Mr. M. LOBO ANTUNES, Alternate Member

Comments 1. Given the technical nature - that the report itself acknowledges - of the various subjects discussed at the WG with which other members of the Convention may not be very familiar with, I believe it could be useful to begin the report with a kind of "executive summary" listing the Group's recommendations to the plenary. This would make the report more "attractive" and easy reading for those wishing a quick access to those conclusions.

2. To redraft last sentence of page 2 and first page 3 (1.General recommendations) as follows: "(quote)At the outset, the Group stresses that, in accordance with its mandate, the final political decision TO RECOMMEND the possible incorporation....etc. (continues unchanged)"(unquote) .

3. To redraft second sentence page 11 (1. general conclusions and recommendations) as follows: (quote)".....Group's mandate, the final political decision TO RECOMMEND the possible accession by..etc. (continues unchanged)"(unquote) .

These drafting proposals are, in my view, more on line with the mandate enshrined in the Laeken Declaration (see point on Final Document) .

Best regards,
Manuel Lobo Antunes
member of the WGII

Ms. N. KUTSKOVA, Alternate Member

As it will be impossible for me to be present during the next meeting of Working Group II on 21 October 2002, I would like to express my support for the last version of the draft final report (working document 25). I think it reflects in a correct and balanced way the opinions expressed during the work of the group. As a representative of a candidate country, I would especially like to stress the importance of the strengthening of the horizontal clauses (general provisions) which is foreseen in the annex to the report.

Sincerely yours,

Nelly Kutzkova

Alternate to the Representative of the Bulgarian Government

Mr. G. CISNEROS Member of the Convention

En relación con el proyecto de informe final del grupo de trabajo II, remitido por el Secretariado, documento de trabajo 25, SN 3794/02 (apartado B II. 2), el miembro de la Convención adscrito al grupo citado D. Gabriel Cisneros formula la siguiente aportación fundada en un estudio realizado por la profesora Dña Belén Becerril, miembro del Instituto de Estudios Europeos, perteneciente a la Universidad San Pablo-CEU, sobre el estado actual del Convenio Europeo de Derechos Humanos en los Estados de la Unión Europea.

La Carta de Derechos Fundamentales de la Unión Europea ha colmado un gran vacío en una Comunidad que durante años había carecido de un catálogo escrito de derechos fundamentales. Sin embargo, la Carta no ha dado por zanjado otro debate que se plantea desde los años setenta en la arena comunitaria: la posible adhesión de la Comunidad o de la Unión al Convenio Europeo para la protección de los Derechos Humanos y de las Libertades Fundamentales (en adelante, CEDH).

Los argumentos a favor y en contra de una eventual adhesión son de todos conocidos. Los partidarios alegan que la adhesión aumentaría la protección de los derechos fundamentales en la Unión, extendiendo a las instituciones europeas el mecanismo de control judicial externo al que están sometidos los Estados miembros, y articulando armoniosamente los dos sistemas europeos de protección de derechos fundamentales. Los detractores, por su parte, alegan que la adhesión sería incompatible con el principio de autonomía del Derecho comunitario y significaría la ruptura de la supremacía jurisdiccional del Tribunal de Justicia. A esto hay que añadir las reticencias que despierta el hecho de que, tras una eventual adhesión, la Unión quedaría sometida al control de jueces de terceros Estados, más lejanos a la especificidad de la integración europea, y en ocasiones, con menor tradición democrática y menor experiencia en el control de la observancia de los derechos humanos.

A estos argumentos podríamos sumar uno más que hasta ahora no ha recibido apenas atención y que no obstante podría suponer un obstáculo adicional para que la adhesión pudiese producirse, o al menos, para que ésta pudiese desplegar los efectos esperados.

Los quince Estados miembros de la Unión Europea y los diez Estados candidatos que ultiman en estos meses sus negociaciones de adhesión (Chipre, República Checa, Eslovaquia, Eslovenia, Estonia, Hungría, Letonia, Lituania, Malta, y Polonia) han firmado y han ratificado el CEDH. Sin embargo, una lectura detenida del Convenio y de los trece protocolos que lo han completado y modificado a lo largo de los años, pone de manifiesto que la situación de estos veinticinco Estados respecto al Convenio es muy diversa.

Esta diversidad se deriva principalmente de que, como Tratado internacional, el Convenio admite reservas y declaraciones (algunas de las cuales se refieren a su aplicación territorial) por parte de los Estados firmantes. Los trece protocolos admiten a su vez reservas y declaraciones, y además, éstos no han sido, en su totalidad, firmados y ratificados por los veinticinco Estados. El resultado es que la situación de cada uno de éstos Estados respecto al Convenio es diferente.

Durante muchos años esta diversidad alcanzaba tanto al sistema de protección de los derechos fundamentales como al catálogo de derechos protegidos. Sin embargo, el protocolo XI, abierto a la firma el 11 de mayo de 1997 y en vigor desde el 1 de noviembre de 1998, realizó una profunda reforma del sistema procedimental, simplificándolo y terminando con la notable heterogeneidad existente hasta entonces. El protocolo XI instauró un nuevo Tribunal permanente que conoce de todas las demandas, ya sean introducidas por los Estados o por los particulares<sup>1</sup>. No obstante, la diversidad sigue siendo muy notable en lo que respecta a la parte sustantiva, es decir, al catálogo de derechos y libertades protegidos (derechos y libertades de los artículos 2 a 14 del CEDH, completado por los Protocolos 1, 4, 6, 7, 12 y 13).

Derechos y libertades de los artículos 2 a 14 del CEDH:

El Convenio recoge en su artículo 1 la obligación de respetar los derechos humanos. Las Altas Partes contratantes reconocen a toda persona dependiente de su jurisdicción los derechos y libertades que están definidos en el Título I del Convenio:

Art. 2: Derecho a la vida.

Art. 3: Prohibición de la tortura.

Art. 4: Prohibición de esclavitud y del trabajo forzado.

Art.5: Derecho a la libertad y a la seguridad.

Art.6: Derecho a un proceso equitativo.

Art.7: No hay pena sin ley.

Art.8: Derecho al respeto de la vida privada y familiar.

Art.9: Libertad de pensamiento, de conciencia y de religión.

Art.10: Libertad de expresión.

Art.11: Derecho de reunión y de asociación.

Art.12: Derecho a contraer matrimonio.

Art.13: Derecho a un recurso efectivo.

Art.14: Prohibición de discriminación.

Todos los Estados miembros de la Unión, así como los diez Estados candidatos cuya situación examinamos, han firmado y ratificado el Convenio, por lo cual, los veinticinco reconocen estos derechos y libertades a toda persona dependiente de su jurisdicción. No obstante, las reservas y declaraciones emitidas a estos artículos son muy numerosas, como puede examinarse en el primer cuadro matricial que hemos recogido a continuación. Una mención especial merecen los artículos 5 y 6, pues a ellos se refieren la mayor parte de las reservas y declaraciones emitidas por los Estados.

Derechos y libertades del Protocolo 1º:

El Protocolo 1º, abierto a la firma el 20 de marzo de 1952, y en vigor desde el 18 de mayo de 1954 recoge los siguientes derechos y libertades:

Art.1: Protección de la propiedad.

Art.2: Derecho de instrucción.

Art.3: Derecho a elecciones libres.

