principle of non-commercialisation of the human body? In its Opinion on products derived from human blood and human plasma (12/3/93), the Group strongly approved this principle in asserting that “ the human body in general and the human blood in particular are not marketable”. In its Opinion on human tissue banks (21/7/98), the Group noted that “all Member States of the European Union adhere to the principle that donations of human tissues must be free, following the example of blood, and this rules out any payment to the donor”. But in the same Opinion, the Group stresses the fact that “ the issue of the commercialisation of human tissues” especially those “ which have been processed and prepared for therapeutic purposes” is “ controversial”. One must be aware that, although rooted in European cultural traditions, this principle is already under challenge in USA. In the US an increasing number of patients whose cells provided genes that have been patented are asking for financial rewards. But no Court agreements have to the knowledge of the Group yet appeared.

In expressing these remarks, the Group especially wants to underline that the subject is very complex. Moreover the Group considers that the draft Charter’s wording on the prohibition of making financial gain from human body is much too vague. It is not only ambiguous with regard to patent law but it could also be interpreted as involving activities like professional sport.

Therefore the Group proposes a provision more specifically emphasising the protection of individuals from organ or tissue trafficking which would affect their dignity and rights. This prohibition of trade does not preclude the patenting of inventions derived from human elements nor the compensation for tissue bank services as far as long as legal conditions and strict limits for this in international conventions, or national laws if any, are satisfied.

3.2(c) Any discrimination based on ..., genetic characteristics, health conditions..., shall be prohibited.

Comments:

Referring to the Article 19 “Non-discrimination” of the Draft Charter (CHARTE 4137/00 CONVENT 8) the Group proposes to add the two following items: “genetic characteristics” and “health conditions”.

Although the principle of non-discrimination is already established in the Treaty itself, the Group still considers it essential to refer explicitly to it in the Charter again to reinforce the prohibition against discrimination. Non-discrimination also includes non-stigmatisation. Discrimination does not mean selection or distinction as such, but unfair discrimination unduly depriving anybody from their rights. Article 6 of the UN Declaration on the human genome and human rights states that “no one shall be subjected to discrimination based on genetic characteristics that is intended to infringe or has the effect of infringing human rights, fundamental freedoms and human dignity”. This article must be reaffirmed at the EU level.

The social dimension of Europe implies taking into account new forms of discrimination due to genetic testing and screening. Genetic tests to discover predisposition or pre-symptomatic diseases may be useful in promoting health measures. On the other hand, such tests might be tempting for employers or insurance companies who wish to exclude individuals at risk of developing a disease. Such tests are becoming available on the European market. For instance a test which can detect a woman’s predisposition to a certain type of hereditary breast cancer is now being imported from the US. Many other genetic tests will be available soon perhaps even through the internet. It would be remiss if the Charter did not deal with this topical issue.

That is why the Group proposes supplementing the article in the draft Charter on discrimination by adding discrimination based on genetic characteristics or health conditions. The prohibition to discriminate on the basis of health and disability is now found in legislation from several European countries.

The Group is presently studying the issue of the use of genetic testing in the workplace. Its Opinion is to be published in November 2000.

3.2(d) (Option 1) Human reproductive cloning is prohibited (Option 2) No mention of cloning.

Comments:

The Group is divided on the question of cloning. In its Opinion on cloning techniques (28/5/97), the Group firmly condemned reproductive cloning, that is “cloning aimed at the birth of identical individuals”. Distinguishing reproductive and non reproductive cloning (related for instance to human cells research), the Group stated that although “ many motives have been proposed” to justify human reproductive cloning, “considerations of instrumentalization and eugenics render any such acts ethically unacceptable...”. The Group recommended “ to clearly express condemnation of human reproductive cloning in the relevant texts and regulations...”. Consequently the Decision adopting the Fifth Framework Research Programme (1998-2002) excludes funding of research aimed at reproductive cloning.

The Group has not substantially changed its Opinion, although however, some members believe that it is not appropriate to forbid cloning in the Charter itself, and one member is opposed to use of the term “reproductive cloning”, preferring a prohibition against “cloning of human beings”. Those who consider inappropriate to mention cloning in the Charter argue that:

- Other practices such as the creation of chimeras or hybrids are not mentioned although they would also violate human dignity. Not mentioning them would in turn result in reproductive cloning of individuals being considered more acceptable.

- To mention a specific technique in a rapidly moving field also risks making the provision in question obsolete. One must note for instance that national legislation which prohibits specific techniques - such as the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act, 1990, in the UK - has been in his respect overshadowed by scientific progress. For instance, article 3 (d) of this Act states that it is not authorised to “replace a nucleus of a cell of an embryo with a nucleus taken from a cell of any person, embryo or subsequent development of an embryo”. But yet today there are similar techniques for the replacement of a nucleus that are thus not mentioned in this legislation. Similarly the Spanish law on artificial reproduction of 1988 forbids oocyte freezing. Recent developments show that this technique may be viable and safe. Thus the Spanish National Commission on Artificial Reproduction has asked for the change of the law. These examples show why it seems wise to certain members of the Group not to mention any technique, cloning or others.

- The reference to cloning is a condemnation of a certain use for technique rather than the affirmation of the principles, which lead to this condemnation. Yet, most people would consider that dignity of the human person implicitly excludes cloning of individuals.

- Furthermore, the philosophical and scientific debate on cloning is still open and it should be stressed that prohibition of a specific technique may prevent important discussions about human genetics.

All the members of the Group agree that the dignity of the person born by cloning, would not be in question, but they consider that the act of producing such a human being might be contrary to dignity. They also agree that the debate must continue, and that informing the public about applications of genetic techniques to human beings, and the strong ethical concerns which are raised must continue as well.

Specific additional article

EGE proposal: “Prohibition of eugenics”

Eugenic practices aimed at organising the selection and the instrumentalisation of persons are prohibited.

Comments:

As said before, the Group has referred to eugenics in its Opinion on cloning techniques (28/5/97). However, it admits that eugenics has a wide and controversial meaning, which has changed across the ages. From its origin in nineteenth century the term “eugenics” was intertwined with human genetics. The original idea was that society must foster the breeding of those who possessed favourable traits and to discourage the breeding of those who did not. At the time this seemed only common sense to many scientists and politicians in Europe. But after World War II and the fall of the Third Reich, eugenics as an acceptable social theory, appeared to be dead.

One must acknowledge that now the eugenics question is today being raised again. The Group roundly condemns in particular the following eugenic practices:

- Practices which involve for instance forced sterilisation, forced pregnancies or abortions, ethnically enforced marriages, etc, all acts which are expressly regarded as international crimes by the Statute signed in Rome on July, 18, 2000 to create the permanent International Criminal Court.
- Eugenics, as the Group said about reproductive cloning, may also involve genetic manipulations on human beings such as the modification of the germ line in view of enhancement, without any therapeutic aim.

Eugenics differs from other individual practices carried out to avoid the birth of a disabled child (preimplantation or prenatal diagnosis on severe and incurable diseases for instance). But would the possibility of being able to choose the sex of the future child be condemned as eugenics? The question is at present controversial even if many national legislation excludes such practices.

Considering the difficulty in defining eugenics, some members consider inappropriate to have it in a fundamental text such as the Charter, which deals with basic principles.

Nevertheless the majority of the Group believes that the Charter would be missing the point if it did not refer to one of the main challenges of human genetics. The Group only proposes more precise wording, which is inspired by the French law on bioethics of 1994.

Article 15

Draft Charter: "Freedom of expression"

- 1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.
- 2. Art, science and research shall be free of constraint.

EGE proposal:

15.1 : to be added at the end : “as well as freedom to participate in public life.”

15.2 : to be deleted: “ of constraint.”

Comments:

About the right to participate

The Group agrees fully with the provision related to freedom of expression. Indeed in the context of the information society, everyone understands this freedom not only as a right to information but also as a right to participate. Given the far-reaching implications of new technologies, people must be given a more active role in the shaping of these technologies. Procedures have to be developed to encourage and enable participation, such as ‘consensus conferences’, which help citizens understand technological choices and to voice their interests, or ‘participatory systems design’ which gives them the chance to intervene in the development of a system or application of direct relevance to their work or personal life. Furthermore, people must be provided with guidance on the ethical and practical implications of new technologies, and the limitations and the appropriateness of their use. The Group strongly stressed this idea of participation, which would be a landmark in European democracy, namely in its Opinion on healthcare information (30/7/99). This Opinion states that “the right to participate in the medical decision-making process is a key part of the notion of the citizen as a stakeholder”. Which means that “the citizen must not only have access to his/her electronic health record”, but that “procedures (e.g. consensus conferences...) have to be developed to encourage and support the participation of citizens’ collectives and users in the design of systems”. In this context, the Group calls attention on the notion of ‘electronic democracy’. This does not mean only to facilitate voting but also to foster public participation.

The additional phrase proposed by the Group refers to certain provisions of national Constitutions such as for example the Finnish Constitution (article 13) and the Portuguese Constitution (article 48.1).

About freedom of research

Scientific and artistic creativity have often been regarded as an expression of the human spirit. For instance, in the German Constitution of 1949 it is provided that “art and science, research and teaching shall be free”. Article 12 of the UN Declaration on the human genome and human rights proclaims in the same way that “freedom of research, which is necessary for the progress of knowledge, is part of freedom of thought”.

Nevertheless freedom of research is no more absolute than any other liberty. In the field of life sciences in particular, which involves the respect for human life and human dignity, researchers have to follow rigorous ethical principles. This balanced approach is reflected in many Opinions of the Group. For instance, the Opinion of the Group on “the Fifth Framework Research Programme” (11/12/97) calls for reconciling “the freedom to carry out research activities with the imperatives linked to the protection of the fundamental rights of European citizens...”. In the same way, the Opinion on embryo research (23/11/98) deems “that it is crucial to recall that the progress in knowledge of life sciences, which in itself has an ethical value, cannot, in any case, prevail over fundamental human rights and the respect which is due to all the members of the human family”.

The question of setting limits to research, balancing respect of dignity with the duty to carry out research for improving knowledge, contributing to man’s understanding of the world and life, alleviating suffering and bettering the quality of life, is certainly a delicate one. But it has to be faced and it is the role of ethics to help in so doing.

In insisting on the importance of the freedom of research, the Group wishes:

- not only to point out the necessity for all the powers that be – economic, social, political – to respect the moral and intellectual independence of researchers;
- but also to encourage European authorities as well as Member States of the EU to take positive measures in support of the free pursuit of research, especially fundamental research which is not immediately financially profitable. The idea is that to foster the intellectual and material conditions favourable to the free conduct of research is a key element of democracy.

15.3 Each individual has the right to benefit from sciences and technology.

Comments:

This article refers to the principle of justice, which implies fair access of all individuals to the benefits of scientific advances. This presupposes assessment and evaluation of such scientific progress. It has also to do with the principle of equal access to health, a principle put forward in several Opinions of the Group. For instance, in its Opinion on gene therapy (13/12/94) the Group stressed that “appropriate measures should be taken to assure equal access to gene therapy in the European Union” insofar as it is safe. To assert the right to benefit from science and new technologies is also a way to shed light on the importance of scientific and technological knowledge which must be part of the basic education of every European citizen.

Such a provision is not new. It is included in the UN Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (December 1966) and in the UN Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights. Even if this provision does not allow claiming subjective rights before a court, it is important that the Charter gives a positive stand on technological developments, which are crucial to the welfare of European citizens.

Article 16

Draft Charter: “Right to education”

- 1. No person shall be denied the right to education, including in particular the right to receive free compulsory education.
- 2. The founding of educational establishments shall be free of constraint.
- 3. The right of parents to have their children educated and taught in accordance with their religious and philosophical convictions shall be guaranteed.

EGE proposal:

- 16.1 to be added at the end: “which shall facilitate mutual understanding between cultures”.

Comments:

Cultural pluralism is a valuable characteristic of European society. The Group believes it important that a strong support is given to education at all levels to help the citizens from different cultures and traditions to live, communicate, and work together. Education has a fundamental role in promoting the active participation of all individuals and at all ages in awareness-raising and decision-making, thus allowing equity and social cohesion to develop. The implementation requires new working methods and modes of action, which recognise the rights, and civic responsibilities of citizenship.

This implies not only promoting knowledge of different cultures but also developing mutual understanding, which is the prerequisite for respect and tolerance.

The proposal of the Group is thus here to insist on the respect of pluralism, which the Group has mentioned, for example, in its Opinion on embryo research (23/11/98). It should be noted that many national Constitutional courts as well as the European Courts recognise pluralism as an essential condition of democracy.

The Group considered also the article 15 on data protection of the working document CHARTE 4137/00 CONVENT 8.

Article 15

Draft Charter: "Data Protection"

Every natural person shall have a right to protection for his personal data.

EGE proposal:

15.1. Everyone has the right to protection for their personal data.

15.2. In the field of data protection, the following principles in particular must be respected:

- respect for confidentiality of personal individual data;
- right to determine which of one's own data are processed, by whom and for what purposes;
- right to have access to one's own data and to correct or delete them.

Comments:

Europe has become an information society like all developed regions of the world. Faxes, computers, the internet, mobile phones ...are common tools for everybody: public institutions, private companies, individuals. Technology has given rise to the so-called 'new economy'.

The considerable amount of personal data, which are collected, stored and spread all over the world is even more of a reason now than before to rethink the respect for privacy. Indeed through Internet, our lives are more and more in the open. That is why respect for privacy in this new context must not only reside in the respect for confidentiality. It must also involve the right to refuse to give access to one's own data or the right to refuse the collection of these data. In this sense, data protection underlines the necessity to recognise the citizen as a stakeholder. As it is said for example in the Opinion on healthcare information (30/7/99), information and communication technologies must offer to the individual the chance to enhance their choices and self-determination. The provisions above proposed by the Group are inspired by the idea of self-determination used for the first time by the German Constitutional Court in a judgement made in 1983.

Along these lines, these provisions refer to three fundamental principles:

- the principle of confidentiality reflecting the idea that personal data are part of the identity of the individual;
- the principle of autonomy linked to the principle of consent;
- the right to information which must be an 'active' right in the context of data protection. It includes the right to know what categories of information are available and the right to decide whether or not to be provided with this information.

15.3. No person shall be subject to surveillance technologies, which aim at or result in the violation of their rights or liberties.

Comments:

The Charter must take into account recent technological developments such as video surveillance in public, be it for co-ordinating traffic, for 'profiling' people's habits, or for identifying potential suspects, which may raise concerns related to the violation of rights or liberties of citizens.

The provision suggested by the Group does not define an individual right but much more a principle to be respected in a democratic society. Nevertheless it may be invoked before a court and thus reinforces individual rights.

CONCLUSION

The EGE's approach to the ethics of science and new technologies is meant to be positive with regard to scientific and technical progress, in the sense that this progress is meant to stimulate personal development without damaging social solidarity. Thus it also follows the spirit of the primary sense of the word 'bioethics' as defined in 1970 "to ensure that the biomedical and biotechnological sciences serve human development, taking into account the complexity of the international society and of nature, as well as their interactions".

The Group believes that scientific progress and technological development should match the needs and aspirations of citizens in a way, which is respectful of EU values involving a new concept of citizenship.

Citizenship traditionally has been based on political rights in public life, namely the right to vote, and to be elected. The new idea of European citizenship has a much broader sense, as it now includes not a more direct and active participation of the citizens into debate and public life.

Apart from participation, there is another prerequisite for ensuring effective protection of citizens' rights in the context of new technologies: that is education. The Group strongly insists on the eminent role of European authorities in promoting structures for education not only in direction of the youngest generations as future citizens, but to every body throughout lifetime.

Indeed citizens need to be informed and enlightened to participate fully in democracy. Information society gives entirely new possibilities to underline the social dimension of the European citizens' fundamental rights by enabling everyone to be constantly informed and thus to contribute actively to the solidarity and community spirit without which the building of Europe would be meaningless. Technical possibilities to foster participation and education must be used to promote an interactive society and a society where mutual understanding between the different national cultures and traditions is ensured.

In view of the enlargement of the European Union to countries with different civil and legal traditions, it is all the more crucial to deal with the increasing multiculturalism in a way, which strengthens cohesion among all EU states.

We must construct a Europe where everyone plays a part, where everyone is a stakeholder, and no one is excluded.

Summary of the European Group on Ethics proposals concerning the draft Charter on Fundamental Rights

(working document CHARTE 4149/00 CONVENT 13)

Article 1 Draft Charter: "Dignity of the human person"
The dignity of the human person shall be respected and protected in all circumstances.

EGE proposal: "Dignity and freedom of the human person"

Everyone's dignity and freedom must be respected.

Article 3 Draft Charter: "Right to the respect of integrity"
1. Everyone has the right to the respect of his physical and mental integrity.
2. In the fields of medicine and biology, the following principles in particular must be respected:

- prohibition of eugenic practices*
- respect of the informed consent of the patient*
- prohibiting the making of the human body and its products a source of financial gain*
- prohibition of the cloning of human beings*

EGE proposal:

3.2 (a) - respect of the informed consent of the person.

3.2 (b) - the individual's body and its parts cannot be traded.

3.2 (c) Any discrimination based on ..., genetic characteristics, health conditions..., shall be prohibited.

STATEMENTBY H.E. MR. ANDRIS PIEBALGS,*AMBASSADOR OF THE REPUBLIC OF LATVIA TO THE EUROPEAN UNION,*ON THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS*BRUSSELS, 19 JUNE 2000*HEARING OF AND EXCHANGE OF VIEWS WITH THE 13 APPLICANT STATES

Mr. Chairman,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

First of all, I would like to thank the Convention for giving Latvia the opportunity to share our views about the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

We see the adoption of the Charter as a complimentary process to that of the EU enlargement. Both processes serve to establish a stable and prosperous Europe, unified on the grounds of common values and common general legal principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law.

The Tampere Council defined the composition of the body elaborating the Charter, confirming that also non-governmental organisations, social groups and experts would be invited to give their views on the Charter. This decision, as well as the broad representation of the European Parliament and the national parliaments of the EU Member States in the Convention represents a real increase in the transparency of the Charter's development. Such increased openness is an important step in bringing the EU closer to its citizens.

Latvia welcomes the initiative to elaborate the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. We consider that the adoption of the Charter could achieve important objectives such as:

- to increase the visibility of the fundamental rights existing in contemporary Europe;
- to consolidate the minimum standards of human rights as enshrined in the European Convention on Human Rights and in the constitutional traditions of the EU Member States.

The Conclusions of the Cologne Council stated that the Charter should contain the fundamental rights and freedoms guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights and derived from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States. Latvia welcomes this approach. As a future EU Member State, Latvia also welcomes the inclusion into the Charter of those rights, which are available only to the Union's citizens.

Latvia's Constitution and existing legislation provide guarantees for the protection of fundamental rights. Latvia is a member of the Council of Europe since 1995, and a State Party to the European Convention on Human Rights since 1997. In our opinion the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg has established the most effective type of international institution for the real protection of human rights.

We consider that the Charter should complement the legal system established by the European Convention on Human Rights, and not compete with it. Rather than search for new procedures, we support the further development of an efficient system on the basis of the existing elements that have already proven their worth. Experience shows that a proliferation of legal texts with competing enforcement mechanisms tends to impair the effectiveness of all existing procedures. Therefore, if the Charter's scope will transcend the borders of a declaratory document, a very clear legal definition of the Charter's application mechanisms for its provisions will be necessary.

All candidate states are also State Parties to the Council of Europe and therefore also to the European Convention on Human Rights. All candidate states are also actively aligning their national laws with the EU acquis. Therefore, as future EU member state, we are most interested in actively participating in the preparation and decision-making processes pertaining to the Charter in the future.

We believe that the original purpose of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights, as stated by the Cologne Council, should be kept in the foreground: “to establish a Charter of fundamental rights in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union’s citizens.” This is a very crucial and valuable task with important impacts not only on the current EU citizens of the 15 member states, but just as important for the future EU citizens of Latvia and the other candidate states.

INTRODUCTORY PRESENTATION

BY STATE SECRETARY MITJA DROBNIČ ON THE OCCASION OF THE HEARING ON THE CHARTER ON FUNDMENTAL RIGHTS, BRUSSELS, 19 JUNE 2000

Mr President, esteemed members of the Convention.

Allow me, at the outset, to express my deep appreciation for the significance of the work you are engaged in. Taking part in the drafting process of the main document on human rights within the European Union is certainly a responsible task. Since the main objective of this document – the Charter of Fundamental Rights – is to introduce into the European Union legislation a comprehensive document on human rights, the process bears relevance which could be compared to other noble events in history, such as the drawing up of the French Declaration des Droits des Citoyens, the Universal Declaration on Human Rights or the European Convention on Human Rights. Being aware of the significance of your work, it is my sincere privilege to present to you the position of the Government of the Republic of Slovenia with regard to the drafting process on the Charter on Fundamental Rights.

Slovenia fully supports the decision of the European Council to draw up the Charter of Fundamental Rights. We see the Charter as a commitment of the European Union to explicitly proclaim the respect for human rights. In this way human rights in the European Union will be more significant and visible, but what is even more important – fundamental rights will be guaranteed to everyone within the jurisdiction of the European Union. Undoubtedly this process will lead to the strengthening of the protection of human rights in Europe.

Nevertheless, we are concerned that the introduction of the Charter on Fundamental Rights could also lead to the convergence with the existing systems of the protection of human rights on the European continent, in particular regarding the system in the framework of the Council of Europe. In order to avoid the inconsistencies of such an arrangement we are in favour of the following proposals. We are of the opinion that the Charter on Fundamental Rights should be a non-binding legal document (declaration). We also think that the content of the Charter should be based on the standards of the protection of human rights which were already developed under the auspices of the Council of Europe, in particular the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Social Charter. We would also suggest that the European Union again reconsiders a possibility of its accession to the European Convention on Human Rights by making relevant amendments to the Community treaties.

It is our view that this would be the most appropriate way to avoid the risk of the duplication of human rights standards on the European continent, one for the citizens of the Member States of the European Union and the other for the citizens of the Member States of the Council of Europe.

At the same time the drafting process on the Charter of Fundamental Rights serves as a unique opportunity to include into the Charter certain rights which are relevant currently and which will gain in their significance in the future. I would particularly like to mention that we support the inclusion of the rights concerning the field of biomedicine and biotechnology, the right to privacy and the right to safe environment.

We also advocate the inclusion of rights pertaining to the protection of national minorities, and rights protecting vulnerable groups, in particular children and disabled persons. We fully support the prohibition of the death penalty and prohibition of extradition and expulsion of a person to a state where he or she would be in danger of being subjected to death penalty, torture or other inhuman treatment. We also support the so-called horizontal protection of rights, which pertains to all individuals who are residents in the Member States of the European Union.

Slovenia is also in favour of including the special chapter on social and economic rights into the Charter. This gives a more comprehensive meaning to the Charter and provides for the better protection of human rights, which are in essence interdependent and indivisible. With regard to social and economic rights we expect that the provisions of the Charter will enable the candidate countries for the accession to the EU to maintain the level of protection already achieved.

We are willing to attend any possible future meetings regarding the Charter on Fundamental Rights, which could provide an opportunity to discuss the contents of the Charter in more detail.

We would like to wish the distinguished members of the Convention fruitful work in the subsequent drafting process, leading to the adoption of the Charter in autumn 2000. I would like again to underline the significance of this process which will undoubtedly find a prominent place in the history of Europe.

Allow me to conclude my presentation by expressing my willingness to remain at your disposal for any possible questions you might have regarding the position of Slovenia concerning the Charter on Fundamental Rights.

Thank you for your attention.

STATEMENTOF MRS. ANTOINETTE PRIMATAROVA, AMBASSADOR, HEAD OF THE BULGARIAN MISSION TO THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITITES, BEFORE
THE CONVENTION FOR THE ELABORATION OF THE EUROPEAN UNION CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS*(Brussels, 19 June 2000 .)

Mr. President,

Ladies and gentlemen,

It is an honour and privilege for me to address such a highly esteemed forum as the Convention, where important personalities and distinguished specialists in the area of Human Rights have gathered together. Bulgaria highly appreciates being invited to express its opinion on the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

Bulgaria welcomes the idea of EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and supports both the legal and the political reasons for its creation. Today, after the entry into force of the Maastricht and Amsterdam Treaties, the Charter is intended to provide an answer to the expectations of all people, living on the territory of the Union, with regard to their relations with the EU institutions. It should lead to a substantial improvement of the system for the protection of Human Rights and the legal certainty within the European Union. The idea of this Charter comes at a very advanced stage of the development of the Union, which is becoming more and more a political entity with new widening competencies. We are convinced that now the EU citizens need a text to which they can refer at the level of United Europe, as they do with their national constitutions at national level. It is natural, for example, that the development of the area of freedom, security and justice goes together with the improvement of the protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms of the citizens of the Union, which should become more visible and concrete. We see it as normal to respond to the concern shared by different representatives of the European civil society about the necessity to link the overall process of European integration to clear rules for the protection of Human Rights. The European citizenship rights should also find their place in the Charter.

I would like to especially welcome the innovative method for the drawing up of the Charter. Compared to the traditional diplomatic methods of intergovernmental conferences, this is a step forward towards democratising the process of elaboration of texts in the area of human rights. Of particular interest to us are the opinions of the national and European parliaments' representatives, those of the Court of Justice and the Council of Europe. I would like to underline the importance of the full transparency of the process, which includes the hearings of different institutions, non-governmental organisations and candidate countries, as well as the possibilities of direct observation of the debates during the formal Convention meetings and the publication of all the working documents on the Internet. The interest, demonstrated by the civil society in Europe towards the work of the Convention proves the importance and the relevance of its work.

Before sharing my views on some of the questions linked to the elaboration of the future Charter, I would like to stress that Bulgaria, which is a Council of Europe member since 1992 and started at the beginning of this year accession negotiations with the European Union, fulfils the Copenhagen political criteria, including in the area of the protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. My country is party to the main instruments in the sphere of Human Rights, including the social field – in particular the revised European Social Charter and the seven “basic” conventions of the International Labor Organisation. The Bulgarian Constitution is based on the same main principles as those of the EU Member States. The democratic institutions in the country have been established and are functioning successfully, the principle of the division of powers and independence of the judiciary is applied. On this basis the necessary guarantees for the protection of civil and political, as well as social and economic rights of the citizens are created in Bulgaria to the same degree as in the Member States, which is one of the preconditions for the country to join successfully and in reasonable time the European Union. Having this in mind, we consider that the respect of the rights as defined in the working documents of the Convention at this stage is generally achieved at national level in Bulgaria.

In our opinion, the future Charter should have an innovative character and be inspired both by the existing international texts and conventions in the human rights area and by the Community law and the case law of the Court of Justice. It has to cover not only the rights already protected by the international and European instruments, but also the new generation of rights, whose birth we witness, and which are in varying degrees enshrined in the constitutions and the legislation of the Member States and candidate countries, including Bulgaria. Here I would mention the rights, pertaining to data protection and new technologies, good governance, the media, health protection, bioethics, the environment and the contemporary aspects of equality. At the same time our position is that the rights covered by the Charter, irrespective of whether they are civil and political or social and economic, should not create new standards in the acquis of the Union, thus going beyond the present standards and posing new requirements in the context of accession negotiations.

The Charter should not extend the Union's legislative powers. It is extremely important, in the area of Human Rights too, to respect the subsidiarity principle, which could be applied both to the definition of some rights and to the implementation of a part of the social and economic rights.

An important aspect not only of the Convention work, but also of the ongoing Intergovernmental Conference, is the relationship and the consistency of the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights with other international instruments in the area of Human Rights and with the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights in particular. In this respect it would be useful to keep the clause stating that nothing in the Charter will restrict the protection offered by the European Convention on Human Rights, the common constitutional traditions and by other international instruments. Apart from that, we are of the opinion that the system for the protection of human rights provided under the European Convention to all citizens of the Council of Europe's Member States, including those of the European Union, should not be weakened. The Charter's provisions should be as close as possible to the wording of the European Convention provisions, the latter being the minimum standard, in relation to which the Charter cannot take a step backwards. At the same time we consider it possible, on some provisions, to have a more concise, clear and simple wording in order to convey the expected messages to the European citizens. It is also evident that the Charter will include categories of rights, which are not included in the ECHR – social and economic rights, rights related to the European citizenship, even some civil and political rights. The horizontal clause concerning the limitations foreseen by the European Convention of Human Rights is of the utmost importance. Finally, we are convinced, that at an appropriate moment and in the light of the institutional reforms progress, the Member States should again have an in-depth discussion and take a stance on the possible accession of the European Communities to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights.

At this stage of the work of the Convention it is too early to take a stance on the question whether the Charter should have a legal or political character. The discussion on its possible incorporation in the Treaty is part of a larger discussion on the future of Europe and could continue in the medium, even in the long term. Keeping this in mind, we think that the direction taken now, namely to elaborate texts with legal character, is the right one, even if the incorporation in the Treaty is not imminent. As a realistic objective at this stage we could accept the mentioning of the Charter in the text of article 6 (2) of the Treaty of European Union. Whatever the fate of the Charter – political or legally binding document – we follow the discussions in the Convention with the understanding that it will be a substantial part of the acquis for the candidate countries.

The scope of the Charter is a topic, which could hardly be separated from that of its character. However it seems logical to take on the principles of the case law of the Court of Justice and to accept that the Charter may also cover the Member States authorities, only when they are acting in the field of Community law. This limitation is extremely important having in mind the possible overlapping of the Charter provisions with other legal texts from the national legislation or international law.

Concluding, I would like to wish the Convention successful work and to express the hope that it will be able to elaborate a consensual text by the Biarritz European Council. This would allow the Member States to have a productive discussion on the character and scope of the future Charter before the European Council in Nice.

Thank you for the attention.

Statement by M. Eugen DIJMARESCU,
Secretary of State, Head of the Department for European Affairs within the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Romania

Mr. Chairman

Honourable Members of the Convention

Dear Colleagues,

Ladies and gentlemen,

I am particularly pleased to take part in this meeting today where a highly topical issue for the citizens of the community Romania wants to join - the European Union – is being considered.

I would like to start by congratulating the Convention for the substantial work accomplished so far, despite its complex and heavy agenda, providing us the opportunity to have an exchange of views on a comprehensive draft of the Charter.

It is in the interest of us all to have a strong Union where people are confident that the community they belong to is placing high on its agenda the building of a genuine area of freedom, security and justice, an area where citizens feel safe and protected.

It is along these lines that Romania as a country on the road towards accession to the EU welcomes with satisfaction the initiative of the Union to elaborate a Charter for Fundamental Rights.

I would also like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation for the initiative to invite candidate countries in the reflection exercise from the very conception phase since the Charter has the vocation of becoming part of the acquis of the European Union.

Ladies and gentlemen,

It is more than 50 years since the UN adopted the Universal Declaration on Human Rights. More than 150 year earlier, the Americans and French declaration on human rights had been adopted, and earlier still, other similar declarations were issued. Actually, human rights and respect for them have been a matter for philosophy and religion ever since man began to reflect on his destiny.

While major progress has been made in the area of human rights, particularly in recent years, achieving and securing general respect for human rights continue to remain one of the most important political tasks of the 21st century.

The elaboration of the Charter of Fundamental Rights will strengthen the latest development in this area, i.e. the fact that human rights cannot and should not be considered any longer a national issue but our joint responsibility.

Human rights are the expression of a global and common ethic. They are and must be the same for everyone, everywhere. Each and every country must accept that they are measured by the same yardstick.

To this end, we expect the proclamation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights to represent a step forward towards a coherent system of human rights protection in Europe while taking into account all that has been accomplished in the field over the last half a century.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Integration in the EU is not only an economic and political undertaking but a complex process of interaction among individuals, mentalities and cultures. This implies, among others, an increase in opportunities for our citizens to travel, stay and have access to jobs within the European Union.

As a general comment, we consider that the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union meets the need to rationalize, in a single document, the relevant provisions of a, until now, scatered acquis on human rights. The added value brought about, in our view, by the Charter is that it attempts to incorporate, alongside the basic provisions of the European Convention for Human Rights and the UN Pacts, also the relevant ones from the European Social Charter, placing these distinct categories of rights virtually on the same level of protection.

As common place as this may sound, it should be reminded that fundamental rights are, by definition, rights vested in each individual, meaning that criteria relating to his or her origin or geographical, economical or cultural status are not supposed to play any role in the protection of his or her fundamental rights.

However, after a preliminary reading of the text, we consider that the Charter should spell out more clearly the addressees of the rights described therein, be it institutions or categories of individuals. In this respect, we would be happy to see the spirit of the conclusions of the Tampere European Council referring to a fair treatment of third countries nationals be more extensively incorporated into the Charter. A clear reference to this important issue is made, in the current wording of the Charter, only in Art. 40 (Right of migrant workers to equal treatment).

The exercise we are doing here together strives to take stock of the views of all concerned, that is of candidate states included, as to certain sensitive, still unresolved items like the issue of the future character of this instrument as well as the future relation between the two Courts, the Human Rights Court in Strasbourg and the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg. As a candidate country to the EU but also a member of the Council of Europe, like all the countries around this table, we are, of course, concerned about the possibility of having divergent case law, and, by way of consequence, divergent solutions given by the two Courts with regard to own our citizens.

Although it is too early yet to speak about the Charter in terms of obligations incumbent upon candidate countries, it is nevertheless a fact that, given its constitutional provisions and common legislation in the field of human rights, Romania could, quite rapidly, adjust to the requirements of the Charter, provided it develops into something more than an inventory of rights. At any rate, without providing appropriately for effective remedies in case of infringements of the rights enumerated, the Charter is likely to contain a political message alone, even if a particularly strong one.

We are, obviously, not the only ones to note that certain inconveniences may appear due to the fact that relevant provisions from the European Convention on Human Rights were not taken up ad literam into the body of the draft EU Charter.

Given the fact that the terminology of the European Convention has generated and is still generating a rich and complex jurisprudence, it is likely that any new wording to be coined by the Charter may cause certain legal problems of interpretation.

In this respect, reference could be briefly made to the dispositions of art. 20 and art.21 of the draft Charter, on the right to property, the right to asylum and the expulsion.

By way of example, the second thesis of art. 20 of the Charter, regulating the “use of property”, states that the use of property "should contribute to the general interest", while art. 1 of the first Additional Protocol to the European Convention allows for the states only the right to adopt the laws they consider necessary to regulate the use of property, according to the general interest. We consider that the different wording on this particular item may give rise to inconsistencies from the point of view of the principles established by the European Court of Human Rights in this matter.

The same goes for art.21 of the Charter regarding the right of asylum and expulsion. Romania ratified Protocol No. 7 to the European Convention which stipulates a number of guarantees that offer far more protection than those offered by the Geneva Convention. In this respect we would welcome the inclusion of a reference to this Protocol in the wording of art. 21. Related to this issue, it deserves mentioning that the European Convention is one step ahead with regard to the freedom of movement as this right is granted to all citizens under the jurisdiction of the parties to the Convention whereas art. 30 of the draft Charter grants this right only to the citizens of the European Union.

As to the final character of the Charter, we believe that the work in progress does not provide, at this stage, sufficient ground to support the expectation that the European Council in Nice will produce, by all means, a legally binding document. The solemn proclamation of a “political document”, as initially decided by the Koln European Council, might prove to be the feasible working hypothesis for Nice, leaving open the door to move subsequently further ahead.

For ourselves, we are confident that the final text will not fail to incorporate a number of basic principles such as: full respect for human rights and dignity; equality and the rejection of any discrimination; solidarity amongst individuals, generations and peoples; right to privacy and genuine right to freedom of movement; access to and control of the new opportunities made available by the scientific and technological progress; peaceful coexistence and the acceptance of diversity as founding principles and values of the European Union.

At the same time we join the views expressed by other candidate countries in encouraging the current process of drafting the Charter to act as a supportive and complementary element in the institutional reform process within the Union. We also share the views according to which the elaboration of the Charter and its practical consequences should not, in any way, delay the enlargement of the Union by affecting the already agreed calendars for accession negotiations.

By way of conclusion, I would like to inform you that it is our intention, after a more thorough examination of the contributions put forward so far, to draft and present to the Presidencies of the EU Council and of the Convention a non-paper containing Romania's views on the future Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Thank you for your attention.

Conscientious Objection to Military Service must be a European Basic Right

A European Convention, chaired by the former German President Dr. Roman Herzog, is preparing a Charter of Human Rights for the European Union. Conscientious objection to military service is not mentioned in the charter. We commit ourselves to making conscientious objection a basic right and ask the convention to do so.

„Noone may be forced against his or her conscience to do military service. Furthermore conscientious objectors have the right to asylum.“

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend eine Stellungnahme des DGB (Deutscher Gewerkschaftsbund), die er am 5. Juni beschlossen hat. ¹

Berlin, 5. Juni 2000

Stellungnahme des DGB:

Europa braucht eine Charta der Grundrechte

Auf dem Kölner EU-Gipfel im Juni 1999 wurde beschlossen, eine „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ zu erarbeiten. Im Oktober des selben Jahres setzte der EU-Rat auf seinem Treffen im finnischen Tampere ein Gremium („Konvent“) aus Regierungsvertretern, Mitgliedern der nationalen Parlamente und des Europaparlamentes ein, das bis zum Oktober diesen Jahres den Entwurf einer Grundrechtecharta (GRC) erarbeitet. Dieser soll vom Europäischen Rat in Nizza am 7. und 8. Dezember verabschiedet werden.

Über die Inhalte und die Verbindlichkeit dieser Charta wird derzeit eine breit angelegte politische Debatte in allen Mitgliedsstaaten der Europäischen Union geführt, an der sich die deutschen Gewerkschaften beteiligen.

1. Die Zeit ist reif für eine Grundrechtecharta

In den letzten Jahren konnten Fortschritte bei der Anerkennung der Grundrechte in der EU erzielt werden. So heißt es im EU-Vertrag:

„Die Union beruht auf den Grundsätzen der Freiheit, der Demokratie, der Achtung der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten sowie der Rechtsstaatlichkeit; diese Grundsätze sind allen Mitgliedsstaaten gemeinsam“

Der DGB unterstützt alle Bestrebungen, nun eine umfassende Grundrechtecharta (GRC) auf Ebene der Europäischen Union und Gemeinschaft zu verabschieden.

Er legt dabei großen Wert auf die Aufnahme sozialer Grundrechte und unterstützt entsprechende Forderungen des Europäischen Parlamentes und des Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschusses. Soziale Grundrechte müssen einen gleichgewichtigen Stellenwert in der GRC erhalten als Ausdruck der sozialen Werte, denen sich die Union und die Gemeinschaft verpflichtet fühlen. Sie sind für den DGB ein unverzichtbarer Bestandteil der GRC und bilden ein Gegenstück zur primär wirtschaftlichen Ausrichtung der Union und vor allem der Gemeinschaft. Sie würde die soziale Dimension der EU stärken und damit den Weg in eine wirkliche Sozialunion bereiten.

Der DGB fordert seit langem einen verbindlichen Katalog einklagbarer Grundrechte für die EU. Bereits 1989 hat er konkrete Vorschläge für soziale Grundrechte unterbreitet.

Damals wie heute gilt, dass eine europäische Grundrechtecharta für die politische und soziale Legitimation der EU von entscheidender Bedeutung ist. Sie würde nach der Vollendung des Binnenmarktes und der Einführung der einheitlichen Währung die Identifikation der Bürger mit dem europäischen Einigungsprozess erhöhen und diesem mehr Glaubwürdigkeit verleihen. Sie würde die in der EU geltenden gemeinsamen Wertvorstellungen hervorheben. Eine Grundrechtecharta hätte über die Binnengrenzen hinaus Ausstrahlungskraft, was nicht zuletzt für den Prozess der EU-Erweiterung außerordentlich wichtig ist.

2. Die sozialen Grundrechte müssen Bestandteil der Charta sein

Der DGB ist der Auffassung, dass die GRC über die in den europäischen Verträgen enthaltenen Bestimmungen hinaus einen möglichst vollständigen Katalog von Grundrechten enthalten sollte, der insbesondere auch soziale Grundrechte umfasst.

Grundsätzlich ist der DGB der Ansicht, dass die Grundrechtecharta bei den bürgerlichen und politischen Grundrechten das Schutzniveau der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention (EMRK) und deren Zusatzprotokolle sicherstellen und die Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofes für Menschenrechte einbeziehen muss.

Die GRC muss darüberhinaus auch sogenannte moderne Grundrechte einbeziehen, die neuere gesellschaftliche Entwicklungen aufgreifen (z. B. Umweltschutz und das Recht auf informationelle Selbstbestimmung). Hier können die Verfassungen von Mitgliedsstaaten herangezogen werden.

Bei der Umsetzung der in der Charta fixierten sozialen Grundrechte muss das Mindestschutzniveau der revidierten Europäischen Sozialcharta (ESC) sowie das völkerrechtliche Schutzniveau, insbesondere der einschlägigen IAO-Normen, eingehalten werden.

Aus Sicht des DGB muss die GRC die Unteilbarkeit der Menschenrechte betonen. Neben den klassischen individuellen und politischen Freiheitsrechten sowie dem Schutz der Menschenwürde sollten die folgenden, in den europäischen Verfassungstraditionen verwurzelten sozialen Grundrechte in die GRC Eingang finden:

- Recht auf Koalitionsfreiheit und Kollektivmaßnahmen einschließlich des Streikrechts
- Unterrichtung, Anhörung und Mitwirkung der Arbeitnehmer und ihrer Interessenvertretung
- Gleichbehandlung und Schutz vor Diskriminierung jeglicher Art
- Gleichstellung von Frauen und Männern
- Recht auf Freizügigkeit
- Recht auf Gesundheitsschutz und Arbeitssicherheit
- Schutz vor ungerechtfertigter, willkürlicher Entlassung
- Recht auf Bildung und freie Berufswahl

Als politische Handlungsziele der Union sollten insbesondere die folgenden sozialen Rechte in die GRC aufgenommen werden:

- Recht auf Arbeit im Sinne einer Verpflichtung, dem Ziel der Vollbeschäftigung Vorrang einzuräumen
- Recht auf angemessenen sozialen Schutz und Sicherung eines menschenwürdigen Existenzminimums
- Recht auf menschenwürdige Arbeitsbedingungen
- Recht auf Förderung und Schutz von Kindern, Jugendlichen und Behinderten

Dabei muss aus Sicht des DGB gewährleistet sein, dass günstigere nationale gesetzliche und kollektivvertragliche Regelungen, die zum Schutz von Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmern getroffen werden, erhalten und weiterhin möglich bleiben.

3. Die Grundrechte müssen einklagbar und die Charta bindend sein, sie muss für alle Menschen gelten und wirksam überwacht werden können.

Grundrechte müssen einklagbar sein. Insbesondere im Hinblick auf die garantierten sozialen Grundrechte muß ein Klagerecht für die Gewerkschaften zur Vertretung der Interessen ihrer Mitglieder gewährleistet sein.

Die Bindungswirkung der GRC sollte sich sachlich auf alle Bereiche der EU-/EG-Kompetenz erstrecken und daher alle EU/EG-Organen betreffen. Dies muss gleichermaßen für alle Ebenen der Mitgliedsstaaten bei der Umsetzung von Gemeinschaftsrecht gelten. Was den persönlichen Geltungsbereich betrifft, so sollten die Rechte aus der GRC grundsätzlich allen Personen unabhängig von ihrer Staatsangehörigkeit gewährt werden. Dies entspricht auch dem Ansatz der EMRK. Die Beschränkung auf Rechte der EU-Bürger/innen sollte nur in Ausnahmefällen, etwa bei bestimmten politischen Teilhaberechten, erfolgen.

Es ist ein wirksamer Rechtsschutz auf EU-Ebene zur Durchsetzung der in der Charta garantierten Grundrechte zu gewährleisten.

4. Die Charta muss auf die Tagesordnung der Regierungskonferenz

Der DGB begrüßt den politischen Willen des Konventes, die Debatte über die Charta in allen EU-Mitgliedsstaaten auf eine möglichst breite gesellschaftliche Grundlage zu stellen.

Wenn diese breite Debatte ihre politische Wirkung nicht verfehlen soll, muss die Grundrechtecharta auf die Tagesordnung der Regierungskonferenz gesetzt werden.

Rechtliche Verbindlichkeit ist nur zu erreichen, wenn die Charta in die Verträge aufgenommen wird und bindende Wirkung erhält. Eine feierliche Erklärung des Europäischen Rates zur GRC wäre aus Sicht des DGB keinesfalls ausreichend.

Die europäische Grundrechtecharta bietet eine historische Chance. Wer sie verstreichen lässt, schadet dem Europa der Bürger.

The draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union Comments by the Law Society of England and Wales

1. The Law Society welcomes initiatives from the European Union aimed at the better promotion and protection of human rights, both internally and externally. It has studied the proposal for a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (“the Charter”) with interest but with some concern. It hopes that these comments will contribute to an outcome that will enhance the Union’s implementation of the human rights principles to which it is committed.

2. In June 1999, the European Council decided that:

“Protection of fundamental rights is a founding principle of the Union and an indispensable prerequisite for her legitimacy. The obligation of the Union to respect fundamental rights has been confirmed and defined by the jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice. There appears to be a need, at the present stage of the Union’s development, to establish a Charter of fundamental rights in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union’s citizens.

The European Council believes that this Charter should contain the fundamental rights and freedoms as well as basic procedural rights guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and derived from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as general principles of Community law. The Charter should also include the fundamental rights that pertain only to the Union’s citizens. In drawing up such a Charter account should furthermore be taken of economic and social rights as contained in the European Social Charter and the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Article 136 TEC), insofar as they do not merely establish objectives for action by the Union.

In the view of the European Council, a draft of such a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union should be elaborated by a body composed of representatives of the heads of State and Government and of the President of the Commission as well as of members of the European Parliament and national parliaments. Representatives of the European Court of Justice should participate as observers. Representatives of the Economic and Social Committee, the Committee of the Regions and social groups as well as experts should be invited to give their views. Secretariat services should be provided by the General Secretariat of the Council.

This body should present a draft document in advance of the European Council in December 2000. The European Council will propose to the European Parliament and the Commission that, together with the Council, they should solemnly proclaim on the basis of the draft document a European Charter of Fundamental Rights. It will then have to be considered whether and, if so, how the Charter should be integrated into the treaties. The European Council mandates the General Affairs Council to take the necessary steps prior to the Tampere European Council”.¹

3. This text is reproduced in full because it contains the basic mandate for the proposed Charter some elements of which, including its content and purpose, appear to be causing a degree of confusion. Indeed, it seems that the only clarity is the date on which the Charter will be proclaimed - and that leaves a dangerously short period of time for other issues to be resolved.

4. The Union's commitment to human rights is beyond doubt. The Amsterdam Treaty states that "the Union is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law".² It further states that "The Union shall respect fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on 4 November 1950 and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the member states, as general principles of Community Law".³ Any member state responsible for a "serious and persistent breach" of human rights may lose their rights under the Treaty.⁴ Criteria agreed by the Council in 1993 in Copenhagen governing the accession of new members to the Union include human rights. Human rights clauses have been included in external agreements since Lomé IV (1989). There have been important initiatives on issues such as sex equality and against racism. In addition there is no shortage of statements supporting human rights, for example: "The European Union is founded on the principles of liberty, respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms and the rule of law. These principles are common to all the Member States and are enshrined in the Treaty on European Union. The EU, which is deeply committed to the universality, indivisibility and interdependence of human rights, constitutes a community of shared values which refuses to admit any exceptions to these principles".⁵

5. However, many commentators agree that there is a pressing need for the Union to formulate an overall and comprehensive human rights policy. The present position has been described: "The human rights policies of the European Union are beset by a paradox. On the one hand, the Union is a staunch defender of human rights in both its internal and external affairs. On the other hand, it lacks a comprehensive or coherent policy at either level and fundamental doubts persist whether the institutions of the Union possess adequate legal competence in relation to a wide range of rights issues arising within the framework of Community policies".⁶

The Law Society agrees that the Union needs such a policy, applicable internally and externally. Broadly it agrees with the reasons given in Leading by Example: A Human Rights Agenda For the European Union for the Year 2000 adopted in 1998 by the Comité des Sages,⁷ particularly the following:

"A European Union which fails to promote and protect human rights consistently and effectively will betray Europe's shared values and its long-standing commitment to them. However, the Union's existing policies in this area are no longer adequate. They were made by and for the Europe of yesterday; they are not sufficient for the Europe of tomorrow. The strong rhetoric of the Union is not matched by the reality. There is an urgent need for a human rights policy which is coherent, balanced, substantive and professional.

There are many reasons why the European Union cannot remain without a comprehensive and effective internal human rights policy. They include:

- the rapid movement towards an 'ever closer Union' and towards a comprehensive single market;
- the adoption of a single currency for close to 300 million people;
- the increasing incidence of racism, xenophobia and ethnic hatred within Europe;

⁷ The Comité des Sages consisted of Judge Antonio Cassese, Mme Catherine Lalumière, Professor Peter Leuprecht and Mrs Mary Robinson

- the tendency towards a ‘fortress Europe’ which is hostile to ‘outsiders’ and discourages refugees and asylum-seekers;
- the growing cooperation in policy and security matters, which is not matched by adequate human rights safeguards;
- the increasingly complex political and administrative system that governs the Union and is supported by a bureaucracy with extensive powers; and
- the aspiration to bring at least five and perhaps as many as thirteen countries within the Union’s fold in the years ahead.

Similarly, human rights must be a key part of the EU’s policy towards the rest of the world. An integrated policy is essential for a European Union that:

- recognizes that respect for human rights among its neighbours and partners has an enormous impact on its own security;
- has been taught by history that respect for human rights is the only enduring foundation for building peace and harmony;
- is forging a common foreign policy, within which human rights must be a core element;
- has cooperation and other agreements with a vast number of other countries;
- plays a key role in many international organizations concerned with human rights; and
- spends well over a billion euros every year on development assistance and humanitarian aid”.⁸

6. The stated purpose of the Charter is to make the “overriding importance and relevance” of fundamental rights “more visible to the Union’s citizens”. One immediate failing of the proposal is that it is aimed only at the Union’s citizens. This makes the proposal contradictory in that sources for the Charter, notably the European Convention on Human Rights, apply to all those under the jurisdiction of the Union’s members, not just its citizens. There are difficulties of maintaining the provisions of the European Convention, as a living instrument, in the Charter. Changing the beneficiaries of the rights guaranteed by the Convention will undermine any attempt to maintain legal certainty.

7. On the other hand, we encourage any effort which tries to make people better informed of their rights. Indeed, we understand that the United Kingdom Government has proposed that the Charter should be no more than a document that publicises the Union’s existing protection of human rights. On this point, the Bar Council of England and Wales has commented:

“The utility of such a document should not be over-emphasised... we would applaud any document, officially-endorsed or otherwise, which renders the arcane world of European Union and human rights law more comprehensible to the ordinary citizen, or even to the ordinary lawyer. There are many barristers’ chambers and solicitors’ firms that could benefit from such a document, and none – we suspect – that would have no need for it.”⁹

We hope that any such document will not be too lengthy or complex. We note that introducing it at the same time as the incorporation into UK law of the European Convention could be confusing within the context of the UK.

8. The content of the Charter is described in the second paragraph of the Cologne Conclusions, as reproduced above. The scope of the Charter has recently been defined as:

“The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions and bodies of the Union within the framework of the powers conferred on them by the treaties, and also to the Member States exclusively within the framework of implementing Community Law. They shall not establish any competence or any new task for the Community or the Union.”¹⁰

⁸ The text of the Agenda is reproduced in The EU and Human Rights, op cit, page 921

⁹ Written evidence on behalf of Bar Council International Relations Committee, Bar Human Rights Committee, Bar European Group, 9 February 2000

¹⁰ Note from the Praesidium, 18 April 2000 ¹¹ Luxembourg Presidency Conclusions, 12 and 13 December 1997, Annex 3

In this case, it appears that the Charter will serve, in either the proclaimed or integrated versions, as little more than a recital of existing rights contained in the treaties. As such, it will not advance the cause of a coherent, comprehensive and effective human rights policy.

9. Neither will it achieve the commitments made in the Declaration by the European Council at the beginning of the year of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.¹¹ In paragraph 2 of this Declaration, the European Council stressed:

“the universal nature of human rights and reiterates the obligation incumbent on all States, in accordance with the United Nations Charter, to develop and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, regardless of race, gender, language or religion”.

In paragraph 6 the Council appealed to all States to step up their efforts in the field of human rights by:

- “Acceding the international instruments to which they are not yet party with a view to achieving the objective of the universal ratification of the international treaties and protocols concerning human rights;
- Ensuring more stringent implementation of those instruments;
- Strengthening the role of civil society in promoting and protecting human rights;
- Promoting activities on the ground and developing technical assistance in the area of human rights;
- Strengthening in particular training and education programmes concerning human rights”.

10. It is reasonable to assume that this Declaration was intended to apply to Union members as much as other states. Even at the level of accession to international human rights instruments – to take the first point from the list above – there are significant gaps in Union members’ human rights obligations. For example, it is notable that only Ireland is not a party to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, nor to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The United Kingdom is the only Union member not to be party to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, allowing individual complaints, while France is the only member not party to its Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty. A telling gap, given the grave concerns about racism in Europe, is the fact that six Union members who are party to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination - Austria, Belgium, Germany, Greece, Portugal and the United Kingdom - have not made the declaration under Article 14 allowing individual complaints.

11. On the other hand, all Union members are party to important international human rights instruments. These include the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees; the International Covenants on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and on Civil and Political Rights; the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; the Convention on the Rights of the Child; and core standards of the International Labour Organisation, particularly Conventions Nos 87 on Freedom of Association and the Right to Organise and 98 on the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining. There is a need to ensure that the rights enshrined in these treaties are not just visible but “stringently” implemented as required by the Declaration.

12. “Visibility” is not an adequate human rights policy. There are numerous proposals for reform and the development of a coherent human rights policy, many of them well rehearsed. The Union should be giving serious attention to these proposals which include accession to the European Convention on Human Rights – still a live issue despite the 1996 decision of the European Court of Justice.¹² One of the merits of many of these proposals is that they are based on institutional reform and thus do not raise fears – which have surfaced in the context of the Charter discussions – of the Union adopting a ‘human rights constitution’.

¹¹ Luxembourg Presidency Conclusions, 12 and 13 December 1997, Annex 3

13. In our view, the Charter proposal bypasses the key issue with which the Union should be engaged: the development of a comprehensive, coherent and effective human rights policy. Instead the Charter appears as merely a vehicle for publicity and self-congratulation. In the words of Leading by Example: A Human Rights Agenda For the European Union for the Year 2000, the Charter belongs to the Europe of yesterday. We are concerned that it will perpetrate the impasse described by Phillip Alston and J. H. H. Weiler:

“The principle shortcoming of the EU’s human rights policy is not a lack of novelty or grand gestures. It is a consistent reluctance to come to grips with some basic home truths about the indivisibility of internal and external human rights policy, the need for a clear and ambiguous commitment at all levels, and the need for effective political and bureaucratic structures to give effect to those commitments. The various components of the recipe for achieving these objectives have been evident for a number of years. Until these indispensable building blocks are put into place by the Member States and the institutions of the Union there will be little point in creating grand new designs for their own sake”.¹³

14. In conclusion, we repeat the following key points:

- The Charter, if there must be such a document, should be proclaimed only and not integrated into the treaties;
- Union members should swallow their own medicine and implement the provisions of the Declaration by the European Council at the beginning of the year of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights at the national level;
- The Union should develop promptly a coherent, comprehensible and effective human rights policy that supports the universality, indivisibility and interdependence of all human rights and informs both its internal and external policies, primarily through institutional reform.

Dear Sir or Madam, The undersigned human rights institutes and centres welcome the formulation of an EU Charter on Fundamental Rights as an important dimension in the European development of human rights standards. In our capacity as experts in the field of human rights we believe, however, that it is imperative to raise the following issues for further consideration. The institutes and centres are primarily concerned with the fact that the rapid pace of the preparations for the drafting of the EU Charter preempts a much needed general debate on the implications of the Charter. Instead, discussions at the European level should be allowed to mature in a more steady pace, thereby creating a platform for a broad popular involvement in the issues at stake. The time frame should not be seen as an end in itself, nor as a valid justification for not securing an open and participatory public debate. The institutes recognize the use of the Internet as a means to create transparency. However, it should be borne in mind that it is still only a fragmented part of the European population who has access to this technology. The use of the Internet should therefore be complemented by other more widely accessible means of communication. It is decisive for the future legitimacy of the European Union that there is a broad awareness of and support to the Charter. The creation of an EU Charter seems to involve a risk of legal uncertainty for the individual. It should be kept in mind that the European Convention on Human Rights not only defines individual rights subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, but also forms part of national law in all EU Member States. It is thus crucial to avoid a situation where powers, if vested in the European Court of Justice, would compete with the European Court of Human Rights. The institutes and centres consider it to be of the utmost importance that the Charter reflects the interdependent and indivisible nature of all human rights. The current normative framework after the Amsterdam Treaty is not fully satisfactory in this respect. The importance attached to one regional human rights treaty, i.e. the European Convention on Human Rights, could lead to the unfounded interpretation that EU organs would not be bound by all human rights treaties ratified by its Member States. However, a promising sign of the interdependence and indivisibility not having been forgotten is the discussion of the horizontal article, tentatively referred to as article 49, which is intended to clarify that the EU Charter cannot be used to deviate from or restrict fundamental rights which have been guaranteed in international law, including existing human rights treaties. In the process of drafting the EU Charter, it has been noted that attention has been paid not only to civil and political rights but also to other human rights, including economic and social rights. However, upon studying the catalogue of proposed economic and social rights it is observed that, on the one side, the catalogue is expanded considerably in respect of the protection of rights related to the labour market, whereas, on the other side, it does not include all the traditional rights, e.g. the right to housing. In this way, the EU runs the risk of down-scaling fundamental economic and social rights and, at the same time, upgrading detailed regulations, i.e. primarily within the realms of ILO conventions. Furthermore, in relation to economic and social rights the institutes and centres express their concern regarding proposals which would reduce economic and social rights to mere goals or policies in the EU Charter. In relation to non-discrimination it is positive that the draft Charter includes a prohibition against discrimination in all areas and not only in relation to civil and political rights as opposed to article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights. At the same time, however, it is problematic that the provision limits the scope of this protection - unlike Article 14 - by listing an exhaustive number of grounds on which discrimination should be prohibited. Thus, the draft does not offer a general protection against discrimination on grounds of nationality - as does the ECHR. This should be changed as the charter should not restrict a fundamental right guaranteed by the ECHR, nor word it in more limited terms. Though, the draft Charter does offer a certain degree of protection against discrimination on grounds of nationality, in principle, this only relates to discrimination against citizens of other EU Member States - while human rights protection against (all) discrimination applies to “everyone”. It seems unclear why a prohibition against discrimination on grounds of nationality in the EU Charter should be limited. The inalienable right of any person not to be discriminated against on any ground ought to be included in the EU Charter on Fundamental Rights. Finally, the institutes and centres would like to point to the fact that the provision on the right to asylum as currently drafted could lead to discrimination on the basis of nationality. In general terms as well as in relation to the above mentioned draft article 49, it is crucial that there is consistency between the Charter and the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and other international instruments regulating the protection of refugees. The institutes and centres will follow the process carefully and will, at the same time, make ourselves available for any further discussions with relevant bodies working on the draft EU Charter. It is of the utmost importance that Europe when embarking upon such an ambitious project is truly considering all aspects of the matter. This should be done in order not to divert or downgrade the human rights protection as it has developed since the adoption of the international and regional instruments in the aftermath of the Second World War. The human rights development is at a critical junction these years, and an EU Charter can, if carefully thought out, constitute an important contribution to furthering the protection of the human dignity.

Mesdames, Messieurs,

Par la présente, je me permets de vous soumettre quelques propositions de l'Initiativ Liewensufank pour ajouter à la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne.

Nous avons constaté que le début de la vie, c.à.d. la grossesse, l'accouchement et l'allaitement ne sont pas mentionnés spécialement dans la charte comme des phases nécessitant une protection spéciale. Nous sommes d'avis que la santé de la mère, du fœtus et du bébé nécessitent une protection spéciale. Pour en tenir compte, nous vous soumettons nos propositions d'ajoutes:

Art. 3.2. Veuillez ajouter s.v.p.

- Reconsidération des événements de la vie des femmes pour qu'elles ne soient pas traitées comme des problèmes médicaux d'où des interventions chirurgicales inutiles et des thérapeutiques inadaptées.

Ceci reprend le texte du § 103 accepté à la plate-forme des femmes à Béjing.

Art. 22.3. Veuillez ajouter s.v.p.

Il n'y a pas de discriminations des femmes à cause de leur fonction reproductives.

Art. 39 Veuillez ajouter s.v.p. la mention en gras

.....notamment le droit à un congé de maternité, avant et/ou après l'accouchement des pauses d'allaitement maternel.....

Ceci pour tenir compte de la convention de l'OIT sur la protection de la maternité.

Art. 42. Veuillez ajouter s.v.p.

Pour les parturientes, les droits ancrés dans la charte de droits de la parturiente (Doc B2 712/86 du Parlement Européen) sont mis en oeuvre

Ceci pour inclure ce texte important voté par le Parlement Européen

Art. 45 Veuillez ajouter s.v.p.

Le code de commercialisation des substituts de lait maternel est respecté et mis en oeuvre.

Ceci est important pour protéger la santé des consommateurs les plus vulnérables et le choix de leurs mères. Tous les pays de la CE ont marqué leur accord par leur vote à l'Assemblée mondiale de la Santé 1981. En outre, la CEE a entrepris les premiers pas de mise en oeuvre par la directive 91/321/EEC

En espérant que nos propositions puissent être prises en considération, veuillez accepter, Mesdames, Messieurs l'expression de notre plus haute considération.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Prise de position par le Bureau de l'association "Maison de l'Europe du Land Brandenburg" relative au projet actuel de la Charte de droits fondamentaux

1. Au nom des membres de la "Maison de l'Europe du Land Brandenburg" le Bureau de l'association rend hommage aux efforts entrepris par la Convention visant à élaborer un projet d'une Charte de Droits Fondamentaux valable pour l'Union Européenne. Cette Charte de Droits Fondamentaux, dont l'exigibilité devrait être garantie par le Conseil de l'Union Européenne sera un aspect essentiel pour faciliter l'identification des citoyens avec cette Union Européenne. Elle sera d'après nous un premier important pas vers une Constitution européenne revendiqué aussi par nous, une constitution ressemblant tous les droits individuels valables pour toutes les personnes résidant sur le territoire de l'Union Européenne.
2. Il nous paraît indispensable que le projet de cette Charte de Droits Fondamentaux réuniras tous les droits civils, politiques, mais aussi économiques, sociaux et culturels - de manière qu'elle se présente déjà visiblement par ce projet. Il faut également que les valeurs de ces droits reflètent au moins le niveau élevé constitué déjà par les conventions internationales des droits de l'homme et par les actes juridiques internationaux et nationaux sans être dans aucun cas inférieur à ceux-ci.
 Nous nous exprimons en faveur du principe de l'universalité des droits de l'homme qui devrait nécessairement aussi le principe de tous les droits stipulés par cette Charte de Droits Fondamentaux.
 Une telle Charte de Droits Fondamentaux européenne rendrait d'après notre conviction l'Europe en modèle digne d'être imité par le reste du monde.
 Nous regrettons par contre que ce projet ne corresponde pas des nombreuses positions de ses formules à ces exigences.
 Il est d'autant plus regrettable que sa structure et plusieurs de ses stipulation reflètent sensiblement les intérêts et besoins de certaines Etats et de certaines associations-lobbys, tandis que d'autres aspects sont ou reflété de manière minimisée ou ignorés complètement, particulièrement ceux qui ont été revendiqués par des ONG.

3. Après avoir examiné ce projet du texte distribué par les websites du Conseil de l'Union Européenne à l'Internet, nous nous permettons de vous proposer seulement quelques-unes de nos remarques et amendements.

3.1 Le préambule

Parmi les principes mentionnés à alinéa (2) sur lesquels se baseront l'Union et ses institutions alors il faut aussi y ajouter les principes de la Paix et de la Solidarité.

Nous soutenons dont les propositions soumises par Mr. Jürgen Meyer en ce qui concerne le principe "la solidarité" et nous proposons d'y ajouter également en premier lieu le principe "la Paix" qui devrait être assurée par l'Union et toutes ses institutions.

3.2. Article 1 - La dignité de l'homme

L'alinéa (1) devrait comporter le supplément " ne devrait être jamais violée" et se lire:

" (1) La dignité de l'homme ne devrait être jamais violée. Il faut la respecter et la protéger."

Nous estimons qu'il faut souligner expressément cette immunité de la dignité.

3.3. Article 16 - Le droit à l'éducation à alinéa (3) "Le droit des parents d'assurer l'éducation et l'enseignement de leurs enfants, conformément à leurs convictions religieuses et philosophiques, doit être respecté."

Est à rayer sans conditions.

- Son esprit est déjà exprimé par l'alinéa (1). Il touche également de manière contradictoire le sens de l'article 23 - Droits des enfants.
- Nous estimons que le respects de ce droit des parents ne pourrait pas être garanti par l'Union et ses institutions.

3.4. Article 22 - Egalité et non-discrimination

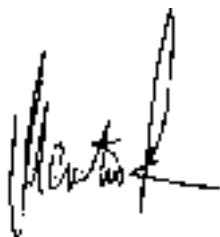

La dernière phrase de l'alinéa (3) "L'égalité des sexes est notamment assurée dans la fixations des rémunérations et des autres conditions de travail" est à rayer sans condition.

Cette stipulation présente une forte limitation du principe de l'égalité et de non-discrimination.

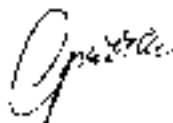

3.5. En tant compte les titres juridiques de la Charte Sociale Européenne déjà ratifiée par de nombreux Etats-membres nous proposons d'ajouter à la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux au moins deux articles reflétant le devoir à l'assistance sociale de l'Union et de ses institution voir le droit à l'emploi et le droit à un logement convenable de chacun.

Au nom du Bureau de la Maison de l'Europe du Land Brandebourg

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend einen Vorschlag zu Artikel 15 (in der Fassung von Dokument Charta 4333/00 CONVENT 36), vorgelegt vom Initiativkreis für den öffentlichen Rundfunk Köln. ¹

A. INITIATIVKREIS FÜR DEN ÖFFENTLICHEN RUNDFUNK KÖLN

Düsseldorf, den 16.6.2000
Initia.Korresp.Herzog

An den Vorsitzenden des Konvents zur Ausarbeitung einer Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Herrn Professor Dr. Roman Herzog
Prinzregentenstr. 89

II. 81675 München

Sehr geehrter Herr Professor Herzog,

der Initiativkreis für den Öffentlichen Rundfunk Köln begrüßt es, dass die Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union in Artikel 15 (in der Fassung von Dokument CONVENT 28) die Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung verankern will. Wir sind allerdings der Ansicht, dass diese Fassung ergänzt und präzisiert werden sollte, damit sie neben der persönlichen Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit auch die Medienfreiheit mit ihren objektiven und subjektiven Dimensionen umfassend sichert. Letzteres ist in den Verfassungen mehrerer Mitgliedstaaten, u. a. Deutschland und Portugal, der Fall und sollte auch in der EU-Charta geschehen. Unsere Anregungen richten sich auch auf eine gedeihliche medienpolitische Kooperation von EU und Mitgliedstaaten auf dem Boden einer Klärung der jeweiligen Kompetenzen. Wir nehmen dabei auf die Amsterdamer Protokollerklärung über den öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunk in den Mitgliedstaaten Bezug. Der jüngste Kompromissvorschlag des Präsidiums (Art. 15 Abs. 2 laut Dokument CONVENT 36) trägt dem noch nicht ausreichend Rechnung. Wir wären Ihnen sehr dankbar, wenn Sie unsere Vorschläge in die weiteren Beratungen des Konvents einbeziehen würden.

Der 1994 gegründete Initiativkreis setzt sich für die Belange des Öffentlichen Rundfunks und seine Zukunftssicherung im Rahmen der „dualen Rundfunkordnung“ Deutschlands ein. Er wird von Persönlichkeiten aus dem kulturellen und gesellschaftlichen Leben getragen, die den Programmauftrag des Öffentlichen Rundfunks als „Rundfunk in gesellschaftlicher Verantwortung“ im Interesse unseres kulturellen Lebens und einer freien politischen Meinungsbildung für unverzichtbar ansehen. Daher wenden wir uns aus gegebenen Anlässen - wie hier - mit Eingaben und Vorschlägen an die für rundfunkpolitische Entscheidungen zuständigen Stellen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Dr. h. c. Adalbert Leidinger

Sprecher: Dr. h. c. Adalbert Leidinger, 40472 Düsseldorf, Hetjensstr. 44, Tel.: 0211/651870, Fax: 6585661

III. Art. 15. Kommunikationsfreiheit

- (1) Jeder hat das Recht auf freie Meinungsäußerung.
- (2) Jeder hat das Recht, sich aus allgemein zugänglichen Quellen umfassend zu informieren und sich seine Meinung frei zu bilden. Dies schließt insbesondere den Zugang zu vielfältigen kulturellen Angeboten ein.
- (3) Die Freiheit der Presse, des Rundfunks, des Films und der sonstigen an die Allgemeinheit gerichteten Kommunikation wird gewährleistet.
- (4) Die Befugnisse der Mitgliedstaaten zur Sicherung von öffentlich-rechtlichem Rundfunk als Medium und Faktor des Prozesses freier Meinungsbildung bleiben unberührt.

Begründung:

Nach dem Vorschlag des Präsidiums des Konvents in Dokument CONVENT 28 soll sich Art. 15 eng an Art. 10 Abs. 1 Sätze 1 und 2 EMRK anlehnen. Garantiert werden soll danach zunächst die Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung. Diese schließt, wie dann hinzugefügt wird, „die Meinungsfreiheit“ ein. Damit ist anscheinend die Freiheit der Meinungsbildung gemeint, was jetzt im Normtext klargestellt werden sollte. Weiter wird in Art. 15 des Präsidiumsvorschlags gesagt, die Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung schließe auch die Informationsfreiheit ein. Demgegenüber empfiehlt es sich, die Informationsfreiheit als selbständiges, zuoberst der Meinungsbildungsfreiheit zugeordnetes Grundrecht auszuweisen. Deshalb enthält unser Vorschlag in Abs. 1 die Meinungsäußerungsfreiheit und in Abs. 2 Informations- und Meinungsbildungsfreiheit. Letztere ist von so hohem Rang, dass es angezeigt erscheint, bestimmte nähere Maßgaben („umfassend“, „vielfältig“, Zugang zu „kulturellen Angeboten“) in die Charta aufzunehmen. Damit folgen wir dem Textvorschlag von ARD und ZDF in Dokument CONTRIB 103.

Nach den jüngsten Kompromissvorschlägen des Präsidiums für Änderungen in Dokument CONVENT 36 soll Art. 15 um einen Abs. 2 mit folgendem Wortlaut ergänzt werden: „Die Presse- und Informationsfreiheit ist unter Achtung der Transparenz und des Pluralismus gewährleistet.“ Diese Formulierung könnte den Eindruck erwecken, Informations- und Pressefreiheit seien deckungsgleich, was keineswegs zutrifft. Darum sollte die Informationsfreiheit - wie oben vorgeschlagen - separat garantiert und in dem Absatz über Medienfreiheit nicht noch einmal erwähnt werden. Im übrigen sollte hier nicht nur - gewissermaßen pars pro toto - die Pressefreiheit genannt werden. Vielmehr ist davon jedenfalls die Rundfunkfreiheit zu unterscheiden, und diese ist ausdrücklich zu erwähnen, wie es auch von Prof. Meyer (Änderungsvorschlag 280) und Minister Gnauck (Änderungsvorschlag 289) gefordert wird. Einbezogen werden könnten auch die Filmfreiheit sowie die Freiheit sonstiger an die Allgemeinheit gerichteter neuer Mediendienste, wie es in dem ARD/ZDF-Vorschlag geschieht.

Mit dem von uns vorgeschlagenen Abs. 4 zielen wir auf eine explizite Bestands- und Entwicklungsgarantie für den Rundfunk in öffentlicher Trägerschaft ab. Damit wird dem Erfordernis programmlicher Qualitätssicherung Rechnung getragen, wie es in der Amsterdamer Protokollerklärung von 1997 betont wird. Eine derartige Garantie wird auch in den Änderungsvorschlägen 280 und 289 gefordert. Zur näheren Begründung weisen wir auch auf den von Prof. Stock vorgelegten Diskussionsbeitrag Dokument CONTRIB 206 hin.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a Press Release, issued by the Platform of European Social NGOs.¹

Brussels, 21 June 2000

PRESS RELEASEEU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS: SOCIAL NGOS DISAPPOINTED BY POSITION TAKEN BY SOME MEMBER STATES AT THE FEIRA COUNCIL, BUT LOOK TO FRENCH PRESIDENCY FOR BOLD LEADERSHIP IN ENSURING A BINDING TEXT

The Platform of European of Social NGOs was extremely disappointed by the stance taken by several Member States, led by the UK, that the EU Charter of fundamental rights should not be legally enforceable.

Social NGOs and the European Trade Union Confederation have been campaigning together for several years for a binding Charter with a full set of rights. Since the Spring, the campaign has been taken to all the Member States with a series of national conferences, culminating in a joint European conference at the end of August, where the views expressed by citizens, social activists and trade unionists at national level will be gathered and conveyed to EU leaders.

Central to our campaign is the belief that social and economic rights must be guaranteed by the Charter. The European social model is at the core of our societies and is a major factor in Europe's success in the global marketplace. Within this perspective an enforceable Charter will prove indispensable in safeguarding and modernising our models of social protection and improving our economic performance.

In our view the key role of civil society must also be acknowledged in the Charter so that formalised consultation of NGOs is a right, not a favour. The Social Platform is disappointed that no reference was made to NGOs in the Feira conclusions, which constitutes a step backwards from the Lisbon Summit.

Responding to the events of the Feira Summit, Platform President Giampiero Alhadef said "Social NGOs firmly believe that if the EU is to achieve its stated aim of becoming closer to the citizens, then the people living in Europe must not only have rights on paper, but the opportunity to seek legal redress if those rights are violated.

We now look to the leadership of the French Presidency to be bold and give the people of Europe what they deserve: an enforceable Charter with a full, indivisible set of rights. A solemn political declaration, would fall short of what is needed now in terms of the objectives of a Europe close to its citizens; the enlargement of the Union and our global role".

Explanatory Memorandum

1. Suggested by an idea of Mr. Gerry Walker, Dublin Institute of Technology, during preparations for the first conference in Ireland on Sustainable Design and Construction, this European Charter is a natural and logical next step following the major study project, co-ordinated by Working Commission 82 of the International Council for Building Research, Studies and Documentation (CIB), which culminated in the recent production of CIB Publication 225 - 'Sustainable Development and the Future of Construction' .

2. The structure of the European Charter reflects the view that, fundamentally, Sustainable Construction is a response, in built form, to the concept of 'sustainable development' and its initial formal elaboration - the Rio Declaration of 27 Principles, and Agenda 21 -both agreed in 1992 at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. It is Sustainable Design, however, which will direct the future course of this innovative approach to construction.

3. During the completion phase of CIB Publication 225, problems arose when attempts were made to synthesize contributions from many different parts of the world. Is it yet possible, at this time, to reconcile and to fuse the following examples into a single understanding of Sustainable Construction ?

- The conviction, in Japanese tradition, that buildings are temporary and are not meant to have a long life cycle ;
- The desire, amongst the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, to catch up with the 'lifestyle' of Western Europe, whatever the costs to the environment and sustainability ;
- The pressing demands of social justice in a country like South Africa, with the consequent enormous challenge of providing sufficient housing and infrastructural development for the majority population, while still conserving a strongly indigenous approach to architecture and methods of building ;
- The typical pattern of construction in the European Union (E.U.) , which typically involves a modification or alteration of the already over-developed 'built environment', within a 'natural environment' constantly under attack and straining for survival. Rather than immediately trying to formulate a bland global model for Sustainable Design, more progress might be made, in the short term, if separate regional responses were to be developed for Africa, Asia, Europe, North America, etc., in order to ensure a greater degree of suitability to local needs, cultures and economies. The E.U., because of a colonial history, its current highly evolved legal base underpinning an extensive array of policies and action programmes relating to energy, environmental and sustainable development concerns, and because of its specific commitments arising from the Kyoto Protocol of 1997, is well placed, and legally / morally obliged, to produce a first outline for one of these regional responses to the Rio Declaration and Agenda 21 .

4. The European Charter on Sustainable Design and Construction, therefore, also comprises 27 Principles, which derive from a straightforward process (i) each principle of the original Rio Declaration was closely examined, re-drafted to suit an E.U. context and, on the basis of existing Union legislation and international agreements and treaties to which it is a signatory, was strengthened considerably in expression (ordinary typeface) ~ where appropriate, a clause (bold typeface) relevant to sustainable planning, design and construction was added ; (ii) unlike the Declaration, references to 'energy' were included in this document.

5. The Charter extols implementation, and the targeting / monitoring of 'real' performance.

European Charter on Sustainable Design & Construction

(Dublin, 1998-11-06)

Having met in Dublin from 5th.- 6th. November, 1998 ;

In co-operation with the Commission of the European Union, and the International Council for Building Research, Studies and Documentation (CIB) ;

Recognizing the integral and interdependent nature of the natural and built environments on this Earth, our home ;

Re-affirming the Declaration of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Agenda 21), adopted at Rio de Janeiro on 14th. June 1992, and striving to respond to it on matters directly concerning the design and construction of a sustainable built environment, capable of providing for responsible and environment-conscious human, social, cultural and economic progress ;

Mindful of the recent inclusions and amendments to the European Union (E.U.) treaties and certain other acts (see relevant extracts from the Amsterdam Treaty in Appendix I to this document) ;

Working towards the achievement of equality of opportunity for every person in the European Union, which in turn must lead to full social inclusion (see Guideline Framework in Appendix II to this document) ;

Understanding the importance of harmonizing language, concepts and terminology, in order to communicate more effectively with one another (see Vocabulary in Appendix III to this document);

Confirming that direct and meaningful consultation with people, partnership between all sectors of society, consensus, transparency and openness are essential elements in 'social wellbeing' ;

Proclaiming that Sustainable Design, Construction / De-Construction and Maintenance is the necessary, suitable and practicable response, in built form, to Sustainable Energy-efficient Environment-friendly Development (SEED) ;

the following principles should be actively considered by the Institutions of the European Union and relevant authorities in each Member State, implemented, and monitored by means of benchmarking and the application of appropriate sustainability performance indicators

Principle 1

Human beings are at the centre of concerns for sustainable development. They are entitled to a healthy and productive life in harmony with nature.

Movement towards a 'person-centred' and 'socially inclusive' approach in the planning / design/ construction of a built environment, i.e. placing real people, their needs and responsible desires at the centre of creative endeavours, should be encouraged and fostered by every keysector in society. The method of work in the various processes of planning / design / construction should be widely multi-disciplinary. An active dialogue between practitioners, researchers and end-users, based on meaningful consultation, partnership, and consensus should become the standard.

Principle 2

Member States of the European Union have, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, the sovereign right to exploit their own resources, pursuant to shared E.U. energy, environment and sustainable development policy goals - and the obligation to ensure that activities within their own jurisdiction, or control, do not cause damage to the environment of other Member States or countries / areas beyond the limits of E.U. jurisdiction.

Principle 3

A responsibility is attached to the right of development - it must be achieved in such a manner as to equitably meet the energy, environment and development requirements of present and future generations.

Sustainability of the 'built environment' can only be understood in relation to that of the 'natural environment' ; it involves, with precision and accuracy,

(i) establishing limits on the capacity of the natural environment to sustain itself ;

(ii) stopping short of those limits, by a controlled factor of safety, in any further future modification or extension to the built environment ;

(iii) transforming the nature and course of human / social progress to become responsible and environment-conscious, i.e. sustainable development.

Life cycle management should be fully integrated into the processes of planning / design / construction of the built environment. Life cycle assessment / analysis / appraisal of product and service systems used or consumed should involve an evaluation of 'energy cycle' costs, 'environmental impact', and 'sustainability' performance.

Principle 4

In order to achieve sustainable development, environmental protection and energy efficiency should constitute integral parts of the development process, and should not be considered in isolation.

Environmental protection and energy efficiency requirements should be integrated into the definition of all European Union policies and activities, and implemented at all levels of the E.U. - most particularly at local level.

Principle 5

Member States of the European Union should co-operate in the tasks of protecting human rights, eradicating poverty, and removing social inequality, as indispensable and necessary prerequisite steps to achieving sustainable development, in order to decrease disparities in standards of living and better meet the needs of all peoples in Europe. The shared goal of Member States should be full social inclusion for every citizen of the E.U.

Principle 6

The special situation and needs of developing countries, particularly the least developed and those most environmentally vulnerable, should be given special priority. E.U. policies and activities in the fields of energy, environment and sustainable development should address the interests and needs of all peoples in the world.

Principle 7

Member States of the European Union should co-operate in a spirit of global partnership to conserve, protect, heal and restore the health and integrity of the Earth's ecosystem. In view of the different contributions to global environmental degradation, countries have common but differentiated obligations. Europe acknowledges the responsibility that it bears, in the international pursuit of sustainable development, as a result of the pressures its society has placed on the global environment over past centuries, and of the technologies and financial resources it now commands. Understanding the fragility of the natural environment, and observing the vast expanse of existing development and waste already generated in the built environment, every alternative should be exhausted before intruding further into the natural environment. All opportunities should be taken to heal previous injury to the natural environment ; initial damage repair by human intervention, sufficient only to promote natural self-healing, is a recommended course of action. Adequate resources should be allocated by the European Union towards the proper disposal of nuclear wastes.

Principle 8

To achieve sustainable development and a higher quality of life for all peoples, Member States of the European Union should reduce and eliminate unsustainable patterns of production and consumption, and promote appropriate demographic policies. With concern for the protection of indigenous architecture and methods of building, sustainable patterns of planning / design / construction of the built environment should be encouraged by means of (i) concerted programmes of awareness raising and education at all levels of the construction, agriculture, marine, transport and energy industries in Europe; (ii) harmonized financial mechanisms and incentives in each Member State.

Principle 9

Member States of the European Union should co-operate to strengthen capacity-building for sustainable development by improving scientific understanding through the exchange of information, and by enhancing the development, adaptation, diffusion and transfer of technologies, including new and innovative technologies. Acknowledging our incomplete understanding of sustainable development, each Member State should establish a high level, cross-sectoral research group to examine the concept, and to suggest clear alternatives and make concise proposals with regard to implementation and monitoring strategies. Each Member State should establish a 'Forum on Sustainable Construction' - to articulate the necessary, suitable and practicable response, in built form, to the concept of sustainable development. As our understanding of sustainable development evolves, so also should the nature of our response. The smallest viable unit, with regard to concerted action in any of the above policy areas, is the 'region'.

Principle 10

Environmental issues are best handled with the participation of all interested citizens, at the relevant level. At European Union and Member State levels, each individual should have access to complete relevant information concerning the environment which is held by public authorities and institutions, including information on hazardous materials and processes in their communities. Each individual has the right to participate in decision-making. Member States should facilitate and encourage public awareness and participation by making information widely available. Effective access to judicial and administrative proceedings at all levels of the E.U., including redress and remedy, should be provided.

Principle 11

The European Union should properly enact, operate, monitor and control effective energy, environment and sustainable development related legislation. Standards, codes of good practice, and management objectives, priorities and systems should reflect the regional context to which they apply. E.U. standards, codes and systems may be entirely inappropriate, and of unwarranted economic and social cost in other regions of the world, particularly developing countries. The E.U. should properly enact, operate, monitor and control effective health, safety and welfare related legislation ; the base concerning human health and safety, environmental protection and consumer protection, should be set at a high level, and should take account of any new developments verified by scientific fact.

Principle 12

Member States of the European Union should co-operate to promote a supportive and open international economic system which must lead to economic growth and sustainable development in all countries, in order to better address the problems of environmental degradation. Trade policy measures for environmental purposes should not constitute a means of arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination, or a disguised restriction on international trade. Unilateral actions to deal with environmental challenges outside the jurisdiction of the E.U. should be avoided. Environmental measures addressing transboundary or global environmental problems should, as far as possible, be based on an international consensus.

Principle 13

The European Union should develop law regarding liability and compensation for the victims of pollution and other environmental damage. The E.U. should also co-operate in an expeditious and more determined manner to elaborate further international law regarding liability and compensation for harm to human health and the adverse effects of environmental damage caused by activities within its jurisdiction, or control, to countries / areas beyond the limits of its jurisdiction.

Principle 14

Member States of the European Union should co-operate effectively to prevent the relocation or transfer outside an individual Member State, or the importation into any part of the E.U., of an activity or substance which causes environmental degradation or is found to be harmful to human health.

Principle 15

The precautionary approach should be widely applied by the Member States of the European Union. Where there is a potential for harm to human health, or serious or irreversible damage to the environment, lack of full scientific certainty should not be used as a reason for postponing practicable prevention measures or countermeasures.

Principle 16

Member States of the European Union should promote the internationalization of environmental costs and the use of economic instruments, taking into account that the polluter should, in principle, bear the cost of pollution, with due regard to public interest and health, and without excessive distortion to international trade and investment.

Principle 17

An environmental impact assessment should be undertaken for any proposed activity which is likely to have a significant adverse impact on the environment ; such an assessment should be subject to proper monitoring and control by competent authorities and institutions in the European Union. All practicable means for an improvement in sustainability and energy efficiency, and the reduction and elimination of adverse effects on the environment, should be shown in an Environmental Impact Statement.

Principle 18

Member States of the European Union should immediately notify other Member States of any natural disasters or other emergencies which are likely to produce sudden harmful effects on human health, or on the environment of those States. A co-ordinated E.U. effort should be made to help States so afflicted. E.U. resources should be directed towards effective management, monitoring, prevention and warning systems, particularly in the case of the fire safety of hazardous materials storage and processing.

Principle 19

Member States of the European Union should provide prior and timely notification, with complete relevant information, to other potentially affected Member States or to countries outside the E.U., on activities which may have a significant adverse transboundary environmental impact. Notifications should be at the earliest possible stage of an incident, and in good faith.

Principle 20

Women have a vital role in environmental management and development. Their full participation is essential to achieve sustainable development. The experience and wisdom of the elderly should be valued ; the abilities of every person should be cherished ; and the creativity, ideals and courage of youth should be mobilized to forge a European partnership in order to ensure a better future for all.

Principle 21

Local communities, and especially indigenous peoples and their communities, have a vital role in environmental management and development because of their knowledge and traditional practices. Member States of the European Union should recognize, duly support and celebrate their separate identities, cultures and interests, and enable their effective participation in the achievement of sustainable development.

Principle 22

The environment and natural resources of peoples under oppression, domination and occupation should be protected.

Principle 23

Warfare is inherently destructive of sustainable development. Member States of the European Union should respect international law providing protection for the environment in times of armed conflict, and co-operate in its further elaboration, as necessary. The production, use, and supply of landmines or landmine technology should be prohibited by E.U. legislation. Appropriate resources should be allocated by the E.U. towards the clearance and proper disposal of existing landmines in the world. The further spread of strategic / tactical nuclear weapons and weapons technology should be prevented under E.U. legislation. Appropriate resources should be devoted to the elimination and proper disposal of existing nuclear, biological and chemical weapons of mass destruction in the E.U.

Principle 24

Peace, responsible human / social development, environmental protection and energy efficiency are interdependent and indivisible.

Principle 25

Member States of the European Union should resolve their internal or external environmental or energy disputes peacefully, and by appropriate means, in accordance with E.U. law and the Charter of the United Nations.

Principle 26

Harmonized short, medium and long-term strategies in the policy areas of energy efficiency, environmental protection and sustainable development should be planned for implementation in the European Union over the following time frames :- (i) up to 2010 ; (ii) between 2011 and 2040 ; (iii) between 2041 and 2100. Such is the threat to quality of life and human progress caused by current environmental degradation, and such is the great timelag between implementation of corrective actions and resulting beneficial environmental impacts, that sustainability performance should be benchmarked at year 1990 in the Member States of the E.U. Detailed performance indicators for all stages of design, construction / de-construction, maintenance and disposal should be used to target improvements in sustainability performance, verify target attainment, and continually re-adjust targets at appropriate intervals thereafter.

Principle 27

The European Union and its Institutions, relevant authorities of the Member States, and the peoples of Europe should co-operate, in a spirit of partnership and good faith, to fulfil the principles embodied in this Charter, and to further elaborate E.U. and international laws - in pursuit of Sustainable Energy-efficient Environment-friendly Development (SEED) .

Amsterdam Treaty

Treaty of Amsterdam amending the Treaty on European Union, the Treaties establishing the European Communities and certain related acts, signed at Amsterdam, 2nd. October 1997. (97 / C 340 / 01)

1. Sustainable Development

Replaced Article 2 of the TEC (Treaty establishing the European Community)

' The Community shall have as its task, by establishing a common market and an economic and monetary union and by implementing common policies or activities referred to in Articles 3 and 3a, to promote throughout the Community a harmonious, balanced and sustainable development of economic activities, a high level of employment and of social protection, equality between men and women, sustainable and non-inflationary growth, a high degree of competitiveness and convergence of economic performance, a high level of protection and improvement of the quality of the environment, the raising of the standard of living and quality of life, and economic and social cohesion and solidarity among Member States. '

Replaced 7th. Recital of the Preamble to the TEU (Treaty on European Union)

' Determined to promote economic and social progress for their peoples, taking into account the principle of sustainable development and within the context of the accomplishment of the internal market and of reinforced cohesion and environmental protection, and to implement policies ensuring that advances in economic integration are accompanied by parallel progress in other fields.'