Los veinticinco Estados han firmado y ratificado este protocolo, aunque han emitido numerosas reservas y declaraciones a los artículos 1 y 2, tal y como puede examinarse en el segundo cuadro matricial.

Derechos y libertades del Protocolo 4º:

El Protocolo 4º, abierto a la firma el 16 de septiembre de 1963, y en vigor desde el 2 de mayo de 1968, recoge los siguientes derechos y libertades:

Art.1: Prohibición de la privación de libertad por incumplimiento de obligaciones contractuales.

Art.2: Libre circulación.

Art.3: Prohibición de expulsión de nacionales.

Art.4: Prohibición de expulsión colectiva de extranjeros.

Este Protocolo no ha sido firmado por Grecia, y no ha sido ratificado por España ni por el Reino Unido. Además, se han emitido diversas reservas y declaraciones al mismo, tal y como puede examinarse en el tercer cuadro matricial.

Derechos y libertades del Protocolo 6º:

El Protocolo 6º, abierto a la firma el 28 de abril de 1983 y en vigor desde el 1 de marzo de 1985, dispone:

Art.1: Abolición de la pena de muerte.

Conviene no obstante notar que el artículo 2 dispone que “Un Estado podrá prever en su legislación la pena de muerte para aquellos actos cometidos en tiempo de guerra o de peligro inminente de guerra; dicha pena solamente se aplicará en los casos previstos por dicha legislación y con arreglo a lo dispuesto en la misma. Dicho Estado comunicará al Secretario General del Consejo de Europa las correspondientes disposiciones de la legislación en cuestión”.

Este Protocolo ha sido firmado y ratificado por los veinticinco Estados. No se han emitido reservas al mismo, pues tal cosa queda prohibida por su artículo 4. Sí se han emitido declaraciones, tal y como puede examinarse en el cuarto cuadro matricial.

Derechos y libertades del Protocolo 7º:

El Protocolo 7º, abierto a la firma el 22 de noviembre de 1984, y en vigor el 1 de noviembre de 1988, recoge los siguientes derechos y libertades:

Art.1: Prohibición de expulsión arbitraria de extranjeros

Art.2: Derecho a un recurso contra una condena penal

Art.3: Derecho a indemnización por anulación de condena

Art.4: Principio non bis in ídem

Art.5: Igualdad jurídica de los esposos

Este Protocolo no sido firmado por Bélgica, Malta y el Reino Unido, y no ha sido ratificado por Alemania, España, Países Bajos, Polonia y Portugal. Así pues, sólo está en vigor en 17 de los 25 Estados cuya situación examinamos. Además, se han emitido diversas reservas y declaraciones al mismo, tal y como puede examinarse en el quinto cuadro matricial.

Derechos y libertades del Protocolo 12º:

El Protocolo 12 fue abierto a la firma el 4 de noviembre de 2000, pero aún no ha entrado en vigor. Dispone:

Art.1: Prohibición general de discriminación.

Este Protocolo no ha sido firmado por Dinamarca, España, Francia, Lituania, Malta, Polonia, Reino Unido y Suecia. Tan sólo ha sido ratificado por uno de los veinticinco Estados, Chipre, tal y como puede examinarse en el sexto cuadro matricial.

Derechos y libertades del Protocolo 13º:El Protocolo 13 fue abierto a la firma el 3 de mayo de 2002, pero aún no ha entrado en vigor. Dispone:

Art.1: Abolición de la pena de muerte.

Este Protocolo ha sido firmado por los veinticinco Estados y ha sido ratificado por dos de ellos, Irlanda y Malta, tal y como puede examinarse en el séptimo cuadro matricial.

Conclusiones

La situación de los veinticinco Estados respecto al CEDH y sus protocolos varía considerablemente. Por supuesto, en líneas generales la posición es la misma, pues todos han ratificado el Convenio y todos se han sometido al Tribunal, aceptando la obligatoriedad de su jurisdicción y permitiendo a los particulares el acceso al sistema. Sin embargo, un análisis más detallado nos ha permitido ver las diferencias que se encierran tras esa aparente homogeneidad; lo cierto es que el catálogo de derechos y libertades protegidos varía considerablemente en los veinticinco Estados cuya situación hemos examinado.

Esta heterogeneidad puede presentar problemas a la Comunidad o a la Unión de cara a una eventual adhesión ¿Con qué protocolos, qué reservas y qué declaraciones se procedería a tal adhesión?

Mantener todas las reservas y renunciar a la firma de los protocolos no ratificados por todos los Estados miembros supondría adherirse a un denominador común del Convenio, lo cual sería perjudicial para la protección de los derechos fundamentales y además, negaría la autonomía del derecho comunitario.

Sin duda, la solución más acertada sería adherirse a la totalidad del mismo, sin tener en cuenta las múltiples reservas nacionales o incluyendo determinadas reservas propiamente comunitarias. La Comunidad invocaría aquí su propia sensibilidad, como ha venido haciendo en su jurisprudencia defensora de los derechos fundamentales, y recordaría a los Estados que en todo caso, el control se produciría sobre el derecho comunitario, no sobre sus normas de derecho nacional.

Sin embargo, esta solución no dejaría de plantear problemas, más aún con los delicados fenómenos de “incorporación” que pueden producirse en aquellos casos en los que las fronteras son muy difusas, y el Tribunal de Luxemburgo debe ser muy meticuloso para no incorporar la normativa nacional a su control de protección de derechos fundamentales.

En todo caso, por encima de estas consideraciones de carácter jurídico, la notable heterogeneidad que se ha señalado en este estudio pone de manifiesto que el Consejo de Europa, con sus 44 Estados miembros y su enorme diversidad, es un marco muy lejano al que representa la Unión Europea del siglo XXI: una comunidad de valores integrada, homogénea y sólidamente asentada en sus Estados miembros.

También se ha puesto de manifiesto que el CEDH es un Tratado flexible y complejo, carente de la transparencia y la simplicidad que precisa en la actualidad la protección de los derechos fundamentales en la Unión. En este sentido conviene recordar que el Informe sobre Derechos Fundamentales en la Unión Europea del grupo de expertos presidido por el profesor Spiros Smitis, de febrero de 1999, afirmaba que: “Los derechos fundamentales sólo pueden cumplir su función si los ciudadanos conocen su existencia y son conscientes de la posibilidad de hacerlos aplicar, por lo que resulta esencial expresar y presentar los derechos fundamentales de forma que todos los individuos puedan conocerlos y tener acceso a ellos; dicho de otro modo, los derechos fundamentales deben ser visibles (...) Deben encontrarse los medios para conseguir la máxima visibilidad de los derechos, lo que implica su enumeración expresa, a riesgo de repetirse, en lugar de una simple referencia general a otros convenios en los que figuran”.

Tras largos años de protección jurisprudencial de los derechos fundamentales, el sistema europeo precisa, sobre todo, claridad y transparencia. Los Derechos Fundamentales de la Unión deben ser los de Carta, y su intérprete supremo debe ser el Tribunal de Justicia de Luxemburgo.

Mr. A. ARABADJIEV, Alternate Member

Since I will not be able to attend the meeting of the working group on 21 October 2002 and "any reactions" to the draft are allowed,

I want to state that I find that the draft reflects in a correct and balanced manner the discussions held in the Working Group and the common understanding reached by the Group on most of the key issues included in its mandate.

For this reason I prefer not to suggest any amendments to the proposed text.