2. Environment

New Article 3c in the TEC

' Environmental protection requirements must be integrated into the definition and implementation of the Community policies and activities referred to in Article 3, in particular with a view to promoting sustainable development. '

Declaration No. 12 to the Final Act

' The Conference notes that the Commission undertakes to prepare environmental impact assessment studies when making proposals which may have significant environmental implications. '

Replaced Paragraph 3 of Article 100a of the TEC

' The Commission, in its proposals envisaged in paragraph 1 concerning health, safety, environmental protection and consumer protection, will take as a base a high level of protection, taking account in particular of any new development based on scientific facts. Within their respective powers, the European Parliament and the Council will also seek to achieve this objective.'

3. Human Health

Replaced Article 129 of the TEC

' 1. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Community policies and activities. '

4. Statistics

New Article 213a in the TEC

' 1. Without prejudice to Article 5 of the Protocol on the Statute of the European System of Central Banks and of the European Central Bank, the Council, acting in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 189b, shall adopt measures for the production of statistics where necessary for the performance of the activities of the Community.

2. The production of Community statistics shall conform to impartiality, reliability, objectivity, scientific independence, cost-effectiveness and statistical confidentiality ; it shall not entail excessive burdens on economic operators. '

5. Personal Data Protection

New Article 213b in the TEC

' 1. From 1st. January 1999, Community acts on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data and the free movement of such data shall apply to the institutions and bodies set up by, or on the basis of, this Treaty. 2. Before the date referred to in paragraph 1, the Council, acting in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 189b, shall establish an independent supervisory body responsible for monitoring the application of such Community acts to Community institutions and bodies and shall adopt any other relevant provisions as appropriate. '

6. Anti-Discrimination

New Article 6a in the TEC

' Without prejudice to the other provisions of this Treaty and within the limits of the powers conferred by it upon the Community, the Council, acting unanimously on a proposal from the Commission and after consulting the European Parliament, may take appropriate action to combat discrimination based on sex, racial or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation. '

Guideline Framework

Achievement of Equality of Opportunity & Social Inclusion
For Every Person in the European Union (E.U.)

Guideline Framework

Achievement of Equality of Opportunity & Social Inclusion
For Every Person in the European Union (E.U.)

Direct and meaningful consultation with people, partnership between all sectors of society, consensus, transparency and openness are essential elements in 'social wellbeing'. Set out below are a number of areas which should be actively considered by the Institutions of the E.U. and relevant authorities in each Member State, implemented, and effectively monitored through the informed application of sustainability performance indicators

1. Empowering People for Participation in Society

- respecting autonomy and independence
- re-adjusting education and training programmes to facilitate participation
- re-adjusting welfare and other supports to facilitate participation
- moving towards a 'person-centred' approach in the design / implementation of support services
- mainstreaming
- ensuring seamless provision of services
- ensuring the principle of participation

2. Removing Physical Barriers to Participation

- viewing access / egress / evacuation and health / safety / welfare issues in the light of equality of opportunity and the right to participate
- developing effective legislation, standards (nationally transposed EN's) , and technical guidance in order to eliminate all forms of barrier
- monitoring and controlling compliance with legislation
- moving towards a 'person-centred' approach in the planning / design / construction of a sustainable built environment

3. Opening Up Various Spheres of Society

- upholding the equal civic status of every person - promoting employment for people as a key to social inclusion

4. Nurturing Opinion of the Public, Government Administrators, and Design Professions to be Receptive to 'Person-Centredness' of the Built Environment awareness raising and education

Appendix III

Vocabulary

Useful Terms & Definitions

Adaptability : The extent to which a building, or a building component, is designed when new, or capable of being easily modified at any later stage, to meet the changing living or working needs of the broad average of potential occupants, who may be disabled or able-bodied.

Buildability : The extent to which the design of a building facilitates ease of CIRIA-GB) construction, subject to the overall requirements for the completed building.

Built Environment : Anywhere there is, or has been, an intrusion or intervention by a human being in the natural environment.

Construction Works : Any building or civil engineering works. (EU Directive 89/106/EEC)

Cost Effectiveness : To achieve a defined objective at the lowest cost, or to achieve (IEC Treaty, 1994*) the greatest benefit at a given cost.

Dimensional Co-Ordination : A convention on related sizes for the co-ordinating dimensions of (ISO 1791) building components and the buildings incorporating them, for their design, manufacture, assembly and/or installation. Disabled : Those people, of all ages, who are unable to perform, independently and without aid, basic human tasks or functions because of physical, mental or psychological impairment, whether of a permanent or temporary nature. This definition is derived from / based on the World Health Organization's definitions (1980) of 'impairment' and 'disability' only. The term disabled includes

- wheelchair users ;
- people who experience difficulty in walking, with or without aid, e.g. stick, crutch, calliper or walking frame ;
- the elderly (people over the age of 60 years) ;
- the very young (people under the age of 5 years) ;
- pregnant women ;
- people who suffer from arthritis ;
- the visually impaired ;
- the hearing impaired ; and
- people who panic in a fire situation or other emergency ;
- people who suffer incapacitation as a result of exposure, during a fire, to poisonous or toxic substances, and/or elevated temperatures.

Economically Reasonable Working Life :

(EU Directive 89/106/EEC) (i) The working life is the period of time during which the performance of the works will be maintained at a level compatible with the fulfilment of the Essential Requirements.

(ii) An economically reasonable working life presumes that all relevant aspects are taken into account, such as

- costs of design, construction and use ;
- costs arising from hindrance of use ;
- risks and consequences of failure of the works during its working life and costs of insurance covering these risks ;
- planned partial renewal ;
- costs of inspections, maintenance, care and repair ;
- costs of operation and administration ;
- disposal ;
- environmental aspects.

Energy Cycle : The entire energy chain, including activities related to prospecting (IEC Treaty, 1994) for, exploration, production, conversion, storage, transport, distribution and consumption of the various forms of energy, and the treatment and disposal of wastes, as well as the decommissioning, cessation or closure of these activities, minimizing harmful environmental impacts.

Environmental Impact :

(IEC Treaty, 1994) Any effect caused by a given activity on the environment, including human health and safety, flora, fauna, soil, air, water, climate, landscape and historical monuments or other physical structures or the interactions among these factors ; it also includes effects on cultural heritage or socio-economic conditions resulting from alterations to those factors. Human Health : A state of physical, mental, psychological, social, cultural and economic wellbeing.

Improving Energy Efficiency :

(IEC Treaty, 1994) Acting to maintain the same unit of output (of a good or service) without reducing the quality or performance of the output, while reducing the amount of energy required to produce that output.

Life Cycle : Consecutive and interlinked stages of a product (and/or service) (EN ISO 14040) system from raw material acquisition or generation of natural resources to the final disposal.

Life Cycle Assessment :

(EN ISO 14040) Compilation and evaluation of the inputs, outputs and the potential environmental impacts of a product (and/or service) system throughout its life cycle.

Life Cycle Impact Assessment :

(EN ISO 14040) Phase of life cycle assessment aimed at understanding and evaluating the magnitude and significance of the potential environmental impacts of a product (and/or service) system.

Life Cycle Interpretation :

(EN ISO 14040) Phase of life cycle assessment in which the findings of either the inventory analysis or the impact assessment, or both, are combined consistent with a defined goal and scope in order to reach conclusions and recommendations.

Life Cycle Inventory Analysis :

(EN ISO 14040) Phase of life cycle assessment involving the compilation and quantification of inputs and outputs, for a given product (and/or service) system throughout its life cycle.

Performance : Performance is a quantitative expression (value, grade, class or (EU Directive 89/106/EEC) level) of the behaviour of a works, part of the works or product, for an action to which it is subject or which it generates under the intended service conditions (for the works or part of the works) or intended use conditions (for products) .

Safety : Freedom from unacceptable risk of harm.(ISO/IEC Guides 2 & 51)

SEED : Sustainable , Energy-efficient , Environment-friendly Development.

Sustainable Development : Development which meets the needs of the present without (Brundtland Report, 1987) compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs. An improved definition of 'sustainable development' must also embody the following concepts

- the place of human beings in the environment, and the relationship between both ;
- the nature of human, social, cultural and economic development, their current imbalances and inequities, and their future course ;
- the healing of existing injury to the natural environment.

Sustainable Construction : The creation and responsible maintenance of a healthy built (CIB/W82 & TG16) environment based on resource efficient and ecological principles.

Sustainable Design : The art and science of the design, supervision of related construction / de-construction, and maintenance of sustainability in the built environment. The definition of 'sustainable design' embodies the following concept

- 'person-centred' design , i.e. that design process which places real people at the centre of creative endeavours and gives due consideration to their health, safety and welfare in the built environment - it includes such specific performance criteria as a sensory rich and accessible (mobility, usability, communications and information) environment, fire safety, air, light and visual quality, protection from ionizing and electromagnetic radiation, thermal comfort (EN ISO 7730) , unwanted or nuisance noise abatement, etc. an important 'person-centred' design aid is the questionnaire survey, carried out by an independent, competent, non- threatening individual, and which comprises both open and closed format questions.

Sustainable Engineering : The application of scientific principles to relevant aspects of sustainable design.

Welfare : A general feeling of health and happiness.

Statement by the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Cyprus to the Audition with Candidate Countries of the Convention for the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

The decision of the Cologne European Council to draw up a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union was an important and timely decision which will have positive and beneficial effects in the process of European integration. The provisions of the Charter and their underlying message are addressed both to the member states and their citizens, the European citizens, as well as to the candidate countries and their peoples.

When the Republic of Cyprus submitted its application for membership in 1990, we knew that we were not applying to join just a common market, or a broader economic union, however important such a union might be. We were conscious, in fact we aspired, to join a community of shared values and principles, based on the rule of law, the protection and respect of human rights, and the promotion of peace and security in our continent and beyond, a community moving towards an ever closer union.

Certain important elements of this closer union were at the time not yet fully developed. Ever since the pace of European Integration was accelerated, the Economic and Monetary Union has taken form and life, the Common Foreign and Security Policy has been strengthened, the defence dimension is gradually being introduced. At the same time, the social dimension is gaining importance at the community level, as exemplified by the special summit in Lisbon this year. Furthermore, the Intergovernmental Conference on institutional reforms, is opening the way for the enlargement of the Union which is of extreme importance for the future of our continent.

The Cologne European Council decision for drawing up a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is the logical outcome and consequence of this evolution. It will fill an obvious gap in the already broad spectrum of the activities of the Union.

Drawing from our common European heritage for the protection of human rights, the different constitutional traditions of member states and reflecting the evolution in the field of protection of Human Rights, the Charter will strengthen the legitimacy of the Union in the eyes of its citizens. It can become a focal point of identification, giving to the ordinary citizen a source of meaning and understanding of the drive towards European Integration.

In order, however, to reach this goal, the Charter must be drafted in clear, simple and concise terms, so that it will be comprehensible to the ordinary citizen of the Union. The work done thus far by the Convention, satisfies, we believe, this criterion and we wish to congratulate the participants for what has already been achieved.

Mr. President and members of the Convention,

The Republic of Cyprus, has since its establishment 40 years ago, placed the protection of human rights at the center of its polity. The Treaty of Establishment of the Republic of Cyprus, the act of birth of the Republic, states in article 5:

“The Republic of Cyprus shall ensure to everyone within its jurisdiction human rights and fundamental freedoms comparable to those set out in section I of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on the 4th of November, 1950, and the Protocol of that Convention signed at Paris on 20th of March 1952.”

Part II of the Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus, entitled “Fundamental Rights and Liberties” reproduces by and large the provisions of the Convention in the body of the Constitution.

These constitutional provisions are respected by the administration and are fully and directly enforceable before the courts of the Republic. Indeed under the Constitution the legislative, executive and judicial authorities of the Republic are bound to secure the effective application of the said provisions.

Furthermore, Cyprus has ratified not only the European Convention of Human Rights and the Protocols thereof but almost all international legal instruments appertaining to human and social rights, including the European Social Charter, the I.L.O. Convention and the Covenant for Civil and Political Rights.

Our own historical experience has demonstrated and still demonstrates the great importance and usefulness of the regional and universal instruments for the protection of Human Rights. Over the course of years the Republic of Cyprus and its citizens benefited considerably from the provisions of these instruments and the mechanisms established thereby.

In this regard allow me to mention in all humility that the record of compliance of the Republic of Cyprus with the obligations arising from these instruments is impeccable.

It is abundantly clear from the above that the Republic of Cyprus shares the objectives of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the Union and it is our intention to adopt it in the form it will take, following the relevant decision of the European Council. We will do so not only because it will be part of the acquis communautaire with which we will have to harmonize but also because we fully comprehend its overall beneficial effects for Cyprus.

Mr. President,

We have been following closely the proceedings of this Convention and we are aware of the important debates taking place in this body as well as of the different approaches on certain aspects of the Charter. We believe, however, that in the few months of its existence and operation the Convention has already produced very positive and commendable results.

Of particular importance in the context of the deliberations of the Convention is, in our view, the issue of the overall system of the protection of human rights in Europe. We have in our continent, an important and effective system for the protection of Human Rights. We firmly believe that this system should be safeguarded and further strengthened.

We therefore share the position expressed by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe in its resolution of 25 January 2000 (res. 1210) that “It is of vital importance to ensure consistency in the protection afforded to civil and political rights in Europe”.

We trust that this consideration will weigh heavily in the decisions of the Convention. For, we believe that the two instruments could and should be consistent and complementary.

We take stock of the impressive results achieved thus far by the Convention: the identification of the fundamental rights, the way these are formulated and presented, as well as the introduction of a new set of rights, resulting from developments in the fields of science and technology and the general evolution of our societies. We also consider the Convention’s work on social rights, as a solid basis for further development. The inclusion of such rights will be an important move, reflecting the general evolution of the Union in recent years.

POSITION DE LA TURQUIE

- La Turquie se joint à tous les autres candidats pour partager l'objectif d'une Union qui reposera sur les principes de liberté, de démocratie et de respect des droits de l'Homme et des libertés fondamentales, ainsi que sur la notion d'Etat de droit. Les décisions du Sommet d'Helsinki par lesquelles la candidature de la Turquie a été officialisée ont renforcé entre mon pays et l'Union la communauté de destin dont un des piliers est justement la protection et le développement des droits de l'Homme en général.

Nous pensons ainsi que la réalisation d'une Union sans cesse plus étroite entre les peuples de l'Europe, ainsi que le maintien et le développement de l'Union en tant qu'espace de liberté, de sécurité et de justice, devrait avoir comme principe de base le respect, général et non restrictif, de la dignité humaine unique, universelle et inviolable. Dans ce cadre, la Turquie accepte le respect des critères politiques de Copenhague ainsi que la substance de l'Article 6 du Traité de l'Union.

Alors que le volet économique de l'intégration européenne est désormais de plus en plus complété par un volet politique, nous comprenons fort bien les nécessités qui sont à la base de l'élaboration par l'Union européenne d'une Charte des Droits fondamentaux. Pour la même raison, nous soutenons les efforts de l'Union d'améliorer par ce biais les normes liées à la protection et au développement des droits de l'Homme. En effet, cette initiative offre l'occasion d'améliorer la protection des droits de l'Homme dans le cadre même de l'Union.

- Candidate à l'adhésion, la Turquie se réjouit de participer aux réunions successives qui sont organisées pour informer l'ensemble des pays candidats sur les travaux préparatoires à cette Charte. Nous souscrivons par ailleurs à l'appel du Parlement européen du 16 mars dernier, par lequel il propose que l'on accorde aux pays candidats un statut d'observateurs dans le cadre de la Convention chargée de l'élaboration de cette Charte.

Nous avons toutefois certaines préoccupations en ce qui concerne cette initiative de l'Union européenne, que nous soutenons dans l'ensemble. Nous observons d'ailleurs que ces préoccupations sont partagées par certains pays membres de l'Union comme par certains pays candidats. Nous voulons cependant souligner que ces préoccupations ne concernent nullement la nature des droits et libertés qui font l'objet de la Charte, que nous considérons comme une manifestation de la volonté d'intégration politique et juridique au sein de l'Union.

- Il apparaît d'ores et déjà, bien que l'examen des très nombreux amendements à la cinquantaine d'articles définis par la Convention n'ait pas encore abouti, que les droits et libertés fondamentaux énumérés dans la Charte, quoique rédigés d'une manière un peu différente, ressemblent dans une grande mesure aux droits et libertés consignés dans la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme.

- Les préoccupations qui sont les nôtres à cette étape de la Charte sont : d'une part, l'éventuel affaiblissement du système de la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme qui fonctionne de manière très efficace à l'heure actuelle, en créant un système différent. Et d'autre part, l'idée que, de la sorte, on pourrait être amené à penser qu'il existe une volonté de créer en Europe un système qui ait le pas sur un autre système existant. Ceci risquerait de susciter la réapparition des lignes de partage que nous voulons voir disparaître en Europe.

- Cette préoccupation quant à la formation d'une hiérarchie dans le système judiciaire européen a d'ailleurs été évoquée à diverses reprises ces derniers mois devant l'Assemblée parlementaire et au Comité ministériel du Conseil de l'Europe dont la Turquie est membre.

Le Comité ministériel du Conseil de l'Europe a adopté en date du 31 mai dernier le texte de sa réponse à la Recommandation 1439 (2000) de l'Assemblée parlementaire sur la Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne.

- En fait, les préoccupations de la Turquie ont déjà été exprimées par les institutions de l'Union européenne. Ainsi, la Résolution adoptée par le Parlement européen en date du 16 mars 2000 « a souligné que la Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne ne devrait entrer en aucune manière en concurrence avec la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme ».

Ce souhait se trouve également à l'origine de l'invitation à l'Union à adhérer à la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme qui constituerait, d'après le Parlement européen, un pas important vers le renforcement de la protection des droits fondamentaux au sein de l'Union.

Membre du Conseil de l'Europe, la Turquie épouse totalement cette recommandation. Nous estimons en effet que l'Union devrait non seulement adhérer à la Convention européenne, mais également renforcer avec le Conseil de l'Europe sa coopération déjà très étroite, afin d'éviter, par des moyens appropriés, d'éventuels conflits et confusions entre la Cour de Justice des CE et la Cour européenne des droits de l'Homme. Pour l'instant, nous constatons que la question des relations dans ces domaines entre la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme et la Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne n'est pas encore réglée.

- L'examen du projet de la Charte nous semble indiquer que le texte consisterait en une déclaration non contraignante. Le débat au sein de la Convention sur ce point n'étant pas clair, la Turquie continuera à porter un vif intérêt au déroulement des travaux sur ce point précis.

- Enfin, on remarque qu'il n'est fait aucune mention dans le projet de Charte de la position accordée à la Convention européenne et à la Cour européenne des droits de l'Homme. Cependant existe le danger de l'apparition d'importantes divergences de vues quant au mécanisme de contrôle auxquels seront soumis dans l'avenir les pays qui sont à la fois membres de l'Union européenne et du Conseil de l'Europe.

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend einen Beitrag betreffend den Schutz der Privatsphäre, vorgelegt von Herrn Gerhard SCHMID, Mitglied des Europäischen Parlaments. ¹

An den Präsidenten
des Konvents für den Entwurf einer Grundrechtscharta der EU
Herrn Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog
Sécretariat Général du Conseil
Rue de la Loi 175
1048 Bruxelles

Brüssel, den 22. Februar 2000

Betrifft: Schutz der Privatsphäre vor Eingriffen durch die EU-Mitgliedstaaten

Sehr geehrter Herr Präsident, die Verfassungen oder zumindest die abgeleiteten Rechtsordnungen der Mitgliedstaaten schützen ihre Bürger vor einer willkürlichen Verletzung ihrer Privatsphäre durch den Staat. Mitlesen des Briefverkehrs, Abhören von Telefongesprächen sowie das Mitschneiden von Telefax oder e-mail dürfen deshalb nur auf richterliche Anordnung hin vorgenommen werden.

Dieser Schutz entfaltet sich aber für einen Staatsbürger nur gegenüber dem eigenen Staat. Es gibt bisher weder in den Verträgen noch im Sekundärrecht der Europäischen Union Schutzgarantien für den Bürger eines EU-Mitgliedstaates gegen die Verletzung seiner Privatsphäre durch Behörden eines anderen Mitgliedstaates. Der Artikel 6 EU-Vertrag führt jedenfalls nach Auffassung der Europäischen Kommission zu keinem entsprechenden Schutz (siehe Anlage).

Bei dem angesprochenen Problem handelt es sich keineswegs um eine theoretische Überlegung. Nach den dem Europäischen Parlament vorliegenden Informationen beteiligen sich Mitgliedstaaten systematisch durch "Anzapfen" von Fernmeldesatelliten an der Verletzung der Privatsphäre von Staatsangehörigen anderer EU-Staaten.

Unter diesen Umständen möchte ich Sie bitten zu prüfen, ob bei den Arbeiten zur Entwicklung einer Grundrechtscharta der EU das Problem eines Grundrechtsschutzes gegenüber dem Handeln eines anderen EU-Staates, dessen Staatsbürgerschaft man nicht besitzt, mit aufgenommen werden kann.

Dies geht über die Idee eines Grundrechtsschutzes hinsichtlich von Handlungen oder Rechtsakten der Europäischen Union hinaus. Mir erscheint es aber nicht nur wegen des angesprochenen Beispiels notwendig, die Bindungswirkung einer Grundrechtscharta für das Handeln der Mitgliedstaaten zu thematisieren. Auch bisher leiten sich aus den Verträgen schon einige Rechte eines Bürgers gegenüber allen Mitgliedstaaten ab (z.B. kommunales Wahlrecht, Recht auf konsularische Vertretung). Dieser Ansatz sollte ausgeweitet werden.

Es würde mich freuen, wenn Sie meine Anregung aufnehmen könnten.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen
Ihr

SCHRIFTLICHE ANFRAGE E-2167/99

Von Gerhard Schmid (PSE)
An die Kommission
(29.11.1999)

Betrifft: Schutz der Privatsphäre durch Art. 6 EU-Vertrag

Die Verfassungen der Mitgliedstaaten schützen die Bürger vor einer Verletzung ihrer Privatsphäre durch den Staat (Mitlesen des Briefverkehrs, Abhören des Telefons). Eingriffe in die Privatsphäre dürfen deshalb nur unter den strengen Voraussetzungen eines Gesetzes vorgenommen werden.

Schützt die Grundrechtsgarantie in Art. 6 des EU-Vertrages einen Bürger der EU vor einem Eingriff in seine Privatsphäre durch einen anderen Mitgliedstaat als den, dessen Staatsbürger er ist?

E-2167/99DE

Antwort des Herrn Bolkestein
Im Namen der Kommission
(6. Januar 2000)

Artikel 6 des Vertrags über die Europäische Union verlangt von der Union, bei Ausübung ihrer Zuständigkeiten die Grundrechte zu achten.

Dem Schutz der Privatsphäre der Unionsbürger dienen folgende Gemeinschaftsrechtsvorschriften, die sich an die Mitgliedstaaten richten: Richtlinie 95/46/EG des Europäischen Parlaments und des Rates vom 24. Oktober 1995 zum Schutz natürlicher Personen bei der Verarbeitung personenbezogener Daten und zum freien Datenverkehr und Richtlinie 97/66/EG des Europäischen Parlaments und des Rates vom 15. Dezember 1997 über die Verarbeitung personenbezogener Daten und den Schutz der Privatsphäre im Bereich der Telekommunikation.

Ziel dieser Richtlinien ist es, die Rechte und Freiheiten natürlicher Personen bei der Verarbeitung personenbezogener Daten zu schützen. Sie sind daher von Bedeutung für die vom Herrn Abgeordneten angesprochenen Bereiche. Sie gelten grundsätzlich auch für die Verarbeitung personenbezogener Daten durch einen Mitgliedsstaat, wenn die betroffene Person nicht Bürger/in dieses Mitgliedstaats ist. Es ist allerdings zu beachten, dass der Geltungsbereich der Richtlinien auf die Verarbeitung personenbezogener Daten beschränkt ist, die im Rahmen von Tätigkeiten erfolgt, die unter das Gemeinschaftsrecht fallen. Zudem legen beide Richtlinien zur Wahrung bestimmter Interessen Ausnahmen und Einschränkungen fest (vgl. Artikel 13 der Richtlinie 95/46/EG und Artikel 14 der Richtlinie 97/66/EG).

European Charter of Human Rights

The endeavour to achieve respect and protection of fundamental human rights is a never-ending process. Our recent tragic experience with the communist totalitarian system and the continuing struggle with the remnants imprinted by the communist ideology in the minds of people enhance this need in the Slovak Republic. The possibility of participating in the drafting of a new European Charter of Human Rights is a significant appreciation of the progress our country achieved in its preparation for the accession to the European Union.

However, we hold that regardless of the accession date of the Slovak Republic to the European Union the Charter will either directly or indirectly affect the overall atmosphere of the political and civic life and also the quality of inter-personal relations in general. Despite the fact that in the pre-accession period the Charter will be a fundamental political document having a declaratory nature in the associated countries we consider the clear resolution of its legally binding status and its enforceability very important and paramount. It is equally important to clearly define the relation between the Charter and other international instruments on human rights, in particular the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights including its protocols and other instruments adopted by the Council of Europe. These features of the Charter should be clearly declared in its Preamble so that the European Union citizens, whom this Charter should serve, get a clear message of its scope and field of action.

First of all, the Preamble of the Charter should contain a commitment to the natural law origin of human rights by emphasising the perpetuity of equality of people in their dignity and rights, a commitment to the principles of justice, natural justice and fairness. The reasons for this are that the application of strict law without equity law could result in an unfair process and unfair decision-making. The approach taken could be similar to the one in the Preamble to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights:

“...recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.”

The subsequent declarations in the draft of the European Charter Preamble concerning the principles of democracy continue the idea of the recognition of natural dignity of people in a logic way

- “ 1. All public power comes from the people.
2. The union and its bodies are built on the principles of freedom, democracy, respect for human rights, rule of law, principles which are shared by all Member States.”

and they are also reflected in Article 1 of the draft Charter:

“1. Dignity of a human being shall be respected and protected.”

Following this line of thinking, we would also like to recommend that in the provisions on the right to life, the text of Article 2 of the draft Charter be added a paragraph 2 reading “Human life should be protected already before birth.”

Proposals

Article 24. Political Parties

“ Every citizen of the European Union shall have the right to establish a political party at the level of the Union and every person shall have the right to join such party. These political parties shall respect the rights and freedoms guaranteed in and by this Charter.”

shall be added another paragraph banning political parties advocating any form of intolerance, hatred, discrimination or violence.

Article 41 Social Security and Social Assistance

“ 1. Conditions shall be created, in compliance with national regulations of each Member State, for social security providing protection in maternity, sickness, need or old age and in unemployment.”

We suggest to remove the category of “old age” from this provision and to elaborate it in a separate provision in a similar way to e.g. Article 43, which stipulates measures for the integration of disabled people.

3.

We propose to consider the addition of an Article 45 (protection of the environment)

The policy of the Union will be in the direction of preservation and protection of cultural and historic monuments of its Member States.

Observations préliminaires au sujet d'une charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Intervention de M. Jerzy Kranz sous-secrétaire d'Etat au ministère des Affaires étrangères de la République de Pologne

Bruxelles, le 19 juin 2000

1. La Pologne suit avec grand intérêt les travaux sur l'élaboration de la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne. L'initiative en question résulte de façon naturelle du développement de l'Union. En effet, le respect des droits fondamentaux constitue l'un des principes sur lesquels est assise l'Union européenne.

2. La Pologne note avec satisfaction l'initiative d'inviter les candidats à l'adhésion à l'UE à la discussion sur la Charte et elle apprécie la possibilité de présenter à la Convention sa position à ce sujet. Il importe en effet que les pays candidats puissent se prononcer sur certains documents avant qu'ils deviennent membres de l'Union et qu'ils sachent vers quelle Union ils s'orientent.

3. L'initiative de l'Union de créer un catalogue de droits fondamentaux éveille en Pologne un grand intérêt et notamment dans les milieux parlementaires. Il y a quelques semaines que la Commission des affaires étrangères et de l'intégration européenne et la Commission des droits de l'homme et du respect du droit du Sénat polonais a tenu une session consacrée à la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'UE. Plusieurs membres du Parlement ainsi que les représentants du gouvernement, des organisations non gouvernementales et de nombreux experts ont participé à cette réunion.

4. Le besoin de renforcer la protection des droits de l'individu résulte de façon naturelle de l'évolution de l'Union qui, par les arrêts de la Cour de Justice et les amendements aux Traités constitutifs, se réfère aux droits de l'homme, y compris à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme. Ce développement témoigne de l'importance de plus en plus grande du respect des droits fondamentaux dans le système communautaire.

La position de l'Union européenne dans le monde dépend non seulement de sa force économique, mais aussi de son rôle dans la promotion du modèle européen de l'Etat démocratique de droit. La Pologne est profondément attachée à une telle conception de l'intégration européenne.

5. Pour des raisons résultant de son expérience historique, la Pologne soutient l'initiative de créer un catalogue des droits fondamentaux qui exposerait mieux à l'opinion publique cet important aspect du processus d'intégration européenne.

Il est à noter dans ce contexte que la plupart des dispositions prévues par le projet de la Charte figurent dans la nouvelle Constitution de la République de Pologne de 1997. Notre Constitution contient en effet un grand catalogue des droits fondamentaux et libertés (politiques, civils, économiques et sociaux) et, à certains égards, elle assure une protection plus large que celle de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme.

6. La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et sa jurisprudence constituent - comme standard minimum - le fondement de la Charte. Il est néanmoins important que la Charte reflète un standard plus large des droits fondamentaux qui traduirait l'évolution récente dans ce domaine du droit international et du droit constitutionnel des pays européens.

La Pologne soutient l'élargissement - par rapport à la Convention européenne - de la protection de certains droits qui émergent tels que le droit de l'individu à la protection de son identité nationale, ethnique, religieuse ou culturelle; le droit de chacun aux chances égales dans le domaine de l'éducation et de la formation professionnelle; le droit d'accès aux documents; le droit de chaque enfant à être écouté. Bien entendu, le catalogue proposé nécessite encore une discussion approfondie.

Le projet d'article 46 de la Charte prévoit que:

"1. Les dispositions de la présente Charte s'adressent aux institutions et organes de l'Union dans le cadre des attributions qui leur sont conférées par les Traités ainsi qu'aux Etats membres exclusivement dans le champ d'application du droit de l'Union.

2. La présente Charte ne crée aucune compétence ni aucune tâche nouvelle pour la Communauté et pour l'Union ni ne modifie les compétences et tâches définies par les Traités".

Le passage précité témoigne qu'il s'agit en l'occurrence d'une étape transitoire dont le but consiste à prendre en compte certains droits dans la formation et dans l'application du droit communautaire, mais non à octroyer directement des droits individuels.

Pour ce qui est des droits sociaux, ils sont en partie garantis par la Convention européenne ou par les principes (parfois des directives) du droit communautaire. Il reste néanmoins qu'il s'agit en l'occurrence des domaines soumis en principe à la législation nationale. Par conséquent, des modifications importantes en la matière nécessiterait entre autres un nouveau partage des compétences entre l'Union et ses Etat membres (p. ex. en matière de sécurité sociale ou de droit du travail).

Dans ce contexte, il semble pour l'instant préférable de se limiter en matière de droits sociaux aux principes communautaires résultant des Traités et de la jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice, aux principes fondamentaux garantis par les Constitutions des Etats membres (ce qui ne s'assimile pas à l'ensemble des normes nationales) et à certains accords internationaux auxquels ont adhésés les Etats membres.

Il convient cependant de distinguer à cet égard entre les droits - qui peuvent être revendiqués devant les tribunaux - et objectifs à atteindre (y compris leurs coûts financiers), car autrement on risque d'aboutir à un catalogue de vœux pieux.

7. La Charte doit renforcer dans les esprits des citoyens aussi bien les droits de l'homme en vigueur au sein de l'Union européenne que les valeurs sur lesquelles se fondent les droits en question.

A l'heure actuelle, les organes de l'Union ainsi que les organes nationaux agissant dans le cadre du droit communautaire sont obligés de respecter les droit fondamentaux qui découlent de la Convention européenne, du droit communautaire (y compris ses principes généraux) et des principes fondamentaux communs du droit national des Etats membres (art. 6 du Traité de l'UE).

Etant donné plusieurs problèmes d'envergure qu'affronte actuellement l'Union européenne (et notamment la Conférence intergouvernementale), il semble pour l'instant préférable d'élaborer une charte de caractère politique. Une telle charte pourrait constituer une incitation à l'ajustement de la législation communautaire ou nationale. L'application - directe ou indirecte - de la Charte par les organes communautaires permettra d'évaluer avec le temps la valeur de ses dispositions et servirait ainsi d'instrument de vérification. On peut également espérer que l'adoption de la Charte conduise à réduire d'éventuelles différences en matière de standards de protection.

Cette approche politique préliminaire n'exclut pas qu'à l'avenir l'application de la Charte aboutisse dans le cadre du droit communautaire à la naissance des droits ou libertés nouveaux (dont le caractère juridique serait confirmé par la jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice) ou conduise à la révision des Traités. Il ne semble cependant pas que l'Union soit aujourd'hui prête à une telle révision qui supposerait un aménagement de ses compétences et la ratification par les Etats membres.

8. Le fonctionnement des deux systèmes de protection - celui de l'Union et celui de la Convention européenne - s'effectue jusqu'à présent sans difficultés majeures. Le danger de conflit existe, mais il se réduit en partie en raison de la reconnaissance de la Convention européenne comme standard minimum que l'Union européenne est obligée de respecter. L'adoption d'une charte politique des droits fondamentaux ne doit pas être considérée comme un instrument de compétition, mais plutôt comme un élément complémentaire.

Il n'en reste pas moins que des controverses puissent subsister en raison de l'activité des deux cours indépendantes, compétentes pour juger des affaires semblables. Rien n'indique que cette situation change rapidement. Par conséquent; l'application et l'interprétation du droit par la Cour de Luxembourg et par la Cour de Strasbourg exigent une étroite coopération entre les deux instances.

Conclusions:

La Pologne soutient les travaux sur la Charte des droits fondamentaux en tant qu'instrument d'application progressive du droit communautaire. Notre pays désire également être engagé dans le débat approfondi concernant le contenu de la Charte.

La Charte, dont l'adoption est prévue au cours du Conseil européen de Nice, devrait constituer un document qui systématise le droit en vigueur et témoigne en même temps de l'évolution du droit communautaire, de la Convention européenne et de certains autres instruments internationaux auxquels ont adhéré les pays membres.

Le caractère politique de la Charte ne doit pas exclure la transformation, à un stade ultérieur, de certaines de ses dispositions en normes communautaires conventionnelles (introduites dans les Traités).

Statement of the Executive Committee of the Leuenberg Church Fellowship on the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

The Executive Committee of the Leuenberg Church Fellowship, to which 96 Protestant churches in Europe belong on the basis of the Leuenberg Agreement of 1973, dealt with the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (Convent 28) at its meeting held in Belfast from 15 to 18 June 2000. From this place where the task of reconciliation in Europe between humans and confessions is of particular significance, we welcome and support expressly the intention of the European Union to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights by means of a charter. Such a charter will contribute to making tangible a common basis of fundamental human rights.

As representatives of the Leuenberg Church Fellowship we would like to comment on Article 14 (freedom of thought, conscience and religion). We are of the opinion that the freedom of religion should be guaranteed not only at an individual but also at a corporate level. With this in mind, we would like to suggest the following wording:

“Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. The freedom of religion includes the freedom to bear witness in public or private, individually or collectively as well as the right of churches and religious communities to set out their own order and administration within the framework of the laws of the member states”

This wording insures the insertion of the collective freedom of religion and the inclusion of not only individuals but also communities and corporations in the range of influence of the European Union. In addition, it draws upon the decisions of the Human Rights Commission of the Council of Europe, in which churches and religious communities, on their own right, have increasingly been granted the resort to Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

On account of many different regulations regarding the State-Church relations, Article 14 would also have to refer to an inner-state right.

This statement has been made in a close partnership with the statements of the Conference of European Churches (CEC) whose Protestant members also belong to the Leuenberg Church Fellowship, and the Evangelical Church in Germany (EKD), a signatory member of the Leuenberg Agreement.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

COMMENTS BY MEMBER COMPANIES OF THE EUROPEAN STUDY GROUP

The European Study Group is an Association of private sector employers, all of whom are substantial employers in the Member States of the European Union and who, in total, employ over two million people worldwide. The majority, but by no means all, of the Member Companies are FTSE 100 companies based in the United Kingdom.

As leading EU based employers, we are conscious of our social responsibilities. We are also aware that we must operate in a highly competitive global economy. If we fail to continue to act competitively, we put at risk the interests of our employees, our suppliers, our customers and our shareholders.

The Member Companies of the European Study Group welcome the notion of a Charter in principle as it would:–

- raise the status, profile and visibility of human rights within the EU.
- present an opportunity for more open and positive communication between the EU institutions and the ‘ordinary’ people of Europe.
- help strengthen the culture of rights and responsibilities, if properly constructed and presented. make a positive contribution to the citizens of Europe’s understanding of the purpose and values inherent in EU citizenship.
- provide clear indicators to citizens of candidate Member States of their rights and responsibilities as EU citizens.

Ideally the structure and the content would be:

- | | |
|------------|--|
| Structure: | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - clear and simple - consistent and compatible with existing constitutions and legislative frameworks - practical - present a clear statement of common values and responsibilities |
| Content: | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - based on established rights and not political aspirations - robust and acceptable to all EU countries - properly balanced and representative of all groups across the spectrum of society within the EU - respectful of existing cultures - encouraging and not restrictive - able to deliver trust - reasonably deliverable within the overall constraints of other EU objectives |

From the documentation available, the subject of a Charter appears to have generated much controversial debate. Whilst the legal, political and social significance is clearly great, it is felt that the process of the evolution of the Charter is almost as important as the end product.

Because of the expectations that appear to have been raised and because of issues like the relationship of the European Union and its institutions, (particularly with regard to the European Convention of Human Rights) clearly being put back onto the political agenda, we have a number of observations to make and some concerns about which we would welcome clarity. These are outlined below under the headings of purpose, legal certainty, content, implementation plan and detailed observations.

Purpose

The Cologne European Council in June 1999 adopted the decision that:-‘ the protection of fundamental rights is a founding principle of the Union and an indispensable pre-requisite for her legitimacy. The obligation of the Union to respect fundamental rights has been confirmed and defined by the jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice. There appears to be a need at the present stage of the Union’s development to establish a Charter of fundamental rights in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union’s citizens.

The European Council believes that this Charter should contain the fundamental rights and freedoms as well as basic procedural rights guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and derived from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as general principles of community law ...’

We support these basic principles, as defined at the Cologne European Council. However, the present draft Charter still begs confusion despite:

- the Council proposing that the Charter should be a political declaration or a proclamation of existing rights enjoyed by EU citizens under current Treaties, rather than a Legal Charter; and

- the drafting committee being given a mandate to restate present rights with no authority to fill any loopholes or gaps.

Legal Certainty

The European Court of Human Rights (in Strasbourg) was set up by the Council of Europe, under the European Convention of Human Rights in 1950, for jurisdiction over the European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR). All Member States recognise the jurisdiction of this court in human rights cases but are not bound by its decisions.

The ECJ in Luxembourg is the supreme custodian of EU enacted laws and its decisions take precedence over laws or judicial decisions made in Member States. Respect for fundamental rights forms an integral part of the general principles of Community law. For some time now the ECJ has played a key role in identifying and articulating these rights. It has begun to take into account case law from the Strasbourg Court.

Taking this into account, before there is any further debate on content and interpretation of the Charter, it is suggested that its actual purpose and scope should be categorically and explicitly stated, i.e.

is it to be:

- a) a ‘showcase of existing rights’ materialising the governing principles of the Union?

or, is it to be:

- b) an opportunity to rewrite or update existing laws or indeed produce a whole new set of rights that are justiciable in the European Court of Justice (ECJ) and which confer direct and tangible rights/benefits for individuals?

Many would question the purpose of legislating twice for the same objective, even if that is thought acceptable as a legal matter. The avowed intention of the Cologne declaration is that this exercise does not unintentionally result in new laws which all the stakeholders in the EU have not had an opportunity to scrutinise properly. The Member Companies of the European Study Group are firmly of the view that the Charter should be a ‘showcase of existing rights’.

Rights have no value without remedies and the clearer and simpler the processes that accompany those remedies, that avoid duplication of jurisdiction and improve the fairness and efficiency of the system, the greater the impact will be. In practical terms, individuals will measure the success of the Charter by what it actually does for them, so clarity is essential.

Content

The Cologne Council indicated that the Charter would include:-

- rights guaranteed by the ECHR
- rights derived from the constitutional traditions of Member States and reflected in case law
- rights exclusive to Union citizens under the Treaties
- economic and social rights, as contained in the European Social Charter, etc.

The present draft Charter goes a long way towards achieving these aims by creating a broad spectrum of rights and freedoms but the list as it stands calls into question EU competence in certain areas.

Under the Social Chapter subjects such as pay, the right of association, the right to strike and the right to impose lock-out, are formally excluded from legislative procedures. These, along with educational and welfare provision, currently remain the firm responsibility of the Member States.

The Charter will lose its legitimacy if it is used to bypass the existing decision-making processes to give additional competencies and create new rights in these areas. It will also prove to be more difficult to gain consensus on content if policy objectives or political aspirations are translated into rights.

The position of the Member Companies of the European Study Group is that the Charter should be a clear statement of standards that EU citizens enjoy, which would not impose any new legal obligations on Member States. 5

Implementation Plan

The Charter requires a detailed implementation plan to effectively convey the importance of fundamental rights for the citizens of the European Union, and to emphasise the democratic legitimacy of the Charter to the EU's citizens. The debate so far has been somewhat anodyne and is far removed from the awareness of the general public; unless the Charter is properly explained, it can easily be misrepresented by the malicious or hijacked by the mischievous for ulterior political purposes. In either circumstance, the Charter would run the risk of failing in its mission.

Critical to the execution of a successful plan for the Charter's implementation, is that its objectives should be clearly defined, it should be easily understood, and it should deal only with truly fundamental issues; non-core messages will only serve to over-burden the Charter, complicate the objectives, detract from the accurate communication of the Charter's purpose and confuse the focus of the exercise. Whether or not the document should be put to the citizens of all individual Member States for ratification by national vote, conducted by popular referendum,¹ should be considered as part of the overall plan to gain full democratic legitimacy for the Charter at Member State level.

This is a key consideration, given the fact that some Member States intend to put the matter to referendum, and that the absence of a common EU line might become divisive. The sensitivity of properly communicating the importance of EU citizenship and awareness of its purpose and values should not be underestimated. We refer especially to the poor electoral turn-out to the 1999 European Parliament elections, and the question mark which this has posed concerning the democratic deficit which exists between the institutions of the EU and its citizens. In this connection, a proper implementation and communications plan should be budgeted for, as a quintessential element of the strategy for this exercise.

¹ Ireland and Denmark have indicated that a national referendum might be sought. It is important that the Citizens of the EU all feel that they have ownership, and buy into the exercise. The citizens of Member State "X" (which is to the contrary not planning any referendum) might very well feel aggrieved and question the democratic legitimacy of such a document if they know that the citizens of Member State "Y" are going to hold a referendum, whilst they (the citizens of state "X") are being denied this opportunity. This could detract from the whole purpose and value of the exercise, by undermining its perceived democratic legitimacy. However, this does call into question why a referendum is being called by some Member States if the Charter is merely a restatement of rights which are already in existence.

Detailed Observations

Articles 1 to 30

These proposals cover Civil, Political and Citizens' Rights matters on which we offer no specific comment at this time. We consider that as employers, generators of wealth and creators of jobs, our primary area of expertise, in which we are likely to be of most assistance to the work of the Præsidium, is in respect of the proposals for Articles 31 to 50 contained in Convent 34.

Article 31. Social rights and principles

It is important to carry out a full economic impact assessment of the implications of this Article and the subsequent articles dealing with Social and Economic issues. The economic impact assessment should consider the impact of this Article and the following Articles 32-50 (whether legally binding or declaratory) on job creation in the European Union, the impact on Member State public expenditure to implement these requirements, anticipated fiscal measures to pay for these costs, and the consequent impact on the competitiveness of European business in the global market, benchmarked against international companies of other jurisdictions.

Article 32. Freedom to chose an occupation

Should this Article not be balanced by the right of the individual to choose not to engage in an occupation, and also the right of the employer to refuse or to terminate employment in accordance with the national law of the relevant Member State jurisdiction?

Article 33. Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

The Cologne principles state that "In drawing up the Charter, account should be taken of economic and social rights as contained in the European Social Charter and the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Article 136 TEC), insofar as they do not merely establish objectives for action by the Union". Does not the proposal to include this Article conflict with the Cologne principles? This Article deals with a policy proposal that is already under consideration for action by the EU's institutions. The question of employee communications is under discussion by the Council in the context of the Commission's Proposal for a Council Directive establishing a general framework for informing and consulting employees in the European Community, (COM (1998) 612 final). In this context, it should be noted that the questions of subsidiarity, proportionality and economic impact of the Commission's proposal have yet to be examined in detail by the Council.

Article 34. Rights of collective bargaining and action

Does not the proposal to include this Article conflict with the Cologne principles, in that it is a statement of aspirational policy? This is a subject that should be dealt with in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity and is not a matter for determination at EU level. The Charter will be promoted as being something of real significance to the citizens of the EU; it would therefore be counter-productive to attempt to cover political aspirations or statements concerning areas of policy in this document which are already adequately dealt with by alternative processes which respect the principle of subsidiarity where this is appropriate. Would the EU's citizens understand or respect the Charter if it contained promises upon which the EU's institutions cannot deliver?

Article 35. Right to rest periods and annual leaveArticle 36. Safe and healthy working conditions*Article 37. Protection of young people

There are alternative processes in the EU Treaties available to examine the merits of these various propositions and to seek to achieve these objectives, if found to be justified having regard to their economic impact. In accordance with the Cologne principles, these subjects should accordingly be dealt with separately under the Commission's respective action programmes for the policy areas concerned, and not by the Charter.

Article 38. Right to protection in cases of termination of employment

Whilst the Member Companies of the European Study Group are sympathetic to the notion of protection against unfair or wrongful termination of employment, we are clear that there is currently no right at European Union level to such protection. Such protection that exists at national level should remain at national level. In addition, it should be noted that all employers have a right to refuse or terminate employment in accordance with the national law of the Member State concerned.

Article 39. Right to reconcile family and professional life

Although important, this is not a fundamental right. Member State competence is established already in this area. In accordance with the principle of subsidiarity and the Cologne principles, this subject should be dealt with under the respective national social programmes and not by the Charter. At the level of the workplace, the influence of the new economy is in any case already promoting company-based programmes that support work/life balance for employees. The indications are that the number and influence of these programmes will grow in the coming years, particularly in the context of growth in part-time employment and the rise in the number of women at work.

Article 40. Right of migrant workers to equal treatment

This subject is properly a matter for public policy within the Member States. It is not a fundamental right and as such is inappropriate for inclusion in the Charter. Also, the Cologne principles point to national action programmes and not the Charter as the correct context for this issue.

Article 41. Social security and social assistance

The sentiments and aspirations expressed in this article command wide support, but they are misplaced in a Charter of fundamental rights. The accompanying 'statement of reasons' acknowledges that social security and social assistance are implemented in national legislation. As economic and social issues they fall within the policy of each Member State under the principle of subsidiarity.

Article 42. Health protection

Health protection is a matter of public policy and not of fundamental rights under the Charter. To confuse the two, amounts to setting aside the Cologne principles, under which this subject is exclusively linked to public policy at the national level.

Article 43. The disabled

We note the Community has taken on new competence in this sphere under Article 13 of the Treaty, which has our full support. But we are unclear why it is necessary to repeat this as a fundamental right as it would appear to be already adequately provided for.

Article 44. Environmental protection

This provision describes an existing Community obligation. Whilst the objective is admirable, why does it have to be repeated as a fundamental right?

Article 45. Consumer protection

This is not a fundamental right. This is a statement of aspirational policy. It addresses important but non-fundamental areas of public policy relating to consumer affairs. There are alternative processes in the EU Treaties available to examine the merits of these various propositions and to seek to achieve these objectives, if found to be justified having regard to their respective economic impacts. In accordance with the Cologne principles, these subjects should accordingly be dealt with separately under the Commission's respective EU level action programmes for the policy areas concerned, and not by the Charter. Indeed, the competence to legislate under the Treaty in relation to health and safety matters lies exclusively with the Member States. Article 153 is a coordinating measure only. We doubt that it is necessary to repeat existing Treaty law, but if this is to be done, the repetition should be accurate.

Article 46. Scope

This Article states two admirable objectives which the Member Companies of the European Study Group fully support. The draft text of the Charter, as written, appears to contradict the provisions of Article 46 in a number and manner of ways. We hope the final text of the Charter will be in accordance with both Article 46 and the Cologne European Council mandate.

Article 47. Limitation of guaranteed rights

No specific comments.

Article 48. Conditions and limits defined by the Treaty

We support wholeheartedly the comments made in Article 48. (Also, see our comments on Article 46, above.)

Article 49. Level of protection

No specific comment.

Article 50. Prohibition of abuse of rights

No specific comment.

Summary

The Member Companies of the European Study Group welcome and endorse the notion of a Charter which delivers the benefits of visibility, good communications and positive ways of contributing to a strengthening of the culture of rights and responsibilities to be enjoyed by the present and future citizens of the European Union. However, we have certain important questions and concerns:

- Clarity is required about the Charter's purpose and any enforcement measures that may be put in place to deliver the benefits that derive from it. Until these are clarified, employers cannot effectively consider the full implications of the draft Charter and therefore offer fully meaningful feedback.
- We need to know what the status of the Charter is to be. Is it to be a declaratory document or is it to be a legally binding Charter? Either way, we need to know what obligations and responsibilities will be placed on employers to conform and what remedies will it make available to individuals.
- Whatever status the final Charter has, Member Companies of the European Study Group would expect, at the very least, the usual intergovernmental procedures to be followed in adopting the Charter, but with the timescales for adoption extended to allow for detailed consideration of the issues and for effective consultation in the Member States.
- Once adopted, how is the Charter to be implemented and what opportunity will be given to the citizens of the European Union to have a say in its content and status? Will all Member States be encouraged or even required to hold a national referendum on its implementation?
- Finally, with regard to the proposals so far, the Member Companies of the European Study Group seriously question the legitimacy of including Articles 31–45 as these appear to extend the subject areas falling within the competency of the European Union. Therefore we would not expect these particular Articles to appear in the final draft of the Charter that is put forward for adoption.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

COMMENTS AND PROPOSALS BY GESAC

GESAC, a European grouping of authors' and composers' societies in the European Union, Norway and Switzerland, supports the initiative proposed at the European Council in Cologne on 3 and 4 June 1999 concerning the formulation of a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. According to the actual conclusions of the Cologne and Tampere Councils, the aim of the Charter is to enshrine, on the basis of the existing Community legal framework, the exceptional importance and scope of fundamental rights in a visible manner for European Union citizens.

Copyright shares the characteristics of a fundamental right, and must be enshrined in the European Charter.

Copyright protects freedom of expression and of thought of citizens, and guarantees the creation of literary, artistic and scientific works. Emanating from the personality of its author, a work gives rise to a right which has all the attributes of a human right: it is a moral right, inalienable and indefeasible. From the moral point of view, copyright ensures the freedom of representation of the personality of its author.

Copyright is also a property right. A property of a special nature since it is intangible, but it has the same nature and must have the same fate as all other kinds of property. In terms of its pecuniary dimension, copyright guarantees the economic independence that is essential to ensure freedom of expression and of creativity. Copyright is one of the « branches » of freedom of expression and creativity which, through its fundamental and universal dimension, forms part of human rights.

The vocation of copyright is to increase the cultural heritage of the community as a whole. At a time when the wealth of content and of cultural diversity are assets for the European Union and its citizens, and when protecting and promoting them is a major challenge, notably for the harmonious development of the information society, GESAC considers that it is vital to recognise the importance and justification of copyright in a Charter of fundamental rights.

In expressly referring to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, the Treaty on European Union contains the bases for such recognition:

- The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms :

This Convention refers in its preamble to the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights of December 1948, and asks the Member States to « take the first steps for the collective enforcement” of the rights set down in this Declaration.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights explicitly mentions copyright: « Everyone has the right freely to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in scientific advancement and its benefits. Everyone has the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he is the author” (Article 27). This Declaration has no binding legal force, but it indisputably has moral value, which is indirectly binding on the Union since it is one of the texts to which the Treaty refers.

- The common constitutional traditions of the Member States :

Several European Constitutions refer directly or indirectly to the need to protect the rights of artists in order to guarantee freedom of thought and expression. For instance the Constitutions of Spain (Article 20), Portugal (Article 42) and Germany (Article 5). In France the National Advisory Commission on Human Rights issued an opinion on 14 November 1996 on the Internet Charter, in which it expressly referred to the protection conferred by copyright.

GESAC proposes to the Convention that the following provision¹ be included in the text of the Charter:

Article 20: right to property

1. Everyone person has the right to own, use and dispose of lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and in the cases and subject to the conditions provided for by law and subject to a prior guarantee of fair compensation.
2. Everyone has the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he is the author.

1. Der Rechtstext sollte innovativen Charakter erhalten, u.a. indem er ein Recht auf soziale Grundsicherung unabhängig von Erwerbstätigkeit bzw. Versicherungsleistungen aufnimmt. Dadurch würde die Charta im Rahmen der Europäischen Gemeinschaft zur Fortentwicklung des Rechts der sozialen Sicherheit beitragen. Bereits der „Schlußbericht der Kommission an den Rat über das Erste Programm von Modellvorhaben und Modellstudien zur Bekämpfung der Armut“ (1983) nennt ja unter den Schritten zur Beseitigung von Armut die Gewährleistung eines effektiven Mindesteinkommens, um die Haushalte in der Gemeinschaft über der Armutsschwelle zu halten.
Vor allem mit Blick auf neue Technologien und Organisationsformen (Rationalisierung, wachsende Arbeitsproduktivität) und die damit einhergehende Erwerbsarbeitslosigkeit ist ein „Recht auf Arbeit“ nicht ausreichend, sondern müßte durch ein Recht auf soziale Sicherung unabhängig vom Erwerbseinkommen ergänzt werden, um allen Bürgerinnen und Bürgern ein Leben zu ermöglichen, das ihrer Menschenwürde entspricht.
2. Die Erarbeitung einer europäischen Grundrechts-Charta für alle würde die Gelegenheit bieten, daß die Bürgerinnen und Bürger „Europa“ nicht bloß als Wirtschaftsunion, vielmehr als eminent politisches Projekt erfahren – als Gemeinschaft, die für Demokratie, Rechtsstaatlichkeit und Menschenrechte steht. Um einen breiten Diskussionsprozeß über Ziel, Inhalte und Richtung der Charta zu ermöglichen, die das Entstehen einer europäischen Öffentlichkeit fördern würde, sollte die Arbeitszeit an der Charta verlängert werden. Zugleich sollte der Europäische Rat nach Möglichkeiten suchen, wie eine breitere Diskussion in allen Mitgliedsländer unterstützt werden könnte.

3. Weiters unterstützen wir die Forderung des Europäischen Parlaments vom 14. März 2000 nach voller Rechtsverbindlichkeit der Charta durch Aufnahme in die reformierten EU-Verträge.
Ebenso schließen wir uns der Ansicht des Parlaments an, daß die Unteilbarkeit von Grundrechten anerkannt werden muß – der Geltungsbereich der Grundrechte muß sämtliche Institutionen, Organe der Europäischen Union und alle Politikfelder umfassen.
4. Entsprechend des Mandats des Konvents, das der Europäische Rat in den Schlußfolgerungen von Köln am 4. Juni 1999 ausdrücklich erwähnt hat, sollen (über das im Punkt 1 genannte Recht) soziale Rechte in die Charta aufgenommen werden, wie sie in der Europäischen Sozialcharta und der Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer enthalten sind. Dies wäre eine Konsequenz aus der Absichtserklärung der EU im Amsterdamer Vertrag, den sozialen Grundrechten mehr Augenmerk zu schenken (Präambel, vierter Erwähnungsgrund).

PROYECTO DE CARTA DE LOS DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES DE LA UNIÓN EUROPEA

Propuesta de la Sociedad General de Autores y Editores (SGAE)

El 25 aniversario de la Declaración Universal de los Derechos Humanos, celebrado en diciembre de 1998, llevó al Consejo Europeo de Colonia del 3 y 4 de junio de 1999 a proponer, para finales del año 2000, la elaboración de una Carta de los derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea. En su Decisión, el Consejo recuerda que en el artículo 6 del TUE “consta que la Unión se basa en los principios de libertad, democracia, respeto de los derechos humanos y de las libertades fundamentales del Estado de Derecho, principios que son comunes a los Estados miembros” y que “la Unión respetará los derechos fundamentales tal y como se garantizan en el Convenio Europeo para la Protección de los Derechos Humanos y las libertades fundamentales (CEDH) y tal y como resultan de las tradiciones constitucionales comunes a los Estados miembros como principios generales del derecho comunitario”. El Consejo también considera en su decisión que al redactar la Carta deberán tenerse en cuenta “los derechos económicos y sociales, la Carta Social Europea y la Carta comunitaria de los derechos sociales fundamentales de los trabajadores”.

Por todo ello, la SGAE entiende que el derecho de autor debe de formar parte de la futura Carta de derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea y, como representante de parte del colectivo de autores españoles y europeos, solicita a la Convención encargada de redactar dicha Carta que, en base a los argumentos que a continuación se exponen, tenga en consideración su petición.

1. El CEDH en su preámbulo:
 - “Considera la Declaración Universal de los Derechos del Hombre, proclamada por la Asamblea General de las Naciones Unidas el 10 de diciembre de 1948”,
 - Reconoce que el “objetivo del Consejo de Europa es alcanzar una unión más estrecha entre sus miembros y que uno de los medios para conseguirla es mediante la salvaguarda y el desarrollo de los derechos del hombre y de las libertades fundamentales”;
 - Insta a los Estados miembro a "tomar las medidas apropiadas para asegurar la garantía colectiva de algunos de los derechos enunciados en la Declaración Universal de los Derechos del Hombre".

La Declaración Universal de los Derechos del Hombre de 1948 hace referencia de manera explícita al derecho de autor en su artículo 27:

“Toda persona tiene derecho a participar libremente en la vida intelectual de la comunidad, a disfrutar de las artes y a participar en la vida científica y en los beneficios que de él resulten. Toda persona tiene derecho a la protección de los intereses morales y materiales que le correspondan por razón de las producciones científicas, literarias o artísticas de que sea autora”.

Esta Declaración no tiene la fuerza del derecho internacional, pero sí tiene un valor moral. Se considera que forma parte del derecho consuetudinario de las naciones y que vincula moralmente a todos los Estados, sobre todo a aquellos que la firmaron y que firmaron a continuación los dos Pactos de las Naciones Unidas de 16 de diciembre de 1966. De hecho, la obligación legal de respetar el derecho de autor proviene, de uno de esos pactos, el Pacto de Naciones Unidas sobre los Derechos Económicos, Sociales y Culturales, cuyo artículo 15, inciso 1) apartado c) reproduce casi literalmente el artículo 27 de la Declaración. Este Pacto vincula a más de 130 Estados entre los que figuran todos los Estados de la Unión Europea.

Es importante destacar también, como lo ha hecho la Doctrina más especializada ¹, que, si bien el articulado del CEDH no hace alusión expresa al derecho de autor, debe tenerse en cuenta que este Convenio se preocupa fundamentalmente de la protección del ciudadano frente a las intrusiones excesivas del poder público, y que se trata por lo tanto y ante todo, de un texto de “habeas corpus” ampliado. Precisamente en el Borrador de la futura Carta ², el Consejo deja claro que los objetivos de la misma son más amplios, ya que con ella aspira a alcanzar un principio básico de la Unión Europea: “la salvaguardia de los derechos fundamentales”, para lo cual toma como base “un marco jurídico ya establecido y vinculante”.

2. Varias Constituciones europeas hacen referencia de manera directa o indirecta a la necesidad de salvaguardar los derechos de los creadores para garantizar así libertad de pensamiento y de expresión. La Constitución española (artículo 20), la Portuguesa(artículo 42), la alemana (artículo 5) y el artículo 44 de la joven Constitución de la Federación Rusa, nacida en 1993. En Francia, la Comisión Nacional Consultiva de los Derechos del Hombre, en su Opinión de 14 de noviembre de 1996 sobre la “Carta de Internet”, recomendó a los poderes públicos “que favorezcan la protección de los documentos y estudios protegidos por la propiedad intelectual y por los derechos de autor”.
3. Por estos motivos, la SGAE propone a la Convención integrar en en artículo 20 de la Carta la siguiente disposición:

Artículo 20. Derecho de propiedad

1. Toda persona tiene derecho a poseer bienes adquiridos legalmente, a usarlos y a disponer de ellos. Nadie puede ser privado de su propiedad, salvo por causa de utilidad pública y en los casos y condiciones previstos por la Ley y a cambio de una justa indemnización previa.
2. Toda persona tiene derecho a la protección legal de sus intereses morales y materiales en razón de las producciones científicas, literarias o artísticas de las que es autor.

407 international non-governmental organisations representing,
in the 41-nation Council of Europe, all aspects of life and tens of millions of people

The international non-governmental organisations meeting on 27 June at the Palais d'Europe in Strasbourg unanimously call on the Convention drawing up the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and the member states which shall be deciding upon it, to ensure that:

1. the principle of solidarity be included at the beginning of the Charter on a par with the principle of equality and the affirmation of the dignity of the human being;
2. the indivisibility of human rights be confirmed by the contents of the Charter and expressed in its structure, and that the universality of these economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights be acknowledged;
3. the European Union accede to the two Council of Europe instruments which implement the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, namely the European Convention on Human Rights and the revised European Social Charter, including their additional protocols;
4. the Charter of Fundamental Rights be incorporated into the treaties of the European Union, thereby acquiring a binding force;
5. the new risks and needs concerning protection of citizens in our society be covered by the Charter, including in the field of bioethics, the environment and information technology;
6. the principle of participatory democracy be strengthened in the Charter by including recognition of the right to civil dialogue granting organised civil society the right to information, communication and consultation in order to participate, propose, negotiate and verify political processes.

The INGOs having consultative status with the Council of Europe call for the opening of a transparent, democratic and participatory process on the future constitution of the European Union, independently of the drafting of the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

IG-Medien-Vorschlag für ein Europäisches Grundrecht der Medien-, Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit in der
Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Die IG Medien – Druck und Papier, Publizistik und Kunst (IG Medien) ist eine Organisation für Medienschaffende sowie Künstlerinnen und Künstler aller Sparten. Seit ihrer Gründung setzt sie sich, wie bereits ihre Vorläuferorganisationen, nicht nur für die unmittelbaren wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Rechte ihrer Mitglieder ein, sondern darüber hinaus auch für die Medien-, Informations- und Meinungsfreiheit als unverzichtbare Grundlage demokratischer Verfassungsstrukturen.

In der Diskussion um den Vorschlag des Grundrechtskonvents um ein Grundrecht auf Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit sieht die IG Medien die Chance „ein Mediengrundrecht als künftiges genuines EU-Grundrecht“ neu zu konzipieren und „auf eine supranationale konstitutionelle Weiterentwicklung der Union“ zuzuschneiden.

Die IG Medien ist der Auffassung, dass es höchste Zeit ist, die Diskussion über EU-Kommunikationsgrundrechte medienpezifisch zu vertiefen und zu verbreitern. Dies kann letztlich auch dazu dienen, den europäischen Integrationsprozeß voranzubringen und zu intensivieren.

Den Medien und insbesondere dem öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunk kommt hierbei im Sinne eines wirklichen „public service“ eine besondere Bedeutung zu. Nachdrücklich ist auf das Protokoll zum Vertrag von Amsterdam und die Position des Ministerrates zu verweisen. Dort wird zu Recht festgestellt, „daß der öffentlichrechtliche Rundfunk mit seinen kulturellen, sozialen und demokratischen Aufgaben, die er zum Wohle der Allgemeinheit erfüllt, von entscheidender Bedeutung für Demokratie, Pluralismus, sozialen Zusammenhalt, kulturelle und sprachliche Vielfalt ist“ (Entschließung des EU-Ministerrats und des Europäischen Rats über den öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunk vom 25.1.1999, Amtsblatt der EG Nr. C 30 vom 5.2.1999, S. 1).

Die IG Medien bezieht sich in diesem Zusammenhang auf Positionen und Stellungnahmen namhafter Medienwissenschaftler und Verfassungsrechtler (u.a. Professor Martin Stock), dass ein Grundrechtsverständnis, das gemäß Art. 10 der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention (EMRK) argumentiert, den Anforderungen an ein zukunftsfähiges Rundfunk- und Medienrecht nicht gerecht wird.

Die IG Medien schlägt daher folgende Fassung für den Art. 15 der Grundrechtscharta vor:

- (1) Das Recht der freien Meinungsäußerung wird gewährleistet. Ebenso wird das Recht gewährleistet, sich aus allgemein zugänglichen Quellen umfassend zu informieren. Dies schließt insbesondere den Zugang zu kulturellen Angeboten und Angeboten der Bildung ein.
- (2) Die Freiheit der Presse, des Rundfunks, des Films sowie der sonstigen an die Allgemeinheit gerichteten Kommunikation wird gewährleistet.
- (3) Der Rundfunk dient der Information durch umfassende und wahrheitsgemäße Berichterstattung und durch die Verbreitung von Meinungen. Er trägt zur Bildung und Unterhaltung bei. Er ist Medium und Faktor des Prozesses freier Meinungsbildung. Er trägt der kulturellen Vielfalt in Europa Rechnung und fördert die europäische Integration. Er nimmt damit eine öffentliche Aufgabe wahr und ist darum unabhängig in der Programmgestaltung. Unbeschadet des Angebots privatwirtschaftlichen Rundfunks, werden Bestand und Entwicklung von Rundfunk in öffentlicher Trägerschaft gewährleistet.“
- (4) Auf rundfunkähnliche Mediendienste sind diese Bestimmungen entsprechend anzuwenden.
- (5) Eine Zensur findet nicht statt.“

Re: Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (Doc. 4360/00)

Dear Mr President,

COPA follows with great interest the work of the Convention on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

The Charter will create an undeniable basis for the further development of the European Union.

It is evident that the Charter is of fundamental importance for those citizens working in European agriculture. Of special importance is the protection of property of the most important means of production, i.e. the land.

However, we would like to express basic reservations on the current draft of Article 20.

1. „Lawfully acquired possessions“.

COPA considers that the words “lawfully acquired” should be deleted.

We are of the opinion that property is basically lawfully acquired. The wording “lawfully acquired” possessions means that the Convention assumes that property is usually not “lawfully” acquired. In any case, the wording “lawfully acquired” substantially restricts the protection of property. The fulfilment of this condition could only be evidenced with much difficulty (e.g. long dated acquisitions).

Therefore, COPA considers that the protection of property shall not be subject to this restriction.

2. Restriction of possession, use and disposal

COPA requests to add after the word „deprived“ in sentence 2, 1 the words „or restricted“.

Restricting the possession, use of property and disposal thereof will affect the core area of property.
This kind of restriction must be fully compensated.

3. Bequeathing

COPA supports the proposal of the Praesidium of the Convention to add the right to bequeath to Article 20.

The right to bequeath is an essential part of property in all legal systems.

4. „Fair compensation “

COPA considers that the word “fair” in the second sentence should be replaced by the words “prior and full”.

The withdrawal of property can only be operated in return for prior and full compensation. The wording “fair” gives cause to concern that possibly a lower compensation could be sufficient. Prior payment of compensation at the time of withdrawal of property is indispensable.

Therefore, COPA proposes the following text:

Article 20: Right to property

“Every person has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath possessions. No one may be deprived or restricted of his possessions, except in the public interest in the cases and subject to the conditions provided for by law and subject to prior and full compensation.”

COPA trusts that you will take due account of the these considerations

Yours sincerely,

Noël DEVISCH
President of COPA

The EU Charter on Fundamental Rights

At the meeting in Cologne, the European Council resolved to draw up a Charter on fundamental rights for EU citizens. Work on drawing up a proposition is in progress within the so called Convention framework, comprising representatives of the governments and parliaments of the member states and from the European Parliament and the European Commission. The regulations are designed to apply to EU authorities and to official decisions based on European Community law.

The decision to draw up the Charter has generated intensive discussion, both within EU institutions and other European and national bodies. Common to most are far-reaching demands to create EU level guarantees for both basic human rights and cultural and individual rights, social rights e.g. rights to housing, social security, medical support and health protection, labour legislation and civil and political rights. Guarantees to be implemented by citizens being able to uphold their rights in the European Court of Justice.

The Boards of the two associations take note of the wide unity prevailing amongst EU member states over the need to clarify how the European Community protects and watches over fundamental rights. In efforts to establish more solid foundations for the Community it is necessary to explain to citizens the added value the Community can give them at this fundamental level.

It is both natural and urgently necessary for the EU to codify and clarify the human and civil rights pertaining to EU legislation in the Charter. According to the instructions issued for this work, it shall be established how the Charter is to relate to the Council of Europe Convention on human and social rights.

The conviction of the two Boards is that a EU Charter on fundamental rights must respect and take into consideration the division of competence reigning between member states and the EU but also the part played by municipalities and regions in national political systems. The rights that should be granted all EU citizens are already law in most member states, either by national constitution or via Council of Europe treaties on human and social rights.

In Sweden, local self-government is firmly established in the political system. In the other EU countries, a high level of self-government at sub-national level is also a central component in the democratic system.

The two Boards find that the draft texts now being promoted and proposed to the Convention include proposals for providing detailed determination of individual rights in e.g. the social sphere to which EU citizens are to be entitled at EU level. As representatives for local and regional authorities we strongly advocate a restrictive policy against opening up opportunities for the European Court of Justice to review in detail political decisions taken within the framework of local self-government and complying with the laws of a member state.

An important principle in regard to individual rights over and above fundamental civil rights enshrined in the Swedish Constitution is that those who decide over rights carry responsibility for the financing of the execution of such rights. In Sweden, most of this responsibility lies with the municipalities and / or county councils. Another requirement is that decisions on the modalities of service provision rests with those who decide upon rights. In Sweden this obligation usually falls upon municipalities or county councils. A third requirement in our country is for judicial reviews of decisions on beneficial rights to be restricted to legal requirements whereas issues within the discretion of local authorities cannot be challenged in the Courts. A fourth principle is that it must be possible to insist on elected decision makers assuming their political responsibilities.

It is important to make clear that the Charter on fundamental rights which is finally adopted is subject to EU authority and, to the extent that it is relevant to the area with shared competence between the EU and its member states. It is also made clear that the subsidiarity principle is to dictate the division of authority between different levels - that authority is to be placed at the lowest effective level. This principle should apply to both division of authority between the EU and member countries and to national division on executive levels. It will accordingly be the national delegation of responsibility which applies and which determines where and how citizens are to be able to demand their more exact political, economic and social rights - alongside the fundamental rights written into the EU treaties.

The value of municipal and regional self-government through communes and county councils is recognised and established throughout Europe, as can be seen from the fact that the Council of Europe Charter on local self-government has been ratified by the great majority of EU member states. Principally, local self-government is of very real importance to the private individual, providing opportunities to exert political influence in close dialogue with elected representatives. In order to emphasise that local self-government contains its own status as a civil right, this should be written into a future treaty.

To sum up the two Boards recognise the value of civil and human rights being codified and written into the Charter now in preparation, but do not consider that this text should open up for an extension of EU authority by judicial interpretation of the Court within the social areas as described in this memorandum.

Asunto: Proyecto de Carta de derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea

EL DERECHO DE PETICIÓN EN LA UNION EUROPEA. LOS SUJETOS PASIVOS DEL MISMO: PROBLEMA MAL RESUELTO Y AUN ABIERTO.

Isaac Ibáñez García

I.- INTRODUCCION. CONSIDERACIONES PRELIMINARES.

En el Consejo Europeo de Colonia (3 y 4 de junio de 1.999) los Jefes de Estado o de Gobierno, se pusieron de acuerdo sobre la idea de que, en el actual estado de evolución de la Unión, era necesario establecer una Carta de los derechos fundamentales con el fin de poner de manifiesto la importancia sobresaliente y el alcance de los mismos ante los ciudadanos de la Unión.

La Carta se adoptaría mediante una declaración solemne y conjunta del Consejo Europeo, el Parlamento Europeo y la Comisión. El antecedente a esta declaración es la Declaración conjunta del Parlamento Europeo, del Consejo y de la Comisión, de 5 de abril de 1.977 (recogida en la obra: Derecho Comunitario Europeo. Libertades económicas y derechos fundamentales. LOPEZ GARRIDO, MARTINEZ HIGUERAS y HERNÁNDEZ F. DEL VALLE. Tecnos, 1986. Donde también se recogen otros textos y trabajos relativos al devenir del tema de los derechos fundamentales en las Comunidades Europeas). El breve texto de la Declaración fue el siguiente:

“1) El Parlamento Europeo, el Consejo y la Comisión subrayan la esencial importancia que atribuyen al respeto de los derechos fundamentales, que resultan en concreto de las Constituciones de los Estados miembros, así como del Convenio Europeo de Protección de los Derechos del Hombre y de las Libertades Fundamentales.

2) En el ejercicio de sus poderes y persiguiendo los objetivos de la Comunidad Europea, respetan y continuarán respetando tales derechos”.

En una fase posterior a este proceso el Consejo manifiesta que se examinaría si la Carta debe incorporarse a los Tratados y, en caso afirmativo, de qué modo ha de hacerse. En su Resolución adoptada el 16 de marzo de 2000 (Informe de los Sres. Duff y Voggenhuber), el Parlamento Europeo pide a la Conferencia Intergubernamental que:

“a) incluya en su orden del día la incorporación al Tratado de la Unión Europea de la Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales, teniendo en cuenta el papel fundamental que juega en la realización de una Unión cada vez más estrecha entre los pueblos de Europa”.

El Consejo ha estimado que dicha Carta deberá incluir los derechos de libertad e igualdad y los principios procesales fundamentales. La carta deberá contener asimismo los derechos básicos que corresponden únicamente a los ciudadanos de la Unión.

Para MENDEZ DE VIGO (Presidente de la Delegación del Parlamento Europeo en la Convención encargada de redactar la Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales), “la elaboración de una Carta de esta naturaleza supone el reconocimiento del carácter político de la Unión”. En su discurso en la primera reunión de la Convención para la elaboración de la Carta, celebrada el 17 de diciembre de 1999, manifestó el deseo de que “la Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales debe tener carácter vinculante y debe ser incorporada al Tratado. En la medida en que los Tratados constituyen la Carta Constitucional de la Unión Europea, según reiterada jurisprudencia del Tribunal de Justicia, la Carta de Derechos Fundamentales debe formar parte de la misma. Y pienso que la coincidencia temporal entre el final de nuestros trabajos y de la Conferencia Intergubernamental es una buena ocasión para cumplir con ese objetivo”.

Esta opinión es coincidente con la manifestada en el Informe del grupo de expertos sobre derechos fundamentales (Afirmación de los derechos fundamentales en la Unión Europea. Ha llegado el momento de actuar. Febrero 1.999), donde puede leerse: “El texto con la enumeración de los derechos debería introducirse en una parte especial o en un título particular de los Tratados. El lugar elegido deberá ilustrar claramente la importancia capital que se concede a los derechos fundamentales”.

El representante único de la Comisión en la Convención, ANTONIO VITORINO, en su discurso en la primera reunión de la Convención, manifestó que “La Comisión se felicita por la transparencia conferida a los trabajos de este órgano: la redacción de un acto de tal importancia práctica e incluso simbólica no estaría en consonancia con el secretismo y la confidencialidad; la transmisión de los debates y, en especial, la disponibilidad de todos los documentos de trabajo en el sitio Internet dedicado a este órgano son ejemplos loables que deberían seguirse en otras ocasiones”.

II.- EL DERECHO DE PETICIÓN EN LA UNION EUROPEA.

En mi opinión, el artículo 21 del Tratado CE, en su redacción dada por el Tratado de Ámsterdam, supone un avance sobre su regulación anterior, pero tiene una redacción confusa, que puede llegar a ser interpretada como que el Derecho de petición únicamente puede ejercitarse ante el Parlamento Europeo y no ante el resto de las instituciones u organismos de la Unión. De hecho así ha llegado a interpretarse por alguna.

Así, ante una petición formulada en el año 2.000 ante el Consejo de la Unión Europea, un funcionario del mismo contestó lo siguiente: “El artículo 21 TCE reconoce el derecho de petición ante el Parlamento Europeo y no ante el Consejo”. Planteada esta cuestión al Defensor del Pueblo Europeo como un caso de mala administración, este contestó que no se trata de un caso de mala administración, “sino de una actuación de carácter político del Consejo de la Unión Europea”, por lo que el Defensor dice no tener competencia para tramitar la reclamación. A nuestro juicio, el Defensor debería haberse planteado el estudio de la reclamación en otros términos. En efecto, primero debería haber analizado si el artículo 21 del TCE reconoce el ejercicio del derecho de petición ante el Consejo. De ser así es claro que estaríamos ante un caso de mala administración. La actuación del Consejo sería de carácter político en lo relativo a la decisión sobre el fondo de la petición, pero no sobre la negativa de tramitarla, en caso de que estuviera obligado a ello. La simple negativa de la Comisión de peticiones del Parlamento Europeo a examinar una petición relativa a un ámbito de actuación de la Unión Europea ¿sería un acto político no fiscalizable por el Defensor?.

El Defensor del Pueblo contesta posteriormente que:

“... No se recoge en el Tratado de la Unión Europea la obligación por parte del Consejo de la Unión Europea de aceptar a trámite una petición proveniente de un particular.

En este sentido, el artículo 21 del TUE, habla del derecho de petición ante el Parlamento Europeo de todo ciudadano. Además, en su tercer párrafo: “Todo ciudadano de la Unión podrá dirigirse por escrito a cualquiera de las instituciones (...) y recibir una contestación en esa misma lengua”. En tanto que usted recibió respuesta del Consejo de la Unión Europea, no considero que se haya violado la letra del Tratado en ningún sentido”.

No acabamos de entender si la reforma operada en el artículo 21 del TUE se refiere únicamente –y para ello es necesario reconocer lo obvio a nivel de todo un Tratado- a que si algún ciudadano cursa un escrito a alguna de las instituciones de la Unión Europea, relativo a algún asunto de la competencia de las mismas, tiene garantizado que se le contestará en alguna de las lenguas oficiales, aunque sea para decirle, simplemente, que le saludan muy atentamente y que, en el derecho comunitario actual, esta es contestación más que suficiente.

En el Glosario incluido en la página web de la Comisión Europea (sitio: Europa en directo, diálogo con los ciudadanos y las empresas), puede leerse lo siguiente acerca del Derecho de Petición:

“Por derecho de petición se entiende el derecho de todo ciudadano de la Unión Europea y de toda persona física o moral residente o con su sede estatutaria en un Estado miembro de presentar ante el Parlamento una queja o demanda sobre un asunto de la competencia de la Comunidad que le afecte directamente (artículos 21 y 194, ex artículos 8 D y 138 D del Tratado CE).

La Comisión parlamentaria de peticiones estudia la admisibilidad de la demanda y, si lo juzga necesario, puede someter la cuestión al Defensor del Pueblo. Para emitir un dictamen sobre una petición admisible, dicha Comisión puede solicitar a la Comisión Europea que le remita los documentos o la información necesarios.

El Tratado de Ámsterdam ha completado el artículo 21. Un nuevo párrafo precisa que todo ciudadano de la Unión puede escribir a cualquier Institución europea, al Comité de las Regiones, al Comité Económico y Social o al Defensor del Pueblo europeo, en cualquiera de las lenguas oficiales de la Unión, incluido el gaélico, y recibir una respuesta en la misma lengua”.

No se desprende gran claridad de ideas, sobre este tema, en la siguiente opinión de una Dirección General de la Comisión Europea, manifestada en abril de 2.000:

“Me permito indicarle que el derecho de petición al que usted alude en reiteradas ocasiones, (art. 21.1 TCE) se refiere únicamente a las relaciones entre los ciudadanos europeos y el Parlamento

Europeo, institución europea que, a estos efectos, cuenta con una Comisión de Peticiones ad hoc. Igualmente, me permito señalarle que según el art. 21.3 del TCE, la obligación de la Comisión con relación a las preguntas o ruegos de sus ciudadanos, se limita, tal y como recoge el citado precepto, a dar respuesta al escrito recibido en la misma lengua, siempre que ésta se encuentre dentro de las mencionadas en el art. 314 TCE”.

A mi juicio, restringir el ejercicio de petición al Parlamento Europeo no tiene sentido jurídico, pues las peticiones deben poder dirigirse a todas aquellas instituciones que tienen poder de iniciativa en los ámbitos de actuación de la Unión.

ALVAREZ CARREÑO (El Derecho de petición. Estudio de los sistemas español, italiano, alemán, comunitario y estadounidense. Ed. Comares, 1999) señala, con gran acierto, que “un elemento esencial del derecho de petición lo constituye, por tanto, el acceso del individuo a todas las instancias del poder público sin obstáculos, de forma directa y sin limitaciones temáticas”. Refiriéndose al caso alemán, este autor subraya que “el artículo 17 de la Constitución establece que serán destinatarios del derecho de petición, aparte de la representación popular, “los órganos competentes”. De este modo, el constituyente alemán se apartó conscientemente de una concepción exclusivamente parlamentaria del derecho para entender que éste también promueve y garantiza el acceso directo del ciudadano a las instancias de otros poderes públicos”.

Es obvio que esto debe de ser así y que no tiene más vuelta de hoja. Sería incongruente que un peticionario debiera dirigirse a una cámara parlamentaria para solicitar que se adoptara una medida a través de un reglamento, pareciendo a todas luces más conveniente que pueda dirigirse desde un primer momento a quien tiene la potestad reglamentaria, el Gobierno.

En el documento de trabajo “nuevos derechos que hay que incluir en una lista de Derechos Fundamentales”, de fecha 23 de agosto de 1.988, redactado por el eurodiputado VALVERDE LOPEZ, se preguntaba: ¿habría que plantearse una fórmula más amplia que englobe al resto de las instituciones?. Y se proponía la siguiente redacción del derecho:

[“Todo ciudadano de la Comunidad] [y cualquier otra persona física o jurídica que actúe en el territorio de la Comunidad Europea] tendrá derecho a presentar bien a título individual o bien en asociación con otros ciudadanos, solicitudes o quejas [a las instituciones] de la Comunidad. Las peticiones se habrán de dirigir al Parlamento Europeo. [Los peticionarios tendrán derecho a respuesta en un plazo máximo de tres meses”].

En dicho documento, en el apartado de derecho comparado, se observa que en los Estados integrantes de la Comunidad Europea, el derecho de petición no se ejercita exclusivamente ante el Parlamento nacional, sino que también puede ejercitarse ante la Corona, autoridades públicas, órganos constitucionales, etc.

En la resolución de 10 de octubre de 1.986, el Parlamento Europeo “desea una “legislación comunitaria efectiva y obligatoria” para “reforzar el derecho de los ciudadanos y demás personas físicas y jurídicas que actúan en el territorio de la Comunidad, a presentar peticiones a las Instituciones Comunitarias a través del Parlamento Europeo”.

A mi juicio, la petición ha de poder presentarse directamente ante la Institución que tenga competencia y poder de iniciativa sobre el asunto planteado.

En el proyecto de Constitución Europea (Resolución del Pleno del Parlamento Europeo de 10 de febrero de 1.994) se incluye un catálogo de derechos humanos, que según el artículo 7 del proyecto se respetarán en los ámbitos en los que se aplique el Derecho de la Unión. La redacción del derecho nº 20 es la siguiente:

“Toda persona tiene derecho a presentar peticiones o reclamaciones por escrito a los poderes públicos, que están obligados a dar respuesta a las mismas”.

Asimismo, el inciso “que le afecte directamente” incluido en el artículo 194 del Tratado CE, supone desconocer el Derecho de petición como un derecho de carácter fundamentalmente político (vid. Derecho de petición y derecho de queja. I. Ibáñez García. Ed. Dykinson. Madrid, 1993). De hecho, la Comisión de peticiones del Parlamento Europeo ha llegado a interpretar este inciso de forma contraria a su interpretación literal, con el fin de no restringir la utilización del propio Derecho. CHUECA SANCHO (Derecho de petición al Parlamento Europeo y déficit democrático de la Unión Europea. Noticias de la Unión Europea, nº 137, junio 1996), ha escrito que el Parlamento Europeo examina las peticiones ratione materiae y no ratione personae.

El artículo 8 D del Tratado CE, en su redacción dada por el Tratado de Maastricht, era del siguiente tenor:

“Todo ciudadano de la Unión tendrá el derecho de petición ante el Parlamento Europeo, de conformidad con lo dispuesto en el artículo 138 D.

Todo ciudadano de la Unión podrá dirigirse al Defensor del Pueblo instituido en virtud de lo dispuesto en el artículo 138 E”.

Al antiguo artículo 8 D del Tratado CE (ahora artículo 21), el Tratado de Amsterdam ha añadido un importante tercer párrafo:

“Todo ciudadano de la Unión podrá dirigirse por escrito a cualquiera de las instituciones u organismos contemplados en el presente artículo o en el artículo 7 en una de las lenguas mencionadas en el artículo 314 y recibir una contestación en esa misma lengua”.

Se amplía así el derecho de petición originariamente reconocido ante el Parlamento Europeo y el Defensor del Pueblo (en este caso, rectius, derecho de queja o reclamación), al resto de las instituciones y organismos de la Unión, es decir, puede ejercitarse tal derecho, además, ante el Consejo, la Comisión, el Tribunal de Justicia, el Tribunal de Cuentas, el Comité Económico y Social y el Comité de las Regiones.

De la Resolución del Parlamento Europeo sobre las deliberaciones de la Comisión de Peticiones durante el año parlamentario 1998-1.999 y del Informe de dicha Comisión sobre sus deliberaciones en citado año parlamentario, pueden destacarse las siguientes apreciaciones:

- Considerando que el derecho de petición impone al Parlamento Europeo la correspondiente obligación de tramitar las peticiones de la forma más efectiva posible, con la asistencia de la Comisión y de los órganos competentes del Parlamento.
- Subraya que el derecho de petición aumenta las posibilidades de los ciudadanos de la Unión en cuanto a la participación e información democráticas...

- Destaca que es el Parlamento en su conjunto quien, debido a su propia función y responsabilidad política, garantiza en una respuesta directa al ciudadano el derecho de petición reconocido en el Tratado de la Unión Europea.
- Las cifras demuestran que los ciudadanos recurren con frecuencia a su derecho de petición, gratuito para ellos y que puede referirse a todos los asuntos comunitarios que incidan en el ámbito de actividades de la Unión Europea.
- Las peticiones tienen una importante función en la detección y tramitación de casos de infracción.
- Las peticiones se pueden transmitir (por la Comisión de Peticiones) a otra comisión o delegación de acuerdo con los procedimientos establecidos, “para información”, “para actuación”, para que se tengan en cuenta en el examen de cualquier propuesta legislativa relacionada, o “para opinión”, único caso en que cabe exigir una respuesta escrita de la comisión de que se trate.

El Informe de 6 de mayo de 1.988 de la Dirección General de Estudios del Parlamento Europeo, concluye:

“El derecho de petición se considera en todos los países europeos como una característica esencial del Estado de Derecho. Con frecuencia, este derecho tiene un efecto preventivo. En los países en los que desempeña un papel más importante, este hecho tiene como consecuencia que el parlamento sea informado más detalladamente de las preocupaciones y de las opiniones de los ciudadanos y que, de este modo, pueda satisfacer de forma más eficaz su misión de órgano de control del ejecutivo. De la función del derecho de petición como instrumento político podrían derivarse consecuencias para un parlamento en forma de la aprobación o la modificación de leyes”.

La Comisión Europea, en su segundo informe sobre la ciudadanía de la Unión, de 27 de mayo de 1.997, considera que las peticiones constituyen una medida extrajudicial de protección de los derechos individuales y colectivos, a disposición de toda persona residente en la Unión; señalando que a través de las peticiones la Comisión ha abierto diversos procedimientos de infracción contra Estados miembros por violación del Derecho comunitario.

De las palabras de BENJAMIN CONSTANT, en su famosa conferencia de 1819 De la liberté de les modernes comparée avec celle des anciens (recogidas por el profesor GARCIA DE ENTERRIA en su obra: Justicia y seguridad jurídica en un mundo de leyes desbocadas. Civitas, 1999) se ve como el derecho de petición es un instrumento al servicio de la libertad:

“Preguntaos primero, señores, lo que en nuestros días un inglés, un francés, un habitante de los Estados Unidos de América entienden por la palabra libertad. Es para cada uno el derecho de no estar sometido más que a leyes, de no poder ser detenido, ni llevado a prisión, ni condenado a muerte ni maltratado de ninguna manera por el efecto de la voluntad arbitraria de uno o varios individuos. Es para cada uno el derecho de decir su opinión, de escoger su trabajo y de ejercerlo; de disponer de su propiedad, incluso de abusar de ella; de ir y venir sin necesidad de obtener un permiso y sin tener que dar cuenta de sus motivos o de sus pasos. Es, para cada uno, el derecho de reunirse con otros individuos, sea para tratar de sus propios intereses, sea para profesar el culto que él y sus asociados prefieran, sea, simplemente, para llenar sus días y sus horas de la manera más conforme a sus inclinaciones, a sus fantasías. En fin, es el derecho para cada uno de influir sobre la administración del gobierno, bien por el nombramiento de todos o de ciertos funcionarios, bien por exposiciones, peticiones, demandas que la autoridad esté más o menos obligada a tomar en consideración”.