On some issues which need, in my view, to be further clarified or strengthened, I will express my opinion during the debate on the report in the Convention Plenary. These include:

- The distinction between "rights" and "principles";
- The "scope" of EU accession to the ECHR( and the specific possible situation of the Strasbourg Court having to rule on the allocation of competences between the Union and the Member States when an application is addressed against both);
- The limits reached (in the ECJ's case-law) as to individual access to that court.

Mr. Diego López Garrido, Alternate Member*Contribución al Proyecto de Informe Final del Grupo de Trabajo II (Carta)

Quiero mostrar mi acuerdo con el conjunto del Proyecto de Informe. No obstante, formulo las siguientes observaciones:

1. Entiendo que el informe corresponde al consenso posible obtenido en el seno del Grupo, aun cuando no estemos de acuerdo en todos sus extremos.
2. La redacción del Informe ha tenido en cuenta suficientemente las preocupaciones y reservas manifestadas por algunos miembros del Grupo respecto a la Carta.
3. Por mi parte, recuerdo que presenté a la última sesión del Grupo una serie de enmiendas a las llamadas “cláusulas horizontales”. Algunas de dichas enmiendas fueron aceptadas y otras no. Estas últimas las considero retiradas para así facilitar el acuerdo final sobre el texto del Informe.

En todo caso, quiero señalar que mi aceptación de la redacción del conjunto del Proyecto de Informe se produce en el bien entendido de que la Carta de Derechos Fundamentales debe integrarse en la futura Constitución europea con carácter jurídicamente vinculante, como así se señala en el Proyecto final que se nos ha sometido.

English VERSION

Mr. Diego López Garrido, Alternate Member

Contribution to the Draft Final Report issued by Working Group II (Charter)

I agree with the Draft Report as a whole. However, I should also like to make the following remarks:

1. It is my understanding that the Report reflects the consensus that the Group has been able to agree, even though we have been unable to agree on every point of the Report.
2. The Draft Report adequately reflects the concerns and reservations expressed by some Group members regarding the Charter.
3. At the last Group session I put forward a number of proposed amendments to the ‘horizontal clauses’. Some proposals were accepted, while others were rejected. I hereby withdraw the latter proposals in order to facilitate final agreement on the text of the Report

4. t. In any event, I should like to point out that I accept the Draft Report expressly on the understanding that the Fundamental Rights Charter must form a part of the future European Constitution in a legally binding way, as set forth in the final Draft submitted to the Group members.

Mr. R. Rack, Alternate Member

Dear Commissioner,

I would like to thank you very much for your draft final report of working group II. It reflects to a very great extent the consensus reached in the group and points out all important aspects which arise in respect of the mandate of the group and which were discussed over the past four months.

With respect to some details, however, I could envisage a different or more precise formulation.

Paragraph 2 on page 14 for example seems to suggest that, in case of accession of to the ECHR, the Union's relationship with the Council of Europe is already settled or at least fairly clear. However, especially the representation of the Union in the Committee of Ministers – an organ of the Council of Europe of which the Union will not be a member – does not seem to be an automatic consequence of EU accession to the ECHR. It should be pointed out in the final report of the working group that certain “technical” questions regarding the relationship between the Union and the Council of Europe will have to be settled upon accession. (This entails for example the question of a Union representative in the Committee of Ministers, the participation of the Union in the different monitoring processes of the Council of Europe with regard to the ECHR or the representation in ECHR-related expert committees of the Council of Europe.)

On page 16 footnote 1, to quote the UPA judgement of the European Court of Justice with regard to the obligation of the Member States to provide for effective remedies for rights derived from Union law seems somewhat misleading. While it is true that the Court confirms this obligation of the Member States in para 41 of the UPA judgement, this statement only appears in the context of the argument that direct action for annulment before the Community Court cannot depend on whether the individual is allowed to bring proceedings before a national court to contest the validity of the Community measure at issue. The main statement of the UPA judgement, however, rather seems to envisage a reform of the current system of judicial review of the legality of Community measures of general application under Article 230 TEC.

In general it seems to me that the opinions expressed by the group during the discussion about a possible amendment of Article 230 § 4 TEC were slightly more positive than one might suggest from reading your report.

As to page 10 paragraph 1, I think that the group's discussion on Article 6 § 2 TEU focused on the question of whether there should be a reference to the common constitutional traditions rather than on the question whether a reference to the ECHR should be kept. In particular I would suggest to delete the words “ECHR and” in the last sentence. The sentence would then read: “... such a reference in the Constitutional Treaty could serve to complete the protection offered by the Charter and clarify that Union law is open for future evolutions in Member States' human rights law." If the Union accedes to the ECHR and there are any future developments like, for example a new protocol, it would be – as pointed out later in the draft final report – for the Council and the Parliament to decide whether the Union should sign and ratify this protocol. A future protocol which has not been ratified by the Union cannot become binding on it by way of jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice.

As to this suggested texts of Arts 51 and 52 I would like to point out again that I see them as an extremely generous compromise to some of our group, who feel a need for further clarification or further restrictions of the horizontal charter articles; a view I and many colleagues do not really share. Therefore any additional step towards watering down the substance and legal implications of the charta would certainly not be acceptable.

Due to the forthcoming elections in Austria I will not be able to attend the group's final meeting on October 21. I would hope that you will take my above-mentioned concerns into account when drafting the final version of the report.

However, if consensus on these points cannot be reached, I should like to accept the report as it stands.

Yours sincerely,

Reinhard Rack.

Mr. V.P. Andriukaitis, Member of the Convention

Working Group II “Integration of the Charter/Accession to the ECHR”

I generally support the draft final report of the Working Group II. Nevertheless, I would like to make a few comments on certain aspects of the report.

1. I fully agree with the premise that the whole Charter - including its Preamble - should be respected and debates on its content should not be reopened by the Convention. However, in section entitled “Preamble of the Charter” of Part A of the report we read about the splitting of the Charter Preamble from the Charter articles and about “enrichment” of the Charter Preamble “by further elements as appropriate, should it be used as a Preamble to the Constitutional Treaty”.

Firstly, I would hesitate to support the proposal of cutting the text of the Charter in two parts and separating the Preamble from the body of the Charter. The Working Group does not seem to have reached a consensus on this point. I would rather see the whole text of the Charter - including its Preamble - kept intact and incorporated into the Constitutional Treaty as its first and principle Chapter.

Secondly, I would be highly reluctant to support the idea of “enriching” the Charter Preamble. To my mind, in essence it would mean reopening of the debates on the content of the Charter involving lengthy and controversial drafting exercise. Moreover, that the majority of the members of our Working Group seem to strongly oppose such an idea.

2. Under the mandate of our Working Group (CONV 72/02), we were entrusted with examining the question whether to keep a reference - of the kind currently in Article 6 § 2 TEU – to common constitutional traditions of the Member States and the ECHR.

I would like to encourage the Working Group to take a stand on this issue. I do not think that we have to make a “firm” recommendation, but at least to express our view. Moreover that the tendency to favour EU's accession to the ECHR is quite strong and seems to be the majority opinion among the members of our group. Therefore, I would like to support the opinion of a number of our members that the reference to the two external sources of inspiration for fundamental rights in current Article 6 § 2 TEU after the Charter is incorporated in the Constitutional Treaty, will be redundant, and thus not necessary.