III.- PROPUESTA A LA CONVENCION.

A continuación se transcribe la propuesta que formulamos con fecha 31 de marzo de 2.000 a la Convención encargada de elaborar la Carta de los Derechos fundamentales (CHARTE 4217/00. CONTRIB 93. Página web del Consejo):

“”A nuestro juicio, el Derecho de Petición debe ser incorporado a la Carta de derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea; con una redacción que posibilitara una recta interpretación del Derecho reconocido en el Tratado y que, en su momento –si decide incorporarse el contenido de la Carta a los Tratados- mejorara la redacción de los mismos.

Una posible redacción a incorporar a la Carta sería la siguiente:

“Cualquier ciudadano de la Unión, así como cualquier persona física o jurídica que resida o tenga su domicilio social en un Estado miembro, tendrá derecho a presentar ante las instituciones u organismos contemplados en los Tratados, individualmente o asociado con otros ciudadanos o personas, una petición sobre un asunto propio de los ámbitos de actuación de la Unión Europea. El peticionario tiene derecho a recibir una contestación motivada sobre el fondo del asunto planteado en el más breve plazo posible”.

Asimismo, considero que debería recogerse en la Carta el derecho a presentar quejas ante el Defensor del Pueblo Europeo.””

IV.- AVATARES DE LA CONCRECIÓN DEL DERECHO DE PETICIÓN EN LA CARTA DE LOS DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES.

En la propuesta de artículos sobre los derechos del ciudadano, de 20 de marzo de 2.000, el artículo que reconoce el Derecho de petición se redacta como sigue:

“Todo ciudadano de la Unión y toda persona que resida en el territorio de un Estado miembro tiene derecho de petición ante el Parlamento Europeo, en las condiciones definidas por el Tratado constitutivo de la Comunidad Europea”.

Se limita, por tanto, a reenviar el reconocimiento del Derecho a lo dispuesto en el Tratado. Esta técnica de reenvío es la tónica en buena parte de los artículos que se redactan en dicha propuesta.

De forma errónea, a mi juicio, dentro del reconocimiento del “derecho a una buena administración (relaciones con la Administración)”, se incluye el siguiente párrafo:

“Todo ciudadano podrá dirigirse a las instituciones y órganos de la Unión en una de las lenguas oficiales de la Unión, y deberá recibir una respuesta en la misma lengua”.

En el comentario a esta redacción se dice que este apartado “reproduce el artículo 21 del Tratado CE”. Como hemos visto al principio, dicho artículo es el que reconoce el Derecho de petición.

El último documento publicado por la Convención al terminar estas apretadas páginas es la Nota del Praesidium (CHARTE 4360/00, de 14 de junio de 2.000. Síntesis de las enmiendas presentadas por el Praesidium), cuya introducción recoge lo siguiente:

“La Secretaría ha elaborado este documento a petición de la Convención para reagrupar por temas las enmiendas a los artículos 1 a 30 (doc. Charte 4332/00). No se han tenido en cuenta en este análisis las enmiendas de carácter redaccional o lingüístico, que se estudiarán de forma específica. Se comprobará que determinadas propuestas transaccionales del Praesidium se basan en enmiendas que no están contempladas en el presente análisis; esto se debe a que el Praesidium ha recogido ya algunas enmiendas lingüísticas o redaccionales”.

En lo referente al Derecho de petición, dicho documento contempla lo siguiente:

“Artículo 29. Derecho de petición.

Todo ciudadano y toda persona física o jurídica que resida o tenga su domicilio social en un Estado miembro tiene el derecho de petición ante el Parlamento Europeo.

Propuestas de enmiendas

- 1) Tres enmiendas tienen por objetivo que toda persona tenga el derecho de petición: enmiendas 574 (Hirsch Ballin/Patijn), 575 (Buitenweg) y 582 (Korthals Altes). Una enmienda propone, por el contrario, excluir a las personas jurídicas: enmienda 579 (Cisneros); otras dos sugieren añadir una disposición horizontal relativa a las personas jurídicas: enmiendas 576 (Friedrich) y 577 (Gnauck).
- 2) Tres enmiendas proponen limitar el derecho petición a los asuntos propios de los ámbitos de actuación de la Unión y que afecten directa o individualmente al que pretende ejercer dicho derecho: enmiendas 573 (Olsen), 576 (Friedrich) y 577 (Gnauck).
- 3) Dos enmiendas proponen establecer un derecho de petición ante todas las Instituciones u órganos: enmiendas 574 (Hirsch Ballin/Patijn) y 582 (Korthals Altes).
- 4) Una enmienda tiene por objetivo añadir que este derecho se ejercita en las circunstancias y con los límites establecidos en el artículo 194 del TCE: enmienda 573 (Olsen).

Propuesta del Praesidium:

Añadir “de la Unión” después de “ciudadano”.

Se basa en la enmienda 581 (Dehaene).

A estas alturas de redacción de la Carta de los derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea, puede observarse como la misma no supone ninguna aportación nueva a la regulación del Derecho de petición, que coadyuvaría a su fortalecimiento y a paliar en cierta medida el déficit democrático de las instituciones y órganos de la Unión distintos al Parlamento Europeo.

V.- EL DERECHO DE PETICIÓN EN ESPAÑA

El artículo 29 de la Constitución parece ser uno de los preceptos constitucionales de difícil desarrollo legal. Resulta paradójico que a los pocos años de vigencia de la Constitución de 1.978 se regulara el ejercicio de la iniciativa legislativa popular (art. 87.3 CE), mediante la Ley Orgánica 3/1.984, de 28 de marzo, y aún hoy se encuentre falto de desarrollo un derecho, como el de petición, mucho más accesible y utilizado por los españoles.

El artículo 23.1 de la Constitución consagra el derecho fundamental de los ciudadanos a participar en los asuntos públicos, directamente o por medio de representante libremente elegido. Como ha expuesto recientemente nuestro Tribunal Constitucional en su Sentencia 76/1.994, de 14 de marzo (relativa a la iniciativa legislativa popular) "nuestra Constitución en su artículo 1.3 proclama la Monarquía parlamentaria como forma de gobierno o forma política del Estado español y, acorde con esta premisa, diseña un sistema de participación política de los ciudadanos EN EL QUE PRIMAN LOS MECANISMOS DE DEMOCRACIA REPRESENTATIVA SOBRE LOS DE PARTICIPACION DIRECTA".

Ello, no obstante, no debe ser óbice para que el legislador descuide la regulación de instrumentos fundamentales diseñados para la participación política de los ciudadanos y de los grupos en que se integra -la denominada sociedad civil-. Instrumentos tales como el Derecho de petición y la participación en el procedimiento de elaboración de los reglamentos contemplado en el artículo 105 de la Constitución.

Según el Informe de 6 de mayo de 1.988 de la Dirección General de Estudios del Parlamento Europeo, "El derecho de petición puede considerarse como uno de los más antiguos derechos de los ciudadanos. De la función del derecho de petición como instrumento político podrían derivarse consecuencias para un parlamento en forma de la aprobación o la modificación de leyes".

Un ejemplo histórico de petición lo protagonizó en 1.827 el mercantilista Pedro Sainz de Andino, que presentó al Rey una exposición donde se ofrecía para "...aplicar a la formación de un Código mercantil, o sean Ordenanzas Generales del Comercio terrestre y marítimo, sus conocimientos que adquirió en esta parte de la legislación preparando materiales y ordenando un trabajo que pudiera ser después examinado y rectificado por una Junta". Esta fue la raíz del Código de Comercio de

1.829. Por Real Orden de 9 de enero de 1.828 se le encarga el proyecto de Ordenanzas que había sugerido. (EL DERECHO HISTORICO DE LOS PUEBLOS DE ESPAÑA. Gacto Fernández, Alejandro García y García Marín. 1.988).

En su sesión del 15 de abril de 1.994, la Comisión Constitucional del Congreso de los Diputados aprobó, por unanimidad y sin ninguna enmienda, la PROPOSICION NO DE LEY presentada el 23 de septiembre de 1.993 por el Grupo Parlamentario Catalán (Convergència i Unió), por la que se insta al Gobierno a la regulación del Derecho de Petición previsto en el artículo 29 de la Constitución.

El texto de la proposición no de ley

Exposición de motivos.

El Pleno del Congreso de los Diputados aprobó, el 22 de marzo de 1.988, una Proposición no de Ley del Grupo Parlamentario de la Minoría Catalana en la que se instaba al Gobierno a "remitir a esta Cámara, a la mayor brevedad posible, la propuesta de los proyectos de Ley que desarrollan aquellos preceptos constitucionales que, a su juicio, así lo requieren para su completa efectividad".

Transcurridos ya más de cinco años desde la aprobación de la mencionada Proposición, el Gobierno todavía no ha presentado un Proyecto de Ley Orgánica que desarrolle el derecho de petición individual y colectivo, previsto en el artículo 29 de la Constitución.

Concretamente, en el mencionado artículo de nuestra Carta Magna proclama que: "Todos los españoles tendrán el derecho de petición individual y colectivo, por escrito, en la forma y con los efectos que determine la Ley". Asimismo, este importante reconocimiento se produce en el marco de la sección primera del Capítulo Segundo de la Constitución, en donde se enumeran los derechos que tienen la consideración de "fundamentales" en nuestro ordenamiento jurídico.

Esta omisión en el desarrollo legislativo del Derecho de Petición no puede justificarse por la existencia de una normativa preconstitucional que lo regulaba, concretamente la Ley 92/1.960, dado que la misma no recoge todos los aspectos que el mismo comporta (ni tan siquiera contempla el derecho de petición colectivo) destacándose, por parte del propio Tribunal Constitucional, que la mencionada Ley el año 1.960 precisa de las inevitables adaptaciones que exige su aplicación en un marco de libertades muy distinto del existente en la época de su promulgación" (STC 242/1.993, de 14 de julio).

Por todo ello, y atendiendo a la naturaleza del derecho de petición como derecho de participación ciudadana en el marco de nuestro Estado Social y Democrático de derecho, y a la utilización que del mismo se realiza por parte de los ciudadanos, el Grupo Parlamentario Catalán (Convergència y Unió) presenta la siguiente:

Proposición no de Ley.

"El Congreso de los Diputados insta al Gobierno a presentar ante las Cortes Generales, en el plazo de seis meses desde la aprobación de esta Proposición no de Ley, un Proyecto de Ley Orgánica reguladora del Derecho de petición reconocido en el artículo 29 de la Constitución".

Génesis de la proposición no de ley.

Esta loable iniciativa parlamentaria tiene su génesis en la petición que con fecha 30 de agosto de 1.993 realicé al que fue uno de los ponentes de nuestra Constitución y entonces Presidente del Grupo Parlamentario Catalán en el Congreso de los Diputados, Miquel Roca Junyent.

Petición fundamentada en:

"La Sentencia (242/1.993, de 14 de julio -BOE del 12 de agosto) del Tribunal Constitucional estima un recurso de amparo interpuesto por un ciudadano canario y reconoce la vulneración del artículo 29.1 de la Constitución provocada por la omisión de toda respuesta por parte del Parlamento canario a una petición dirigida por el recurrente.

La Sentencia, en su primer fundamento jurídico reconoce que la Ley 92/1.960, de 22 de diciembre, reguladora del derecho de petición fue promulgada en un marco de libertades muy distinto del actual, lo que exige inevitables adaptaciones en su aplicación.

Es obvio que citada ley reguladora de un derecho fundamental que recibe la más intensa protección -como dice el Tribunal Constitucional- debería haber sido, a mi juicio derogada y sustituida por otra que se adapte al marco de libertades vigente y se acerque a las que rigen en los países de nuestro entorno democrático.

Asimismo, el Tribunal Supremo, en su Sentencia de 10 de abril de 1.987, reconoció que mientras no se desarrolle por ley el artículo 29 de la Constitución, la ley 92/1.960 es el contenido "mínimo y provisional" del derecho.

Ambas consideraciones jurisprudenciales son una muestra de lo devaluado de la legislación reguladora de este derecho fundamental.

Por ello, me dirijo a Vd. -dada su sensibilidad hacia los asuntos constitucionales- con el ruego de que su Grupo Parlamentario estudie la posibilidad de presentar en el Congreso una proposición de ley orgánica que desarrolle el artículo 29 de la Constitución; o, en su defecto, una proposición no de ley por la que se inste al Gobierno a presentar el correspondiente proyecto de ley orgánica".

La Sentencia 242/1.993 del Tribunal Constitucional.

Esta Sentencia (ponente. de Mendizábal Allende), junto con el Auto del Tribunal 46/1.980 y la Sentencia 161/1.988, conforman la doctrina constitucional sobre el derecho de petición que recoge el artículo 29 de la Constitución.

La trayectoria del derecho de petición, según el ponente, puede rastrearse hasta los albores de nuestro constitucionalismo y aun más allá, prolongado sin desmayo alguno hasta nuestros días a través de los sucesivos textos donde se les reconoce a los españoles ese derecho de petición "en la forma y con los efectos que determine la Ley".

El núcleo de la doctrina constitucional sobre el artículo 29 es el siguiente:

- Este derecho recibe la más intensa protección.

- El derecho tiene un mucho de instrumento para la participación ciudadana, aun cuando lo sea por la VIA DE SUGERENCIA, y algo del ejercicio de la libertad de expresión como posibilidad de opinar.
- La petición, en suma, vista ahora desde su anverso, puede incorporar una sugerencia o una información, una iniciativa, "expresando súplicas o quejas", pero en cualquier caso ha de referirse a decisiones discrecionales o graciabiles, SIRVIENDO A VECES PARA PONER EN MARCHA CIERTAS ACTUACIONES INSTITUCIONALES, como la del Defensor del Pueblo o el recurso de inconstitucionalidad de las leyes.
- El derecho no incorpora una exigencia vinculante para el destinatario.
- Se trata de un derecho uti cives, del que disfrutan por igual todos los españoles en su condición de tales, que les permite dirigirse a los poderes públicos.
- Las Cámaras legislativas han estado siempre entre las instituciones receptoras: las Cortes y el Rey, señalaban las Constituciones de 1.837 y 1.845, a quienes desde 1.969 se añaden "las autoridades" o éstas y los Poderes Públicos en la de 1.931.
- La petición cumple también con la singular exigencia formal, su formulación escrita, característica de este derecho que exige una vestidura documental.
- El contenido de este derecho como tal es mínimo y se agota en la mera posibilidad de ejercitarlo, formulando la solicitud sin que de ello pueda derivarse perjuicio alguno para el interesado, garantía o cautela que está en el origen histórico de este derecho y ha llegado a nuestros días.
- Pero hoy el contenido del derecho comprende algo más, aun cuando no mucho más, e incluye la EXIGENCIA de que el escrito al cual se incorpore la petición sea admitido, le dé el curso debido o se reexpida al órgano competente si no lo fuera el receptor y se tome en consideración.
- Las obligaciones del destinatario son: Exteriorizar el hecho de la recepción y comunicar al interesado la resolución que se adopte.

- El derecho no incluye obtener una respuesta favorable a lo solicitado.

Notas para la regulación del Derecho.

Como acertadamente expone la doctrina constitucional, el derecho de petición "excluye cualquier pretensión con fundamento en la alegación de un derecho subjetivo o un interés legítimo especialmente protegido, incluso mediante la acción popular en el proceso penal o la acción pública en el contencioso-contable o en el ámbito del urbanismo. La petición en el sentido estricto que aquí interesa no es una reclamación en la vía administrativa, ni una demanda o un recurso en la judicial, como tampoco una denuncia, en la acepción criminal o las reguladoras de la potestad sancionadora de la Administración en sus diversos sectores".

Por tanto, a mi juicio, el objeto del derecho de petición que regule la futura ley orgánica ha de versar sobre propuestas para el mejoramiento de los servicios públicos; para el mejoramiento del ordenamiento legislativo; denuncias de contradicciones, defectos o insuficiencias del ordenamiento legislativo; o propuestas genéricas de carácter social, económico o político.

No deberán estar amparadas por la ley, en cuanto existan procedimientos legales específicos para ello:

- Las reclamaciones de derechos subjetivos.
- Las peticiones en defensa de un interés directo en el asunto de que se trate.
- las denuncias de infracciones penales, fiscales, civiles o de cualquier otra índole, cometidas por particulares o funcionarios.

Tampoco han de ser objeto de la ley reguladora las quejas subjetivas sobre el anormal funcionamiento de los servicios públicos, pues para ello está diseñada la institución del Defensor del Pueblo.

La iniciativa parlamentaria más reciente sobre este asunto es la proposición de ley orgánica reguladora del derecho de petición, presentada por el Grupo Parlamentario Federal de Izquierda Unida-Iniciativa per Catalunya (Boletín Oficial de las Cortes Generales. Congreso de los Diputados. VI Legislatura. 28 de abril de 1997).

En el programa electoral presentado por el Partido Popular a las Elecciones Generales del año 2.000, dentro del apartado “fortalecer el Estado de Derecho y las instituciones democráticas”, puede leerse:

“Promoveremos la regulación del derecho de petición, de acuerdo con el artículo 29 de la Constitución”.

VI.- EL DERECHO DE PETICIÓN EN LAS CONSTITUCIONES DE LOS ESTADOS MIEMBRO DE LA UNION EUROPEA.

Según recogemos de los textos constitucionales incluidos en la obra: Constituciones de los Estados de la Unión Europea (RUBIO LLORENTE y DARANAS PELAEZ. Ariel Derecho, 1997), el derecho de petición está reconocido de la siguiente forma.

Ley fundamental para la República Federal de Alemania, de 23 de mayo de 1.949:

Artículo 17: “Todos tendrán derecho a dirigir individual o colectivamente peticiones o quejas por escrito a las autoridades competentes y a las asambleas representativas”.

El artículo 17a permite a las leyes sobre el servicio militar limitar el ejercicio del derecho.

Texto Refundido de la Constitución de Bélgica, de 17 de febrero de 1.994:

Artículo 28: “Todos tendrán derecho a dirigir a las autoridades públicas peticiones firmadas por una o más personas.

Sólo las autoridades constituidas podrán dirigir peticiones en nombre colectivo”.

Artículo 57: “Queda prohibido presentar peticiones en persona a las Cámaras.

Cada una de las Cámaras tendrá la facultad de remitir a los Ministros las peticiones que se le dirijan. Los Ministros darán explicaciones sobre el contenido de aquéllas cuantas veces lo exigiere la Cámara”.

Constitución del Reino de Dinamarca, de 5 de junio de 1.953:

Artículo 54: “No se podrán presentar peticiones al Parlamento más que por uno de sus miembros”.

Constitución española de 31 de octubre de 1.978:

Artículo 29: “1. Todos los españoles tendrán el derecho de petición individual y colectiva por escrito, en la forma y con los efectos que determine la ley.
2. Los miembros de las Fuerzas o Institutos armados o de los Cuerpos sometidos a disciplina militar podrán ejercer este derecho sólo individualmente y con arreglo a lo dispuesto en su legislación específica”.

No obstante lo dispuesto en su apartado segundo, se han producido peticiones colectivas en dicho ámbito. Así, en el diario La Ley (11-02-99), puede leerse: “La Asociación de Militares Españoles ha remitido una carta al presidente del Gobierno, avalada por 500 firmas de militares pertenecientes a dicha entidad, en la que se solicita al jefe del Ejecutivo y al ministro de Defensa, según informó el diario La Razón, de que hagan valer su influencia ante el Grupo Popular para que se incluya el derecho de asociación de los militares en el proyecto de Ley de Régimen del Personal de las Fuerzas Armadas, actualmente en tramitación en el Congreso de los Diputados”.

Artículo 77: “1. Las Cámaras pueden recibir peticiones individuales y colectivas, siempre por escrito, quedando prohibida la presentación directa por manifestaciones ciudadanas.
2. Las Cámaras pueden remitir al Gobierno las peticiones que reciban. El Gobierno está obligado a explicarse sobre su contenido, siempre que las Cámaras lo exijan”.

Constitución de Grecia:

Artículo 10: “1. Toda persona, o varias actuando en común, tendrán derecho, siempre que se ajusten a las leyes del Estado, a dirigir peticiones por escrito a las autoridades, las cuales deberán obrar lo más rápidamente posible conforme a las disposiciones vigentes y dar al peticionario una contestación por escrito y motivada, conforme a lo que la ley disponga.
2. No se autorizará la persecución del peticionario por infracciones eventualmente contenidas en la acusación, sino después de acuerdo definitivo de la autoridad a la cual iba dirigida la petición y con autorización de la misma.
3. Toda solicitud de información obliga a la autoridad competente a contestar en la medida en que la ley lo prevea”.

Artículo 69: “Nadie podrá, sin haber sido invitado a ello, presentarse ante la Cámara para formular en ella una petición verbal o por escrito.

Las peticiones se presentarán por medio de algún diputado o serán entregadas al Presidente de la Cámara, la cual tendrá derecho a dar traslado de ellas a los Ministros y Secretarios de Estado, quienes estarán obligados a facilitar aclaraciones cuantas veces se les solicite”.

Sobre el primer párrafo de este artículo, RUBIO LLORENTE y DARANAS PELAEZ señalan que es un “precepto poco frecuente en los textos constitucionales. Cfr., sin embargo, a título precedente, artículo 57, párrafo primero, de la Constitución belga y artículo 67, también párrafo primero, de la luxemburguesa (tomado del primero)”.

Constitución de la República Italiana, de 27 de diciembre de 1.947:

Artículo 50: “Todos los ciudadanos podrán dirigir peticiones a las Cámaras para solicitar se dicten disposiciones legislativas o exponer necesidades de índole común”.

Constitución del Gran Ducado de Luxemburgo, texto refundido:

Artículo 27: “Todos tendrán derecho a dirigir a las autoridades públicas peticiones firmadas por una o varias personas. Sólo las autoridades constituidas tendrán derecho a dirigir peticiones en nombre colectivo”.

Artículo 67: “Se prohíbe presentar en persona peticiones a la Cámara.

La Cámara tendrá derecho a trasladar a los miembros del Gobierno las peticiones que le fueren dirigidas. Los miembros del Gobierno deberán dar explicaciones sobre el contenido de aquéllas cuantas veces la Cámara lo solicite.

La Cámara no se ocupará de petición alguna que tenga por objeto intereses individuales, a menos que pretenda la reparación de agravios resultantes de actos ilegales cometidos por el Gobierno o las autoridades o que la decisión procedente sea de competencia de la Cámara”.

Ley Fundamental del Reino de los Países Bajos:

Artículo 5: “Todos tendrán derecho a presentar peticiones por escrito al órgano competente”.

Constitución de la República Portuguesa:

Artículo 52: “(Derecho de petición y derecho de acción popular). 1. Todos los ciudadanos tendrán derecho a presentar individual o colectivamente a los órganos de soberanía o cualesquiera autoridades peticiones, representaciones, reclamaciones o quejas para la defensa de sus derechos, de la Constitución, de las leyes y del interés general.

2. La ley determinará las condiciones en que las peticiones presentadas colectivamente a la Asamblea de la República deberán ser examinadas por el Pleno.

3. (dedicado a la acción popular)”.

VII.- CONCLUSION.

GOMEZ-FERRER MORANT (prólogo a la obra de COLOM PASTOR: El Derecho de Petición. Marcial Pons, 1997) señala que “el derecho de petición se presenta como una vía de comunicación entre el Poder y la Sociedad”. “El derecho de petición es por tanto una vía que cobra especial relevancia pública cuando se utiliza por entes de relevancia constitucional como los sindicatos de trabajadores y las asociaciones empresariales, a los que se refiere el art. 7 de la Constitución Española”.

Para este autor, “la importancia del derecho de petición se encuentra en conexión con el sistema vigente en cada época. De gran importancia política en la Edad Media, va a perder relevancia a medida que se avanza hacia el reconocimiento de la soberanía popular. En este sentido, como indica COLOM, en el sistema de sufragio censitario propio de la Revolución liberal, el derecho de petición se configura como un mecanismo de corrección del sufragio político restringido –así en la Constitución Francesa de 1791-, como un instrumento de legitimidad democrática. Precisamente por ello, cuando se produce la Revolución democrática, y el sufragio universal, podemos preguntarnos qué sentido tiene el mantenimiento del derecho de petición, que no figura ni en la Declaración Universal de los Derechos del Hombre y del Ciudadano, de 10 de diciembre de 1948, ni en el Pacto Internacional de Derechos Civiles y Políticos, de 19 de diciembre de 1966, ni en el Convenio Europeo para la Protección de los Derechos Humanos y de las Libertades, de 4 de noviembre de 1.950.

A mi juicio esta pregunta, en esta época, tiene fácil respuesta. El reconocimiento y desarrollo del derecho de petición significa reconocer el legítimo derecho a la participación política –la participación en los asuntos públicos, individual o colectivamente- más allá del llamamiento a las urnas cada cierto tiempo. Significa, asimismo, una mayor legitimación de las instituciones democráticas receptoras y tramitadoras de las peticiones ciudadanas. En este sentido, hoy se están dando pasos desde las instituciones europeas. Así, en la Comunicación de la Comisión Europea al Parlamento Europeo, al Consejo, al Comité Económico y Social y al Comité de las Regiones. Revisión de la Estrategia para el mercado interior europeo(2000), de 3 de mayo de 2000, puede leerse: “Profundizar el Diálogo con los ciudadanos y las empresas. La informática no sólo se presta a una nueva gama de aplicaciones para las empresas, sino que sirve también de base para un planteamiento más abierto e interactivo del desarrollo de políticas. El Diálogo con los ciudadanos y las empresas utiliza Internet no solamente para canalizar información hacia los ciudadanos y recoger sus puntos de vista y experiencias, lo que proporciona una imagen del funcionamiento (y los puntos débiles) del mercado interior mucho más completa que la que era posible obtener anteriormente. La importancia del Diálogo a este respecto ha sido reconocida por todas las instituciones.”.

COLOM PASTOR (ob. cit) escribe que “con este derecho fundamental se produce una interesante paradoja. A medida que se profundiza y avanza en el Estado de Derecho pierde virtualidad”, citando a MORODO: “la formalización del Estado de Derecho hará escasamente necesario el ejercicio de este derecho”. Este último planteamiento supone, a mi juicio desconocer el derecho de petición como un derecho de participación política. Cosa distinta es la inexistente, en muchas ocasiones, actitud positiva de las instituciones receptoras de las peticiones en cuanto al estudio y tramitación de las mismas. Quizá por esta actitud, algunos ciudadanos utilizan un cauce distinto al normal para hacer sus propuestas. Así, el Catedrático emérito de Derecho Procesal, FAIREN GUILLÉN, escribió en el Diario La Ley (11-02-1998) un artículo titulado: “La formación de la voluntad del sujeto en las declaraciones de conformidad en el proceso penal. Sugerencia al Ministerio de Justicia”. Otros, como TOMAS Y VALIENTE, ex presidente del Tribunal Constitucional, utilizan la prensa para hacer partícipe a los demás de sus peticiones. Así, en su artículo “Por si acaso” (El País, 10-12-94): “cuatro juristas, hemos enviado al ministro de Justicia, también él jurista y amigo, una petición de enmienda al texto del artículo 143 del proyecto de Código Penal para que, mejorando su redacción actual, que ya va por ahí, reconozca validez a las peticiones expresas, serias e inequívocas de ciertos enfermos, de modo tal que sirvan para eximir de responsabilidad penal a quienes, atendiendo aquellas peticiones, causen o cooperen activamente en la muerte del enfermo”.

Las peticiones sirven para promover iniciativas legislativas. Así, en el preámbulo del Real Decreto 2191/1995, de 28 de diciembre, por el que se crea la Academia Aragonesa de Jurisprudencia y Legislación y se aprueban sus Estatutos; puede leerse:

“Con objeto de propiciar, estimular y difundir estudios e investigaciones de carácter jurídico, un grupo de profesionales del Derecho, residentes en Aragón, ha interesado la creación de una entidad que desempeñe con carácter autonómico una función relevante en el indicado campo, manteniendo una estrecha colaboración con la Real Academia de Jurisprudencia y Legislación, iniciativa que esta Corporación ha valorado de forma positiva”.

Sirve también, este Derecho, para proponer a los órganos con posibilidad de efectuar propuestas de modificaciones legislativas, la reforma del Derecho vigente. Así, en la Resolución del Tribunal de Defensa de la Competencia, de 23 de octubre de 1995, puede leerse:

“Segundo: Solicita la recurrente, con carácter subsidiario, que el Tribunal ejercite la facultad que le concede el art. 2.2 de la Ley de Defensa de la Competencia y proponga al Gobierno que suprima o modifique situaciones, como la presente, que provocan restricciones de la competencia.

1. Es de advertir que el art. 2.2 habilita al Tribunal para proponer al Gobierno la modificación de aquellas normas legales que amparen o propicien la creación de restricciones a la competencia, facultad que el Tribunal puede ejercitar, bien con ocasión de un expediente específico o bien con carácter general, sin necesidad de que la restricción a la competencia haya sido advertida al resolver un caso concreto. La habilitación al Tribunal constituye la finalidad del precepto y en ella se agota su contenido: el art. 2.2 no concede un derecho subjetivo a los administrados para exigir al Tribunal que haga las propuestas que ellos crean convenientes. Su petición en este sentido no es más que ejercicio del genérico derecho de petición y no el ejercicio de una acción.

2. Esto supuesto, en el caso presente el Tribunal estima conveniente adelantar que dirigirá una propuesta al Gobierno que versará sobre dos aspectos”.

Ejemplo de petición sobre asuntos europeos, de la que se hizo eco la prensa, fue la presentada ante la Comisión y el Parlamento Europeo por ECAS (Euro Citizen Action Service), de la que informó el diario El País (25-03-95) bajo el siguiente titular: “Grupos ciudadanos piden que las libertades de Schengen se extiendan a toda la UE”.

En la segunda fase del Plan de Modernización de la Administración del Estado –español-, publicado por el Ministerio para las Administraciones Públicas (Madrid, 1994), se propone, para mejorar la atención al ciudadano “la elaboración de una nueva Ley que desarrolle el artículo 29 de la Constitución relativo al derecho de petición y el establecimiento de un procedimiento acorde a la Ley 30/92 sobre Procedimiento Administrativo”.

Como he mantenido en este trabajo, los destinatarios naturales de las peticiones, en el ámbito de la Unión Europea, han de ser, sin limitaciones, todas las instituciones con poder de iniciativa respecto de la materia objeto de la petición.

Como mucho, si el Parlamento Europeo desea estar informado sobre las peticiones ciudadanas, podría establecerse el requisito de que la institución receptora de la petición enviara una copia de la misma a la Comisión de Peticiones, así como una copia de la ulterior resolución de la misma. Lo cual podría ser incluso hasta conveniente para el control político por parte del Parlamento.

A mi juicio, no debe molestar al Parlamento que se abra el abanico de las instituciones receptoras de peticiones. Con fecha 13 de septiembre de 1.986, el eurodiputado español LAFUENTE LOPEZ presentó una propuesta de resolución relativa a la creación de la institución del Defensor del ciudadano europeo, basada principalmente en la consideración de “que a pesar de que la investigación parlamentaria se ha venido realizando con toda dedicación, interés y cuidado por la Comisión de Reglamento y Peticiones, es evidente que la Cámara, a pesar de lo que declara la Resolución de 14 de julio de 1.985, no puede fiscalizar la actuación diaria de la Administración comunitaria, ni mucho menos investigar y corregir todas o la mayoría de las irregularidades de que tengan conocimiento, en lo referente a la tutela de los derechos de los ciudadanos europeos, máxime cuando en su estudio y vigilancia, se precisa la conexión con las autoridades de los Estados miembros, no siempre proclives a colaborar con la Comisión Parlamentaria y a suministrar con toda transparencia los datos que el Parlamento les solicita”. El Parlamento, en aquella época, acordó que no era pertinente crear dicha institución. No obstante, hemos visto como después, el Tratado de Maastricht creó la Institución del Defensor del Pueblo Europeo; lo que ha servido, entre otras cosas para distinguir las quejas por casos de mala Administración de lo que son las peticiones políticas. MOLINA DEL POZO y otros (Comentarios al proyecto de Constitución europea. Ed. Comares, 1996), subraya que “el Parlamento no había pedido la creación del Defensor Europeo por temor a que se superpusiera al derecho existente, antes del TUE, de presentar peticiones. Se preveía el riesgo de confusión y debilitamiento mutuo de las dos vías posibles. Las disposiciones del Tratado de la Unión, como hemos visto, refuerzan los papeles respectivos de ambas instancias”.

Conviene no olvidar que el derecho de petición se puede ejercitar individual o colectivamente y que en cualquier caso es un instrumento al servicio de la llamada sociedad civil. Por ello, no se entiende cómo en el Dictamen del Comité Económico y Social de la UE sobre “El papel y la contribución de la sociedad civil organizada en la construcción europea”, de 22 de septiembre de 1999, después de señalar que “La sociedad civil: tentativa de descripción”. La sociedad civil es un concepto colectivo que designa todas las formas de acción social (de individuos o grupos) que no emanan del Estado y que no son dirigidas por él”; no trata en ningún momento del derecho de petición reconocido en el Tratado como instrumento de dicha sociedad civil.

El Tribunal Supremo norteamericano, en su sentencia Eastern Railroad President’s Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight (1961), dijo que en una democracia representativa, el concepto de representación depende de la capacidad de los ciudadanos para hacer que sus representantes conozcan sus deseos y que el derecho de petición está reconocido constitucionalmente, por lo que no puede ser suprimido por una Ley del Congreso como la Sherman Act. Esto lo pronuncia el Tribunal en el siguiente caso (vid. Derecho de los Negocios, nº 39, diciembre 1993, pag. 65): En los años cincuenta, las compañías de ferrocarriles comenzaron a sufrir la competencia de los conductores de camiones en el mercado de transporte de mercancías a larga distancia. Por este motivo, la Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference decidió promover la adopción de leyes estatales que limitaran el peso de los camiones que circularan por las carreteras y gravaran fiscalmente a los camiones pesados, y contrató los servicios de una compañía de relaciones públicas para que dirigiera una campaña dirigida a fomentar la desconfianza de la opinión pública en los conductores de camiones, por lo que éstos interpusieron una demanda por conspiración contraria a las normas antitrust.

Bruxelles, le 19 juillet 2000CHARTE 4420/00*CONTRIB 276*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution du Comité des Régions, concernant des propositions d'amendements au préambule, l'article 22 (Égalité et non discrimination) et l'article 44 (Clause horizontale), ainsi qu'une lettre au Président Herzog et la résolution 140/2000 REV 1. ¹

PROPOSITION DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPENNE.

Proposition d'amendement : au préambule

Auteur : Le Comité des Régions

Texte proposé :

L'Union respecte le principe de l'autonomie locale tel qu'il est mis en œuvre par les Etats-membres.

Justificatif :

Cet ajout se fonde d'une part sur l'article 6 concernant l'application des Droits démocratiques du Traité sur l'Union Européenne et sur l'application du principe de subsidiarité tel qu'il ressort du premier paragraphe de l'article 1 du Traité sur l'Union Européenne.

PROPOSITION DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPENNE.

Proposition d'amendement à l'article : Proposition d'amendement à l'article 44 (clause horizontale)

Auteur : Le Comité des Régions

Texte proposé :

Les dispositions de la présente Charte s'adressent dans le respect du principe de subsidiarité aux institutions et organes de l'Union ainsi qu'aux Etats-membres et aux autorités régionales et locales exclusivement dans la mise en œuvre du droit de l'Union.

Justificatif :

Cet ajout se fonde sur le fait que certaines autorités régionales et locales sont des organes d'application du droit de l'Union.

PROPOSITION DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPEENNE

Proposition d'amendement à l'article : 22 - Egalité et non discrimination ou d'un nouvel article après l'article 22.

Auteur : Le Comité des Régions

Texte proposé :

Si amendement, nouveau paragraphe 3 : les minorités ont droit au respect de leur religion, de leur langue et de leur culture.

Si nouvel article : Droit des minorités

Les minorités ont droit au respect de leur religion, de leur langue et de leur culture.

Justificatif :

Référence à l'article 27 du Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques.

Les articles 12, 14 15 et 22 s'appliquent à des personnes et non à des groupes.

Le concept de minorité mérite d'être intégré à la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux.

Cette insertion s'avère indispensable dès lors que l'Union sera élargie à des Etats comportant des minorités importantes.

Bruxelles, le

Monsieur le Président,

A la suite de l'audition des associations nationales et européennes de pouvoirs régionaux et locaux organisée le 4 juillet 2000 par le Comité des régions et à laquelle participait M. JACQUE, il est apparu que bien que l'ensemble des associations approuvaient la teneur de la rédaction de la Charte telle que présentée par ce dernier, il leur paraissait indispensable que le Préambule sur le principe de démocratie comporte un article sur le principe de l'autonomie locale et que les collectivités régionales et locales soient mentionnées parmi les collectivités chargées du respect des droits et libertés inscrits, dès lors qu'il leur incombe d'appliquer le droit communautaire.

Ces deux demandes sont reprises dans le projet de résolution du Comité des régions qui a été approuvé le 5 juillet par sa commission "Affaires institutionnelles" que vous voudrez bien trouver en annexe.

Parmi les autres suggestions du Comité des régions figure le respect du droit des minorités qui pourrait faire l'objet d'un article spécifique de la Charte.

Vous trouverez ci-joint les propositions d'amendements concernant ces différents points.

Pour les 1^e et 2^e amendements, le Comité des régions s'est appuyé sur un texte suggéré par notre collègue, M. GNAUCK, membre de la Convention.

Pour le 3^e amendement relatif au droit des minorités, il a semblé opportun au Comité des régions de répondre par avance aux attentes des pays candidats à l'adhésion à l'Union européenne dans la mesure où ceux-ci comptent des groupes minoritaires importants.

J'ajoute que lors de l'audition des associations, celles-ci se sont déclarées prêtes à participer à une campagne de communication de la Charte auprès des citoyens de l'Union.

Je vous remercie par avance de l'accueil que vous réserverez à ces propositions d'amendements et vous prie de croire, Monsieur le Président, à l'expression de ma considération distinguée.

PROJET DE RESOLUTION du Comité des régions sur

"La Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne"

(Rapporteurs : M. BORE (RU, PSE) et Mme du GRANRUT (F, PPE))

Le présent document sera examiné lors de la session plénière des 20 et 21 septembre 2000. L'article 23 du Règlement intérieur stipule que les amendements doivent parvenir au secrétariat au plus tard le septième jour ouvrable avant l'ouverture de la session plénière, c'est-à-dire, au plus tard le lundi 11 septembre à 14 heures 30 (heure de Bruxelles). Toutefois, en raison de la particularité de cette session qui se tiendra parallèlement à celle du Parlement européen et qui, de ce fait, aura lieu en même temps que celle du Comité économique et social, le Bureau a décidé le 13 juin de suggérer aux membres de faire parvenir les amendements au secrétariat exceptionnellement le lundi 4 septembre 2000 à 14 heures 30 (heure de Bruxelles) au plus tard. Ils doivent être présentés par écrit par au moins six membres et indiquer leurs noms (E-mail : isabella.jacobs@cor.eu.int).

La présente résolution a été élaborée sur la base du nouveau Règlement intérieur. En conséquence, conformément à l'article 51, aucun amendement ne peut être déposé concernant l'exposé des motifs.

Le Comité des régions,

- VU la décision du Conseil européen concernant l'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne;
- VU les conclusions du Conseil européen de Cologne et celles du Conseil européen de Tampere;
- VU la création de la Convention chargée de l'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne constituée le 17 décembre 1999;
- VU son avis du 16 février 2000 sur le processus d'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne;
- VU la décision du Bureau du 11 avril 2000, conformément à l'article 265 paragraphe 5 du Traité instituant la Communauté européenne, d'élaborer une résolution sur la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne et de charger la commission "Affaires institutionnelles" de l'élaboration des travaux en la matière;
- VU le projet de résolution adopté par la commission "Affaires institutionnelles" lors de sa réunion du 5 juillet 2000 (rapporteurs : M. BORE (RU, PSE) et Mme du GRANRUT (F, PPE));
- CONSIDERANT l'état d'avancement des travaux de la Convention chargée d'élaborer une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne;
- CONSIDERANT que le Comité des régions s'est déjà prononcé fermement en faveur de l'élaboration d'une telle Charte, dotée d'un caractère juridique contraignant et de son inclusion dans les Traités;
- CONSIDERANT qu'à la suite de l'avis du Comité des régions sur la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne adopté le 16 février 2000 et de l'audition du Président du Comité des régions, M. CHABERT, par la Convention chargée de rédiger ladite Charte, le Comité des régions a été invité à suivre les travaux de la Convention et à assister à ses réunions informelles;
- CONSIDERANT que l'élaboration du projet de Charte proposé par le Presidium et en discussion au sein de la Convention a donné lieu à des prises de position diversifiées concernant son statut juridique, son rôle et sa finalité;
- CONSIDERANT que pour certains membres de la Convention, la Charte devrait s'inscrire dans le cadre strict de l'Union européenne et de ses compétences, et que dès lors elle devrait se limiter à préciser les libertés fondamentales dont peuvent se prévaloir les citoyens européens et leur application dans le cadre des compétences qui relèvent de l'Union, et qu'ainsi elle n'aurait pas à énoncer les droits qui sont reconnus par les Etats et dont l'application relève d'eux seuls et qu'enfin, pour ce faire, elle se bornerait à reprendre à son compte une partie de la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme (CEDH);
- CONSIDERANT que pour d'autres membres de la Convention, qui sont apparus majoritaires, la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne doit certes s'inspirer des droits inscrits dans la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme (CEDH) mais que sa mission consiste à les reformuler et à les compléter et ce, d'une part, en couvrant les domaines qui ne posaient pas de problèmes juridiques lors de sa rédaction et, d'autre part, par les autres sources d'inspiration que sont notamment le texte du Traité sur l'Union européenne, la Jurisprudence de la Cour de Justice européenne et la Charte sociale européenne;
- CONSIDERANT que pour les tenants de cette position, il ne s'agit pas d'augmenter les compétences de l'Union européenne ni de s'ingérer dans la capacité normative et juridique des Etats membres;

CONSIDERANT que l'inscription des Droits économiques et sociaux dans la Charte a été l'occasion de préciser cette option et de la faire prévaloir;

CONSIDERANT que le Comité des régions ne peut que se réjouir de cette solution qui correspond aux recommandations de son avis; a adopté la résolution suivante lors de sa ... session plénière des ... (séance du ...).

Le Comité des régions,

1. insiste sur le caractère politique de la Charte et sur son apport prépondérant comme fondement de la citoyenneté européenne. A cet effet, il suggère que la structure de la Charte prévoie que les droits du citoyen figurent à la suite du principe de démocratie;
2. propose de compléter, dans le préambule, le principe de démocratie par le principe d'autonomie communale et régionale, étant donné que cette dernière garantit également l'application pratique des droits démocratiques, il conviendrait, en outre, de mentionner le principe de subsidiarité et l'article 6 du Traité C.E. à un endroit approprié de la Charte; deuxièmement, il estime que tous les citoyens résidant en Europe depuis longtemps doivent disposer du droit de vote aux élections municipales ainsi qu'aux élections du Parlement européen;
3. réitère sa conviction selon laquelle la Charte doit couvrir trois aspects essentiels : les droits des personnes, les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels et, enfin, les droits civils et politiques. Les droits contribuent à l'expression des valeurs caractéristiques du modèle social européen. Regroupés dans un seul document, ils mettent en lumière les valeurs fondamentales de l'Union européenne; la Charte devrait également accorder une attention particulière à la protection de ces droits face aux abus dérivant de l'utilisation illégale des nouvelles technologies de l'information, de la dégradation de l'environnement ou du contrôle des concentrations des moyens de communication dans le cadre de la liberté d'expression ;
4. souligne la nécessité d'une formulation claire et lisible de la Charte qui apportera ainsi une plus-value aux droits fondamentaux et libertés garanties aux citoyens européens et les rende accessibles à tous ceux qui peuvent s'en prévaloir. A cet égard, il rappelle son souci de voir garantis juridiquement l'ensemble des droits inscrits dans la Charte et de permettre à tous l'accès aux services d'intérêt général;
5. exprime sa satisfaction que soient inscrits dans la Charte les droits économiques et sociaux qui permettent de répondre aux défis technologiques de la société européenne et d'en être des acteurs responsables, à condition qu'ils ne représentent pas uniquement des objectifs pour l'action de l'Union. Le Comité insiste également sur le droit des travailleurs à la formation professionnelle permanente indispensable à leur adaptabilité à l'emploi dans le contexte du progrès scientifique et technique de la société européenne et sur sa mise en oeuvre de manière harmonisée dans tous les Etats de l'Union et ce, afin de faciliter la libre circulation des travailleurs à l'intérieur de l'Union européenne.
6. recommande d'inscrire expressément dans la Charte la protection des minorités en tant que droit à part entière, pour déterminer ainsi un principe fondamental, notamment en ce qui concerne le traitement de la diversité ethnique au sein de l'Union européenne.
7. reconnaît la nécessité, dans le cadre des clauses horizontales, de préciser les limites des droits fondamentaux inscrits dans la Charte tout en leur donnant clairement comme objectif principal d'explicitier le champ de protection des droits fondamentaux et de refléter fidèlement leur niveau de protection ;

8. considère comme indispensable de dire clairement que les droits contenus dans la Charte ne justifient aucune nouvelle compétence de l'Union européenne ;
9. attire l'attention de la Convention sur le caractère indivisible des droits qui y sont inscrits, leur force découlant de cette indivisibilité;
10. considère que la Charte constitue un apport considérable à ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler l'acquis communautaire et que cet apport est majeur dans la perspective de l'élargissement aux pays candidats et à leurs ressortissants. Ceux-ci connaîtront d'emblée les droits et protections qui leur seront garantis ainsi que les obligations qu'ils devront assumer et ce, éventuellement par le truchement de modifications dans leur législation et dans leur système de gouvernement;
11. souligne que les élus locaux et régionaux peuvent jouer un rôle significatif dans la sensibilisation et la médiatisation de l'existence, du contenu et de la portée de la Charte auprès des citoyens;
12. propose que soit mis en oeuvre dès l'entrée en vigueur de la Charte un programme de communication qui s'appuie sur le Comité des régions et l'ensemble des élus locaux et régionaux. L'adhésion des citoyens à l'éthique et aux valeurs promues par la Charte ne pourra que renforcer leur sentiment d'appartenance à l'Union européenne et confèrera à celle-ci un réel fondement démocratique;
13. rappelle que la position du Comité a toujours été de souhaiter que le Conseil européen décide de son intégration dans les Traités, et qu'ainsi la Charte acquiert une valeur juridique, réponde à l'attente des citoyens et confère un contenu à l'identité européenne et insiste enfin sur le progrès substantiel qu'elle représente pour les citoyens de l'Union européenne en faisant de celle-ci un instrument majeur de la solidarité communautaire et de sa capacité d'élargissement.

Exposé des motifs

- En l'état actuel des discussions au sein de la Convention, il semblerait que la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne doive comporter :
 - un préambule qui énonce le principe de démocratie
 - des articles qui précisent les droits fondamentaux reconnus aux européens :
 - a) Droits civils et politiques et droits du citoyen
 - b) Droits économiques et sociaux;
 - des clauses horizontales concernant les modalités d'application de ces droits.
- Le principe de démocratie s'énonce ainsi :
 1. Toute autorité publique émane du peuple;
 2. L'Union et ses institutions se fondent sur les principes de la Liberté de la démocratie, du respect des droits de l'homme ainsi que de l'état de droit, principes qui sont communs aux Etats membres.

Pour le Comité des régions, il apparaît impératif que la Charte décline ce principe de démocratie jusqu'à la reconnaissance de l'autonomie locale et, à cet effet, il a proposé à la Convention un amendement en ce sens. L'autonomie des collectivités régionales et locales élues est reconnue même à des degrés divers dans tous les Etats membres. C'est par l'application du principe de subsidiarité le socle du pouvoir du citoyen sur l'organisation de sa vie quotidienne.

- Les droits civils et politiques (23 articles) traitent des droits de la personne humaine : dignité, droit à la vie, droit au respect de son intégrité par l'interdiction de la torture, de l'esclavage et de traitements dégradants; droit à la liberté et à la sûreté, droit de recours et à un tribunal impartial en cas d'atteinte à ces droits, respect des droits de la défense et présomption d'innocence - nécessité d'avoir commis une infraction à une loi pour être condamné; droit à ne pas être jugé ou puni deux fois pour la même infraction.
- Sur le droit de recours, le Comité des régions souhaite que l'article qui le prévoit se traduise par une garantie juridique fondamentale pour l'ensemble des droits inscrits dans la Charte.

Viennent ensuite les droits de la personne dans sa vie privée et sociale : respect de la vie privée, du domicile, du secret de la correspondance et des communications, vie familiale et protection de la famille et droits des enfants, respect de la liberté de pensée, de conscience et de religion, liberté d'expression et d'opinion, droit à l'éducation, droit des parents du choix de l'établissement d'enseignement, liberté de réunion et d'association, protection des données personnelles, du droit de propriété, droit d'asile et interdiction des expulsions collectives, et enfin, interdiction de toute discrimination.

A cet égard, le Comité des régions a proposé de renforcer la promotion de l'égalité entre les hommes et les femmes. Par ailleurs, il souhaite voir consacrer un article spécifique aux droits des minorités. Enfin, il s'associe à la proposition d'amendement concernant l'accès aux services d'intérêt général.

Les droits du citoyen (7 articles) traitent du droit de fonder un parti politique, du droit de vote et d'éligibilité au Parlement européen et aux élections municipales pour les résidents européens dans les mêmes conditions que les ressortissants d'un Etat membre, des obligations des administrations et des institutions européennes à l'égard des citoyens de l'Union, du rôle du médiateur, du droit de pétition, du droit de circuler et de séjourner librement sur le territoire des Etats membres.

La plupart de ces droits figurent dans différents articles du Traité sur l'Union européenne. Leur réunion les rend plus lisibles pour les citoyens. Le Comité des régions suggère que les droits du citoyen soient inscrits en tête de la Charte après l'énoncé du principe de démocratie.

- Les droits économiques et sociaux (13 articles) commencent par un article qui cherche à tenir compte de la spécificité des droits sociaux, du caractère de principe de certains d'entre eux et des modalités de leur application par les différents niveaux de collectivités responsables. C'est pourquoi, le Comité des régions demande, si cet article devait être maintenu, que les collectivités régionales et locales qui ont à mettre en œuvre certains de ces droits soient mentionnées dans cet article.

Les autres articles précisent les différents droits de la personne dans son travail : droit à l'information dans l'entreprise, droit de négociation et d'action collective, droit au repos et au congé annuel, droit à la santé et la sécurité dans son travail, droit à la protection en cas de licenciement, droit de concilier vie professionnelle et vie familiale, droit à la sécurité sociale et l'aide sociale, droits spécifiques des personnes handicapées, des personnes âgées et des jeunes.

- Les Clauses horizontales (5 articles) traitent du champ d'application des droits inscrits dans la Charte, de leur interprétation et de leur éventuelle limitation. Ces articles que l'on pourrait qualifier "de précaution" mériteraient d'être simplifiés et regroupés afin de ne pas paraître limitatifs et en retrait par rapport au reste de la Charte : le respect des droits fondamentaux s'impose aux Etats membres lorsqu'ils agissent dans le cadre du droit communautaire. Ceci est valable également pour les collectivités régionales et locales et doit être mentionné dans cette partie de la Charte.

Mesdames, Messieurs,

Dans le cadre d'un projet portant le titre "La protection sociale, facteur de lutte contre l'exclusion sociale et la discrimination et instrument de cohésion sociale - Recommandations aux institutions européennes", la Confédération des Organisations Familiales de l'Union Européenne ^ laquelle se sont associées ATD-Quart Monde, European Forum for Child Welfare et l'Union nationale interfederale des Ouvres et organismes prives sanitaires et sociaux (France), a organise plusieurs réunions pour étudier différentes questions relatives ^ la protection sociale.

Les représentants de ces associations se sont réunis le 19 juin 2000. Au terme d'une journée de travail centrée sur les droits sociaux fondamentaux et la protection sociale, ils ont estime nécessaire de vous faire parvenir sans retard leurs conclusions : elles portent sur une liste minimale de droits sociaux fondamentaux et de principes transversaux dont l'inscription et la mise en ouvre leur paraissent urgentes et indispensables.

Ces droits sociaux fondamentaux sont les suivants :

- Droit ^ un revenu minimum permettant de vivre dans la dignité ;
- Droit aux soins de santé pour tous ;
- Droit aux prestations familiales pour tous et d'un montant suffisant pour couvrir les frais réels directs et indirects que représentent les charges familiales ;
- Droit ^ un logement décent ;
- Droit pour tous ^ des services sociaux de qualité.

Ces droits devraient être mis œuvre dans le respect des principes transversaux suivants :

- Non-discrimination et égalité des chances et de traitement, notamment entre les nationalités, races, sexes et entre les différentes structures familiales ;
- Prestations indexées et d'un niveau suffisant ;
- Une information effective des bénéficiaires ;
- Effectivité des droits directs par une définition suffisamment précise et par la mise en place de procédures assurant l'effectivité des recours individuels.
- Pour tous les droits (directs et programmatiques), élaboration de procédures destinées à favoriser la convergence des systèmes (Évaluations comparatives).

Les organisations espèrent que la Convention saura accorder toute l'attention requise cette revendication et l'en remercier.

HELLENIC REPUBLIC

NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

Consultative to the Prime Minister

THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

SUMMARY PROPOSALS FOR SUBMISSION TO THE CONVENTION

A. GENERAL COMMENTS

1. The Greek National Commission on Human Rights supports in principle the decision of the European Union to adopt its own Charter of Fundamental Rights.

This decision is indicative of the Union's intention to emphasize the importance of human rights, but also of the further development of the unification process, covering areas much wider than the management of strictly economic issues, as was originally the case with the EEC.

2. However, in order for the new Charter to take on substantive importance, not only should it not lag behind the international, and particularly the European, acquis in the area of human rights, but it should also contribute to further progress in mentalities and trends arising from practice at the international and, especially, the European level, for a more effective and full protection of human rights. Otherwise, this Charter may prove essentially useless, if not harmful.

2. We also consider it purposeful to emphasize the well-known fact that all member States of the European Union are also members of the Council of Europe which is already equipped with a remarkable legal arsenal for the protection of human rights, that is civil, political, as well as economic and social rights (after the recent codification and consolidation with the adoption of additional protocols to the European Social Charter). The inclusion in the Charter of the European Union of principles and provisions ensuring lower standards of protection as compared to the relevant provisions of the instruments of the Council of Europe which encompasses 41 members - namely all the members of the Union, but also countries which are in a phase of transition towards democracy and the rule of law -, would constitute a regression to be avoided.

Furthermore, the trends that emerge from the more recent Constitutions of the member States of the European Union should not be ignored, since they are also part of the European acquis.

3. The Charter, in accordance with the above principles, should not only introduce expressly some new rights, but also reformulate certain longstanding rights on the basis of a new approach. We will refer below to certain particular provisions based on this general guideline.

B. SPECIFIC PROVISIONS

1. We believe, first of all, that the Charter should establish a more substantive concept of equality. Practice has shown, as highlighted in a series of historical decisions of the Greek Council of State (decisions 1917- 1929/1998 and 1933/1998), that the mere establishment of formal equality of all before the law, is an hypocrisy and, in fact, perpetuates injustices to the detriment of disadvantaged and marginalized socio-economic groups, categories etc. Women form the largest of these groups (half of the world's population).

For this reason, the adoption of positive measures does not constitute 'discrimination' on the basis of gender, colour, religion, etc., in other words a restriction or negation of equality, but, on the contrary, a means to attain effective equality and to cast aside social injustice, i.e. effective discrimination.

Allow us to recall the relevant formulations of the provisions on equality contained in the following European Constitutions:*

- a) the German Constitution: article 3, para.2;
- b) the Portuguese Constitution: articles 29, paras. (d) and (h) and 109;
- c) the Austrian Constitution: article 7, para. 2;
- d) the French Constitution: article 3, as recently amended;
- e) the Italian Constitution: article 3;
- f) the Constitutions of various German Länder.

It is up to the Convention to choose to follow one of these formulations or to use a different wording, as deemed appropriate.

As regards in particular gender equality, experience has proved the importance of including in the Charter an explicit provision following the general provision on equality. The former should draw its inspiration from the relevant provisions of the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, which has been incorporated into the domestic legal order of all member States of the Union, since they have all ratified it.

More specifically, we believe that the following text should be included in article 1 of document CONVEN 36, as a necessary addition in conformity with the spirit prevailing at both the international and European levels and reflected in relevant instruments of the European Union (especially article 2, para. 4 of Directive 76/207 of 9 February 1976, as further interpreted in a recent decision of the European Court of Justice (Badeck case, C- 158/1997, decision of 28 March 2000)):

1. Substantive equality between women and men shall be ensured and promoted in all areas. Any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of gender is prohibited.
2. In order to improve, in the first instance, the position of women, it is recommended to adopt positive measures which shall remain valid until such time as substantive equality between women and men is achieved.

2. We also think it useful to expressly refer to the principle that any transaction concerning the human body or part thereof is prohibited as an affront to human dignity, and as endangering physical, spiritual and mental health or integrity - in many cases, even life itself. Any such activity must be punished, since the human body is an extra commercium good. Consequently, new forms of slavery, in particular sexual exploitation of women and children as a transnational organized crime which nowadays buffets Europe, as well as the traffic in organs for transplants - often connected to very serious crimes -, must be curbed by radical means by the cooperation of all States. Such a program of cooperation should comprise measures aiming at the punishment of offenders and the social reintegration of and solidarity with the victims. A provision to that effect should be included in article 1.

3. As experience has shown, an end should be put to human rights violations perpetrated under the veil of religious, cultural or historic customs which are bolstered today primarily by political or religious authorities inspired by religious extremism (fundamentalism). This often consists in the denial of all human rights to large sectors of the population, especially women.

The situation in the world today, even in Europe which is home to numerous supporters of such movements (particularly Islamic, but also of the Vatican) who insist on following practices contrary to human rights renders imperative the inclusion in the Charter of provisions along the lines of paras. I.5 and II. B. 3. 38 of the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights.

4. It is time for the Charter to expressly prohibit the death penalty in the member States of the Union.

5. Last but not least, we believe it essential that the Charter strengthen economic and social rights in general. The Council of Europe has already done so by expanding and reinforcing the Turin Charter in 1991 (adoption of the Protocol amending the European Social Charter, ETS No. 142), and particularly by adopting the Additional Protocol of 1995 (ETS No. 158) which recognizes for the first time the right to collective complaints for violations of social rights.

The Geneva World Summit for Social Development (Copenhagen + 5) of 24-26 June 2000 brought to light and proclaimed the pressing need to strengthen social rights as much as possible at a time when economic globalisation becomes increasingly inhuman and deepens the gap between individuals as well as between countries (the few rich, individuals and States, become constantly richer while the popular masses and Third World countries become poorer). Moreover, globalisation undermines democracy itself (as fewer and fewer individuals in every country become owners of the wealth and the mass media). Thus, the ultimate power belongs to a limited number of persons, without recognition by democratic constitutions, without being elected by the people and essentially under no control (since politicians stand in fear of this power and not the reverse).

It is to everybody's interest - even the few rich - that a check be put on this development, which can be achieved, at least in part, by a more effective protection of social rights, thus preventing social conflicts and wars.

Developments in Europe over the last few years are blatant evidence of the above-mentioned facts and demonstrate that the policy of restricting social rights is unjust, antidemocratic and unwise.

Objet : rédaction de l'article 11 (règle non bis in idem) du projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Mesdames et Messieurs les membres de la Convention,

Préparant une thèse de doctorat en droit sur le thème de la règle non bis in idem, (à l'Université de Paris I Panthéon-Sorbonne, sous la direction de Mme le Professeur Mireille Delmas-Marty), je me suis intéressée à la formulation de l'article 11 du Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne. Par la présente, je souhaite vous transmettre quelques observations au sujet de cet article et vous suggérer une légère modification rédactionnelle qui, à mon sens, permettrait d'élargir la protection des citoyens de l'Union.

Pour mémoire, je retranscris ci-dessous la formulation de la règle non bis in idem de l'article 4 du protocole 7 additionnel à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, dont est directement inspiré le projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne, ainsi que celle de l'article 11 dudit projet. Je me permets de souligner les termes sur lesquels je désire attirer votre attention.

Article 4 Protocole 7 additionnel à la CEDH :

Al. 1 : Nul ne peut être poursuivi ou puni pénalement par les juridictions du même Etat en raison d'une infraction pour laquelle il a déjà été acquitté ou condamné par un jugement définitif conformément à la loi et à la procédure pénale de cet Etat.

Article 11 du projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne :

Nul ne peut être poursuivi ou puni pénalement en raison d'une infraction pour laquelle il a déjà été acquitté ou condamné par un jugement définitif conformément à la loi.

L'inconvénient de la rédaction actuelle des article 4 protocole 7 additionnel à la CEDH et 11 du projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'UE L'interdiction d'engager une seconde poursuite -et de prononcer éventuellement une seconde sanction- ne s'applique, selon les termes de ces deux articles, que lorsque la seconde poursuite est entamée pour « une infraction pour laquelle [un individu] a déjà été acquitté ou condamné... », c'est-à-dire pour la même infraction que lors de la première poursuite. En revanche, si un individu est poursuivi une seconde fois pour les mêmes faits, pour un même comportement délictueux, mais sous une qualification différente, c'est-à-dire pour une autre infraction, la règle non bis in idem n'est plus applicable et l'interdiction de la double poursuite ne s'impose plus.

En pratique, cela signifie qu'une personne ayant eu un comportement incriminé par deux lois distinctes (concours idéal d'infractions), cas de figure extrêmement courant en raison de l'inflation normative constatée dans la plupart des Etats de l'Union européenne, peut tout à fait être poursuivie du chef de la première loi, puis de la seconde puisqu'il s'agit de deux infractions différentes. Ce peut être le cas lorsque les deux infractions relèvent du droit interne. Par exemple, en France, un contribuable qui omet de déclarer dûment ses revenus peut être poursuivi et pénalisé à la fois par l'Administration fiscale pour absence de déclaration fiscale (article 1728 Code général des impôts) et par le tribunal correctionnel pour fraude fiscale (article 1741 du Code général des impôts). Mais le problème se pose également à l'échelle communautaire et relève ainsi directement du champ d'application de la future Charte. En effet, une entente anticoncurrentielle peut porter atteinte à la fois aux prescriptions d'un Etat membre et à celles du droit communautaire, et donner lieu en conséquence à deux poursuites, l'une nationale, l'autre communautaire. Bien loin de constituer des hypothèses d'école, ces cas de figure ont donné lieu à une jurisprudence abondante, dont on ne citera que quelques exemples (Cass. crim. fr., 20 juin 1996 ; Cass. Crim. fr., 6 nov. 1997 ; CJCE 13 fév. 1969, Walt Wilhem, aff. 14-68 : Rec. 1 ; CJCE, 14 déc. 1972 ; Boehringer, aff. 7-72 : Rec. 1181). Dans toutes ces affaires, la règle non bis in idem a été écartée par les juridictions saisies et la double poursuite validée. Pour éviter d'être trop longue, je ne m'attarderai pas davantage sur ces décisions. En revanche, il s'avère particulièrement opportun d'analyser, ne serait-ce que brièvement, la jurisprudence de la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme, puisque cette dernière a été confrontée à la règle non bis in idem telle que formulée à l'article 4 protocole 7 additionnel CEDH, dont est inspiré l'article 11 du projet de Charte.

2. La Cour européenne des droits de l'homme confrontée à l'article 4 protocole 7 additionnel à la CEDH.

Pour se persuader de l'insuffisance de la rédaction de la règle non bis in idem dans les deux textes susvisés, il suffit d'observer la jurisprudence de la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme, qui a été confrontée au problème lors des affaires Gradinger contre Autriche (23 octobre 1995) et Oliveira contre Suisse (30 juillet 1998). Par souci de concision, je ne m'attarderai qu'à la seconde d'entre elles.

Mme Oliveira avait provoqué un accident de la circulation entraînant la blessure grave d'une personne. Elle a été condamnée une première fois par le tribunal de police (Polizeirichteramt) pour défaut de maîtrise du véhicule en raison de la non-adaptation de la vitesse aux conditions de circulation (article 31 et 32 de la loi sur la circulation routière). Puis un an et demi plus tard, elle a été poursuivie de nouveau devant le tribunal cantonal (Bezirksgericht), cette fois pour lésions corporelles par négligence (article 125 du Code pénal), et a été une seconde fois condamnée. Alors que la Commission, s'appuyant sur la jurisprudence Gradinger de 1995, avait conclu par 24 voix contre 8 à la violation de l'article 4 du protocole 7, la Cour a estimé par 8 voix contre 1 que ladite disposition n'avait pas été violée. Les juges ont motivé leur décision de la manière suivante : « Il s'agit là d'un cas typique de concours idéal d'infractions, caractérisé par la circonstance qu'un fait pénal unique se décompose en deux infractions distinctes, en l'occurrence l'absence de maîtrise du véhicule et le fait de provoquer par négligence des lésions corporelles (...). Il n'y a là rien qui contrevienne à l'article 4 protocole 7, dès lors que celui-ci prohibe de juger deux fois une même infraction, alors que dans le concours idéal d'infractions, un même fait pénal s'analyse en deux infractions distinctes » (§ 26). On observe ici une illustration très éclairante sur les lacunes de l'article 4 protocole 7 : en interdisant le cumul de poursuites et de sanctions dans le seul cas où la qualification lors de la seconde procédure est strictement identique à la première, cette disposition ne permet pas d'éviter toutes les doubles poursuites ni toutes les doubles condamnations.

Les juges de Strasbourg n'ont d'ailleurs pas manqué de relever expressément dans le corps de l'arrêt les inconvénients liés à ce système : « Il aurait certes été plus conforme aux principes d'une bonne administration de la justice que, les deux infractions provenant d'un même fait pénal, elle fussent sanctionnées par une seule juridiction, dans une procédure unique » (§ 27). En outre, dans son opinion dissidente, M. le juge Repik insiste sur le souci « d'assurer au prévenu que son sort ne sera pas remis en question, c'est-à-dire de lui assurer qu'il ne sera pas deux ou plusieurs fois exposé aux contraintes des poursuites pénales et condamné pour la même cause » (voir aussi R. Merle et A. Vitu : Traité de droit criminel. Procédure pénale, Cujas, 4^{ème} édition, 1989, p. 878). Ces différentes observations invitent à s'interroger sur les valeurs profondes que tend à protéger la règle non bis in idem. Immanquablement, cette réflexion laisse bien vite apparaître des arguments de fond en faveur de la révision de la rédaction actuelle de la règle qui, en l'état, n'assure pas pleinement la sauvegarde des valeurs qu'elle est censée protéger.

3. Les arguments de fond en faveur de la révision de la formulation de la règle non bis in idem.

Si elle contribue assurément à la réalisation d'une bonne administration de la justice, ainsi que le mentionnent les juges de la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme dans l'arrêt Oliveira, la règle non bis in idem tend avant tout à protéger l'individu contre la menace permanente d'être à nouveau poursuivi alors qu'il a déjà répondu de ses actes devant la justice : c'est cet élément essentiel que souligne M. le juge Repik dans son opinion dissidente. En effet, la suspension d'une véritable épée de Damoclès au-dessus de la tête des justiciables est insupportable car elle porte assurément atteinte à leur sécurité juridique. Or, comme l'explique la doctrine juridique allemande, la sécurité juridique des justiciables est l'un des éléments fondamentaux de l'Etat de droit. En outre, en ce qu'elle le réduit à un simple objet de la justice, la menace permanente d'être poursuivi à nouveau n'est pas compatible avec le respect de la dignité humaine. Enfin, elle limite nécessairement la liberté, au sens non pas physique mais psychologique, du justiciable (pour plus de détails sur ces divers arguments, voir notamment Schmidt-Assmann, in Grundgesetz Kommentar, von Theodor Maunz / Günter Dürig / Roman Herzog, Art. 103 III, n° 258 à 260).

En considération de l'aspect fondamental de ces valeurs que se doit de protéger la règle non bis in idem, il serait bien regrettable de reprendre telle quelle la rédaction insatisfaisante de l'article 4 protocole 7 additionnel à la CEDH pour la future Charte, alors que la correction de cette rédaction n'est pas si délicate ni aventureuse qu'on peut l'imaginer.

4. Proposition d'une nouvelle rédaction pour l'article 11 de la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Afin d'être efficace, la règle non bis in idem doit, à mon sens, interdire non seulement le cumul de poursuites et de sanctions pour une même infraction, mais également le cumul de poursuites en cas de concours idéal d'infraction. Pour lui permettre d'attendre ce but, une légère modification par rapport à la rédaction actuelle suffit : il s'agit du remplacement des termes « d'une infraction » par les termes « de faits ». On obtient ainsi la formulation suivante :

« Nul ne peut être poursuivi ou puni pénalement en raison de faits pour lesquels il a déjà été acquitté ou condamné par un jugement définitif conformément à la loi ».

Le recours aux termes « des faits » permet de gommer la limitation de la règle au seul cas (bien rare) où la seconde poursuite est formulée de manière exactement identique à la première en termes de qualification juridique. Cette rédaction de l'article 11 rend possible l'interdiction d'une seconde poursuite pour un même fait alors même que celle-ci serait fondée sur une qualification différente. Elle pourra donc être à l'origine d'un progrès significatif en termes de protection de l'individu contre les excès du pouvoir répressif. Mais que les partisans des cumuls de poursuites et de sanctions en cas d'atteinte par un seul fait matériel à plusieurs valeurs sociales juridiquement protégées se rassurent : si cette rédaction permet une évolution par rapport à la jurisprudence Oliveira, elle ne l'impose pas. Comme je tenterai de le démontrer ci-après à la lumière de la jurisprudence française, le recours aux termes « de faits » à la place de « d'une infraction » laisse une grande marge de manœuvre aux potentiels interprètes de la Charte.

4. Une rédaction souple.

Pour expliquer la souplesse de la rédaction proposée, un détour par l'évolution de la jurisprudence française et des textes du Code de procédure pénale s'avère très utile. Dans l'ancien Code d'instruction criminelle, l'article 359 consacrait l'interdiction de reprendre des poursuites « à raison des mêmes faits » (en matière criminelle seulement, ce qui explique les possibilités de cumul en droit français pour tout ce qui relève des autres infractions, ce système étant encore en vigueur aujourd'hui). Aussi surprenant cela puisse-il paraître, deux interprétations radicalement différentes peuvent être données à cette formulation. Le législateur avait probablement voulu exclure l'éventualité d'une seconde poursuite quelle que soit la qualification (Huguency, note sous CA d'Amiens, 12 juillet 1954, Dalloz 1955, p. 317). Il entendait sans doute interdire une seconde poursuite pour les mêmes « faits matériels ». Pourtant, la Cour de cassation française estima dans un premier temps qu'il fallait considérer les faits « juridiquement qualifiés » et non les faits « matériels ». Cette compréhension des termes de l'article 359 engendra une jurisprudence semblable à celle de la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme dans l'arrêt Oliveira. Ce n'est qu'en 1956 que la Cour de cassation fit évoluer sa jurisprudence, pour s'attacher désormais aux faits « matériels ». Ainsi, la double poursuite en matière criminelle devenait impossible même sous une autre qualification. Lors de l'instauration du Code de procédure pénale, le législateur a estimé bon de consolider cette dernière solution en prohibant, à l'article 368 dudit Code, une seconde poursuite « à raison des mêmes faits, même sous une qualification différente ».

L'évolution de la jurisprudence française est, me semble-t-il, très révélatrice de la souplesse de la rédaction que je propose pour l'article 11. Cette dernière ne contraint pas les interprètes à accepter tout type de cumul dès lors que la qualification varie, comme c'est le cas de l'article 4 protocole 7 additionnel à la CEDH, mais elle ne les oblige pas non plus à un refus systématique de tout cumul, qui nécessiterait sans doute des adaptations – certes souhaitables mais non bénignes – de l'articulation entre les ordres juridiques internes et l'ordre juridique communautaire. Remettons-en nous donc à la sagesse des juges, en leur donnant des instruments à la fois ouverts à l'amélioration de la protection des droits de l'homme et suffisamment souples afin qu'ils puissent apprécier le moment opportun pour engager le changement.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Subject : Draft Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union

LOBBY EUROPEEN DES FEMMES EUROPEAN WOMEN'S LOBBY

POSITION OF THE EWL ON THE NEW DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

At the 1995 World Conference on women, 189 countries agree, "Governments must not only refrain from violating human rights of all women, but must work actively to promote and protect these rights. (...) The gap between the existence of rights and their effective enjoyment derives from a lack of commitment by governments to promoting and protecting these rights" (Beijing Platform for action, 215 & 217).
Women in Europe would consider it a disgrace if European decision-makers fail to comply with this international commitment by simply ignoring them

Having read through the new draft Charter proposed by the Praesidium (Convent 28 issued the 5th of May and Convent 34 from the 16th of May), the European Women's Lobby notices once more the lack of consideration of women's concerns by the authors of the Charter.

The EWL reiterates the fundamental demands formulated in its written contribution of May 2000, urging members of the Convention to integrate women's perspective in the Charter in order to ensure the protection of half the population's interests, meaning women's, and to promote equality between women and men.

1. The principle of equality between women and men in all fields

A provision exclusively dedicated to the unconditional principle of gender equality must be introduced in the first articles of the Charter. It must prohibit direct and indirect discrimination and provide explicitly and precisely for the adoption of positive measures by Member States.

The general principle of non discrimination as proposed in article 22 doesn't lead to a substantial equality between women and men. This general provision constitutes a backlash, since gender discrimination is of a particular and structural nature, affecting women who represent half of the population and not a minority. Women are likely to face different forms of discriminations, on the ground of ethnic origin or disability for example, added to the structural discrimination on the ground of sex. The inclusion of a separate provision prohibiting exclusively gender discrimination would enable a better prevention of multiple discriminations and would allow women to enjoy effectively all fundamental rights and freedoms and to be full citizens in all areas.

The EWL therefore welcomes the amendment n° 470 tabled by MM Einem and Holoubek aiming at dedicating an exclusive and separate provision to equality between women and men, although it has reservations on the terminology used in the amendment.

The Lobby supports also the proposal of amendment n°436 submitted by Mr Fayot aiming at introducing a provision that states «the unconditional and fundamental principle of equality between women and men in all areas», the prohibition of «any discrimination on grounds of sex» as well as the introduction of «positive measures».

Proposal of the EWL:

Article 2. General principle of equality between women and men in all areas

1. The Union shall promote respect for the unconditional and fundamental principle of equality between women and men in all areas of its jurisdiction.
2. Substantive equality between women and men must be established and direct or indirect discrimination on the grounds of sex must be prohibited. Moreover, a gender dimension should be adopted while combating all forms of discrimination in order to eradicate multiple discrimination that many women face.
3. Positive measures should be implemented to improve women's situation until substantive and effective equality between women and men is achieved.

At this stage, it is not appropriate to specify that this provision should be applicable to the area of work, since the principle of equality between women and men in the area of working conditions and salaries must constitute a separate provision in the chapter on economic and social rights.

2. Prohibition of gender related violence and persecutions

The provision condemning torture and inhuman treatment should explicitly state that gender related violence or persecution is a form of torture.

Sexual mutilation, whose first victims are women and the girl child, still take place on European territory. This inhuman treatment is a form of torture and should thus be considered as such, as well as other kinds of gender related violence such as rape, domestic violence, forced marriage, “honour” killing, including those which take place within the family.

Proposal of the EWL :

Article 4. Prohibition of torture and inhuman treatment

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman and degrading treatment. This refers to any kind of physical or moral violence, including any kind of gender related violence such as among others female genital mutilations, rape, violence in the home, forced marriage, "honour" killing, also when executed within the family.

3. Principle of PARITY democracy

|                                                                                                                                                        |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| A provision on parity democracy in the Charter is essential to achieve a balanced representation of women and men in decision-making positions. |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

The problem of under representation of women in decision-making positions persists and must be tackled with concrete measures such as the ones already adopted in some Member States. This principle must be integrated in the Charter through a clear and separate provision.

Proposal of the EWL :

New article- Parity Democracy

1. Every citizen of the Union, without any discrimination, has the rights provided by the law of the Union and national law, of an equal access to candidacy for elections and the exercise of the corresponding functions.
 2. A parity democracy, meaning an equal representation of women and men in all the organs and institutions of the Union, should be established as a fundamental principle for both the European integration and the institutions of the Union.
 3. Positive measures should be taken in order to favour equal access of women and men in the governmental and EU bodies as well as in political parties.
- ~~~~~

4. Equality between women and men in the areas of working conditions and salaries

The fundamental principle of equality between women and men in the areas of working conditions and salaries and social protection must be recalled in the part dedicated to economic and social rights, as was the case in the first draft of the Presidium (Convent 18 - article I).
--

A general provision on non-discrimination does not constitute a sufficient measure to fight against the de facto inequality between women and men in the area of working conditions.

Conscious of this gap, European legislators introduced already in 1957 a provision stating clearly the principle of equality between women and men in the area of salaries. The possibility for Member states to adopt positive measures in order to achieve a de facto equality has been included in the Treaty later on – although not in a comprehensive way (Amsterdam 1997, article 141 § 4). The fact that a Charter codifying common values for European countries does not include the principle of equality in the areas of working conditions and salaries constitute an unacceptable backlash in comparison with the progress accomplished by national and European legislations in this field. Integrating the aim of equality in the field of work in the last paragraph of a general provision on non-discrimination in the chapter on civil and political rights cannot legitimately fill this gap.

The Lobby welcomes therefore the amendments submitted by several members of the Convention with the aim of reintroducing the principle of gender equality as stated in the 1st draft. The EWL supports in particular the amendments of A. Rodriguez Berejo (n°0088) and P. Berès (n°0185) that introduce the principle of equal pay for work of equal value as well as the concept of positive measures in an unambiguous way.

Proposal of the EWL:

New article (article31bis) : Equal treatment between women and men

1. Substantial equality between women and men must be ensured and any kind of inequalities must be eliminated with regard to work, employment and social protection. This mainly includes the equal right to freely chose or accept to work, the right to the same working conditions, the right to fair and equal pay for work of equal value, and the equal right to social security and assistance for themselves and their family.
2. Any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of sex is prohibited in the fields quoted in paragraph 1.
3. Positive measures should be implemented to improve women's situation until substantive and effective equality between women and men is achieved in this particular field of employment.

„Recht auf Bildung“ (z.Zt. Art. 16)
der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

In der Arbeitsgemeinschaft Freier Schulen (AGFS) arbeiten die Verbände der Schulen in freier Trägerschaft in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland zusammen (vergl. Fußzeile).

Zu dem aktuellen Entwurf eines Art. 16 „Recht auf Bildung“ gemäß dem Vermerk des Präsidiums vom 5. Mai 2000 (Dokument: CHARTE 4284/00, Convent 28) sowie zu weiteren vorgelegten Vorschlägen nimmt die AGFS wie folgt stellung:

Die AGFS unterstützt die Vorschläge des Europäischen Forum für Freiheit im Bildungswesen (EFFE) vom 10. und 25. April 2000(CHARTE 4215/00, Version multilingue und CHARTE 4253/00, überarbeitete Version nur in deutscher Sprache) mit den beiden zentralen Anliegen,

Mitglieder der AGFS: Arbeitskreis katholischer Schulen in freier Trägerschaft
Arbeitsgemeinschaft Evangelischer Schulbünde e.V.
Bund der Freien Waldorfschulen e.V.
Vereinigung Deutscher Landerziehungsheime
Bundesverband Deutscher Privatschulen, Bildungseinrichtungen in freier Trägerschaft e.V. (VDP)

1. das Elternwahlrecht in Übereinstimmung mit der pädagogischen Überzeugung nicht nur zu respektieren sondern zu gewährleisten und
2. durch gleichberechtigte Förderung aller Schulen - gleich ob in freier oder staatlicher Trägerschaft – auch praktisch zu ermöglichen.

Eine Begründung für diese Forderungen hat das Europäische Parlament bereits in seiner EntschlieÙung zur Freiheit der Erziehung in der Europäischen Gemeinschaft vom 14.3.1984 unter Ziffer I 9 formuliert:

Auch der von der Initiative „Netzwerk Dreigliederung“ vorgelegte Vorschlag für einen Artikel „Recht auf Bildung“ (CHARTE 4164/00) stimmt mit diesen Forderungen inhaltlich überein. Der Formulierungsvorschlag des EFFE wurde mit anderen Europäischen Organisationen des Bildungswesens wie ECNAIS (The European Council of National Associations of Independent Schools), OIDEL (Organisation internationale pour le développement de la liberté), ECSWS (European Council of Steiner Waldorf Schools), die zusammen mehr als 10 Millionen Schüler an Europäischen Schulen in freier Trägerschaft repräsentieren, abgestimmt. Er lautet in der letzten Fassung gem. Dokument CHARTE 4253/00 wie folgt:

Artikel 16: Recht auf Bildung

- (1) Jeder hat das Recht auf Bildung. Dazu gehört der unentgeltliche Zugang zum allgemeinbildenden Unterricht bei gleichen finanziellen Bedingungen für alle allgemeinbildenden Schulen.
- (2) Bildung und Erziehung sind frei. Sie sind auf die volle Entfaltung der Fähigkeiten und Begabungen gerichtet.
- (3) Das Recht der Eltern, Erziehung und Bildung ihrer Kinder entsprechend ihren religiösen, weltanschaulichen und pädagogischen Überzeugungen sicherzustellen, wird garantiert.
- (4) Jeder hat das Recht zur Errichtung und zum Betrieb von Bildungseinrichtungen unter Beachtung der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten. Die freie Wahl der Schule wird garantiert.

Auf die ausführlichen Begründungen zu diesem Vorschlag in den genannten Dokumenten des EFFE wird verwiesen.

Die Arbeitsgemeinschaft richtet an das Konvent die dringende Bitte, diesen Vorschlag wohlwollend zu prüfen und es bei der Formulierung eines Artikels „Recht auf Bildung“ nicht bei einem Minimalkonsens der Mitgliedsstaaten zu belassen sondern sich an den Staaten zu orientieren, in denen die Menschen- und Grundrechte vorbildlich verwirklicht wurden.

Mitglieder des Konvents zur Erarbeitung einer europäischen Charta der Grundrechte

17. Juli 2000

Europäisches Grundrecht der Meinungs- und Informationsfreiheit

Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren, den Landesrundfunkanstalten der ARD, dem Zweiten Deutschen Fernsehen ZDF sowie dem Bundesverband Deutscher Zeitungsverleger BDZV ist zur Kenntnis gelangt, dass Art. 15 der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta eine Überarbeitung erfahren hat. Demnach soll ein Absatz 2 eingefügt werden, nach dem die Presse- und Informationsfreiheit unter Achtung der Transparenz und des Pluralismus gewährleistet wird. Gegenüber dieser Neufassung des Grundrechts bestehen aus der Sicht von ARD, ZDF und BDZV durchgreifende inhaltliche Bedenken.

Die ausdrückliche Erwähnung der Pressefreiheit ohne gleichzeitige Erwähnung der Rundfunkfreiheit sowie der Freiheit der übrigen an die Allgemeinheit gerichteten Kommunikation erweckt den irreführenden Eindruck, als würde nur die Freiheit der Printmedien grundrechtlichen Schutz genießen. Die Aufnahme der Informationsfreiheit vermag dieses Defizit nicht zu kompensieren, da sie nur die Mediennutzer, nicht aber die Anbieter der genannten Massenmedien schützt. Die Rundfunkfreiheit hat sich heute, ebenso wie die Pressefreiheit, wegen ihrer Bedeutung für die freie Meinungsbildung als unerlässlicher Garant für Demokratie und gesellschaftlichen Zusammenhalt erwiesen. In einer modernen, zukunftsweisenden Grundrechtscharta sollte dies ebenso gewürdigt werden wie die neuen Kommunikations- und Informationsmedien, die im Hinblick auf ihre zunehmende Bedeutung als Instrumente auch der Massenkommunikation gleichermaßen ausdrücklich in das Grundrecht mit aufgenommen werden sollten.

Soweit die Überarbeitung des Art. 15 nunmehr den Begriff der Transparenz in den Grundrechtswortlaut eingefügt hat, ist dies nicht sachdienlich. Ist schon der gemeinhin bekannte Begriff des Pluralismus oder der Vielfalt im jeweiligen Kontext unterschiedlich zu werten, so spricht hingegen die Formulierung „Transparenz“ ein diffuses Inhaltsspektrum an. Weder den Verantwortlichen in Presse, Rundfunk und sonstigen Mediendiensten noch den Mediennutzern wird mit diesem Begriff ein klarer Aussagegehalt vermittelt. Entgegen dem Grundanliegen der Charta, den Betroffenen Klarheit und Rechtssicherheit zu verschaffen, werden Auslegungsfragen aufgeworfen und Rechtsunsicherheit geschaffen. Deshalb sollte auf den Begriff der Transparenz in Art. 15 ersatzlos verzichtet werden.

Wir wären den Mitgliedern des Konvents sehr verbunden, wenn sie diesem gemeinsamen Anliegen des öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunks und des Verbandes der Zeitungsverleger in Deutschland Rechnung tragen könnten.

Charter of Fundamental Rights in the European Union

31 May 2000

Proposed Amendments to CONVENT 34 (Social Rights and Horizontal Clauses)

From

The Working Group of the Platform of European Social NGOs

Article 31 Delete – partial incorporation in Article 46

Article 32 Freedom to choose an occupation

Everyone has the right to freely choose and engage in an occupation.

New Article 32A Right to equal remuneration for equal work

Every worker has the right to equal remuneration for work of equal value.

Article 33 Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers and their representatives have the right to information and consultation in good time and in any case before a decision is taken by the central management and/or the management of the undertaking which employs them and this in all situations of company reorganisation and restructuring, including transnational situations, which affect their working conditions and interests.

Article 34 Rights of collective bargaining and action

Employers and workers have the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements, including at European Union level and to take collective action, in cases of conflicts of interest, to defend their economic and social interests, including at European Union level. [words deleted] The right to take collective action includes the right to strike and to organise sympathy strikes, including at European level.

Article 35. Right to rest periods and annual leave

Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave of at least 4 weeks.

Article 36. Safe and healthy working conditions

Every worker has the right to safe and healthy working conditions.

Workers' representatives have the right, in co-operation with management, to evaluate and where necessary to improve the safety and health situation in the enterprise.

Work accidents or professional diseases must create the right to adequate social security benefits.

Article 37. Protection of children and young people at work

The minimum age of admission to employment must not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people, in particular those ensuring their preparation for work through vocational training and subject to derogations limited to certain light work.

Children and young people admitted to work must have working conditions which suit their age and protect their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development and do not jeopardise their education.

Article 38. Right to protection in cases of termination of employment

All workers have a right to protection against discriminatory, unjustified or abusive termination of employment. In these situations the workers will have an unlimited right of access to independent justice to contest the termination as well as the right to adequate financial compensation and/or reinstatement.

Member States will define for certain groups of workers, such as pregnant women, trade union and workers' representatives a temporary prohibition for termination of their employment.

Article 39. Right to reconcile family and professional life

All workers have the right to reconcile their family and professional lives. This right includes in particular the right to paid maternity leave of at least 14 weeks before and/or after childbirth and the right to paid parental leave of at least three months following the birth or adoption of a child.

Article 40. Right of migrant workers to equal treatment

Third-country nationals working lawfully in the territory of the Member States are entitled to treatment not less favourable than that of European Union workers in respect of all working conditions, including pay as well as in respect of social security and social assistance.

Article 41. Social security and social assistance

1. Everyone has the right to social protection, including an adequate level of social security benefits in the event of maternity, illness, dependence or old age, and in the event of unemployment in accordance with each Member State's own procedures.

2. Every person must, from the age of retirement, be able to enjoy resources affording him or her a decent standard of living.

3. Any person who is without adequate resources must receive appropriate social assistance, including a minimum income enabling him/her to live in dignity.

4. Everyone has the right of access to quality social services.

New Article 41A Right to Housing

Provision shall be made for ensuring access to decent housing for everyone.

Article 43. Rights of disabled persons to social and professional integration

All disabled persons, whatever the origin and nature of their disability, are entitled to additional specific measures aimed at guaranteeing their full social and professional integration. These specific measures must include areas such as employment and vocational training, education, transport, culture, housing and public buildings and information.

New Article 43A Right to Protection Against Vulnerability

Provision shall be made to guarantee that vulnerable persons, notably disabled people, impoverished people, socially excluded people, and migrants, shall benefit fully and equally from all rights set down in this Charter of Fundamental Rights.

New Article 45A Access to services of general interest

1. Everyone has the right to services of general interest of guaranteed quality in all sectors which contribute to the quality of life, to life-long development, and more generally to the guarantee of fundamental rights. The provision of services of general interest is based on the principles of equality of access, universality, continuous provision, democratic accountability, and transparency.

2. The exercise of the right to free provision of services, and thus the right to competition, the right to insurance and the right to free access to public-sector markets can be limited in favour of the general interest.

Article 46. Scope

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions and bodies of the Union and to the social partners within the framework of the powers conferred on them by the Treaties, and to the Member States exclusively within the scope of Union law.
2. This Charter does not establish any competence or any new task for the Community or the Union or modify competences [four words deleted] defined by the Treaties.

Politische Beschlüsse des Bundesausschusses 02-00 der JEF Deutschland 08-09/07/2000 in München

Anbei die beiden zentralen politischen Beschlüsse des BA München:

BESCHLUSS 1

EU-Grundrechtscharta als Grundstein für eine Europäische Verfassung

Die Jungen Europäischen Föderalisten Deutschland (JEF-D) begrüßen die Einsetzung und transparente Arbeit des Konvents zur Schaffung einer europäischen Charta der Grundrechte.

Die JEF-D bedauern es sehr, dass sich auf dem Europäischen Rat in Feira angezeichnet hat, dass es den Staats- und Regierungschefs sehr schwer fallen wird, einstimmig dafür zu stimmen, der Grundrechtscharta schon in Nizza rechtsverbindlichen Charakter zu verleihen.

Die JEF-D fordern:

1. Die Schaffung der Grundrechtscharta darf nur erster Schritt hin zu einer echten Europäischen Verfassung sein, die einem Grundrechtskatalog eine klare Kompetenzabgrenzung zwischen Mitgliedstaaten und EU hinzufügt und grundlegende institutionelle Änderungen vornimmt.
2. Eine Europäische Verfassung darf nicht im Sinne des traditionellen Verständnisses einer nationalstaatlichen Verfassung, sondern muss als gesellschaftlicher Grundlagenvertrag der europäischen Bürgerinnen und Bürger verstanden werden.
3. Dementsprechend muss die Ausarbeitung einer weitergehenden Verfassung einem Konvent überantwortet werden, der nach dem Vorbild des derzeitigen Grundrechtskonvents aus Vertreterinnen und Vertretern des Europäischen Parlaments und der Europäischen Kommission sowie der Parlamente und der Regierungen der Mitgliedstaaten zusammengesetzt ist, ebenso transparent arbeitet und zivilgesellschaftlichen Organisationen die Möglichkeiten der Partizipation eröffnet.
4. Die EU-Grundrechtscharta muss ungeachtet der Diskussionen des Europäischen Rates von Feira bindenden Charakter erhalten, so dass sich die Bürgerinnen und Bürger unmittelbar vor den Gerichten auf die Charta berufen können.
5. Als erster Schritt muss die Charta daher bereits in Nizza in die Europäischen Gründungsverträge integriert werden. Mittelfristig müssen wir aber von der Vertrags- zur Verfassungslogik gelangen.
6. Die Bindung der europäischen Recht anwendenden hoheitlichen Einrichtungen an die Charta muss sichergestellt werden; aber auch der objektiven Werteordnung, die eine solche Charta normieren wird, muss ausreichend Rechnung getragen werden.

Begründung:

Seit Ende 1999 arbeitet der EU-Grundrechtskonvent aufgrund der Schlussfolgerungen der Europäischen Räte von Köln und Tampere 1999 an der Schaffung einer EU- Grundrechtscharta. Eine solche Charta wird die Identifikation der Bürgerinnen und Bürger der Europäischen Union erheblich erhöhen können.

Die besondere Bedeutung der Grundrechtscharta ergibt sich daraus, dass sie die EU auf dem Weg zu einer europäischen Verfassung einen wichtigen Schritt voranbringen könnte.

Das vom Europäischen Rat dem Konvent übertragene Mandat ist zwar auf die Erarbeitung der Grundrechtscharta beschränkt. Wir appellieren jedoch an alle europäischen Politikerinnen und Politiker, den Grundrechtschartaprozess zu einem umfassenden europäischen Verfassungsprozess auszubauen.

Verfassung heißt dabei für uns nicht Staat. Das Verfassungsverständnis des 19. Jahrhunderts hat sich überlebt, für Europa, wie auch für seine Gliederungen. Verfassung heißt vielmehr Selbstorganisation der Bürgerinnen und Bürger mittels einer rechtlichen Grundlage. Das heutige Europa der Nationalstaaten muss daher durch ein Europa der Bürgerinnen und Bürger abgelöst werden, die bisherige Vertragslogik einer Verfassungslogik weichen.

Eine solche Bürgerverfassung müssen sich die Bürgerinnen und Bürger selbst geben. Verfassungsgebendes Organ muss daher ein Konvent sein, der aus gewählten Bürgervertreterinnen und Bürgervertretern besteht und zivilgesellschaftliche Gruppierungen einbezieht.

Es reicht nicht aus, dass der aktuelle Grundrechtskonvent eine weitere Deklaration schafft, die den Bürgerinnen und Bürgern viel verspricht, aber keine einklagbaren Rechte an die Hand gibt.

Zwar wird eine verbindliche EU-Grundrechtscharta grundsätzlich nur die EU-Recht anwendenden Organe der EU und der Mitgliedstaaten binden. Dennoch wird, ähnlich wie in einigen Verfassungen der Mitgliedstaaten, dieser Katalog von Grundrechten nicht nur Individualrechte schaffen, sondern darüber hinaus eine objektive Werteordnung normieren.

BESCHLUSS 2:

Bis 2010 eine gesamteuropäische Föderation schaffen!

- Erweiterungsprozess voranbringen -

Die Jungen Europäischen Föderalisten Deutschland (JEF-D) fordern die europäischen Institutionen und die Parlamente und Regierungen der Mitgliedstaaten und der Kandidatenstaaten auf, das Jahr 2000 zu nutzen, um konkrete Fortschritte bei der Vertiefung und Erweiterung Europas zu erreichen. Die Europäische Union muss sich zum einen selbst aufnehmenfähig machen. Zugleich muss mit vereinten Kräften daran gearbeitet werden, die Kandidatenstaaten beitragsfähig zu machen und die Beitrittsverhandlungen zügig voranzubringen.

Spätestens im Jahr 2010 sollten folgende Ziele erreicht werden:

1. Alle zwölf Staaten, mit denen heute verhandelt wird, sollten Mitglied der EU sein.
2. Die Annäherung der Türkei und der anderen Staaten Südosteuropas an die EU sollte beschleunigt worden sein.
3. Umfassende Reformen der EU-Institutionen und der Entscheidungsverfahren, eine rechtsverbindliche Grundrechtscharta, eine bessere Kompetenzabgrenzung und eine Reform der Finanzverfassung und der ausgaben-trächtigen Politiken sollten uns auf dem Weg zu einer demokratischen, bürgernahen, solidarischen und nachhaltigen gesamteuropäischen Föderation entscheidend vorangebracht haben.

I. Konstitutionelle Reformen der EU: In 2000 große Fortschritte nötig, bald mehr!

Eine ausreichende Reform der EU-Institutionen ist unabdingbare Voraussetzung für die Aufnahme neuer Mitgliedstaaten: Die Regierungskonferenz zur Überarbeitung der EU-Verträge, die bis zum Europäischen Rat in Nizza im Dezember 2000 zu Ergebnissen kommen soll, darf bei den institutionellen Reformen nicht zu einer „kleinen Lösung“ kommen. Die Bewältigung allein der sogenannten „left-overs“ von Amsterdam, d.h. die Stimmengewichtung im Ministerrat, die Erweiterung der Anwendung von Mehrheitsentscheidungen im Rat und die Zahl der Mitglieder der Europäischen Kommission, wird nicht zu einem effektiven politischen System führen, welches die beinahe Verdopplung der Mitgliedsländer verkraften kann. Eine bloße technische Anpassung ist nicht ausreichend, umfassendere Reformen der Institutionen sind nötig: Es müssen große Schritte hin zum Ziel eines Zwei-Kammer-Parlaments bestehend aus einer Bürger- und einer Staatenkammer (hervorgehend aus dem heutigen Europäischen Parlament und dem heutigen Rat) und der Weiterentwicklung der Europäischen Kommission zur Europäischen Regierung gemacht werden.

Besonders wichtig ist, dass die Einstimmigkeitsregel im Ministerrat mit der Ausnahme von Vertragsänderungen vollständig aufgehoben wird. Es sollte darüber hinaus im Vertrag von Nizza ein konkretes Datum festgelegt werden, zu dem Verhandlungen über weitere grundlegende Reformen der EU beginnen sollen. Vorgeschlagen wird diese Verhandlungen Anfang 2003 und damit bald nach dem voraussichtlichen Inkrafttreten des Vertrages von Nizza zu beginnen. Die künftigen Vertragsänderungen dürfen nicht mehr allein von einer Regierungskonferenz ausgehandelt werden. Die JEF-D fordert, dass zur Vorbereitung der nächsten Reformen nach dem Vorbild des Grundrechtskonventes ein inter-institutioneller Konvent bestehend aus Vertretern des Europäischen Parlaments, der Europäischen Kommission sowie der Parlamente und Regierungen der jetzigen und zukünftigen Mitgliedstaaten eingesetzt wird. Dies wäre ein wichtiger Schritt hin zu einer wahren Verfassung der europäischen Bürgerinnen und Bürger.

II. Erweiterungsprozess beschleunigen!

Die Europäische Union hat mit der Aufnahme von Beitrittsverhandlungen mit weiteren sechs Staaten Mittel- und Osteuropas im Februar 2000 einen wichtigen Beitrag zur Stabilisierung der politischen und wirtschaftlichen Situation in diesen Ländern geleistet. Beitrittsverhandlungen mit nun insgesamt zwölf Staaten sind zwar für beide Seiten schwierig, doch müssen die Verhandlungen wegen ihrer historischen Bedeutung nun mit noch größerer Energie voran gebracht werden.

Die JEF-D sieht dabei folgende zentrale Grundprinzipien.

Die Beitrittsverhandlungen mit den Staaten der ersten Runde, Estland, Polen, Slowenien, Tschechien, Ungarn und Zypern, müssen beschleunigt werden; auch in den sensiblen Kapiteln wie Freizügigkeit, Umwelt, Agrar und Bodenerwerb müssen bald erste Ergebnisse erreicht werden. In den Beitrittsverhandlungen mit Bulgarien, Lettland, Litauen, Malta, Rumänien und der Slowakei sollte es für die weit fortgeschrittenen Staaten möglich sein, zur ersten Gruppe aufzuschließen.

Auf dem Europäischen Rat in Nizza sollte ein Zieldatum für den Abschluss der Beitrittsverhandlungen mit den ersten Staaten gesetzt werden, um die beiderseitigen Anstrengungen zur Lösung der auftauchenden Fragen nach der bewährten Manier des Starttermins für den Binnenmarkt und die Währungsunion zu verstärken. Als Zieldatum wird der 31. Dezember 2001 vorgeschlagen. Ausnahme- und Übergangsregeln für die neuen und die alten Mitgliedstaaten sollten nur in geringem Umfang und für maximal 10 Jahre zugelassen werden, um die neuen Mitglieder nicht zu Mitgliedern zweiter Klasse werden zu lassen.

Die Vorbereitung der Erweiterung in den Kandidatenstaaten darf sich nicht auf die (technische) Anpassung der Gesetzgebung, Verwaltung und Wirtschaft erschöpfen. Hinzukommen muss eine Aufklärung aller Bürgerinnen und Bürger über die EU und die mit einem Beitritt verbundenen positiven und negativen Konsequenzen. Die bis vor zwei Jahren euphorisch positive Haltung der meisten Bürgerinnen und Bürger in den Beitrittsstaaten unterliegt jetzt, wo zum Teil schmerzhaften Anpassungsmaßnahmen in Angriff genommen werden, einem nicht zu unterschätzenden Wandel. Der Transformationsprozess in den Beitrittsstaaten wird auch weiterhin zu einem radikalen Umbau der wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Verhältnissen führen. Es gilt, die Bürgerinnen und Bürger darauf vorzubereiten und die größten sozialen Härten abzufedern. Auch in den derzeitigen EU-Mitgliedstaaten werden die Beitritte zu Veränderungen führen. Auch hier werden für besondere Härten Ausgleichsmaßnahmen nötig werden. Eine umfassende Information und Diskussion aller politischen und gesellschaftlichen Gruppen in den Mitglied- und den Beitrittsstaaten über die Auswirkungen der EU-Erweiterung kann die Chancen der Erweiterung herausstellen und die Gefahren der Erweiterung entmystifizieren.

III. Weitere interne Reformen der EU nötig

Die EU muss mit Blick auf die Erweiterung neben institutionellen Reformen auch Reformen verschiedener Politikbereiche voranbringen: Insbesondere in der Agrar- und Strukturpolitik wird es zu umfassenden Reformen kommen müssen. Die beim Europäischen Rat in Berlin im März 1999 im Rahmen der Agenda 2000 beschlossenen Reformen sind mittelfristig nicht ausreichend. Um die neuen Mitglieder in die Gemeinsame Agrarpolitik integrieren zu können, sollte es noch vor den ersten Beitritten und damit vor 2006 zu einer weiteren Senkung der Garantiepreise und im Gegenzug zu einer am allgemeinen Einkommensniveau der jeweiligen Staaten orientierten angemessenen Erhöhung der direkten Einkommensbeihilfen kommen. Eine umfassende Politik für die Integration zwischen ländlichem und städtischem Raum muss den auch für die Zukunft zu erwartenden Arbeitsplatzabbau in der Landwirtschaft in Mittel- und Osteuropa durch Alternivarbeitsplätze vor Ort abfedern. Auch die EU-Strukturpolitik und das System der EU-Eigenmittel bedürfen vor Aufnahme der ersten Neumitglieder einer weiteren Revision.

IV. Partnerschaft mit allen anderen Europäerinnen und Europäern intensivieren!

Durch Assoziierungsverträge neuen Typs, die unter anderem eine Unterstützung beim Aufbau von demokratischen und rechtsstaatlichen Institutionen und bürgergesellschaftlichen Strukturen und eine Marktöffnung vorsehen müssen, sollten auch alle anderen Staaten Südosteuropas (Albanien, Bosnien-Herzegowina, Kroatien, Mazedonien, Moldawien), nach einem Übergang zur Demokratie auch die Bundesrepublik Jugoslawien bzw. Serbien, Montenegro und das Kosovo stärker an den Integrationsprozess herangeführt werden. Mittelfristig erscheint eine Aufnahmeperspektive möglich.

Für die Türkei müssen im Beitrittsprozess dieselben Kriterien wie für die Staaten Mittel- und Osteuropas gelten. Sollte die Einhaltung der fundamentalen Menschen- und Minderheitenrechte sowie die Stabilisierung der Demokratie in der Türkei erreicht sein, können konkrete Beitrittsverhandlungen begonnen werden. Die EU sollte die Türkei aktiv dabei unterstützen, die Aufnahmekriterien zu erfüllen.

Die politischen und wirtschaftlichen Beziehungen zwischen der EU und Russland, der Ukraine, Weißrussland und den kaukasischen Republiken sollten ausgebaut werden. Diese Zusammenarbeit mit dem Ziel der Stärkung von Wohlstand, Nachhaltigkeit und Frieden kann für die Ukraine, Weißrussland und die kaukasischen Republiken bei Erfüllung der Demokratie und Menschenrechtsstandards mit einer Beitrittsperspektive verbunden werden, sollte jedoch im Hinblick auf Russland nicht durch eine derzeit unrealistisch erscheinende Beitrittsperspektive belastet werden.

Sollten die Schweiz, Norwegen und Island beitreten wollen, wäre dies sehr zu begrüßen.

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU : for the inclusion of economic and social rights

Since the Convention began its work on a draft of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU, the FIDH has, along with numerous other non-governmental and labour organisations, requested the inclusion of economic and social rights in the Charter. In the absence of such rights, the added value of the Charter would be weak, or even, nil.

Today, the works of the Convention are well ahead regarding civic and political rights. On the other hand, economic and social rights are still subject to vivid discussions . That is the reason why the FIDH wishes to take advantage of this opportunity to stress the weaknesses of the EU's protection of economic and social rights, and to examine why, from this point of view, it is essential for the Charter to unequivocally sanction such rights and recognise them as legally binding.

Until now, the EU has not endowed itself with an effective European social policy. Although the new Charter is not supposed to be a substitute for such a policy, it has nevertheless three main advantages : it will (1) avoid a regression in that field, (2) guide the future Community legislation and (3) guide the Statute law of the European Court of Justice (ECJ).

è It must be noted that the future Charter will have a restricted field of application : Indeed, the project of article 49 states that the Charter will be directed to the institutions and the agencies of the Union, as well as to the Member States, when implementing Community Law¹. It specifies that the Charter neither creates any power or new tasks for the Community and the Union, nor modifies the powers and tasks defined by the treaties.

Therefore , it will be possible for the rights sanctioned in the Charter to be put forward on the one hand, in relation to the acts of the institutions of the European Community and Union, and on the other hand, in relation to the acts of the Member States situated within the jurisdiction of Community law². These rights are therefore conceived as limitations brought to the use that the institutions of the Union can make of their powers, or to that of the Member States, when the use of these powers is situated in the field of application of Community law.

Thus, the new Charter will oblige neither Member States to guarantee economic and social rights in their national legislation, nor the EU to legislate in that field. However, it will have the effect of impeding Member States, while adopting Community law, to reduce the existing social guarantees to a level lower than the one established by the Charter. As a consequence, it is important that the Charter establish the highest level of protection possible, in order for it to constitute a real guarantee against such an evolution. By doing so, the EU will be able to exercise its powers in the economic and social fields, with no risk of diminishing social guarantees.

è Furthermore, the Charter will sanction social principles that should afterwards guide the action of the European Union in the social field, fixing goals to be attained. It is desirable for the Commission to make use of its power of initiative in the social field, in order to harmonise the obligations of the Member States upwards³: the future Community rules will have to aim at realising social principles that will be established within the Charter. It will be the same for the legislation adopted by Member States when acting in the field of application of Community law. The Charter will therefore have a real added value in this respect.

² It means that either they implement Community law, or they claim to bring a restriction to a freedom recognised by Community law, in the respect of the conditions fixed by Community law itself.

³ The principle of subsidiarity allows a Community intervention in a field which is not exclusively of Community jurisdiction « only if and insofar as the objectives of the proposed action cannot be sufficiently achieved by the Member States and can therefore, by reason of the scale or effects of the proposed action, be better achieved by the Community », cf. article 5, al. 2, EC.

è Furthermore, the Charter will constitute a reference for the European Court of Justice (ECJ). If it has a constraining power, the Court will have to verify the conformity of Community legislation (or of the national legislation implementing it) to the Charter. As far as possible, it will confer on the Community legislation an interpretation congruent with the Charter. Even if the Charter is not binding, the Court will probably refer to it in order to interpret Community law.

A thorough analysis of the jurisprudence of the ECJ demonstrates that the Court allows Member States to adopt certain measures liable to hinder exchanges in order to maintain a high level of social protection⁴. Given that the ECJ will find that the Community law conforms with the economic and social rights that will be established in the Charter, the risk that the ECJ would require from the Member States to reduce the social guarantees in order to conform with Community law would be even more limited than now.

In the case where a Member State offers social guarantees executing international conventions that came into force in its respect before its accession to the European Community, art. 307 of the Treaty instituting the European Community provides in its paragraph 1 that the rights and obligations arising from conventions concluded by a Member State with one or more third countries before its accession to the EC are not affected by the Treaty. Paragraph 2 specifies that « To the extent that such agreements are not compatible with this Treaty, the Member State or States concerned shall take all appropriate steps to eliminate the incompatibilities established ».

It is possible to fear that this second line of the paragraph would compel the considered Member State to denounce the international convention in question in the case when it would stand in the way of the integral respect of this State's obligations resulting from Community law . In this case also, while consecrating economic and social rights, the Charter would provide the Court with a reference allowing it to interpret art 307.2 of the EC Treaty in conformity with the social objectives of the EU.

Given the potential added value of the Charter in the social field, FIDH regrets that some social rights - as standing now in the projects of articles of the future Charter - are worded in a less precise manner than social rights established in the revised European Social Charter and in the Community Charter of fundamental social rights of the workers (1989).

The definition that the project of the Charter provides of the right to social security and social assistance⁵ is far less explicit than article 12 of the Revised European Social Charter - which resumes, except for one modification, article 12 of the European Social Charter of October 18, 1961 ; the article devoted to « health care » in the Charter⁶ gathers, in a sole disposition, the far more developed dispositions of articles 11 and 13 of the Revised European Social Charter, devoted respectively to « the right to health protection » and to « the right to social and medical assistance » (informal translation)⁷..

In addition, with regard to the social rights established in the international human rights instruments, the Charter has some loop-holes. Indeed, it does not mention the rights of workers' representatives to protection within the company, against acts that could cause them prejudice because of their specific quality and their right to « appropriate facilities in order to allow them to function rapidly and effectively» (informal translation), when the Revised European Social Charter provides this guarantee (art. 28). It is silent on the right of the elderly to « continue as long as possible as members of society », to « freely choose their way of life and to lead an independent life in their usual environment as long as they wish and as is possible », and, finally, regarding the elderly living in institutions, to enjoy a private life and to have the possibility of participating in the determination of the living conditions in the institution (art. 23 - informal translation).

These omissions are even more astonishing in that sometimes, subsidiary Community law has already intervened in order to recognise these rights. Thus, although the project of Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union does not mention the right of the worker to dignity at work, which means, more particularly, the protection against harassment (art. 26 of the Revised European Charter), two instruments already exist at the Community level aiming at harassment, considered as a form of discrimination regarding employment⁸. Also, workers rights to the protection of their credit in the case of insolvency of their employer has been the object of a Community directive⁹, and nevertheless - although it is a right protected by article 25 of the Revised European Social Charter - does not appear in the Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union.

⁶ Project of article 33.

⁷ The right to social and medical assistance, as defined by the Revised European Social Charter, is nevertheless partly recognised by article 32, § 3, of the project CHARTE 4422/00, CONVENT 45, July 28 2000 («The Union recognises and respects the right to social assistance and housing benefit in order to ensure a decent existence for persons lacking sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Community law and national law and practices»).

What is more, the horizontal clause headed « level of protection » does not fill this gap ; following the terms of this disposition, the Charter will neither be interpreted as limitative of, or interfering with, the rights recognised by international law and international conventions to which the Union, the Community or ALL Member States are party, nor by the Constitutions of the Member States¹⁰.

NOW, the Revised European Charter, whose terms are more protective than the projects of articles of the new Charter, does not bind all Member States. This means that the Community judge will not be able to make it prevail over the new Charter, even if its dispositions are more protective¹¹.

This is why the FIDH appeals to the drafters of the Charter to introduce, in the horizontal clause related to the level of protection, a reference to the more protective dispositions, even if these bind only one Member State ; this seems even more justified given that this clause does refer to the Constitutions of Member States when these, by definition, only bind one Member State !

Recommendations :

- The FIDH appeals to the Convention to reinforce and complete the wording of economic and social rights now presented in the projects of articles on economic and social rights, taking its inspiration more particularly from the Revised European Social Charter.

Il existe également un projet de directive amendant la directive 76/207/CE interdisant le harcèlement sexuel sur le lieu de travail, proposé sur la base de l'article 13 CE.

¹⁰ Project of article 51.

¹¹ It will be the same for some conventions of the ILO.

- The FIDH also appeals to the drafters of the Charter to modify the horizontal clause related to the level of protection in order to include in it a reference to any international convention more protective binding for at least one Member State.
- Finally, the FIDH appeal to Member States to decide in favour of a constraining Charter whose respect could be ensured by the ECJ.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 31 August 2000CHARTE 4437/00*CONTRIB 291*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Newspaper Publishers' Association (ENPA) .¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

Dear Madam,

Dear Sir,

the European Newspaper Publishers' Association (ENPA) presented a statement on Article 15 of the Draft Charter (Doc 4149/00) at the public hearing of the Convention on 27 April 2000.

The Convention has recently published an amended proposal (Doc 4360/00) that suggests alteration of Article 15, by means of adding a second paragraph. This new provision reads as follows :

« Freedom of press and information shall be guaranteed with due respect for transparency and pluralism. »

We urge the Convention to delete the last part of the provision (« ...with due respect for transparency and pluralism. »). The European Publishers are strongly opposed to this kind of restriction.

By principle, the fundamental right of the Freedom of the Press should not be devalued by such restrictions that would go beyond the ones already established in Article 10 Paragraph 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights. ENPA has given a detailed argumentation to this opinion in its above mentioned statement.

ENPA is very much concerned that the very words « transparency » and « pluralism » will cause confusion. These terms can have different meanings. They lack clarity and certainty. They are open to differing interpretations and applications that could result in unnecessary and unjustified restrictions on freedom of expression and press freedom. The whole of the new paragraph and concepts that it introduces could lead not only to uncertainty but also to potentially detrimental curbs on freedom of expression.

We therefore hope that the Convention reconsiders its proposal so far as the restrictive part of Article 15 Paragraph 2 is concerned.

We also hope that the Convention ensures that exercise of the rights set out in Articles 15 and 18 could not be unnecessarily curtailed by Articles 12 and 19, so that rights to freedom of expression, press freedom and freedom of information will not be unduly restricted.

Further more we seize the opportunity to briefly comment on the published statement by GESAC (Doc : 4404/00). ENPA takes clear opposition to the view of GESAC on the issue of moral rights of authors. Apart from that we see no need for regulating this field in the envisaged Charter. The European Commission (DG Markt) is currently looking into the issue and has in public indicated that there is no reason for harmonisation so far.

Yours sincerely,

Dietmar Wolff

Bruxelles, le 25 Juillet 2000

Monsieur,

L'Union Internationale de la Propriété Immobilière (UIPI) est une organisation non gouvernementale fondée dès 1923 regroupant la plupart des organisations nationales européennes de défense de la propriété immobilière.

A ce titre elle représente directement ou indirectement plusieurs dizaines de millions de citoyens possédant quelque propriété immobilière à usage d'habitation ou commerciale, représentant le plus souvent le fruit de leur épargne.

Il est inutile d'insister sur l'importance économique que revêt le secteur de la construction aussi bien pour l'emploi qu'il procure directement ou indirectement que pour la fonction de logement qu'il remplit pour les personnes non propriétaires de leur logement ou de leur bien.

Il est dès lors évident qu'il est essentiel de disposer en Europe d'un secteur immobilier sain offrant logements, commerces et bureaux en suffisance.

Dans cette optique et compte tenu des raisons exposées plus haut, l'UIPI est particulièrement attentive à la protection de la propriété immobilière aussi bien sur le plan juridique que politique.

C'est seulement en offrant une large protection efficace de la notion de propriété privée et en la respectant que l'on rétablira une confiance nécessaire au développement de ce secteur.

Dans ce cadre, nous nous félicitons tout d'abord de la présence de l'article 16 dans le projet de Charte Européenne des Droits Fondamentaux et nous souhaiterions apporter notre contribution à la rédaction de ce texte pour le rendre aussi précis que possible afin qu'il offre une protection effective du droit de propriété.

L'article 16 est actuellement ainsi formulé :

« Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by the law and by the general principles of international law. »

Nous nous permettons de suggérer les modifications suivantes afin de protéger au mieux les détenteurs d'un titre de propriété.

Remarques préalables :

- 1) Les termes « peaceful enjoyment (paisible jouissance) » sont abstraits. Il est nécessaire d'ajouter « free disposition (libre disposition) » afin de couvrir les besoins actuels.
- 2) Le mot « possessions (possessions) » n'est pas suffisant. Nous proposons d'employer le terme « propriété » qui est plus spécifique.
- 3) Le terme « deprivation (dépossédé/depossession) » ne correspond plus aux besoins actuels de protection du citoyen. De nos jours, les Etats et les autorités de l'Etat ne dépossèdent plus officiellement les citoyens européens de leur propriété immobilière . En lieu et place, ils VIDENT LA PROPRIETE DE TOUTE SA SUBSTANCE ôtant ainsi la signification même de propriété et éliminant de la sorte toute valeur financière, en limitant son usage à l'excès, en imposant une législation environnementale (trop) stricte ou en prolongeant les baux à loyers à l'infini, le plus souvent sans réelle nécessité sociale.

- 4) L'expression « subject to the conditions provided by the law (soumis aux conditions prévues par la loi) » est abstrait et ne protège pas les citoyens européens parce qu'il ne spécifie pas quelle est la protection minimale que chaque législation nationale devrait garantir en pratique aux citoyens européens. Ce qui est manquant dans la phraséologie est la garantie expresse aux détenteurs d'un titre de propriété d'une compensation entière et préalable, dans tous les cas d'une telle violation de ses droits.

NOUVELLE PROPOSITION DE TEXTE

« Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment and free disposition of his property. No one shall be deprived of his property or restricted in its use except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by the law and by the general principles of international law, and entitled to a full and prior compensation of his damage.”

Nous nous tenons à votre disposition pour toute discussion ou collaboration à ce sujet et vous remercions de l'attention bienveillante que vous porterez à nos propositions.

Pour l'UIPI

LOBBY EUROPEEN DES FEMMES
EUROPEAN WOMEN'S LOBBY

3rd of August 2000

PRESS RELEASE

WOMEN EXCLUDED FROM THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS:
GENDER GAP AND SEXIST LANGUAGE

“The EWL very much regrets that despite our numerous proposals and recommendations, the draft Charter of Fundamental rights of the EU does not introduce the concept of gender equality as a basic unconditional and fundamental principle of the Union. To compound the omission, the Charter in the English, German, Spanish and French versions that we have read, uses sexist language in several articles. The Charter, as presently drafted, constitutes a devastating step backwards in the fight against the persistent structural discrimination faced by women all over Europe” said Denise Fuchs, President of the European Women’s Lobby, adding “This exclusively male Presidium once again has failed to integrate women’s perspective into the Charter.”

The EWL notes that the general principle of non-discrimination as proposed by the text of the Charter does not take into consideration the structural discrimination faced by women in all areas. In order to allow women to fully enjoy their fundamental rights and freedoms, to be full citizens in all areas, a provision exclusively dedicated to the unconditional principle of gender equality must be introduced in the first articles of the Charter and must provide explicitly for the adoption of positive measures by Member States. “The sole references to gender equality in the charter are in article 21 where sex is grouped alongside other grounds of discrimination, by implication this positions women as a vulnerable group in society, whereas we represent half of the population, and in article 22 which limits gender equality to the area of employment and work. This is just not acceptable” said Mary Mc Phail, Secretary general of the EWL.

EWL- LEF, 18 rue Hydraulique, B-1210 Bruxelles
Tel. +32 2 217 90 20 – Fax: +32 2 219 84 51 - e-mail: ewl@womenlobby.org
Website: <http://www.womenlobby.org>

Furthermore, the Charter in its English version uses sexist languages several times, for example in article 3(1) “Everyone has the right to respect for his physical and mental integrity”. The EWL stresses that one form of gender discrimination is the use of sexist language. “The use of sexist language, though sometimes unintentional, is nonetheless damaging in excluding women and in rendering our reality and our experience invisible. In the case of the Charter, the political mistake is very serious. The EWL will mobilise women’s organisations all over Europe to fight against this intentionally regressive text” added the President of the EWL.

Other key demands of the EWL are the inclusion of a provision on parity democracy in the Charter; a provision on gender related violence or persecution as a form of torture (Sexual mutilation still take place on European territory, as well as other kinds of gender related violence such as rape, domestic violence, prostitution, forced marriage, “honour” killing, including those which take place within the family).

der Kommission Europa des djB zur

Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Stand: 15. August 2000

Das Präsidium hat Ende Juli einen vollständigen Text der Charta vorgelegt. Der djB begrüßt den Text. Der Grundrechtsstandard ist im wesentlichen sachgerecht formuliert. Für folgende Artikel schlägt der djB Änderungen vor:

1. Recht auf freie Entwicklung der Persönlichkeit

Der djB schlägt vor, nach Art. 3 folgenden neuen Artikel einzufügen:

Artikel 3a Recht auf freie Entwicklung der Persönlichkeit

Alle Menschen haben das Recht, sich frei in ihrer Persönlichkeit zu entwickeln, soweit sie nicht gegen die Rechte anderer oder das Recht der Union verstoßen. Der Kern ihrer Persönlichkeit ist frei von hoheitlicher Einmischung

Begründung:

Eine allgemeine Handlungsfreiheit ist mehreren europäischen Verfassungen bekannt. Ihre Auffangfunktion macht eine Überprüfung der Rechtmäßigkeit jeglicher belastender Eingriffe möglich, insbesondere des auch europarechtlich anerkannten Grundsatzes der Verhältnismäßigkeit.

Als besonders wichtige Ausprägung der Menschenwürde bedarf es eines ausdrücklichen absoluten Schutzes des Persönlichkeitskerns, der auch über den Schutz des Privatlebens im Sinne des Art. 7 hinausgeht.

Der nunmehr in Art. 8 aufgenommene Schutz personenbezogener Daten ist zu begrüßen, aber nicht ausreichend

Die Menschenwürde stellt eine absolute Tabugrenze dar, die klassisch mit Bereichen wie Menschenhandel, Folter, Todesstrafe oder Euthanasie verbunden wird.

Die neuere Rechtsentwicklung und die durch sie reflektierte rasante Entwicklung im technologischen Bereich haben jedoch gezeigt, dass auch Fälle wie die Verwendbarkeit von Tagebucheinträgen, der Schutz des Namens, das Recht auf Kenntnis der eigenen Abstammung etc. den Kernbereich sowohl der allgemeinen Handlungsfreiheit als auch der Menschenwürde berühren. Eine ausdrückliche grundrechtliche Absicherung ist deshalb geboten.

Die Formulierung „Achtung ihres Familienlebens“ in Art. 7 dagegen deutet auf eine Begrenzung des Persönlichkeitsschutzes auf den Bereich außerhalb des Berufs, des öffentlichen Lebens, kurz innerhalb der eigenen vier Wände hin, der zwar notwendig, aber nicht ausreichend ist.

2. Recht, eine Ehe einzugehen und eine Familie zu gründen (Artikel 9)

Der djb schlägt vor, an den bisher einzigen Satz folgenden Satz 2 anzufügen:

Artikel 9 Recht, eine Ehe einzugehen und eine Familie zu gründen

Das Recht, eine Ehe einzugehen, und das Recht, eine Familie zu gründen, werden nach den einzelstaatlichen Gesetzen gewährleistet, welche die Ausübung dieser Rechte regeln. Niemand darf zur Eheschließung gezwungen werden.

Begründung:

Das Recht, eine Ehe einzugehen, ist unvollständig, wenn nicht ausdrücklich der Zwang zur Eheschließung ausgeschlossen wird. Dieser Aspekt ist im Präsidiumsvorschlag nicht berücksichtigt und sollte ergänzt werden.

3. Asylrecht (Artikel 18)

Der djb schlägt vor, den Asylartikel wie folgt neu zu fassen:

Artikel 18 Asylrecht

(1) Jede nicht der Union angehörende Person, die politisch, aus religiösen oder rassistischen Gründen verfolgt wird oder unmenschlicher oder erniedrigender Bestrafung oder Behandlung ausgesetzt ist, hat ein Recht auf Asyl in der Union. Sie hat das Bleiberecht bis zum Abschluss des Verfahrens.

(2) Kollektivabschiebungen von Ausländerinnen und Ausländern sind nicht zulässig.

Begründung:

Das Asylrecht im Präsidiumsvorschlag ist differenzierter zu fassen. Die vorgeschlagene Formulierung ermöglicht die Anerkennung religiöser, rassistischer und frauenspezifischer Fluchtgründe. Der notwendige Abschiebungsschutz ist als Absatz 2 angefügt.

Die Grundrechtscharta hat die Rahmenbedingungen konkret zu formulieren, um dem Erfordernis der Transparenz zu genügen. Es sollte deshalb keine Verweisung auf geltende internationale Abkommen und Verträge im übrigen erfolgen.

4. Gleichheit und Nichtdiskriminierung (Artikel 21)

Der djb schlägt vor, Absatz 1 des Nichtdiskriminierungsartikels wie folgt neu zu fassen:

Artikel 21 Gleichheit und Nichtdiskriminierung

- (1) Unterscheidungen nach der ethnischen oder sozialen Herkunft, der Hautfarbe, der Religion, der politischen Anschauung, der sexuellen Identität oder der Behinderung sind untersagt, sofern sie nicht zum Ausgleich bestehender Nachteile erforderlich sind.*

Begründung:

Der hier vorgeschlagene Abs. 1 entspricht im Kern dem vom Präsidium vorgeschlagenen Art. 21 Abs. 1. Die Rechtsgleichheit wird hier im Sinne genereller rechtlicher Differenzierungsverbote konkretisiert. Kompensatorische Maßnahmen sind ausdrücklich zulässig. Allerdings müssen diese auch erforderlich sein. Die vorgeschlagene Umschreibung des Benachteiligungsverbot ist klarer und juristisch eindeutiger als ein Diskriminierungsverbot. Es sind wesentliche Merkmale ausgewählt worden, die elementaren Unrechtserfahrungen entsprechen. Das vom Präsidium auf der Grundlage der EMRK vorgeschlagene Unterscheidungsverbot nach dem Alter oder dem Vermögen wird abgelehnt. In beiden Fällen existieren vielfältige und allgemein akzeptierte gesetzliche Differenzierungen (Altersgrenzen; Steuer- und Leistungsgesetze), die ein generelles Differenzierungsverbot nicht sachgerecht erscheinen lassen. Der in Artikel 20 verankerte allgemeine Gleichheitssatz bietet hier einen ausreichenden Schutz.

5. Gleichheit von Männern und Frauen (Artikel 22)

Der djb begrüßt die Verankerung der Gleichstellung von Frauen und Männern in einem eigenständigen Artikel. Mehr als die Hälfte der Bevölkerung in den Mitgliedstaaten sind Frauen. Die Rechte von Frauen sind deshalb nicht als ein Aspekt des Minderheitenschutzes zu betrachten.

Der djb schlägt wegen der zu engen Fassung des Präsidiumsvorschlages folgende Neufassung von Artikel 22 vor:

Artikel 22 Gleichstellung von Frauen und Männern

- (1) Die Union ist verpflichtet, die Bedingungen für die Gleichstellung von Frauen und Männern in allen Bereichen zu schaffen und bei allen ihren Maßnahmen die Geschlechtergleichstellung mit einzubeziehen.*
- (2) Neben der Ungleichbehandlung nach dem Geschlecht ist die Verwendung von Kriterien untersagt, die formal geschlechtsneutral sind, jedoch einen erheblich höheren Anteil der Angehörigen eines Geschlechtes betreffen, ohne dass sie durch wichtige Gründe, die nicht auf das Geschlecht bezogen sind, gerechtfertigt werden können.*
- (3) Zur Herstellung tatsächlicher Gleichberechtigung sind Maßnahmen zur Förderung des benachteiligten Geschlechts zulässig.*

Begründung:

Artikelbezeichnung:

Der gebräuchliche Terminus im vorliegenden Politikbereich ist „Gleichstellung“. „Frauen“ sollten vor „Männern“ aufgeführt werden, um der alphabetischen Reihenfolge zu genügen.

Abs. 1:

Die Voraussetzungen der tatsächlichen Gleichberechtigung können von der Union in ihren Zuständigkeitsbereichen verwirklicht werden. Das Ergebnis selbst, wie z.B. die gleiche Teilhabe auf allen Ebenen des Erwerbslebens kann nicht von der Union hergestellt werden. Im zweiten Teilsatz ist der gender-mainstreaming-Ansatz formuliert. Die Union muss die Geschlechtergleichstellung überall mit einbeziehen. Das ergibt sich bereits jetzt aus Artikel 2, 3 Abs. 2 EG-Vertrag. Der Präsidiumsvorschlag engt die Geschlechtergleichstellung auf den Beschäftigungsbereich ein. Eine wie hier vorgeschlagene umfassende Formulierung ist vorzuziehen.

Abs. 2:

Das unmittelbare Diskriminierungsverbot ist in einer Grundrechtscharta festzuschreiben. Dazu gehören auch verdeckte Benachteiligungen, die nur ein Geschlecht betreffen. Die Verankerung eines qualifizierten mittelbaren Diskriminierungsverbotes ist gleichfalls notwendig. Das entspricht der bisherigen Rechtslage.

Abs. 3:

Die Wirklichkeit zeigt deutlich notwendigen Handlungsbedarf, nicht nur im Beschäftigungsbereich. Frauen nehmen anders als Männer am öffentlichen Leben und am Erwerbsarbeitsleben teil. Sie sind in Entscheidungspositionen im wirtschaftlichen und politischen Bereich deutlich unterrepräsentiert, wenn überhaupt vertreten. Im Hinblick auf die effektive Gewährleistung der vollen Gleichberechtigung von Frauen und Männern sind deshalb spezifische Vergünstigungen des benachteiligten Geschlechts beizubehalten oder zu beschließen. Eine Kompensationsklausel, wie hier vorgeschlagen, ist deshalb in die Grundrechtscharta aufzunehmen.

6. Einklang von Familien- und Berufsleben (Artikel 31)

Der djb begrüßt grundsätzlich die Einbeziehung und Weiterentwicklung des Aspektes der Vereinbarkeit des Familien- und Berufslebens und die Überarbeitung der anfänglich vorgeschlagenen Regelungen zu Mutterschutz und Elternurlaub.

Der djb schlägt aber wegen der zu engen Fassung des Präsidiumsvorschlages folgende Neufassung von Artikel 31 vor:

Artikel 31 Vereinbarkeit von Familien- und Berufsleben

- (1) Jede Person hat das Recht auf rechtlichen, wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Schutz ihres Familienlebens.*
- (2) Die Vereinbarkeit von Familien- und Berufsleben ist zu gewährleisten.*
- (3) Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer genießen als Eltern besonderen Schutz. Den Belangen von schwangeren Arbeitnehmerinnen ist besonders Rechnung zu tragen.*

Begründung:Artikelbezeichnung:

Der gebräuchliche Terminus im vorliegenden Politikbereich ist „Vereinbarkeit“.

Abs. 1:

Die Formulierung eines subjektiven Rechts ist gegenüber dem vom Präsidium vorgeschlagenen Gewährleistungsrecht vorzuziehen.

Abs. 2:

Die Vereinbarkeit von Familien- und Berufsleben ist von besonderer Bedeutung und sollte deshalb in einem eigenständigen Absatz als Gewährleistungsrecht formuliert werden, denn Frauen und Männer sind in der Regel Erwerbstätige und tragen zugleich Familienverantwortung.

Abs. 3:

Elternschaft ist Aufgabe von Müttern und Vätern, die in der Regel gleichzeitig Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer sind. Um ihren gesellschaftlich wichtigen Betreuungs- und Erziehungsaufgaben nachkommen zu können, benötigen sie einen besonderen Schutz. Um die gemeinsame Verantwortung herauszustellen, wird in Abs. 3 S. 2 ein Elternschutz formuliert.

Dieser notwendige besondere Schutz beschränkt sich nicht auf Mutterschutz und Elternurlaub. Dies kommt in der vom Präsidium vorgeschlagenen Formulierung in Abs. 2 Satz 2 „umfasst insbesondere“ zwar zum Ausdruck. Die hier vorgeschlagene Formulierung in Abs. 3 S. 1 ist allerdings offener für jedwede Weiterentwicklung. In einer Grundrechtscharta sollten nicht beispielhaft Maßnahmen aufgezählt werden, die beschränkend wirken können.

7. Sprache

Der djb begrüßt, dass der vom Präsidium vorgeschlagene Text der Charta überwiegend geschlechtsneutral formuliert ist. Soweit dies nicht möglich ist, wird allerdings auf das generische Maskulinum zurückgegriffen, wie z.B. „Unionsbürger“¹. Frauen stehen der Union oft kritisch gegenüber. Sie sollten als „Unionsbürgerinnen“ direkt angesprochen werden. Der djb empfiehlt die sprachliche Überarbeitung des deutschen Textes mit dem Ziel, in den Fällen, in denen eine geschlechtsneutrale Formulierung nicht möglich ist, eine geschlechtsdifferenzierte Formulierung einzufügen.

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend zwei Beiträge von der österreichischen Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz. ¹

Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren!

Die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz erlaubt sich im Namen der österreichischen Bau- und HolzarbeiterInnen zum Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union Stellung zu nehmen. Die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz begrüßt es, dass die Art der Charta der Grundrechte zu den zentralen Anliegen der französischen EU-Präsidentschaft zählen.

Wir teilen die Hoffnung Frankreichs, dass diese Charta bereits in Nizza angenommen wird, weil es sich bei diesem Thema um eine der zentralen Fragen für die Entwicklung der Europäischen Union handelt.

Wir halten es für äußerst wichtig, dass der deutsche Außenminister Joschka Fischer diese Diskussion wesentlich in Gang gesetzt hat und können ihm auch bei seiner Anregung anlässlich seiner Rede am 12. Mai 2000 in der Humboldt-Universität in Berlin folgen, wenn er dort meinte, dass die Föderation sich auf einen Verfassungsvertrag zu gründen habe.

Aus Sicht der Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz ist es die konsequente Fortentwicklung einer Diskussion über die Grundrechte auch über eine Verfassung der Europäischen Union zu diskutieren. Insoweit wird der Beschluss des Europäischen Rates von Köln im Juni 1999 über die Erarbeitung einer Grundrechtscharta und die Fixierung der Zusammensetzung und des Verfahrens anlässlich des Europäischen Rates von Tampere im Oktober 1999 von uns positiv bewertet.

Für sehr wesentlich halten wir auch den Beitrag, den der deutsche Alt-Bundespräsident und Alt-Bundesverfassungsgerichtshofpräsident, Roman Herzog, durch seine Vorsitzarbeit und die Kombination der politischen und juristischen Aspekte geleistet hat.

Es ist bedauerlich, dass dieses wesentliche Thema in Österreich mit Ausnahme von einigen wenigen Politikern, wie etwa Minister a.D. Caspar Einem kaum behandelt wird. So findet sich etwa in den österreichischen Grundsatzpositionen betreffend der Regierungskonferenz zu den institutionellen Fragen nur ein knapper Hinweis darauf, dass die Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union Vertragsänderungen erfordern könnte.

Wir bedauern es, dass sich die österreichische Außenministerin beim Europäischen Rat von Santa Maria da Feira am 19. und 20. Juni 2000 darauf beschränkt hat, zu fordern, an die Frage der Aufnahme sozialer Grundrechte kreativ heranzugehen; aber diese Kreativität gleich damit kontakariert hat, dass sie ebenfalls forderte, dass durch die Charta nicht neue Unionskompetenzen "durch die Hintertür" begründet werden dürfen. Aus Sicht der Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz ist die Forderung nach Kreativität durchaus zu unterstützen, wesentlich für uns ist jedoch, dass eine insgesamt zweckmäßige Grundrechtscharta erstellt wird, die auch die Positionen der arbeitenden Menschen und insbesondere die sozialen Grundrechte ausreichend berücksichtigt.

Innerösterreichisch hat, wie oben erwähnt bis jetzt noch keine fundierte Debatte die Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union oder gar über die Verfassungsfrage zustande gekommen. Alle die Europäische Union betreffende Fragen, aber leider auch wesentliche innenpolitische Themen, wie etwa die Verschlechterungen im Pensions-, Urlaubs- und Arbeitsrecht werden von der sogenannten Sanktionenfrage überschattet.

Die Bundesregierung nutzt die sogenannten Sanktionen geschickt, um jede Verärgerung gegen die europäische Union und die anderen Mitgliedsstaaten umzulenken. Artikel 6 EUV ist ein wesentlicher Ansatz für Grundrechte in der Europäischen Union. Die Union beruht auf den Grundsätzen der Freiheit, der Demokratie, der Achtung der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten sowie der Rechtsstaatlichkeit; diese Grundsätze sind allen Mitgliedsstaaten gemeinsam.

In Übereinstimmung mit dem österreichischen Abgeordneten der Grünen zum Europäischen Parlament, Johann Voggenhuber (vgl. die Zeitschrift: Die Presse vom 3.3.2000) sehen auch wir einen gewissen Zusammenhang der Situation in Österreich und der Arbeit an der Charta.

Klarzustellen ist jedenfalls, dass die Sanktionen der anderen 14 EU Staaten nicht auf Artikel 7 EUV gestützt wurden, und dass unserer Meinung nach keine Sanktionen gegen Österreich vorliegen, sondern nur eine grobe Verletzung der Courtoisie ("comitas gentium") gegenüber den Regierungsverantwortlichen vorliegt. Klarzustellen ist jedoch auch, dass selbst diese Maßnahmen von der Regierung zur Überdeckung ihres Sozialabbauprogrammes und zum Schüren der Ablehnung gegen die EU genützt werden, und daher kontraproduktiv sind.

Verschärft wird diese problematische Situation noch dadurch, dass die Bundesregierung durch ihre angedrohte Volksbefragung Millionen Schillinge beim Fenster hinauswirft und gleichzeitig bei den ArbeitnehmerInnen und sozial Schwachen Kürzungen vornimmt.

Für die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz sind nicht zuletzt deshalb die Fragen der sozialen Rechte in einer solchen Charta von eminenter Bedeutung. Wir erinnern an den vor einigen Monaten unter anderem von ÖGB- und GB Präsidenten, Fritz Verzetnitsch, in seiner Eigenschaft als österreichischer Nationalratsabgeordneter eingebrachte Entwurf von sozialen Rechten für das österreichische Bundesverfassungsrecht. Es ist uns durchaus bewusst, dass nicht zuletzt in Österreich große Teile der Lehre gegenüber sozialen Grundrechten Bedenken hat, weil schwankende wirtschaftliche Verhältnisse, deren Einhaltung vor Probleme stellen könnten. Dennoch sind unserer Meinung nach soziale Grundrechte zumindest in der Form von Mindeststandards jener Teil der Grundrechte, der in Österreich äußerst unterentwickelt ist. Die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz fordert daher mit entsprechendem Nachdruck die Einführung und die Einhaltung von sozialen Grundrechten. Aufgrund des Binnenmarktes und der damit verbundenen Grundfreiheiten innerhalb der Europäischen Union ist es aus unserer Sicht geradezu unerlässlich, auch entsprechende soziale Grundrechte im gesamten Raum der Europäischen Union vorzusehen, damit das Schlagwort von der Sozialen Union nicht ein Schlagwort bleibt, sondern Realität werden kann.

Wir sehen uns in dieser Position auch durch die Forderungen von Chirac und Kok beim Europäischen Rat von Santa Maria de Feira bestätigt, die gefordert haben, so wichtige Themen wie wirtschaftliche und soziale Rechte, Umweltschutz oder Bioethik jedenfalls in die Charta aufzunehmen.

Abgesehen von der hier zur Diskussion stehenden Angelegenheit der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union, ist auch noch immer die Frage des Beitritts der EU zur EMRK ungeklärt. Uns ist durchaus bewusst, dass es Bedenken hinsichtlich der Rechtsnatur der Europäischen Union gibt, diese dürfen jedoch nicht dazu führen, dass deshalb dieser wichtige, auch symbolische Schritt noch länger verzögert wird. Auch wir vertreten die Meinung, dass die Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union, wenngleich sie in weiten Passagen mit der EMRK deckungsgleich sein wird, diese nicht ersetzen soll, aber auch nicht die Rechte der Bürger schmälern darf, oder die EMRK untergraben darf; diese Diskussion wird regelmäßig unter dem Schlagwort "Achtung des Besitzstandes". In diesem Punkt verweisen wir auf die Ausführungen des Berichts von Andrew Duff und Johannes Voggenhuber an das Europäische Parlament, dem wir uns in diesem Punkt anschließen. Wir sind jedoch auch der Meinung, dass wie in demselben Bericht festgehalten, die Gerichtsbarkeit des EuGH für Menschenrechtsfragen flexibler ausgelegt werden muss, um den individuellen Zugang der EU Bürger zu verbessern.

Im Einzelnen erscheinen uns folgende Punkte diskussionsfähig:

- Zu Artikel 1 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Die ausdrückliche Aufnahme eines Gleichheitsgrundsatzes in Absatz 2 dieses Artikels ist positiv zu bewerten. Es ist für uns wesentlich, dass diese Bestimmung im Unterschied zu Artikel 7 des österreichischen B-VG und Artikel 2 StGG auf alle Menschen und nicht nur auf Unionsbürger abstellt. In diesem Zusammenhang verweisen wir darauf, dass es für uns wesentlich ist, dass die Charta nicht nur die Europäische Union selbst, sondern auch ihre Mitglieder bindet.

- Zu Artikel 2 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz unterstützt prinzipiell die gewählte Formulierung. Wir regen jedoch an, auch diesen Artikel nach Muster seines Vorbildes dem Artikel 2 EMRK wesentlich konkreter zu gestalten. Der nun vorliegende Text ist unserer Meinung nach zu sehr deklaratorisch formuliert und bietet daher zu wenig konkreten Schutz.

Die Umwandlung des Absatzes 2 in einen eigenen Artikel erscheint uns wegen dessen Bedeutung gerechtfertigt, er sollte jedoch nicht in Form einer Zwischennummer (1a) gekennzeichnet werden, sondern die gesamte Charta sollte nach ihrer Fertigstellung durchlaufend nummeriert werden.

- Zu Artikel 3 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Es wird von uns positiv bewertet, dass in die Neufassung dieses Artikels auch die genetische Unversehrtheit als ein aktueller Themenbereich aufgenommen wird, Äußerst positiv bewerten wir auch das ausdrückliche Verbot, den menschlichen Körper und Teile davon zur Erzielung von Gewinnen zu nützen. Wir erinnern in diesem Zusammenhang daran, dass es noch immer Staaten gibt, die systematisch die Organe von Hingerichteten für die Organspende exportieren. Diese Praktiken sind zu verurteilen

- Zu Artikel 4 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Positiv bewerten wir vor allem den der Rechtsprechung folgenden zweiten Satz dieses Artikels, die neue Ergänzung wird ebenfalls positiv bewertet.

- Zu Artikel 5 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Die Neufassung von Absatz 2 erscheint uns prinzipiell akzeptabel, die Formulierung, dass nicht als Zwangsarbeit oder Pflichtarbeit Leistungen zählen, die von einer Person verlangt wird, der die Freiheit entzogen worden ist, erscheint uns zu unkonkret.

- Zu Artikel 6 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Das zu Artikel 2 Ausgeführte, gilt auch hier sinngemäß, wir regen eine konkretere Ausgestaltung nach dem Vorbild des Artikel 5 EMRK an.

- Zu Artikel 8 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Die Forderung nach einem unabhängigen und unparteiischen auf Gesetz beruhenden Gericht, im Sinne des Artikel 6, Abs. 1, EMRK vor dem ein Verfahren stattzufinden hat, hat gerade in den letzten Jahren in Österreich zu einer deutlichen Verbesserung des Rechtsschutzes etwa durch die Einführung der unabhängigen Verwaltungssenate geführt. Die Übernahme dieser Bestimmung ist daher aus österreichischer Sicht wesentlich.

Wir unterstützen die Überlegungen, die zur Anfügung eines Abs. 2 geführt haben. Prozesskostenhilfe ist eine wesentliche Voraussetzung, damit ein faires Verfahren überhaupt genutzt werden kann. Das Ersetzen des Wortes unerlässlich durch erforderlich ist aus unserer Sicht positiv.

- Zu Artikel 9 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Entgegen den Überlegungen, die zu der äußerst knappen Formulierung des Abs. 2 geführt haben, treten wir aus Gründen der Rechtssicherheit für eine ausführliche Formulierung nach dem Muster des Artikel 6, Abs. 3, EMRK ein.
- Zu Artikel 10 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Das Rückwirkungsverbot insbesondere im Bereich des Strafrechts ist ein wichtiges Grundrecht. Die gewählte Formulierung wird von uns akzeptiert, auch der neue Abs. 3.
- Zu Artikel 11 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Diese Bestimmung wird von uns prinzipiell positiv bewertet, es liegt die Vermutung nahe, dass damit ein im angloamerikanischen Recht geltender Grundsatz auch bei uns übernommen wird. Dies wäre prinzipiell positiv.
- Zu Artikel 12 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Diese im wesentlichen dem Artikel 8 EMRK entsprechende Bestimmung ist in seiner neuen Ausformulierung unserer Meinung nach auch auf die neuen Kommunikationsmittel wie Internet anzuwenden. Der Begriff Korrespondenz wird daher von uns in diesem Sinne positiv bewertet.
- Zu Artikel 13 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die vorgeschlagene Streichung des Abs. 1 erscheint uns nicht akzeptabel. Wir sehen hierfür keine Begründung.
Der Verweis auf die innerstaatlichen Gesetze in Abs. 2 ist unserer Meinung nach nicht erforderlich, da die in der Begründung angeführten unterschiedlichen Verhältnisse in den Mitgliedsstaaten mittelfristig zu einer Annäherung kommen sollen.
- Zu Artikel 14 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Das zu Artikel 2 Ausgeführte, gilt auch hier sinngemäß, wir regen eine konkretere Ausgestaltung nach dem Vorbild des Artikel 9 EMRK an. Die neu vorgeschlagene Formulierung ist jedoch deutlich besser als die zuletzt vorgeschlagene, die nur aus 10 Worten bestanden hat.
- Zu Artikel 15 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Auch hier gilt das zu Artikel 2 ausgeführte sinngemäß. Eine konkretere Formulierung wäre wünschenswert. Positiv ist jedenfalls der neu angefügte Abs. 2, und hier besonders der Aspekt der Pluralismus
- Zu Artikel 17 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Auch hier gilt das zu Artikel 2 ausgeführte sinngemäß, eine konkrete Ausgestaltung nach dem Vorbild des Artikel 11 EMRK wird vorgeschlagen. Nicht akzeptabel ist für uns, dass das Recht, Gewerkschaften oder politische Parteien zu gründen oder diesen beizutreten, nicht mehr in der neuen Textierung vorkommt. Es ist für uns nicht eindeutig klargestellt, dass dies vom Begriff zusammenschließen ausreichend mitumfasst wird.
- Zu Artikel 19 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Das Recht auf Datenschutz ist für uns wesentlich, wir regen jedoch an, nach dem Vorbild des österreichischen Datenschutzgesetzes jedermann auch ein Recht auf Auskunft darüber, wer welche Daten über ihn verarbeitet, woher die Daten stammen und wozu sie verwendet werden, insbesondere auch, an wen sie übermittelt werden; ein Recht auf Richtigstellung unrichtiger Daten und das Recht auf Löschung unzulässigerweise verarbeiteter Daten zu geben.

- Zu Artikel 21 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die gewählte Formulierung ist aus Sicht der GBH prinzipiell in Ordnung. Der Verweis auf andere einschlägige Verträge jedoch zu unkonkret.
- Zu Artikel 21a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wie schon zu Artikel 1a ausgeführt wird, plädieren wir für eine durchgehende Numerierung. Wie sehen in der uns übermittelten Textfassung einen gewissen Widerspruch zu Artikel 4. Die gewählte Formulierung des Artikel 21a wird von uns positiv gewertet, um aber wie bei der uns übermittelten Fassung eine Wiederholung zu vermeiden, sollten die Artikel 4 und 21a wie offensichtlich in einer früheren Fassung vorgesehen, wieder zu einem Artikel zusammengeführt werden.
- Zu Artikel 22 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Gleichstellung und Nichtdiskriminierung gehören zu den wesentlichen Forderungen der GBH. Dieser Artikel ist für uns nicht nur wegen dem Recht auf Festsetzung gleicher Arbeitsentgelte und sonstiger Arbeitsbedingungen für die Geschlechter, sondern auch wegen dem Verbot von Diskriminierungen, dass wie vorschlagen, ihn unmittelbar in Artikel 1 nach dem Gleichheitsgrundsatz zu integrieren, oder doch zumindest an vorderer Stelle auszunehmen.
- Zu Artikel 23 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die Aufnahme von Kinderrechten wird von uns äußerst positiv bewertet.
- Zu Artikel 24 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die in diesem Artikel gewährleisteten Rechte sollten insgesamt jeder Person zustehen, das heißt, auch das Recht eine Partei zu gründen, sollte nicht Unionsbürgern gewährleistet werden. Die Differenzierung zwischen Staatsbürger und Nichtstaatsbürger, Unionsbürger und Nichtunionsbürger erscheint in diesem Bereich nicht erforderlich.
- Zu Artikel 25 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die neu vorgeschlagene Einschränkung des Abs. 2 auf Wahlen zum Europäischen Parlament erscheint uns zumindest diskussionswürdig. Es ist zu überlegen, hier im Zuge der verstärkten Integration großzügiger zu sein.
- Zu Artikel 26 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Diese Bestimmung erscheint uns in engem Zusammenhang mit der des Artikel 25. Es ist mittelfristig zu überlegen, die Differenzierung des Wahlrechts zwischen Kommunalwahlen, Wahlen auf nationaler Ebene und Wahlen auf europäischer Ebene zu vereinheitlichen.
- Zu Artikel 29 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Es ist zu überlegen, dieses Petitionsrecht nicht nur auf das Europäische Parlament zu beschränken, sondern auch auf andere Organe der Europäischen Union auszudehnen und dieses Recht auch für nationale Organe in der Charta festzuschreiben.
- Zu Artikel 31 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Aus Sicht der GBH ist eine Drittwirkung der sozialen Grundrechte auch auf die Sozialpartner prinzipiell eine wesentliche Frage, die unserer Meinung nach auch innerhalb der Gewerkschaftsbewegung noch nicht ausreichend diskutiert wurde. Nach unseren bisherigen Überlegungen sind wir jedoch zum Schluss gekommen, die gewählte Formulierung zu unterstützen und auch die Sozialpartner zur Einhaltung der sozialen Grundrechte zu verpflichten.

Insoweit haben wir zwar nach der österreichischen Rechtstradition Verständnis für den Vorschlag Neissers, den Verweis auf die Sozialpartner zu streichen, kommen jedoch nach unseren bisherigen Beratungen zum gegenteiligen Ergebnis. Auch die Sozialpartner sollen mittels Drittwirkung wie im vorliegenden Entwurf vorgesehen zur Einhaltung des Sozialbereiches dieser Charta verpflichtet werden.

- Zu Artikel 31a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wie schon zu Artikel 22 ausgeführt, ist für uns die Gleichheit von Männern und Frauen wesentlich. Wir treten jedoch dafür ein, diese Bestimmung umfassender auszugestalten und mit der konkreter formulierten Bestimmung des Artikels 22 ohne diesen zu verwässern, zu verschmelzen.
- Zu Artikel 32 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir unterstützen einerseits die hier vorliegende Formulierung, treten jedoch gleichzeitig dafür ein, auch ein Recht auf Arbeit in die Charta einzufügen und dieses auch ausreichen, das heißt zumindest mit Mindeststandards auszugestalten. Der neue Vorschlag des Präsidiums ist deutlich besser als die ursprünglich Formulierung, jedoch unserer Meinung noch nicht ausreichend.
- Zu Artikel 32a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Der neu vorgeschlagene Artikel wird von uns insgesamt unterstützt, alle Unterpunkte sollten aufgenommen werden. Wie jedoch schon zu Artikel 1a ausgeführt treten wir jedoch dafür ein, keine Zwischennummern bei den Artikeln vorzusehen.
- Zu Artikel 33 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir unterstützen die Vorschläge nach Präzisierung des Wortlautes und nach Hinzufügung eines verstärkten Anhörungsrechts im Fall von Umstrukturierungen, wie dies vom Abg. Voggenhuber eingebracht wurde. Eine Reduzierung oder Streichung wird von uns abgelehnt.
- Zu Artikel 33a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Dieser neue Artikel wird von uns prinzipiell positiv bewertet, sollte jedoch unserer Meinung nach noch näher ausgestaltet werden, und mit dem ebenfalls neuen Artikel 32a verschmolzen werden.
- Zu Artikel 34 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die Ausweitung und vor allem die ausdrückliche Anführung des Streikrechts wird von uns unterstützt, wir sprechen uns gegen eine Streichung aus, weil gerade das Recht auf KV Verhandlungen zu den wesentlichen Gewerkschaftsrechten zählt.
- Zu Artikel 34a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Auch diese Vorschläge werden von uns positiv bewertet, aber auch hier schlagen wir eine Integration in den Artikel 32a vor.
- Zu Artikel 35 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir sehen auch in der Festschreibung des Rechts auf Ruhezeit und Jahresurlaub einen wesentlichen Aspekt und fordern im Sinne des Vorschlages von Voggenhuber die Festsetzung einer Mindestdauer des Jahresurlaubes. Diese sollte jedoch mit 5 Wochen festgesetzt werden. Der neue Vorschlag des Präsidiums erscheint uns hier nicht ausreichend.
- Zu Artikel 36 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Der Gesundheitsschutz und sichere Arbeitsbedingungen ist gerade für Bau- und Holzarbeiter von eminenter Bedeutung. Diese Berufsgruppen sind enormen gesundheitlichen Risiken ausgesetzt.

Es ist für uns unverständlich, wie Abgeordnete die Streichung oder auch nur die Reduzierung eines solchen Rechtes fordern können. Im Gegenteil: Wir fordern eine bessere Ausgestaltung dieses Artikels.

- Zu Artikel 36a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir regen die Integration dieses positiven Vorschlages in Artikel 32a an.
- Zu Artikel 37 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Jugendschutz gehört für die GBH ebenfalls zu den zentralen Forderungen, wir unterstützen die Forderung nach Präzisierung dieses Vorschlages. Der Vorschlag des Präsidiums erscheint uns akzeptabel.
- Zu Artikel 37a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir regen hier eine Integration des Abs. 1 in Artikel 22 und eine Integration des Abs. 2 in Artikel 32a an.
- Zu Artikel 38 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir unterstützen den vorliegenden Textvorschlag, sind jedoch gegen die Einschränkung im Titel auf Fälle mißbräuchliche Entlassung.
- Zu Artikel 38a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir regen auch hier eine Integration dieses positiven Vorschlages in Artikel 32a an.
- Zu Artikel 39 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die Vereinbarkeit von Familie und Beruf ist gerade für die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz ein besonderes Anliegen. Wir versuchen durch Arbeitszeitregelungen, die sowohl den Bedürfnissen der Firmen gerecht werden, aber vor allem die Bedürfnisse der Arbeitnehmer nach Familienleben und Teilnahme am gesellschaftlichen Leben gerecht werden.
- Zu Artikel 40 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Der Änderungsvorschlag des Präsidiums wird von uns prinzipiell positiv bewertet, erscheint jedoch noch nicht ausreichend. Eine Harmonisierung mit der Entsenderichtlinie ist anzustreben.
- Zu Artikel 41 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die Gewährleistung einer ausreichenden sozialen Sicherheit ist wesentlich, die vorgeschlagene Formulierung regelt jedoch weder in der ursprünglichen Variante, noch in dem neuen Vorschlag des Präsidiums ausreichende Mindeststandards dafür. In der gegebenen politischen Situation erscheint der vorgeschlagene Text, auch wenn er vorwiegend deklaratorisch ist, zunächst akzeptabel.
- Zu Artikel 41a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir bewerten diese Ergänzungen prinzipiell äußerst positiv, treten jedoch dafür ein, dass Absatz 1 in Artikel 32a integriert wird. Absatz 4 sollte in Artikel 22 integriert werden, die Absätze 2 und 3 sollten ausgebaut und in einem eigenen Artikel zusammengefasst werden.
- Zu Artikel 42 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir unterstützen in der Frage des Gesundheitsschutzes den Vorschlag auf Streichung des Verweises auf die Gegebenheiten der einzelnen Mitgliedstaaten. Wir erinnern in diesem Zusammenhang daran, dass die Österreichische Regierungsmehrheit erst vor kurzem eine Ambulanzgebühr von bis zu S 1000.- jährlich eingeführt hat, eine Maßnahme, die gerade für sozial Schwächere den Zugang zur ärztlichen Versorgung deutlich erschwert. Eine Verschärfung solcher Regelungen stellt für uns eines der Problemfelder dar, die durch eine solches Grundrecht verhindert werden müßten.

- Zu Artikel 42a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Dieser Vorschlag sollte gemeinsam mit Absatz 2 und 3 des Artikel 41a ausgebaut und zu einem eigenen Artikel ausgestaltet werden.

- Zu Artikel 43 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir unterstützen die Forderung nach Ausgestaltung dieses Rechts zu einem subjektiven Recht, sehen jedoch im Vorschlag des Präsidiums zumindest einen Schritt in die richtige Richtung. Da für uns die Benachteiligung von Menschen mit Handicap oder wie hier formuliert "Behinderten" vor allem eine Frage der Diskriminierung ist, treten wir für den Ausbau dieser Bestimmung und die Integration in Artikel 22 ein.

- Zu Artikel 43a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Absatz 1 sollte in Artikel 22 integriert werden, es sollte auch versucht werden Absatz 2 in entsprechenden anderen Bestimmungen zu integrieren.

- Zu Artikel 44 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir unterstützen die Forderung nach einer nachdrücklicheren Formulierung im Sinne eines Rechtsanspruches, sind jedoch der Meinung, eine Verhältnismäßigkeitsklausel im Hinblick auf die Rechte der ArbeitnehmerInnen vorzusehen, das heißt, es muss sichergestellt werden, dass notwendige Verbesserungen im Bereich des Umweltschutzes nicht dazu führen, dass die Arbeitsbedingungen für ArbeitnehmerInnen gefährlicher oder gesundheitsschädlicher werden.
Wir bewerten im neuen Vorschlag des Präsidiums positiv, dass der Begriff der nachhaltigen Entwicklung aufgenommen wurde, bemängeln jedoch, dass die rationelle Verwendung der natürlichen Ressourcen nunmehr fehlt. Dies deckt sich unserer Meinung nach nur zum Teil mit dem Begriff der Nachhaltigkeit.

- Zu Artikel 45 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Es ist uns unverständlich, wie hier die völlige Streichung einer so wichtigen Bestimmung gefordert werden kann.

- Zu Artikel 45a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Absatz 1 sollte wie Absatz 2 des Artikel 43a behandelt werden. Absatz 2 sollte ausgebaut und mit den Absätzen 2 und 3 des Artikel 41a zusammengefaßt werden. Die restlichen Absätze könnten eventuell in Artikel 22 integriert werden.

- Zu Artikel 46 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Wir treten gegen eine zu enge Fassung des Anwendungsbereiches dieser Charta ein und sind deshalb etwa für die Streichung des vorgeschlagenen Absatz 2, also des Absatz 3 nach Vorschlag des Präsidiums. Absatz 2 des Präsidiumsvorschlags scheint uns ebenfalls nicht ausgereift genug.

- Zu Artikel 47 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die Einschränkung, der in dieser Charta anerkannten Rechte und Freiheiten sollte möglichst gering gehalten werden, dabei sollte auf die in der EMRK gewährleisteten Rechte Bedacht genommen werden, wie dies im Absatz 2 des Vorschlags des Präsidiums vorgesehen ist. Der Begriff des Wesensgehaltes im letzten Satz des Absatz 1 des Vorschlags des Präsidiums, erscheint uns für eine so zentrale Bestimmung zu ungenau.

- Zu Artikel 48 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Die Integration dieser Bestimmung in Artikel 45 ist prinzipiell positiv, wir treten jedoch dafür ein, dass klargestellt werden sollte, dass es keine Verschlechterung der einmal festgelegten Grundrechte geben darf.
- Zu Artikel 49 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Diese Klarstellung des 1. Halbsatzes ist für die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz wesentlich.
- Zu Artikel 50 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Das zu Artikel 49, 1. Halbsatz ausgeführte gilt auch hier. Eine solche Missbrauchsregelung muss in einem Grundrechtskatalog selbstverständlich sein.
- Zu Artikel 50a des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union
Absatz 1 ist unserer Meinung nach durch Artikel 8 der Charta abgedeckt, wenn unsere Vorschläge berücksichtigt werden, Absatz 2 sollte wie Artikel 43a Absatz 2 behandelt werden.

Insgesamt unterstützt die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz daher die Bemühungen, mit einer Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union erstmals in der Geschichte des internationalen Organisationsrechtes einen nicht-staatlichen Organismus mit Grundrechten auszustatten. Wir sehen darin, wie schon eingangs ausgeführt, einen ersten Schritt in Richtung Europäische Verfassung. Prinzipiell bewerten wir diese Entwicklung positiv, fordern jedoch eine ausreichende Berücksichtigung der Interessen der ArbeitnehmerInnen und der sozial Schwächeren.

Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren!

Die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz hat nunmehr im Zuge des innerösterreichischen Begutachtungsverfahrens einen aktuellen Gesamtentwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union übermittelt erhalten.

Wir bedauern, dass die Diskussion zu diesem wichtigen Thema – ohne ausreichender innerösterreichischer Diskussion – bereits so weit fortgeschritten ist, dass nunmehr eine substantielle Stellungnahme nicht mehr erwünscht ist. Wir verweisen daher auf unsere Stellungnahme vom 28.07. d.J.

Zur Information übermitteln wir Ihnen jedoch auch unsere neue Stellungnahme.

Es ist uns durchaus bewusst, dass nicht zuletzt in Österreich große Teile der Lehre gegenüber sozialen Grundrechten Bedenken hat, weil schwankende wirtschaftliche Verhältnisse, deren Einhaltung vor Probleme stellen könnten. Dennoch sind unserer Meinung nach soziale Grundrechte zumindest in der Form von Mindeststandards jener Zwei an Grundrechten, der in Österreich äußerst unterentwickelt ist. Die Gewerkschaft Bau-Holz fordert daher mit entsprechendem Nachdruck die Einführung und die Einhaltung von sozialen Grundrechten. Aufgrund des Binnenmarktes und der damit verbundenen Grundfreiheiten innerhalb der Europäischen Union ist es aus unserer Sicht geradezu unerlässlich, auch entsprechende soziale Grundrechte im gesamten Raum der Europäischen Union vorzusehen, damit das Schlagwort von der Sozialen Union nicht ein Schlagwort bleibt, sondern Realität werden kann.

Abgesehen von der hier zur Diskussion stehenden Angelegenheit der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union, ist auch noch immer die Frage des Beitritts der EU zur EMRK ungeklärt. Uns ist durchaus bewusst, dass es Bedenken hinsichtlich der Rechtsnatur der Europäischen Union gibt, diese dürfen jedoch nicht dazu führen, dass deshalb dieser wichtige, auch symbolische Schritt noch länger verzögert wird. Auch wir vertreten die Meinung, dass die Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union, wenngleich sie in weiten Passagen mit der EMRK deckungsgleich sein wird, diese nicht ersetzen soll, aber auch nicht die Rechte der Bürger schmälern darf, oder die EMRK untergraben darf; diese Diskussion wird regelmäßig unter dem Schlagwort "Achtung des Besitzstandes".

Wir kritisieren, dass die im Artikel 1 des Vorentwurfes vorgesehene Drittwirkung der sozialen Grundrechte auch auf die Sozialpartner – obwohl diese Bestimmung durchaus diskussionswürdig war – nunmehr gestrichen wurde. Dies bedeutet für uns einen wesentlichen Rückschritt und eine wesentliche Verwässerung des nunmehr vorliegenden Entwurfs.

Auch bei den einzelnen Textentwürfen für die Artikel beschränken wir uns wie gewünscht auf Änderungsvorschläge, wir bedauern jedoch die mangelnde Diskussionsmöglichkeit über die anderen Punkte:

- Zu Artikel 1 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:

Wir fordern die Wiederaufnahme des Textes "Alle Menschen sind vor dem Gesetz gleich." an dieser Stelle. Artikel 20 sollte also wieder vorverlagert werden.

- Zu Artikel 4 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:

Wir fordern erneut die Ergänzung eines 2. Absatzes mit dem Text "Niemand darf in einen Staat ausgewiesen oder abgeschoben werden, in dem er durch die Todesstrafe, durch Folter oder durch andere unmenschliche Behandlung bedroht ist.".

- Zu Artikel 6 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:
Wir fordern die Ergänzung des restlichen Textes des Artikel 5 EMRK. Das heißt der Text soll nunmehr lauten: "(1) Jeder Person hat das Recht auf Freiheit und Sicherheit. Die Freiheit darf einem Menschen nur in den folgenden Fällen ... Anspruch auf Schadenersatz."
- Zu Artikel 6 bis 7 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:
Wir kritisieren den Entfall der im Vorentwurf enthaltenen Bestimmungen bis zum Artikel 12 der dem nunmehrigen Artikel 7 entspricht und fordern die Wiederaufnahme dieser Bestimmungen am Beginn der Charta. Wenngleich Teile – wie etwa das Rückwirkungsverbot, das nunmehr im Artikel 47 aufgenommen wurde – in Kapitel 6 wieder aufgenommen wurde.
- Zu Artikel 12 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:
Wir fordern folgende Ergänzung in Absatz 1: "Dies umfasst auch das Recht zum Schutz ihrer Interessen Gewerkschaften zu bilden und diesen beizutreten."
- Zu Artikel 16 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:
Die Neuaufnahme des Rechts auf unternehmerische Freiheit erscheint für uns so lange nicht akzeptabel, so lange nicht auch ein Recht auf Arbeit aufgenommen wird.
- Zu Artikel 25 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:
Wir fordern die Streichung der Worte "...nach dem Gemeinschaftsrecht und nach den einzelstaatlichen Rechtsvorschriften und Gepflogenheiten..." und die Ergänzung der Worte "...nsbesondere bei allen Arten der Umstrukturierungen...".
- Zu Artikel 29 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:
Wir fordern zumindest die Ergänzung in Absatz 2 (letzter Halbsatz) "... sowie auf bezahlten Jahresurlaub im Ausmaß von mindestens 5 Wochen."
- Zu Artikel 31 bis 32 des Entwurfes der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union:
Wir fordern die Wiederaufnahme des im Vorentwurf enthaltenen Artikel 40 "Recht der Wanderarbeiter auf Gleichbehandlung", wie vom Präsidium im letzten Entwurf vorgeschlagen. Der Text sollte also lauten: "Arbeitnehmer, die nicht die Staatsangehörigkeit der Europäischen Union besitzen und rechtmäßig im Hoheitsgebiet der Mitgliedsstaaten arbeiten, haben Anspruch auf Arbeitsbedingungen, die nicht weniger günstig sind als die Bedingungen unter denen die Arbeitnehmer der Europäischen Union arbeiten." Dies ist deshalb notwendig um die WanderarbeiterInnen vor Ausbeutung und die lokal beschäftigten ArbeitnehmerInnen vor Sozialdumping zu schützen.

Abschließend verweisen wir nochmals auf unsere wesentlich ausführlichere Stellungnahme vom 28.07. d.J. Wenngleich sich der Aufbau der Charta nunmehr gravierend verändert hat, bleiben unsere, zu den einzelnen Themen geäußerten, Bedenken und Anregungen sinngemäß bestehen.

Insgesamt ist in vielen neuen Bestimmungen eine rückschrittliche Tendenz gegenüber dem Vorentwurf zu erkennen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Mr Roman Herzog, Chair of the Convention

Dear Mr Herzog,

Re: Presidency Note, complete text of the Charter proposed by the Praesidium: CONVENT 45

The members of Euronet, the European Children's Network, attach great importance to the work of the Convention on the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and have actively contributed to the drafting process. We understand that at the next meeting of the Convention on 11-13 September, members will consider general comments on Convent 45 of 28 July 2000. It is in this spirit that Euronet is submitting the following comments on points of principle.

Articles on children

Europe's children are Europe's future. Children are vulnerable, have specific needs different from adults and are unable to protect themselves. For these reasons, Euronet welcomes the inclusion in the latest version of the Charter on Fundamental Rights (Convent 45 of 28 July 2000) of a specific article on children - Article 23 (the protection of children). This would help ensure that the EU is in line with international commitments made by member states when ratifying the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989. Euronet believes that the guiding principles of this Article must be the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, with particular emphasis on the following :

- the primary consideration shall be the best interests of the child
- children's rights shall be respected and ensured without discrimination of any kind
- children must be allowed to express their views freely in all matters affecting them
- children shall be afforded the protection and care necessary for their well-being

In order to make that the article on children's rights is not only focussing on the protection of children we would prefer to change the title of the Article.

Moreover, to underline the primacy of the best interests of the child, we would prefer to see the order of the paragraphs in Article 23 reversed.

In addition, we would like to have a stronger expression of children's rights to express their views freely than the word may, according to Article 12 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

With these considerations taken into account Article 23 would be changed to:

Article 23 – Rights of children

1. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration. The rights of the child shall be respected and ensured without discrimination of any kind.
2. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They shall be assured the right to express their views freely in all matters affecting the child. Such views shall be given due weight in accordance with their age and maturity.

Article 14 - Right to Education

Euronet believes that every child has the right to education. Euronet believes that the following text, based on Articles 28, 29 and 30 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child should be added to this Article:

"Children of minority communities and indigenous populations have the right to enjoy their own culture and to practise their own religion and language".

Article 18 - Right to Asylum

Euronet believes that this Article should include the right of the child to claim its own asylum reasons.

Article 30 - Protection of young people at work

Euronet believes that this Article should include a reference to ILO Convention 182 which aims to ban the worst forms of child labour.

Chapter VII: General Provisions

Euronet is concerned that the current text of the Charter does not contain an explicit reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which is the fullest expression of children's rights and to which all EU Member States are signatories.

This could be remedied by reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child in Article 51.

Article 51

Article 51 (Level of Protection) cites “ international law and international agreements to which the UN, the Community or all the Member States are party.” The UN Convention of the Rights of the Child should be included in this list as all EU Member States are party to it.

Euronet recognises the difficult but invaluable task with which the members of the drafting Convention have been entrusted. Euronet remains at the disposal of the members of the Convention to provide further information or clarification.

Yours sincerely,

A l'attention des Membres de la Convention

Vitoria-Gasteiz, le 27 juillet 2000

Concerne: Contribution du Secrétariat Général d'Action Extérieure du Gouvernement Basque, à l'élaboration de la Charte de Droits Fondamentaux.

Aux Membres de la Convention,

Le Gouvernement Basque, concrètement, son Secrétariat Général d'Action Extérieure, considère de grande transcendance pour le processus de construction européenne, l'élaboration de la Charte de Droits Fondamentaux. Pour cette raison, nous suivons avec le plus grand intérêt les travaux de la Convention.

Le Gouvernement Basque représente une des régions d'Europe, qui de par son origine historique, a le plus de compétences législatives, avec une langue et culture différenciées, comme ils en existent d'autres dans l'Union. Sachant que nos inquiétudes sont partagées par beaucoup de peuples et régions d'Europe, nous vous faisons parvenir notre contribution au projet de Charte des Droits Fondamentaux :

- Substitution de l'actuel point 2 du Préambule par le paragraphe suivant :

“L'Union Européenne et ses Institutions se fondent sur les principes de liberté, de démocratie, d'État de Droit, de respect des Droits de l'Homme et des Droits fondamentaux, tant individuels que collectifs, des peuples de l'Union Européenne, principes tous communs aux Etats membres”

Arguments: Nous considérons que le Préambule de la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne doit constater de la façon la plus compréhensive possible l'acquis des Droits Fondamentaux et principes directeurs que tant les Etats Membres comme les Institutions européennes ont reconnus. De là, la nécessité d'inclure dans le Préambule la mention aux droits tant individuels que collectifs des peuples de l'Union Européenne.

- Modification de l'article 42: Protection de l'Environnement

“Les politiques de l'Union garantiront le droit des générations futures à un environnement sain et écologiquement équilibré, moyennant la conservation, protection et amélioration de la qualité et diversité de l'environnement, l'utilisation rationnelle des ressources naturelles et l'éducation et sensibilisation sur l'environnement”.

Arguments: Nous considérons que la protection de l'environnement se fonde notamment sur le droit des générations futures à un environnement sain et équilibré dont il garantit la durabilité. Les moyens pour protéger l'environnement doivent tenir compte, notamment, de l'éducation et sensibilisation des citoyens pour le protéger, ainsi que le reste des mesures mentionnés dans cet article.

-Insérer un nouvel article relatif aux : Droits Linguistiques

«Toute personne a le droit de disposer d'une liberté d'action suffisante pour utiliser et promouvoir, seul ou avec d'autres, une langue même non officielle au sein des Institutions de l'Union Européenne, mais officielle dans tout ou partie du territoire d'un des États membre en se servant à cette fin des libertés définies dans la présente Charte.

L'Union respecte ce droit, notamment en tenant compte, dans l'élaboration et l'exercice des politiques communautaires, de l'existence de ces langues.

Tout citoyen de l'Union qui réside dans un État membre autre que celui dont il a la nationalité, a droit à la promotion de l'enseignement de la langue maternelle de ses enfants».

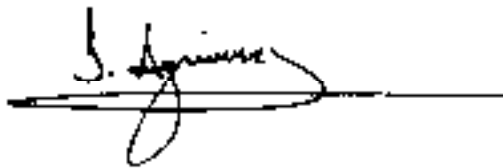

Arguments: Si tous les États membres se font un devoir de respecter les droits de leurs citoyens parlant une langue autre que la langue officielle, les situations concrètes varient beaucoup, chaque Etat ayant ses propres sensibilités en la matière. Il n'est donc pas question de rejeter telle ou telle restriction concrète, mais d'éviter que la superposition de nombreuses restrictions n'ait pour conséquence un effet d'étranglement.

Le deuxième alinéa précise l'obligation de l'Union à l'égard des langues non officielles.

Le troisième alinéa découle de la directive 77/486/CEE visant à la scolarisation des enfants des travailleurs migrants

Pour conclure, nous voudrions féliciter les membres de la Convention pour leur travail consciencieux et fécond. Nous espérons que nos contributions seront utiles et qu'elles seront examinées par les membres avec la plus grande attention puisque nous considérons qu'elles recueillent ou complètent des aspects nécessaires à tenir en compte dans la future Charte des Droits Fondamentaux.

Veillez agréer, Cher Membres de la Convention, l'expression de mes sentiments les plus distingués.

Le 15 août 2000

Monsieur,

Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne

Au nom de l'ADEDE, j'ai l'honneur de porter à votre attention un bref commentaire sur le projet de Charte.

L'ADEDE est très satisfaite de l'introduction d'un Art. 35 sur la protection de l'environnement. Toutefois il nous paraît que la rédaction actuelle de cet article est trop programmatoire et reflète trop le texte du Traité. Selon nous, il manque une référence à un "droit" ou à ce qu'une "personne" peut attendre dans le domaine de l'environnement puisqu'il s'agit d'une charte des droits fondamentaux.

Une manière plus appropriée d'aborder ce sujet pourrait consister à aligner la rédaction de l'art.35 sur celle de l'art.32.3 et d'ajouter dans l'art.35 la phrase introductive suivante:

"L'Union reconnaît et respecte le droit à la protection d'un environnement sain."

Monsieur J.P Jacque
Conseil
Union européenne
Bruxelles

de la même manière que l'Union reconnaît et respecte le droit à une aide au logement.

Un texte semblable se trouve dans la Constitution belge (art.23).

Veillez agréer, Monsieur, l'assurance de ma plus parfaite considération.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 4 September 2000CHARTE 4445/00*CONTRIB 299*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the position by the Association of Finnish Local and Regional Authorities on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, unanimously adopted by the Board on the 7 June 2000.¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English, Finnish and Swedish languages.

POSITION

Unanimously adopted by the Board of the Association of Finnish Local and Regional Authorities
7 June 2000

POSITION OF THE ASSOCIATION OF FINNISH LOCAL AND REGIONAL AUTHORITIES ON THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

The drafting of a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is an extremely important reform project. The views of the Finnish government, parliament and of the Finnish representatives participating in the drafting of the Charter about a document legally binding the Member States have been reserved.

The adoption of the Charter does not pose a problem to the municipalities as far as it concerns traditional liberties or other rights guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights. However, the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is to include such economic, social and cultural rights (so called ESC rights), whose implementation falls under the competence of the Member States and is the responsibility of the municipalities in Finland.

A so-called law reservation applies to most ESC rights in Finland; i.e. parliament enacts a detailed law on the contents and scope of the right. In addition, for Finland it centrally is a question about taking the Finnish welfare society model into account and about the protection of municipal self-government. Therefore the Association of Finnish Local and Regional Authorities is extremely reserved as regards the adoption of a legally binding Charter of Fundamental Rights, and would like to draw attention to some issues that have come up during the drafting of the Charter.

A key factor in the assessment of the provisions of the Charter is the partial flexibility of EU competence in e.g. the regulation of welfare services. The competence pursuant to the treaties possesses both a legal and a political dimension. The provision and financing of social, health care and education services for instance fall outside EU competence, whereas the coordination of social security and some issues within social policy and education do not (e.g. the coordination regulation 1408/71 and Articles 136 – 152 of the Treaty of Amsterdam).

Characteristic of the Finnish welfare society model is to finance basic services mainly with tax revenues and to offer these services to everybody (universalism). The municipalities provide and finance most welfare services. In several other Member States social security benefits are insurance based. Thus the social security of for instance a family member of an employee is based on the insurance of the employee.

A uniform European regulation of fundamental rights and the interpretation of legal and political norms of the European Court of Justice might not pay attention to the characteristics of the Finnish and other Nordic welfare systems. Therefore, the reactions have often been reserved as regards the extension of EU competence to include the regulation of basic social, health care and education services. As far as the municipality as an employer is concerned, the draft Charter also contains some problematic provisions. If the Charter of Fundamental Rights includes economic, social and cultural fundamental rights within fields that at present do not fall under EU competence or in which it mostly is political, Union competence is expanded using a so to say roundabout method.

The Association of Finnish Local and Regional Authorities particularly regards the following points as important:

The Association supports measures to strengthen fundamental rights in the European Union. These rights should not be laid down in a legally binding document – they should be included in a Charter of Fundamental Rights with the character of a political declaration. The basis should be the fundamental and human rights of the European Human Rights Convention, which already are observed as general principles within the EU. Moreover, a parallel goal could be that the European Union accedes to the Human Rights Convention.

The provisions on the fundamental rights and their reasons should be written thus that the level of protection of fundamental rights in the legislations of the Member States is not lowered in consequence of the provisions or their interpretation. Neither should the Charter of Fundamental Rights lead to that Finnish fundamental rights provisions are interpreted in a foreign way in Finland.

The final Charter of Fundamental Rights should include the law reservation of the draft, according to which the legislator of a Member State may restrict the rights guaranteed by the Charter. The Charter should take the protection of municipal self-government into account in accordance with the Charter of Local Self-Government adopted by the Council of Europe.

EU competence should not be expanded through the adoption of the Charter. The provision and maintenance of welfare services should remain within national competence. The Charter of Fundamental Rights and through it EU competence should not include such economic, social and cultural rights whose regulation currently belongs to the Member States. The Member States themselves should have the right to decide on their social security, health care and educational systems as well as on which activities are publicly financed. The supply, sufficiency and financing of vocational training should fall under national competence in the future too.