3. Under the mandate of our Working Group (CONV 72/02), we were also asked to express our opinion on the question of appeals to the Court of Justice, namely amendments to Article 230 § 4 TEC with regard to the right of direct access by individuals to the Court of Justice.

The language of the section entitled "Access to the Court of Justice" of the draft final report, to my mind might be strengthened. The statement that "the Group's discussion has shown that a certain lacuna of protection might exist, given the current condition of "individual concern" in Article 230 § 4 TEC and the case law interpreting it" seems to be quite weak and insufficient to express the opinion on the matter as important as ensuring effective judicial protection of fundamental rights.

Again, I would like to urge the Working Group not to refrain from stating its position on the issue. I agree that the "division of work" between the Community and national courts should not be "profoundly altered", but at the same time, a number of the members of our Working Group seem to share the view that there is a need to expand the right of direct access by individuals to the Court of Justice. I fully share this view.

Mr. N. Mac Cormick, Alternate Member

I must thank you and Commissioner Vitorino for the excellent work which has been done in putting together the Draft Report. Being in Texas at the moment, I am behind time for returning comments, but perhaps it will be helpful to know that I am fully happy with the Draft Report as it stands now.

I have to restate my apology for absence from the Group's final meeting, as I am continuing from here to Canada to give some lectures.

Please convey to Commissioner Vitorino my sincere congratulations on the excellent conduct and outcome of the Group's deliberations, and to the other members of the secretariat as well as yourself my thanks for the extremely efficient servicing of the Group's work.

Yours sincerely,

Neil MacCormick

Observations de Mme Paciotti au WD 25 du groupe "Charte"

Au Secrétariat de la Convention

Observations sur le document de travail 25 du Groupe de travail "Charte"

En rapport avec le contenu du projet de rapport final, que je partage en grande partie, je souhaite vous communiquer que je suis en désaccord avec ce qui est écrit au point 6 de la lettre A et confirmer ma divergence par rapport aux clauses horizontales ajoutées à l'article 52 de la Charte, reproduites en annexe au rapport, en particulier en me référant à la clause 52.5.

1. Au point A.6 il est question de la distinction - qui aurait été fondamentale dans la précédente Convention - entre droits et principes et il est prétendu que les principes seraient différents des droits parce qu'ils demanderaient une mise en oeuvre par des actes législatifs ou exécutifs.

L'opposition entre principes et droits ne me paraît pas pouvoir être proposée sous cette forme. En effet, les droits fondamentaux classiques peuvent eux-mêmes requérir des lois et mesures pour être protégés, alors que les principes peuvent constituer des obligations juridiques immédiatement efficaces qui limitent les pouvoirs législatifs et exécutifs.

Je rappelle aussi que la répartition des articles de la Charte, qui ne se fait plus selon la division traditionnelle en droits politiques et civils et droits économiques et sociaux, mais selon les chapitres "Dignité, Liberté, Egalité, Solidarité, Citoyenneté, Justice", a voulu signifier que toutes les dispositions avaient la même valeur et n'étaient pas susceptibles d'une graduation leur donnant une intensité de protection différente (sauf bien sûr les limites de compétence des institutions européennes, répétés à juste raison dans le rapport).

Par ailleurs, les Cours constitutionnelles des Etats membres, ayant des constitutions écrites et rigides, appliquent directement les principes constitutionnels pour en déduire des droit ou pour les interpréter.

2. Quant aux nouvelles clauses horizontales de la Charte proposées dans le document annexé au rapport, je trouve qu'elles ne feraient que créer des incertitudes d'interprétation et qu'elles modifieraient l'équilibre du compromis de la Convention précédente.

En particulier, la nouvelle clause 52.5 selon laquelle "les dispositions de la présente Charte qui contiennent des principes peuvent être mis en oeuvre par des actes législatifs et exécutifs pris par les institutions et les organes de l'Union ..." ("the provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by institutions and bodies of the Union...") contredit le texte actuel de la clause 51.1 selon lequel "les institutions et organes de l'Union ...respectent les droits, observent les principes ..." ("the institutions and bodies of the Union shall respect the rights, observe the principles...").

Je compte sur le fait que le texte définitif du rapport pourra être modifié.

Madame, Monsieur,

Ne pouvant être parmi vous lundi prochain pour l'adoption du rapport final du groupe de travail II, je tenais à vous faire connaître mon entier accord au texte du projet de rapport.

Bien à vous

Introduction

On the basis of its mandate (doc. CONV 72/02), the Group has, in the course of its seven meetings and having held hearings with several legal experts<sup>1</sup>, examined two main complementary issues:

- the modalities and consequences of possible incorporation of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights (hereinafter: "the Charter") into the Treaties (Chapter A);
- the modalities and consequences of possible accession of the Community / the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights (hereinafter: "the ECHR") (Chapter B).

In addition, the Group has discussed the specific issue of access by individuals to the Court of Justice, which, as mentioned in the Group's mandate, arises independently of the questions of incorporation of the Charter and of accession to the ECHR but has a wider link to fundamental rights (Chapter C).

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Johann Schoo, Director, Legal Service of the Parliament, Mr. Jean-Claude Piris, Jurisconsult, Director-General of the Legal Service of the Council, and Mr. Michel Petite, Director-General of the Legal Service of the Commission, heard on 23 July (see WD N° 13 and CONV 223/02); Mr. Marc Fischbach, Judge, European Court of Human Rights, and Mr. Vassilios Skouris, Judge, European Court of Justice, heard on 17 September (see WD N° 19 and CONV 295/02). Mr. Söderman, European Ombudsman and observer in the Convention, attended the Group's meeting on 4th October and presented his contribution CONV 221/02 CONTRIB 76.

Thanks to the strong sense of commitment, the willingness to engage in detailed technical discussion, and the remarkable spirit of compromise of its members, the Group has succeeded in producing a highly consensual report on both main issues; both parts of this report have to be seen as complementary and belonging to the same context.

A. On the Charter

I. Recommendations as to the form of possible incorporation of the Charter

1. General recommendation

At the outset, the Group stresses that, in accordance with its mandate, the political decision about possible incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty Framework will be reserved for the Convention Plenary. The mandate of the Group has been to prepare for such a decision through examination of a series of specific questions relating to modalities and consequences of such incorporation.

Without prejudice to that political decision, and on the basis of the common understanding reached by the Group on all key issues related to the Charter as set out below, all members of the Group either support strongly an incorporation of the Charter in a form which would make the Charter legally binding and give it constitutional status or would not rule out giving favourable consideration to such incorporation. Different forms exist, in the Group's view, to achieve that result, as set out below; but in any event, a "building block" as central as fundamental rights should find its place in the Union's constitutional framework. The Group is confident that, with its report, the necessary groundwork allowing the Plenary to take its political decision on incorporation has now been done; notably, this general recommendation of the Group has been facilitated by a common understanding, reached within the Group as set out below, on clarifications of certain legal and technical aspects of the Charter which are advisable in case of a legally binding Charter and of great significance for smooth incorporation ensuring legal certainty.