The Charter articles on the regulation of working life include factors, which especially require that the differences between the Member States be taken into account, including the varying national practices and the technical regulation in force in each Member State. Additionally, it has to be noted that e.g. industrial actions cannot be regarded as part of community legislative competence. As provisions on the protection of property are drafted it has to be remembered that if these are not clearly formulated they may complicate the application of the Finnish land-use and redemption legislation.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights should include an as comprehensive principle as possible emphasising the right to information and transparency. The Charter should expressly provide that its objective or consequence is not to amend the Member State provisions on access to official documents, and that the loyalty principle may not be interpreted thus that access to documents is restricted in the activities of the national authorities.

Dear Convention Members,

In light of the forthcoming discussions on the complete text of the Charter proposed by the Presidium on 28 July (document CHARTE 4422/00), Amnesty International would like to recall its position on the European Charter of Fundamental Rights and ask the Members of the Convention drafting the Charter to take the necessary action in order to ensure that this instrument achieves the goal set out in paragraph 4 of the Preamble, namely to “enhance the protection of fundamental rights”.

Amnesty International is concerned that despite the contributions presented by the organisation¹ and by other international organisations, as well as the debates held by the Convention and the amendments presented by its members to previous drafts, the current wording of the Charter still falls short of international law and standards as it does not reflect the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation.

Amnesty International is an independent worldwide movement working for the release of all prisoners of conscience, fair and prompt trials for political prisoners and an end to torture, extrajudicial executions, “disappearances” and the death penalty. It is funded by donations from its members and supporters throughout the world. It has formal relations with the United Nations, Unesco, the Council of Europe, the Organization of African Unity and the Organization of American States.

¹ The organisation presented its contributions on the European Charter in March (document CHARTE 4173/00), April (document CHARTE 4290/00) and May 2000 (document CHARTE 4331/00).

Horizontal clauses have been the subject of much debate by the Convention. Although they aim at, inter alia, ensuring that at least the current level of protection of fundamental rights is guaranteed, they do not achieve this goal in their current form¹. This is the reason for Amnesty International to reiterate below a number of recommendations made in its earlier contributions.

Amnesty International calls for the following changes in the text of the European Charter.

Paragraph 2 of the Preamble: the importance of the principle of non-discrimination warrants inclusion in the Preamble

Paragraph 5 of the Preamble: in cataloguing the origins of the rights as they are to be reaffirmed in the Charter, this paragraph should also make reference to international law generally, and specifically include the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Article 2: this provision should include express wording on the principles that the right to life shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of life; it should affirm the abolition of the death penalty and include the prohibition of enacting or retaining any law which provides for the death penalty as a possible punishment.

Article 4: this article should read “no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment”, and so be brought in line with Article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 7 of the ICCPR. A European Charter which fails to prohibit “cruel treatment or punishment” would be ensuring a lower level of protection than the ICCPR, to which all Member States are parties.

Article 6: this article no longer contains even a general reference to safeguards necessary in case of deprivation of liberty. Amnesty International strongly reiterates its call for this article to prohibit arbitrary arrest and detention, and to include at least the following safeguards:

- the right to be promptly informed of one’s rights, including the right to counsel and the right to lodge complaints about one’s treatment;
- the right to be brought promptly before a judicial authority after being deprived of one’s liberty;
- the right to prompt access to a lawyer and to family or friends;
- the right to have a lawyer present during questioning;
- the right to challenge or have challenged the lawfulness of detention;
- the principle that it should not be the general rule that people are detained prior to trial;
- the principle that for juveniles, detention should only be used as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate time, as enshrined in Article 9(3) of the ICCPR and Article 37(b) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, respectively;
- the right to trial within a reasonable time or release from detention.

Article 10: this article should include the right to conscientious objection and the right not to hold any religious beliefs or to practice any religion.

¹ On this issue, please see the text of the intervention made by M. Marc Fischbach, observer of the Council of Europe, in the debate on the horizontal provisions (document CHARTE 4411/00).

Article 18: this right should be expressly recognized to everyone. It should not only refer to the UN Refugee Convention, but also to other international human rights treaties, as the treatment of asylum-seekers and refugees is also ruled by international human rights law.

Article 19: this provision should be brought in line with Article 4 (“... torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment”). It should also include unfair trial.

Amnesty International calls for an express provision on the guarantees for a fair procedure and due process for any person facing expulsion, extradition or any other form of forced removal procedures that they may be subjected to. Such provision would be in line with Article 32 of the UN Refugee Convention and Article 13 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Article 21: the non-discrimination provision should include an affirmative action clause to the effect that prohibition of discrimination does not prevent taking measures designed to promote full and effective equality. Such provision would be in line with Article 1(4) of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and Article 4 (1) of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

It should also reflect the positive obligations of the EU to the effect that all Union policies should ensure equality and the equal enjoyment of the rights enshrined in the Charter by taking all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination by any person, organization or enterprise.

Article 22: this provision should not be limited to gender only, and should be extended also to other relevant spheres of life.

Article 23: this provision should make reference to the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Article 45: this provision should include the right to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by a competent tribunal, the right not to be compelled to testify or admit guilt, the right to remain silent without such silence being a consideration in the determination of guilt or innocence, the right not to be questioned in the absence of counsel unless the person has voluntarily waived his or her right to counsel, the right to equality of arms, and the right to a reasoned and public judgment.

Paragraph 3 should provide that legal aid be made available in any case where the interests of justice so require and without payment for those who lack sufficient resources, as set out in Article 14(3)(d) of the ICCPR.

Article 46: this provision should include the right to defend oneself in person and/or through legal counsel of one’s own choosing.

Article 48: this provision should be limited to the jurisdiction of the same state, in line with Article 4(1) of Protocol 7 to the European Convention on Human Rights.

Article 50: the current wording of this article fails to recognize that certain rights, notably the right to life and freedom from torture, are not derogable under any circumstances. Furthermore, by providing a general limitation clause, Article 50 is in fact allowing for the limitation of rights included in the European Charter which are not derogable under international law.

Paragraph 3 should use wording to establish that the meaning and scope of the rights in question shall be “no lower than” those conferred on them by the Convention.

As a final comment Amnesty International notes with concern that the current wording of the Charter still is not gender-neutral, and insists that this be remedied throughout the text and carried through in all language versions.

We hope that these observations will be taken into account in the final phase of drafting the Charter.

Yours sincerely,

Dick Oosting
Director

Herr Roman Herzog
President of the Convention Charter of Fundamental Rights of European Union
Council of the European Union
175, rue de la Loi
B-1048 Brussels

Århus, Danemark, 17. August 2000

Lettre adressée à la convention qui travaille avec la charte sur les droits fondamentaux des citoyens de l'UE

Liberté syndicale

”Les employeurs et les employés ont le droit de se syndiquer, entre autres dans le domaine de l’UE, afin d’établir des confédérations patronales et des confédérations syndicats de leur propre choix pour s’occuper des intérêts économiques et sociaux.

Tout employeur et tout employé a la liberté d’adhérer ou de non adhérer à des organisations de ce genre, sans que cela cause des préjudices à celui-ci, ni à titre personnel, ni à titre professionnel.”

Ainsi était conçu l’article 4, alinéa 1 de l’esquisse du 27 mars 2000 pour les droits économiques et sociaux de la charte de l’UE. Le paragraphe est d’ailleurs une copie de la charte de l’UE sur ”the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (1989), article 5.

Nous avons appris que le paragraphe ci-dessus a disparu de l’esquisse globale de la charte. En même temps nous avons appris que le représentant du gouvernement danois, le social-démocrate Erling Olsen, dans les réunions de la convention du 3 et du 4 avril s’est prononcé contre cet article. A la lueur de cela nous voudrions vous informer sur la situation du marché du travail danois.

Au Danemark les accords exclusifs sont permis. Un accord exclusif veut dire que l’appartenance à un certain syndicat est obligatoire pour obtenir un travail dans une entreprise. Puisque les syndicats socialistes au Danemark, les syndicats LO, ont un objectif clairement politique, cela implique que beaucoup d’employés danois sont obligés – contre leur conviction – de subventionner un certain mouvement politique. On estime que plus de 200.000 employés danois travaillent dans le cadre d’un accord exclusif.

Si un employé se retire d’un syndicat, non seulement il risque d’être licencié, mais il risque aussi d’être condamné à une suspension des indemnités journalières de chômage pendant 5 semaines, puisque les caisses de chômage considèrent le licenciement comme un licenciement mérité.

Les conséquences sont considérables. En 1998 durant la période précédant les élections législatives au Danemark, la Confédération des syndicats LO a dépensé des millions de couronnes pour des campagnes publicitaires figurant dans tous les journaux du pays en faveur du gouvernement socialdémocrate actuel. Les observateurs des élections sont d'accord sur le fait que c'est grâce à cette campagne publicitaire que le gouvernement et ses partis de soutien ont gardé de justesse la majorité (90 contre 89). Pour protester contre cela, un grand nombre de syndiqués de LO n'a pas eu la possibilité de se retirer du syndicat, puisque cela leur aurait coûté leur travail et les indemnités journalières de chômage.

Au Danemark, les accords exclusifs sont souvent établis contre la volonté des employés et à l'aide des blocus. Plusieurs blocus de grande envergure ont été amorcés au Danemark ces dernières années parce que les syndicats de LO n'ont pas voulu accepter que les salariés adhèrent à des syndicats alternatifs.

La sujétion syndicale est bien renforcée par le système des caisses de chômage au Danemark. L'Etat a donné aux syndicats de LO le monopole de gérer les caisses de chômage, et ce monopole est utilisé – souvent illégalement – pour amener des membres au syndicat. Les syndicats interprofessionnels ne peuvent pas obtenir le droit d'établir des Caisses de chômage – exception faite à un unique syndicat chrétien interprofessionnel.

Des études danoises démontrent que la plupart des salariés danois adhèrent à un syndicat pour être membre d'une caisse de chômage; ainsi le gouvernement – par la voie législative des caisses de chômage – contribue à réprimer les syndicats interprofessionnels.

Le Syndicat Libre du Danemark et Le Mouvement Populaire pour les Syndicats Libres trouvent que la situation du marché du travail danois constitue une violation des droits de l'homme internationaux, entre autres la déclaration mondiale de l'O.N.U., article 10, alinéa 2, qui dit: "Personne ne peut être obligé d'adhérer à une association".

De notre point de vue, la sujétion syndicale est à l'opposition de la Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme, et par conséquent le Syndicat Libre du Danemark a déféré le Danemark devant le tribunal de Strasbourg (voir pièce jointe).

Nous insistons pour que la convention – malgré les protestations du gouvernement danois – maintienne la Charte de l'UE "of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers"(1989), article 5, comme une partie de la charte.

II- Statement of the facts

14.

The Danish company „FDB distribution" employed the applicant from May 10, 1996. As a condition for his employment, he had to sign a statement which bound him to be a member of a trade union under the Danish „LO" (= the central Danish organisation of trade unions). Also, in his letter of employment it was stated that there exists an agreement between his employer, FDB, and the Danish trade union SID (a Danish trade union of unskilled workers) under the „LO" - obliging his employer FDB only to employ persons being members of the SID.

On his first pay slip, the applicant could see that he was now a member of the SID, although he had never personally registered as such. In a letter of June 23, 1996, he wrote to his shop steward that he had been registered without knowing so, and that he did not want membership of the SID. The fact was that he had to pay subscription to the SID without being accepted as a full member of the SID, because he was only on holiday relief. Consequently, he had to pay for a membership of the trade union, without being able to benefit from the normal rights as a member of the SID. He protested against this, and stated that he did not at all want to be a member of this trade union.

His employer, FDB, immediately dismissed him. In a letter dated June 24, 1996, his employer, FDB, stated that he was sacked because he did not want to be a member of a trade union under the Danish LO.

On December 17, 1996, the applicant filed a claim against his former employer, FDB, demanding a compensation of DKK 20,000, which is the amount that the applicant would have received for the rest of his period as holiday relief, had he not been sacked by the FDB.

The case was brought before Vestre Landsret (The Western Appeal Court of Denmark). The applicant Morten Sørensen argued that article 11 of the Convention of Human Rights guarantees him both positive and negative freedom of association. It must be interpreted in the following way: It constituted a breach of Convention that he was sacked due to the fact that he was not a member of a trade union (or of a certain trade union). He admits that Danish law allowed his employer FDB to sack him for this reason, but he argued that the Danish legislation on this point was contrary to article 11. He also argued that the Convention at least on this point must have Drittwirkung on the horizontal level between him and his employer.

In its judgement of November 18, 1998, Vestre Landsret ruled that the judgements in cases Sigurjónsson (1993) and Gústafsson (1996) could not with certainty be interpreted in such a way that the present state of law in Denmark is contrary to article 11 of the Convention. Consequently, the employer, FDB, was acquitted.

The applicant appealed the judgement to Denmark's Højesteret (Supreme Court), where he repeated his arguments, but on June 8, 1999, Højesteret confirmed the judgement of Vestre Landsret. Højesteret ruled that the present Danish state of law was introduced in 1982 in order to respect the judgement in „British rail" (1981), and that judgements pronounced by the European Court of Human Rights since then do not give sufficient grounds to assume that article 11 guarantees a negative freedom of associations in a case like the present.

III- Statement of alleged violation(s) of the convention and/or protocols and of relevant arguments

(See part III of the Explanatory Note)

15.

The applicant argues - just as he did before Vestre Landsret and Højesteret in Denmark - that article 11 of the Convention guarantees him both his positive and his negative freedom of association, and that it is contrary to the Convention to force him to pay contributions to a trade union (or to a certain trade union), although he signed a statement on this behalf as a condition for his employment with the FDB.

He argues that such a written statement - signed by a job applicant as a condition to get the job - is signed under circumstances where he cannot with binding force renounce on his right under the Convention. Consequently, the Court should disregard the legal relevance of such a „forced" statement.

Furthermore, he argues that the positive right of association - i.e. the right to be member of a trade union - can be seriously circumvented, if one allows employers to disregard the negative right of association, i.e. the right of an employee not to be member of a trade union. If one did not accept the existence of a negative right of association, the employer could demand membership of a certain trade union which was „friendly" and slack towards this employer. Thus, the freedom to organise could be seriously undermined. Also, the personal freedom of speech under article 10 of the Convention would be endangered. Any statement from the employee contrary to the internal rules of the trade union where he was forced to be a member, could cause his exclusion from the trade union, and thus cause the loss of his job. Consequently, his freedom of speech would be seriously endangered, if one demanded his membership of a certain trade union as a condition for his employment with this employer.

The applicant reads the development in the judgements of the Court - especially the judgement in the cases Sigurjónsson and Gustafsson - as sign of a dynamic development in article 11, giving justified reason to assume that the negative aspect of the freedom of association is sufficiently guaranteed by article 11 today.

The absurdity of the applicant's dismissal is emphasised by the fact that he was not even accepted as a full member of the trade union, SID. He had to pay contributions to the trade union - and he was fired for refusing to do so - but he was not allowed a full membership, because he was only a holiday relief in the company, and thus he was not offered full protection and full rights under the SiD-membership. This fact emphasises the violation of article 11.

IV- Statement relative to article 35 § 1 of the convention

(See Part IV of the Explanatory Note. If necessary give the details mentioned below under points 16 to 18 on a separate sheet for each separate complainant)

16. Final decision (date, court or authority and nature of decision).

Judgement of June 8, 1999, from Højesteret (Supreme Court) of Denmark, case number 524/1998,

17. Other decisions (list in chronological order, giving date, court or authority and nature of decision for each of them)

Judgement of November 18, 1998, from Vestre Landsret (Western Appeal court), which judgement was confirmed by Højesteret. The facts of the case are mostly contained in Vestre Landsrets judgement.

18. Is there or was there other appeal or other remedy available to you which you have not used? If so, explain why you have used it.

NO. Højesteret is the ultimate and final appeal or remedy in Danish legal system.

V- STATEMENT OF THE OBJECT OF APPLICATION AND PROVISIONAL CLAIMS FOR JUST SATISFACTION

(See Part V of the Explanatory Note)

19.

The object of the application is (1) that the Court rules that a violation of the Convention has taken place, and (2) that the applicant is awarded a just satisfaction under article 41 of the Convention. The provisional claim for just satisfaction amounts to DKK 100,000,, including the DKK 20,000, which the applicant has lost because he was sacked before expiration of his period as holiday relief.

VI- STATEMENT CONCERNING OTHER INTERNATIONAL PROCEEDINGS

(See Part VI of the Explanatory Note)

20. Have you submitted the above complains to any other procedure of international investigation or settlement? If so, give full details.

NO.

VII- LIST OF DOCUMENTS - (NO ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS; ONLY PHOTOCOPIES)

(See Part VII of the Explanatory Note. Include copies of all decisions referred ti in Parts IV and VI above. If you do not have copies, you do not have copies, you should obtain them. If you cannot obtain them, explain why not. No documents will be returned to you.)

21.

a) Judgement by the Danish Højesteret (Supreme Court) dated June 8, 1999, case number 524/1998, consisting of 2 pages.

b) Judgement of November 18, 1998, by the Danish Vestre Landsret (Western Appeal Court, first chamber) case B-1022/97, consisting 9 pages.

c) Power of Attorney for the applicant to his legal representative, advocate Carsten Munk-Hansen

VIII- DECLARATION AND SIGNATURE

(See Part VIII of the Explanatory Note)

22. I hereby declare that to the best and belief the information I have given in the present application form is correct.

Place: DK-7400 Herning, Denmark

Date: October 1999

Carsten Munk-Hansen, advocate

Please see document C, which is a power of Attorney form the applicant Morten Sørensen to his legal representativ, advocate Carsten Munk-Hansen, authorising the latter to represent the applicant before the Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 4 September 2000CHARTE 4448/00*CONTRIB 302*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the UK Engineering Employers' Federation, with comments on the document CHARTE 4422/00 CONVENT 45.¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

DRAFT EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTSEEF COMMENTS ON THE LATEST TEXT OF THE CHARTER PROPOSED BY THE PRAESIDIUM (CHARTER 4422/00, CONVENT 34)

1. This paper responds to the latest text of the draft EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. It is the third position paper on the Charter submitted by the Engineering Employers' Federation (EEF), which represents over 5,700 companies in the United Kingdom engineering sector employing some 900,000 people.
2. The EEF and its members have a particular interest in the economic and social provisions of the draft Charter.

General Comments

3. The EEF believes that the new draft again represents some improvement on its predecessor (Convent 34). We welcome in particular the inclusion of new provisions reflecting existing rights on:
 - a) the freedom to conduct a business (Article 16),
 - b) the protection of intellectual property (Article 17.2)and
 - c) the strengthening of the provision on the right to work in any Member State (Article 15.2).
4. In addition Article 25 represents some improvement on the previous version in that it qualifies the right to information and consultation by referring to the need for such a right to be "in accordance with Community law and national laws and practices."
5. Nonetheless the proposed Charter continues to cause the EEF considerable difficulty. Rather than fulfilling its express aim of making existing rights more visible to citizens, the text still:
 - a) creates new rights (eg Article 28 on protection from unjustified dismissal),
 - b) maintains the expansionist technique of seeking to create new general rights out of more limited and specific rights (eg Article 25 on information and consultation, Article 31 on reconciling family and professional life)and
 - c) pre-empts negotiations currently taking place on draft Directives, (eg Article 21 on equal treatment and Article 25 on information and consultation.).
6. This undermining of existing decision-making procedures is extremely worrying.

7. In addition, it is easy to foresee these new and expanded rights being used by the Commission to justify the development of further legislation, even where they are reined in by explicit reference to Community and national laws and practices. Indeed organisations such as the International Federation of Human Rights see one of the advantages of the Charter as the fact that it will effectively provide guidance on the content of future Community legislation.
8. The EEF would suggest that the word "existing" should be added before "Community and national laws and practices" if the statement buried in Article 49.2 to the effect that the Charter "does not establish any new power or task for the Community" is to be at all convincing. As it stands, the wording could be read as extending rather than limiting EU intervention.
9. In addition the EEF would welcome greater clarification of certain rights where the meaning is currently unclear (eg Articles 27 and 34).
10. The EEF would also reiterate its concerns regarding:
 - a) the way in which the Charter will interact with the European Convention of Human Rightsand
 - b) its eventual status.
11. The Charter is currently written in a way that suggests that it will have full legal status, although the EEF understands that this issue will be decided subsequent to agreement on the content. If it was written in a way that did not assume full legal status, the Charter could be drafted so as to be more intelligible to the EU citizen.
12. The EEF's detailed comments on the new text are attached in the Annex.

August 2000

DRAFT EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTSEEF COMMENTS ON THE LATEST TEXT OF THE CHARTER PROPOSED BY THE PRAESIDIUM (CHARTER 4422/00, CONVENT 34)*Detailed comments*Preamble

1. "Solidarity" (paragraph 2) sounds rather strange in English. If another word cannot be found then it should at least be explained.
2. The words "in the light ofdevelopments" in paragraph 4 seem superfluous and only serve to detract from the clarity of the sentence.
3. Presumably paragraph 5 will depend on the eventual legal status of the Charter.
4. The words "to the human community and to future generations" in paragraph 6 raise questions as to who has rights and who has duties. They should perhaps be left out. Alternatively the issue should be dealt with in greater detail, clarifying which rights are owed to living individuals and which to others including companies.
5. Paragraph 7 should state who is guaranteeing the rights - presumably the EU.

Article 14 - Right to education

6. Whilst we welcome this right in general terms, it is unclear whether the word "access" narrows or extends the right to vocational training. The EEF could not accept any universal requirement for employers to pay for vocational training for their employees, for example, particularly where such training is not related to the job being undertaken. This must remain voluntary.
7. The EEF is also concerned that the inclusion of the right of access to vocational training may be used to justify the extension of Commission competence to this area, which the EEF believes should be the preserve of national law and practice.

Article 15 - Freedom to choose an occupation

8. The previous text referred only to the freedom to move and reside in any Member State. The extension of Article 15.2 to cover freedom to work etc reaffirms freedom of movement within the EU and recognises the importance of mobility of labour. This is an improvement.

Article 16 - Freedom to conduct a business

9. This is a new and welcome reaffirmation of the freedom of establishment.

Article 17 - Right to property

10. The recognition of existing rights regarding the protection of intellectual property is welcome.

Article 21 - Equality and non-discrimination

11. This pre-empts agreement on, and extends the scope of, the draft Directive on equal treatment in employment. Discrimination in employment matters on grounds such as religion, belief, disability, age or sexual orientation is not yet illegal in an EU context, although there are national provisions in this area (eg the UK Disability Discrimination Act). Furthermore the existing text of the draft Directive makes no mention of discrimination on grounds of genetic features, language, political belief, membership of a national minority, property or birth.

12. In addition the right is unqualified, whereas Community and national law on discrimination is often subject to qualification or subject to derogations where justification can be made. The words "such as" should be deleted

Article 22 - Equality between men and women

13. The loosely worded phrase "equal pay forwork of equal value" has re-appeared. This should be tightened up by adding "in the same employment".

14. The second paragraph seems to allow positive discrimination such as quota systems, which goes beyond existing UK and EU law. The existence of this clause could provide the justification for future EU legislation in this area.

Article 24 - Integration of persons with disabilities

15. As far as occupational integration is concerned, this should be qualified by reference to practicality and cost.

Article 25 - Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

16. This inclusion of "in accordance with Community law and national laws and practices" represents an improvement, but this Article still seeks to make a general right out of a limited and qualified right. It thus pre-empts the outcome of discussions on national information and consultation. This is unacceptable.

17. In addition, the phrase "on matters which concern them" is susceptible to widely differing interpretations and thus likely to be a source of litigation. It could be said that raising a subject in the first place is evidence of concern.

Article 26 - Right of collective bargaining and action

18. This Article still includes the right not only to negotiate but also to conclude collective agreements, thus going beyond the European Convention on Human Rights and UK law. This is of concern, despite the inclusion of "in accordance with Community law and national laws and practices", which could be read as extending rather than limiting EU intervention in this area.

Article 27 - Right of access to placement services

19. The meaning of this new provision is unclear.

Article 28 - Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

20. This right does not currently exist under EU law. The inclusion of this new general right is unacceptable. Even under existing UK law on unfair dismissal, there is, in most cases, a qualifying period of service. This is not reflected in the Charter proposal.

Article 29 - Fair and just working conditions

21. The former title of "Safe and healthy working conditions" (old article 36) was clearer. Reference to "just" working conditions could imply an interest in, for example, remuneration, which would clearly exceed the scope of Community competence. Presumably the reference to workers' dignity in Article 29.1 is intended to cover harassment etc, though again this is not clear.

22. We suggested in our previous submission that the Article on working time be subsumed under this broader Article as the Working Time Directive was brought forward as a health and safety measure. We note that this has now been done via Article 29.2. As drafted, however, this could be used to justify removing the opt-out with regard to working time. We would prefer the right to be qualified by reference to the need to be in accordance with Community and national law.

Article 31 - Reconciling family and professional life

23. The unqualified right for everyone "to reconcile their family and professional lives" potentially goes much further than existing agreed rights and is unacceptable as it stands.

Article 34 - Access to services of general economic interest

24. This has no meaning in English. "Services of general economic interest" requires definition or illustration.

Article 35 - Environmental Protection

25. Reference should also be made to the need for proportionality, ie the avoidance of excessive cost for minimal environmental gain.

26. The EEF would argue that "sustainable development" is a process rather than a principle.

27. The Article is drafted without any mention of rights, although we assume they are implied by what is said about "a good quality living environment" etc. If this is the case, it is noteworthy that the Praesidium believes that all existing rights pertaining to the environment can be dealt with in two sentences, while the Charter's social provisions are much lengthier. Does this really reflect the balance of public concern within the EU?

Article 49 - Scope

28. Whilst on the face of it the limitation of the Charter's scope represented by Article 49.2 is welcome, the EEF finds it hard to believe that the Charter will not provide a springboard or justification for further Community activity in the fields it covers.

AMENDMENTS ON THE DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

Brussels, 24 August 2000

Subject: Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the amendments made by the European Centre of the International Council of Women (ECICW)¹.

In my capacity of president of the European Council of Women I am forwarding to the Praesidium the comments of this organisation fully aware of the fact that because of the shortage of time to introduce comments, this document will be far from perfect and incomplete².

AMENDMENTS

PREAMBLE

5. Comments: As the term ‘the principle of subsidiarity’ is rather new, we would like to know what exactly is meant in this paragraph. Does it mean that the decisions are taken on different levels, in other words, ‘decentralisation’.
6. “Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties...”
Comments: Responsibilities and duties for whom? For the member states of the union, for the European Commission...?
7. “Each person is therefore guaranteed the rights and freedoms set out hereafter.”
Comments: We would like to drop the word ‘therefore’. If this document is really a defence of fundamental rights, there must be no complementary reason to grant these rights to each person.

CHAPTER I: DIGNITY

Article 3: Right to the integrity of the person

1. “Everyone has the right to respect for his ‘physical and mental integrity’.
Comments: Does the word ‘integrity’ cover the intentions of the drafters of this text? Does it mean the attempts of attacks by third persons, organisations or state authorities? Or should we add integrity and self-determination?
The Charter rightly speaks of the person, which is neutral. However in several articles the text speaks of his or him (see also e.g. art. 17, art. 19, art. 39 and others). This is of course not in conformity with the articles on gender equality. Therefore we propose a neutral phraseology.
Proposal: “Everyone has the right to respect for the person’s physical and mental integrity and self-determination”.

2. Comments: We fear that this article is in contradiction with article 13 or at least it shows limitations of article 13.
What for example about medical treatment, intervention or tests on children? Very often the parents and/or the guardians, take the decisions. Are these decisions always in the interest of the child? With informed consent? From what age on does the child respond to article 3.1. See also article 23.

CHAPTER II. FREEDOMS

Article 7. Respect for private and family life.

Comments: Seems to be conceived for men only?

Proposal: Drop the gender definition and to keep the text neutral:
“Everyone has the right to respect for private and family life, home and confidentiality of communications”.

Article 8. Protection of personal data

Comments: Same remarks as on article 7.

Article 9. Right to marry and right to found a family

Comments: The right to marry is independent and different from the right to found a family.
 We read “shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights”. What if the national laws are infringing the fundamental rights?

Proposal: is to stop the phrase after “shall be guaranteed” and to drop the rest.

Article 10. Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

Comments: The title of this article is not so complete as the text of this article. Indeed, the title dropped the word “believe”. This is also the case in the first phrase of this article. The rest of the text is ok.

Proposal: for the title of article 10 is: “Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief”. The same remark for the first sentence.

Proposal: to add to the last phrase: “to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance, with due respect for pluralism” (see article 11.2).

Article 11. Freedom of expression and information

1. *“... to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers”.*

Comments: The interference is not always coming from public authorities, but also from persons in authority (members of the family, religious people etc.)

Proposal: Interference by public authority or private persons in authority.

Article 12. Freedom of assembly and of association

Comments: What does ‘peaceful assembly’ mean? Fear for physical violence? For moral pressure?

“... and to freedom of association, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters”.

Comments: We want to stop the phrase after “freedom of association” as the rest of the phrase is too restrictive in the view of numerous conflicts based on racial, national or philosophical ideas.

“Political parties at European level contribute to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union”

Comments: We are disappointed that the political parties only contribute to expressing the political will of citizens. At least they should contribute to expressing that. Several inter-governmental bodies like the UN, the Council of Europe ... are recommending and pleading for actions to pay attention to the will of civil society. What was the cause of the clash in Seattle?

Article 13. Freedom of research

Comments: We feel that this is in contradiction with article 3.2.

Article 14. Right to education

1. “... This right includes the right to receive free compulsory education”.

Comments: Is this not a contradictio in terminis?

2. “... to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be guaranteed, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right”.

Comments: Same remarks as on article 10: with due respect for pluralism.

“... in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right”.

Comments: Again: as long as they respect the universal human rights.

Proposal: The phrase should stop after ‘shall be guaranteed’.

Article 17. Right to property

1. Comments: See remarks on article 3. We are pleading for a gender neutral text.

Proposal: “Every person has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath personal lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of these possessions ...”

Article 19. Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

2. “No one may be removed, expelled, or extradited to a State where he could be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment”.

Comments: This sentence is really shocking. What about rape, can he be raped?

Indeed he can be sexually abused and maltreated but women are more often subject of rape. So this situation should be considered and added to the violence enumerated in this paragraph. Moreover it is recognised by the UN and other intergovernmental bodies that in armed conflicts the ‘rape of women’ became a weapon of war.

Proposal: In this sentence it should be clearly stated that “he and she could be subjected to ...”

CHAPTER III. EQUALITY

Article 22. Equality between men and women

“Equal opportunities and equal treatment for men and women as regards employment and work, including equal pay for equal work or for work of equal value, must be ensured”.

Comments: “Equality between men and women” is here only defended in the framework of work and employment.

Proposal: The title of article 22 should be “Equality between men and women in employment and work”.

Moreover, in juridical texts we do not use the word “equality” but “equal rights”.

Here again I regret not to have the time to explain why it is necessary to change the wording.

“The principle of equal treatment shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in order to make it easier for the under-represented sex to pursue a vocational activity or to prevent or compensate for disadvantages in professional careers”.

Comments: This paragraph needs a long text to explain to those who created this draft charter, what the correct language is, normally used by the UN and the Council of Europe for juridical texts. The World Conferences of the last decade prove a totally different attitude towards the promotion of equal rights between men and women. In 1993 the final declaration of the Vienna Conference on Human Rights, was adopted by the member states, and only a small number of states formulated reservations, mainly based on religious convictions. In the Declaration of Vienna we find the famous statement: “Women’s rights are human rights and human rights are women’s rights”.

Comments: The authors of this Draft Charter only mention “equal treatment” and further “specific advantages”. Again only speaking of vocational activities ... in professional careers. The fundamental human rights are dealing with many situations in life, not only with “vocational activities” and “compensation in professional careers”. Quid with family, education, nutrition, medical care etc.?

Over the last decade there has been a great deal of change in the promotion of equal rights for all human beings. Another proof of this is that we no longer speak about ‘positive discrimination’ but about ‘positive action’. How can we repair discrimination of certain groups by discriminating others? In order to obtain equal rights? Therefore we also protest against the wording of “specific advantages”!!!

The human race and all individuals are not identical not only regarding physical constitution, but in many other ways too. For this reason, referring to the paragraph in article 22, “specific measures”, not “advantages!”, should be used and be inserted for pregnancy, giving birth, breastfeeding, etc. This will not be specific advantages ‘for women’, but also for the child to be born and for society.

Article 23. Protection of children

1. Comment: This paragraph should state that the children are entitled to claim the same human rights as all human beings in the world. However we are fully aware that children need protection. In doing so, we should be more precise in defining this protection.
According to article 1 of the Convention of Children’s Rights every human being, younger than eighteen years old is considered as a child.
- Comment:* The wording of this paragraph is open not only to many points of view, but also for a lot of misunderstanding.
“Children may express their views freely”. Thus no longer ‘SHUT UP’?.
“Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them ...” Of course not something which concerns their teachers, their parents, their friends.
“... in accordance with their age and maturity”. Ok, but who and on what basis will ‘maturity’ be defined? So e.g. when they are sexually mature, this does not mean that they are mature enough to judge about the situations and consequences of having sex.
2. Comment: The only request we have is a definition and an indication of what is considered as ‘private institutions’? What is considered as an institution? Schools, religious or philosophical institutions ...? Do they have to conform to laws in order to be considered and accepted as institutions? And what about the family? In 1994 during the International Year of the Family, there was a huge discussion about ‘The Rights of the Family as a Unit’. The Human Rights Conventions and Treaties are dealing with rights of individuals, not of groups. For this reason the idea of the ‘family as a unit’ was rejected. Is it possible to have, within article 23, a paragraph about the relation between child and family?

CHAPTER IV. SOLIDARITYArticle 25 to Article 32

- Comments:* These articles are only dealing with the professional life of workers. A similar chapter is probably needed for solidarity in Civil Society. Every citizen within the Community has rights and obligations “to promote social and territorial cohesion”.
- Proposal:* Chapter four should be entitled “Solidarity in Labour Force or Labour Organisations”.

Article 33 Health care

- Comments:* In our opinion the following part should be dropped: “under the conditions established by national laws and practices”. Reason: everyone also includes migrants, refugees, persons in need ...

Proposal: Every human being in Europe has the right to access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment.

Article 36. Consumer protection

“Union policies shall ensure a high level of protection as regards the health, safety and interest of consumers”.

Proposal: Add at the end of the sentence: “... consumers living in Europe”.

Article 39. Right to good administration

1. Comments: We repeat our remarks about the use of his and him in this text.
Proposal: “Every person has the right to have personal/individual affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the institutions and bodies of the Union”. Indeed this right is granted to every person.

 2. “This right includes:”
 - “the right of every person to be heard before any individual measure which would affect him adversely is taken in relation to him”
Comment: We would like to drop “of every person” and again the use of “him”.
Proposal: “The right to be heard before any individual measure which would affect a person adversely is taken in relation to this individual person”

To the Presidium of the Convention

Re Article 17 on ownership rights

The ELO (European Landowners' Organisation), the GEFI (Groupement Européen des Fédérations Immobilières) and the CEPF (Propriété Forestière), have with great interest studied the new draft of the Article on ownership rights (now Article 17).

A. We note with great satisfaction that the Article now clarifies that it also protects intellectual property. As can be seen from our previous interventions we have of course anticipated that all property, including intellectual property, should be protected, but as one of the purposes of the Charter is to make the rights more clear to the citizens it is good that it is now explicitly mentioned.

B. It is regrettable, however, that in the latest (July 28) draft Article has been added a new sentence (p 1, sentence number 3) which rather makes the legal situation for ownership rights unclear. Does this sentence overtake sentence number 1 and 2? Or is it only an explanation of these other sentences? As far as we understand the new wording will invite to innumerable legal interpretation problems, and of course also to uncertainty for the citizens.

In our opinion the previous wordings of the article presented by the Presidium were considerably more clear and understandable.

Our basic standpoint is thus, that the Convention should revert to the previous wordings (although we still maintain our suggestions for a change of a couple of the words; see C below).

If, however, the Convention finds it necessary to include elements of sentence number 3 in the article, we suggest a compromise where those elements are instead incorporated in sentence number 2 , which would to a great extent eliminate the risk for an unclear legal situation. We suggest that the article p 1 then be given the following wording:

1. Every person has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his possessions or regulated in their use, except insofar as it is necessary for the general interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to prior guarantee of fair compensation.

C. We maintain our previous suggestion to use the word "full" instead of "fair" compensation. "Fair" could invite to too much subjective interpretations and could give the citizens a feeling of not being objectively protected - "full" would give the citizens a far better sense of real protection of their rights.

We have understood that there is, however, some objection to the word "full". It has been pointed out, for instance, that there could well be anticipated situations where government intervention do not lead to losses for the owner or could even lead to economic gains for him.

In order to find a solution we suggest a compromise where the wording instead of "fair compensation" should be only "compensation for his loss".

Foreword

In its meeting on 3-4 June 1999 the Cologne European Council decided to draft a Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union following an initiative of the German EU presidency in 1999. The conclusions of the Cologne Council stated that the EU had reached a stage in its development at which it was desirable to formulate the rights that applied in the Union in a Charter, the primary aim being to make them more visible to the Union's citizens. The Council also stated that the new Charter should in no way detract from the fundamental rights that already applied within the Union, as set forth e.g. in the European Convention on Human Rights.

The Tampere European Council, meeting on 15 and 16 October 1999, reached agreement on the composition, working methods and practical arrangements of the Forum responsible for drafting a Charter of Fundamental Rights. This Forum (known since February 2000 as the Convention) consists of Members of the European Parliament, the legislative bodies of Member States, authorised government representatives and representatives of the European Commission. It has undertaken to complete an interim report before the European Council in June 2000 and to submit a draft Charter to the Council in Paris/Nice on 7-8 December 2000.

On 14 January 2000 the Minister of Foreign Affairs asked the Advisory Council on International Affairs (AIV) to prepare an advisory report on the proposed Charter. In its request for advice, which was formulated at the request of the General Committee on European Affairs of the Lower House of Parliament, the Minister emphasised that the AIV was not being asked to supply a blueprint for a Charter. What he wanted was an answer to questions concerning the legal status of such a Charter, its relationship to existing conventions and other agreements under international law, the consequences for members of the public and possible appeal proceedings that should be attached to it. These are the so-called 'horizontal' questions (see Annexe I for the text of the request for advice). In the light of the rapid developments surrounding the Charter, the Government found itself obliged to adopt a position while the advisory report was still under preparation. The AIV briefly considered responding to this position, but decided against it, as the advisory report and the Government position paper would be appearing at roughly the same time.

In preparing this advisory report, the AIV studied many reports and documents written about the proposed Charter, and had several discussions with experts responsible for drafting it (a list of persons consulted appears in Annexe II). The AIV is grateful to all persons and bodies consulted for their assistance, and wishes to express its special appreciation for the support it received from J.H.M. van Bonzel and I. Henneken of the Permanent Mission in Brussels for arranging the programme for the visit to the Convention meeting in Brussels on 27 April 2000. While the advisory report was being prepared, good ties were maintained at secretarial level with the Ad Hoc group on the EU Charter of the International Economic and Social Affairs Committee of the Dutch Socio-Economic Council (SER).

The advisory report was prepared in a special AIV Committee on the Charter of Fundamental Rights (CHV), comprising the following persons: Professor F.H.J.J. Andriessen* (CEI), Dr A. Bloed* (CVV), T. Etty (CMR), Professor C. Flinterman (CMR), Professor W.J.M. van Genugten (Chairman/CMR), C. Hak (CMR), F. Kuitenbrouwer (CMR), H.C. Posthumus Meyjes (CEI), Professor N.J. Schrijver* (COS) and M.G. Wezenbeek-Geuke (CEI). The members whose names are marked with an asterisk took part primarily by correspondence.

The preparation of the advisory report benefited from the special advice and support of A.R. Westerink (European Integration Affairs Department, Ministry of Foreign Affairs). The CHV's secretariat was in the hands of T.D.J. Oostenbrink (secretary of the CMR) and trainees A. Schueler and E. van Zimmeren.

The advisory report was discussed during the plenary session of the Human Rights Committee on 18 May 2000 and subsequently adopted by the AIV on 29 May 2000.

I Long-term perspective

Since the Maastricht Treaty (1992), the European Union (EU) has had three ‘pillars’.¹ The first and most comprehensive pillar, which has existed for many decades, is the European Community (EC). In the EC, the protection of human rights has acquired form and content largely in the case law of the European Court of Justice (ECJ). This case law is largely based on the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR) of 1950, to which all Member States are party, and on the common constitutional traditions of the Member States.² Sometimes, however, the Court will allow an appeal to other human rights conventions, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR, 1966).³ The EC Treaty itself, though several times revised, contains few provisions in the realm of human rights.

The Treaties on European Union (Maastricht, 7 February 1992 and Amsterdam, 2 October 1997) build on the established case law of the ECJ. Article F, paragraph 2 of the Maastricht Treaty (Article 6, paragraph 2 of the Treaty of Amsterdam) provides that the European Union shall respect human rights as guaranteed by the ECHR, including the acquis, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States. Furthermore, the Treaty of Amsterdam contains the additional provision, in Article 6, paragraph 1, that the EU is founded on the principles of freedom, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law, principles which the Member States have in common. Article 7 has a sanction/suspension clause. Article 46 provides for the exercise of judicial control over respect for human rights.

As already noted in the request for advice, the former Advisory Committee on Human Rights and Foreign Policy (ACM), in its 1996 advisory report on the European Union and Human Rights,⁴ elaborated three suggestions relating to the protection of human rights within the framework of the Union, viz.:

- the accession of the EC or possibly the EU to the ECHR;
- the EU’s adoption of its own ‘Bill of Rights’;
- a gradual increase in the number of specific human rights provisions in the EU Treaties.

¹ These pillars are the European Community (EC), the Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP) and cooperation in the area of Justice and Home Affairs (JHA). See e.g. ECJ Stauder judgment (29/69) of 12 November 1969; ECJ 2nd Nold judgment (4/73) of 14 May 1974; ECJ Hoechst judgment (46/87) of 26 March 1987 and ECJ Orkem judgment (374/87) of 18 October 1989.

³ The ECJ Orkem judgment (374/87) of 18 October 1989 refers explicitly to the ICCPR.

⁴ See Advisory Committee on Human Rights and Foreign Policy, ‘The European Union and Human Rights’, advisory report no. 21, The Hague, 1996.

The ACM concluded that a ‘step-by-step’, ‘one right at a time’ approach was the most realistic in the short term. In the longer term, however, efforts should be made to achieve the accession of the EC or EU to the ECHR or the drafting of the EU's own Bill of Rights.

Now it has been decided to draft an EU Charter and the situation described above has completely changed, the AIV has deliberated at length, as the ACM did before, on the human rights protection that should ultimately be realised within the Union. The AIV sees ‘Operation Drafting a Charter’ as an intermediate stage, whose direction can best be determined once it is clear what the long-term perspective is. This is even more to the point if it emerges in the course of 2000 that no satisfactory consensus can be achieved on the text of a Charter.

Before answering the Minister's questions at length, the AIV wishes to set out the points of departure adopted in this advisory report. The AIV envisages a Europe characterised by:

1. the realisation of civil and political rights within the meaning of the ECHR, but also the ICCPR, and of economic, social and cultural rights within the meaning of the European Social Charter (Revised) (ESC, 1961; ESC (Revised), 1996), the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR, 1966) and the ‘human rights conventions’ of the ILO;⁵
2. the explicit commitment of administrators and officials, both at national level and in Brussels, to respect for fundamental human rights;
3. the visibility and clarity of the rights referred to in point 1 to the citizens of the Union and third-country nationals,⁶ as well as members of the legal profession;
4. a system of controllability and legal protection, that provides inter alia for the possibility of taking legal action against EU institutions whose actions violate fundamental human rights.

Taking these basic principles as its points of departure, the AIV would stress that where it comes to the protection of civil and political rights, the accession of the EU to the ECHR is by far the most preferable option. The AIV is unconvinced by the argument, frequently voiced, that it is already too late for such accession. The following comments may serve to explain this position.

As already noted, the European Court of Justice (ECJ) has incorporated the rights enshrined in the ECHR into the general principles of Community law, which law has been ratified by all Member States of the EC/EU through the inclusion of relevant Articles in the EU Treaties (see above). It is therefore still a logical sequel for the EU itself to accede to the ECHR. In this way the ECHR would acquire significance for all three pillars of the EU, which the AIV believes to be the most desirable outcome. It would also prevent the ECJ interpreting fundamental rights in a manner that would either provide less protection than Strasbourg case law or diverge from it significantly in some other way. At the same time it would mean that the ECHR would become the common human rights basis for the whole of Europe, including EU institutions, thus warding off the threat of a divided Europe. Furthermore, such accession would make it possible for the actions of EU institutions in specific situations to be examined by the Strasbourg Court in response to complaints about human rights violations.

The AIV is well aware that accession to the ECHR – and the same would apply mutatis mutandis to acceptance of the obligations following from the ESC (Revised), in relation to which it should be borne in mind that not all the obligations following from it could be declared equally applicable to the EU – would not be easy to achieve. Differences of opinion exist between the Member States; nor do all parties agree, whether in political or in legal circles, on the possible legal obstacles. It will be recalled that as long ago as 1979 the European Commission proposed that the EC should accede to the ECHR, with a view to reinforcing human rights protection within the Community. This proposal elicited the ECJ's advisory ruling of 28 March 1996, which stated that the Community did not possess the competence to accede to the ECHR. According to the ECJ, such accession could not take place without an amendment to the EC Treaty. Moreover, the question of whether the ECHR itself and its Protocols would have to be amended in this case would also have to be looked at. The question to be answered is whether new reasons may now be advanced for urging reconsideration of the ECJ's advice.

The request issued to the ECJ to advise on the accession of the EC to the ECHR was to a large extent inspired, at the time, by the political opposition of some EU Member States to an extensive interpretation of Article 235 (old) of the EC Treaty ('If action by the Community should prove necessary to attain, in the course of the operation of the common market, one of the objectives of the Community and this Treaty has not provided the necessary powers, the Council shall, acting unanimously on a proposal from the Commission and after consulting the European Parliament, take the appropriate measures'). Since the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam, with the new Title IV included in the first pillar, the protection of human rights has moved closer towards definition as one of the Union's core objectives. The provisions to this end formulated in Article 6, paragraph 1 transform the comment that systems of government should be based on democratic principles into an absolute condition.⁷ This is clear, for instance, from the fact that Article O (old) of the EU Treaty (now Article 49) has been amended such that any European state which respects the said principles may apply to become a member of the Union. Furthermore, Article 6, paragraph 4 of the EU Treaty states that the Union 'shall provide itself with the means necessary' to pursue the principles of the rule of law on which the Union is based. Basically, Article 6, paragraph 1 encapsulates the obligation that any state wishing to accede to the EU must be party to the ECHR. As far as fundamental rights are concerned, the Treaty of Amsterdam clearly states that the Union possesses certain qualities of constitutional law. The principles concerned are no longer the exclusive prerogative of Member States, but now also affect the Union as a whole.⁸ Furthermore, the Strasbourg Court has made it clear in a number of recent judgments that it too wishes to step up the pressure to make Union institutions accountable for the implementation of decisions – as far as the consequences of the application of Community law within the national legal orders of Member States are concerned, in any case.⁹ In addition, we may cite the decision-making during the Tampere summit of 15 and 16 October 1999. The Presidency's conclusions dwelt at length in the chapter 'Towards a Union of freedom, security and justice', on the common values that are of essential importance to the EU, and the procedure for drafting a Charter on fundamental rights was further elaborated.¹⁰

As matters now stand, the EU does not possess the competence to conclude international human rights conventions or to accede to any such conventions. This is often explained by stating that the EU lacks the legal personality that would be necessary for such actions. In the AIV's view, however, there is nothing to stop the Member States deciding, for instance within the framework of the current IGC negotiations, to have the EC/EU accede to the ECHR. All that is needed is the will to do it, and for this will to be expressed: if all fifteen EU Member States decide that such accession is desirable and affirm their support for it, the process can be set in motion.¹¹ There is no need to create a separate, absolute legal personality for the Union, by analogy with Article 281 of the EC Treaty, which affirms that the Community possesses legal personality. The general debate on legal personality should be separated from the actual willingness to effect accession to the ECHR. According to the AIV, this willingness is in itself the decisive factor. All this applies to the Union side of the equation. On the ECHR side, separate problems present themselves, such as the necessary amendment of the Statute of the Council of Europe and of the ECHR itself. These too can be resolved, however, provided there is the political will to do so. It should be borne in mind, however, that the Council of Europe consists of another 26 Member States besides the fifteen partners in the Union, each with its own views on these matters.

Another possibility, where accession to the ECHR is concerned, is the application of the doctrine of ‘implied powers’. This doctrine deals in general terms with the question of whether an organisation in which competence has been vested internally within a particular area may also take on external responsibilities that are necessary for the adequate fulfilment of that competence. Although the doctrine of ‘implied powers’ is also acknowledged within the framework of the Union – see e.g. the 1956 Fédéchar ruling – it plays a minor role in the EU, because many of the Union's powers have been explicitly regulated by the Member States, for the sake of caution. One exception, however, is the power to conclude external conventions. In this area the doctrine is invoked with some regularity, one example being the Community's accession to the WTO Treaty. The AIV would recommend that, now that the Union's powers in the realm of human rights and related matters are to be gradually expanded (cf. Title IV of the Treaty of Amsterdam), the government investigate whether the situation has changed sufficiently, or will have changed sufficiently after the adoption of the Charter, for the doctrine of implied powers to be deemed applicable.

Taking all these considerations and trends into account, the AIV recommends that the government explore the climate of opinion among the present Member States in the near future, or that it endeavour to procure a fresh ruling from the ECJ on the question of accession, in the light of the latest developments and on the basis of specific questions.¹²

The AIV has also reflected on what action should be taken if neither of the above recommendations is followed. In this event, a number of possible approaches still remain, as described above. The least dramatic approach would be to try to bring about a political declaration. Such a declaration, however, runs a great risk of becoming ‘all things to all Member States’, given the way the Convention is working. After all, the compilers would be at liberty to add new rights (for more on this point see below) without states being bound by the declaration and without citizens acquiring any added legal protection. The AIV would view this latter situation as undesirable. It would arouse false expectations among the general public. It is clear from the developments thus far within the Convention, however, and from the talks that the CHV has conducted in this context, that the Convention appears to be aiming for a formulation of the Charter that would make it legally binding, either now or in the long term. This can be achieved in various ways. One option would be to integrate the Charter into the EU Treaty or a Protocol to the Treaty, according to the preference of the European Council. In this regard the AIV has a mild preference for the former option, as it would emphasise the fundamental importance of the EU Treaty to the further integration of Europe. The AIV favours the adoption of a binding Charter as the best alternative to the EU's accession to the ECHR, and will therefore now turn to a detailed discussion of this option.

¹² See e.g. Professor E.M.H. Hirsch Ballin: ‘Commentaar bij Advies 2/94 van het Hof van Justitie van 28 maart 1996 inzake de toetreding van de Gemeenschap tot het EVRM’, in SEW, Tijdschrift voor Europees en economisch recht, vol. 45, no. 1, January 1997, pp. 21-23.

II Essential criteria

Given the long-term perspective already outlined by the AIV, and taking into account that no objective goal appears to have been defined as to what the Charter must achieve, the AIV believes that the following factors should be taken into account in shaping the Charter.

Interrelationship and indivisibility of classical and social human rights

The AIV is aware that the Convention is giving serious consideration to the possibility of including only civil and political rights, with a view to arriving ultimately at a binding Charter. This approach is based on the argument that economic, social and cultural rights, given that these are in the nature of ‘normative instructions’, cannot be included in a binding text. The AIV believes that to act on this basis is to adopt an approach that is wrong in principle.

The EU too has constantly emphasised the interrelationship and indivisibility of civil and political rights on the one hand, and economic, social and cultural rights on the other, in its human rights policy. This point of departure, that finds its origins partly in President Roosevelt's Four Freedoms Speech of 1941, was confirmed during the Second World Conference on Human Rights in 1993, with the full support of the Member States of the EU. It should be added that terms such as interrelationship and indivisibility (or ‘interdependence’ or another equivalent) have since become common currency internationally. To separate the two kinds of rights again would send the wrong message to large parts of the world community of states and the non-governmental world. Mary Robinson, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, also recently defined the interrelationship and indivisibility of human rights as an important point requiring action.¹³ Moreover, it is clear from developments on the international legal front that the classic distinction between legally enforceable and legally non-enforceable does not correspond to the distinction between civil and political rights on the one hand and economic, social and cultural rights on the other. To uphold an absolute distinction of this kind is no longer tenable.¹⁴

The Convention should therefore assert that in Europe too, human rights constitute an indivisible package of rights, consisting of specific claims in each of the two areas. The AIV would therefore strongly urge that the proposed Charter make no distinction between the way classical and social human rights are presented. The mere fact of grouping the two kinds of rights together does not automatically imply, however, that all rights have the same legal force. But that they are all binding – about that there should be no doubt. Even those rights, for instance, that are now enshrined in the ESC (Revised) are binding on states that have ratified it. The significance of these rights in legal proceedings instituted by individual members of the public, however, may differ.¹⁵ In some cases, legislation and the decisions of government and public authorities may be subject to direct scrutiny for compatibility with these rights, and perhaps declared non-binding. In other cases these rights can help in the interpretation of vaguely formulated national norms. In the Netherlands, for instance, courts are under an obligation to interpret and apply domestic legislation in the light of international obligations. This applies not only in the realm of civil and political rights, but also to economic, social and cultural rights such as equal treatment for women and men, the protection of children from economic and social exploitation, parents' right to choose their children's schools freely, and the right to form trade unions.

¹³ See also e.g.: Advisory Council on International Affairs, ‘The functioning of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights’, report no. 11, The Hague, 1999, section IIb.

¹⁴ Reference may also be made to the collective complaints procedure that has since entered into force – and that is used – under the ESC (Revised).

This said, some economic, social and cultural rights lend themselves less than others to judicial scrutiny or enforcement through the courts. People complaining of an infringement of these rights, or an aspect of such, would have to resort primarily to other mechanisms, such as appeals to governments and political parties and public campaigns. The AIV is aware that many Member States are not yet willing to go any further down the path of invoking economic, social and cultural rights before courts of law than can be done at present. Though this is regrettable, the AIV does not consider the Convention to be the appropriate forum for promoting further developments in that area. Any radical proposal would deal a sure deathblow to the entire Charter operation. The point is that the adoption of the Charter should send out a clear message to the citizens of the Union that they possess a number of human rights, by which the Union too is bound, but that these rights may not all have equal status in a court of law.

New rights

This brings the AIV to the issue of whether it would be wise to include a number of new rights in the Charter, as some members (of the Convention) and several non-governmental organisations have suggested. Possible examples include the right to a clean environment and the right to good governance. Understandable though such impulses may be, trying to impart the desired added value to the Charter in that way would be fraught with danger. Instead the AIV believes, as it indicates in its basic points of departure, that it would be better to achieve this added value by strengthening the legal accountability of the Union's institutions in respect of fundamental rights that are already recognised within Europe (see the section below on expanding existing legal remedies). In the light of this key objective, it could be hazardous to add new rights to the Charter, for the simple reason that some states could view them as a reason for rejecting the Charter, either when the Convention is finalising its draft or in the subsequent stage of formal adoption by the IGC and European Council. It could be a case of 'biting off more than one can chew' and spell death for the whole project. The AIV therefore advocates that any new rights be dealt with in separate treaty negotiations, possibly – though not necessarily – culminating in a separate Protocol to the ECHR, the ESC (Revised) or the Treaty on European Union.

Visibility and clarity

As already noted, one of the objectives of the Charter project is to enhance the visibility of rights. In this regard, a distinction is often made between lawyers and ordinary citizens: the former are supposedly fully abreast of existing rights, while the latter have no clear picture of them. However, this distinction is flawed in several respects. The AIV would mention just two. First, 'even' lawyers often lack detailed knowledge of the human rights situation within the Union – that is, of the Treaty component supplemented by a series of judgments handed down by the Luxembourg Court. A degree of specialisation is needed that is certainly not possessed by the entire legal profession. Only recently, complaints emanated from 'Luxembourg' (the ECJ) that many European lawyers were unfamiliar with European law, and the same complaint would be applicable here.

As far as ordinary citizens are concerned, not all people are ignorant of their rights, although it would certainly be wrong to generalise from the proverbial exceptions such as specialised non-governmental organisations (including, in the Netherlands, the Dutch section of the International Commission of Jurists). Both Strasbourg and Brussels are in many respects remote, and this affects issues of fundamental rights. There is much room for improvement, on the part of both national authorities and the institutions themselves. A well-formulated Charter could help a great deal, by improving visibility and clarity. In this connection it is important to give a wide interpretation to the concept of 'citizens': at issue are not only ordinary members of the public and non-governmental organisations, but also companies and other private actors such as the media, which operate within and from Europe.

EU citizens and third-country nationals

An important point in the debate, and a separate area of concern for the AIV, concerns the fundamental rights of third-country nationals, people from countries outside the EU. The AIV would begin by commenting in general that human rights apply to everyone within the territory of the EU, including third-country nationals. The nature of human rights is such that they are not dependent on being a national of an EU Member State, but apply to everyone. This is true not only of internationally recognised human rights such as the right to freedom of expression and the right of association and peaceful assembly, but also to the right to health care and to education.

In practice, however, the legal status of third-country nationals within the EU is highly complex. This is mainly because their rights derive from different legal sources. Aside from rights based on the EC Treaty (as revised several times), they also have rights based on guidelines on discrimination, equal treatment, part-time work, family reunification and anti-racism measures. In other cases, rights accorded third-country nationals are largely determined by their nationality and/or country of residence. Rights that third-country nationals enjoy on the basis of their nationality may even derive, for instance, from Association Agreements, which are limited in scope to the nationals of Contracting States. The same applies, in another context, to the distinction between EU citizens and third-country nationals on the basis of the Schengen Agreements, where the Member State of residence is the decisive factor.¹⁶

When the rights of third-country nationals are compared with those of the nationals of a Member State, several differences emerge. The main differences relate not so much to civil rights but to political, social and economic rights, though in political rights too, the division between EU citizens and third-country nationals is growing less strict. This applies, for instance, to the right of petition and the right to submit a complaint to the European Ombudsman.¹⁷ Although states are allowed under the terms of Article 16 of the ECHR to impose restrictions on the activities of aliens, this provision has seen little application.¹⁸ The general point of departure should be that third-country nationals enjoy the same rights as EU citizens, unless there are objective and reasonable grounds for departing from this general rule, as is done in practice regarding the right to vote and to be elected.¹⁹ The same applies to the right to diplomatic and consular protection and eligibility for positions in EU institutions.

As the protection of human rights of all those who find themselves within the EU should be of paramount importance, the narrower problem of European citizenship should also be approached in that light. Article 8 (old) of the EC Treaty provides that every person holding the nationality of a Member State is a citizen of the Union, and that the citizens of the Union enjoy the rights conferred by the EC Treaty and are subject to the duties it imposes. Some of these rights are enshrined in Articles 8a-d (old), while others occur in various places in the EC Treaty. Even so, it is clear that European citizenship, which is supplementary to citizenship of a Member State (and hence does not replace it), is as yet of very limited scope. Thus in a number of cases regulations that apply in one country (e.g. relating to discrimination on the grounds of race or the legal status of partnerships) do not apply elsewhere. Furthermore, in some cases the ways and means of using existing rights effectively are inadequate – the right to publication of all European decision-making and access to documents being a case in point.²⁰ The AIV considers that the government, proceeding on the assumption of the basic equality of EU citizens and third-country nationals who have resided in the Union for more than five years, should flesh out the concept of EU citizenship unless there are ‘objective and reasonable grounds’ for making a distinction.

Tensions between the ECJ and the European Court of Human Rights

In the discussions on the Charter, the question frequently arises of the tensions that the new Charter might generate between the Strasbourg and Luxembourg Courts.

The Strasbourg Court currently dispenses justice in cases brought before it by citizens of any of the 41 States that are party to the ECHR, while the Luxembourg Court will in future be competent to rule, extrapolating from existing procedures, in cases in which one of the EU’s institutions has violated a human right as formulated in the Charter. This raises a number of questions.

First, the question may be asked of how great the risk is of the Luxembourg Court adopting a different, substantially divergent interpretation of a particular human right compared to Strasbourg. A clause will probably be included in the Charter to the effect that the Luxembourg Court should consider itself bound by the Strasbourg acquis, but this ignores the fact that as an independent tribunal, the Luxembourg Court is within its rights to ignore such a provision. More generally, it may be assumed that the Luxembourg Court will have little inclination to accept as a foregone conclusion the interpretation of rights as agreed in Strasbourg. Furthermore, the law is not a static phenomenon, and substantially different ideas may arise concerning the development of new law. The crucial point is whether or not this would have an adverse effect. Would it in general be a problem if the two courts were to arrive at different interpretations of certain provisions? From the present vantage-point the AIV sees a certain risk, but feels, especially in view of the independence of the judges in the two Courts, that it can and should be accepted. However, mindful of this risk, the AIV would add the express proviso that within at most ten years of adopting a Charter, a serious review should determine whether significant differences of interpretation have indeed arisen. If such be the case, the EU and the Council of Europe would be obliged to make further conventional agreements or to decide after all to accede to the ECHR and to accept the corresponding obligations deriving from the ESC (Revised).

In the short term, one option already suggested would be to create the possibility of appealing to Strasbourg from judgments handed down by Luxembourg, provided these lie within the scope of the ECHR. The AIV believes that despite the benefits to be gained, in maximising the scope for action for citizens whose rights have been undermined – and in strengthening legal certainty – this is undesirable from the vantage-point of process economy. After first exhausting domestic remedies the petitioner could take his or her case to two international courts, which, partly in light of both Courts' present workload, would appear to be 'too much of a good thing'. In this connection the AIV would point to the parallel that exists in that millions of European citizens may choose, in the event of a violation of their rights, to take their cases to both Strasbourg and the UN Human Rights Committee in Geneva. Although this possibility exists on paper, many countries have restricted it by entering reservations to either the ECHR or the ICCPR at the time of accession or ratification.

A different point is the division of labour between the two Courts. The misapprehension appears to be abroad that citizens will be entirely free in future to decide whether to take their cases to Strasbourg or Luxembourg, depending on where they believe their best chances lie. The AIV believes this would be undesirable. To prevent it, it should be emphasised that the Strasbourg Court should in essence carry on doing what it is doing now, whereas bringing a case before 'Luxembourg' will be possible only in relation to violations resulting from the actions of the EU's institutions. Examples would include the EU's promulgation of a Regulation undermining the right of ownership, or a decision made without respecting the elementary right to have both sides of a case heard. Only in such cases would the Luxembourg Court be the proper tribunal to apply to, though where a case lends itself in terms of substance to being heard by either Court, the choice would be up to the petitioner. This is in accordance with international legal practice.

Expansion of existing legal remedies

As noted in Chapter I of this report, the AIV believes that one of the most important principles in the Charter operation should be that it should clarify and strengthen the existing system of controllability and legal protection. Citizens are entitled not to be on the receiving end of empty promises on the part of their governments. In this context it is important to acknowledge that as things now stand, it is difficult for individual members of the public to gain access to the Court in Luxembourg. The classical criteria of an action taken by one of the EU's institutions being of 'direct and individual concern'²¹ in practice throws up a considerable obstacle and seriously impedes the controllability of decision-making.²² The AIV therefore believes that citizens should be given wider – and more realistic – opportunities to complain about violations of their rights by one of the EU's institutions. It is counter-productive to place too many obstacles in their path. In this connection the AIV advises taking existing procedures as the point of departure and adjusting them. Where admissibility is concerned, the criteria of the ECHR could be used, as recently reaffirmed (in the context of the 11th Protocol, which embodied fundamental revisions of the Strasbourg system) and honed by the Strasbourg monitoring bodies. These requirements of admissibility, varying from the time limit for submitting a complaint to the requirement that a petitioner must claim to be the victim of a violation himself, have by now proven their worth. It is also clear that they do indeed function as obstacles, but not as insuperable ones.

²¹ Art. 230 of the EC Treaty provides for a similar qualified right of appeal for natural and legal persons.

As far as defining who is entitled to submit a complaint is concerned, the ECHR again provides useful criteria. It refers to ‘any person, non-governmental organisation or group of individuals claiming to be the victim of a violation’. It would be appropriate for the Charter to include such a formula, again under the caveat that any change to the admissibility criteria or the use of two different systems is more likely to raise new questions than to help produce a clear and coherent whole. In the discussions on the Charter it has been acknowledged that it would be wrong for the Charter to send a message that there is a Strasbourg ‘speed’ and a higher or different ‘speed’, applicable to EU Member States. Adding new rights to the Charter (see above) and introducing a complaints system that differed from Strasbourg in terms of admissibility criteria would also send out the wrong message in that respect.

At the same time it is of great importance to include a provision in the Charter forbidding the invocation of the Charter to give a restrictive interpretation or application to existing national and international provisions and obligations in the area of human rights. A provision of this kind could be formulated by analogy with Article 53 of the ECHR and Article 5, paragraph 2 of the ICCPR.²³

Concluding remarks

Should it turn out, after careful examination of the text of a Charter as agreed by the Convention for compatibility with the acquis of Strasbourg and Luxembourg,²⁴ that the efforts to arrive at a well-formulated and legally binding Charter have not produced the desired outcome, there is still the option of a ‘political’ declaration, which could be made legally binding in due course. In that case the ‘step-by-step’, ‘one right at a time’ approach described above would be applicable, as the IGC could emphasise. If the most significant steps forward, such as accession to the ECHR and mutatis mutandis to the ESC (Revised), or the drafting of a legally binding Charter, prove impossible or unfeasible, this should not be seized upon as an excuse to do nothing. In the past a piecemeal approach has often produced positive results, even generating a certain dynamism in the integration process. On balance, human rights already enjoy a considerable degree of protection in the EU, although this protection is not always sufficiently clear. Carrying on along this path would be the last option in attempting to strengthen the legal protection of the citizens of the EU.

²³ See e.g. the opinion of L.F.M. Besselink in Nederlands Juristenblad, vol. 17, 28 April 2000, pp. 887-888.

²⁴ In this report the AIV proceeds on the assumption that the Convention will succeed in presenting a text of the Charter during the Lisbon summit in June 2000. In the ensuing months, but before the Nice summit, the text could undergo the examination referred to here.

A final word. The AIV wishes to emphasise the close relationship that must exist between the standards that are imposed internally and those that are urged upon other countries in the framework of external policy. Although this report primarily focuses on internal policy, it is of great importance to recognise that internal and external human rights policy cannot be viewed in isolation from each other. The EU cannot urge norms upon others in the context of external policy unless it has already achieved them itself.

III Recommendations

On the basis of the above considerations, the AIV makes the following recommendations to the Government of the Netherlands:

1. The AIV emphasises that the EU's accession to the ECHR is by far the most preferable option. The government should therefore give serious consideration to investigating whether such accession may not be feasible in the changed political circumstances. The same applies mutatis mutandis to accession to the ESC (Revised) and the ILO 'human rights' conventions.
2. If accession appears not to be feasible in the short term, efforts should be made to achieve a legally binding Charter of Fundamental Rights, incorporating economic, social and cultural rights as well as civil and political rights. The inclusion of these two types of rights in the same text does not automatically mean that they would all have the same legal force in all cases. Their significance in legal proceedings instituted by members of the public may differ.
3. The Government should try to make the rights included in a Charter both visible and clear, both for members of the public and even (!) for members of the legal profession.
4. The added value of the Charter should lie in the increased legal protection it affords citizens in the area of human rights, including access to the courts, in the application of European legislation. Its added value should not lie in the inclusion of new rights.
5. The AIV notes that great differences remain between the fundamental rights enjoyed by EU citizens and by third-country nationals. The AIV urges the government to introduce distinctions only in cases in which it is reasonable and objectively justified, and in other cases to proceed on the basis that EU citizens and third-country nationals who have been resident for five years or longer within the territory of the EU possess equal rights.
6. The AIV recognises the risk that the Courts in Strasbourg and Luxembourg may in some cases arrive at different interpretations of human rights norms. It considers that in the present circumstances this is an acceptable and inevitable risk, and recommends that in the event of significant differences, further conventional agreements be made within the framework of the EU and the Council of Europe, or alternatively that the decision be made for the EU to accede to the ECHR. In this connection, the AIV proposes that within ten years at most, a review be conducted to examine to what extent significant differences have arisen. In the AIV's view, it would be undesirable to create a possibility of appeal in Strasbourg against judgments handed down by the Court in Luxembourg.
7. In order to make it easier for members of the public to submit complaints about human rights violations by EU institutions and to prevent the growth of two divergent systems of admissibility, the admissibility requirements set forth and standardised in the context of the ECHR should be used as the basis. The question of who is entitled to submit a complaint should likewise be decided by reference to the ECHR criteria. Steps must be taken to ensure that existing national and international provisions of fundamental rights cannot be interpreted restrictively.

8. As soon as an initial draft of the Charter is finished, a meticulous examination of the text should follow to check compatibility with the acquis of Strasbourg and Luxembourg.
9. If the efforts to bring about a Charter do not lead to a well-formulated and legally binding result, the strengthening of the protection of human rights within the EU should proceed by way of a 'step-by-step', 'one right at a time' approach.
10. In conclusion, the AIV emphasises once again that the EU cannot urge norms upon others in its external policy that it has not achieved internally.

Chairman of the Advisory Council on International Affairs
Prof. R.F.M. Lubbers
P.O. Box 20061
2500 EB The Hague

The Hague, 14 January 2000

Dear Professor Lubbers,

Mr Michiel Patijn has asked me, on behalf of the General Committee on European Affairs of the Lower House, to request from your Advisory Committee a report on the Charter of Fundamental Rights, or Bill of Rights, for the European Union. Mr Patijn chairs this Committee, and he also represents the Lower House in the Forum* that will be drafting the Charter. Professor Ernst Hirsch Ballin has been appointed to represent the Upper House. The Government is represented by Mr Frederik Korthals Altes.

The decision to draft a Bill of Rights for the European Union was taken by the European Council meeting in Cologne on 3-4 June 1999. A Forum consisting of members of the European Parliament and the parliaments of the member states and authorised representatives of governments and of the European Commission will prepare the Charter. This Forum must submit a draft of the proposed Charter to the Council before the European Council in December 2000. The Forum met on 17 December 1999 for the first time.

The General Committee on European Affairs of the Lower House indicated that it would like the Committee's advisory report to deal with the following points:

- What relationship will the new Bill of Rights have with existing national legislation (in particular the Constitution), European Conventions (in particular the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and the European Social Charter) and international conventions (Universal Declaration of Human Rights, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights)?

- What subjects should this Bill of Rights address that are not already included in existing legislation and regulations?
- How would such a Bill of Rights affect members of the public?
- How should this Bill of Rights be arrived at procedurally?
- What appeal proceedings should be applicable to the Bill of Rights? What legal institutions play a role here? How should the relations between these institutions be regulated?

The General Committee on European Affairs has pointed out that the subject of the Bill of Rights is already included in the Advisory Committee's programme, and has therefore expressed the hope that the report might be made available within three months.

As you are no doubt aware, the Interministerial Committee on European Law issued a report to the State Secretary for Foreign Affairs on 10 September 1999, which dealt with some of the points raised above. This report is enclosed for your information. Also enclosed is a memorandum on the Charter that I sent to the Speaker of the Lower House on 3 December 1999.

I am familiar with the report 'The European Union and Human Rights', published by the Advisory Committee on Human Rights and Foreign Policy on 25 September 1996. The report now requested could perhaps build on this.

I share the hope expressed by the General Committee on European Affairs that the Advisory Committee's advisory report can be made available within three months, and I am convinced that it will be of great benefit to those representing both Parliament and the Government in helping to formulate their contributions to the Forum.

Yours sincerely,

Jozias van Aartsen,
Minister of Foreign Affairs

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 4 September 2000CHARTE 4452/00*CONTRIB 306*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a statement by Mr. Karl Hermann HAACK, member of the German Bundestag, regarding the document CHARTE 4422/00 CONVENT 45.¹

¹ This text has been submitted in German, French and English languages.

Statement concerning Convent 45

Dear Professor Herzog,

As Federal Government Commissioner for the Disabled, I would like to supplement my letter of 26 July 2000 by making the following statement concerning the Presidium draft now presented.

I would ask you to forward this statement to the members of the Convent and also make it accessible to the public.

Kind regards,

Karl-Hermann Haack

Statement of the Federal Government Commissioner for the Disabled concerning Convent 45

Article 32 Social security and social support

(1) The Union recognises and respects the right of access to the benefits of social security and to the social services that guarantee protection in the event of maternity, sickness, disability, an occupational accident, a need for long-term care or in old age, as well as after becoming unemployed, in accordance with Community law and the legal provisions and customs of the individual Member States.

Reasons:

Disability is an independent criterion that is not covered by the above-mentioned categories of "sickness" and "need for long-term care".

An addition to this article would strengthen Articles 21 and 24 and give them the necessary support in terms of social policy.

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution from The Union of Professional Engineers in Finland,
"Insinööriliitto IL ry".¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

1st September 2000

Jean-Paul Jacque

Dear Sir,

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS IN THE EUROPEAN UNION

The Union of Professional Engineers in Finland, Insinööriiliitto IL ry, is the interest group representing professional engineers. Its objective is to contribute to the professional development of engineers and to enhance their opportunities to pursue their profession and utilize their skills.

Insinööriiliitto has followed the discussion concerning the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union with a positive mind and wishes to communicate its view of their contents. As it is the aim to create a document which makes clear the rights of the individual, social responsibility and issues of justice, it is appropriate to set forth a few issues related to the engineering profession.

As the right of free movement of labour, capital, services and goods has been defined in the Treaty of the European Union, the possibility for the free movement of labour should be genuinely ensured.

This should apply to all citizens regardless of their education and employment.

Comparability of diplomas

The right to education is a citizen's fundamental right. This should also include a qualitative dimension where the central factors are the scope of education and the comparability of diplomas. Through this the minimum standards of skills of people with a certain diploma can be defined from the viewpoint of a member state. The level of diplomas can be considered, among other things, as an issue of safety in services and trade between individuals and corporations. Suitable examples in the technical field include design, production and inspection procedures for electrical appliances, lifts and pressure vessels. There are many other examples.

Consumer protection should also be taken into account when considering fundamental rights. The consumer must be able to rely on the quality and safety of products and services and on the fact that those selling products and offering services have the necessary knowledge.

Irrespective of the fact that the freedom to move, work, offer services, and trade have been recognized within the EU, there have been numerous obstacles in practice. It has, for instance, proved impossible or almost impossible for Finnish engineers to work in certain European countries (e.g. Italy, Portugal, and Greece).

The level classification of engineering education covering the whole EU area and almost the whole rest of Europe has already been carried through by FEANI (Fédération Européenne d'Associations Nationales d'Ingeénierus). This European umbrella organization of engineers defines the education in the technical field which is to be classified as engineering education. We suggest that this completed basic work be used as the starting point for mapping out the comparability of engineering diplomas.

We propose that the following amendment concerning the comparability of diplomas be made to article 14 (Right to Education), section 2 (Liberties) of the Charter of Fundamental Rights:

“Education must be of high quality and it shall be possible to compare diplomas obtained in various countries.”

Further, we propose that the Amendment of the Charter of Fundamental Rights concerning directions for maintaining the rights would include a definition of the diplomas which have an important impact on the rights, equality, and safety of citizens.

Agreements on prohibition of competition

The rights of professional freedom and freedom of trade should be genuinely ensured for people who earn a living. Companies increasingly demand that their employees sign so-called agreements on prohibition of competition in order to prevent the employee from taking up employment in a competing company within a certain period of time after the termination of employment. National legislation generally allows these kinds of agreements. The sanctions for breaking the agreement are usually undue and in many cases prevent the individual from pursuing his/her profession freely. Agreements on prohibition of competition are required of employees the in metal and electronics industry, particularly in design and product development and in marketing and sales, not only of people in management positions. The period for prohibition of competition can last several years after the termination of employment and the contractual penalty can amount to hundreds of thousands of Finnish marks. These kinds of agreements are an obstacle to the free movement of employees from one company to another and also from one country to another and are therefore against the EU principles of free movement of labour.

National legislation should not allow undue restrictions and liabilities for damages from the viewpoint of an individual in conjunction with the freedom of utilizing skills, the right to work and change his/her employer. Undue restrictions will result in a new type of slave labour if the sanctions applied to an individual exceed reasonable time limits or other limitations or if they completely prohibit one from working and utilizing one's skills.

We propose that articles 15 and 16, section 2 of the Charter be amended to include the following limitation for concluding an agreement on prohibition of competition:

“The right of an individual to pursue his/her profession may not be limited by unreasonable agreements.”

Also the Amendment clarifying this point should define what may be considered a reasonable restriction for prohibition of competition. This would create a framework for definitions in national legislation of maximum measures prohibiting competition.

Social security

Free movement of labour as defined in the Treaty of the EU also requires practical measures concerning the transferability of social security. When an individual takes employment in one member state, he must be able to trust that his rights to social security will be transferable to other member states. For instance, she/he must have the right to pension security and to enjoy it in his/her home country or place of residence anywhere within the EU area. In addition to pensions, also the rights to unemployment compensation, health care, and other social benefits should be ensured equally for all.

At the moment directive 1408/71 determines the principle for applying the social security systems to employees moving within the Community. However, compliance with the directive has turned out to be difficult. The basic principle is that an employee is insured in the country of employment. In certain cases the person can still remain insured in the country where she/he works normally, e.g. if employment in another country is temporary. The benefits earned in another country can be maintained. Pensions, for instance, are paid to a person residing in another member state. Also periods of work or pension insurance in another member state can be taken into consideration when calculating the benefits.

Forms standardized by the EU are used for transferring social benefits. Acquiring the necessary forms is bureaucratic and systems vary from country to country. It is difficult to acquire information on the systems of various member states. Unawareness of a minor detail of a regulation or filling in the wrong form may result in losing the entire benefit. Pension payments to a bank account in another country may be impossible according to the national legislation. This has also often caused additional costs for the pensioner, e.g. in the form of bank transfer costs.

Insinööriliitto is of the opinion that in order to secure the rights of the individual, the contents of the social security directive should be clarified and simplified in connection with the revision of the Treaty. National procedures should be standardized, but without harmonizing the social security systems themselves.

Further we propose that the importance of the above issues be emphasized in section 4 of the Treaty concerning social responsibility.

Sehr geehrter Herr Jacqué, nachfolgend übermittle ich Ihnen im Auftrag des DST seine Stellungnahme zum Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte in Form eines Beschlussvorschlages für das Präsidium des Deutschen Städtetages, über den dieses in Kürze beschließen wird.

Beschlussvorschlag:

- 1 Das Präsidium begrüßt im Grundsatz den Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union, der am 28. Juli 2000 vom Präsidium des Konvents zur Festlegung eines Grundrechtskataloges vorgeschlagen worden ist.
- 2 Das Präsidium teilt ausdrücklich die in Art. 49 Abs. 2 des Entwurfes niedergelegte Position, dass durch diese Grundrechte-Charta keine neuen Zuständigkeiten der Europäischen Union oder der Gemeinschaft begründet werden sollen. Es bekräftigt darüber hinaus, dass auch bestehende Zuständigkeiten nicht erweitert werden dürfen.
- 3 Das Präsidium hält dennoch eine Veränderung der Grundrechte-Charta in erster Linie in zwei Punkten im deutschen kommunalen Interesse für erforderlich:
 - 3.1 In der Präambel sollte in Ziffer 3, in der von der Achtung der nationalen Identität der Mitgliedstaaten und der Organisation ihrer staatlichen Gewalt auf nationaler, regionaler und lokaler Ebene die Rede ist, auch die lokale Selbstverwaltung abgesichert werden.
Deshalb sollte Ziffer 3 der Präambel durch folgenden Satz erweitert werden:

„Die bestehenden Entscheidungsrechte demokratisch gewählter Vertretungskörperschaften auf regionaler und lokaler Ebene werden bei der Setzung und Umsetzung europäischen Rechts gewährleistet.“

3.2 Art. 34 des Entwurfes (Zugang zu Diensten von allgemeinem wirtschaftlichen Interesse) sollte folgenden Nachsatz erhalten:

Insbesondere erlauben wir uns zu Ziff. 3.2. des oben stehenden Beschlussvorschlages folgendes auszuführen:

In Art. 34 des Entwurfes ist im Kontext mit dem Zugang der Bürger zu den Diensten von allgemeinem wirtschaftlichen Interesse der soziale und territoriale Zusammenhalt der Union genannt, den es zu schützen und zu wahren gilt.

Der Wortlaut des Textes bezieht sich auf den ausschließlich in Art. 16 EGV verwendeten Begriff "sozialer und territorialer Zusammenhalt." Der Zusammenhalt der Union erfordert zunächst Stabilität in den einzelnen Mitgliedstaaten. In Deutschland wiederum ist Voraussetzung für die Wahrung dieser sozialen und territorialen Stabilität der Erhalt der Städte und Gemeinden sowohl in Bezug auf ihr Gebiet als auch hinsichtlich ihrer Funktion als Garanten für die Grundsicherung der elementaren Lebensbedürfnisse der Einwohner. Dienste von allgemeinem wirtschaftlichen Interesse dienen in der Regel der Grundsicherung der Lebensbedürfnisse der Bürger. Deshalb sind sie nicht nur von allgemeinem wirtschaftlichen, sondern ebenso auch von allgemeinem bürgerschaftlichen Interesse. Der Erhalt von Entscheidungsrechten bei den Anforderungen an diese Dienste im Rahmen der lokalen Demokratie ist damit als eine essentielle Voraussetzung anzusehen. Denn Selbsterwaltung bedeutet auch die Möglichkeit eigenverantwortlicher Wahrnehmung und Erfüllung eigener öffentlicher Angelegenheiten durch eigene Organe in eigenem Namen und auf eigene Kosten. Diese Organisationshoheit lokaler Gebietskörperschaften ist durch die Politik der Europäischen Union in Frage gestellt, insbesondere hinsichtlich der Dienste von allgemeinem wirtschaftlichen Interesse, die zugleich im bürgerschaftlichem Interesse liegen. Es bedarf daher einer Ergänzung des Art. 34 der Charta.

Im übrigen regen wir folgende zusätzliche Änderungsvorschläge an:

Zu Art. 14:

In Art. 14 Recht auf Bildung Abs. 1 sollte der zweite Satz gestrichen werden.

Die Forderung, unentgeltlich am Pflichtschulunterricht teilnehmen zu können, stellt einen Eingriff in die Hoheit der Mitgliedstaaten dar und widerspricht u. E. Art. 149 Abs. 1 des EG-Vertrages.

Der Begriff der Unentgeltlichkeit des Pflichtschulunterrichts ist interpretationsbedürftig bzw. kann unterschiedlich interpretiert werden. Neben einer Befreiung der Zahlung von Schulgeld könnte dazu auch die kostenlose Bereitstellung von Unterrichtsmitteln und von Beförderungskosten zur Schule fallen. Regelungen hierzu müssen den Mitgliedstaaten vorbehalten bleiben.

Zu Art. 13:

Darauf hinzuweisen wäre noch, dass die Europäische Union im Forschungsbereich ebenso wenig Kompetenzen wie im Bereich von Kunst und Wissenschaft hat (außer einem begrenzten, die Hoheit der Mitgliedstaaten achtenden Förderauftrag). Wenn dennoch in Art. 13 die Freiheit der Forschung in den Entwurf aufgenommen werden soll, erschiene es richtig, diesen Artikel analog zu Art. 5 Abs. 3 Grundgesetz um Kunst, Wissenschaft und Lehre zu erweitern.

Entgegen der Auffassung einiger Kulturorganisationen und Kulturverbände unterstützt nach dem gegenwärtigen Stand der Diskussion die Hauptgeschäftsstelle nicht die Forderung, in einem eigenen Artikel ein Recht auf Kultur in die Charta aufzunehmen. Es würde vollkommen genügen, wenn Art. 13 im Sinne von Art. 5 Grundgesetz um die "Kunst" erweitert würde. Jedenfalls nach gängiger deutscher Auffassung und Rechtsprechung würde dies auch den Auftrag zur Förderung der Kunst beinhalten.

Wir würden es im Interesse der vom Deutschen Städtetag vertretenen deutschen Städte begrüßen, wenn die oben angeführten Anregungen Berücksichtigung finden könnten.

Selbstverständlich stehen Ihnen der Unterzeichner sowie die Geschäftsstelle des DST bei Rückfragen jederzeit zur Verfügung.

PRÄAMBELEntwurf des Konvents (28. 7. 2000)

1. Die Völker Europas haben untereinander eine immer engere Union begründet und beschlossen, auf der Grundlage gemeinsamer Werte eine friedliche Zukunft zu teilen.

2. Die Union gründet sich auf die unteilbaren und universellen Grundsätze der Würde der Männer und der Frauen, der Freiheit, der Gleichheit und der Solidarität; sie beruht auf dem Grundsatz der Demokratie und der Rechtsstaatlichkeit.

3. Die Union trägt zur Entwicklung dieser gemeinsamen Werte unter Achtung der Vielfalt der Kulturen und Traditionen der Völker Europas sowie der nationalen Identität der Mitgliedstaaten und der Organisation ihrer staatlichen Gewalt auf nationaler, regionaler und lokaler Ebene bei; sie stellt durch den freien Personen-, Waren-, Kapital- und Dienstleistungsverkehr eine ausgewogene und nachhaltige Entwicklung sicher.

4. Mit der Annahme dieser Charta möchte die Union die Grundrechte sichtbar machen und dadurch ihren Schutz angesichts der Entwicklung der Gesellschaft, des sozialen Fortschritts und der wissenschaftlichen und technologischen Entwicklungen verstärken.

5. Diese Charta bekräftigt unter Achtung der Befugnisse und Aufgaben der Gemeinschaft und der Union und des Subsidiaritätsprinzips die Rechte, die sich vor allem aus den gemeinsamen Verfassungstraditionen der Mitgliedstaaten, aus dem Vertrag über die Europäische Union und aus den Gemeinschaftsverträgen, aus der Europäischen Konvention zum Schutz der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten, aus den von der Gemeinschaft und dem Europarat beschlossenen Sozialchartas sowie aus der Rechtsprechung des Gerichtshofs der Europäischen Gemeinschaften und des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte ergeben.

6. Die Inanspruchnahme dieser Rechte ist mit Verantwortlichkeiten und Pflichten sowohl gegenüber den Mitmenschen als auch gegenüber der menschlichen Gemeinschaft und den künftigen Generationen verbunden.

7. Daher sind jeder Person die nachstehend aufgeführten Rechte und Freiheiten garantiert.

PRÄAMBELAlternativentwurf der IG-EuroVision

1. Die Europäische Union ist eine Gemeinschaft der Völker Europas, die auf der Grundlage gemeinsamer Werte eine friedliche soziale Zukunft gestalten wollen.

2. Die Union gründet auf der Achtung vor der Würde des Menschen. Sie orientiert ihre Aufgaben und Ziele an den unteilbaren und universellen Idealen der Freiheit, Gleichheit und Solidarität und gestaltet ihre Rechtsordnungen nach demokratischen und rechtsstaatlichen Prinzipien.

3. Die Union trägt zur Entfaltung dieser gemeinsamen Werte unter Achtung der Vielfalt der Kulturen und Traditionen der Völker Europas sowie der nationalen Identität der Mitgliedstaaten und der Organisation ihrer staatlichen Gewalt auf nationaler, regionaler und lokaler Ebene bei; sie will durch freien Personen-, Informations-, Kultur-, Kapital-, Waren- und Dienstleistungsverkehr einer ausgewogenen und nachhaltigen Entwicklung dienen.

4. Mit der Annahme dieser Charta möchte die Union die Grundrechte der Menschen, der Bürger und der Völker bewußter machen und dadurch ihren Schutz angesichts der gesellschaftlichen Veränderungen, des sozialen Wandels und des wissenschaftlichen und technologischen Fortschritts verstärken.

5. (unverändert)

6. (unverändert)

7. Die nachstehend aufgeführten Grundrechte sind für die Europäische Union und ihre Mitglieder Grundlage aller rechtlich-politischen Entscheidungen und bei Verstößen einklagbar.

Sehr geehrter Herr Jacqué, am 28. Juli 2000 hat das Präsidium des Konvents zur Erarbeitung der geplanten Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union einen vollständigen Entwurf für eine solche Charta veröffentlicht.

Als deutscher Spitzenverband der Freien Wohlfahrtspflege, dem an die 10.000 rechtlich selbständige Organisationen und Vereine angeschlossen sind, möchten wir zu diesem Entwurf Stellung nehmen und insbesondere konstruktive Anregungen geben.

Aus unserer Sicht enthält der Entwurf bereits viel Begrüßenswertes und stellt vor dem Hintergrund der unterschiedlichen Interessen im Konvent eine beachtliche Zwischenleistung dar.

An folgenden Punkten ist der Entwurf aus unserer Sicht jedoch noch nachbesserungsbedürftig:

- Zu Artikel 9 (Recht, eine Ehe einzugehen und eine Familie zu gründen) schlagen wir vor, einen zweiten Absatz wie folgt einzufügen: “Pflege und Erziehung der Kinder sind das natürliche Recht der Eltern und die primär ihnen obliegende Pflicht. Die staatliche Gemeinschaft schützt und fördert darüber hinaus jede Lebensgemeinschaft, in der Kinder und Jugendliche aufwachsen, bei ihrer selbstverantwortlichen Aufgabenerfüllung”.

Aus unserer Sicht gebietet sich ein solcher zweiter Absatz, um der derzeitigen Diskussion um einen modernen Familienbegriff mit seinen sozialpolitischen Implikationen in zukunftsgerichteter Weise gerecht zu werden.

- Zu Artikel 14 (Recht auf Bildung) halten wir die Aussage, wonach eine jede Person das Recht hat, unentgeltlich am Pflichtschulunterricht teilzunehmen, für unzulänglich. Im Interesse der Chancengleichheit der Bürgerinnen und Bürger in Europa, aber auch im Interesse der wirtschaftlichen Entwicklung in Europa halten wir vielmehr eine Formulierung für notwendig, wonach eine jede Person das Recht auf Bildung und Ausbildung gemäß ihrer Fähigkeiten hat.
- Zu Artikel 32 (Soziale Sicherheit und soziale Unterstützung) Satz 1 ist aus unserer Sicht der Lebensumstand der Behinderung zwingend mit aufzuführen, da er durch den Begriff der Krankheit nicht mit abgedeckt wird. Die Formulierung “die Union anerkennt und achtet das Recht...” ist aus unserer Sicht zudem zu defensiv formuliert, da sie Interpretationsmöglichkeiten offenläßt, ob damit ein Grundrecht tatsächlich formuliert ist.

- Artikel 32 (Soziale Sicherheit und soziale Unterstützung) Satz 2: Auch hierbei handelt es sich um keine klare Formulierung eines Grundrechtes. Aus unserer Sicht muß es heißen: “Wer in Not gerät, hat Anspruch auf Hilfe und Betreuung und auf die Mittel, die für ein menschenwürdiges Dasein und für eine Teilhabe an der Gesellschaft unerlässlich sind.”
- Die Formulierung in Artikel 33 (Gesundheitsschutz) halten wir mit Blick auf in der Zukunft nicht auszuschließende Diskussion über Rationierungen in der gesundheitlichen Versorgung für unzulänglich. Der Verweis auf die einzelstaatlichen Vorschriften wirft die Frage auf, wie weit ein solcher Passus in einer EU-Charta der sozialen Grundrechte überhaupt noch Sinn macht. Wir schlagen statt dessen folgende Formulierung vor: “Jede Person hat ein Recht auf gesundheitliche Versorgung. Niemandem dürfen wegen seiner wirtschaftlichen Situation oder aus anderen Gründen notwendige Leistungen der gesundheitlichen Versorgung vorenthalten werden.”
- Eine EU-Charta der sozialen Grundrechte hat aus unserer Sicht in besonderer Weise das Verhältnis von Staat und Bürgerinnen und Bürgern in diesem Sektor zu definieren. Ein Europa als ein Bündnis von lebendigen Zivilgesellschaften, getragen durch aktives Bürgerengagement, muß sich insoweit auch in einer EU-Charta der sozialen Grundrechte wiederfinden, in dem dem bürgerlichen Engagement ein Vorrecht vor staatlichem Engagement definitiv eingeräumt wird. Für den Sozialbereich trifft der vorgelegte Entwurf dazu jedoch keinerlei Aussage.

Ergänzend schlagen wir daher folgende Formulierung vor:

- Stellung freier Vereinigungen in Bildung, Erziehung, Versorgung mit sozialen Diensten
 1. Das Initiativrecht freier Vereinigungen im Bereich der Bildung, der Erziehung und Versorgung mit sozialen Diensten wird geachtet.
 2. Öffentliche Schulen in freier Trägerschaft sind staatlichen Schulen unbeschadet der staatlichen Planungs- und Versorgungsverantwortung gleichgestellt.
 3. Die Vorrangstellung der Wohlfahrtsverbände und anderer freier dem Gemeinwohl verpflichteter Träger im Bereich der Wohlfahrtspflege und der Erziehung gegenüber staatlich vorgehaltenen sozialen Diensten ist unbeschadet der staatlichen Planungs- und Versorgungsverantwortung zu achten.
 4. Die Verbände der freien Träger von Einrichtungen der Bildung, Erziehung und der Wohlfahrtspflege sind bei der politischen Gestaltung der Bereiche Bildung, Erziehung und soziale Dienste einzubeziehen.”

Wir würden uns sehr freuen, könnten unsere Anregungen in die weiteren Beratungen mit einfließen und verbleiben

mit freundlichen Grüßen

EU-Grundrechte-Charta

Auf dem EU-Gipfel im Jahr 1999 wurde beschlossen, eine Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union zu erarbeiten. Dazu wurde ein Gremium (Konvent) aus Regierungsvertretern, Mitgliedern der nationalen Parlamente und des Europaparlamentes eingesetzt, um bis zum Oktober dieses Jahres einen Entwurf zu erarbeiten. Dieser Entwurf soll von der Europäischen Union im Dezember verabschiedet werden.

1. Grundsätzliches

Der Österreichische Gewerkschaftsbund begrüßt die Bestrebungen eine umfassende Grundrechtscharta auf Europäischer Ebene zu schaffen. Zwischen der zunehmenden wirtschaftlichen Liberalisierung sowie den Zielen der wirtschaftlichen Wettbewerbsfähigkeit einerseits und den sozialpolitischen sowie anderen gesellschaftlichen Zielsetzungen andererseits muss ein Gleichgewicht in der Europäischen Union hergestellt werden. Aus unserer Sicht muss dabei insbesondere der lohnabhängigen Bevölkerung der Zugang zu grundlegenden sozialen Rechten und zu Wohlstand ermöglicht und garantiert werden. In der Schaffung einer Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union ist dabei ein wesentliches Element zu sehen. Die alleinige Existenz der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention und der Europäischen Sozialcharta ist nicht ausreichend, denn diese bieten zum Beispiel keinen Schutz gegen Maßnahmen im Rahmen des Tätigkeitsfeldes der Europäischen Union, weil die Europäische Union selbst nicht der Menschenrechtskonvention oder Sozialcharta beigetreten ist.

- Die sozialen Grundrechte müssen Bestandteil der Charta werden

Die sozialen Grundrechte sind dabei ein unverzichtbarer Bestandteil des Aufbaues einer Sozialunion. Insbesondere die sozialen Auswirkungen der Vollendung der Wirtschafts- und Währungsunion, vor allem im Hinblick auf die Erweiterung, macht die Aufnahme der sozialen Grundrechte dringend notwendig, denn sonst droht mit der Erweiterung eine Entwicklung in Richtung Freihandelszone. Es ist nicht länger zu tolerieren, dass es strenge einklagbare Regeln für Waren, aber keine sozialen Grundrechte für die Arbeitnehmer in der Europäischen Union gibt. Die Aufnahme von sozialen Grundrechten in den Vertrag ist ausschlaggebend, damit die Europäische Union auch Realität für die Arbeitnehmer wird.

- Die Grundrechte müssen rechtsverbindlich und einklagbar werden

Aus unserer Sicht ist die fehlende Rechtsverbindlichkeit, insbesondere bei den sozialen Grundrechten, nicht länger tolerierbar. Die Grundrechte müssen einklagbar werden. Für die garantierten sozialen Grundrechte muss dabei ein Klagerecht für die Gewerkschaften zur Vertretung der Arbeitnehmerinteressen gewährleistet werden.

Die Schaffung eines Kataloges von Grundrechten, wie es zurzeit in der Form einer EU-Grundrechtscharta diskutiert wird, ist nicht zielführend, weil diese Charta rechtlich gesehen weiterhin unverbindlich bleibt. Die Grundrechte müssen einschließlich der sozialen Grundrechte und Gewerkschaftsrechte in den EU-Vertrag verankert werden, damit sichergestellt wird, dass sie einklagbares Recht werden. Ein Abschluss der Regierungskonferenz kann daher für die Gewerkschaften nur dann akzeptabel werden, wenn die Grundrechte einschließlich der sozialen Rechte in den Vertrag verankert werden. Dabei muss auch ein entsprechendes Verfahren zur Umsetzung und Durchsetzung geschaffen werden.

2. Folgende Rechte müssen in der Charta umfasst werden

Neben den allgemeinen politischen Rechten - die in der Allgemeine Erklärung über Menschenrechte (UN, 1948), Europäische Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten (Europarat, 1950), UN-Übereinkommen zur Beseitigung der Diskriminierung der Frau, UN-Übereinkommen über die Rechte des Kindes und im Abkommen über die Rechtsstellung der Flüchtlinge verankert sind - müssen die sozialen und wirtschaftlichen Rechte sowie Rechte der Arbeitswelt, festgelegt in der Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer, der Europäischen Sozialcharta und die einschlägigen IAO-Normen in die Charta aufgenommen werden.

Zu den Bestimmungen im Einzelnen:

Artikel 6

Der ÖGB fordert die Ergänzung des restlichen Textes des Artikel 5 EMRK, um den Personen, die entgegen des Artikel 5 EMRK von einer Festnahme oder Haft betroffen waren, einen Anspruch auf Schadenersatz zu gewährleisten. Das heißt, der Text soll nunmehr lauten „(1) Jede Person hat das Recht auf Freiheit und Sicherheit. Die Freiheit darf einem Menschen nur in den folgenden Fällen ... Anspruch auf Schadenersatz.“

Artikel 22

Da die Chancengleichheit von Männern und Frauen ohne flächendeckende Kinderbetreuungseinrichtungen nicht erreicht werden kann, fordert der ÖGB die Hinzufügung eines Absatzes 3 zu Artikel 22: Die Mitgliedsstaaten fördern die Errichtung von flächendeckenden Kinderbetreuungseinrichtungen.

Der ÖGB begrüßt die Klarstellung des Absatzes 2 bezüglich der Möglichkeit der positiven Diskriminierung.

Artikel 25

Für den ÖGB ist es unerlässlich, dass die Arbeitnehmer und ihre Vertreter, in Bezug auf sie betreffende Fragen, auch Mitwirkungsmöglichkeiten haben. Weiters müssen die Unterrichts-, Anhörungs- und Mitwirkungsmöglichkeiten auf allen Ebenen, sowie auf nationaler und grenzüberschreitender Ebene gegeben sein. Weiters fordert der ÖGB die Streichung der Worte „... nach dem Gemeinschaftsrecht und nach den einzelstaatlichen Rechtsvorschriften und Gepflogenheiten...“. Der neu gefasste Artikel sollte nach Ansicht des ÖGB somit lauten: Für die Arbeitnehmer und ihre Vertreter muss eine rechtzeitige Unterrichtung, Anhörung und Mitwirkung auf allen Ebenen zu den sie betreffenden Fragen, sowohl national als auch grenzüberschreitend, gewährleistet sein.

Artikel 26

Arbeitgeber und Arbeitnehmer haben das Recht Tarifverträge auszuhandeln und zu schließen sowie bei Interessenskonflikten kollektive Maßnahmen einschließlich des Rechts grenzübergreifender Solidaritätsaktionen und Streiks zur Verteidigung ihrer Interessen zu ergreifen.

Artikel 27

Der ÖGB tritt für eine Ergänzung des betreffenden Artikels ein, um Unklarheiten zu vermeiden: Jede Person hat das Recht auf Zugang zu einem unentgeltlichen Arbeitsvermittlungsdienst.

Artikel 28

Der ÖGB tritt auch bei diesem Artikel für eine Ergänzung ein. Satz 2 sollte lauten: Im Falle einer ungerechtfertigten Entlassung, hat der Arbeitnehmer Anspruch auf eine angemessene Entschädigung oder einen anderen zweckmäßigen Ausgleich.

Artikel 29

Da unter „gerechten und angemessenen Arbeitsbedingungen“ auch ein angemessener Lohn zu verstehen ist, tritt der ÖGB – in Anlehnung an Artikel 4 der Europäischen Sozialcharta – für die Hinzufügung eines neuen Absatzes ein: Jeder Arbeitnehmer hat einen Anspruch auf einen gerechten Lohn, der ihm und seiner Familie einen angemessenen Lebensstandard sichert. Wie bereits oben erwähnt, fordert der ÖGB, dass die Europäische Sozialcharta in die Grundrechtscharta aufgenommen wird. Sollte dies jedoch nicht geschehen, fordert der ÖGB, dass zumindest die vorgeschlagene Ergänzung in die Grundrechtscharta aufgenommen wird. Weiters fordert der ÖGB eine Ergänzung in Absatz 2 (letzter Halbsatz) „... sowie auf bezahlten Jahresurlaub im Ausmass von mindestens 5 Wochen.“

Artikel 30

Nach Ansicht des ÖGB sind die begrenzten Ausnahmen näher zu definieren, um Unklarheiten zu vermeiden. Der ÖGB schlägt vor, dass die begrenzten Ausnahmen laut § 5a KJBG definiert werden: Begrenzte Ausnahmen dürfen nur Kinder betreffen, die das 12. Lebensjahr vollendet haben

Artikel 31

Der ÖGB tritt für die Ergänzung „Schutz vor Entlassung und Kündigung“ ein. Die derzeit gewählte Formulierung steht im Widerspruch zur Mutterschutzrichtlinie 92/85/EWG.

Art 39

Das Wort „behandelt“ sollte durch „abgehandelt“ ersetzt werden, da es dem Einzelnen nichts hilft, wenn seine Angelegenheiten in angemessener Frist nur behandelt, jedoch nicht entschieden wird.

Ehemaliger Artikel 40

Der ÖGB fordert die Wiederaufnahme des im Vorentwurf enthaltenen Artikel 40 „Recht der Wanderarbeiter auf Gleichbehandlung“, wie vom Präsidium im letzten Entwurf vorgeschlagen. Der Text sollte also lauten: Arbeitnehmer, die nicht die Staatsangehörigkeit der Europäischen Union besitzen und rechtmäßig im Hoheitsgebiet der Mitgliedsstaaten arbeiten, haben Anspruch auf Arbeitsbedingungen, die nicht weniger günstig sind als die Bedingungen unter denen die Arbeitnehmer der Europäischen Union arbeiten. Dies ist deshalb notwendig um die Wanderarbeiter vor Ausbeutung und die lokal beschäftigten Arbeitnehmer vor Sozialdumping zu schützen.

Artikel 45

In (2) sollte das Wort „verhandelt“ durch „abgeschlossen“ geändert werden.

Artikel 49

Da der ÖGB dafür eintritt, dass die Grundrechte im EU-Vertrag verankert werden, um einklagbares Recht zu werden, treten wir für die komplette Streichung des Absatzes 1 ein.

Wie bereits oben erwähnt ist der ÖGB der Ansicht, dass für die garantierten sozialen Grundrechte ein Klagerecht für die Gewerkschaften zur Vertretung der Arbeitnehmerinteressen gewährleistet sein muss. Der neue Absatz sollte lauten: „Bezüglich der Rechte in der Charta, die die Interessen der Arbeitnehmer betreffen, haben die Gewerkschaften mit Einverständnis der betreffenden Person ein Klags- und Vertretungsrecht.“

Artikel 51

Der ÖGB tritt für eine Ergänzung des Artikel 51 ein, da gewährleistet sein muss, dass strengere nationale gesetzliche und kollektivvertragliche Regelungen unbedingt erhalten bleiben und auch zu jedem Zeitpunkt neu eingeführt werden können. Absatz 2 des Artikel 51 sollte daher lauten: „Die Grundrechtscharta steht nicht im Widerspruch zu strengeren nationalen gesetzlichen und kollektivvertraglichen Regelungen und verhindert auch nicht deren Einführung zu einem späteren Zeitpunkt.“

Zusätzlich fordert der Österreichische Gewerkschaftsbund die Verankerung der folgenden zentralen politischen Handlungsziele:

- Verankerung der Vollbeschäftigung im EU-Vertrag als vorrangige Zielsetzung
- Recht auf gleichen Lohn für gleiche Arbeit
- Schutz der Gesundheit und Sicherheit am Arbeitsplatz
- Recht der Unterrichtung und Anhörung der Arbeitnehmer
- Recht der Mitbestimmung der Arbeitnehmer
- Recht auf Förderung von Jugendlichen, Frauen, älteren Arbeitnehmern und Behinderten
- Errichtung von flächendeckenden Kinderbetreuungseinrichtungen

- Förderung der beruflichen Eingliederung aller aus dem Arbeitsmarkt ausgegrenzten Personen
- Recht auf Bildung und lebenslanges Lernen
- Recht auf Zugang zu Diensten von allgemeinen Interesse

Der Österreichische Gewerkschaftsbund ersucht um Berücksichtigung seiner Stellungnahme.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 7 September 2000CHARTE 4458/00*CONTRIB 312*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the Permanent Forum of Civil Society, with its position regarding the Draft Charter. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English and French languages.

An uncompleted charter, a minimalist approach, an unsatisfied debate :

The Permanent Forum of Civil Society says "No !" to the draft Charter and suggest to the french Presidency a process to let the "Europe for citizens" make progress.

The draft Charter of fundamental Rights proposed by the Presidium of the Convention ("Convent 45"- 28 July 2000) is a necessary but not sufficient basis to contribute to the progress of the European Union and to the essential readjustment of its political, economic and social model. This draft is still not a reply to the XXIst century' stakes.

If we examine the draft Charter from the " common good " point of view, we are obliged to note that it does not put the "human person" in the heart of the european building and of its project of development, it does not commit itself in a readjustment "institutions/market/civil society" in favour of the citizens, it is not opening up to the outside world, it is not a motor of changes, it does not contribute to a lasting development and, in this, is not conform to the Amsterdam's Treaty targets.

The draft Charter suggests clauses that, at constant right, would like to be pictures of a selection of rights having a double characteristic : on one hand, to exist at the XXth century and on the other hand to be common to all the member States.

To be worthy to propose a new vision at the beginning of the third millenium, such a Charter should be a motor of a real progress and should take in consideration the new developments that reply to the following requirements :

- * to assert the place of the " common good" in the context of a world economy marked by the growing importance of global groups : firms, financial market, civil society ;
- * to contribute to hinder the four threats hanging over the european project: the extreme right, the ethnic withdrawal, the islamism and the merchandising ;
- * to want to build an economic and social development with the human person at its center;
- * to guarantee the parity man/woman ;
- * to contribute to the elimination of poverty and social exclusion ;
- * to give a place to the migrants;
- * to let the Europe being the avant-garde of the future without frontiers' democracy that will exist in the XXIst century.

The European Council in Biarritz, and just after in Nice, will deal with the Charter of fundamental Rights elaborated by the Convention. For the Permanent Forum of Civil Society, this text should play a "re-founding" role in:

- * reconciliating the citizens with the european project that gave, till now, the market and not the human person its priority;
- * fixing the values that, in application of the criteriums established by the European Council of Copenhagen, will be imposed to all the member States and to all the applicant Countries ;
- * defining a "pluriannual programme" for the realization and the progress of rights within the Union.

The Forum thinks that, in its version of 28 July 2000, the draft Charter doesn't meet yet these goals in an adequate manner.

Some whole chapters are poor (the european citizenship) or completely missing (the participatory democracy, the local democracy, the democracy based on parity, the collective rights, the right to culture...).

Some retreats about Treaties and Conventions are even noted in the social field (right of striking, right to housing, right to a preliminary consultation ...) and in the environmental field.

The goal of the project - indeed asserted in the preamble - seems limited to guarantee the visibility of certain rights and not to guarantee their progress.

Moreover, neither the Convention nor the intergovernmental Conference treated those crucial questions like:

- the constraining character of the future charter ;
- its relationship with the future european constitution ;
- the necessary community procedures to guarantee the justiciability of the there-written rights,
- the relations between the Charter, the Convention of Rome and the other european and international instruments protecting the fundamental rights;
- the responsibility of member States in the respect of fundamental rights within the Union.

If, as proposed by a member of the Convention, this draft Charter should be submitted to referendum (a method of participatory democracy asked by an important number of NGOs), the Permanent Forum of Civil Society would be obliged to claim for a "NO".

That's why we suggest an approach in which the french Presidency of the Council would be required to play an important role for an historic progress towards an "Europe of citizenship".

The European Council of Nice would welcome the text presented by the Convention as a "draft" and would decide to submit it to a " public poll" in all the countries of the Union - and this for a period of six months - to testify its willing to associate the citizens and to build an "Europe of citizenship". Citizens, national parliaments, trade unions and firms, non governmental organizations and associations, local and regional authorities would be invited to have a debate about this text and to submit proposals:

* The European Council of Nice would entrust the Convention with the task of collecting those proposals and of submitting to its attention a final text, in december 2001, at the latest.

* The European Council of Nice would decide to ask the member States to take the necessary constitutional dispositions in order to make possible the convocation of a referendum/consultation of peoples of the Union on the final text during the year 2002.

* The European Council of Nice would express that the text of the Charter, if approved in codecision by the European Parlement and the Council, would come into force as a integral part of the treaties. The Charter would be, this way, an essential step on the way to the European Constitution.

We think that this agenda could :

- make the reflexion more mature on themes like civic, political, economic and social rights;
- resolve the question of the competence of the Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg;
- complete the Charter after the debates held in the member States;
- rally the public opinion in order to make that the adoption of this Charter becomes "its" own affair.

The Forum will ask to the french Presidency to meet a representative delegation of the european civil society in order to propose the above expressed requirements.

Bruxelles, 30 August 2000.

Dr Roman Herzog
President
Convention on the Charter of Fundamental Rights

1st September 2000

Re: Comments on Convention document 45

Dear Dr Herzog,

The European Trade Union Confederation and the Platform of European Social NGOs are jointly campaigning for the inclusion of fundamental rights in the EU Treaty.

Following national meetings in the EU Member States and many candidate countries in the period from March to August, a final European-level conference bringing together around 140 participants from across Europe took place in Brussels on 31st August and 1st September.

Both the Social Platform and the ETUC have already forwarded you their official positions and contributions to the Convention, including their joint campaign paper: “Fundamental Rights - the Heart of Europe”.

At this time, we would also like to bring the analysis and general conclusions of our European conference to the attention of the members of the Convention. These reflect the discussions and concerns expressed at the conference. Although these conclusions are not statutory positions of the ETUC and the Social Platform as such, they do however highlight the clear need to improve the draft Charter text of Convention document n°45 in order to make it acceptable for the trade unions and the social NGOs.

We hope that the conclusions of our conference will lend support to initiatives to improve and strengthen the present Charter text.

Given the vital importance of the outcome of the Convention's work for European citizens, we should like to recommend that the spirit of transparency practiced by the Convention will also be applied when deciding on the final draft, i.e. that the voting of the individual Convention members is registered and made public.

Yours sincerely,

Working paper on the draft of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights (Convent n° 45)

Preliminary analysis carried out during the Conference organised by the ETUC and the Platform on 31st August and 1st September 2000

Although it is important to recognise the importance of the work carried out by the Convention and the fact that many fundamental rights can already be found in the text of Convent 45, the text does not meet the expectations of a significant part of organised civil society represented by members of the European Trade Union Confederation and the Platform of European Social NGOs. If this text is not improved, it must be rejected because of its deficiencies, its regressions and its ambiguities:

- deficiencies: some fundamental rights are missing from this text
- regressions: some of the rights set out are a step back as compared to national or international norms (especially those of the Council of Europe and the European Union)
- ambiguities: some of the rights are formulated in a weak or ambiguous manner.

1. Important rights missing from the text of Convent 45

- 1.1 Article 12 does not include:
- the recognition of the social partners at European level in the framework of a system of European industrial relations
 - the right of consultation of European NGOs in the framework of a structured civil dialogue.
- 1.2 Article 15 (freedom to choose an occupation) does not include the right to work and engage in a freely chosen occupation (which is found in the Revised European Social Charter and the Community Charter of Workers Fundamental Social Rights).
- 1.3 Missing from Chapter III (Equality) is:
- an article on the rights to equal opportunity and treatment in all fields of life and work between men and women
 - an article on the right to the respect of cultural diversity.
- 1.4 Art. 21.1 (Equality and non-discrimination) must include a second paragraph providing for the adoption of positive measures, as in art. 22 (Equality between men and women).

- 1.5 The Articles 25 (Workers' rights to information and consultation within the undertaking) and 26 (Right of collective bargaining and action) do not include trade union rights such as:
- national and transnational rights of association, collective bargaining, trade union action including cross-border sympathy action and the right to strike
 - national and transnational rights of workers in enterprises to information and consultation and participation, prior to decision-making.
- 1.6 Chapter IV (Solidarity) and in particular Article 32 (Social security and social assistance) do not include:
- the right of all individuals, regardless of status, to a decent minimum income, enabling them and their family to live in dignity, to ensure their health and well-being (which is found in the Community Charter of Workers Fundamental Social Rights, 1989)
 - the right to housing (Revised European Social Charter)
 - the right to retirement (Revised European Social Charter)
 - the right of older people to a decent income enabling them to live a dignified life (which is found in several social Charters)
 - the right to protection against poverty and social exclusion (which is found in the Revised European Social Charter)
 - the right to social services of a high quality (Revised European Social Charter)
 - the right of all third country nationals (men, women and children) finding themselves on the territory of the European Union, without being legally resident, to a basic level of protection as set out in the Geneva Convention of 1951 and its protocol of 1967.
 - the right to social security for people with a disability.
- 1.7 Article 43 does not include the right to family regrouping for third country nationals working in the European Union (which is found in the Revised European Social Charter).
- 1.8 Chapter VII (JUSTICE) does not include an article on the enforceability of the Charter nor on the means of guaranteeing the right to rights.
- 1.9 This draft text does not refer to the responsibilities of the European Union to promote human rights and the ILO's basic international norms vis-à-vis third countries, and to the international institutions covered by the European Union. These requirements should also apply to European enterprises based in third countries.

2. Convent 45 is a step backwards on several grounds

Here are some examples:

- 2.1 In general, several articles state that the rights mentioned are guaranteed "in accordance with Community law and national laws". This is the case for numerous social rights (articles 25, 26, 32, 33, 34). This represents a step backwards, going against the momentum established in the Treaty for upward social harmonisation.

- 2.2 Paragraph 5 of the Preamble must have an explicit reference to the Revised European Social Charter, to its Protocols and to the Community Charter of Workers Fundamental Social Rights.
- 2.3 Article 14 (Right to education) does not take into account the right to lifelong learning (which is found in the Treaty of the European Community).
- 2.4 Article 27 (Right of access to placement services) must guarantee that this right is free of charge (as in the Revised European Social Charter).
- 2.5 Article 28 (Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal) must be entitled: “Protection in the event of dismissal” and provide protection against all forms of dismissal.
- 2.6 Article 51 (Level of protection) must include a clause of non-regression in relation to rights recognised at national level, in such a way as to ensure that this Charter cannot be used to justify a step backwards as regards these rights. In addition this article must explicitly refer to the Revised European Social Charter, the Community Charter of Workers Fundamental Social Rights, the Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (ILO, 1998), the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (UN, 1979), the Convention on the Rights of the Child (UN, 1989).

3. Convent 45 is weak and ambiguous on a number of points

Here are some examples:

- 3.1 Point 2 of the Preamble should refer not only to men and women, but also to children.
- 3.2 Point 7 of the Preamble guarantees “the rights and freedoms set out hereafter are guaranteed to each person”. Does this guarantee include third country nationals whether legally resident or not?
- 3.3 Articles 13 (Freedom of research) and 17.2 (Intellectual property) should include, as is the case for Article 17.1 (the Right to Property), an explicit reference to the public interest as well as the respect of dignity. Likewise, Article 16 (Freedom to conduct a business) should include a reference to the social responsibilities of businesses.
- 3.4 Article 29 should refer to the rights to health and safety protection in the workplace (as does the Treaty of the European Community).
- 3.5 The formulation of Articles 32 (Social security and social assistance) and 34 (Access to services of general economic interest) is weak. Instead of setting out that “Everyone has access to...” like for example Article 33 (Healthcare), these two Articles state “The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to...” (Art. 32) or “The Union respects the access to...”(Art. 34).

- 3.6 Article 43.2 is drafted as follows, “Freedom of movement may be granted to...third country nationals”. The word “may” is very ambiguous.
- 3.7 Article 49 (Scope) should make a reference to the social partners in the bodies to which the Charter is addressed, given that the Treaty of the European Community has conferred powers upon them in the framework of Social policy.

ETUC CES

Document de travail sur le projet de Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne (Convent n°45)

première analyse réalisée lors de la Conférence organisée par la CES et la Plate-forme les 31 août et 1^{er} septembre 2000

Bien qu'il convienne de reconnaître l'importance du travail effectué par la Convention et le fait qu'un grand nombre de droits fondamentaux soient déjà inclus dans le texte Convent 45, celui-ci ne répond pas aux attentes d'une partie importante de la société civile organisée représentée par les membres de la Confédération européenne des syndicats et la Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social. Si le texte n'est pas modifié, il doit être rejeté à cause de ses lacunes, de ses régressions et de ses ambiguïtés :

- lacunes : des droits fondamentaux manquent dans ce texte
- régressions : des droits sont en retrait par rapport aux normes existantes au niveau national ou international (notamment de l'Union européenne ou du Conseil de l'Europe)
- ambiguïtés : des droits sont formulés de façon faible ou ambiguë.

1. Des droits importants manquent dans le texte Convent 45

- 1.1 L'article 12 (Liberté de réunion et d'association) ne comprend pas :
 - la reconnaissance des partenaires sociaux à un niveau européen dans le cadre d'un véritable système européen de relations collectives de travail
 - le droit de consultation des ONG européennes dans le cadre d'un dialogue civil structuré.
- 1.2 L'article 15 (Liberté professionnelle) ne comprend pas le droit au travail librement choisi (qui figure dans la Charte sociale européenne (révisée) et la Charte communautaire des droits fondamentaux des travailleurs).
- 1.3 Dans le chapitre III (Egalité), manquent :
 - un article sur le droit à l'égalité des chances et de traitement entre les femmes et les hommes dans tous les domaines de la vie
 - un article sur le droit au respect à la diversité culturelle.
- 1.4 L'article 21.1 (Egalité et non-discrimination) doit comporter un deuxième paragraphe permettant de prévoir, comme à l'article 22 (Egalité hommes et femmes) l'adoption de mesures positives.

- 1.5 Les articles 25 (droit à l'information et à la consultation des travailleurs dans l'entreprise) et 26 (droit de négociation et actions collectives) ne comprennent pas les droits syndicaux tels que :
- les droits nationaux et transnationaux d'association, de négociation collective, d'action syndicale, y compris les actions de solidarité transfrontalières et la grève
 - les droits nationaux et transnationaux préalables d'information, de consultation et de participation des travailleurs dans les entreprises.
- 1.6 Le chapitre IV (Solidarité) et notamment l'article 32 (Sécurité sociale et aide sociale) ne comprennent pas :
- le droit pour toute personne, quel que soit son statut, à un revenu minimum décent lui permettant de vivre dans la dignité (qui se trouve dans la Charte communautaire des droits fondamentaux des travailleurs)
 - le droit au logement (qui se trouve dans la Charte sociale européenne révisée)
 - le droit à la retraite (qui se trouve dans la Charte sociale européenne révisée)
 - le droit des personnes âgées à une vie et un revenu dignes et décents (qui se trouve dans plusieurs Chartes sociales)
 - le droit à la protection contre la pauvreté et l'exclusion sociale (qui se trouve dans la Charte sociale européenne révisée)
 - le droit à des services sociaux de qualité (Charte sociale européenne révisée)
 - le droit des ressortissants des pays tiers (femmes, hommes, enfants) se trouvant sur le territoire de l'Union européenne sans y résider légalement à une protection de base prévue par la Convention de Genève de 1951 et son Protocole de 1967
 - le droit à la sécurité sociale pour les personnes ayant un handicap.
- 1.7 L'article 43 ne comprend pas le droit au regroupement familial pour les ressortissants de pays tiers travaillant dans l'Union européenne (qui se trouve dans la Charte sociale européenne révisée).
- 1.8 Le chapitre VII (Justice) ne comprend aucun article sur la justiciabilité de la Charte et sur sa façon de prévoir le droit aux droits.
- 1.9 Ce projet de Charte ne traite pas des responsabilités de l'Union dans la promotion des droits humains et des normes internationales fondamentales de l'OIT vis-à-vis de pays tiers, comme au sein des institutions internationales où l'Union européenne a des compétences. Ces exigences devraient s'étendre aux entreprises européennes installées dans des pays tiers.

2. Convent 45 constitue une régression sur de nombreux points

En voici quelques exemples :

2.1 De façon générale, de nombreux articles prévoient que les droits énoncés sont garantis « conformément aux législations nationales et au droit communautaire ». C'est notamment le cas pour de nombreux droits sociaux (articles 25, 26, 32, 33, 34). Ceci constitue une régression par rapport à la dynamique inscrite dans le Traité et visant à une harmonisation sociale vers le haut.

- 2.2 Le Préambule, paragraphe 5, doit contenir une référence explicite à la Charte sociale européenne révisée, à ses Protocoles et à la Charte communautaire des droits fondamentaux des travailleurs.
- 2.3 L'article 14 (droit à l'éducation) ne prend pas en compte le droit à la formation tout au long de la vie (qui se trouve dans le Traité de la Communauté européenne).
- 2.4 L'article 27 (droit d'accès au service de placement) doit prévoir (comme la Charte sociale européenne révisée) que ce droit est gratuit.
- 2.5 L'article 28 (Protection en cas de licenciement injustifié) doit avoir comme titre : « Protection en cas de licenciements » et prévoir une protection contre tout licenciement.
- 2.6 L'article 51 (Niveau de protection) doit prévoir une clause de non régression par rapport aux droits reconnus à un niveau national, de façon à assurer que cette Charte ne puisse être utilisée pour justifier un recul de ces droits. Cet article doit également mentionner explicitement la Charte sociale européenne révisée, la Charte communautaire des droits sociaux fondamentaux des travailleurs, la Déclaration relative aux principes et droits fondamentaux du travail (OIT, 1998), la Convention sur l'élimination de toutes les formes de discriminations à l'encontre des femmes (ONU, 1979), la Convention relative aux droits de l'enfant (ONU, 1989).

3. Le Convent 45 est faible et ambigu sur de nombreux points

En voici quelques exemples :

- 3.1 Le Préambule, point 2, pourrait utilement mentionner non seulement les hommes et les femmes, mais aussi les enfants.
- 3.2 Le Préambule, point 7 prévoit que « les droits et libertés énoncés ci-après sont garantis à chacun ». Cela concerne-t-il également les ressortissants de pays tiers, qu'ils aient ou non un statut de résident légal ?
- 3.3 Les articles 13 (Liberté de la recherche), 17.2 (Propriété intellectuelle) devraient comporter comme l'article 17.1 (Droit de propriété) une référence explicite à l'intérêt général, ainsi qu'au respect de la dignité. De même l'article 16 (Liberté d'entreprendre) devrait prévoir une référence aux responsabilités sociales des entreprises.
- 3.4 L'article 29 doit prévoir (comme le fait le Traité de la Communauté européenne) le droit à la protection de la santé et de la sécurité sur les lieux de travail.
- 3.5 Les articles 32 (Sécurité sociale et aide sociale) et 34 (Accès aux services d'intérêt économique général) sont rédigés de façon faible. A la place de prévoir, comme par exemple l'article 33 (Protection de la santé), « Toute personne a le droit de ... », ces deux articles prévoient que « l'Union reconnaît et respecte le droit d'accès à ... » (art. 32) ou « l'Union respecte l'accès à ... » (art. 34).

- 3.6 L'article 43.2 est ainsi rédigé : « La liberté de circulation peut être accordée ... aux ressortissants de pays tiers ». Le mot « peut » est tout à fait ambigu.
- 3.7 L'article 49 (Champ d'application) devrait inclure les partenaires sociaux dans les organisations auxquelles s'adresse la Charte, puisque le Traité de la Communauté européenne leur confère des compétences dans le cadre de la Politique sociale.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution of the European Women's Lobby (EWL), with the position paper to the document CHARTE 4422/00 CONVENT 45. ¹

LOBBY EUROPEEN DES FEMMES
EUROPEAN WOMEN'S LOBBY

August 2000

POSITION PAPER OF THE EUROPEAN WOMEN'S LOBBY
ON THE DRAFT EUROPEAN CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

At the 1995 World Conference on women, 189 countries agree, "Governments must not only refrain from violating human rights of all women, but must work actively to promote and protect these rights. (...) The gap between the existence of rights and their effective enjoyment derives from a lack of commitment by governments to promoting and protecting these rights" (Beijing Platform for action, 215 & 217). Women in Europe would consider it a disgrace if European decision-makers fail to comply with this international commitment by simply ignoring them

Having read through the text of the draft Charter proposed by the Praesidium at the end of July (Convent 45), the European Women's Lobby notes once again the lack of consideration of gender equality by the authors of the Charter.

The EWL reiterates the demands formulated in its previous written contributions, urging political leaders to integrate gender equality in the Charter in order to ensure the protection of half the population's interests. The EWL would like to stress that this contribution constitutes the absolute minimum platform of rights of a Charter respectful of women's rights and integrating a gender perspective.

Tel. +32 2 217 90 20 – Fax: +32 2 219 84 51 - e-mail: ewl@womenlobby.org
 Website: <http://www.womenlobby.org>

Furthermore, the Charter in some linguistic versions uses sexist languages, for example in article 3(1) “Everyone has the right to respect for his physical and mental integrity”. The EWL stresses that one form of gender discrimination is the use of sexist language. The use of sexist language, though sometimes unintentional, is nonetheless damaging in excluding women and in rendering our reality and our experience invisible. The EWL demands therefore that all linguistic versions of the EU Charter are checked carefully and sexist language removed and replaced by gender neutral terms.

CHAPTER I DIGNITY

Prohibition of gender related violence and persecutions:

The provision condemning torture and inhuman treatment should explicitly state that gender related violence or persecution is a form of torture.

Sexual mutilation, whose first victims are women and girls, still take place on European territory. This inhuman treatment is a form of torture and should thus be considered as such, as well as other kinds of gender related violence such as rape, domestic violence, forced marriage, prostitution, “honour” killing, including those which take place within the family.

Proposal of the EWL :

Chapter I ‘Dignity’, amend article 4: Prohibition of torture and inhuman treatment

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman and degrading treatment. This refers to any kind of physical or moral violence, including any kind of gender related violence such as among others female genital mutilations, rape, violence in the home, forced marriage, prostitution, “honour” killings, also when executed within the family.

CHAPTER II FREEDOMS

Gender-sensitive asylum policy:

The particular kind of gender related violence mostly suffered by women refugees and asylum seekers must be referred to clearly and considered as a violation of women’s fundamental human rights on the ground of which asylum can be granted.

Treatments threatening or harming women’s physical or psychological integrity must be considered as a form of torture whether they are enforced by legal norms, committed by state agents or imposed by social or religious norms.

Proposal of the EWL:

Article 18 ‘Right to asylum’, add the following paragraph:

“Gender persecution including sexual mutilations or other gender related violence such as rape, forced marriage, violence in the home, honour killing, shall be given particular attention within the grounds for seeking asylum.

CHAPTER III EQUALITY

The principle of equality between women and men in all fields:

A provision exclusively dedicated to the unconditional principle of gender equality must be introduced in the Charter. It must prohibit direct and indirect discrimination and provide explicitly and precisely for the adoption of positive measures by Member States.

The general principle of non discrimination as proposed in article 21 does not lead to substantive equality between women and men, as gender discrimination is of a particular and structural nature, affecting women who represent half of the population and not a minority. Women are likely to face different forms of discriminations, on the ground of ethnic origin or disability for example, added to the structural discrimination on the ground of sex. The inclusion of a separate provision prohibiting gender discrimination would also enable a clear focus on the issue of multiple discriminations and would indicate a commitment to ensuring that women enjoy effectively all fundamental rights and freedoms and to be full citizens in all areas.

Proposal of the EWL:

Chapter III “Equality”, new article after article 20: General principle of equality between women and men in all areas

1. The Union shall promote respect for the unconditional and fundamental principle of equality between women and men in all areas of its jurisdiction.
2. Substantive equality between women and men must be established and direct or indirect discrimination on the grounds of sex must be prohibited. Moreover, a gender dimension should be adopted while combating all forms of discrimination in order to eradicate multiple discrimination that many women face.
3. Positive measures should be implemented to improve women’s situation until substantive and effective equality between women and men is achieved.

Amend article 21 Para. 1 : delete the word “sex”

At this stage, it is not appropriate to specify that this provision should be applicable to the area of work, since the principle of equality between women and men in the area of working conditions and salaries must constitute a separate provision in the chapter on solidarity.

CHAPTER IV SOLIDARITY

Equality between women and men in the areas of working conditions and salaries:

The fundamental principle of equality between women and men in the areas of working conditions, salaries and social protection must be stated in the part dedicated to workers' rights.

The general provision on non-discrimination must be completed by a more specific article tackling the de facto inequality between women and men in the area of work.

The current article 22 should be reformulated as below (in particular stating clearly the concept of positive measures aimed at improving women's situation in the field of work).

Proposal of the EWL:

Chapter IV "Solidarity", new article (replacing article 22) : Equal treatment between women and men

1. Equal treatment between women and men must be ensured and any kind of inequalities must be eliminated with regard to work, employment, social protection and social services. This mainly includes the equal right to freely chose or accept to work, the right to the same working conditions, the right to fair and equal pay for work of equal value, and the equal right to social security and assistance for themselves and their family.
2. Any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of sex is prohibited in the fields quoted in paragraph 1.
3. Positive measures should be implemented to improve women's situation until substantive and effective equality between women and men is achieved in this particular field of employment.

Reconciling family and professional life:

Women and men workers have the right to paid parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

In order to increase women's independence through their labour market participation and to achieve effective gender equality, family responsibilities and parental leave should be equally distributed between women and men. Legal protection and paid parental leave should be provided for in order to achieve an equal sharing of child caring responsibilities between women and men.

Proposal of the EWL:

Article 31, amend as follow:

- add 'paid' before parental leave.
- Add the following paragraph: "Quality and affordable child care should be made available to anyone in need of such services"

Social security and social assistance:

A provision on social protection should be inserted in the Charter, providing for individualisation of the rights to social security.

Social protection should be regarded as a social investment for the European states that made a commitment to societal responsibility for all citizens. Nevertheless, a large number of women lack individual security and are dependant on their family and/or spouse. Therefore, women's access to individual social security rights must be ensured.

Proposal of the EWL:

Article 32, amend paragraph 1 as follows:

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to an adequate level of individual social security benefits and social services providing protection to all, in the event of maternity, paternity, illness, (remove industrial) accidents, dependency or old age and in the event of loss employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Community law and national laws and practices.

Health care:

In order to ensure that the health needs of the entire population are tackled, specific care that responds to women's special health needs should be taken into account

Reproductive health, gynaecological and obstetrical services must be kept accessible for every woman, as well as all preventive and screening services which meet the needs of women as patients and consumers.

Proposal of the EWL:

Article 33, add the following paragraph:

'Within the right to appropriate health care, women's specific needs must be taken into consideration and provided for'.

CHAPTER V CITIZENSHIP

Principle of PARITY democracy:

A provision on parity democracy in the Charter is essential to achieve a balanced representation of women and men in decision-making positions.

The problem of under representation of women in decision-making positions persists and must be tackled with concrete measures such as the ones already adopted in some Member States. This principle must be integrated in the Charter through a clear and separate provision.

Proposal of the EWL :

Chapter V “Citizenship”, new article: “Parity Democracy”

1. Every citizen of the Union, without any discrimination, has the right provided by the law of the Union and national law, of an equal access to candidacy for elections and the exercise of the corresponding functions.
2. A parity democracy, meaning an equal representation of women and men in all the organs and institutions of the Union, constitutes a fundamental principle for both the European integration and the institutions of the Union.
3. Positive measures should be taken in order to favour equal access of women and men in the governmental and EU bodies as well as in political parties.

Stellungnahme
der Bundesarbeitskammer zur EU-Grundrechte-Charta

Die Bundeskammer für Arbeiter und Angestellte (Bundesarbeitskammer/BAK) ist eine gesetzliche Interessenvertretung österreichischen Rechts. Sie ist als Körperschaft öffentlichen Rechts organisiert und gesetzlich berufen, die sozialen, wirtschaftlichen, beruflichen und kulturellen Interessen der österreichischen Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer zu vertreten und zu fördern. Dies geschieht insbesondere durch Stellungnahmen zu Gesetzesvorhaben, auch auf der Ebene der Europäischen Union.

Die Bundesarbeitskammer erlaubt sich daher, zum Vorhaben, eine Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union zu schaffen, Stellung zu nehmen, und ersucht, ihre Ausführungen im weiteren Entstehungsprozeß der Charta zu berücksichtigen.

Das Vorhaben, einen Grundrechtskatalog der Europäischen Union zu schaffen, wird nachdrücklich begrüßt und unterstützt. Gerade angesichts der bevorstehenden Vertiefung und Erweiterung der Europäischen Union und der damit in Zusammenhang stehenden Strukturreformen ist die Schaffung zusätzlicher Angebote an die Bevölkerungen in den Mitgliedsstaaten, sich mit dieser vertieften und erweiterten Europäischen Union zu identifizieren, unerlässlich. Ein solches positives Identifikationsangebot stellt aus unserer Sicht eine europäische Grundrechts-Charta dar. Wenn einige der wichtigsten Ansprüche, die Menschen an Staat und Gesellschaft richten können – Schutz der persönlichen Integrität und Freiheit vor staatlichen Übergriffen, Garantie der sozialen Existenzgrundlagen – auf europäischer Ebene erlebbar verbrieft werden, ist dies ein entscheidender Beitrag zur Ausbildung des Bewußtseins der Bürgerinnen und Bürger in den Mitgliedsstaaten, gleichzeitig auch Bürgerinnen und Bürger der Europäischen Union zu sein und sich mit dieser zu identifizieren.

Voraussetzung dafür ist allerdings zweierlei:

- Die Grundrechts-Charta darf sich nicht auf eine bloße feierliche Proklamation ohne jede Rechtswirkung beschränken, sondern muß im Rahmen des Primärrechts der Europäischen Union Normwirkung entfalten. Eine bloße feierliche Proklamation stünde aus unserer Sicht auch im Widerspruch zu dem in den Schlußfolgerungen des Europäischen Rates von Köln enthaltenen Bekenntnis, dass „die Wahrung der Grundrechte (...) ein Gründungsprinzip der EU und unerläßliche Voraussetzung für ihre Legitimität“ (sei). Die Normwirkung wird bedauerlicherweise nicht bei allen Grundrechten in Form subjektiver Rechte der europäischen Bürgerinnen und Bürger erreicht werden können. Es wäre jedoch jedenfalls darauf zu drängen, daß in den Fällen, bei denen keine subjektiven Rechte der EU-BürgerInnen durchsetzbar sind, zumindest die normative Wirkung dieser Grundrechte durch Programmsätze und Staatszielbestimmungen sichergestellt wird, die sich an die Organe der Europäischen Union, aber auch an Gesetzgeber und Verwaltung in den Mitgliedsstaaten richten. Ein für die Bürgerinnen und Bürger erlebbarer Rechtsschutz gegenüber europäischen Organen oder Mitgliedsstaaten, die in ihrer Tätigkeit den grundrechtlichen Rahmen nicht ausreichend beachten, könnte über die innerstaatliche Verfassungsgerichtsbarkeit und den Europäischen Gerichtshof geboten werden.
- Ein zweiter wesentlicher Punkt, der gerade aus Sicht der Österreichischen Bundesarbeitskammer für die Fähigkeit eines europäischen Grundrechtskataloges, das europäische Bewußtsein zu stärken und zu vertiefen, wesentlich wäre, ist die Aufnahme eines Kataloges sozialer Grundrechte in die Grundrechts-Charta, wie dies nach den bisherigen Entwürfen des Konvents ohnehin intendiert ist. Österreich hat hier Nachholbedarf, denn es ist einer der wenigen Mitgliedsstaaten der Europäischen Union, in dessen Verfassung die bürgerlichen Freiheitsrechte nicht durch soziale Grundrechte ergänzt werden. Es wäre äußerst begrüßenswert, wenn diese verfassungspolitische Schiefelage, zu deren Beseitigung die Bundesarbeitskammer wiederholt große Anstrengungen unternommen hat, durch eine gemeinsame europäische Entwicklung bereinigt würde.

Dafür, daß ein gewisses Ausmaß an Rechtsverbindlichkeit einer neuen europäischen Grundrechts-Charta absolut sinnvoll und wichtig wäre, spricht auch noch folgendes Argument: Schon jetzt existieren sowohl feierliche Proklamationen (die Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte) also auch etliche Verweise in den EU-Verträgen auf andere Grundrechtskataloge (insbesondere die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention und die Europäische Sozialcharta, beides im Rahmen des Europarates). Die bloße Schaffung einer feierlichen Deklaration würde erstens diesen Bekenntnissen – insbesondere im Bereich der sozialen Grundrechte – keinen entscheidenden Mehrwert hinzufügen, sodaß die Sinnhaftigkeit des gesamten Vorhabens einer EU-Grundrechtscharta in einer Weise hinterfragt werden könnte, die mehr Schaden als Nutzen bringen würde, und zweitens wäre das Verhältnis der verschiedenen feierlichen, aber nicht rechtsverbindlichen Grundrechtskataloge und der diversen Verweise auf andere Grundrechtskataloge zueinander so unklar, dass eher Rechtsunsicherheit gefördert, als das Vertrauen in die Rechtsstaatlichkeit der Europäischen Union, ihrer Institutionen und der Mitgliedstaaten gefestigt würde.

Zu den bisher im Konvent diskutierten sozialen Grundrechten möchte die Bundesarbeitskammer noch folgendes ergänzen: Die im Artikel 46 vorgeschlagene Einschränkung der Wirksamkeit der sozialen Grundrechte auf den „Geltungsbereich des Gemeinschaftsrechts“ ist nicht unproblematisch. Grundrechte werden an sich von den Rechtsadressaten als unteilbar empfunden. Wenn nun zB ein Bürger eines Mitgliedsstaats geltend macht, die Gesetzgebung seines Staates sehe keine Wohnungsbeihilfe vor, und er betrachte dies – auch unter Berücksichtigung seiner individuellen Einkommensverhältnisse und der auf dem Markt herrschenden Miethöhen – als Nichterfüllung des Auftrages gemäß Artikel 41 der Europäischen Grundrechtscharta durch seinen Mitgliedsstaat, wäre trotz des besagten Artikels 41 wegen des Artikel 46 wohl keine Kompetenz der Europäischen Union gegeben. So aber werden Erwartungshaltungen an einen Europäischen Grundrechtskatalog massiv enttäuscht. Über weite Strecken wird zwischen dem Grundrechtskatalog und dem bisherigen Gemeinschaftsrecht keine unmittelbare Verbindung herstellbar sein. Es sollte daher zumindest mittel- und langfristig sehr wohl eine Kompetenz der Verfassungsgerichte in den Mitgliedsstaaten sowie des Europäischen Gerichtshofes zur Kontrolle der Einhaltung des Grundrechtskataloges angestrebt werden, auch wenn ein Grundrecht nicht im Zusammenhang mit sonstigem EU-Recht – wie zB der Ausübung einer der Grundfreiheiten des Binnenmarktes – relevant wird. Die Europäische Union würde dabei freilich in eine gewisse Konkurrenz mit dem Europarat – dessen Grundrechtssystem einen vergleichbaren Rechtsschutz bietet – treten. Dieses Konkurrenzverhältnis müßte geklärt werden.

Was den Inhalt des Kataloges sozialer Grundrechte betrifft, unterstützt die Bundesarbeitskammer den im Verlauf der Tätigkeit des Konvents gegenüber den Anfängen deutlich erweiterten Katalog, wie er etwa aus dem Vermerk des Präsidiums des Konvents vom 3. Juli 2000 („Convent 41“) hervorgeht.

Die Österreichische Bundesarbeitskammer wünscht dem Konvent ein gutes Gelingen bei seiner für die europäischen Bürgerinnen und Bürger und die Weiterentwicklung der Europäischen Union so eminent wichtigen Aufgabe.

zum Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union (CONVENT 45) vom 28.07.2000

1. Grundsätzliche Bemerkungen

Der DGB bewertet den nunmehr vom Präsidium vorgelegten vollständigen Entwurf einer Grundrechtecharta der Europäischen Union grundsätzlich positiv. Die sozialen Grundrechte bleiben jedoch hinter dem Mandat von Köln zurück. Insbesondere einige der geplanten zentralen Normen zu den sozialen Grundrechten geben Anlass zu großer Sorge.

Gegenüber dem Entwurf des Präsidiums zur Aufnahme sozialer Rechte (CONVENT 34) wurden zwar erkennbar Änderungsvorschläge aufgegriffen; bezüglich einiger zentraler Artikel muss der DGB jedoch seine grundsätzliche Kritik aufrechterhalten und bittet hier nachdrücklich um Änderungen bzw. inhaltliche Präzisierungen entsprechend seinen früheren Vorschlägen und dieser Stellungnahme.

1.1 Grundsätzliche Fragen zentraler Artikel

In Artikel 12 ist das Betätigungsrecht der Gewerkschaften auch auf europäischer Ebene abzusichern. Auch bei anderen Rechten wird der grenzüberschreitenden Dimension nicht ausreichend Rechnung getragen, z.B. im Datenschutz.

In Artikel 25 geht es um den grundlegenden Anspruch der Arbeitnehmer und ihrer Interessenvertretungen auf Unterrichtung und Anhörung. Der DGB bekräftigt seine Forderung, dieses Recht um die Mitwirkung zu erweitern. Bereits die EU-Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer, eine wesentliche Grundlage für die Arbeiten des Konvents, sieht das Recht auf Mitwirkung in den Artikeln 17 und 18 ausdrücklich vor.

Artikel 26 enthält das Recht auf Kollektivverhandlungen und Kollektivmaßnahmen. Auch hier unterstreicht der DGB erneut seine Forderung nach ausdrücklicher Anerkennung des Streikrechts wie es sowohl in der Europäischen Sozialcharta (ESC) als auch in den einschlägigen internationalen Konventionen und Übereinkommen enthalten ist, sowie nach einem Benachteiligungsverbot bei gewerkschaftlicher Betätigung. Die ausdrückliche Garantie des Streikrechts ist fundamentale Voraussetzung für die Wahrnehmung anderer sozialer Grundrechte.

In bezug auf das Schutzniveau, das die EU-Grundrechtecharta gewährt, ist es für den DGB unerlässlich, dass dieses nicht nur der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention (EMRK), sondern gleichermaßen der Revidierten Europäischen Sozialcharta (RESC) entspricht. Für den DGB ist nicht nachvollziehbar, dass die Bezugnahme auf die RESC in Artikel 50 (Tragweite der garantierten Rechte) und in Artikel 51 (Schutzniveau) fehlt. Gleichwertigkeit zwischen EMRK und der RESC ist bisher nicht zweifelsfrei sichergestellt. Bisher gilt jedoch der Grundsatz der Unteilbarkeit der Grundrechte; bürgerliche, politische und soziale Grundrechte sind als unteilbare Einheit anzusehen.

Der DGB hält daher einen ausdrücklichen Verweis auch auf die RESC in Artikel 50 und 51 für erforderlich. Dies würde die Gleichwertigkeit der EMRK mit der RESC für das Schutzniveau und die Tragweite der garantierten sozialen Rechte klar zum Ausdruck bringen.

In Artikel 16 wird erstmals in internationalen und europäischen Rechtsnormen die unternehmerische Freiheit über die Berufsfreiheit und das Eigentumsrecht hinaus anerkannt. Dies wirft große Interpretationsfragen auf. Dieser Artikel sollte daher gestrichen oder es sollte zumindest klargestellt werden, dass diese Norm nicht gegen soziale Grundrechte als grundsätzliches Einschränkungspotential verwendet werden kann. Der DGB tritt nachdrücklich dafür ein, die Nichtdiskriminierung in Artikel 21 auf den Gebrauch der Rechte aus dieser Charta auszudehnen; die Wahrnehmung der in der Charta garantierten bürgerlichen, politischen und sozialen Rechte darf nicht zu Benachteiligungen führen.

1.2 Zur Rechtsverbindlichkeit und Rechtsdurchsetzung

Die Grundrechtecharta kann nur dann Rechtsverbindlichkeit erlangen, wenn sie unmittelbarer Bestandteil sowohl des Unions- als auch des Gemeinschaftsrechts ist. Um Zweifel auszuschließen, ist die Charta in die Gründungsverträge aufzunehmen. Auch der EuGH muss – nach Erfüllung besonderer Voraussetzungen – direkt angerufen werden können, um die einheitliche und wirksame Anwendung der Grundrechte sicherzustellen.

Auch ein Verschlechterungsverbot sollte für das innerstaatliche Recht zumindest sicherstellen, dass ein einmal garantiertes Recht nur unter eng gefassten Bedingungen eingeschränkt werden kann.

1.3 Fehlende soziale Normen

Einen Mangel sieht der DGB darin, dass ein Recht auf Arbeit im Sinne einer Verpflichtung, dem Ziel der Vollbeschäftigung, Vorrang einzuräumen fehlt. Dieses aus Artikel 1 ESC entnommene Recht war in der ersten „Liste“ noch enthalten und wurde in CONVENT 40 noch einmal aufgegriffen. Jetzt fehlt es – mit Ausnahme des Elements der Berufsfreiheit. Das Recht auf unternehmerische Freiheit fand sich nicht in den Vorentwürfen, soll jetzt aber garantiert werden. Auch das Recht der Beschäftigten auf Schutz bei Zahlungsunfähigkeit ihres Arbeitgebers fehlt. Dieses in Artikel 25 der revidierten ESC enthaltene Recht lehnt sich nicht nur an IAO-Normen an, sondern vor allem an die Richtlinie 80/987/EWG. Es sollte daher aufgenommen werden. Ebenso sollte das Recht auf gerechtes Arbeitsentgelt aufgenommen werden. Aus dem in der ESC enthaltenen Recht war noch im CONVENT 18 ein gewisses Element aufgenommen worden.

2. Bemerkungen zu einzelnen Artikeln

Artikel 12: Versammlungs- und Vereinigungsfreiheit

Nach Absatz 2 sollte eingefügt werden: „Gewerkschaften haben auch auf europäischer Ebene das Recht, sich frei zu betätigen.“ Die Ergänzung um das europäische Element erscheint im Hinblick auf den Gleichklang zu Absatz 2 dieser Vorschrift sowie zur Absicherung europäischer Gewerkschaften notwendig.

Artikel 16: Unternehmerische Freiheit

Die unternehmerische Freiheit wird über die Berufsfreiheit und das Eigentumsrecht explizit anerkannt. Um Fehlinterpretationen und eine weitere Rechtsgrundlage zur Einschränkung sozialer Rechte zu vermeiden, sollte der Artikel möglichst gestrichen werden.

Artikel 21: Gleichheit und Nichtdiskriminierung

Um Benachteiligungen wegen der Wahrnehmung der in der Charta garantierten bürgerlichen, politischen und sozialen Rechten zu verhindern, sollte Artikel 21 Absatz 1 wie folgt lauten: „Diskriminierungen insbesondere wegen .... des Alters, der sexuellen Ausrichtung oder wegen des Gebrauchs der Rechte aus dieser Charta sind verboten.“

Artikel 22: Gleichheit von Männern und Frauen

Bisher kommt die Pflicht zur positiven Diskriminierung nicht ausreichend zum Ausdruck. Absatz 2 sollte möglichst wie folgt ergänzt werden: „Er beinhaltet die Pflicht zur Förderung der Gleichstellung.“

Artikel 24: Integration von behinderten Menschen

Der DGB sieht die vorliegende Formulierung als erhebliche Verbesserung an, da der Förder- und Integrationsaspekt nun klar zum Ausdruck kommt.

Artikel 25: Recht auf Unterrichtung und Anhörung der Arbeitnehmer im Unternehmen

Der DGB fordert nachhaltig, dieses Recht um die Mitwirkung zu erweitern. Mitwirkung beinhaltet, dass beide Seiten ihren jeweiligen Standpunkt nicht nur austauschen, sondern soll gewährleisten, dass bestimmte unternehmerische Maßnahmen nicht ohne vorherige Information der und Beratung mit der Arbeitnehmerseite getroffen werden können. Eine solche Form der Beteiligung, die sich unterhalb der Ebene der echten Mitbestimmung und Zustimmungspflicht der betrieblichen Interessenvertretung bewegt, erlangt gerade im Zusammenhang mit der fortschreitenden Internationalisierung der Unternehmen und der zunehmenden Zahl von Unternehmenszusammenschlüssen wachsende Bedeutung. Bereits die EU-Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer, eine wesentliche Grundlage für die Arbeiten des Konvents, sieht das Recht auf Mitwirkung in den Artikeln 17 und 18 ausdrücklich vor.

Artikel 26: Recht auf Kollektivverhandlungen und Kollektivmaßnahmen

Der DGB sieht in den vorgenommenen Änderungen eine gravierende Verschlechterung früherer Vorschläge (CONVENT 34). Die Herausnahme des Zusatzes „auch auf der Ebene der Union“ im Zusammenhang mit kollektiven Maßnahmen zur Interessenwahrnehmung stellt eine aus Arbeitnehmersicht nicht hinnehmbare Einschränkung der Ausübung dieses Rechtes auf grenzüberschreitender Ebene dar. Die neu aufgenommene Bezugnahme auf das Gemeinschaftsrecht neben den einzelstaatlichen Rechtsvorschriften kann diesen Mangel aus Sicht des DGB nicht ausgleichen, sondern vielmehr als zusätzliche Einschränkung ausgelegt werden.

Auch die Streichung des Zusatzes „wirtschaftliche und soziale“ bei Interessen ist nicht nachvollziehbar, präzisiert sie doch gerade die Rolle der Wirtschafts- und Sozialpartner in angemessener Weise. Der DGB plädiert daher nachdrücklich dafür, die frühere Formulierung (CONVENT 34) wiederherzustellen und zusätzlich ein ausdrückliches Recht auf Streik sowie ein Verbot von Benachteiligungen wegen gewerkschaftlicher Betätigung aufzunehmen. Die ausdrückliche Erwähnung des Streikrechts entspricht den europäischen (Kölner Mandat: ESC Art. 6 Abs. 4) und internationalen Vorgaben (Internationaler Pakt über wirtschaftliche, soziale und kulturelle Rechte, Art. 8 d. (Eine Erwähnung der Aussperrung ist in den genannten Instrumenten nicht erfolgt und insoweit – will man nicht die derzeitigen Standards verschlechtern – auch nicht möglich; s. auch Begründung unter 1.1.)

Er erneuert daher seinen früheren Vorschlag, dieses Grundrecht wie folgt zu formulieren:

„(1) Arbeitgeberverbände und Gewerkschaften haben das Recht, die wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Interessen ihrer Mitglieder zu vertreten. Sie haben das Recht, nach Maßgabe der geltenden Rechtsvorschriften und Gepflogenheiten Tarifverträge auszuhandeln und zu schließen sowie bei Interessenkonflikten auch auf der Ebene der Union kollektive Maßnahmen einschließlich des Streiks zu ergreifen.

(2) Arbeitnehmer dürfen wegen gewerkschaftlicher Betätigung einschließlich einer Teilnahme an einem Streik nicht benachteiligt werden.“

Artikel 27: Recht auf Zugang zu einem Arbeitsvermittlungsdienst

Die Aufnahme eines solchen Grundrechtes wird vom DGB ausdrücklich befürwortet. Es muss jedoch präziser gefasst werden. Das Fehlen der in den Vorentwürfen enthaltenen „Unentgeltlichkeit“ beruht wohl auf einem Redaktionsversehen.

Der DGB schlägt daher folgende Formulierung vor: „Jede Person hat das Recht auf Zugang zu einem unentgeltlichen öffentlichen Berufsberatungs- und Arbeitsvermittlungsdienst.“

Artikel 28: Schutz bei ungerechtfertigter Entlassung

Der DGB unterstützt die vorgeschlagene Formulierung.

Artikel 29: Gerechte und angemessene Arbeitsbedingungen

Die Würde des Menschen wird in Artikel 1 des Entwurfs der Grundrechtecharta geschützt. Sie sollte gleichermaßen im Zusammenhang mit den Arbeitsbedingungen ausdrücklich aufgeführt werden. Der DGB schlägt daher folgende Formulierung vor: „Jeder Arbeitnehmer hat das Recht auf angemessene, insbesondere gesunde, sichere und würdige Arbeitsbedingungen.“

In Abs. 2 erscheint eine Begrenzung der Höchstarbeitszeit nicht ausreichend. Wenn schon keine Verpflichtung zur Verkürzung der Arbeitszeit (vgl. Art. 2 Abs. 1 ESC) aufgenommen wird, sollte zumindest deutlich gemacht werden, dass nicht nur Höchstgrenzen, sondern „angemessene“ Arbeitszeiten der Maßstab sein sollten. Abs. 2 dieses Artikels sollte daher lauten: „Jeder Arbeitnehmer hat das Recht auf gerechte Arbeitsbedingungen, das insbesondere das Recht auf angemessene tägliche und wöchentliche Arbeits- und Ruhezeiten sowie auf bezahlten Jahresurlaub umfasst.“

Artikel 30: Schutz der Jugendlichen am Arbeitsplatz

Der DGB unterstützt nachdrücklich das ausdrückliche Verbot der Kinderarbeit. Allerdings sollte die 15-Jahre-Mindestgrenze wieder aufgenommen werden, ebenso wie die Ergänzung der „eng begrenzten Ausnahmen für leichte Arbeit“, die sich aus den Formulierungen internationaler und europäischer Standards ergibt. Der 2. Satz sollte daher lauten: „Abgesehen von eng begrenzten Ausnahmen für leichte Arbeit darf das Mindestalter für den Eintritt in das Arbeitsleben das Alter, in dem die Schulpflicht endet, auf jeden Fall aber 15 Jahre nicht unterschreiten.“

Artikel 31: Einklang von Familien- und Berufsleben

Der DGB befürwortet die vorgenommenen Ergänzungen in diesem Artikel, insbesondere den ausdrücklichen Kündigungsschutz von Schwangeren. Ergänzend sollte jedoch ein Benachteiligungsverbot vorgesehen werden. Der DGB schlägt hierfür vor: „Arbeitnehmer mit Familienpflichten dürfen in der Arbeitswelt nicht benachteiligt werden.“ Diese spezielle Nichtdiskriminierungsregel kann bei Umsetzung der Forderung zu Art. 21 (Gleichheit und Nichtdiskriminierung) entfallen.

Artikel 32: Soziale Sicherheit und soziale Unterstützung

Der DGB unterstützt den vorliegenden Vorschlag grundsätzlich, möchte jedoch durch entsprechende Präzisierungen den Umfang und die Dynamik bei der Weiterentwicklung sozialer Leistungen stärker berücksichtigt sehen. Durch den Zusatz „Zugang zu angemessenen Leistungen“ sollte ein Bezug zum jeweiligen Lebensstandard hergestellt werden. Durch die Einleitung der Aufzählung durch das Wort „insbesondere“ sollte der Dynamik sozialer Leistungen im Hinblick auf die zukünftige Entwicklung Rechnung getragen werden.

Zwar sind in der Neuformulierung Leistungen bei Arbeitsunfällen aufgenommen worden, es fehlen jedoch nach wie vor die Elemente: Schutz bei Berufskrankheiten und bei Berufs- und Erwerbsunfähigkeit. Diese Elemente sollten nach Auffassung des DGB in die Aufzählung im ersten Absatz aufgenommen werden. Der DGB befürwortet ausdrücklich die Aufnahme des Rechts der Wanderarbeitnehmer auf gleiche Leistungen der sozialen Sicherheit.

Artikel 50: Tragweite der garantierten Rechte und Artikel 51 Schutzniveau

Der Grundgedanke, dass Einschränkungen und Schutzniveau der in der Charta garantierten Rechte nicht über diejenigen Einschränkungen hinausgehen können, die in der EMRK vorgesehen sind, ist entsprechend auch auf die Revidierte ESC anzuwenden.

Comments of the CLA on Article 17 of the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union

Article 17: Ownership Rights – need for changes

On behalf of the CLA, may I refer you to Article 17 (of the 28 July draft, Charte 4422/00, Convent 45), which defines rights of ownership. In our view the current draft needs some amendments. These are not extensive, but would make a significant and beneficial difference to the way the institutions of the EU – and the member states – operate their rural policies.

Reasons

As an organisation representing 50,000 farming and other rural businesses, the CLA is concerned that a secure framework of ownership rights is essential for long term investment in agriculture, forestry and non land based rural businesses, for these businesses to be able to manage their assets effectively, to enter into contracts with public bodies and others to deliver environmental and other land management services and to grow for the benefit of local employment and the wider rural economy. The CLA fully supported the submission of the European Landowning Organisation (ELO) to the Convention (on the basis of an earlier draft) which set out these arguments more fully (copy attached for ease of reference).

Current text

Whilst some of draft Article 17 provides such a framework other provisions then weaken it. As a result, the development of agriculture and of positive rural development policy will, in the CLA's view, be held back in those countries aspiring to join the EU (and aligning their practices with the Charter) and the development throughout the EU of a positive relationship between enterprising rural businesses, employment and incomes on the one hand, and the health of the rural economy and environment on the other, will be impeded.

The current text (Charte 4422/00) reads:

1. Every person has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided by law, subject to fair compensation. The use of property may be regulated insofar as it is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

There is no problem with the first sentence of Paragraph 1 or with Paragraph 2.

The CLA believes the following amendments should be made:

(i) In the second line, after “possessions”, add: “or regulated in their use”

(ii) Delete the third sentence: “The use...interest”.

Ownership includes not only holding property but also management of its use. Regulations that restrict the economically viable uses of say, land, may amount to partial deprivation. Such restrictions should not be made without their need being justified, and without the other protections for ownership, including compensation, being applicable.

(i) Accordingly, we urge the Convention to add these suggested words to the text, which would not prevent governments or the EU from imposing restrictions on the use of property, but would apply the same disciplines to potential restrictions as apply to other forms of deprivation.

If this change were made, there would be no need for the inclusion – which is new – of the third sentence of Paragraph 1, “The use...interest”, because the possibility to regulate use would be explicitly provided for in the body of the Article.

Furthermore, this new third sentence, which was not in earlier drafts, contains two undesirable provisions. The first is to exempt regulation of use from the disciplines applying to deprivation in the rest of the Article, in particular in relation to the provision of compensation. The second is to apply a weaker test, “general interest”, rather than “public interest”, in respect of regulation of use. Neither of these can be justified, in view of the higher level of protection for ownership in the rest of the Article, and given that regulations of use can amount, in effect, to deprivation of ownership.

(ii) We urge the Convention to delete this sentence.

(iii) After “except in”, add: “sofar as it is necessary for”

The draft includes no test of the scale of the public interest. Deprivation of possessions should be the last resort, and wherever possible the public interest should be met by negotiated, agreed initiatives that also protect the position of private individuals and businesses. (iii) Accordingly, we urge the Convention to add these words, as this would require the authority depriving the person of his possessions to justify the scale of the public interest and the impracticality of it being met in any other way.

(iv) After “subject to”, delete “fair compensation.”, and insert: “compensation (for his loss) to be paid without undue delay.”

Whereas “fair” is capable of wide interpretation, “compensation (for his loss)” defines the level of compensation more objectively, and may reduce the amount of time consuming and costly dispute that surrounds the award of compensation.

In addition, however certain or accurately calculated the level of compensation may be, it will not serve its objective if its payment is unreasonably delayed. It is not unknown for individual householders or businesses to be made to wait ten years or more for compensation. In the meantime such compensation is not available to them for the adjustment of their lives or businesses to respond to the deprivation of their possessions.

(iv) Accordingly, we urge the Convention to make this amendment to text.

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Report*
Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights
Rapporteur: Mr Göran Magnusson, Sweden, Socialist Group

Summary

The preparatory work on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is now entering its final stage. Both the Parliamentary Assembly and the Committee of Ministers have drawn attention to the risks posed by having two sets of fundamental rights in Europe, and have pointed out that the Charter should be fully consistent with, and not weaken, the system for the protection of human rights provided, under the European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR), to all citizens of the Council of Europe's member States, including those of the European Union.

The Assembly, together with the European Parliament, the European Commission and the European Court of Human Rights, continues to believe that the aim of the draft Charter can only be reached if institutions and bodies of the European Union are bound not only by the draft Charter, but also by the European Convention on Human Rights.

* The Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights adopted this report on 7 September 2000, on the basis of the information available that day. The Committee will have to revise the text to take into account new developments after the meetings of the "Convention" in charge of drafting the Charter which are scheduled between the adoption of this report and the debate in the Assembly. Members of the Assembly are therefore kindly requested to wait with the tabling of amendments until the revised version of this report is available.

The Assembly should thus invite the European Union and its member states to extend the protection afforded by the ECHR and the Strasbourg Court to acts of the European Union and its institutions, by making the necessary amendments to the treaties in question and accede to the ECHR at the same time as deciding upon the proposed Charter. The Assembly should also strongly recommend that the Committee of Ministers support this accession and prepare the appropriate amendments to the ECHR without further delay.

I. Draft resolution

1. Following the adoption of Resolution 1210 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union on 25 January 2000, the Assembly has continued to follow with great interest the preparatory work on the Charter, which is now entering its final stage.
2. Already in January, the Assembly had drawn attention to the risks posed by having two sets of fundamental rights in Europe, and thus called upon the European Union to do its utmost to safeguard the consistency of the protection of human rights in Europe and to avoid diverging interpretations of those rights. In particular, it invited the European Union to pronounce itself in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights of the Council of Europe (ECHR) and to make the necessary amendments to the Community treaties.
3. The Assembly regrets that there is apparently not yet a consensus concerning the accession of the Union to the ECHR, an approach which, despite the technical objections of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg some years ago (which can easily be solved), has repeatedly received the backing of the other institutions concerned: the European Parliament, the European Commission and the European Court of Human Rights. The Assembly maintains that only through this accession can new dividing lines in Europe be avoided, as well as a weakening of human rights protection across the continent.
4. In this connection, the Assembly welcomes the Resolution of the European Parliament, adopted on 16 March 2000, in which the Parliament invites the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) to enable the Union to become a party to the European Convention on Human Rights.
5. The Assembly realises that it is not within the powers of the “Convention” which has been entrusted with the drafting of the Charter to decide upon accession to the ECHR, or even upon the legal nature of the Charter (a legally binding and justiciable text or one of declaratory character). The Assembly congratulates the “Convention” on the vast work it has undertaken, and, subject to the observations in paragraphs 7 to 10, expresses its satisfaction with the provisional text of the Charter proposed by the Praesidium (Convent 45).
6. The draft Charter as proposed by the Praesidium reaffirms inter alia the ECHR, the Social Charter of the Council of Europe and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights. Laudably, the draft also includes some new rights and freedoms, such as the right to respect for physical and mental integrity - including the prohibition of eugenic practices and of reproductive cloning of human beings – (draft Article 3), the prohibition of trafficking in human beings (draft Article 5.3.), the protection of personal data (draft Article 8), the right to asylum (draft Article 18), and the right to good administration (draft Article 39).

7. Nevertheless, the Assembly is concerned that not all guarantees afforded by the ECHR have been included in the draft text. In particular, Article 1 of the ECHR, which secures to everyone within the jurisdiction of the High Contracting Parties the rights and freedoms defined in the ECHR, is not reflected in the same way in the draft Charter: Indeed, at times the draft seems to be striking an uneasy compromise between rights guaranteed to everyone, and rights guaranteed only to European Union citizens. Similarly, there is no obligation in the draft Charter to protect everyone's right to life by law; and draft Article 46 on the presumption of innocence and right of defence does not explicitly make reference to all the guarantees afforded by Article 6 of the ECHR.

8. The Assembly supports the proposal to introduce an Article 21 bis in the Charter, to guarantee the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities.

9. The Assembly is also concerned that some provisions are drafted too widely, such as draft Article 13, which liberates scientific research from any constraint – by implication also from restraint of an ethical nature - and draft Article 50.1., which allows for a wide range of limitations on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by the Charter as long as they are provided for by the competent legislative authority and “genuinely meet objectives of general interest being pursued by the Union”.

10. Other articles might turn out to be difficult to enforce judicially, such as the right to have access to vocational and continuing training (draft Article 14), the right to engage in a freely chosen occupation (draft Article 15.1.), and the freedom to conduct a business (draft Article 16). Draft Article 32 on social security and social assistance might pose similar problems in this area. One might also ask whether some newly introduced rights, such as the right of access to placement services (draft Article 27) and to services of general economic interest (draft Article 34) are as fundamental as some more “traditional”, universally recognised human rights (such as the right to be protected from torture, the freedom of expression and assembly, etc.), and should stand side by side with these, implying equal weight and importance.

11. In the interest of avoiding differing interpretations of the same human rights, it is also important that the meaning and scope of those rights contained in the draft charter which correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR shall be the same as those conferred on them by the ECHR, including the case-law of the Court in Strasbourg.

12. The Assembly is convinced that the aim of the draft Charter, which is to enhance and make more visible the protection of fundamental rights in EU member states, can only be reached if institutions and bodies of the European Union are bound not only by the draft Charter, but also by the European Convention on Human Rights. In a democratic society, a system of checks and balances is essential. All member states of the European Union, honouring this democratic principle, have submitted themselves to the external supervision of the European Court of Human Rights under this Convention, without endangering national sovereignty or the principle of subsidiarity. There is no legitimate reason why acts carried out on behalf of the European Union should be exempt from this fundamental external control mechanism, thus in effect withdrawing the protection of the ECHR from persons adversely affected in their fundamental rights and freedoms by Community law.

13. The Assembly therefore reiterates its appeal to the European Union do its utmost to safeguard the consistency of human rights protection in Europe. It thus invites the European Union and its member states to:

- i. ensure that both the text of the proposed Charter and its ultimate application fully reflect and preserve the protection extended by the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights to every person within the jurisdiction of European Union member States;
- ii. extend the protection afforded by the ECHR and the Strasbourg Court to acts of the European Union and its institutions, by making the necessary amendments to the treaties in question and accede to the European Convention on Human Rights at the same time as deciding upon the proposed Charter.

II. Draft recommendation

1. The Assembly draws attention to its Recommendation 1439 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, adopted on 25 January 2000, in which it recommended that the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe support the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and prepare the appropriate amendments to this treaty.

2. It notes that, at its 106th session (10-11 May 2000), the Committee of Ministers stressed the need to ensure that, whatever decision the Institutions of the Union might take concerning the Charter, it did not lead to new dividing lines in Europe. The Charter should be fully consistent with, and not weaken, the system for the protection of human rights provided, under the European Convention, to all citizens of the Council of Europe's member States, including those of the European Union.

3. Although the Assembly welcomes the fact that the Committee of Ministers shares its concern that there should be no rivalry between the two systems of human rights protection in Europe, it regrets that it has not yet reached a consensus concerning the accession of the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights, an approach which, despite the technical objections of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg a few years ago (which can easily be solved), has repeatedly received the backing of the other institutions concerned: the European Parliament, the European Commission and the European Court of Human Rights.

4. The Assembly is not aware of any factor opposing accession from a legal point of view. It thus fervently hopes that the political will which, up to now, has prevented the process from going ahead, can be mustered soon.

5. In addition, the Assembly draws the attention of the Committee of Ministers to the necessity to support the proposal to introduce an Article 21 bis in the Charter, to guarantee the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities.

6. With reference to Resolution ... (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, the Assembly therefore once again strongly recommends that the Committee of Ministers support the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and prepare the appropriate amendments to this Convention without further delay.

III. Draft order

The Assembly draws attention to its Resolution ... (2000) and Recommendation ... (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and instructs its Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, in co-operation with the Political Affairs Committee and the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee, to closely follow the preparatory work on the Charter and the results of that work, and to report to it in due course.

IV. Explanatory memorandum by Mr Magnusson, Rapporteur

A. THE COUNCIL OF EUROPE AND THE EU CHARTER: NEW DEVELOPMENTS

1. On 25 January 2000 the Assembly adopted Resolution 1210 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, in which it invited the European Union:

i. to incorporate the rights guaranteed in the European Convention on Human Rights and the protocols to it into the Charter of Fundamental Rights and to do its utmost to safeguard the consistency of the protection of human rights in Europe and to avoid diverging interpretations of those rights;

ii. to decide in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights of the Council of Europe and to make the necessary amendments to the Community treaties;

iii. to make sure that when social rights are referred to the revised European Social Charter of the Council of Europe is taken into account.

2. At the same time it adopted Recommendation 1439 (2000), in which it recommended that the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe support the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and prepare the appropriate amendments to this treaty.

3. Finally, in Order No. 561 (2000), it instructed its Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, and its Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee, which was asked for an opinion, to carefully follow and monitor the outcome of the drafting work on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, and to report back to it in due course.

4. The time has now come to take stock of the action taken on these texts. Since, by late May 2000, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe had not replied to Recommendation 1439, I submitted a written question, No. 387, to the Committee of Ministers on behalf of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, asking what follow-up the Committee of Ministers intended to give to Recommendation 1439 before the adoption of the Charter.

5. On 31 May 2000, the Committee of Ministers adopted a reply in which it referred to the Communiqué which it had adopted at the end of its 106th Session (Strasbourg, 10-11 May 2000):

“With regard to the proposed European Charter of Fundamental Rights, the Ministers underlined the need to ensure that, whatever decision the Institutions of the Union may take concerning the Charter, it does not lead to new dividing lines in Europe. The Charter should be fully consistent with, and not weaken, the system for the protection of human rights provided, under the European Convention, to all citizens of the Council of Europe's member States, including those of the European Union.”

6. It appended to its reply the statement made before the Ministers' Deputies on 7 March 2000 by Mr Wildhaber, President of the European Court of Human Rights, in which he set forth the arguments in favour of the European Union's accession to the Convention, pointing out that the debate on the Charter offered an excellent opportunity to reopen the whole question of the Community's accession to the Convention and that the Council of Europe ought to have no misgivings about seizing this opportunity without hesitation.

7. I nevertheless regretted that the Committee of Ministers had not replied to the main question addressed to it in Recommendation 1439, and so once again put a question to the Chair of the Committee of Ministers on 27 June 2000, asking him to state clearly whether the Committee of Ministers intended to come out in favour of accession.

8. The Chair of the Committee of Ministers replied that if there was no consensus among the fifteen member states of the European Union, there could be no consensus on this question within the Committee of Ministers either.

9. It should be noted, however, that the European Parliament adopted a resolution on 16 March 2000, in which it invited the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) to enable the Union to become a party to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). With the exception of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg, which raised some technical objections a few years ago (that can easily be solved), the proposal that the Union accedes to the ECHR has thus repeatedly received the backing of all the other institutions concerned: the European Parliament, the European Commission, the European Court of Human Rights and, of course, the Assembly. I would indeed maintain that only through this accession can new dividing lines in Europe be avoided, as well as a weakening of human rights protection across the continent.

B. Developments within the European Union

10. Within the European Union, the “Convention”, the name adopted by the body set up at the European Council meeting in Tampere, has nearly finished drafting the Charter. The “Convention” is made up of fifteen representatives of the Heads of State or Government, one representative of the European Commission, sixteen members of the European Parliament and thirty representatives of national parliaments. Two representatives of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and two representatives of the Council of Europe, one of whom is a judge at the European Court of Human Rights, have observer status.

11. The “Convention” worked very intensively, with several meetings per month, and invited the Economic and Social Committee, the Committee of the Regions and the European Ombudsman to give their views. Countries applying for accession to the Union were also invited to a hearing and NGOs had the opportunity to make their views known. This shows that there is, within the “Convention”, a determination to ensure the transparency of the discussions.

12. The “Convention” is chaired by Mr Roman Herzog, former President of the Federal Republic of Germany. As Vice-Chair, the group of representatives of Heads of State or Government elected the representative of the rotating presidency of the Council of the European Union. The group of representatives of the European Parliament elected Mr Mendes de Vigo and the Group of National Parliaments elected Mr Gunnar Jansson, Chair of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights of the Parliamentary Assembly.

13. The Praesidium of the “Convention” has proposed a draft Charter (Convent 45) and an explanatory memorandum (Convent 46), which will be examined by the plenary “Convention” at its next meeting on 11-13 September 2000 in Brussels.

14. The draft Charter is composed of a Preamble, and seven Chapters: Chapter I “Dignity”, Chapter II “Freedoms”, Chapter III “Equality”, Chapter IV “Solidarity”, Chapter V “Citizenship”, Chapter VI “Justice”, and Chapter VII “General Provisions”. Not counting the preamble, there are 52 articles all in all.

15. The draft Charter does reaffirm inter alia the ECHR, the Social Charter of the Council of Europe and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights. Laudably, the draft also includes some new rights and freedoms, such as the right to respect for physical and mental integrity - including the prohibition of eugenic practices and of reproductive cloning of human beings - (draft Article 3), the prohibition of trafficking in human beings (draft Article 5.3.), the protection of personal data (draft Article 8), the right to asylum (draft Article 18), and the right to good administration (draft Article 39).

16. In fact, there seems to be a general consensus in the “Convention” on what constitutes civil and political rights (rightly, the provisions of the ECHR are often taken as a basis for the most “traditional” human rights). However, it is much more difficult to reach agreement on the exact substance of economic and social rights. This is hardly surprising if one considers that the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted in 1966 at the same time as the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, never came into force and that not even the Council of Europe gives economic and social rights the same level of protection as civil and political rights.

17. The draft of the Praesidium does confer a number of social and economic rights on the citizens of the European Union. Some of the articles concerned might turn out to be difficult to enforce judicially, such as the right to have access to vocational and continuing training (draft Article 14), the right to engage in a freely chosen occupation (draft Article 15.1.), the freedom to conduct a business (draft Article 16), as well as the whole of draft Article 32 on social security and social assistance. However, this is not a reason not to include them. I am more reticent as concerns some other newly introduced rights, such as the right of access to placement services (draft Article 27) and to services of general economic interest (draft Article 34). Are these rights really so fundamental that they should stand side by side with such universally recognised human rights as the right to be protected from torture and the freedom of expression and assembly, implying their equal weight and importance?

18. In fact, the inclusion of these rights in this manner has led to an uneasy balance between “traditional” fundamental human rights, which must apply to every person within the jurisdiction of the European Union, and these social and economic rights, which, in many cases, are only conferred upon citizens of the Union. Worryingly, the outcome is that, for example Article 1 of the ECHR, which secures to everyone within the jurisdiction of the High Contracting Parties the rights and freedoms defined in the ECHR, is not reflected in the same way in the draft Charter. Indeed, some economic and social rights are elaborated at more length in the Charter than “traditional” human rights. Thus, to take two more examples, the draft Charter contains no obligation to protect everyone’s right to life by law, nor does draft Article 46 of the Charter on the presumption of innocence and right of defence explicitly make reference to all the guarantees afforded by Article 6 of the ECHR.

19. In a way, this is quite surprising, since other provisions are drafted exceedingly widely. Draft Article 13, which liberates scientific research from any constraint – by implication also from restraint of an ethical nature – could serve as a random example. More far-reaching and potentially dangerous is the wide and inexact drafting of the general provisions in the last chapter, the so-called “horizontal clauses”. Article 50.1., for example, allows for any limitations on even the most fundamental human rights, as long as they are provided for by the competent legislative authority, and “are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest being pursued by the Union, other legitimate interests in a democratic society or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others”. Considering that the ECHR allows for no derogations, even in wartime, from the right to life, the protection from torture, the prohibition of slavery and servitude, and the principle of no punishment without law, and allows for only very limited derogations for many other rights, the legitimacy of limitations on the grounds of them “genuinely meeting objectives of general interest being pursued by the Union” must be called into question.

20. The potential danger posed by Article 50.1. is only partly assuaged by Article 50.3., which reads “Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be similar to those conferred on them by the said Convention unless this Charter affords greater or more extensive protection.” First, since the meaning and scope must be only “similar”, and not “the same”, this Article contains no guard against differing interpretations of these rights, which could fall below even the ECHR standard if this clause is not amended. Second, even if this amendment should be made, it would only restrict limitations on rights covered by the ECHR (and, possibly, the case-law of the Strasbourg Court). New rights not contained in the ECHR – some of them very important, such as the protection of the dignity of the person, or the right to asylum, or even data protection – could be limited practically at will in accordance with Article 50.1. (in the interest of “objectives of general interest” being pursued by the Union), making them almost meaningless.

21. There is also a discussion in the “Convention” on whether the draft Charter should confer new rights, or only reaffirm existing ones. Personally, I would interpret the mandate of the Cologne decision as the latter, but there are diverging views in the “Convention” on this matter. I think that the ECHR should not only be the “floor” of human rights protection in Europe, but also the “ceiling”.

22. Of course, this text is not yet final, as it will continue to be discussed during the upcoming meetings of the “Convention”. After the European Parliament has given its opinion on the final version, it will then be the task of the Nice Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) to solemnly proclaim the Charter in December 2000, and to decide upon its legal nature. However, without anticipating the ICG's decision, the Chair of the “Convention” has opted for a form of wording which makes it possible for the Charter to become a binding instrument.

C. Accession of the European Union to the ECHR

23. It has always been the Council of Europe's – and this Assembly's – stance that the best way to guarantee universal and comprehensive human rights' protection across Europe would be the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights.

24. The European Parliament, for its part, came out in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights in a Resolution adopted as recently as on 16 March 2000, in which it invited the IGC to:

- a. put the incorporation into the Treaty of the Charter of Fundamental Rights on its agenda;
- b. enable the Union to become a party to the ECHR so as to establish close co-operation with the Council of Europe, whilst ensuring that appropriate action is taken to avoid possible conflicts or overlapping between the Court of Justice of the European Communities and the European Court of Human Rights;
- c. add a reference to the European Social Charter and to the appropriate ILO and UN conventions to the reference to the European Convention on Human Rights in Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union.

25. It is now up to the IGC to give its opinion on accession to the European Convention on Human Rights, whether the Charter is adopted or not and irrespective of whether it is binding. It should be pointed out that there is nothing to prevent the European Union from adopting stricter standards than those set by the Convention. What applies to the member States can apply to the Community.

26. There is no need at this point to repeat all the reasons for acceding, which were examined in the previous report (Doc. 8611), and there has been absolutely nothing to show that this is not the right approach. Suffice it to say that I am convinced that the aim of the draft Charter, which is to enhance and make more visible the protection of fundamental rights in Europe, can only be reached if institutions and bodies of the European Union are bound not only by the draft Charter, but also by the European Convention on Human Rights. In a democratic society, a system of checks and balances is essential. All member states of the European Union, honouring this democratic principle, have submitted themselves to the external supervision of the European Court of Human Rights under this Convention, without endangering national sovereignty or the principle of subsidiarity. There is no legitimate reason why acts carried out on behalf of the European Union should be exempt from this fundamental external control mechanism, thus in effect withdrawing the protection of the ECHR from persons adversely affected in their fundamental rights and freedoms by Community law.

27. The two official observers of the Council of Europe to the “Convention”, Deputy Secretary General Krüger and Judge Fischbach, have also emphasised that accession to the ECHR would have the advantage of ensuring consistency in the protection of fundamental rights in Europe without lessening the Charter’s usefulness. Firstly, the Charter would be seen as complementing, not being an alternative, to the ECHR, in keeping with Article 53 of the ECHR. That would underscore the fact that the Charter did not affect the universality of human rights or uniformity of standards in Europe. Secondly, the European Court of Human Rights would be able to review the interpretation of those provisions of the Charter that were borrowed from the ECHR, thus ensuring perfect consonance between the two instruments in the interests of the clarity and legal certainty to which European citizens aspire. Lastly, it would enable Community institutions to be a party to proceedings before the European Court of Human Rights that concerned the effects of Community provisions in the legal orders of member States.