2. Recommendations as to the concrete form of incorporation

The Group is fully aware that the choice to make as to the concrete form of incorporation does not depend exclusively on considerations linked to the Charter or to fundamental rights in general, but also on the overall picture of the Treaty architecture which will emerge in future discussions of the Convention Plenary. For this reason, it would not be appropriate for this Group to restrict the Convention's further overall work by proposing only one technique for incorporation of the Charter. Rather, out of the various possibilities submitted to the Group at the outset of its work<sup>1</sup>, the Group recommends the Plenary to consider the following basic options:

- a. insertion of the text of the Charter articles at the beginning of the Constitutional Treaty, in a Title or Chapter of that Treaty; or
- b. insertion of an appropriate reference to the Charter in one article of the Constitutional Treaty; such a reference could be combined with annexing or attaching the Charter to the Constitutional Treaty, either as a specific part of the Constitutional Treaty containing only the Charter or as a separate legal text (e.g., in form of a Protocol).
- c. According to one member of the Group, an "indirect reference"<sup>2</sup> to the Charter could be used in order to make the Charter legally binding without giving it constitutional status.

Having considered the questions coming under the Group's mandate, a large majority of the Group would prefer the first option in the interest of a greater legibility of the Constitutional Treaty. The second option is favoured by certain other members, some of them emphasising the need to annex the Charter to the Treaty, as a specific part of that Treaty or as a Protocol. The Group as a whole underlines that both these basic options could serve to make the Charter a legally binding text of constitutional status.

II. Conclusions and recommendations on certain legal and technical aspects of the Charter of importance for the smooth incorporation of the Charter into the new Treaty architecture

An important part of the Group's work has been to examine a number of legal and technical aspects of the Charter which, as has become clear during the Group's discussions, are important in the perspective of a smooth incorporation of the Charter, as a legally binding document, into the new Treaty architecture. The Group has found a common understanding on these questions and on ensuing recommendations which are proposed with large majority support, two of its members having reservations, as set out hereafter.

1. Respecting the content of the Charter

The basic starting point underlying the Group's conclusions on the Charter is that the content of the Charter represented a consensus reached by the previous Convention, a body which had special expertise in fundamental rights and served as model for the present Convention, and endorsed by the Nice European Council. The whole Charter - including its statements of rights and principles, its preamble and, as a crucial element, its "general provisions" - should be respected by this Convention and not be re-opened by it.

Accordingly, the Group has not considered any changes to the rights and principles contained in the Charter. The Group recognises however that certain technical drafting adjustments in the Charter's "general provisions" are nonetheless possible and appropriate as explained below; the Group therefore proposes to the Plenary the drafting adjustments set out in the Annex to this report<sup>1</sup>. It is important to note that these adjustments proposed by the Group do not reflect modifications of substance. On the contrary, they would serve to confirm, and render absolutely clear and legally watertight, certain key elements of the overall consensus on the Charter on which the previous Convention had already agreed. They are prompted by the new perspective of a Constitutional Treaty which has arisen in the present Convention, but also by the concern of legal certainty in the field of fundamental rights, to which the Charter is designed to contribute. Thus, all drafting adjustments proposed herein fully respect the basic premise of the Group's work, i.e. to leave intact the substance agreed by consensus within the previous Convention, and the Group urges the Plenary equally to respect this premise when considering the proposed drafting adjustments.

<sup>1</sup> In addition to the adjustments indicated in the Annex, it should be kept in mind that, depending on the future Treaty architecture, purely drafting adjustments may become necessary to the various references, made throughout the Charter, to "the Treaties", "the Community Treaties", "the Treaty on the European Union", "Community law", etc., see doc. CONV 116/02, p. 7.

2. Incorporation of the Charter will not modify the allocation of competences between the Union and the Member States

The Group is able to confirm that incorporation of the Charter will in no way modify the allocation of competences between the Union and the Member States. This point, on which there was consensus already in the previous Convention, is currently reflected in Article 51 § 2 of the Charter. The fact that certain Charter rights concern areas in which the Union has little or no competence to act is not in contradiction to it, given that, although the Union's competences are limited, it must respect all fundamental rights wherever it acts and therefore avoid indirect interference also with such fundamental rights on which it would not have the competence to legislate.

However, in order to render this point clear beyond any doubt, even in the perspective of a Charter forming part of a constitutional treaty, the Group recommends the drafting adjustments to Article 51 § 1 and 2 set out in the Annex. Moreover, the Group considers it useful to confirm expressly, in Article 51 § 2, in light of established case law, that the protection of fundamental rights by Union law cannot have the effect of extending the scope of the Treaty provisions beyond the competences of the Union.<sup>1</sup>

Furthermore, the Group recalls in this context that the Charter was drafted with due regard to the principle of subsidiarity, as is clear from its Preamble, its Article 51 § 1 and from those Charter Articles which make references to national laws and practices; it seems appropriate to the Group to include a clause in the general provisions of the Charter (see Article 52 § 6 in the Annex) recalling these references. Likewise, it is in line with the principle of subsidiarity that the scope of application of the Charter is limited, in accordance with its Article 51 § 1, to the institutions and bodies of the Union, and to Member States only when they are implementing Union law.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> It should be noted that, upon possible incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty, the current wording of Article 46 (d) TEU would have to be brought in line with existing case law and Article 51 of the Charter on the (limited) application of fundamental rights to acts of Member States.

3. Full compatibility between the fundamental rights of the EC Treaty and the Charter articles which restate them

As regards the specific case of those fundamental rights which are already expressly enshrined in the EC Treaty and merely "restated" in the Charter (notably rights derived from Union citizenship)<sup>1</sup>, there was already consensus in the previous Convention on the principle that the legal situation as defined by the EC Treaty should remain unaffected by the Charter; this is presently expressed in the "referral clause" of Article 52 § 2 of the Charter<sup>2</sup>.

Reconfirming that point, the Group has reached consensus on the need to have, as concerns these rights, a legally "watertight" referral clause, such as presently included in Article 52 § 2 of the Charter, ensuring complete compatibility between the statements of the rights in the Charter and their more detailed regulation as currently found in the EC Treaty. The Group stresses that this clause of Article 52 § 2 will, if the Charter is to become a part of the constitutional treaty, logically need a slight drafting adjustment, so as to make it clear that the referral is made to other parts of Treaty law where the conditions and limits of the exercise of these rights are defined. The precise formulation of such a drafting adjustment, reflecting that principle of compatibility, cannot be undertaken at this stage as it will depend on the exact overall Treaty architecture.

Furthermore, the Group is of the view that, as regards these rights, "replication" ("dédouplements") between the Charter and other parts of Treaty law might, to a limited extent, be inevitable for legal reasons and will not be harmful, given that, as is proposed, a referral clause will ensure compatibility.

The Group signals that if, as advocated by a large majority of the Group, incorporation is achieved by the insertion of the Charter text in the first part of the Constitutional Treaty, it would then become necessary to combine, in an appropriate manner, in that Treaty the Charter articles on citizens' rights and the provisions on citizenship of the EC Treaty having constitutional importance; this should be considered as a technical operation raising no political problems.

4. Correspondence between Charter rights and rights guaranteed by the ECHR

The Group underlines and reconfirms the central importance of Article 52 § 3 of the Charter, on those Charter rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR; it recalls that this clause was a crucial element of the overall consensus in the previous Convention.<sup>1</sup> On the basis of the "Explanations" on the Charter<sup>2</sup>, the Group confirms its common understanding on the meaning of this provision: the rights in the Charter which correspond to ECHR rights have the same scope and meaning as laid down in the ECHR; this includes notably the detailed provisions in the ECHR which permit limitations of these rights. The second sentence of Article 52 § 3 of the Charter serves to clarify that this article does not prevent more extensive protection already achieved or which may subsequently be provided for (i) in Union legislation and (ii) in some articles of the Charter which, although based on the ECHR, go beyond the ECHR because Union law acquis had already reached a higher level of protection (e.g., Article 47 on effective judicial protection, or Article 50 on the right not to be punished twice for the same offence). Thus, the guaranteed rights in the Charter reflect higher levels of protection in existing Union law.