28. In short, I would find it difficult to accept the European Union's claims that it wishes to improve the protection of European citizens' rights while it refuses to submit its own institutions to scrutiny and opens up the possibility of diverging interpretations of human rights by two different Courts. In fact, only the decision of the Court of Justice of Luxembourg in 1996 continues to be used as an argument for not ratifying the Convention. Yet there is nothing to prevent the European Council from remedying the situation by deciding to amend the Treaty on European Union to enable ratification to take place.

29. That is what the Assembly proposes, for the sole purpose of ensuring that Europe does not have two systems of human rights protection and to avoid the inconsistency which would inevitably ensue.

Menschenrechte sind Souveränitätsrechten der Staaten übergeordnet

- Der DFW appelliert an die Bundesregierung das Statut des permanenten “Internationalen Strafgerichtshofes” (IStGH) in Den Haag ohne Einschränkungen (Artikel 124) zu ratifizieren.
- Die Errichtung des IStGH, der die Straftatbestände
Völkermord
Verbrechen gegen die Menschlichkeit
Kriegsverbrechen
Aggressionskrieg
ahnden kann, schließt die Lücke einer derzeit nicht existierenden globalen Judikative und trägt dazu bei, Menschenrechte über die Souveränitätsrechte der Staaten zu stellen.
- Dies erscheint um so dringender notwendig zu sein, da heute 90 Prozent der Leidtragenden kriegerischer Auseinandersetzungen Zivilisten sind, weil Kriege nur noch selten zwischen Staaten und ihren Armeen auf dem Schlachtfeld geführt werden. Heute handelt es sich zunehmend um blutige Konflikte innerhalb einzelner Staaten.
- Insofern muß das Völkerrecht in ein Weltrecht auf demokratischer Basis weiterentwickelt werden. Diesem Ziel dient auch das Statut des IStGH. Da Frieden und Stabilität eines Landes entscheidend für seine ökonomische und ökologische Entwicklung sind und die Nicht-Ratifizierung des IStGH-Statutes mit Nichtanerkennung globaler rechtsstaatlicher Prinzipien gleichzusetzen ist, sollte die Bundesregierung ihren Einfluß bei den internationalen Finanzinstitutionen (World Bank, International Monetary Fund etc.) geltend machen, nur noch Länder zu unterstützen, die das Statut ratifiziert haben.
- Aufgrund der Erfahrungen der vergangenen Jahre (z.B. Kosovo-Konflikt) erwarten wir von der Bundesregierung, Waffenproduktion und Waffenexport grundsätzlich zu überdenken. Auf keinen Fall sollen zukünftig Waffen in Länder exportiert werden, die das Statut des IStGH nicht ratifiziert haben.

- Darüberhinaus wird empfohlen, einen Dialog zwischen Regierung, Wirtschaft und Zivilgesellschaften zu den Grundprinzipien einer Weltdemokratie zu beginnen, der Basis für eine weitere Demokratisierung der UNO werden kann. Zumindest sollten die nachfolgend aufgeführten Prinzipien enthalten sein:

Rechtsstaatlichkeit

Souveränität des Volkes durch direkte oder repräsentative Demokratie

Souveränität des Einzelnen

Institutionelle Transparenz

Subsidiarität

Nichtdiskriminierung nach Artikel 2 der Allgemeinen Erklärung der Menschenrechte

Friedliche Konfliktlösung

Diesem Ziel dient die im Mai 1999 in Den Haag ins Leben gerufene “Globale Koalition für Weltdemokratie 2010”, die für die Mitwirkung von Zivilgesellschaften, Regierungen, Unternehmen und Einzelnen offen ist.

Grundrechtscharta für Europa - Minimalforderungen

Um Bürgernähe für eine Grundrechtscharta zu erreichen, fordert der DFW von Politikern in der Bundesrepublik und in der EU, folgende Minimalforderungen einzuhalten:

- 1. Eine Grundrechtscharta zum heutigen Zeitpunkt darf nicht nur die Freiheits- und Demokratiewerte enthalten, die im Nachgang zur Aufklärung in die Verfassungen aufgenommen wurden.
- 2. Sie muß endlich den Zustand überwinden helfen, die Menschenrechte nur als moralische Werte im Völkerrecht zu betrachten, die im Falle innerstaatlicher Konflikte nicht durchsetzbar sind, da die Souveränitätsrechte eines Staates verletzt werden müssen.
- 3. Eine Grundrechtscharta für die Bürger Europas muß die Menschenrechte über die Souveränitätsrechte der Staaten stellen. Nur dann kann sie auch entscheidend zur Friedenssicherung beitragen. Dies sind die Lehren aus den blutigen Bürgerkriegskonflikten in Ruanda, Kosovo und Tschetschenien. (Siehe hierzu die entsprechende DFW-Erklärung vom 22.02.2000)
- 4. Eine derartige Charta kommt daher nicht umhin, Bezug zu nehmen auf das UN-Statut zur Errichtung eines "Internationalen Strafgerichtshofes" in Den Haag. (Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, 12 July 1999, UNO Document).
- 5. Sie muß sich außerdem beziehen auf die Erklärung von Rio 1992 und die Nachfolgekongressen, die alle eine nachhaltige Entwicklung unserer Erde angemahnt haben.
- 6. Die Grundrechtscharta für die Bürger Europas soll per Volksentscheid in allen EU-Mitgliedsländern in Kraft gesetzt werden.

Internationaler Strafgerichtshof / Grundrechtscharta für Europa

Sehr geehrter Herr Jacques, wir beobachten mit Sorge wie die Diskussion um die Grundrechtscharta für Europa ohne Bezug auf das Statut des geplanten Internationalen Strafgerichtshofes in Den Haag geführt wird.

U.E. hätten die Mitgliedsstaaten der EU die Möglichkeit innerhalb ihres Hoheitsbereiches die Menschenrechte völkerrechtsverbindlich über die Souveränitätsrechte der Nationalstaaten zu stellen. Wenn dies in der Grundrechtscharta für Europa festgeschrieben würde, dann würde diese Charta aus der Diskussion um Kompetenzenabgrenzung auf der Ebene EU und Mitgliedsstaaten herausführen. Sie würde dann zu einem Instrument der innovativen Weiterentwicklung des Völkerrechtes und würde auch Maßstäbe für den Beitritt neuer Mitglieder setzen, die über die vor 200 Jahren erkämpften Freiheitswerte hinausgehen.

Wir haben als Dachverband Freier Weltanschauungsgemeinschaften diese Kommentare an die Fraktionen des Deutschen Bundestages gegeben, da NGO's offensichtlich keine Möglichkeit mehr haben Kommentare einzureichen. Wir haben uns erlaubt zwei Positionspapiere anzufügen, die unsere Minimalforderungen zusammenfassen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

(Horst Prem)

Ogni individuo ha diritto al rispetto della propria vita privata e familiare, del proprio domicilio e della riservatezza delle sue comunicazioni.

Articolo 8. Protezione dei dati di carattere personale

Ogni individuo ha diritto alla protezione dei dati di carattere personale che lo riguardano. Tali dati devono essere trattati secondo il principio di lealtà, per finalità determinate e in base al consenso della persona interessata o ad un altro fondamento legittimo previsto dalla legge. Ogni individuo ha il diritto di accedere ai dati raccolti che lo riguardano e di ottenerne la rettifica. Il rispetto di tali regole è soggetto al controllo di un'autorità indipendente.

Articolo 9. Diritto di sposarsi e di costituire una famiglia

Il diritto di sposarsi e il diritto di costituire una famiglia sono garantiti secondo le leggi nazionali che ne disciplinano l'esercizio.

# Articolo 10. Libertà di pensiero, di coscienza e di religione

Ogni individuo ha diritto alla libertà di pensiero, di coscienza e di religione. Tale diritto include la libertà di cambiare religione o credo, così come la libertà di manifestare la propria religione o il proprio credo individualmente o collettivamente, in pubblico o in privato, mediante il culto, l'insegnamento, le pratiche e l'osservanza dei riti purché non siano lesivi dell'integrità e della dignità di umani e non umani.

Articolo 11. Libertà di espressione e d'informazione

1. Ogni individuo ha diritto alla libertà di espressione. Tale diritto include la libertà di opinione e la libertà di ricevere o di comunicare informazioni o idee senza che vi possa essere ingerenza da parte delle autorità pubbliche e senza limiti di frontiera

2. La libertà dei media e la libertà d'informazione sono garantite nel rispetto del pluralismo e della trasparenza.

Articolo 12. Libertà di riunione e di associazione

Ogni individuo ha diritto alla libertà di riunione pacifica e alla libertà di associazione, in particolare nei settori politico, sindacale e civico.

I partiti politici a livello europeo contribuiscono a esprimere la volontà politica dei cittadini dell'Unione.

# Articolo 13. Libertà della ricerca

La ricerca scientifica è libera.

La ricerca nel campo biologico è controllata da un comitato etico.

Articolo 14. Diritto all'istruzione

Ogni individuo ha diritto all'istruzione e all'accesso alla formazione professionale e continua. Questo diritto comporta la facoltà di accedere gratuitamente all'istruzione obbligatoria. La libertà di creare istituti di insegnamento nel rispetto dei principi democratici, così come il diritto dei genitori di provvedere all'educazione e all'istruzione dei loro figli secondo le loro convinzioni religiose, filosofiche e pedagogiche, sono garantiti secondo le norme nazionali che ne disciplinano l'esercizio.

Articolo 15. Libertà professionale

1. Per guadagnarsi di che vivere, ogni individuo ha il diritto di esercitare una professione liberamente scelta.

2. Ogni cittadino dell'Unione ha la libertà di cercare un lavoro, di lavorare, di stabilirsi o di prestare o ricevere servizi in qualunque Stato membro e di poter esercitare l'obiezione di coscienza in ogni settore lavorativo.

3. I cittadini dei paesi terzi che soggiornano regolarmente nel territorio degli Stati membri hanno diritto a condizioni di lavoro equivalenti a quelle di cui godono i cittadini dell'Unione.

Articolo 16. Libertà d'impresa

E' riconosciuta la libertà d'impresa.

Articolo 17. Diritto di proprietà

1. Ogni individuo ha il diritto di godere della proprietà dei beni che ha acquistato legalmente, di usarli, di disporne e di lasciarli in eredità. Nessuno può essere privato della proprietà se non per causa di pubblico interesse, nei casi e nei modi previsti dalla legge e contro il pagamento di una giusta indennità. L'uso dei beni può essere regolamentato nei limiti imposti dall'interesse generale.

1bis. Sia a livello individuale che industriale gli animali non sono considerati proprietà assoluta, beni o/e merce e deve essere rispettato il loro diritto a non soffrire.

2. La proprietà intellettuale è protetta.

Articolo 18. Diritto di asilo

Il diritto di asilo è garantito nel rispetto delle norme stabilite dalla convenzione di Ginevra del 28 luglio 1951 e dal protocollo del 31 gennaio 1967, relativi allo status dei rifugiati, e a norma del trattato che istituisce la Comunità europea.

Articolo 19. Protezione in caso di allontanamento, di espulsione e di estradizione

1. Le espulsioni collettive sono vietate.

2. Nessuno può essere allontanato, espulso o estradato verso uno Stato in cui rischia di essere sottoposto alla pena di morte, alla tortura o ad altre pene o trattamenti inumani o degradanti.

Carta dei diritti fondamentali dell'Unione Europea

# Emendamento della LIDA = Articolo nuovo (dopo art. 24)Capo III. UguaglianzaArticolo 20. Uguaglianza davanti alla legge

Tutti, uomini e donne, sono uguali davanti alla legge.

Articolo 21. Uguaglianza e non discriminazione

1. E' vietata qualsiasi forma di discriminazione fondata, in particolare, sul sesso, la razza, il colore della pelle o l'origine etnica o sociale, le caratteristiche genetiche, la lingua, la religione o le convinzioni personali, le opinioni politiche o di qualsiasi altra natura, l'appartenenza ad una minoranza nazionale, il patrimonio, la nascita, gli handicap, l'età o le tendenze sessuali.

2. Nell'ambito d'applicazione del trattato che istituisce la Comunità europea e del trattato sull'Unione europea è vietata qualsiasi discriminazione fondata sulla cittadinanza, fatte salve le disposizioni particolari contenute nei trattati stessi.

Articolo 22. Parità tra uomini e donne

Devono essere garantite le pari opportunità e la parità di trattamento tra uomini e donne in materia di occupazione e impiego, ivi compresa la parità delle retribuzioni per uno stesso lavoro o per un lavoro di pari valore.

Il principio della parità di trattamento non osta al mantenimento o all'adozione di misure che prevedano vantaggi specifici diretti a facilitare l'esercizio di un'attività professionale da parte del sesso sottorappresentato oppure a evitare o compensare svantaggi nelle carriere professionali.

Articolo 23. Protezione dei minori

1. I minori hanno diritto alla protezione ed alle cure necessarie per il loro benessere. Essi possono esprimere liberamente la propria opinione; questa viene presa in considerazione sulle questioni che li riguardano in funzione della loro età e della loro maturità

2. In tutti gli atti relativi ai minori, siano essi compiuti da autorità pubbliche o da istituzioni private, l'interesse superiore del minore deve essere considerato preminente.

Articolo 24. Inserimento dei disabili

I disabili hanno il diritto di beneficiare di misure intese a garantirne l'autonomia, l'inserimento sociale e professionale e la partecipazione alla vita della comunità

# Articolo nuovo. Tutela ecologica

Cittadini e associazioni hanno diritto ad essere tutori di esseri viventi che non sono soggetti di diritto.

Carta dei diritti fondamentali dell'Unione Europea

# Emendamento della LIDA = Artt. 26, 29, 33, 35

Capo IV. Solidarietà

Articolo 25. Diritto dei lavoratori all'informazione e alla consultazione nell'ambito dell'impresa
Ai lavoratori e ai loro rappresentanti devono essere garantite l'informazione e la consultazione in tempo utile sulle questioni che li riguardano nell'ambito dell'impresa, conformemente al diritto comunitario e alle legislazioni e prassi nazionali.

Articolo 26. Diritto di negoziazione e di azioni collettive

I datori di lavoro e i lavoratori nonché le associazioni per i diritti dell'ambiente e degli animali hanno il diritto di negoziare e di concludere contratti collettivi e di ricorrere, in caso di conflitti di interessi, ad azioni collettive per la difesa dei loro interessi, conformemente al diritto comunitario e alle legislazioni e prassi nazionali.

Articolo 27. Diritto di accesso ai servizi di collocamento

Ogni individuo ha il diritto di accedere ad un servizio di collocamento.

Articolo 28. Tutela in caso di licenziamento ingiustificato

Ogni lavoratore ha il diritto alla tutela contro ogni licenziamento ingiustificato.

Articolo 29. Condizioni di lavoro giuste ed eque

1. Ogni lavoratore ha diritto a condizioni di lavoro sane, sicure e dignitose.
2. Ogni lavoratore ha diritto a una limitazione della durata massima del lavoro e a periodi di riposo giornalieri e settimanali e a ferie annuali retribuite.

3. L'animale che lavora ha diritto a ragionevoli limitazioni di durata e intensità di lavoro, ad un'alimentazione adeguata e al riposo.

Articolo 30. Protezione dei giovani sul luogo di lavoro

Il lavoro minorile è vietato. L'età minima per l'ammissione al lavoro non deve essere inferiore all'età in cui termina la scuola dell'obbligo, fatte salve le norme più favorevoli ai giovani ed eccettuate deroghe limitate.

I giovani ammessi al lavoro devono beneficiare di condizioni di lavoro appropriate alla loro età ed essere protetti contro lo sfruttamento economico o contro ogni lavoro che possa minarne la sicurezza, la salute, lo sviluppo fisico, mentale, morale o sociale o che possa mettere a rischio la loro istruzione.

Articolo 31. Conciliazione della vita familiare e della vita professionale

E' garantita la protezione della famiglia sul piano giuridico, economico e sociale.

Ogni individuo deve poter conciliare vita familiare e vita professionale; ciò comporta in particolare il diritto di essere tutelato contro il licenziamento in occasione di una maternità ed il diritto a un congedo di maternità retribuito e a un congedo parentale dopo la nascita o l'adozione di un figlio.

Articolo 32. Sicurezza sociale e assistenza sociale

L'Unione riconosce e rispetta il diritto di accesso alle prestazioni di sicurezza sociale e ai servizi sociali che assicurano protezione in caso di maternità, malattia, infortunio sul lavoro, dipendenzavecchiaia, oltre che in caso di perdita del posto di lavoro, secondo le modalità stabilite dal diritto comunitario e le legislazioni e prassi nazionali.

2. I lavoratori cittadini di uno Stato membro e residenti in un altro Stato membro e i loro familiari hanno diritto alle stesse prestazioni di sicurezza sociale, agli stessi benefici sociali e allo stesso accesso all'assistenza sanitaria dei cittadini dello Stato in questione.

3. L'Unione riconosce e rispetta il diritto all'assistenza sociale e all'assistenza abitativa volte a garantire un'esistenza dignitosa a chiunque non disponga di risorse sufficienti, secondo le modalità stabilite dal diritto comunitario e le legislazioni e prassi nazionali.

# Articolo 33. Protezione della salute

Ogni individuo ha diritto a vivere in un ambiente in cui si prevengano i fattori nocivi alla salute individuale e collettiva (prevenzione primaria), alla prevenzione sanitaria (prevenzione secondaria) e ad ottenere cure mediche alle condizioni stabilite dalle legislazioni e prassi nazionali

Articolo 34. Accesso ai servizi d'interesse economico generale

L'Unione rispetta l'accesso ai servizi d'interesse economico generale quale previsto dalle legislazioni e prassi nazionali, ai sensi delle disposizioni del trattato che istituisce la Comunità europea, al fine di promuovere la coesione sociale e territoriale dell'Unione.

# Articolo 35. Tutela dell'ambiente

In tutte le politiche dell'Unione sono garantiti dunque la tutela e la salvaguardia di un ambiente di vita di buona qualità ed il miglioramento della qualità dell'ambiente nel rispetto del principio dello sviluppo sostenibile e delle diversità biologiche.

Articolo 36. Protezione dei consumatori

Nelle politiche dell'Unione è garantito un livello elevato di protezione della salute, della sicurezza e degli interessi dei consumatori.

 ex President of the German Federal Republic
 Council of the European Union
 Secretariat of the Convention

5 September, 2000

Dear Mr. Herzog,

We write to you on behalf of the representatives of Catholic women's organizations from 24 countries of Europe and the European members of the World Union of Catholic Women's Organizations (WUCWO), who have just assembled in Prague at a Conference on "Equal opportunities for women and men".

We discussed with great interest the Draft "Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union". We welcome the Charter and we are hopeful that it might serve as the basis of a better understanding of the common values and unalienable fundamental rights which should shape Europe.

Positive aspect: equal opportunities

It is highly positive that equal opportunities and the equal treatment of women and men are explicitly mentioned as fundamental rights in Article 22. Other positive aspects could also be quoted.

WUCWO Secretariat: 18, rue Notre-Dame-des-Champs, 75006 Paris, France
Tel.: +33.1.45442765 • Fax: +33.1.42840480 • E-Mail: WUCWOPARIS@wanadoo.fr
Member of: Conference of International Catholic Organizations; Conference of Non-Governmental Organizations
Consultative Status: ECOSOC (Cat. II) • FAO • UNESCO (Cat. B) • ILO (Special List) • Council of Europe

Negative aspects

We feel it necessary, however, to draw your attention particularly to two shortcomings which need to be amended:

No reference to God

In view of the spiritual and historical roots of Europe and given the significance of the Christian faith in the development of our system of values, we regard as unacceptable that in the Preamble of the standing Draft any explicit reference to God is missing. Whatever the system of values set by the European Community, it would lack its appropriate foundation if it were not related to God. This recognition is reflected in many European Constitutions.

No support for families

Also we worried that in the existing Draft the position of the family is further weakened. The importance of the family for the development of children and for the future of our society is not appreciated and there is no explicit mention of the need of special support for families.

We earnestly ask you, Mr. Herzog, that during the subsequent work on the Charter you ensure that the discussion on the above mentioned issues is reopened and that our concerns are taken into consideration.

Yours sincerely,

On behalf of the World Union of Catholic Women's Organizations - Region Europe

Statement on the Charter of Fundamental Rights by Béla Szombati, Deputy Head of the State Secretariat for Integration of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Hungary

Brussels, 19 June, 2000

Mr Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Hungary welcomes this opportunity to express its opinion on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. We would like to stress the importance of consulting the candidate countries and hope to have further opportunities to exchange views with the members of the Convention as well as the representatives of member states and other candidate countries.

Hungary, like any other democratic country based on the rule of law, pays particular attention to the assertion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

We attach great importance that efficiently functioning institutions ensure the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Europe.

Being a candidate country and imminent member of the European Union, Hungary agrees to strengthening the Union's role in the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, therefore we support the elaboration of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Concerning the status of the Charter, Hungary is ready to accept the document in its form as elaborated and adopted by the Member States, whether as a political declaration or a legally binding document included in the Treaties.

Hungary appreciates the intention of establishing a "catalogue" of rights, including the exploring of several new notions, in the Charter. We would also appreciate the inclusion of provisions for the protection of minority rights into the document, their being part of the Copenhagen criteria for accession to the EU, demonstrating perfectly well the significance of these rights for the Union, its current and future members.

We also deem it necessary to maintain the existing and efficiently functioning systems of protection of human rights and acknowledge the 50-year jurisprudence of the Council of Europe. Our wish is to see institutions interested and active in this field in Europe to complement and assist, not to compete with each other.

To avoid any inconsistency between the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights their respective powers and competencies are to be arranged during the period of the elaboration of the Charter.

As a candidate country, Hungary follows with great interest the ongoing institutional reforms of the European Union, wishing to see the intergovernmental Conference conclude its work by the end of this year as planned. We would of course welcome a political decision in Nice on this Charter if its concept and contents are elaborated and enjoy the support of the Member States, and we would, of course, rather not see highly controversial issues over burdening the work of the Conference to an extent endangering its termination and the entry into force of its decision.

To conclude, may I once again reiterate my country's willingness to participate in consultations on the Charter.

Thank you for your attention.

COMMENTS ON THE DRAFT CHARTER (CONVENT 45)

To the President Mr. Roman HERZOG, to the Vice-Presidents Mr. Guy BRAIBANT, Mr. Gunnar JANSSON, Mr. Inigo MENDES DE VIGO and to the members of the Convention.

Mr President, Messrs Vice-Presidents, Ladies and Gentlemen,

AFEM, which has been among the first NGOs to submit to you concrete proposals<sup>1</sup>, wishes to thank you for your efforts to guarantee fundamental rights and is glad to see some advances in CONVENT 45, particularly in respect of the prohibition of trafficking in human beings (Article 5), the extension to EU citizens of the right to asylum (Article 18), the proclamation that “everyone, man or woman, is equal before the law” (article 20), and certain social rights. However, AFEM allows itself to point out several serious insufficiencies of this draft on fundamental questions, such as equality between women and men, social rights, citizens’ rights and certain general provisions. It thus considers it necessary to recall some of its proposals (the additions and modifications proposed are underlined):

PREAMBLE

- Point 2: « The Union is founded on the indivisible, universal principles of the dignity and equality of men and women, freedom, and solidarity; [...]».

Explanation: Equality between men and women constitutes, according to the EC Treaty [Articles 2 et 3(2)], a fundamental principle, task and objective of the Community. It should thus be proclaimed by the Preamble.

- Point 5: Add: « international law and international agreements to which the Union, the Community or all the Member States are party ».

Explanation: This addition is necessary in order that coherence with Article 51 of the Draft be ensured.

CHAPTER I. DIGNITY

Article 4. Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment and punishment

« No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, such as sexual mutilation, or any other kind of physical or moral violence, including domestic violence».

Explanation: The treatment, which we propose to add and whose victims are mostly women and children, is a major concern of the EU<sup>2</sup>.

CHAPTER II. FREEDOMS

Article 14. Right to education

2. «[...] and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be guaranteed, to the extent that the latter do not contravene the principles and rights recognised by this Charter, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right; in exercising this right parents shall act in the child's best interest». (see A. BENAKI-PSAROUDA, CONTRIB 251, G. PAPADIMITRIOU CONTRIB 97).

Explanation: The duty of parents to respect and demand the respect of fundamental rights, within the framework of the education and teaching of their children, as well as their duty to teach their children these rights are more than obvious and are among the «duties» proclaimed by the Preamble (point 6). Moreover, the guarantee of the child's best interest is required by the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which is ratified by all member States.

Article 18. Right to asylum

Add at the end: «This right belongs also to any person who is unable to freely dispose of him/herself or whose freedom or fundamental rights or physical or psychological or genetic integrity are threatened».

Explanation: Asylum cannot be refused in the above cases (which are not covered by the Geneva Convention and the Protocol of 31.1.1967) without fundamental principles and rights guaranteed by the Charter to everyone (dignity, integrity, solidarity etc.) being infringed.

CHAPTER III. EQUALITY

Article 22. Equality between men and women. Text proposed:

1. “Substantive equality between women and men is ensured in all fields. Any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of sex is prohibited in any field.”

Explanation: Substantive equality between women and men is a fundamental principle of Community law and a fundamental human right, according to well-established ECJ case-law and Articles 2 and 3(2) EC Treaty. The latter provisions make it a task and an objective of the Union to promote this equality in all fields<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> See the impressive and well-documented speech of Commissioner Ms Anna Diamantopoulou to the International Conference “Violence against women: zero tolerance”, Lisbon 4-6, May 2000. See also European Commission, Report 1998 on Equal Opportunities for Women and Men (COM(1999)106 final), Section 4, Report 1999 (COM(2000)123 final), Section 1; EU Annual Report on Human Rights (1999), point 5.12.

<sup>3</sup> See ECJ Case 149/77 Defrenne III [1978] ECR 1509; Case C-270/97 Sievers (10.2.2000). See also EU Annual Report on Human Rights (1999), point 5.12.

A special Article is indispensable and we are glad for that. However, in spite of the fact that several members of the Convention made proposals in the above direction (see CONTRIB 90 and 188 by Mr. BRAIBANT, CONTRIB 72 by Ms KAUFMANN, CONTRIB 252 by Ms BENAKI-PSAROUDA, Amendments 436 by Mr. FAYOT, 434 by Mr. DUFF, 466 by Mr. GNAUCK, 470 by Messrs. EINEM and HOLOUBEK), Article 22 does not guarantee substantive equality in all fields and constitutes a regression in relation to the “acquis communautaire” and even in relation to previous drafts. This provision disregards the above “acquis” and imperatives and is limited to only a part of the equality rights that Community law guarantees.

See the Proposals relating to CONVENT 45, which were submitted by 16 women members of the Convention and by Ms A. BENAKI-PSAROUDA.

2. “With a view to ensuring full equality in practice between women and men, temporary positive measures are indicated, in order to improve, in the first instance, the position of women.”

Explanation: A provision on positive action is indispensable. However, Article 22(2) constitutes a regression in relation to the “acquis communautaire”, and in particular in relation to:

- Articles 2 and 3(2) EC Treaty, which make it a positive obligation for the Union to “promote” equality between women and men in all fields and not only in the field of employment and work.
- Article 141(4) EC Treaty, in conjunction with Declaration No 28 annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam: the 1st sentence of Article 141(4), which specifies the aim of positive action (“With a view to ensuring full equality in practice between women and men”) is omitted by Article 22(2). Furthermore, Declaration No 28 specifies that positive action should «improve, in the first instance, the position of women».

The wording we propose is in accordance with the Community “acquis” and imperatives as well as with the international obligations of member States (article 4(1) UN Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights).

See aforementioned Proposal of 16 women members of the Convention, as complemented by the aforementioned Proposal of Ms BENAKI-PSAROUDA on CONVENT 45.

Article 23. Protection of children

2. “In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions or individuals the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.”

CHAPTER IV. SOLIDARITY

Article 31. Reconciling family and professional life

The right to maternity protection should be guaranteed by a special Article as follows:

Maternity protection

“Every woman, without distinction, has a right to protection of pregnancy and maternity, including the rights to paid maternity leave, not to be refused access to employment and not to be treated unfavourably during this period and when she returns to work, as well as to be guaranteed protection against employment conditions that may harm her and/or her child and against ailments, which have their origin in pregnancy, confinement or breast-feeding. She has also the right to family planning.”

Explanation: The 2nd paragraph of Article 31 constitutes a regression in relation to the Community and international “acquis” (Directives 76/207, 92/85, Articles 137 and 152(1) EC Treaty; ECJ case-law, Article 8 European Social Charter, Article 10 Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights). See CONTRIB 143 by Mr. G. BRAIBANT and aforementioned Proposal of Ms A. BENAKI-PSAROUDA on CONVENT 45.

The right to maternity protection is, according to Community and international law, an autonomous right, which does not belong only to women workers and is not limited to the rights mentioned in Article 31(2). It is an expression not only of Article 137 EC Treaty (protection of workers’ health and safety), but also of Article 152 EC Treaty (high level of human health protection) as well as of the principles of dignity and integrity of the person.

CHAPTER V. CITIZENSHIP

The first Article of this Chapter must proclaim that: “The Union is based on the parity of women and men citizens”.

CHAPTER VI. GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 49. Scope

We do not understand why the expression “within the scope of Union law”, which appeared in CONVENT 34 (article 46 i.f.) and was conform to the “acquis” of the Union, has been replaced, without any justification, by the expression “when they are implementing Union law”, which is restrictive and not conform to this “acquis”, will create dangerous confusion and will affect legal certainty. See the Proposal of Mr. C. EINEM on CONVENT 45.

The expression that has been replaced is constantly used by ECJ case-law. See e.g. the judgments in ERT and Karlsson mentioned in the Explanation of Article 49 (the latter judgment refers to the judgment in Bostock, which contains the expression that has been replaced), as well as those in Demirel (C-12/86), Kremzow (C-299/95), Annibaldi (C-309/96). Moreover, the Explanation of Article 49 is also in favour of the replaced expression.

Article 51. Level of protection.

We do not understand why “Union law”, which appeared in CONVENT 27 (Article H.4) and which ensured the respect of the Community and Union “acquis” in all fields, has been omitted, without any justificaion, the more so as the expression that has been omitted appears in the Preamble (point 5) and in the Explanation of Article 51. This is a serious regression in relation to Community and Union law, which nobody must have wished. Is it a typing error?

LANGUAGE

All expressions and terms used should be gender-neutral or refer to both genders. See CONTRIB 262 by Ms KAUFMANN and the aforementioned Proposal of 16 women members of the Convention on CONVENT 45.

Mr. President, Messrs Vice-Presidents, Ladies and Gentlemen,
AFEM thanks you for your kind attention and wishes you successful completion of your task.

Proposal by the ETWelfare for amending the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU
(version of 28 July 2000)

Article 32 Social Security and Social Assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in particular in the event of maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age and in the event of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Community law and national laws and practices. The services may also be provided by voluntary welfare organisations.
2. [unchanged]
3. [unchanged]

Reasons :

We welcome the inclusion of social rights in the Charter. This refers especially to Article 32 and the entitlement to social security benefits and social services enshrined therein.

But there is no reason why the right to benefit from social services should be linked to certain situations alone and thus limited in scope without any need to do so. Including social rights will guarantee the future of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. For this reason the Charter must be worded in such a way that it allows for possible additions to and developments of Community law and national laws and practices in the field of social rights and access to corresponding social services. This is the only way to avoid any necessity for amending the Charter again and again.

The aforementioned request could be met by choosing an appropriate legal wording that gives entitlement to all social services and highlights the urgency in selected cases by the expression “in particular”.

This should be accompanied by the clarification that social services may be provided by charitable welfare organisations. In principle, this reflects Article 14 of the European Social Charter, which remains the most important legal source for numerous social rights in the Charter of Fundamental Rights anyway. Article 14 stipulates the right to benefit from social services and adds a clarification in the matter. The Social Charter speaks of “voluntary [...] organisations” and this wording should be maintained in conjunction with the expression “welfare” so that the use of this additional word can be understood as an updated version of what the Social Charter says.

Stellungnahme der Wirtschaftskammer Österreich zum Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union (Konvent 45)

Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren!

Die Wirtschaftskammer Österreich teilt zum aktuellen Gesamtentwurf der EU-Grundrechte-Charta folgendes mit:

1. Allgemeine Problembereiche:
  - 1.1. Die Grundrechte-Charta soll sich nach ihrem Konzept und ihren eigenen Bestimmungen über den Anwendungsbereich (Art 49) im Rahmen der gegebenen Kompetenzen der EU bewegen. Diesen Vorgaben und Zielen bleibt der Entwurf jedoch in mancherlei Bereichen nicht treu, was insbesondere die Art 2, 47 und 48 aber auch manche Formulierungen im Kapitel IV (Solidarität) zeigen.
  - 1.2. Da die Arbeiten des Konvents davon getragen sind, rechtliche Formulierungen zu schaffen, scheint jedenfalls die Verbindlichkeit der Charta angestrebt zu werden. Nicht nur in diesem Fall stellt sich jedoch die Frage des Verhältnisses der Grundrechte-Charta zur EMRK. Die textlichen Variationen im Vergleich zur EMRK und die Tatsache, dass in manchen Bereichen (die aber im Einzelnen nicht näher bezeichnet sind) ein höherer und umfassenderer Schutz gewährleistet werden soll, müssen ungeachtet des Art 50 Abs 3 im Hinblick auf die Rechtsprechung und Rechtsentwicklung als sehr problematisch betrachtet werden.
  - 1.3. Im Zusammenhang mit diesen genannten Erwägungen steht auch die zu befürchtende unterschiedliche Rechtsprechung zwischen EGMR und EuGH. Auch das Verhältnis dieser beiden Gerichtshöfe untereinander wird einer eingehenden Klärung bedürfen.

- 1.4. Klärungsbedürftig ist nicht zuletzt auch das Verhältnis der (allenfalls verbindlichen) Grundrechte-Charta zu innerstaatlichen Grundrechten und ihre Einordnung in das österreichische Rechtssystem. Nicht nur ihre Stellung im Stufenbau der Rechtsordnung, sondern auch die Frage welches innerstaatliche (Höchst-)Gericht die in der Grundrechte-Charta verbürgten Rechte zu judizieren haben wird, sind bislang nicht beantwortet.
  - 1.5. Erhebliche Auslegungsschwierigkeiten könnten sich durch die Formulierung des allgemeinen Gesetzesvorbehalts in Art 50 ergeben. Jeweils definierte Einschränkungsvorbehalte der Grundrechte nach dem Vorbild der EMRK würden die Rechtsklarheit fördern.
  - 1.6. Die allgemeine Problematik der Aufnahme sozialer Grundrechte in die Grundrechte-Charta kann auch durch den vorliegenden Entwurf nicht vollständig entschärft werden. Die vorliegenden Formulierungen schließen es vielmehr in manchen Bereichen nicht aus, dass der Rahmen der gegebenen Kompetenzen der EU gesprengt wird; jedenfalls haben soziale Grundrechte stets eine vorgeprägte Tendenz zum Erfordernis vermehrter hoheitlicher Tätigkeit und damit eine Einengung der gesellschaftlichen Freiheit zur Folge. Diese Bedenken werden auch durch die vorgeschlagenen Regelungen über den Anwendungsbereich der Charta (Art 49) nicht zur Gänze beseitigt und betreffen insb auch weite Bereiche des Wirtschaftslebens.
  - 1.7. Das Fehlen von Erläuterungen im aktuellen Gesamtentwurf erschwert die Beurteilung einzelner vorliegender Grundrechte, soweit erwartet werden kann, dass zu einzelnen Detailfragen klärende Feststellungen in entsprechenden Erläuterungen getroffen werden. Es wird daher großer Wert darauf gelegt, dass iS der Aussagen beim informellen Treffen des Konvents vom 17. - 19. Juli 2000 jedenfalls Erläuterungen mit indikativem Charakter ausgearbeitet werden.
2. Zu den Bestimmungen im Einzelnen:

Zu Art 3 (Recht auf Unversehrtheit):

Das Verbot in Abs 2, "den menschlichen Körper und Teile davon zur Erzielung von Gewinnen zu nutzen" bringt weiterhin nicht zum Ausdruck, dass dieses Verbot nicht auf "Produkte" des Körpers, wie etwa Blut, bezogen ist. Zwar betonte der Vorsitzende Jansson beim informellen Treffen des Konvents am 18. und 19. Juni 2000, dass diese "Produkte" des Körpers vom Gewinnerzielungsverbot ausgenommen seien (so etwa die Blutplasma-Industrie), die zitierte Bestimmung lässt dies jedoch nicht eindeutig ableiten. Eine entsprechende Klarstellung, möglichst im Text selbst, jedenfalls aber in den Erläuterungen ist daher unbedingt notwendig.

Zu Art 15 (Berufsfreiheit) und Art 16 (Unternehmerische Freiheit):

Es wird begrüßt, dass auch die "unternehmerische Freiheit" in der Grundrechte-Charta ausdrücklich Erwähnung findet. Die knappe Formulierung ("Die unternehmerische Freiheit wird anerkannt.") scheint jedoch inhaltsleer und wenig aussagekräftig. Sollte eine nähere inhaltliche Umschreibung der "unternehmerischen Freiheit" aus Zeitgründen nicht mehr möglich sein, wird angeregt, die Art 15 und 16 zusammenzufassen. In Art 15 wird nämlich "Beruf" nicht nur als unselbständige Tätigkeit verstanden, sondern umfasst - was insbesondere Abs 2 deutlich macht - auch die selbständige Tätigkeit. Es wäre daher denkbar, Art 15 als "Berufsfreiheit und unternehmerische Freiheit" zu übertiteln und einen eigenen Abs 4 mit dem Wortlaut des vorgeschlagenen Art 16 anzufügen.

Zu Art 21 (Gleichheit und Nichtdiskriminierung):

Das Verständnis der "genetischen Merkmale" sollte in Erläuterungen dargelegt werden.

Zu Art 22 (Gleichheit von Männern und Frauen):

Die Überschrift dieses Art müsste auf ihr Verhältnis zu Art 20 nochmals überdacht werden und könnte etwa lauten "Gleichheit von Männern und Frauen in den Bereichen Arbeit und Beschäftigung".

Zu Art 25 (Recht auf Unterrichtung und Anhörung der Arbeitnehmer im Unternehmen):

Der österreichischen Arbeitsrechtssituation entsprechend wäre es angemessen, dieses Recht nur den "Vertretern der Arbeitnehmer" zukommen zu lassen. Jedenfalls muss sichergestellt sein, dass die in österreichischen Rechtsvorschriften diesbezüglich enthaltenen Regelungen (vgl insbesondere §§ 98, 108 ArbVG) der Erfüllung dieses Rechts Genüge tun.

Zu Art 26 (Recht auf Kollektivverhandlungen und Kollektivmaßnahmen):

Es muss klargestellt werden, dass nicht nur "Arbeitgeber und Arbeitnehmer" das Recht haben, Tarifverträge auszuhandeln und zu schließen, sondern dass von dieser Bestimmung auch deren Interessenvertretungen umfasst sind.

Der letzte Halbsatz dieser Bestimmung "sowie bei Interessenkonflikten kollektive Maßnahmen zur Verteidigung ihrer Interessen zu ergreifen" wird abgelehnt, sofern damit mehr als die Tätigkeiten der Betriebsversammlung gem §§ 41 ff ArbVG angesprochen ist. Gegenstand eines Grundrechts sollte nicht sein, was einen Rechtsbruch - und sei es auch einen kollektiven Rechtsbruch - darstellen könnte. Die Wirtschaftskammer Österreich lehnt die Schaffung eines europarechtlichen Streikrechts nachdrücklich ab.

Zu Art 27 (Recht auf Zugang zu einem Arbeitsvermittlungsdienst):

In den Erläuterungen müsste dargelegt werden, was unter "Zugang zu einem Arbeitsvermittlungsdienst" zu verstehen ist. Jedenfalls kann damit kein Anspruch auf Vermittlung gewährleistet werden.

Zu Art 28 (Schutz bei ungerechtfertigter Entlassung):

Dieser Bestimmung kann nur zugestimmt werden, wenn "Entlassung" in der österreichischen innerstaatlichen Terminologie zu verstehen ist. Ein Schutz vor ungerechtfertigter "Kündigung", der umfassendere Regelungen als den geltenden § 105 ArbVG erfordern würde, darf in dieser grundrechtlichen Gewährleistung nicht enthalten sein.

Hingewiesen sei auf die unterschiedliche Textierung der Überschrift ("Schutz bei ungerechtfertigter Entlassung") und im Text ("Schutz vor ungerechtfertigter Entlassung").

Zu Art 29 (Gerechte und angemessene Arbeitsbedingungen):

Da unserem arbeitsrechtlichen Verständnis der Begriff "würdige Arbeitsbedingungen" unbekannt ist und die Aufnahme von derart unbestimmten Begriffen in die Grundrechte-Charta als sehr problematisch erachtet wird, schlagen wir vor, Abs 1 wie folgt zu formulieren: "Jeder Arbeitnehmer hat das Recht auf gesunde und sichere Arbeitsbedingungen".

Zu Art 30 (Schutz der Jugendlichen am Arbeitsplatz):

Es müsste klargestellt werden, dass das österreichische Mindestlohnsystem und das System der Lehrlingsentschädigungen dem Gebot des Schutzes "vor wirtschaftlicher Ausbeutung" Genüge tut. Andernfalls treten wir für den Entfall dieser Formulierung ein.

Zu Art 31 (Einklang von Familien- und Berufsleben):

Als problematisch wird nach wie vor der 1. Satz des Abs 2 angesehen. Die Problematik könnte dadurch entschärft werden, dass das Wort "insbesondere" im zweiten Satz der Bestimmung entfällt.

Zu Art 34 (Zugang zu Diensten von allgemeinem wirtschaftlichen Interesse):

Abgesehen davon, dass bei einem Leser der Grundrechte-Charta nicht automatisch die Kenntnis des Art 16 EGV vorausgesetzt werden kann und daher die Bedeutung dieser Bestimmung größte Unklarheiten hervorrufen dürfte, ist darauf hinzuweisen, dass Art 16 EGV selbst jedenfalls kein subjektives Recht der EG-Bürger auf Versorgung mit einem Mindeststandard an Leistungen begründet. Er wird vor allem als politische Absichtserklärung und Handlungsaufforderung mit geringen rechtlichen Auswirkungen verstanden (vgl zB Calliess/Ruffert (Hrsg.), Kommentar zu EU-Vertrag und EG-Vertrag, RZ 11 ff zu Art 16). Zumal, wie auch die Diskussion im Konvent gezeigt hat, keine gemeinsame Verfassungstradition in diesem Bereich besteht, die Mitgliedsstaaten vielmehr sehr unterschiedliche Regelungen zu diesen Diensten aufweisen und die Regelung daher erhebliche Rechtsunsicherheit und auch Eingriffe in private Wirtschaftsbereiche mit sich bringen könnte, wird die ersatzlose Streichung dieses Art angeregt.

Zu Art 40 (Recht auf Zugang zu Dokumenten):

In Erläuterungen sollte dargelegt werden, dass dieses Recht auf Zugang zu den Dokumenten des europäischen Parlaments, des Rates und der Kommission auch im Wege des Internets erfüllt werden kann.

Zu Art 49 (Anwendungsbereich):

Auf die allgemeinen Bemerkungen unter Pkt 1.1. wird hingewiesen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Dr. Christoph Leitl

MINORITY RIGHTS GROUP INTERNATIONAL

The European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights and Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

Minority Rights Group International (MRG) is an international non-governmental organisation, which works to secure the rights of ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and acts as an advocate of the rights of minorities worldwide. MRG has consultative status with the UN (ECOSOC). Its International Secretariat is based in London.

With regard to the content of the draft Charter, in the version issued on 28th July 2000, MRG has a number of concerns, both of a structural nature and specifically concerning the rights of ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities.

As you will be aware, the European Parliament has stated that “the future EU Charter of Fundamental Rights must as a matter of course include binding protection of minorities and their languages” (Annual Report on Respect for Human Rights in the EU 1998-99).

MRG is concerned to see that the EUCFR does not mark a regressive step in international standards for the protection and the promotion of minority rights, standards which have in most cases positively evolved globally and at regional level in the past few years.

The following are areas in which we feel that adjustments could be made to the Draft Charter; in each case we have proposed an adapted version, in italics, of the clause in question, or an additional clause.

The rights of minorities

MRG is concerned that the Draft Charter contains virtually no reference to the rights of minorities, either individual or collective. Considering that national, ethnic or linguistic minorities in any country may be in a vulnerable position and are often subject to prejudice and discrimination, both from sectors of the public or the State, MRG feels that it is important to place positive obligations upon States and the Union to actively protect the rights of minorities. We also feel that it is important to guarantee the right of individuals to exercise rights in community, as has long been recognised within the international legal framework. We therefore propose that the following texts (adapted to suit the context of the EU) from the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious or Linguistic Minorities (Art. 4 (2), (3) and (4), and Art. 3 (1)) be incorporated into the Draft Charter as a new article, in between Articles 22 and 23, under the heading “Protection of Minorities”:

Protection of Minorities

1. The Union and Member States shall enable persons belonging to minorities to express their characteristics and to enjoy and develop their culture, language, religion, traditions and customs, except where specific practices are in violation of national law and contrary to international standards.

2. The Union and Member States should take appropriate measures so that, wherever possible, persons belonging to minorities may have adequate opportunities to learn their mother tongue or to have instruction through the medium of their mother tongue.

3. The Union and Member States should, where appropriate, take measures in the field of education, in order to encourage knowledge of the history, traditions, language and culture of the minorities existing within the territory concerned. Persons belonging to minorities should have adequate opportunities to gain knowledge of the society in which they live.

4. Persons belonging to minorities may exercise their rights, including those set forth in the present Charter, individually as well as in community with other members of their group, without any discrimination.

MRG also proposes that an ‘affirmative action’ clause, similar to that relating to gender in Article 22 of the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights, be included with regard to minorities:

5. The principle of equal treatment shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in order to facilitate the enjoyment by persons belonging to minorities of the rights enshrined in this Charter.

Level of Protection

While welcoming the drafting of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights in principle, MRG is concerned that the Charter, when finally agreed, will be a ‘lowest common denominator’ document. As such, it may set a new benchmark in international human rights protection at a lower level than that currently enshrined in existing instruments. For example, Article 51 of the draft mentions that the Charter cannot be used to lower existing international standards to which all member states are party. There is a danger then that Article 51 could be used to reduce the level of protection offered by, for example, the Framework Convention on National Minorities, which has not been ratified by all States, in the States which have ratified it. MRG proposes that the wording of article 51 be changed as follows, to include agreements or treaties to which member States are Parties:

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognized, in their respective fields of application, by international law and standards to which the Union, the Community or Member States are Parties, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States’ constitutions.

The right to non-discrimination and third country nationals

The right to non-discrimination is a cornerstone in the protection of all human rights, not just minority rights. MRG therefore expresses a reservation about draft Article 21, which fails to outlaw discrimination on the grounds of nationality.

We therefore propose that Art. 21 (1) be amended as follows:

Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, nationality, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.

MRG trusts that Members of the Convention drafting the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights will take note of its concerns.

JEF position on the Draft of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Still A Long Way to Go on the Front of the Rights of the European Citizens

At the beginning of this year, the Young European Federalists (JEF) welcomed enthusiastically the initiative of the establishment of a Charter of the Fundamental Rights of the European citizens. JEF stressed that this initiative, aside being a crucial and novel achievement, was the first step on the way to a real European Constitution. Moreover, the establishment of the Charter could have marked for JEF the start of a new Europe focussed on the citizens and moving forward to a real Political Union.

The Convention, as a result of seven months of intensive work, made public the Draft of "Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union" on 28 July. JEF welcomes this Draft of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and stresses the following points:

1. The Draft provides the existing jurisdiction on the fundamental rights both of the European Union's institutions and that of its Member States with a clearer orientation. It also tackles the issues of modern fundamental rights. JEF considers work done on this document highly important, especially keeping in mind intensive work over a period of seven months and modest support from the Council of the European Union. This Draft is a further evidence of the strength and effectiveness of the "new democratic method" that the Convention implemented in its distinctly open and transparent proceedings. This feature is manifest in the fact that the Convention involved the representatives of the citizens in the European Parliament and in the national parliaments, on the foot of parity with the representatives of the Member States, as well as civil society organisations.

2. However, the Draft is still very far from being sufficient to mark the start of a new Union focussed on the European citizens and not only on the economic dimension of the Union. This document does not yet provide the Union with a vision for the new challenges facing European democracy, economy, society and culture in the new millennium. It is not sufficient to win back the lost trust and passion of the European citizens for the European Union.
3. Moreover, it is highly regrettable that despite the extensive part dedicated to political and civil rights and citizens' rights, the Draft Charter ignores that the "European citizenship" is unfortunately condemned to remain an empty word as long as the citizens are deprived of the fundamental right of citizenship: the power to decide the Government and the policies of the Union. The historic fundamental principle that states that "sovereignty lies in the people" is today not implemented in the European Union. Therefore, the Union - even with the Charter - is not yet a democracy.

JEF comments also on the following important specific provisions of the Draft Charter:

1. JEF states that if the Charter were integrated in the Treaties, it should not be granted a separate preamble, which would mainly echo existing Treaty provisions or provisions of the Charter text itself. Instead, JEF proposes to delete the preamble completely or avoid at least superfluous provisions.
2. JEF insists on the provisions on European political parties to be strengthened, as these political parties can play an important role in the democratisation of the European Union and the creation of real political life on the European level.
3. JEF welcomes the important new right of good administration.
4. JEF stresses the importance of the idea of subsidiarity, but the meaning of this principle in the context of the Draft Charter is unambiguous.
5. JEF wants to see the role of the European Parliament in deciding on limitations of the Charter rights laid down more clearly than it is done in the Draft Charter.
6. JEF would like to see the right to an alternative from a military service to be included expressively in the Charter.

JEF also believes that the two principal problems concerning the Charter are still the question of its legally binding character for the European Union's institutions and the Member States, and its role in paving a way to establishing a real European Constitution :

1. A Charter of Fundamental Rights which does not give the European citizens the right to claim for the respect of their fundamental rights in courts will widen the gap between the citizens and the European Union and would be a betrayal of expectations raised with the establishment of the Charter. Likewise, a Charter that applies only to the institutions of the Union but not to the Member States would result in disillusion of the citizens. Therefore JEF still presses for the inclusion of the Charter in the Treaties as integral part of the Treaties, binding for the European Union's institutions and Member States in applying EU legislation. The Treaties should be modified so as to allow the citizens of the Union access to the European Court of Justice in the issues tackled by the Charter.

2. The Charter can unfold all its potential only if the Union is given a real Government and democratic institutions, i.e. the capacity to pursue effectively the values and goals that the Charter will solemnly enshrine. The Charter should become an important part of a European federal Constitution, which should be the result of the next round of reforms starting after the Nice Treaty.

JEF urges the European Council to welcome the Draft of Charter of Fundamental Rights but at the same time to decide to continue work on the Draft and launch a public debate on the issue among the European citizens.

In particular, JEF calls upon the European Council in Nice to launch a real “constituent initiative” and therefore mandate an inter-institutional Convention similar to the Fundamental Rights Convention, and not an Intergovernmental Conference, to prepare a comprehensive proposal for a European federal Constitution including a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European citizens.

Projet de Résolution
sur la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne
(à l'abri de l'article 5, alinéa 5 de la Loi. 20/94)

La Commission Parlementaire des Affaires Européennes, en réunion conjointe avec les Commissions des Droits, Libertés et Garanties et de la Parité, Egalité des Chances et Famille, sans porter préjudice à une appréciation ultérieure du projet final de la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux élaboré par Convention, et à l'abri de l'article 5, alinéa 5 de la Loi 20/94, présente le projet de résolution suivant:

Considérant que l'Assemblée de la République a participé activement, par le biais des deux députés qui la représentent, à la Convention chargée d'élaborer le projet de la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne;

Considérant que, par l'initiative des Commissions des Affaires Européennes et des Droits, Libertés et Garanties, l'Assemblée de la République a promu un débat ouvert à toute la société, avec une vaste participation d'organisations économiques, sociales et culturelles, alimenté par les avis de la communauté scientifique et dont le point culminant sera une grande séance publique qui se tiendra le 21 septembre à Coimbra;

Considérant que la Convention discutera, à partir du 11 septembre, le projet qui correspond à l'accord du Praesidium en se basant sur les résultats des débats réalisés et que la décision finale sera, en principe, prise le 25 septembre de manière à permettre la présentation du Projet de Charte au Conseil Européen de Biarritz;

1. Prennent note des contributions, propositions et observations générales de leurs représentants à la Convention et approuvent le sens fondamental de cette intervention;
2. Croient que la tendance à conditionner les travaux de la Convention au calendrier de la Présidence française doit être contrariée car cela porte préjudice à un travail approfondi dans le délai établi par les Conseils Européens de Colonne et de Tempere qui ne terminera qu'à la fin de cette année.
3. Se déclarent pour une Charte des Droits Fondamentaux qui puisse être approuvée par les Gouvernements et les Parlementaires des Etats membres comme instrument d'engagement, ayant une valeur de droit originaire, dont les normes sont garanties moyennant une tutelle juridictionnelle.
4. Considèrent que la fonction principale de la Charte devra être de donner aux droits fondamentaux, découlants de l'ordre juridique communautaire dans le respect du principe de l'indivisibilité et de l'importance des droits civils et politiques et des droits économiques, sociaux et culturels - la dignité formelle et matérielle correspondante, densifiant et actualisant, par le biais de normes, la protection des droits fondamentaux consacrée à l'article 6 du Traité de l'UE, par référence aux principes généraux de droit définis à la lumière de la Convention Européenne de Sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales (CEDH) et des traditions constitutionnelles communes aux Etats membres, bien comme de la Charte Sociale Européenne et du droit international en général. Donc, la Charte renforcera la légitimité politique et morale d'une organisation singulière telle que l'Union Européenne qui, par attribution des Traités constitutifs, exerce déjà de vastes pouvoirs à caractère politique qui se répercutent sur la sphère juridique des personnes.

5. Considèrent que la Charte devrait également définir les devoirs et les responsabilités des citoyens face à l'Union Européenne.
6. Défendent que cette révision des Traités viabilise l'adhésion de l'Union à la Convention Européenne de Sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales;
7. Manifestent leur engagement afin de poursuivre et d'approfondir le débat sur la Charte - expérience innovante avec des leçons importantes - appelant à l'intervention active des citoyens et de leurs organisations représentatives.

CONGRES DES POUVOIRS LOCAUX ET REGIONAUX DE L'EUROPE

Référence à rappeler : CPLRE/as

Le Président

Strasbourg, le 15 septembre 2000

Monsieur le Président,

Le Congrès des pouvoirs locaux et régionaux du Conseil de l'Europe, organe représentant les collectivités territoriales des 41 Etats membres de l'Organisation, suit avec beaucoup d'intérêt les activités préparatoires de la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne.

Compte tenu de cet intérêt, je souhaite soumettre à votre attention, au nom du Congrès, quelques observations concernant le projet de Charte afin que la Convention que vous présidez puisse en tenir compte dans la phase conclusive de ses travaux.

Le Congrès souhaite en particulier que la partie du projet de Charte concernant les droits politiques puisse inclure le droit à l'autonomie locale et régionale, le droit de vote des citoyens concernés aux élections aux niveaux local et régional ainsi que le principe de subsidiarité.

La prise en compte de ces droits par la future Charte a d'ailleurs déjà fait l'objet de recommandations du Comité des Régions de l'Union Européenne.

Le souhait du Congrès est fondé sur les principes contenus dans la Charte européenne de l'autonomie locale du Conseil de l'Europe, qui définit également le principe de subsidiarité. D'ailleurs, ce principe a été clairement établi dans la Recommandation 19 (1995) du Comité des Ministres du Conseil de l'Europe.

Par ailleurs, le Congrès espère qu'également les principes contenus dans d'autres importants traités adoptés au sein du Conseil de l'Europe dans ce domaine - tels que la Charte européenne des langues régionales ou minoritaires - puissent inspirer les travaux de la Convention.

Le Secrétariat Général du Conseil de l'Europe - et plus particulièrement le Secrétariat du Congrès - se tiennent à la disposition de votre Administration pour tout renseignement complémentaire à cet égard (M. Rinaldo Locatelli, Chef du Secrétariat du Congrès, tél. +33 3 88 41 22 39, fax +33 3 88 41 37 47 ou 27 51, email : rinaldo.locatelli@coe.int).

Espérant vivement que la Convention sera en mesure de tenir compte des souhaits du Congrès, je vous prie d'agréer, Monsieur le Président, l'expression de ma considération très distinguée.

Strasbourg, 20 September 2000

Dear Chairman,

It has come to my attention that the report on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, adopted on 7 September 2000 by the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (Rapporteur: Mr Magnusson), has been circulated to members of the Convention.

The Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights will revise its report in the light of the discussions to take place in Brussels on Monday and Tuesday next and then present a revised version to the Parliamentary Assembly which will debate this report, but also the opinions of the Political Affairs Committee (Rapporteur: Mr Clerfayt) and of the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee (Rapporteur: Mr Evin), on Friday 29 September 2000.

At this juncture, and without prejudice to the outcome of the debate next week, I would like to emphasise that in its Resolution 1210 on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union adopted following the debate it held in January 2000 (cf. copy enclosed), the Parliamentary Assembly invited the European Union, inter alia, "to make sure that when referring to social rights the revised European Social Charter of the Council of Europe will be taken into account".

I would be grateful if you would kindly bring this letter to the attention of the Convention.

Yours sincerely,

Tom Cox

Resolution 1210 (2000)

Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union

1. The Assembly considers it necessary to make a number of observations following the decision by the EU European Council in Cologne, on 3 and 4 June, 1999 to draw up a charter of fundamental rights of the European Union, to be submitted to the European Council in December 2000.
2. At this stage, without knowing the charter's content, the Assembly wishes to bring a number of matters to the attention of those responsible for drafting this instrument, that is to say the "body" established to that end in Tampere, and may have occasion to make observations on the substance of the charter in due course.
3. The European institutions, first the Communities and then the European Union, have for some time past shown an interest in human rights, in particular the European Convention on Human Rights, and have mentioned those rights as the foundation of democracy in their successive treaties. The European Parliament and the Commission have on a number of occasions come out in favour of the Union's accession to the Convention. The Parliamentary Assembly has itself welcomed this proposal. However, it has not yet been translated into action, following an opinion by the Court of Justice in Luxembourg on whether accession to the European Convention on Human Rights was compatible with the Community treaties, in which the Court found that, as Community law stood at the time, the Community had no competence to accede.
4. At a time when it is reinforcing its powers, the Union wishes to make the importance of human rights more visible to its citizens, as stated in the decision taken in Cologne, and to bring these currently scattered rights together in a single text. The Assembly welcomes this initiative as a sign of a resolve to strengthen further the cause of human rights in Europe.
5. The Assembly nonetheless considers that, in adopting a charter of fundamental rights, the achievements of the European Convention on Human Rights and the body of its case-law established over almost fifty years, which has had far-reaching effects on the law of the member states of the Council of Europe, and therefore of the European Union, cannot be disregarded. It further draws attention to the risks of having two sets of fundamental rights which would weaken the European Court of Human Rights.
6. In this connection, the Assembly recalls the communication of 19 November 1990 issued by the Commission of the European Communities on accession to the European Convention on Human Rights, in which it stated that accession did not rule out the option of a set of fundamental rights specific to the Community. The opposite inference can therefore be made, namely that adoption of a charter does not rule out accession to the European Convention on Human Rights.
7. The European Union and the Council of Europe undeniably guarantee a number of rights which are not contained in the European Convention on Human Rights, particularly economic and social rights, and the charter should therefore include these rights, adding to them others now accepted as fundamental rights. The Assembly draws attention to the other instruments for the protection of human rights on which the charter could draw, in particular the revised European Social Charter, which guarantees economic and social rights and is an instrument to which the Assembly has invited the Union to accede. It recalls that, following the Treaty of Amsterdam, a reference to the Social Charter of the Council of Europe was included in the Treaty on European Union.

8. The Assembly refers to the European Union report, prepared in February 1999 by an expert group chaired by Professor Simitis, which recommends that Article 2 to Article 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights be incorporated into Community law, together with the rights secured in the protocols to the Convention. The inclusion of rights guaranteed by the Convention would be a means of avoiding having two different sets of rights in Europe, thus creating two categories of citizens enjoying different rights.

9. The Assembly believes that there can be no discrimination in the application of fundamental rights and that everyone coming under the jurisdiction of a Council of Europe member state must enjoy the protection of such rights, as provided for in Article 1 and Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

10. In conclusion, in the light of the above, the Assembly invites the European Union:

- i. to incorporate the rights guaranteed in the European Convention on Human Rights and its protocols into the charter of fundamental rights and to do its utmost to safeguard the consistency of the protection of human rights in Europe and to avoid diverging interpretations of those rights;
- ii. to pronounce itself in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights of the Council of Europe and to make the necessary amendments to the Community treaties;
- iii. to make sure that when referring to social rights the revised European Social Charter of the Council of Europe will be taken into account.

Essential content of rights and freedoms

Dear President of the Convention Prof. Herzog, Dear Members,

With great interest I have studied the latest draft of a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (CHARTE 4470/00), hereinafter "the Draft Charter", and I deem it appropriate to make one comment concerning draft Art. 51 (1).

I submit to omit the phrase "and respect the essential content of those rights and freedoms" completely from this article.

Reasons:

In contrast to corresponding articles in earlier drafts, notably Art. 50 (1) of CHARTE 4422/00 and Art. 47 (1) (45 (1)) of CHARTE SN 3340/00, and, however, in lieu with Art. 47 cl. 2 of CHARTE 4383, Art. 47 cl. 2 of CHARTE 4316/00, Art. H.2 (2) cl. 2 of CHARTE 4235/00 and Art. Y of CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1 the doctrine of the prohibition of negating the "essential content of a basic right and freedom" has found its way back into the Draft Charter.

We all know that this doctrine draws on Art. 19 (2) of the German Basic Law (hereinafter "the GG") with its so-called "Wesensgehaltsgarantie". However, this principle has not served any fruitful purpose in the history of German constitutional jurisprudence. To my knowledge, the German Federal Constitutional Court (hereinafter "the BVerfG"), has struck down law or declared unconstitutional other state conduct, inter alia, on the grounds of a violation of Art. 19 (2) GG only on one early occasion (Decisions of the German Federal Constitutional Court [hereinafter BVerfGE] Vol. 22, p. 180, 220; cf. BVerfGE 2, 266, 285; 7, 377, 411; 15, 126, 144; 16, 194, 201; 30, 47, 53; 58, 300, 348; 61, 82, 113; 80, 367, 373), however, it has attempted to circumvent a definite answer and largely solved appropriate cases by applying the principle of proportionality. After all, neither the BVerfG nor German scholars have managed to give this clause substantial meaning. In case one considers the essential content of a right as what is left of the respective right after it has been limited in accordance with the principle of proportionality the provision is superfluous. If one tries to determine the essential content of each right independently one has great difficulties to do so. Both observations apply to the opinion that Art. 19 (2) GG entrenches the inviolable core of dignity of each right. The right to human dignity is already protected elsewhere in the GG (Art. (1) GG) and its actual scope of protection still gives rise to disputes. In any event, the GG allows for a deprivation of life (see Art. 2 (2) cl. 3 GG) and the affected person feels challenged to question what is left from the right to life if s/he is deprived of it. Or must one follow an objective approach? That means if a person's life is taken away the right to life itself still serves to protect others.

The German experience also caused our South African friends to omit the doctrine of the essential content of a right in South Africa's so-called Final Constitution, Act 108 of 1996 as amended, whereas it had been provided for in Section 33 (1) (b) of the so-called Interim Constitution, Act 200 of 1993 as amended. The South African Constitutional Assembly, the body entrusted with drafting the Republic's Final Constitution, in full consideration of German constitutional law in general and Art. 19 (2) GG in particular, followed the approach of the South African Constitutional Court, which, from the outset, had been hesitant to apply this concept and had been troubled to canvass on a thorough evaluation (see for example<sup>1</sup> S v Makwanyane and another 1995 (6) BCLR 665 (CC) paras 132- 134 [per Chaskalson P], 167 [per Ackermann J], 175 [per Didcott J], 193, 195 [per Kentridge AJ], 283, 298 [per Mahomed J], 313 [per Mokgoro J] and 343 [per O'Regan J]); Coetzee v Government of the Republic of South Africa and others 1995 (10)

<sup>1</sup> The decisions of the Constitutional Court of South Africa are available on the homepage of the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, R.S.A., under <http://www.law.wits.ac.za/lawrepal.html>.

BCLR 1382 (CC) paras 20 [per Didcott J] and 47-8 [per Sachs J]; Ferreira and Levin NO and others 1996 (1) BCLR 1 (CC) paras 127 and 153 [per Ackermann J] and S v Mbatha 1996 (3) BCLR 293 (CC) para 27 [per Langa J].

Most strikingly, criticism was expressed by the late Didcott J in the decision of the Azanian Peoples Organization (AZAPO) and others v President of the Republic of South Africa and others 1996 (8) BCLR 1015 (CC). His legacy certainly warrants quotation (ibid., at para 66): “[...] But for one problem posed by section 33(1) [of the Interim Constitution], which strikes me as wellnigh intractable ... Negating the essential content of a constitutional right is, however, a concept that I have never understood. Nor can I fathom how one applies it to a host of imaginable situations. Baffled as I am by both conundrums, I would have been at a loss to hold that the denial of the right in question either had or had not negated its essential content. It is therefore with a sigh of relief that I find myself free to say, as I end this judgment, that my reliance on sub-section (2) of section 33 [of the Interim Constitution] dispenses altogether with the need for me to bother about sub-section (1).”

With all due respect, for these reasons, I believe, the Convent is invited to avoid similar difficulties by omitting the abovementioned provision from Art. 51 (1) of the Draft Charter.

Thank you.

Sincerely Yours

Nikolaus Schultz<sup>2</sup>

POSITION OF THE UEPC ON THE DRAFT EUROPEAN CHARTER ON FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS
(CHARTE 4470/00 - CONVENT 47)

The UEPC has examined the text of the draft European Charter of fundamental Rights and in particular article 17 relating to the right to ownership of property.

It wishes to draw attention to the universality of the right to ownership of property affirmed in the Universal Declaration on Human Rights proclaimed 10th December 1948 and included in article 1 of the Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights and in the national laws of the majority of the member states of the European Union.

Furthermore it wishes to draw attention to the fact that the right to ownership of property is at the basis of democratic societies and that the strong social aspirations to property ownership of the vast majority of the members of the Union are a driving force in economic activity and social progress.

The UEPC affirms that any infringement of this right and its use must be based on a legal measure and will legally require a fair and pre-paid compensation. It estimates that any abusive taxation must be regarded as an infringement of the right to ownership of property.

September 2000

UEPC (European Union of House Builders and Developers) represents more than 30,000 developers or firms involved in house building and development which are members of federations from the 15 constituent countries. Either directly or indirectly the activities of the house builders and developers affect 10% of the gross national product and of the total European employment. Together they annually build and develop around 700.000 new homes and several millions m<sup>2</sup> of offices and shopping centres.

AFEM: ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES DE L' EUROPE MÉRIDIONALE ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN OF SOUTHERN EUROPE

COMMENTS ON CONVENT 47

To the President Mr. Roman HERZOG, to the Vice-Presidents Mr. Guy BRAIBANT, Mr. Gunnar JANSSON, Mr. Inigo MENDES DE VIGO and to the members of the Convention.

Mr President, Messrs Vice-Presidents, Ladies and Gentlemen members of the Convention, afem welcomes and rejoices at the advances realised in CONVENT 47, and in particular rejoices to see that, at last, gender equality is ensured in all areas (Article 23). AFEM thanks all those who have contributed thereto, and more particularly the 16 women members of the Convention whose amendment has been adopted, the members who had opened the way to this important development, and in particular Mr. G. Braibant, Ms S. Kaufmann, Ms A.Benaki-Psarouda, Ms C.Lalumière, Messrs. B.Fayot, A.Duff, J.Gnauck, C.Einem, M. Holoubek, those members who have supported these amendments, as well as Mr. J.-P. Jacqué whose contribution to the work of the Convention is widely known and appreciated.

Explanation of Article 23: We propose the following explanation, which clarifies the nature and purpose of “positive action”, for the benefit of national courts more particularly:

“This Article takes into account the Community “acquis” and imperatives relating to gender equality, and more particularly Articles 2 et 3§2 ECTreaty, which impose on the Union as a task and an objective to promote this equality in all areas. The second paragraph concerns the so-called “positive action” or “positive measures”, which, according to the Treaty and ECJ case law (in particular judgment of 28 March 2000, C-158/97, Badeck), as well as according to the Convention on the elimination of discrimination against women, ratified by all member States, do not constitute discrimination or derogations to the principle of gender equality, but means which are necessary for achieving real and effective gender equality. Article 141§4 ECTreaty should also be recalled, as well as Declaration No 28 annexed to the Treaty which specifies that these measures “in the first instance aim at improving the situation of women”.

Explanation of Article 3. In order to clarify the 1st paragraph and remind that sexual mutilation is practiced even on our territory, as it is shown by cases before courts (which, of course, show only the tip of the iceberg), add: “The 1st paragraph aims at prohibiting any form of physical or mental violence, including sexual mutilation.”

Explanation of Article 14. Add: «It is obvious that the parents’ convictions are respected in so far as they do not conflict with the principles and rights recognised by this Charter and that parents should always act in the child’s best interest».

Article 24. The rights of the child.

2. “In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions or individuals the child’s best interests must be a primary consideration.”

Explanation: The necessity of this addition is so obvious that it does not need any explanation.

THE DUTY TO SAGEGUARD THE «ACQUIS COMMUNAUTAIRE»

AFEM realises the big difficulty of the task entrusted to the Convention and the necessity of compromise in order to reach a complete text. It welcomes the originality of the incorporation of social right in the draft. However, there can be no compromise on the «acquis communautaire», the more so as it is a fundamental objective of the Union «to maintain in full and build on» this acquis (article 2 Traité UE). Examples:

Article 32. Family and professional life

Paragraph 2 constitutes a regression in relation to the acquis communautaire. Proposal:

«2. Men and women, without discrimination on the ground of sex, have a right to reconcile family and working life.»

Explanation: This provision repeats the 5th Consideration of Council Resolution of 29.7. 2000 on the balanced participation of women and men of women and men in family and working life (OJ C218/5 of 31.7.2000). This right is much larger than the tights to maternity protection and parental leave, as it results from the Resolution.

«3. Every woman has the right to pregnancy and maternity protection, including the rights not to be treated unfavourably on the ground of these situations in respect of access to and conditions of employment, to paid maternity leave, to protection against conditions of employment that may harm her and/or her child and against ailments which have their source in pregnancy, confinement or breast-feeding. She has also the right to family planning.»

Explanation: This is an autonomous right recognised and protcted by binding norms (Directives 92/85, 76/207, articles 137 and 152§1 EC; ECJ case law). See CONTRIB 143 by Mr. Braibant and Proposal by Ms BENAki-PSAROUDA on CONVENT 47. See also Article 8 European Social Charter, Article 10 Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. This protection aims at guaranteeing not only reconciliation of family and working life, but also the physical and mental health of the mother and the child.

«4. Every father and mother has the right to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child and to the maintenance of rights relating to employment during this leave.»

Explanation: This is also an autonomous right, recognised and protected by binding norms (Directives 96/34, 76/207, ECJ case law).

Article 50. Scope

Why has the standard expression of ECJ case law “in the field of application”<sup>1</sup> been replaced by the restrictive expression “implementing”?

<sup>1</sup> See e.g. ERT, mentioned in the explanation; 24.3. 1994, C-2/92, Bostock, [1994] ECR. I-955; 29.5.1997, C-299/95, Kremzow, [1995] ECR I-2629; 18.12.1997, C-309/96, Annibaldi, [1997] ECR I-7493.

It is an “acquis” that member States have the duty to respect fundamental rights not only when they implement community or Union law, but also when they act within the field of application of this right, i.e. in the fields of Community and Union jurisdiction. A typical example of the latter situation is to be found in the case ERT mentioned in the explanation. The expression used in CONVENT 47 will prejudice legal certainty. See also Mr. EINEM’s Proposal on convent 45.

Article 52. Level of protection.

Why has “Union law”, which appeared in CONVENT 27 (Article H.4) and which ensured the respect of the “acquis” been deleted? Point 5 of the Preamble is insufficient, since it refers only to the Treaties, omitting secondary and unwritten (case-law) Community law, which are important sources of fundamental rights. In any event, the Preamble cannot fill the gaps of the Charter provisions. This constitutes a serious regression, which cannot have been wished by anybody. Is it a typing error?

LANGUAGE. AFEM rejoices at the considerable advances in respect of the language of the draft, but wishes to recall that the use of neutral expressions or expressions referring to both genders should be ensured in all languages.

Mr. President, Messrs Vice-Presidents, Ladies and Gentlemen members of the Convention, AFEM thanks you for your attention and for your efforts to guarantee fundamental rights and wishes you successful completion of your task..

OPINION

"Towards an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights"

---

On 25 February 1999 the Economic and Social Committee, acting under Rule 23(3) of its Rules of Procedure, decided to draw up an opinion on:

"Towards an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights".

The Section for Employment, Social Affairs and Citizenship, which was responsible for preparing the Committee's work on the subject, adopted its opinion on 25 July 2000. The rapporteur was Mrs Sigmund and the co-rapporteur was Mr Briesch.

At its 375th plenary session held on 20 and 21 September 2000 (meeting of 20 September), the Economic and Social Committee adopted the following opinion by 122 votes to 19, with nine abstentions.

1. Introduction

At the European Council held in Cologne on 3 and 4 June 1999, it was decided to draw up an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. In its conclusions, the Council justified this by the need "to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens".

The European Council of Cologne felt that "this Charter should

1. contain the fundamental rights and freedoms, as well as the basic procedural rights guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms" and
2. "... also include the fundamental rights that pertain only to the Union's citizens"
3. and finally that "account should ... be taken of economic and social rights as contained in the European Social Charter and the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers ..., insofar as they do not merely establish objectives for action by the Union."

The European Council also decided that this Charter should be drawn up by "a body composed of representatives of the Heads of State and Government and of the President of the Commission as well as of members of the European Parliament and national parliaments".

1.2 The European Council in Tampere held on 15 and 16 October 1999 laid down the definitive composition of the body and its working methods. The European Council called for the working methods to be based on the principle of consensus, authorising the chairman to forward the draft to the European Council only on condition that the "draft Charter ... can eventually be subscribed to by all the parties".

1.3 Both the German and the Finnish presidencies emphasised repeatedly that this Charter of Fundamental Rights should also be an instrument that enables Europe's citizens to be more clearly involved in Europe and makes them more aware of their rights. The Committee naturally welcomes the practice of civil society organisations being consulted by the drafting body, which has now been named a Convention. As the European institution whose members are called upon in the Treaty to represent the interests of Europe's citizens, the Committee thinks it should have been involved to a greater extent<sup>1</sup>.

1.4 The tasks of the Convention are defined by the mandates of Cologne and Tampere, four points being of particular importance:

- The Convention is not an intergovernmental conference within the meaning of the EU Treaty.
- This means that it is not authorised to change the remit of the European Union.
- Its task is to draw up a draft Charter of Fundamental Rights within the terms of reference of the Union. When drawing up the Charter it must therefore bear in mind that it will be applied both in the framework of the European Union Treaty and in the framework of the Treaties establishing the European Communities. In other words, the Charter must also apply to Title V (CFSP) and Title VI (JHA) of the European Union Treaty. The ESC sees this comprehensive application of the Charter as very important because not only the EC Treaty affects citizens' interests with regard to their freedom and equality.
- The Charter of Fundamental Rights is thus addressed to the institutions of the EU and not to the Member States in the context of their own powers. But the Member States are of course bound by the Charter when they apply, implement or transpose Community law.

1.5 Whether or not the Charter should be legally binding was not made clear by the European Council in Cologne. The conclusions state only that "will propose to the European Parliament and the Commission that, together with the Council, they should solemnly proclaim on the basis of the draft document a European Charter of Fundamental Rights. It will then have to be considered whether and, if so, how the Charter should be integrated into the treaties."

1.5.1 The chairman of the Convention, Roman Herzog, made it clear that the Convention would draw up the Charter on the assumption that it will be legally binding. Since the Spinelli draft, the European Parliament advocated such a binding document and it was even more explicit on this point in its resolution of 16 March where it said that its endorsement of the Charter would be dependent on such a charter being legally binding.

1.6 As far as the content of the Charter of Fundamental Rights is concerned, the European Council in Cologne set only minimum standards, though it went explicitly beyond the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) in its mandate. In his introductory address to the Convention, Roman Herzog said that it was time to stipulate that the obligations of the European Union towards its citizens must not be any less rigorous than those recognised by the Member States under their own constitutional law.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Article 257 of the EC Treaty: "The Committee shall consist of representatives of the various categories of economic and social activity, in particular, representatives of producers, farmers, carriers, workers, dealers, craftsmen, professional occupations and representatives of the general public."

1.6.1 The "breakdown" of the list of fundamental rights to be drawn up by the Convention is based on the consensus on three key individual rights Europe-wide (human dignity, self-determination and equality) on the one hand and on the principle of indivisibility of fundamental rights on the other. The draft Charter is divided into:

- dignity
- freedoms
- equality
- solidarity
- citizenship
- justice
- general provisions.<sup>1</sup>

2. General comments

2.1 The process of European integration was launched by Robert Schuman 50 years ago as a peace initiative; at first this naturally spawned mainly economic measures, but later a social dimension developed. The European Union is also described today as "an area of freedom, security and justice", centred on people or citizens. In this connection, the drawing-up of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights is a milestone in the European integration process. It formalises the pact founding an original and new political entity, and is also an expression of an identity based on free will, cooperation, democracy and non-violence. Individuals with the same rights and duties will develop a feeling of belonging, a common identity. If, moreover, civil society is also involved as much as possible in drafting such a catalogue of rights, this contact with grassroots opinion will also help to ensure that individuals do not perceive such legal provisions as being imposed from above, with penalties applied for non-compliance, but that they accept the need to respect them as a personal duty.

2.2 A Charter of Fundamental Rights based on ethics, moral standards and solidarity does not merely codify rights and duties, it also represents a common set of values. It thus supports the European Union as it moves from being a "Community of law" to a "Community of values" within which a European identity also has a chance to develop. In this way, the Charter can help ensure that Union citizenship is no longer perceived only in an abstract sense as the sum of all national citizenships, but is felt to provide practical "added value". The Charter also implies that every citizen should exercise his or her rights in a spirit of responsibility within the framework of organised civil society based on dialogue and mutual respect for rights and freedoms.

3. Specific comments

3.1 Content of the Charter

As a matter of principle, the Committee considers that civil and political rights, on the one hand, and fundamental social, economic and cultural rights, on the other hand, cannot be dealt with in isolation from each other. The common understanding in Europe is that fundamental rights are indivisible, related and interdependent; they may be the right to be defended, the right to be protected or entitlements. The Committee believes at all events that in a modern charter of fundamental rights it would be inconceivable to omit social, economic and cultural rights and that this would contradict the Cologne mandate.

3.1.2 However, the brief of the Convention for drawing up the Charter precludes any altering of the current division of responsibilities between the European Communities or the Union and the Member States.

3.1.3 For another thing, the affirmation of fundamental social rights in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights does not prejudice the identity of the issuer of the act - whether European Union institution or State authority - against which claims for enjoyment of a right or respect of a principle may be lodged. The inclusion of social rights and principles in the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights - in accordance with the Cologne mandate - does not in any way invest the European Community or the European Union with responsibilities which it did not already hold. It simply signifies that acts issued by the EU institutions or State acts adopted within the scope of Community law must :

- respect the social rights set out in the Charter;
- not constitute measures which would lessen the degree to which principles have already been put into effect;
- and in particular respect the requirement for non-discrimination, particularly with regard to the implementation of social rights.

3.1.4 The Committee warns that people's expectations will be disappointed if they are given a Charter of Fundamental Rights that cannot be enforced and which they would therefore have to see as pure rhetoric. However, the declaration that a right is justiciable, under the conditions suggested above, does not in any way presuppose at which level - Community or State - the right to benefit from that right may be invoked by the persons who enjoy it. In particular, where the Community and the Member States have rival powers, these powers must be exercised with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity (Article 5 TEC), without the adoption of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights creating an exception to this principle.

3.2 Legal nature of the Charter of Fundamental Rights: such a charter can only be fully effective if it is clearly formulated and if procedures exist for applying it. The Committee believes that for political and legal reasons the Charter should be incorporated into the EU Treaty subject to the following conditions:

- in accordance with the Cologne mandate, the Charter may not change the Community's remit;

- the distinction must be maintained between directly applicable rights and rights that can be invoked by individuals, on the one hand, and programmatic rights on the other, in order to preserve the legal nature of existing competences<sup>1</sup>;
- it must therefore be made clear that certain principles require the adoption of implementing measures.

It will depend very much on the final content of the Charter, which must be consistent with the Cologne mandate, the Charter or parts of it, and if so which parts, are to be incorporated into the Treaty. The Charter must be more than a solemn declaration; it must constitute a genuine political, social and civic commitment.

3.2.1 The announcement of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights raised expectations and hopes; these must not be disappointed. People in Europe will better understand and accept a "Citizens' Europe" if they know that, within that Europe, they have enforceable rights, and that duties also exist with which they have to comply. Apart from its legal significance, therefore, the Charter is also highly relevant in political and cultural terms.

3.2.2 A binding Charter of Fundamental Rights adds a further dimension to the European Union as "an area of freedom, security and justice" in that the Union is formally committed to a clear "Community of values". Such a formal commitment is all the more significant against the backdrop of forthcoming enlargement and in the context of globalisation.

3.3.3 Application of the Charter

3.3.1 The Committee sees another possibility as far as applying the Charter is concerned, namely that those fundamental rights which the Convention agrees can be integrated become legally binding as part of the EU Treaty (cf. Article 6). The Council could then take measures under Article 7 against a Member State that seriously violates the principles listed in Article 6 (1). A ruling by the European Court of Justice would not be required in such cases. A binding procedural provision in the form of a monitoring system could be established to integrate the remaining rights. Such an approach is not incompatible with the principle of indivisibility of fundamental rights, since the Committee believes that the process of defining and revising fundamental rights at European level must anyway remain open-ended in order to allow for relevant developments. This applies for example to "new" fundamental rights (in gene technology, bioethics, data protection, etc.), which in some cases are already covered in the EU Treaties (e.g. right to the protection of personal data).

3.3.2 The Committee therefore feels it would be vital to provide for an open-ended revision procedure for the future processing of the catalogue of fundamental rights. This procedure would exist alongside the integration procedure ("monitoring" system), as described in point 3.3.1. It would make sense to give the Convention the task of mapping out such an integration and revision procedure for submission to the Council. The revision procedure could also provide for evaluation programmes to be carried out at specific intervals.

3.3.3 Since it has not yet been finally decided how the Charter of Fundamental Rights is to be applied, the Committee cannot at the moment give its views on the issue of effective legal protection. This would involve discussion of any need for additional legal redress options (e.g. legal redress in respect of fundamental rights, action in the general interest, class action, and the right to express an opinion). The Committee reserves the right to present an additional opinion on this matter at the appropriate point.

3.4 The Charter and civil society organisations

3.4.1 The development of fundamental rights reflects changing social, economic and scientific trends. Hence, the Committee also expressly welcomes the fact that the Convention proposal includes so-called "new" fundamental rights and goes beyond the wording of the ECHR, which would not have been the case had the Union simply signed the ECHR, as has been proposed on many occasions. The European Court of Justice has also pointed out that ratifying the ECHR would require revision of the EU Treaty.

3.4.2 In this context and with reference to the Cologne mandate, the Committee particularly welcomes the fact that the Convention has included in the Charter the concept of human dignity, which is not yet in the ECHR. In so doing it is not just following the complex approach adopted in the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, but is also giving a signal that the Committee considers to be imperative, i.e. that as well as having a legal function the Charter should provide a shared scale of values for the EU.

3.4.3 For the emergence of civil society structures in particular it is fundamentally important that as well as establishing joint objectives, basic existing values are recognised as worthy of protection and adoption in a spirit of dialogue and responsibility by civil society players.

3.4.4 The Committee believes that the existing Charter concept therefore presents a highly appropriate framework, in terms of its legal philosophy and legal order, for the development of civil society organisations.

3.4.5 In 1996, the Comité des Sages report entitled For a Europe of civic and social rights<sup>1</sup> stressed that a Europe close to its citizens required that a "wide spectrum" of expertise (political, economic and social) to be involved in the European Union project.

The fact that the fifth paragraph of the preamble of Convent 47 refers to the Social Charters adopted by the Community and the Council of Europe as well as the ECHR is to be welcomed in this context.

3.4.6 Representatives of civil society organisations were involved on a very informal, ad hoc basis in drawing up the Charter of Fundamental Rights. Their opinions - some of which were extremely constructive - lacked any coordination, with the result that both clarity and potential synergy suffered. In the interests of developing a European "model of democracy", civil society organisations must be included in this process - both formally and at an institutional level. It must be emphasised that the basic democratic challenge is to reconcile unity and diversity. Among the institutions, the ESC represents civil society organisations at European level. Its members are in direct and constant touch with civil society organisations<sup>1</sup>, and are thus able to provide added value by bringing their expertise to bear in a way that is wholly consistent with participatory democracy. The Committee comprises representatives of the various economic and social interest groups in civil society and should therefore be formally accorded advisory status in line with its remit - in such an integration and revision procedure.

Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Position of German business and industry

In their first position (March 2000), the German business community welcomed the EU Charter of fundamental rights as a recognition of a shared European system of values and as a step towards a Europe of Citizens.

After decades of the European Court of Justice guarantees a standard of protection which does not take second place behind the provisions of the German Constitution ('Grundgesetz'). Nevertheless, the German business community unreservedly supports the goal of further strengthening the idea of integration in the European Union through greater transparency and a clear commitment among the European bodies to an EU-wide standard of fundamental rights.

The drafting of the Charter of fundamental rights is one of the most important legislative initiatives for many years. The Charter will be one of the cornerstones of the European Union. In addition, even as a mere declaration by the Member States, it will be binding in law because, as a shared view, it will be used by the European Court of Justice as a yardstick for its future jurisprudence.

For that reason, the draft Charter should not be assessed against the same criteria that apply for European secondary law. Rather, great care must be taken to ensure that, with all the necessary openness of a constitutional text and expression of the will of the creators of the Charter, it won't be possible to reach interpretations which could substantially alter the traditional balance of freedoms and civic obligations.

A. General comments

1. Beneficiaries of the Charter

Point 7 of the preamble states that each “person” is guaranteed the rights and freedoms set out thereafter. This raises the question about the beneficiaries of the Charter.

In the version currently available, the draft differentiates at various points between “citizens of the Union”, “nationals of third countries” and “persons” (e.g. in article 15). All the articles should be checked again carefully to establish who exactly should benefit from the protection of the Charter. Similarly, point 7 of the preamble should be made more explicit.

It still needs to be clarified whether legal persons also enjoy the protection of the Charter. Only article 40 explicitly refers to legal persons as beneficiaries of the Charter. Yet, this must also apply for those fundamental rights which are applicable to legal persons by virtue of their substance. An example of this is freedom of expression in article 11.

The same applies for article 13, freedom of research. Companies which carry out research must be able to fall back on this fundamental right. Lastly, at least the right to property (article 17) and the right to good administration should also be mentioned. Appeals to the bodies and institutions of the European Union are made not only by natural persons but also precisely by legal persons, so that they must also be eligible for the protection of fundamental rights.

Hence, the beneficiaries of the Charter should be expressly defined in the preamble.

2. Limitations

Most fundamental rights are not guaranteed without limitation in the constitutions of the Member States. The Charter also makes provisions for limitations: first a general limitation applicable to all fundamental rights in article 50 and second a partial limitation for individual fundamental rights, as for instance in article 9 (right to marry) and in article 17 (right to property). In addition, article 51 sets a lower limit: fundamental rights may not be restricted to such an extent that they fall below the level of protection provided by the European Convention of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR).

The German Constitution maintains that at least one fundamental right – human dignity – may not in any way be restricted by state intervention, a fundamental right which also underlies the immutability guarantee of article 79.3 of the German Constitution.

However, article 50 of the present draft creates the possibility of allowing the protection of the Charter to be subordinated to “objectives of general interest” or “legitimate interests in a democratic society”. In practice, that means that fundamental rights are in the hands of the state, which determines what these objectives and interests will be. Such a sweeping right to interfere, which has no counterpart in either the German constitution or in ECHR, is a striking weakness of the Charter which may also be unhelpful for gaining citizen acceptance.

3. Extension of competences

German business and industry welcomes the fact that the Charter neither establishes “any new power or task for the Community or the Union” nor modifies “powers and tasks defined by the Treaties”, as explicitly stipulated in article 49. According to the draft, the principle of subsidiarity should by all means be taken into account in the application of the Charter. Compliance with this principle must be a decisive element for policy-making and application of law in a European Union which in future could be enlarged to include up to thirty Member States.

However, the present draft also makes provision for rights which could be used to justify claims which go far beyond the present competences of the EU/EC. These include the fundamental right of collective bargaining and collective action formulated in article 26. Article 137 of the EC Treaty excludes legislative competence for the EU in these areas. The danger cannot be ruled out that, with the Charter, even more competences will ultimately be transferred to the EU with the inclusion of a series of other vaguely worded articles. Hence, the present draft is not consistent with the provisions of article 49.

4. Horizontal effects

Also unclear is the question of horizontal effects (e.g. applicability between employers and employees) in a whole series of articles in the present draft. Although, according to article 49, the Charter is binding only upon the institutions and bodies of the EU and the Member States when applying Community law, it cannot be ruled out that the European Court of Justice, as an EU institution, may also apply the Charter to private legal relationships, e.g. work relationships. Clarity is urgently needed on this point.

B. Individual articles

By taking over individual articles of ECHR word for word, the authors of the Charter have failed to create a simplified Charter of fundamental rights which is comprehensible to every EU citizen. In many cases, the wording could be more precise and easier to understand.

The structure and balance of rights contained in the Charter should also be re-examined. Furthermore, some of the provisions at the end of the Charter ought to be at the beginning because of their fundamental importance. These include the whole of chapter V, citizenship. Citizenship should be placed before the rights linked to the theme of work (chapter IV, solidarity) since EU citizens define themselves as such in the first place through their citizenship rights.

It is equally important to place EU citizens' freedom of movement and residence (article 43) earlier in the text, and mention it in chapter II – freedoms – in order to emphasise the importance of this right.

Article 3 – Right to the integrity of the person

Article 3.2 third indent places an unrestricted prohibition on “making the human body and its parts a source of financial gain”. Under this expansive wording, the marketing of many pharmaceuticals and also the patenting of human biological material could be affected. Thus, this wording goes well beyond the Bioethics Convention and the Biotechnology Patent Directive.

The note on article 3 explains that the prohibition is included in the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine and that the Charter does not wish to depart from this provision. Article 21 of the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine specifies that only the human body and its parts “as such” may not be used as a source of financial gain. Article 3 should not go further than this provision.

Article 8 – Protection of personal data

Every person should have the right to the protection of personal data concerning him. These data may only be “processed” under certain conditions. The type of data processing referred to here remains open. This cannot cover all types of data processing. In that case, even such things as record cards or private deeds would be included. This can only refer to electronic data processing, as is the case in the EU Directive on Data Protection. This should be made clear. In addition, with a view to self-determination regarding information, the fundamental right should be extended to make it possible to have personal data deleted. The level at which the “independent authority” is to be located also needs to be clarified.

Article 16 – Freedom to conduct a business