5. An interpretation in harmony with common constitutional traditions

The Group stresses that the Charter has firm roots in the Member States' common constitutional traditions, which were brought together impressively in the previous Convention's work. The extensive case law on fundamental rights derived from the common constitutional traditions established by the Court of Justice and confirmed by Article 6 § 2 TEU, represents an important source for a number of rights recognised by the Charter. In order to emphasise the importance of these roots and in the interest of smooth incorporation of the Charter as a legally binding document, the large majority of the Group proposes to include a rule of interpretation in the general provisions (see Article 52 § 4 in the Annex); two of its members have reservations against this proposal. The rule is based on the wording of the current Article 6 § 2 TEU and takes due account of the approach to common constitutional traditions followed by the Court of Justice as explained by Judge Skouris at the hearing of 17 September. Under that rule, rather than following a rigid approach of "a lowest common denominator", the Charter rights concerned should be interpreted in a way offering a high standard of protection which is adequate for the law of the Union and in harmony with the common constitutional traditions.

6. The distinction between "rights" and "principles" in the Charter

The Group stresses the importance of the distinction between "rights" and "principles", which was an important element – already expressed in the Preamble and in Article 51 § 1 of the Charter - of the consensus reached by the previous Convention. In order to confirm that distinction while increasing legal certainty in the perspective of a legally binding Charter with constitutional status, the large majority of the Group proposes an additional general provision (see Article 51 § 5 in the Annex) encapsulating the understanding of the concept of "principles" which marked the work of the previous Convention and has been recalled in the discussions of the Working Group by members of that Convention; two of its members have reservations against this proposal. According to that understanding, principles are different from subjective rights. They shall be "observed" (Article 51 §1) and may call for implementation through legislative or executive acts; accordingly, they become significant for the Courts when such acts are interpreted or reviewed. This is consistent both with case law of the Court of Justice<sup>1</sup> and with the approach of the Member States' constitutional systems to "principles" particularly in the field of social law.

In addition, with the proposed clause the Group reconfirms the line followed by the previous Convention to express the character ("right" or "principle") of individual Charter articles as clearly as possible in the wording of the respective articles taking into account the important guidance provided by the "Praesidium's Explanations", supplemented by explanations from the current Working Group (see section III.3. below), permitting future jurisprudence to rule on the exact attribution of articles to the two categories.

Megret, tome 3, pp. 80 et seq.

III. Recommendations concerning further questions arising in the context of possible incorporation

1. Preamble of the Charter

The Group considers the Charter Preamble as a crucial element of the overall consensus on the Charter reached by the previous Convention. The Group therefore recommends that this element should in any event be preserved in the future Constitutional Treaty framework. The Group also recalls that the Charter Preamble comprises language on the fundamental nature of the Union going well beyond the area of fundamental rights. As is the case with the Charter as a whole, the concrete form of an "incorporation of the Charter Preamble" into the Treaty framework, as recommended by the Group, will equally depend on the overall Treaty structure to be defined by the Plenary. Thus, if the Charter articles were to be inserted directly in the Constitutional Treaty, the Charter Preamble should be used as the Preamble to the Constitutional Treaty. If in turn the Charter is incorporated as a specific part of the Constitutional Treaty or as a separate binding legal text (e.g., in the form of a Protocol) within the Union's constitutional architecture, the Charter Preamble could remain attached to the text of the Charter without any changes; that would of course not preclude the Convention from using, for the drafting of the new Treaty preamble, the elements of general importance to be found in the Charter preamble.

2. Continued reference to external sources (such as currently found in Article 6 § 2 TEU)

The Group discussed whether or not, in case of incorporation of the Charter, the Constitutional Treaty should also contain a reference to the two external sources of inspiration for fundamental rights, as is currently found in Article 6 § 2 TEU, i.e. the ECHR and the constitutional traditions common to the Member States. Valid arguments have been advanced both for and against this.

Some members have taken the view that maintaining such a reference would be redundant and create legal confusion, given that the Charter already includes rights derived from the ECHR and the common constitutional traditions and makes references to these sources. Others have argued that such a reference in the Constitutional Treaty could serve to complete the protection offered by the Charter and clarify that Union law is open for future evolutions in ECHR and Member States' human rights law.

In any event, the Group recognises that this question is closely related to the choice of the form of incorporation which the Convention will have to make. The Group therefore refrains from making a firm recommendation on this issue; instead, it limits itself to stating that such a reference, if appropriately drafted<sup>1</sup>, is not excluded by the prospect of a legally binding Charter, and signals the issue to the Plenary for consideration.

3. The importance of the "Explanations"

The Group stresses the importance of the "Explanations", drawn up at the instigation of the Praesidium of the previous Convention<sup>2</sup>, as one important tool of interpretation ensuring a correct understanding of the Charter<sup>3</sup>. It recognises that these Explanations are presently not sufficiently accessible for legal practitioners. To the extent that the Convention takes on board the drafting adjustments proposed by this Group, the corresponding explanations given in this report should be fully integrated with the original Explanations. Upon possible incorporation of the Charter, attention should then be drawn in an appropriate manner to the Explanations which, though they state that they have no legal value, are intended to clarify the provisions of the Charter. In particular, it would be important to publicise them more widely.

4. Procedure for future amendment of the Charter

As a consequence of possible incorporation of the Charter into the Constitutional Treaty framework, the question will arise according to which procedure the Charter can be amended in the future. However, the Group has considered that this question goes beyond its mandate since it will have to be examined by the Plenary as part of the general question of amendment procedure(s) for the various building blocks of the future Treaty framework.

B. On accession to the European Convention on Human Rights

I. General conclusions and recommendations

Just as in the case of the Charter, the Group stresses at the outset that, in accordance with the Group's mandate, the political decision about the perspective of possible accession to the ECHR by the Union (i.e. by the new single legal personality as emerging from the work of Working Group III) will be reserved to the Convention Plenary. The mandate of the Group has been to prepare such a decision through examination of a number of specific questions relating to modalities and consequences of possible accession.

The Group furthermore stresses that the Convention is to decide only on whether to introduce into the new Treaty a constitutional authorisation enabling the Union to accede to the ECHR. In contrast, it would later be for the institutions of the Union, notably for the Council deciding by unanimity, to open negotiations for an accession treaty and set the concrete framework of those negotiations; during such negotiations, a range of technical questions regarding the concrete modalities of accession, of which the Group has taken due note<sup>1</sup>, will have to be dealt with. Likewise, the decision on the appropriate timing for possible accession by the Union to the ECHR and to its various additional protocols should be left for the Council. All these questions are not of a constitutional nature and therefore not for the Convention.

Without prejudice to the political decision by the Plenary, and on the basis of the arguments and conclusions including on certain safeguards as set out below, all members of the Group either strongly support or are ready to give favourable consideration to the creation of a constitutional authorisation enabling the Union to accede to the ECHR.

The main political and legal arguments speaking in favour of accession by the Union to the ECHR, which have been recognised by the Group, are the following:

- As the Union reaffirms its own values through its Charter, its accession to the ECHR would give a strong political signal of the coherence between the Union and the "greater Europe", reflected in the Council of Europe and its pan-European human rights system.

<sup>1</sup> See notably WD N° 8, containing a study carried out within the Council of Europe on technical and legal questions of possible accession to the ECHR.

- Accession to the ECHR would give citizens an analogous protection vis-à-vis acts of the Union as they presently enjoy vis-à-vis all the Member States. This appears to be a question of credibility, given that Member States have transferred substantial competences to the Union and that adherence to the ECHR has been made a condition for membership of new States in the Union.
- Accession would be the ideal tool to ensure a harmonious development of the case law of the two European Courts in human rights matters; for some, this argument has even greater force in view of a possible incorporation of the Charter into the Treaties. In this connection, mention should also be made of the problems resulting from the present non-participation of the Union in the Strasbourg judicial system in cases where the Strasbourg Court is led to rule indirectly on Union law without the Union being able to defend itself before that Court or to have a judge in the Court who would ensure the necessary expertise on Union law.

The Group has looked in depth into the possible impact of accession to the ECHR on the principle of autonomy of Community (or Union) law including the position and authority of the European Court of Justice. It has emerged from the Group's discussion and expert hearings<sup>1</sup> that the principle of autonomy does not place any legal obstacle to accession by the Union to the ECHR. After accession, the Court of Justice would remain the sole supreme arbiter of questions of Union law and of the validity of Union acts; the European Court on Human Rights could not be regarded as a superior Court but rather as a specialised court exercising external control over the international law obligations of the Union resulting from accession to the ECHR. The position of the Court of Justice would be analogous to that of national constitutional or supreme courts in relation to the Strasbourg Court at present.

The Group stresses that the incorporation of the Charter into the Treaties and the Union's accession to the ECHR should not be regarded as alternatives, but rather as complementary steps ensuring full respect of fundamental rights by the Union: just as the existence of the Charter does not in any way diminish the benefits of extending the control of the Strasbourg Court to cover Union acts, so accession to the ECHR does not reduce the significance of the Union's own catalogue of fundamental rights. The two steps would lead to a situation analogous to that in the laws of the Member States whose Constitutions protect fundamental rights but who at the same time have subscribed to the additional external human rights check of the Strasbourg system.

In the light of the above, the Group therefore recommends (subject to the above-mentioned political decision and the safeguards set out below) that a legal basis should be inserted at an appropriate place in the Constitutional Treaty which would authorise the Union to accede to the ECHR. The drafting of such a legal basis could be kept fairly simple<sup>1</sup>. Given the constitutional significance of possible accession, it should however also be specified that the signature and conclusion of the accession treaty require a decision by the Council by unanimity and the assent of the European Parliament; otherwise, the normal procedures for international agreements would apply.

II. Conclusions and recommendations with respect to specific questions linked to possible accession by the Union to the ECHR

1. Accession to the ECHR will not modify the division of competences between the Union and the Member States

The Group agrees on the central importance of the fact that accession by the Union to the ECHR - like incorporation of the Charter - will in no way modify the allocation of competences between the Union and the Member States. According to the Group's common understanding, the legal "scope" of the Union's accession to the ECHR would be limited to issues in respect of which the Union has competence; it would thus not lead to any extension of the Union's competences, let alone to the establishment of a general competence of the Union on fundamental rights<sup>2</sup>. Accordingly, "positive" obligations of the Union to take action to comply with the ECHR would arise only to the extent to which competences of the Union permitting such action exist under the Treaty.

The Group recommends the use of certain technical devices in order to clarify with certainty that the Union's accession to the ECHR does not modify the allocation of competences. Firstly, a provision clarifying this point could be included in the possible legal basis authorising accession. Secondly, upon accession, a statement stressing the Union's limited competences in the area of fundamental rights could be included in a provision in the accession treaty and / or in an accompanying declaration made by the Union. Thirdly, a mechanism allowing the Union and a

<sup>1</sup> The legal base could for example state that the Union shall be authorised to accede to the ECHR. On a possible additional clause clarifying that the division of competences shall not be modified, see the next section of this report.

<sup>2</sup> Existing preparatory work for accession has also proceeded upon this understanding, see the Council of Europe's study, WD N° 8, at para. 26, an understanding confirmed by Judges Skouris and Fischbach (WD N° 19; CONV 295/02) and by Mr. Petite (WD N° 13) at the respective hearings.

Member State to appear jointly as "co-defendants" before the Strasbourg Court could ensure that that Court would not make any ruling on the allocation of competences between the Union and the Member States<sup>1</sup>.

In this context, it is important to bear in mind that accession by the Union to the ECHR would not mean that the Union would become a member of the Council of Europe, nor that it would become a general political player in Strasbourg. Rather, the Union and its law would simply take part (with a "scope" limited to its competences) in the specific system of judicial human rights control established by the ECHR. Basically (and without anticipating the details to be negotiated upon accession), there would be a judge at the Strasbourg Court elected "with respect to" ("à titre de") the Union, who would contribute specific expertise in Union law to the Court. Furthermore, a representative of the Union would take part in the Committee of Ministers' specific task of supervising execution of judgments under Article 46 ECHR (which is important notably to ensure that the Committee is properly informed on questions of Union law such as on the system of competences), but not in the Committee's general functions outside of the ECHR.<sup>2</sup>

2. The Member States' individual positions with respect to the ECHR will be unaffected by the Union's accession

The Group underlines the importance of the principle that accession by the Union to the ECHR does not affect the positions which the Member States have taken individually with respect to the ECHR, as reflected in particular in their individual decisions on the ratification of certain additional protocols, in the reservations they have entered upon ratification of the ECHR or its additional protocols, and in their right to make specific derogations. The Group stresses that this point can be fully taken into account, since:

- As explained above, the Convention now has to discuss the insertion in the Treaty of a legal basis permitting accession by the Union to the ECHR. If such a possible legal basis were inserted, it would then be for the Council to define, by unanimity, to which additional protocols the Union should accede and when, and which reservations the Union should enter in respect of the ECHR in its own name.

<sup>2</sup> This statement is without prejudice to presently existing arrangement of participation in the meetings of the Committee of Ministers by the Community without a right to vote, see WD N° 8, at para. 34.

- The Member States' individual reservations made in respect of the ECHR and additional protocols, as well as their right to make specific derogations (Article 15 ECHR), would in any event remain unaffected by accession since they concern the respective national law, whereas accession by the Union would have legal effect only insofar as Union law is concerned.

III. Conclusions with respect to alternative mechanisms proposed to accession to the ECHR

In the light of expert testimony<sup>1</sup> given to the group on the legal and practical problems with several mechanisms sometimes suggested as alternatives to accession by the Union to the ECHR, such alternative mechanisms (e.g., a special procedure of "referral" or "consultation" from the Court of Justice to the Strasbourg Court, a special recourse to the Strasbourg Court against the institutions without accession, or a "joint panel/chamber" composed of judges from both European Courts), are not recommended by the Group.

C. Access to the Court of Justice

The Group discussed the Union's current system of remedies available to individuals, notably in the light of the fundamental right to effective judicial protection.