Business and industry appreciates the fact that freedom to conduct a business is included in the Charter as a separate right and does not merely have to be deduced from other fundamental rights. However, the wording raises doubts as to whether a fundamental right is genuinely guaranteed here. Rather, all that is recognised is the freedom to conduct a business, as stated in the title, without any further elaboration. However, this is a long way from being a positive guarantee of this freedom, which business and industry expressly endorses. This needs improvement.

Chapter IV – Solidarity: general comments

Social fundamental rights, too, should primarily provide the right of protection, and under no circumstances the entitlement of an individual to a specific social benefit.

In this context, one area that is in particular need of clarification is the possibility of individual fundamental rights being applicable between private parties (horizontal effect). On the basis of the draft as it currently stands, it cannot be ruled out that the European Court of Justice will also apply the Charter to private legal relationships, e.g. work relationships, even though this should not be possible by virtue of article 49.

Some articles comprise provisions or rights similar to goals and principles of the state which, while generally acknowledged, should not be given this status since this will contribute to a downgrading of the notion of fundamental rights (e.g. article 32 – social security and social assistance and article 33 – health care). Whether and how the bodies of the European Union and the Member States can live up to these guarantees depends on individual economic performance. Not every social achievement of the EU Member States can or should be raised to the quality of an inalienable right which can continue to exist independently of the economic performance of the Member States.

Furthermore, chapter IV contains rights for whose application the EU has no competence. This is in contradiction with article 49 which rules out any extension of competences. The impression cannot be avoided that extensions of competences could be introduced through the back door here. An example is article 26 which contains the right of collective bargaining and action also at EU level. EU legislative competence in this area is ruled out in article 137 of the EC Treaty.

Lastly, the Charter contains rights which, although generally accepted as political goals, are wrongly given the status of fundamental rights. This results in inflation and subsequent devaluation of the concept of fundamental rights (e.g. article 24 – integration of persons with disabilities, article 25 – workers' rights to information and consultation within the undertaking, article 26 – right of collective action and bargaining, article 28 – protection in the event of unjustified dismissal, article 29 – fair and just working conditions).

In addition, the formulation of such general principles as fundamental rights means that the differences between the legislation of individual Member States (e.g. article 15 – freedom to choose an occupation/working conditions for nationals of third countries) are not taken into account. If the Convention were to insist on including this article, the Charter would have to be supplemented with an explicit reference to the applicability of national legislation.

Article 21 – Equality and non-discrimination

Discrimination is unequal treatment which is not objectively justified. It is right that it should be prohibited. Alongside other types of discrimination set out in article 21 is unequal treatment on the ground of “property” which is open to a wide range of interpretations. In the event of article 21 becoming applicable to relations between third parties, its application could be extended to include private legal relationships (horizontal effect). The scope of this passage should be carefully rethought. On this point, article 14 of ECHR is more precise since it states that the rights are guaranteed, inter alia, without distinction of property, which is right and self-evident.

Article 25 – Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Article 25 postulates a fundamental right to worker information and consultation. This right is generally accepted in EU Member States and is also enshrined in article 137.2 of the EC Treaty. However, aside from the question of whether a classical fundamental right can be derived from this aspect, the wording chosen is too far-reaching and opens up the way for rights to have secondary effects.

Article 28 – Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

This article completely fails to take account of different national protection mechanisms in civil and labour law. Its application could lead to the introduction of arrangements regardless of the size of the undertaking. This would place start-ups and smaller businesses in particular at a disadvantage. Accordingly, article 28 should be worded as follows: “Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with the applicable national law”.

Article 29 – Fair and just working conditions

Article 29 stipulates the right of every worker “to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity”. The question of how the concept of “dignity” is to be understood at this point remains open and is an invitation to a wide range of interpretations. Since the Charter early on places particular emphasis on protection of human dignity, it is sufficient to take the wording that has already been discussed: “Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health and safety”.

Article 34 – Access to services of general economic interest

Against the background of the recent debate on services of general economic interest, the provisions of article 34 are also questionable. This article, which expressly guarantees “access to services of general interest” in the form of a fundamental right, could undermine efforts to achieve greater liberalisation of service and infrastructure markets. There is no definition of the services to which this fundamental right refers, nor is any account taken of the consumer’s justified interest in receiving these services as cost-effectively as possible through good economic performance and competition. Article 34 is clearly a political statement and not a classical fundamental right for citizens of the EU.

Article 49 – Scope

According to article 49, the Charter - with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity - is addressed exclusively to the institutions and bodies of the EU and to the Member States only when they are engaged in implementing Community law. Business and industry expressly welcomes this objective. Experience in the past has shown that the concept of subsidiarity can be implemented only with difficulty even in article 5 of the EC Treaty. Even greater attention will have to be paid to this concept if the applicability of national or European catalogues of fundamental rights is involved.

Hence, the Charter of fundamental rights should be seen as an opportunity to define and delimit the concept of subsidiarity in such a precise manner that it can be a guideline for the actions of European bodies. The present draft does not achieve this.

Article 52 – Prohibition of abuse of rights

Article 52 does not help to make the Charter transparent for and comprehensible to the citizen. When can it be possible to interpret anything in the Charter as implying the right to destroy rights of freedom through deliberate acts? It cannot be the case that this article can only be understood by reference to material underlying article 17 ECHR if the aim of moving closer to the citizen and transparency is to be achieved.

Mr. Roman Herzog,
President,
Convention on Human Rights, Council Secretariat,
rue de la Loi 175,
1048 Bruxelles

Dear Mr. President,

Various working groups of the Church and Society Commission of the Conference of European Churches have examined the latest drafts of the EU Charter on Fundamental Rights and, although our Executive Committee has not yet had the chance to examine the results of these discussions, I am sending you the following comments as the Convention is about to hold what will probably be its last meeting before the European Council meets in Biarritz next month. This letter follows on from the statement which I forwarded to you on 18 May 2000 and which appears on the Convention web site. The references to specific articles relate to the numbering in the document Charter 47.

I would first of all like to congratulate the Convention on the achievement of a considerable amount of work which will, I am sure, be of great importance to people in Member States of the European Union. It is particularly important that a text exists which brings together a range of rights relating to politics, economics, the social and environmental and cultural dimensions in one document. It is an important expression of the search to express common values on which the process of European integration is built and will continue.

May I also say that participants in our working groups welcomed the various references to religion which appear in the current text both the important reference in the Preamble to the Acultural, humanist and religious inheritance@ which give inspiration to the Union and the more specific references to freedom of religion (article 10), education in accordance with the religious convictions of parents (article 14) and respect for religious diversity (article 22). I would, however, want to make some more specific comments on some of these and some other articles later.

It seems important that the Convention has taken up the idea of a preamble, which our Commission supported in its submission of May 2000. It gives scope for a wider public discussion on the objectives of European integration in coming years and will be a valuable aid to that debate which is necessary if people are to identify with the European integration process. I believe that many of us would also, however, have welcomed the use of the word Apeace@ in among the values mentioned in the Preamble.

The Preamble is also helpful in the technical way in which it gives prominence to the horizontal clauses of the Charter at an early stage. Given though that the Charter comprises a variety of rights, it might be useful to a wider understanding, especially in European countries beyond the European Union, if the Preamble made explicit reference to defining the civil rights of citizens of the European Union so that it is clear and explicit that this is not an attempt to provide a different standard of fundamental rights in one part of Europe.

Turning to specific articles, I would want to say that while it is good that the main wording of article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights on freedom of thought, conscience and religion has been taken up in preference to the truncated version of earlier drafts, there is disappointment that the corporate dimension of religious freedom has not been expressly addressed as our earlier submission requested. A statement that AThe right of freedom of religion includes the right of churches and religious communities to organise and administer their own affairs according to the laws of Member States@ would have been helpful or, if this was felt not totally to reflect the precise situation in all Member States AThe right of freedom of religion includes the rights of churches and religious communities according to the laws of Member States@.

The draft Charter now includes recognition of the right to conscientious objection (article 10(2)). The Conference of European Churches has long supported the right of conscientious objection to military service and, if this is what is intended by this addition, it is very welcome and a specific mention of military service would be welcomed. If, however, it is meant to be something wider, questions have been raised as to where the limits to recognising conscientious objection lie and to what extent, if the right was recognised within national laws regarding its implementation, it differs from freedom of conscience.

There is also concern about the first part of article 13. On theological grounds, churches value creativity and the search for truth. There is however a problem about the potential licence resulting from such matters being Aunrestrained@ and it is not clear how far the limitations provisions of article 51(1) would deal with this.

On the question of discrimination (article 21), there is concern that, whereas article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights relates to the fact that the rights and freedoms granted by that Convention are to be enjoyed without discrimination and article 13 of the European Community Treaty empowers but does not oblige the European Community to take measures to combat discrimination, article 21 is a sweeping provision which, so far as religious discrimination is concerned, could bring the anti-discrimination principle into conflict with religious freedom. It has, therefore, a potentially different effect from the two sources from which it is drawn.

Migration into the Member States and the prospect of the adhesion of new members of the European Union mean that ethnic and national minorities will be an important component of the European Union in the future. The Council of Europe has done substantial work towards defining rights of national minorities in its Framework Convention. In this respect, there is no reference to minorities in the draft Charter and only the reference to the Union respecting Acultural, religious and linguistic diversity@ which can, of course, serve as a starting point for further development of an effective minorities policy. Nevertheless, extra strength could be given if the article had the words Aand seek to maintain@ after the word Arespect@.

The Conference of European Churches thanks the Convention for the continued attention which it gives to voices from civil society and will follow with great attention the future development of the draft Charter.

Yours sincerely

Sehr geehrter Herr Präsident Prof. Dr. Herzog !
Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren !

Namens der Evangelischen Kirche A.u.H.B. in Österreich erlaubt sich der Evangelische Oberkirchenrat A.u.H.B., Ihnen folgende Anliegen nochmals zur Kenntnis zu bringen, mit dem höflichen Ersuchen und der dringenden Bitte, diese bei der Fertigstellung der Grundrechts-Charta der Europäischen Union allenfalls zu berücksichtigen:

1. Nach den uns bislang bekannten Entwürfen der Grundrechts-Charta der Europäischen Union enthält der Artikel 10 der Charta der Grundrechte der EU (Gedanken-, Gewissens- und Religionsfreiheit) entgegen den offiziellen Stellungnahmen der Konferenz Europäischer Kirchen und der Römisch-katholischen Kommission der Bischofskonferenzen der Europäischen Gemeinschaften – sohin aller christlichen Kirchen Europas – k e i n e Bestimmung, wonach die Kirchen und Religionsgesellschaften ihre inneren (eigenen) Angelegenheiten gemäß dem Recht der Mitgliedsstaaten selbst regeln können. Die Aufnahme einer solchen Bestimmung ist zur Wahrung des Staatskirchenrechtssystems in jedem Mitgliedsstaat und zur Wahrung der inneren Autonomie der Kirchen und Religionsgesellschaften unbedingt notwendig, weil andernfalls das vorrangige Gemeinschaftsrecht, vor allem Arbeitsrecht, in die inneren Belange der Kirchen und Religionsgemeinschaften eingreift. Unserer Meinung nach sollte daher der Artikel 10 der Charta um den folgenden Satz ergänzt werden:

„Das Recht auf Religionsfreiheit beinhaltet das Recht der Kirchen und Religionsgesellschaften, sich selbst zu organisieren und ihre eigenen, inneren Angelegenheiten in Übereinstimmung mit dem Recht der Mitgliedsstaaten selbst zu regeln.“

2. In der Charta der Grundrechte der EU fehlen in den bisherigen Bestimmungen grundrechtliche Bestimmungen zum Schutz von Volksgruppen und Minderheiten (ethnische, religiöse und sprachliche) in Richtung deren Rechte, wie Gebrauch der Muttersprache und dergleichen, obwohl solche Bestimmungen gemäß dem Staatsvertrag von St. Germain und dem Staatsvertrag von Wien zum Verfassungs-rechtsbestand gehören und szt. von Frankreich und Großbritannien begehrt worden waren. Nicht zuletzt im Zusammenhang mit den Beitrittsverhandlungen mittel- und osteuropäischer Staaten sollte daher folgende Grundrechtsbestimmung in die Charta der Grundrechte aufgenommen werden:

Der Evangelischen Kirche in Österreich als einer Minderheit, die mehr als hundert Jahre der Gegenreformation erleiden mußte, erscheinen diese Schutzbestimmungen für Minderheiten unverzichtbar wichtig.

3. Bislang war in den Entwürfen einer Grundrechts-Charta der EU das Recht auf Wehrdienst-(Kriegsdienst-)verweigerung aus Gewissensgründen bei Leistung eines Ersatzdienstes (Zivildienstes) nicht vorgesehen. Nach Mitteilung des österreichischen Regierungsbeauftragten, Univ.Prof. Dr. Heinrich Neisser, soll eine solche Bestimmung noch in die Grundrechtscharta der Europäischen Union aufgenommen werden. Die Aufnahme einer solchen Bestimmung wird ausdrücklich begrüßt.

Wir danken Ihnen, sehr geehrter Herr Präsident, für Ihre Bemühungen betreffend der Erarbeitung einer Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union und wünschen Ihnen für Ihre weitere Tätigkeit, aber auch Ihr persönliches Leben Gottes reichen Segen.

Mit vorzüglicher Hochachtung

Lettre ouverte aux membres de la Convention chargée de l'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux dans l'Union européenne.

Bruxelles le 23 septembre 2000

Monsieur le Président, Mesdames et Messieurs,

Au nom de la Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social, je tiens à vous remercier de nous avoir consultés à plusieurs reprises lors de l'élaboration de la Charte et de l'attention que vous avez accordée à nos préoccupations. Comme vous le savez, les organisations membres de la Plate-forme sociale ont joint leur forces à celles de la Confédération européenne des Syndicats depuis plusieurs années et mènent campagne dans les quinze Etats membres de l'Union européenne pour l'obtention d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux juridiquement contraignante et garantissant un niveau élevé de protection des droits, notamment économiques et sociaux, pour tous.

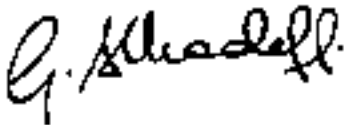

La Plate-forme sociale observe que le projet Convent 47 en date du 14 septembre a apporté plusieurs améliorations au texte précédent, mais considère que des droits essentiels (qui se trouvent pour la plupart dans la Charte sociale européenne révisée) devraient y être ajoutés. Il s'agit :

- du droit de consultation des ONG au niveau de l'Union européenne (à ajouter à l'article 12 sur la liberté de réunion et d'association)
- du droit au travail (à ajouter à l'article 15 sur la liberté professionnelle)
- du droit des personnes âgées à une existence décente et indépendante, et à une pleine participation à la vie publique, sociale et culturelle (à ajouter dans un nouvel article)
- du droit au logement et du droit à un revenu minimum permettant de vivre dans la dignité, ainsi que d'une référence à la lutte contre la pauvreté et l'exclusion sociale (à ajouter à l'article 33 sur la sécurité sociale et aide sociale)

- de l'introduction d'une référence explicite dans l'article 52 (Niveau de protection) aux Chartes sociales du Conseil de l'Europe.

J'ai toute confiance en le fait que vous prendrez ces remarques en considération afin de répondre à l'attente des millions de personnes qui, en Europe, sont membres de nos associations et demandent à l'Union de placer les droits fondamentaux au coeur de sa construction.

Je vous prie d'agréer, Monsieur le Président, Mesdames, Messieurs, l'assurance de ma haute considération.

Giampiero Alhadeff
Président de la Plate-forme sociale

La Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social regroupe 30 organisations non-gouvernementales, fédérations ou réseaux européens qui travaillent dans le secteur social et défendent les intérêts d'un large éventail de la société civile européenne. On y retrouve notamment des organisations de femmes, de personnes âgées, de personnes handicapées, sans emploi, de migrants, de personnes en situation de pauvreté et sans abri, d'homosexuels et de lesbiennes, de jeunes, d'enfants et de familles. Les organisations membres incluent aussi des ONG travaillant sur des questions sociales, telles que la justice sociale, la santé et le racisme.

Observations sur le préambule de la Charte des droits fondamentaux

Les membres de CAFECS réunis ce jour saluent les progrès du texte de la Charte des droits fondamentaux entre la rédaction du Convent 45 et celle du Convent 47. Toutefois ils souhaitent attirer l'attention des membres de la Convention sur la rédaction du deuxième paragraphe du préambule de la Charte.

Il est positif que la question des fondements des valeurs européennes soit abordée dans le préambule. Mais la formulation du Convent 47, qui met en parallèle les mots « humanistes » et « religieux », peut porter à malentendu, ne permettant pas de situer suffisamment qu'il s'agit d'une mention des sources « laïques » ou « philosophiques » d'une part, et « religieuses » d'autre part, mais toutes « humanistes ».

CAFECS propose plusieurs rédactions possibles :

- 1 – Puisant dans la diversité de ses sources humanistes, l'Union se fonde .....
- 2 – Puisant dans la diversité de ses sources spirituelles, l'Union se fonde .....
- 3 – Riche d'un humanisme pluriel issu de ses différentes traditions spirituelles, l'Union se fonde.....

Würzburg, den 25.09.2000

Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren,

da ich mir nicht im klaren darüber bin, ob mein an Bundespräsident a.D. Roman Herzog gerichtetes Schreiben vom 3. August dieses Jahres Sie erreicht hat, wende ich mich heute direkt an Sie. Bezugnehmend auf den Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union vom 21. September dieses Jahres (CHARTE 4470/1/00), erlauben Sie mir eine kurze Stellungnahme:

Art. 38 des Entwurfs hat den folgenden Wortlaut:

„Aktives und passives Wahlrecht bei den Wahlen zum Europäischen Parlament

(1) Die Unionsbürgerinnen und Unionsbürger besitzen in dem Mitgliedstaat, in dem sie ihren Wohnsitz haben, das aktive und passive Wahlrecht bei den Wahlen zum Europäischen Parlament, wobei für sie dieselben Bedingungen gelten wie für die Angehörigen des betreffenden Mitgliedstaats.

(2) Die Mitglieder des Europäischen Parlaments werden in allgemeiner, unmittelbarer, freier und geheimer Wahl gewählt.“

Diese Regelung würde, sollte sie in dieser Form verwirklicht werden, zu Konsequenzen führen, die m.E. so nicht beabsichtigt sein können. Denn der Wortlaut des Absatzes 1 erweckt den Eindruck, als solle das Wahlrecht zum Europäischen Parlament nur den in den Mitgliedstaaten der EU ansässigen Unionsbürgern zustehen, nicht aber denjenigen Unionsbürgern, die in einem Staat außerhalb der Europäischen Union leben.

Ein solches Ergebnis stünde jedoch bereits im Widerspruch zur derzeitigen einfachen Rechtslage: Nicht nur nach dem deutschen Europawahlgesetz (i.d.F. vom 8. März 1994, BGBl. I S. 419), auch nach den Wahlrechtsbestimmungen nahezu aller übrigen EG-Mitgliedstaaten steht das Wahlrecht zum Europäischen Parlament neben den im Inland ansässigen Unionsbürgern auch den eigenen Staatsangehörigen zu, die zum Zeitpunkt der Wahl im Ausland leben, und zwar unabhängig davon, ob es sich dabei um europäisches oder außereuropäisches Ausland handelt (vgl. Haag/Bieber, in: von der Groeben/Thiesing/Ehlermann [Hrsg.], Kommentar zum EU-/EG-Vertrag, Band 4, 5. Aufl., Baden-Baden 1997, Art. 138, Anhang Rn. 44).

Um die dargestellten Probleme zu vermeiden, bieten sich aus meiner Sicht zwei Möglichkeiten an:

1. die Ergänzung des Absatzes 1 um einen Satz 2, wonach das Wahlrecht für Unionsbürger mit Wohnsitz im Ausland außerhalb der Europäischen Union vorbehalten bzw. unberührt bleibt. Vorbilder hierfür finden sich z.B. in Art. 54 Abs. 1 der niederländischen Verfassung oder Art. 50 Abs. 2 der norwegischen Verfassung.

2. die Ergänzung des Absatzes 1 um einen Satz 2, der das Wahlrecht für Unionsbürger mit Wohnsitz im Ausland außerhalb der Europäischen Union garantiert. Eine vergleichbare Regelung enthält z.B. Art. 68 Abs. 5 Satz 2 der spanischen Verfassung, indem dort die „Ausübung des Wahlrechts durch Spanier, die sich außerhalb des spanischen Hoheitsgebietes befinden, [...] vom Gesetz anerkannt und vom Staat ermöglicht“ wird. Ob eine derartige „Garantieklausel“ auf europäischer Ebene konsensfähig wäre, erscheint zwar fraglich, angesichts der nahezu allseitigen Verbreitung des Wahlrechts für Auslandsstaatsbürger aber auch nicht ausgeschlossen. Insbesondere wäre in diesem Zusammenhang zu berücksichtigen, daß Auslandsstaatsbürger zwar nach der Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte aus der EMRK bzw. ihren Zusatzprotokollen keinen Anspruch auf Teilnahme an Parlamentswahlen ihres Heimatstaats herleiten können (vgl. Hilbe ./ Liechtenstein, Entscheidung des EGMR vom 7. September 1999, Az. 31981/96), andererseits aber die Parlamentarische Versammlung des Europarats erst kürzlich erneut eine Wahlbeteiligung von Auslandsstaatsbürgern gerade auch auf europäischer Ebene gefordert hat (vgl. Recommendation 1410 \(1999\) „Links between Europeans living abroad and their countries of origin“ vom 26. Mai 1999, insbes. Ziff. 5 V d vi). Durch die Aufnahme einer „Garantieklausel“ in die europäische Grundrechte-Charta könnte dieser Forderung für den Bereich der Europäischen Union zusätzliches Gewicht verliehen werden.

Ich wäre Ihnen sehr verbunden, wenn Sie die von mir angeregten Änderungen einer näheren Prüfung unterziehen würden.

Hochachtungsvoll

Quaker Council For European Affairs (23/09/00 15:50):

Dear Friends

I feel apologetic about offering a commentary on the Charter so late, but CONVENT 47 raises textual problems which I hope Convention Members will consider.

Our standpoint at the Quaker Council for European Affairs is that (1) the EU owes a duty of respect to ALL persons legally or illegally within its boundaries, and also to those outside affected by its aid, trade, JHA and CFSP policies. The Charter will presumably govern the behaviour of officials and decision makers regardless of whether or not it becomes binding; and (2) the EU with enlargement facing it, will risk causing damage to 'civility' among its populations if it loses their confidence and fails to protect the basic workings of the EU from (a) separatists and (b) racists. I mention this second issue because of the risk of dissension or confusion that could be engendered by a defective Charter or failure to agree a Charter.

1. Article 50(1) says that the Charter applies only to Union bodies and to member states implementing EU law. What then is the implication of including rights such as 2(2), no death penalty, and 10(2), conscientious objection, where there is no likelihood of EU legislation? Is it to ensure that the EU's external policies promote these in the rest of the world? If so, this should be stated in the preamble. It may be that 2(1), the right to life, implies that the EU cannot authorise acts of war. This would please Quakers, but see below.
2. Article 51(3) says that where the Charter follows articles in the 1950 Council of Europe Convention, the meaning and scope are the same as these, unless the new Charter offers more protection. But the 1950 articles go on to include exceptions. For example, under 2(2) life may be taken to stop crime; under 4(3) certain activities do not count as forced labour; and in particular under 15(2) death may result from 'lawful acts of war'. If these apply to the present Charter, they should appear on its face as in the 1950 Convention. Otherwise it may be claimed (and I hope it is) that the present Charter offers more protection. How is the citizen reader to know, and who decides? The explanations in CONVENT 46 do not look as if they are being offered for formal adoption by Convention members.
3. As for the non-horizontal articles of CONVENT 47, our main concern is for undocumented migrants, both known to the authorities and clandestine. Article 4 (torture) seems to cover them, as indeed it should. Article 5(1) on slavery seems also to protect them, which is necessary to avoid trafficking. But Article 15(3) on conditions of work seems rather to protect those who exploit illegal immigrants. Is Article 31 on child labour universal? Article 19 as amended seems to breach the non-refoulement language of the 1951 UN Convention. Finally, the English words of 33(2) 'residing and moving legally' look bizarre. Is it envisaged that someone may be permitted to reside but not move - or vice versa?

The Council of Europe invites new member states to implement its human rights legislation with a better grace than has been shown by some of the existing ones. I wish we could adopt a similar stance with the EU candidate countries. The fact that the Social Charter (Revised) is more than some EU member states can swallow is no reason for not recognising it as a target for the EU of the incoming century.

407 international non-governmental organisations representing,
in the 41-nation Council of Europe, all aspects of life and tens of millions of people

The international non-governmental organisations meeting on 27 June at the Palais d'Europe in Strasbourg unanimously call on the Convention drawing up the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and the member states which shall be deciding upon it, to ensure that:

1. the principle of solidarity be included at the beginning of the Charter on a par with the principle of equality and the affirmation of the dignity of the human being;
2. the indivisibility of human rights be confirmed by the contents of the Charter and expressed in its structure, and that the universality of these economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights be acknowledged;
3. the European Union accede to the two Council of Europe instruments which implement the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, namely the European Convention on Human Rights and the revised European Social Charter, including their additional protocols;
4. the Charter of Fundamental Rights be incorporated into the treaties of the European Union, thereby acquiring a binding force;
5. the new risks and needs concerning protection of citizens in our society be covered by the Charter, including in the field of bioethics, the environment and information technology;
6. the principle of participatory democracy be strengthened in the Charter by including recognition of the right to civil dialogue granting organised civil society the right to information, communication and consultation in order to participate, propose, negotiate and verify political processes.

The INGOs having consultative status with the Council of Europe call for the opening of a transparent, democratic and participatory process on the future constitution of the European Union, independently of the drafting of the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

VERY URGENT

Motion of INGOs having consultative status with the Council of Europe

407 international non-governmental organisations representing, in the 41-nation Council of Europe, tens of millions of people

The international non-governmental organisations meeting on 26 September 2000 in the Palais d'Europe in Strasbourg most urgently call on the Convention drawing up the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and the member states which shall be deciding upon it, to ensure that:

- the principle of participatory democracy be strengthened in the Charter by including in Article 12, as new paragraph 3 (Convent 47), recognition of the right to civil dialogue granting organised civil society the right to information, communication and consultation in order to participate, propose, negotiate and verify political processes, as already requested in our motion of 27 June 2000 (enclosed).

This insistent demand is strongly shared by organised civil society at large in Europe as a fundamental expression of citizens' commitment, will, needs and hopes.

- Furthermore, the above mentioned INGOs demand that the word "religious" in line 2 of paragraph 2 in the Preamble (Convent 47) be replaced by "spiritual".

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION BMA RESPONSE

The British Medical Association is a voluntary professional association and trade union for doctors. It speaks on behalf of doctors both at home and abroad and actively promotes the profession's views on health policy in the United Kingdom.

The BMA's response to this document is inevitably dependent upon its legal status – on whether it is merely a 'wish list' or it is intended to be binding on member states. If it is not intended to be binding then this raises questions about the aim of the exercise. It states in the introduction that it brings together a number of existing rights set out in various Conventions and Declarations. However, it does so in a less than comprehensive way by summarising rights that are elaborated more fully elsewhere (see comments on Article 6 for example). If it is to be binding it needs additional work to make it useful.

Without further guidance and explanation, serious problems of interpretation might arise. The potential for such problems has been illustrated recently by the introduction of the Human Rights Act incorporating the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. Even with a large body of case law from the European Court there is considerable uncertainty about how the Articles will be applied.

Some of the difficulties that could arise are set out below:

Article 3 para 2

How are 'eugenic practices' to be defined? Some people say that all prenatal diagnosis is 'eugenic' because it is aimed at avoiding the birth of people with disabilities. Does this mean that all prenatal diagnosis must be stopped?

The prohibition on making the human body and its parts a source of financial gain could outlaw the offer of payments for gametes (ovum and spermatozoon). The BMA's view is that payment for gametes should be phased out and replaced by reimbursement of expenses, so this would not cause problems for us but it would require a change in practice and policy for the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority in the UK.

The prohibition of cloning is subject to questions of interpretation. It may be unhelpful to have a blanket ban without considering the arguments. In our comments on the UNESCO Declaration on the Human Genome, which also sought a blanket ban on reproductive cloning, we said:

'Whilst some forms of cloning would certainly be considered contrary to human dignity, this is not necessarily the case with all techniques which could come within the definition of 'reproductive cloning of human beings'. Although the BMA is currently opposed to the deliberate creation of genetically identical individuals, it recognises the potential benefits of embryo splitting in in vitro fertilisation and it is possible that this limited use of the technology might, with certain safeguards, be regarded as acceptable practice at some time in the future.'

In our understanding, ‘reproductive cloning’ refers to those techniques that involve the deliberate creation of genetically identical individuals, which would include embryo splitting but would not include techniques used to create compatible tissue for transplantation. Are others using the same definition?

Article 6 – Right to liberty and security of person

Without qualification this could prove difficult to uphold. The same right is given in the European Convention on Human Rights but it is qualified to permit the lawful detention of a person convicted of an offence, to prevent the spread of infectious disease or those suffering from mental disorders. Without these qualifications it appears that nobody must ever be detained. Is this the intention?

Article 7 – Respect for private and family life

The statement regarding the confidentiality of communications is not in consistent with the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill 2000 (UK) which deals with the interception and decryption of communications.

Article 11 – Freedom of expression and information

Paragraph 1 refers to the ‘right to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority’. Given the resurgence of far-right politics in some parts of Europe such a right might come into conflict with other undeniable social goods, such as the respect for persons and the maintenance of public order.

Article 13 – Freedom of research

This simply states that ‘scientific research shall be free of constraint’. Such a bold statement is unhelpful. Presumably it will still be necessary to seek ethical approval and informed consent for scientific research yet these could be considered ‘constraint’. The Council of Europe’s Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine states that ‘scientific research in the field of biology and medicine shall be carried out freely subject to the provisions of this Convention and the other legal provisions ensuring the protection of the human being’ (emphasis added). Such qualifications are necessary for this to provide meaningful guidance.

Article 14

Paragraph 1 refers to the right of ‘access to vocational and continuing training’. Such a blanket statement requires qualification. Access to training in medicine can depend on a variety of factors including qualifications, resources and individual merit. It therefore needs to be set in the context of national educational and training systems.

Article 21 – Equality and non-discrimination

The BMA recognises the importance of the rights outlined in this article. However, in the context of the practice of medicine certain practical questions need to be addressed. Certain disabilities may affect a doctor’s capacity to perform essential tasks. Furthermore it is generally understood that communication skills are vital to the therapeutic relationship. If employers request that doctors have an adequate command of the national language, are they being discriminatory? Recent comments in the UK by Dr Liam Fox, Opposition health spokesman have highlighted this issue. In the United Kingdom there is also a statutory retirement age. Is this also a discrimination issue?

Article 27 – Right of access to placement services

It would be useful to have some explanation about what this means, practically and in the abstract.

In light of these concerns the status of this document is crucial. If it is intended to be an amalgamation of existing rights, then they should be set out in full in the same terms as the original document. If it is more than this and new ‘rights’ are being added then these need to be highlighted and properly debated. There also needs to be an explanatory note that clarifies issues of interpretation, again using the exact text of existing documents.

Le projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne : un point de départ

La Convention de soixante-deux membres, mise en place à la demande du Conseil européen pour élaborer un projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne, est parvenue à élaborer un texte (" Convent 45 " puis, après d'incontestables améliorations, " Convent 47 " du 21.09.00) qui sera soumis au Conseil européen de Biarritz, puis de Nice. Que faut-il en penser ? Quelle attitude adopter ?

Des points positifs peuvent être soulignés :

1 - Une méthode d'élaboration nouvelle a été mise en place avec cette Convention, composée de trente représentants des parlements nationaux, de seize parlementaires européens, de quinze représentants des chefs d'Etat ou de gouvernements et d'un représentant du président de la Commission : on est enfin sorti de la méthode intergouvernementale dans laquelle la construction européenne ne cesse de s'engluer, et on a associé les parlements nationaux. La société civile a été consultée, certes dans des délais trop courts. La transparence de l'élaboration a été assurée, grâce au site internet de la Convention. Il y a là un changement novateur qui peut et doit s'avérer porteur d'avenir.

2 - Un compromis entre des positions très différentes, qui reflète l'état réel de l'Europe, que l'on a trop tendance, nous Français, à oublier, a pu être trouvé. Pour la première fois, les droits politiques, économiques et sociaux sont regroupés dans un même texte pour exprimer leur complémentarité et leur indivisibilité.

3 - La Charte n'est pas utilisée pour construire l'Europe à la sauvette, par un processus de centralisation rampante et opaque qui entraînerait un rejet immédiat de ceux qui sont attachés à la souveraineté de l'État : elle ne modifie pas les compétences actuelles de l'Union, ne lui transfère aucun pouvoir nouveau, reconnaît - la chose est nouvelle - la diversité (article 22). Elle s'impose aux actes communautaires et aux actes pris par les États en application de ceux-ci.

Ces éléments positifs suffisent pour que le projet, malgré ses prudenances, ne soit pas purement et simplement rejeté, dans une attitude maximaliste qui, finalement, desservirait une Europe qui se construit pas à pas.

Ce n'est pas, pour autant, que le projet actuel ne soit pas critiquable en raison de plusieurs insuffisances graves.

1 - Il ne fait que rassembler des droits et responsabilités déjà affirmés, sans véritablement progresser, ni faire face aux nouveaux défis, sauf sur un nombre limité de points. Il est vrai que le mandat de la Convention avait été strictement limité à un “rassemblement” des textes existants. Mais cela laisse insatisfait, notamment par rapport aux propositions que CAFECS s’était efforcé de faire en liaison avec les associations qui y participent 1 .

2 - Les droits sociaux sont insuffisamment affirmés si on les compare à la Charte sociale européenne révisée du Conseil de l’Europe. D’une part, l’Union se contente de reconnaître le droit au travail et à la sécurité sociale, à l’aide sociale, alors qu’elle devrait les promouvoir. D’autre part, il n’est pas suffisamment tenu compte des problèmes sociaux nouveaux, comme le chômage ou l’exclusion, tandis que le droit à un revenu décent n’est pas mentionné en tant que tel. Le droit des personnes âgées à une existence décente n’est pas évoqué. Enfin, le texte passe à côté de beaucoup d’innovations qu’il eût été possible de faire apparaître, par exemple le droit à l’accès aux droits ou, dans un autre domaine, le droit au temps choisi pour concilier vie familiale et professionnelle.

3 - Le projet de Charte est également beaucoup trop timide en matière de participation de la société civile, de dialogue civil et de droit d’association au niveau européen. Le droit de consultation des ONG au niveau de l’Union européenne n’a pas été proclamé.

4 - Enfin, le texte actuel laisse insatisfait, en ce sens qu’il ne débouche pas vraiment sur un projet de société européen, et qu’il est timide en matière de droits programmatiques qui ont besoin du support de politiques actives, par exemple en matière de droit au logement ou du droit au développement durable. En un mot, il correspond bien à l’état actuel de la construction européenne qu’il contribue à rééquilibrer. Il rassure ceux qui craignent les effets de la centralisation et de l’uniformité, aussi bien que ceux qui craignent un nivellement progressif des droits sociaux selon la pente du moins disant social. Mais il a un faible pouvoir anticipateur et est loin des progrès qu’il faut faire réaliser à l’Union européenne pour qu’elle émerge comme acteur nouveau dans la mondialisation, avec son propre modèle socio-économique. Face aux puissantes entreprises multinationales, l’Union européenne continue à offrir des droits sociaux nationaux inégaux qui risquent de conduire le modèle social européen vers le bas.

Il faut donc considérer le projet actuel non comme un point d’arrivée, mais comme un point de départ et une étape dans un processus à poursuivre.

Dans ces conditions, CAFECS :

1 - souhaite que le travail d’amélioration ponctuelle mené efficacement ces tous derniers jours, pour remédier aux insuffisances constatées par les représentants de la société civile, soit activement poursuivi.

2 - demande au Conseil européen d’adopter cette Charte, sans l’intégrer à ce stade aux Traités existants, (donc sans avoir à la faire ratifier par chacun des États membres) mais d’y faire référence à l’article 6 des Traités actuels qui seront modifiés par l’actuelle CIG et soumis à ratification par les États membres. Ainsi le juge européen sera très logiquement amené à prendre la Charte en considération, de façon éminente, pour arrêter ses décisions au même titre qu’il prend en considération la convention européenne des droits de l’homme.

3 – demande que l'action engagée ne s'arrête pas là et que dans une démarche de citoyenneté active, la société civile puisse s'exprimer à partir de cette Charte en prenant le temps et les méthodes appropriées. Le débat à ouvrir devra se situer dans le cadre du processus constituant qui devra être mis en place par le Conseil européen de Nice afin de renforcer la dimension politique de l'Union. Le moment venu, l'ensemble de ces débats publics pourra être repris par les parlements nationaux et les institutions européennes pour être intégré aux Traités ou à la future Constitution de l'Union en ayant bénéficié de la participation active des citoyens. Il faut que cette Charte joue un rôle fondateur pour le lancement de la démocratie participative européenne avec les peuples de l'Union et les peuples candidats à l'Union.✿

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Revised report*
Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights
Rapporteur: Mr Göran Magnusson, Sweden, Socialist Group

Summary

The preparatory work on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is now entering its final stage. Led by its wish to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all persons within the jurisdiction of European Union member States, the Assembly should encourage progress in this field made by the European Union. Its main concern must, however, be to avoid the emergence of new dividing lines in Europe by defending the consistency of human rights protection across the continent and avoiding diverging interpretations of these rights.

The Assembly, together with the European Parliament, the European Commission and the European Court of Human Rights, continues to believe that the aim of the draft Charter, which is to enhance and make more visible the protection of fundamental rights in EU member states, can only be reached if institutions and bodies of the European Union are bound not only by the draft Charter, but also by the European Convention on Human Rights.

The Assembly should thus invite the European Union and its member states to ensure that both the text of the proposed Charter and its ultimate application fully reflect and preserve the protection extended by the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights to every person within the jurisdiction of European Union member states. It should further propose the beginning of negotiations between the European Union and the Council of Europe without delay in order to enable the European Union to accede to the ECHR.

I. (Revised) Draft resolution

1. Following the adoption of Resolution 1210 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union on 25 January 2000, the Assembly has continued to follow with great interest the preparatory work on the Charter, which is now entering its final stage.
2. The Assembly is led by its concern to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all persons within the jurisdiction of European Union member States. The Assembly wants to encourage progress in this field made by the European Union. Its main concern is to avoid the emergence of new dividing lines in Europe by defending the consistency of human rights protection across the continent and avoiding diverging interpretations of these rights.
3. The Assembly welcomes the efforts undertaken by the European Union to enhance and make more visible the protection of human rights through the Charter. The draft Charter proposed by the Praesidium at the meeting of the "Convention" on 25 and 26 September 2000 reaffirms inter alia the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), the Social Charter of the Council of Europe, and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights. Insofar as the draft Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR, their meaning and scope shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention, thus guaranteeing that the draft Charter's level of protection will not fall below that of the ECHR.
4. The Assembly further welcomes the fact that the draft Charter recognises a number of rights and freedoms not included expressis verbis in the ECHR, such as the right to respect for physical and mental integrity, the prohibition of trafficking in human beings, the right to asylum, and a number of important social and economic rights. However, the Assembly regrets that the level of protection recognised by the draft Charter does not always reach the level of protection afforded by the corresponding Council of Europe instruments, in particular the Revised Social Charter and the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine.
5. The Assembly also regrets that the draft Charter makes no express reference to the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities, or indeed to the right to local and regional self-government – rights which are protected by Council of Europe instruments such as the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and the European Charter of Local Self-Government.
6. The Assembly is convinced that the aim of the draft Charter, which is to enhance and make more visible the protection of fundamental rights in EU member states, can only be reached if institutions and bodies of the European Union are bound not only by the draft Charter, but also by the European Convention on Human Rights. In a democratic society, a system of checks and balances is essential. All member states of the European Union, honouring this democratic principle, have submitted themselves to the external supervision of the European Court of Human Rights under this Convention, without endangering national sovereignty or the principle of subsidiarity. There is no legitimate reason why acts carried out on behalf of the European Union should be exempt from this fundamental external control mechanism, thus in effect withdrawing the protection of the ECHR from persons adversely affected in their fundamental rights and freedoms by Community law. As the European Commission has pointed out, the existence of a Charter does not diminish the interest in acceding to the ECHR for exactly these reasons.

7. In this connection, the Assembly welcomes the Resolution of the European Parliament, adopted on 16 March 2000, in which the European Parliament invites the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) to enable the European Union to become a party to the European Convention on Human Rights. The Assembly further agrees with the European Commission that the drafting of the Charter does not preclude the accession of the European Union to the ECHR, and that, indeed, this accession would in no way lessen the importance of the Charter.

8. The Assembly therefore reiterates its appeal to the European Union do its utmost to safeguard the consistency of human rights protection in Europe. It thus invites the European Union and its member states to:

- i. ensure that both the text of the proposed Charter and its ultimate application fully reflect and preserve the protection extended by the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights to every person within the jurisdiction of European Union member states;
- ii. enter into negotiations with the Council of Europe without delay in order to enable the European Union to accede to the ECHR as soon as possible by drawing up the necessary amendments to both the European Union treaties and the European Convention on Human Rights.

II. (Revised) Draft recommendation

1. The Assembly draws attention to its Recommendation 1439 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, adopted on 25 January 2000, in which it recommended that the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe support the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and prepare the appropriate amendments to this treaty.

2. It notes that, at its 106th session (10-11 May 2000), the Committee of Ministers stressed the need to ensure that, whatever decision the Institutions of the Union might take concerning the Charter, it did not lead to new dividing lines in Europe. The Charter should be fully consistent with, and not weaken, the system for the protection of human rights provided, under the European Convention, to all citizens of the Council of Europe's member States, including those of the European Union.

3. Although the Assembly welcomes the fact that the Committee of Ministers shares its concern that there should be no rivalry between the two systems of human rights protection in Europe, it regrets that it has not yet reached a consensus concerning the accession of the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights, an approach which, despite the technical objections of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg a few years ago (which can easily be solved), has repeatedly received the backing of the other institutions concerned: the European Parliament, the European Commission and the European Court of Human Rights.

4. The Assembly is not aware of any factor opposing accession from a legal point of view. It thus fervently hopes that the political will which, up to now, has prevented the process from going ahead, can be mustered soon.

5. With reference to Resolution ... (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union the Assembly therefore recommends that the Committee of Ministers enter into negotiations with the European Union without delay in order to enable the Union to accede to the ECHR as soon as possible by drawing up the necessary amendments to both the European Union treaties and the European Convention on Human Rights.

III. (Revised) Draft order

The Assembly draws attention to its Resolution ... (2000) and Recommendation ... (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and instructs its Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, in co-operation with the Political Affairs Committee and the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee, to closely follow developments regarding the Charter, and to report to it in due course.

IV. Explanatory memorandum by Mr Magnusson, Rapporteur

A. The Council of Europe and the EU Charter: new developments

1. On 25 January 2000 the Assembly adopted Resolution 1210 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, in which it invited the European Union:

- i. to incorporate the rights guaranteed in the European Convention on Human Rights and the protocols to it into the Charter of Fundamental Rights and to do its utmost to safeguard the consistency of the protection of human rights in Europe and to avoid diverging interpretations of those rights;
- ii. to decide in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights of the Council of Europe and to make the necessary amendments to the Community treaties;
- iii. to make sure that when social rights are referred to the revised European Social Charter of the Council of Europe is taken into account.

2. At the same time it adopted Recommendation 1439 (2000), in which it recommended that the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe support the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and prepare the appropriate amendments to this treaty.

3. Finally, in Order No. 561 (2000), it instructed its Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, and its Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee, which was asked for an opinion, to carefully follow and monitor the outcome of the drafting work on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, and to report back to it in due course.

4. The time has now come to take stock of the action taken on these texts. Since, by late May 2000, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe had not replied to Recommendation 1439, I submitted a written question, No. 387, to the Committee of Ministers on behalf of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, asking what follow-up the Committee of Ministers intended to give to Recommendation 1439 before the adoption of the Charter.

5. On 31 May 2000, the Committee of Ministers adopted a reply in which it referred to the Communiqué which it had adopted at the end of its 106th Session (Strasbourg, 10-11 May 2000):

“With regard to the proposed European Charter of Fundamental Rights, the Ministers underlined the need to ensure that, whatever decision the Institutions of the Union may take concerning the Charter, it does not lead to new dividing lines in Europe. The Charter should be fully consistent with, and not weaken, the system for the protection of human rights provided, under the European Convention, to all citizens of the Council of Europe's member States, including those of the European Union.”

6. It appended to its reply the statement made before the Ministers' Deputies on 7 March 2000 by Mr Wildhaber, President of the European Court of Human Rights, in which he set forth the arguments in favour of the European Union's accession to the Convention, pointing out that the debate on the Charter offered an excellent opportunity to reopen the whole question of the Community's accession to the Convention and that the Council of Europe ought to have no misgivings about seizing this opportunity without hesitation.

7. I nevertheless regretted that the Committee of Ministers had not replied to the main question addressed to it in Recommendation 1439, and so once again put a question to the Chair of the Committee of Ministers on 27 June 2000, asking him to state clearly whether the Committee of Ministers intended to come out in favour of accession.
8. The Chair of the Committee of Ministers replied that if there was no consensus among the fifteen member states of the European Union, there could be no consensus on this question within the Committee of Ministers either.
9. It should be noted, however, that the European Parliament adopted a resolution on 16 March 2000, in which it invited the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) to enable the Union to become a party to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). With the exception of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg, which raised some technical objections a few years ago (that can easily be solved), the proposal that the Union accedes to the ECHR has thus repeatedly received the backing of all the other institutions concerned: the European Parliament, the European Commission, the European Court of Human Rights and, of course, the Assembly. I would indeed maintain that only through this accession can new dividing lines in Europe be avoided, as well as a weakening of human rights protection across the continent.

B. Developments within the European Union

10. Within the European Union, the “Convention”, the name adopted by the body set up at the European Council meeting in Tampere, has nearly finished drafting the Charter. The “Convention” is made up of fifteen representatives of the Heads of State or Government, one representative of the European Commission, sixteen members of the European Parliament and thirty representatives of national parliaments. Two representatives of the Court of Justice of the European Communities and two representatives of the Council of Europe, one of whom is a judge at the European Court of Human Rights, have observer status.
11. The “Convention” worked very intensively, with several meetings per month, and invited the Economic and Social Committee, the Committee of the Regions and the European Ombudsman to give their views. Countries applying for accession to the Union were also invited to a hearing and NGOs had the opportunity to make their views known. This shows that there is, within the “Convention”, a determination to ensure the transparency of the discussions.
12. The “Convention” is chaired by Mr Roman Herzog, former President of the Federal Republic of Germany. As Vice-Chair, the group of representatives of Heads of State or Government elected the representative of the rotating presidency of the Council of the European Union. The group of representatives of the European Parliament elected Mr Mendes de Vigo and the Group of National Parliaments elected Mr Gunnar Jansson, Chair of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights of the Parliamentary Assembly.
13. The Praesidium of the “Convention” proposed a draft Charter (Convent 47) with an addendum and an explanatory memorandum (Convent 48)<sup>1</sup>, which was discussed by the plenary “Convention” at its last meeting on 25-26 September 2000 in Brussels, and is due to be formally approved at its final meeting on 2 October 2000 in Brussels.

14. The draft Charter is composed of a Preamble, and seven Chapters: Chapter I “Dignity”, Chapter II “Freedoms”, Chapter III “Equality”, Chapter IV “Solidarity”, Chapter V “Citizenship”, Chapter VI “Justice”, and Chapter VII “General Provisions”. Not counting the preamble, there are 53 articles all in all.

15. The draft Charter reaffirms inter alia the ECHR, the Social Charter of the Council of Europe and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights. Laudably, the draft Charter recognises a number of rights and freedoms which are not included expressis verbis in the ECHR, such as the right to respect for physical and mental integrity, the prohibition of trafficking in human beings, the right to asylum, and a number of important social and economic rights. However, it is regrettable that the level of protection recognised by the draft Charter does not always reach the level of protection afforded by the corresponding Council of Europe instruments, in particular the Revised Social Charter and the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine.

16. I also find it very regrettable that the draft Charter makes no express reference to the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities, or indeed to the right to local and regional self-government – rights which are protected by Council of Europe instruments such as the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and the European Charter of Local Self-Government.

17. Indeed, while I would support the draft Charter as a whole – and I think that consecutive drafts have improved considerably - I am still somewhat reticent on the balance struck between “traditional” human rights and more modern, social and economic rights. The latter are often elaborated at great length and detail in the draft Charter, while such important “traditional” human rights as the right to life, the presumption of innocence and the right of defence are kept extremely short, with all detail relegated to the explanatory memorandum. With certain rights, such as the right of access to free placement services and to services of general economic interest, I do ask myself if they are really so fundamental that they should stand side by side with such universally recognised human rights as the right to be protected from torture and the freedom of expression and assembly, implying their equal weight and importance.

18. In my first version of this report, I severely criticised the general provisions in the last chapter, the so-called “horizontal clauses” for having been drafted exceedingly widely. In fact, I still harbour some doubts on the exact meaning of “objectives of general interest being pursued by the Union” in draft Article 51.1. However, the potential danger posed by this very wide formulation is now fully assuaged by draft Article 51.3., which reads “Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. ...”. Draft Article 52 plays an equally important role in this respect. I think it is fair to say that the level of protection recognised by the draft Charter as it currently stands should not fall below the standards of the ECHR.

19. Of course, this text is not yet final, as it remains to be formally approved by the “Convention”. After the European Parliament has given its opinion on the final version, it will then be the task of the European Council, Parliament and Commission to solemnly proclaim the Charter in December 2000 in Nice, and to decide upon its legal nature. However, without anticipating the ICG's decision, the Chair of the “Convention” has opted for a form of wording which makes it possible for the Charter to become a binding instrument.

C. Accession of the European Union to the ECHR

20. It has always been the Council of Europe's – and this Assembly's – stance that the best way to guarantee universal and comprehensive human rights' protection across Europe would be the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights<sup>2</sup>.

21. The European Parliament, for its part, came out in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights in a Resolution adopted as recently as on 16 March 2000, in which it invited the IGC to:

- a. put the incorporation into the Treaty of the Charter of Fundamental Rights on its agenda;
- b. enable the Union to become a party to the ECHR so as to establish close co-operation with the Council of Europe, whilst ensuring that appropriate action is taken to avoid possible conflicts or overlapping between the Court of Justice of the European Communities and the European Court of Human Rights;
- c. add a reference to the European Social Charter and to the appropriate ILO and UN conventions to the reference to the European Convention on Human Rights in Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union.

22. On 13 September 2000, the European Commission issued a communication on the Charter of Fundamental Rights, in which it stated that the Charter neither required nor precluded accession to the European Convention on Human Rights. It noted that the existence of a Charter did not diminish the interest in joining, as accession would effectively establish external supervision of fundamental rights at Union level. Moreover, accession to the ECHR would in no way lessen the importance of drawing up a European Union Charter. The question of the Union's accession to the ECHR not being covered by the mandate of the "Convention", most recently the government of Finland made an official proposal to the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) to amend the European Community Treaty to grant the Community the competence to accede.

23. It is now up to the European Union to give its opinion on accession to the European Convention on Human Rights, whether the Charter is adopted or not and irrespective of whether it is binding.

24. There is no need at this point to repeat all the reasons for acceding, which were examined in the previous report (Doc 8611), and there has been absolutely nothing to show that this is not the right approach. Suffice it to say that I am convinced that the aim of the draft Charter, which is to enhance and make more visible the protection of fundamental rights in Europe, can only be reached if institutions and bodies of the European Union are bound not only by the draft Charter, but also by the European Convention on Human Rights. In a democratic society, a system of checks and

<sup>2</sup> I have deliberately chosen the word "European Union" and not "European Community" or "European Communities". While I am aware of the debate on the powers and the legal identity (or non-identity) of the Union, personally I am convinced that if the European Union does not already have a legal identity, it will acquire it sooner or later. I thus see no reason why the process of negotiating and adopting the necessary amendments to European treaties should be gone through twice, only to make it possible for first the "Community/ties" and then the "Union" to accede. If, however, this is the Union's wish, so be it. In that case, "European Union" should be read to encompass "European Community/ties" in this text.

balances is essential. All member states of the European Union, honouring this democratic principle, have submitted themselves to the external supervision of the European Court of Human Rights under this Convention, without endangering national sovereignty or the principle of subsidiarity. There is no legitimate reason why acts carried out on behalf of the European Union should be exempt from this fundamental external control mechanism, thus in effect withdrawing the protection of the ECHR from persons adversely affected in their fundamental rights and freedoms by Community law.

25. The two official observers of the Council of Europe to the “Convention”, Deputy Secretary General Krüger and Judge Fischbach, have also emphasised that accession to the ECHR would have the advantage of ensuring consistency in the protection of fundamental rights in Europe without lessening the Charter’s usefulness. Firstly, the Charter would be seen as complementing, not being an alternative, to the ECHR, in keeping with Article 53 of the ECHR. That would underscore the fact that the Charter did not affect the universality of human rights or uniformity of standards in Europe. Secondly, the European Court of Human Rights would be able to review the interpretation of those provisions of the Charter that were based on the ECHR, thus ensuring perfect consonance between the two instruments in the interests of the clarity and legal certainty to which European citizens aspire. Lastly, it would enable Community institutions to be a party to proceedings before the European Court of Human Rights that concerned the effects of Community provisions in the legal orders of member States.

26. Some people argue that the Charter of the European Union as an autonomous legal text will make the accession of the European Union to the ECHR superfluous. I do not think that is the case. Many national constitutions also recognise human rights and fundamental freedoms, but their existence has not made it meaningless for the member States to become parties to the ECHR.

27. In short, I would find it difficult to accept the European Union’s claims that it wishes to improve the protection of European citizens’ rights while it refuses to submit its own institutions to scrutiny and opens up the possibility of diverging interpretations of human rights by two different Courts. In fact, only the decision of the Court of Justice of Luxembourg in 1996 continues to be used as an argument for not ratifying the Convention. Yet there is nothing to prevent the European Council from remedying the situation by deciding to amend the Treaty on European Union to enable ratification to take place.

28. This is why the Assembly should propose, for the sole purpose of ensuring that Europe does not have two systems of human rights protection and to avoid the inconsistency which would inevitably ensue, that the European Union and its member states be invited to:

- i. ensure that both the text of the proposed Charter and its ultimate application fully reflect and preserve the protection extended by the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights to every person within the jurisdiction of European Union member states;
- ii. enter into negotiations with the Council of Europe without delay in order to enable the European Union to accede to the ECHR as soon as possible by drawing up the necessary amendments to both the European Union treaties and the European Convention on Human Rights.

Resolution 1228 (2000)<sup>1</sup>

1. Following the adoption of Resolution 1210 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union on 25 January 2000, the Assembly has continued to follow with great interest the preparatory work on the charter, which is now entering its final stage.
2. The Assembly is led by its concern to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all persons within the jurisdiction of European Union member states. The Assembly wants to encourage progress in this field made by the European Union. Its main concern is to avoid the emergence of new dividing lines in Europe by defending the consistency of human rights protection across the continent and avoiding diverging interpretations of these rights.
3. The Assembly recalls Recommendation 1415 (1999), according to which “economic and social rights are inherent aspects of human dignity and are clearly human rights, in the same way as are civil and political rights. These two categories of rights are interdependent and cannot be dealt with differently”.
4. The Assembly welcomes the efforts undertaken by the European Union to enhance and make more visible the protection of human rights through the charter. The draft charter proposed by the Praesidium at the meeting of the “Convention” on 25 and 26 September 2000 reaffirms inter

1. Assembly debate on 29 September 2000 (32nd Sitting). See Doc. 8819, report of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights (rapporteur: Mr Magnusson), Doc. 8846, opinion of the Political Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Clerfayt) and Doc. 8847, opinion of the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Evin). Text adopted by the Assembly on 29 September 2000 (32nd Sitting).

alia the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), the Social Charter of the Council of Europe, and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights. Insofar as the draft charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR, their meaning and scope shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention, thus guaranteeing that the draft charter's level of protection will not fall below that of the ECHR.

5. The Assembly further welcomes the fact that the draft charter recognises a number of rights and freedoms not included expressis verbis in the ECHR, such as the right to respect for physical and mental integrity, the prohibition of trafficking in human beings, the right to asylum, and a number of important social and economic rights. However, the Assembly considers that the level of protection recognised by the draft charter should fully correspond to the level of protection afforded by the corresponding Council of Europe instruments, in particular the Revised Social Charter and the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine.

6. The Assembly also regrets that the draft charter makes no express reference to the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities, or indeed to the right to local and regional self-government – rights which are protected by Council of Europe instruments such as the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and the European Charter of Local Self-Government.

7. The Assembly is convinced that the aim of the draft charter, which is to enhance and make more visible the protection of fundamental rights in EU member states, can only be reached if institutions and bodies of the European Union are bound not only by the draft charter, but also by the European Convention on Human Rights. In a democratic society, a system of checks and balances is essential. All member states of the European Union, honouring this democratic principle, have submitted themselves to the external supervision of the European Court of Human Rights under this Convention, without endangering national sovereignty or the principle of subsidiarity. There is no legitimate reason why acts carried out on behalf of the European Union should be exempt from this fundamental external control mechanism, thus in effect withdrawing the protection of the ECHR from persons adversely affected in their fundamental rights and freedoms by Community law. As the European Commission has pointed out, the existence of a charter does not diminish the interest in acceding to the ECHR for exactly these reasons.

8. The new internal legal system that the Union wishes to create should reflect its global role. It must help to offset trends towards a “fortress Europe” and be at the forefront of combating racism, xenophobia and ethnic violence. In this context, consideration ought to be given to the question of the political rights of nationals of third parties established in the Union.

9. In this connection, the Assembly welcomes the resolution of the European Parliament, adopted on 16 March 2000, in which the European Parliament invites the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) to enable the European Union to become a party to the European Convention on Human Rights. The Assembly further agrees with the European Commission that the drafting of the charter does not preclude the accession of the European Union to the ECHR, and that, indeed, this accession would in no way lessen the importance of the charter.

10. The Assembly therefore reiterates its appeal to the European Union do its utmost to safeguard the consistency of human rights protection in Europe. It thus invites the European Union and its member states to:

- i. ensure that both the text of the proposed charter and its ultimate application fully reflect and preserve the protection extended by the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights to every person within the jurisdiction of European Union member states;
- ii. ensure that the social rights guaranteed by the charter correspond to those set forth in the Revised European Social Charter;
- iii. enter into negotiations with the Council of Europe without delay in order to enable the European Union to accede to the ECHR as soon as possible by drawing up the necessary amendments to both the European Union treaties and the European Convention on Human Rights.

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Recommendation 1479 (2000)<sup>2</sup>

1. The Assembly draws attention to its Recommendation 1439 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, adopted on 25 January 2000, in which it recommended that the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe support the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and prepare the appropriate amendments to this treaty.

2. It notes that, at its 106th Session (10-11 May 2000), the Committee of Ministers stressed the need to ensure that, whatever decision the institutions of the Union might take concerning the charter, it did not lead to new dividing lines in Europe. The charter should be fully consistent with, and not weaken, the system for the protection of human rights provided, under the European Convention, to all citizens of the Council of Europe's member states, including those of the European Union.

3. Although the Assembly welcomes the fact that the Committee of Ministers shares its concern that there should be no rivalry between the two systems of human rights protection in Europe, it regrets that it has not yet reached a consensus concerning the accession of the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights, an approach which, despite the technical objections of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg a few years ago (which can easily be solved), has repeatedly received the backing of the other institutions concerned: the European Parliament, the European Commission and the European Court of Human Rights.

4. The Assembly is not aware of any factor opposing accession from a legal point of view. It thus fervently hopes that the political will which, up to now, has prevented the process from going ahead, can be mustered soon.

5. The Assembly also recommends that the Committee of Ministers bear in mind that Europe will always be larger than the Union and will always include a certain number of non-member states of the Union. There is therefore a need for practical, organic relations between the Council of Europe and the European Union, based on complementarity and co-operation, which take account of the Council of Europe's role and distinctive features.

6. The Assembly urges the Committee of Ministers to support the principle whereby the social rights guaranteed by the charter as adopted by the European Council must correspond to those set forth in the Revised European Social Charter, the Council of Europe instrument which sets the standard where fundamental social rights are concerned and is one of the pillars of the European social model.

7. With reference to Resolution 1228 (2000) on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union the Assembly therefore recommends that the Committee of Ministers enter into negotiations with the European Union without delay in order to enable the Union to accede to the ECHR as soon as possible by drawing up the necessary amendments to both the European Union treaties and the European Convention on Human Rights.

Resolution on the Right to the Protection of Environment

adopted on 22.9.2000

The European Council on Environmental Law

Having considered the draft of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (September 2000);

Noting that Article 36 of the draft dealing with “Environmental protection”<sup>1</sup> does not impose any direct obligation on the member States of the Union which must ensure its implementation but deals only with programmatic requirements concerning the environmental policy of the European Union;

Considering that other articles of the draft Charter guarantee rights which States must recognise in relation to every person within the territory of the European Union and that this is particularly the case in relation to other economic and social rights such as the right to health, the right to social assistance and housing assistance;

Recalling Resolution 45/94(1990) of the General Assembly of the United Nations according to which “all individuals are entitled to live in an environment adequate for their health and well-being”;

Recalling that all States of the Union have recognised in many international fora the right to a clean environment or to the protection of a clean environment and that they have introduced this right explicitly or implicitly in their legal system;

Recalling that all States of the Union as well as the European Community itself have signed the Aarhus Convention (1998) which recognises “the right of every person to live in an environment adequate to his or her health and well-being”;

Art. 36 : Environmental protection. A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment shall be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

CONCLUDES that the present formulation of Article 36 on the protection of the environment which places no obligation upon States and which does not recognise any individual right, is an unjustifiable step backwards from the commitments undertaken by States of the Union at national and international levels and does not reflect the evolution of law during the last decade;

PROPOSES to the Presidium of the Convention that the text of Article 36 of the Charter be drafted in terms that ensure that the Union recognises and respects the right of every person to protection of the environment in order to secure the right of each person to live in an environment adequate for maintenance of their physical and mental health, the enhancement of their dignity and their personal achievement.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE COMMISSION

ON THE LEGAL NATURE OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE DRAFT CHARTER

1. The challenge of preparing the draft Charter has been taken up: at the formal session of the Convention on 2 October 2000, the President of the Convention responsible for preparing it recorded that there was broad consensus on the draft and sent it to the President of the European Council.<sup>2</sup>

The draft Charter offers great potential value added. By bringing together in a single instrument the rights hitherto scattered over a range of national and international instruments, it enshrines the very essence of the European acquis regarding fundamental rights.

2. This is a balanced text that makes ambitious innovations:
  - all personal rights – civil, political, economic and social rights and the rights of citizens of the European Union – are brought together in a single instrument. It thus throws into the sharpest relief the principle of the indivisibility of rights. The draft Charter breaks with the distinction hitherto made in both European and international documents between civil and political rights on the one side and economic and social rights on the other, enumerating all rights around a few major principles: human dignity, fundamental freedoms, equality, solidarity, citizenship and justice;
  - in respect for the principle of universalism, the rights set forth in the draft are generally given to all persons, irrespective of their nationality or residence. The position is different for the rights that are most directly bound up with citizenship of the Union, which are given only to citizens (such as participation in elections to the European Parliament or in local elections), and for certain rights that are related to a particular status (rights of children, certain social rights of workers, for example);
  - the draft is decidedly contemporary in that it sets forth rights which, without being strictly new, such as data protection and rights linked to bioethics, are designed to meet the challenges of current and future development of information technologies and genetic engineering;
  - the draft also meets the strong and legitimate contemporary demand for transparency and impartiality in the operation of the Community administration, incorporating the rights of access to administrative documents of the Community institutions and the right to sound administration that sum up the tenor of the decisions of the Court of Justice;

- the gender-neutral language used in the text also deserves highlighting. The draft is addressed to everybody, with no predominance of one gender over the other;
  - in formal terms, it is drafted clearly and concisely and it will be easy for all those to whom it is addressed to understand. This was the first condition that had to be met in order to satisfy the demand from the Cologne European Council for "a Charter of fundamental rights ... to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens". It is also a condition for the enjoyment of all the benefits of certainty as to the law that the Charter must offer in areas where Union law applies.
3. In the light of the characteristics of the draft – which satisfies the requests made by the Commission in its Communication of 13 September<sup>3</sup> – the Commission representative was able to indicate his full approval of the draft Charter.

The Commission is convinced that the value added by the draft is real and that this value added is the basis for the future success of the Charter, irrespective of its ultimate legal nature.

THE NATURE AND EFFECTS OF THE CHARTER

4. The question of the nature of the Charter has been at the centre of the debate ever since the Cologne European Council decided to prepare a draft Charter. The Heads of State or Government decided to answer this question in two stages:
- first, the Charter should be solemnly proclaimed by the European Parliament, the Commission and the Council,
  - then, "It will then have to be considered whether and, if so, how the Charter should be integrated into the treaties"<sup>4</sup>
5. There have been a number of expressions of opinion on the question.

The European Parliament, in two resolutions passed on 16 March<sup>5</sup> and 2 October 2000,<sup>6</sup> resolutely supported a mandatory Charter incorporated in the Treaties. So did the Economic and Social Committee<sup>7</sup> and the Committee of the Regions<sup>8</sup> in opinions given at their September 2000 sessions.

<sup>8</sup> Committee of the Regions Resolution 140/2000, adopted on 20 September 2000.

The same call was made virtually unanimously by the representatives of civil society at the hearings organised by the Convention. It is unlikely that the expectations aroused in public opinion by the decision to prepare the Charter could be satisfied by mere proclamation by the Community institutions without incorporation of the Charter in the Treaties.

Many members of the Convention, belonging to different component groups and political trends, supported a Charter incorporated in the Treaties.

Lastly, the Commission, in its Communication of 13 September, undertook to present a Communication on the nature of the Charter.

6. The Commission had an opportunity to express an opinion on the nature of the Charter when answering an oral question in the European Parliament last December.<sup>9</sup> It stated that the Convention, both during its proceedings and in its final outcome, should leave open the two options as to the Charter's final status, as envisaged by the Heads of State or Government – a legally mandatory instrument incorporated in the Treaties or a solemn political declaration.

The Commission also stated that the draft Charter should meet two fundamental objectives: visibility for the citizen and the certainty as to the law that the Charter must offer in areas where Union law applies.

7. It is in this spirit, notably at the instigation of the President of the Convention, Mr Herzog, that from the very outset the Convention's proceedings were directed towards producing a text "as if" it were to be incorporated in the Treaties, thus leaving the final choice to the European Council.
8. This "as if" doctrine clearly inspired the Convention. If a Charter had been prepared solely for presentation as a political declaration, the general provisions of the draft, which are the most important and the most difficult ones (Chapter VII), would have been superfluous.

The importance of these clauses must be emphasised: they are the guarantee of the Charter's future success.

They are the place where it is specified just what the Charter is – an instrument to verify respect for fundamental rights by the institutions and the Member States when they act under Union law. This is made clear by Article 51(?), which provides that the Charter is addressed to the Union institutions and bodies and to the Member States, when they give effect to Union law.

9. But these provisions also seek to offer an appropriate response to the highly important questions that will arise in the event of incorporation of the Charter in the Treaties.

The Commission considers that the draft Charter offers an acceptable response:

- respect for the autonomy of Union law: it is also important that the Charter be incorporated harmoniously into the Union legal system and that its underlying legal principles be respected. This applies in particular to the autonomy of the Community legal order in relation to international law and the national law of the Member States; the Charter is drafted in such a way as to respect that autonomy. In particular, the explicit recognition by the last sentence of Article 52(3) is perfectly satisfactory: there is nothing to preclude Union law from giving more extensive protection than the European Convention;
- the relationship between the Charter and the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms: the risk of disparity between the rights and freedoms secured by the European Convention and those set forth in the Charter, and the risk of the case-law of the Luxembourg and Strasbourg courts diverging, was carefully analysed while the draft Charter was being prepared. The solutions adopted by Article 52(3) of the draft are entirely satisfactory; there was the same broad consensus on them as on the other provisions of the draft, and the Council of Europe observers in the Convention also supported them: the rights set forth in the Charter correspond in their meaning and scope to rights already secured by the European Convention, without prejudice to the principle of the autonomy of Union law. The risk of the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights diverging from that of the Court of Justice of the European Communities should thereby be removed. If the draft Charter is silent on the question of Union accession to the European Convention, of course, it must be acknowledged that the question remains open. The existence of the Charter will not render the question of accession any less interesting, the effect being to introduce external monitoring of fundamental rights at Union level; by the same token accession to the Convention would not make the preparation of the Union Charter any less valuable;
- the relationship between the Charter and the Union's powers, and respect for the principle of subsidiarity: in no case will the Charter be a means of extending the Community's powers and the Union's tasks. And the subsidiarity principle must be respected. Article 51 of the draft is perfectly clear; this is borne out by paragraph 5 of the Preamble, stating, "just in case", how attentive the authors of the draft were to these points;
- the relationship between the Charter and the national Constitutions: it might have been feared that the Charter would make it necessary for Member States to amend their constitutions. This will manifestly not be the case, not just because of one of the general provisions of the draft but also because of the definition of the rights it sets forth. In any event, proper account has been taken of observations on the need to attain this objective, made throughout the Convention's proceedings, in particular by government representatives. At the end of the day it is clear that the Charter will not replace national Constitutions in the area within its scope – respect for fundamental rights at national level. And it is clear that the relationship between Union primary law, which would include the Charter if it is incorporated in the Treaties, and national law will remain unchanged;

– a major advance in certainty as to the law: at this time it seems clear to the Commission that the Charter will not endanger certainty as to the law relating to fundamental rights. Quite the contrary: it will increase it in no small measure. The Charter will offer a clear guide for the interpretation of fundamental rights by the Court of Justice which in the current situation has to use disparate, sometimes uncertain, sources of inspiration. It must also be stressed that the Charter makes no change to the redress procedures and court architecture provided for by the Treaties, since it opens up no new procedures for seeking redress in the Community courts.

10. Consequently, given the foregoing considerations, it is reasonable to assume that the Charter will produce all its effects, legal and others, whatever its nature. As the Commission said in the European Parliament on 3 October 2000,<sup>10</sup> it is clear that it would be difficult for the Council and the Commission, who are to proclaim it solemnly, to ignore in the future, in their legislative function, an instrument prepared at the request of the European Council by the full range of sources of national and European legitimacy acting in concert.

Likewise, it is highly likely that the Court of Justice will seek inspiration in it, as it already does in other fundamental rights instruments. It can reasonably be expected that the Charter will become mandatory through the Court's interpretation of it as belonging to the general principles of Community law.

- 11 The Commission considers that the Charter, by reason of its content, its tight drafting and its high political and symbolic value, ought properly to be incorporated in the Treaties sooner or later. For the Commission, this incorporation is not a question to be addressed in theoretical or doctrinal terms. It must be addressed in terms of legal effectiveness and common sense. It is therefore preferable, for the sake of visibility and certainty as to the law, for the Charter to be made mandatory in its own right and not just through its judicial interpretation. In practice, the real question is when and how it should be incorporated in the Treaties.

WHAT SHOULD BE DECIDED TODAY?

12. The Commission is aware of the importance attached to the Charter being able to have full effect in the future. It does not wish to overload an already heavy political agenda. It will be for the Heads of State or Government to take up that challenge. But the Commission's political assessment is that any decision on the matter must be based on clear criteria that have already been put forward:
- evaluation of the content of the Charter,
  - greater certainty as to the law,

<sup>10</sup> Oral question 0-0115/00 by Mr Giorgio Napolitano.

- visibility of rights for citizens,
- a firm foundation for the European venture in the values protected by fundamental rights.

Irrespective of all this, the Commission emphasises that the Heads of State or Government have a number of options regarding both the technicalities of incorporation in the Treaties and the timing.

Regarding timing, the European Council might consider entering the question on the agenda for the current Intergovernmental Conference. It could take a decision to that effect at the Biarritz meeting. But this question cannot be considered without regard for the scope of the proceedings as already defined by the European Council for the present Intergovernmental Conference or for the prospect of reorganising the Treaties as proposed by the Commission at that conference in its communication of 12 July 2000, "A Basic Treaty for the European Union".<sup>11</sup>

As the Commission sees it, there is a very close link between reorganisation of the Treaties and incorporation of the Charter in them. Consequently the Heads of State or Government should at the very least decide at Nice to launch some kind of process in this direction, clearly setting objectives and procedural and other details.

This is the only way forward that provided a basis for an effort to educate the citizen and give practical form to the technical details that will bring a sound result within reach.

Regarding the technical details, the European Council might in due course envisage, for example, straightforward incorporation of the articles of the Charter in the Treaty on European Union in a Title headed "Fundamental Rights", or incorporation of the Charter in a Protocol annexed to the Treaties.

In any event, the question arises whether Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union can be kept in its present form. At the very least it must be generally obvious that, while leaving open the possibility of future developments, there can be no question of pretending to ignore the Charter as a solemn political declaration, in the light of Article 6(2). The Commission considers that this question should be discussed by the Intergovernmental Conference after the Biarritz European Council. The point would be to consider the possibility of amending this provision of the Treaty on European Union, bearing in mind the sequence determined by the conclusions of the Cologne European Council: proclamation of the Charter by the European Council at Nice, then incorporation in the Treaties.

Roman Herzog

geboren 1934 in Landshut, war von 1994 bis 1999 Bundespräsident der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und davor von 1987 bis 1994 Präsident des Bundesverfassungsgerichts.

Herzog ist promovierter Rechts- und Staatswissenschaftler. Vor der Übernahme dieser hohen Staatsämter der Bundesrepublik Deutschland war er Professor für Staatswissenschaften, Rektor der renommierten Hochschule für Verwaltungswissenschaften in Speyer, Staatssekretär und Bevollmächtigter des Bundeslandes Rheinland-Pfalz beim Bund, Kultus- und Innenminister in Baden-Württemberg und Vizepräsident des Bundesverfassungsgerichts. Er ist bis heute Mitherausgeber der bedeutenden Kommentarsammlung zum deutschen Grundgesetz, dem Maunz-Dürig. Sein Buch „Staaten der Frühzeit“ ist in zahlreichen Sprachen, unter anderem im Chinesischen, erschienen. Seine wissenschaftlichen Arbeiten sind Standardwerke für die Juristenausbildung. Er hat eine Reihe von Staaten, insbesondere im MOE-Raum, bei der Ausarbeitung ihrer Verfassung beraten.

Internationales Renommee genießt Roman Herzog auch wegen seiner maßgeblichen Beiträge zum Kulturdialog zwischen dem Westen und dem Islam. 1999 erschien im Verlag St. Martin's Press New York „Roman Herzog – Preventing the Clash of Civilization's – A Peace-Strategy for the 21st Century“: Ein Plädoyer für den Dialog und eine Strategie gegen den von Samuel Huntington prophezeiten Zusammenprall der Kulturen. Gemeinsam mit acht anderen Staatsoberhäuptern startete er im gleichen Jahr eine internationale Initiative im Sinne des Dialogs und des Zusammenlebens der Weltkulturen: Eine Strategie für den Frieden.

Das ehemalige Staatsoberhaupt gilt als ein Motor des Wandels und der Erneuerung in Deutschland. Die renommierte Financial Times titelte „A Man with a mission“. Als Bundespräsident wurde er nicht müde, unliebsame Reformen, Abstand von alten Besitzständen und vor allem mehr Begeisterung für die großen Chancen der Zukunft bei seinen Landsleuten anzunehmen und einzufordern. Sein Engagement galt in besonderer Weise der Förderung von Wissenschaft und Forschung sowie einschneidenden Reformen des Bildungswesens, Existenzgründungen und modernen Technologien. Seine „Berliner Rede“ an die Nation hat bis heute Bestand: „Es muß ein Ruck durch Deutschland gehen.“ Roman Herzog setzt dabei großes Vertrauen in die Jugend. Er galt als überaus politischer Präsident, der den Spielraum seines Amtes aktiv genutzt hat, ohne dabei die gebotene Überparteilichkeit zu verletzen. Daß er sich den entscheidenden Zukunftsfragen auch ohne das Präsidentenamt widmen wird, daran läßt er keinen Zweifel: „Ich scheidet ja nur aus dem Amt, nicht aus dem Leben“, sagte er mit dem ihm eigenen Humor am Tag des Amtswechsels im Deutschen Bundestag.

Roman Herzog wurde 1997 gemeinsam mit seinem Freund, dem tschechischen Staatspräsidenten Vaclav Havel, als „Staatsmann Europas“ vom Institute for East-West-Studies in New York ausgezeichnet. Für sein Eintreten für die europäische Idee erhielt er im gleichen Jahr den Internationalen Karlspreis zu Aachen. Er ist Mitglied der Russischen Akademie der Wissenschaften sowie der Juristenvereinigung Grey's Inn in London. Der deutsche Bundeskanzler hat ihn nach dem Ausscheiden aus dem höchsten Staatsamt gebeten, Deutschland als Beauftragter der Bundesregierung bei der Ausarbeitung einer europäischen Grundrechtscharta zu vertreten.

Roman Herzog,

né à Landshut en 1934, a été Président de la République fédérale d'Allemagne de 1994 à 1999 après avoir été Président de la Cour constitutionnelle fédérale de 1987 à 1994.

M. Herzog est docteur en droit et en sciences politiques. Avant d'accéder à ces hautes fonctions au service de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, il a été professeur de sciences politiques, Directeur de la célèbre École supérieure des sciences administratives de Spire, Secrétaire d'État et Plénipotentiaire du Land de Rhénanie-Palatinat au siège du gouvernement fédéral, Ministre des Affaires culturelles et Ministre de l'Intérieur du Land de Bade-Wurtemberg et Vice-président de la Cour constitutionnelle fédérale. Il est l'un des trois éditeurs du "Maunz-Dürig-Herzog", le recueil réputé de commentaires juridiques de la Loi fédérale allemande. Son livre "Staaten der Frühzeit" a été traduit dans de nombreuses langues et même en chinois. Ses travaux scientifiques sont considérés comme des ouvrages de base pour les études de droit. Il a prodigué ses conseils à toute une série d'États, notamment en Europe centrale et orientale, dans l'élaboration de leur constitution.

Les contributions remarquables que Roman Herzog a apportées au dialogue culturel entre l'Occident et l'Islam lui ont valu une renommée internationale. En 1999 est paru aux Editions St. Martin's Press New York son livre "Preventing the Clash of Civilizations - A Peace Strategy for the 21st Century", plaidoyer en faveur du dialogue et stratégie de lutte contre le choc des civilisations annoncé par Samuel Huntington. Aux côtés de huit autres chefs d'État il lança cette année-là une initiative internationale en faveur du dialogue et de la vie en commun des civilisations du monde, une stratégie pour la paix.

Cet ancien homme d'État est considéré comme l'un des moteurs du changement et du renouveau en Allemagne. Le célèbre Financial Times l'a qualifié de "A Man with a mission". Président de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, il n'a cessé d'en appeler à ses compatriotes pour qu'ils engagent des réformes, même impopulaires, qu'ils abandonnent les anciens acquis et qu'ils fassent surtout preuve de plus d'enthousiasme face aux grandes chances qu'offre l'avenir. Il s'est attaché en particulier à la promotion des sciences et de la recherche ainsi qu'à des réformes décisives de l'éducation nationale, à la création de nouvelles entreprises et aux technologies nouvelles. Son "Discours de Berlin" adressé à la nation n'a rien perdu de son actualité: "L'Allemagne doit se réveiller". Pour cela, Roman Herzog mise beaucoup sur la jeunesse. Il a été considéré comme un président à profil politique marqué, qui a su exploiter la marge de manoeuvre que lui donnaient ses fonctions sans pour cela manquer à son devoir d'impartialité. Il n'a laissé planer aucun doute sur le fait qu'il continuerait de se consacrer aux grandes questions de l'avenir même après l'échéance de son mandat en disant, avec son humour particulier, au Bundestag, le jour de l'entrée en fonctions de son successeur, "je quitte mes fonctions certes, mais je ne quitte pas la vie".

Au même titre que son ami Vaclav Havel, Président de la République tchèque, il a été fait "homme d'État européen" par le Institute for East-West Studies de New York. Pour son engagement en faveur de la cause européenne, il s'est vu décerner la même année le Prix international Charlemagne de la Ville d'Aix-la-Chapelle. Il est membre de l'Académie russe des sciences et de l'Association des juristes Gray's Inn de Londres. À son départ de la Présidence de la République, le Chancelier fédéral l'a prié de bien vouloir représenter l'Allemagne en tant que Délégué du gouvernement fédéral participant à l'élaboration d'une charte européenne des droits fondamentaux.

Roman Herzog

Roman Herzog, born in Landshut (Bavaria) in 1934, was President of the Federal Republic of Germany from 1994 to 1999 and before that President of the Federal Constitutional Court from 1987 to 1994.

Herzog is a doctor of law and political science. Before assuming these high offices in the Federal Republic of Germany he was a Professor of Political Science, Vice-Chancellor of the renowned College of Administrative Sciences in Speyer, State Secretary and Commissioner of Land Rhineland-Palatinate to the Federation, Minister of Culture and the Interior of Land Baden-Württemberg and Vice-President of the Federal Constitutional Court. He remains a co-editor of the major collection of commentaries on the German Basic Law, Maunz-Dürig-Herzog. His book "Staaten der Frühzeit" (Ancient Civilizations) has appeared in several languages, including Chinese. His academic treatises are standard works for the study of law. He has advised a number of states, particularly in Central and Eastern Europe, on the elaboration of their constitutions.

Roman Herzog enjoys an international reputation not least as a result of his key contributions to the cultural dialogue between the West and Islam. In 1999 St. Martin's Press New York published his "Preventing the Clash of Civilizations - A Peace Strategy for the 21st Century", which calls for dialogue and presents a strategy against the clash of civilizations prophesied by Samuel Huntington. That same year, together with eight other heads of state, he launched an international initiative to promote dialogue and the co-existence of world cultures - a strategy for peace.

The former head of state is regarded as a proponent of change and renewal in Germany. The Financial Times titled him "A man with a mission". As Federal President, he never shirked from calling upon his compatriots to accept unpopular reforms, to loosen themselves from their old ways and particularly to show greater enthusiasm for the tremendous opportunities the future offered. He was especially committed to promoting science and research, to decisive educational reform, to entrepreneurship and to modern technologies. His "Berlin speech" to the nation on emergence into the 21st century remains valid: "Germany must give itself a shake." Roman Herzog places great confidence in the young generation. He was regarded as an entirely political President, who made active use of the scope offered by his office without infringing the requirements of impartiality. He leaves no doubt but that he intends to devote his attention to the decisive issues of the future even after his term as President: on the day his successor assumed office he said in the Bundestag, with his own typical brand of humour, "I am just departing office, not life."

In 1997, along with his friend the Czech President Vaclav Havel, Roman Herzog received the European Statesman Award of the Institute for East-West Studies in New York. In the same year he was awarded the International Charlemagne Prize of the City of Aachen for his commitment to the European ideal. He is a member of the Russian Academy of Science and of Gray's Inn in London. Following his departure from the country's highest office, the Federal Chancellor has asked him to represent Germany as the Federal Government Commissioner for the elaboration of a European Basic Rights Charter.

Draft European Charter of Fundamental Rights*Brussels, 13 December 1999 (16.12)*SN 5133/1/99 REV 1
(OR. f)*DRAFT*WORK PROGRAMME

The body's terms of reference cover three main areas:

- civil and political rights;
- citizens' rights;
- social and economic rights.

Work should be shaped by that distinction. The body's first three plenary meetings could provide an opportunity for in-depth discussion of the three areas. On the basis of such discussion, committees could be set up to map out the broad lines of the final document to be drawn up by the body's officers and submitted to the body for consideration.

The body will also have to hear the Committee of the Regions, the Economic and Social Committee and the Ombudsman. It will invite interest groups to put forward their views.

In view of the above, the work programme could take the following form:

- 1 (afternoon) and 2 (morning) February: meeting of the body, at the European Parliament: general matters; civil and political rights; possible hearing of the Economic and Social Committee, Committee of the Regions and Ombudsman;

- during February: meeting of the committees;
- March: second meeting of the body, at the Council;
- during March: NGO forum;
- late April to early June: third meeting of the body;
- July: fourth meeting of the body: consideration of drafts;
- September: fifth meeting of the body: consideration of a combined draft;
- October: finalisation of the wording;
- November: meeting, if necessary, for any last adjustments.