In this context, the Group has examined the idea of establishing a special procedure before the Court of Justice for the protection of fundamental rights. As a majority of members had reservations about this idea, the Group does not recommend it to the Convention. The Group underlines however the great benefit which citizens would gain from a possible incorporation of the Charter into the Constitutional Treaty architecture, thereby making the Union's present system of remedies available.

The Group wishes however to draw the Plenary's attention to a different issue, namely the question whether or not the conditions of direct access by individuals to the Court (Article 230 § 4 TEC) need to be reformed in the interest of ensuring effective judicial protection. On this point, the Group's discussion has shown that a certain lacuna of protection might exist, given the current condition of

"direct and individual concern" in Article 230 § 4 TEC and the case law interpreting it, in the specific case of "self-executing" Community regulations which impose directly applicable prohibitions on individuals. On the other hand, a widely shared trend emerged in the group's discussion according to which the present overall system of remedies, and the "division of work" between Community and national courts it entails, should not be profoundly altered by a possible reform of Article 230 § 4 TEC. Some members have referred to the possibility of a provision in the Treaty on the obligation of Member States, as spelt out in recent case law<sup>1</sup>, to provide for effective remedies for rights derived from Union law.

In any event, while the issue of Article 230 § 4 TEC certainly has a nexus with fundamental rights, it transcends the protection of those rights - as judicial protection must exist for all subjective rights -, and it arises quite independently of the concrete questions of the incorporation of the Charter and accession to the ECHR. The Group considers that this issue and its institutional implications must be examined together with other topics such as the limits of Court jurisdiction in Justice and Home affairs<sup>2</sup> or judicial control of subsidiarity. The Group therefore refrains from making concrete recommendations and commends the question of possible reform in Article 230 § 4 TEC, together with the valuable contributions submitted thereon<sup>3</sup>, for further examination by the Convention in an appropriate context.

Article 51 (1):

"The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions and bodies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it by other parts of [this Treaty / the Constitutional Treaty]."

Article 51 (2):

"This Charter does not extend the scope of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for [the Community or] the Union or modify powers and tasks defined by the other [Chapters / parts] of [this Treaty / the Constitutional Treaty]."

add to Article 52:

"52(4) Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions."

"52 (5) The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality."

"52 (6) Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter."

Main points of the report by the Working Group on the Charter submitted to the European Convention at its plenary session on 28 and 29 October 2002.

Chairman of the Working Group: Mr António Vitorino

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS: AN INTEGRAL PART OF THE FUTURE CONSTITUTIONAL TREATY

The Working Group on the Charter considers it essential that fundamental rights be enshrined in the future constitutional treaty. That premise was basic to the proceedings of the Working Group, which had to provide answers to two questions:

- should the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union be incorporated into the constitutional treaty ?
- should the European Union be able to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights?

The Working Group would answer both questions in the affirmative.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union concerns the Union's institutions and bodies and the Member States when they are implementing Union law (see over). Regarding incorporation of the Charter into the future treaty, the Working Group stresses that:

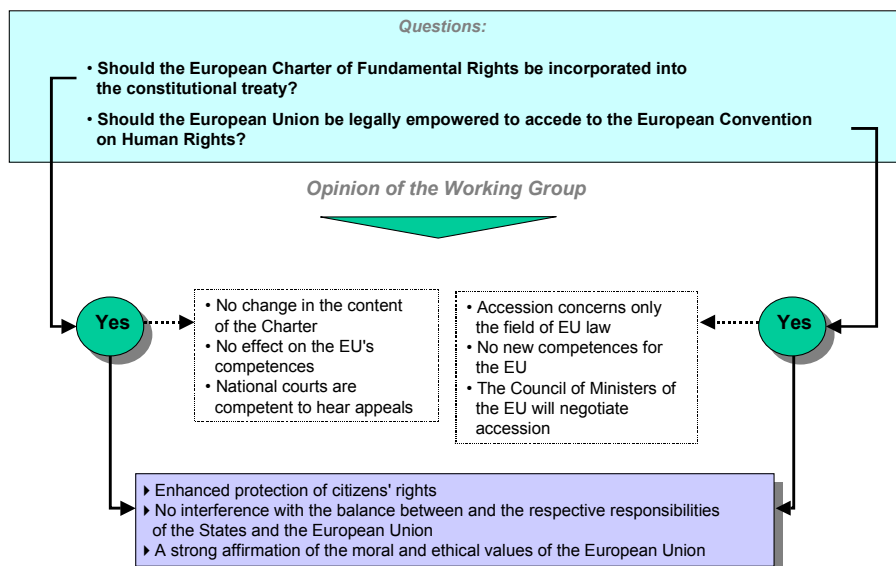

- ▶ no new competences will thereby be conferred on the European Union;
- ▶ the substance of the Charter will not thereby be altered. All that will probably be necessary is a few technical adjustments to the text of the Charter to ensure that it is fully compatible with the EC Treaty;
- ▶ if the Charter becomes a binding text, jurisdiction in actions relating thereto will lie principally with the courts of the Member States, although in certain cases the European Court of Justice will also be competent.

As for the possibility (unconnected with incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty) of European Union accession to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), it will be for the Council of Ministers of the European Union to decide unanimously when and how accession might take place.

The Working Group suggests that a legal basis be created to make this accession possible. Accession would:

- ▶ give citizens the same degree of protection of their fundamental rights at Union level as they enjoy in their own countries;
- ▶ have effect only insofar as the law of the European Union is concerned;
- ▶ create no new competences;
- ▶ not mean that the European Union would become a member of the Council of Europe;
- ▶ not affect the individual positions of the Member States with respect to the ECHR.

Incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty and the ability of the Union to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights would enhance the protection of the fundamental rights of citizens vis-à-vis action at European level and highlight the moral and ethical commitments of the European Union.

Legitimacy of the Charter

- A. The Treaty of Maastricht (1992) first made provision for the concept of European Union citizenship and established, in Article 6(2), that the Union should 'respect fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as general principles of Community law'.<sup>3</sup> For the next decade progress was made in developing the Union's human rights profile mainly in its external policies, but also in the Copenhagen criteria for enlargement (1993);
- B. In June 1999 the European Council of Cologne agreed to establish a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the Union 'in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens'. It resolved that once the Charter had been proclaimed 'it will then have to be considered whether and, if so, how the Charter should be integrated into the treaties'. To draft the Charter the European Council convened an ad hoc body (that decided to call itself a Convention) made up of representatives of the Heads of State and Government and representatives of the President of the Commission, and Members of the European

Parliament and of national parliaments,

- C. The Convention worked from 17 December 1999 until 2 October 2000 under the chairmanship of Roman Herzog, former Federal President of the Federal Republic of Germany. The European Council developed the mandate of the Convention at its meeting in Tampere in October 1999 and reviewed progress at Feira in June 2000. The Convention worked in a very open manner and consulted widely. Notwithstanding the question of the Charter's ultimate status, it decided, famously, to work 'as if' it were drafting a legally binding juridical text and with the express intention of ensuring legal certainty. The Convention precisely fulfilled its mandate from the European Council, which, in turn, unanimously accepted the draft Charter at Biarritz on 13-14 October 2000;
- D. After having received the affirmation of the European Parliament (14 November 2000) and Commission (6 December 2000), as well as that of several national parliaments, the Charter was solemnly proclaimed by the presidents of the three EU institutions at Nice on 7 December 2000. The Intergovernmental Conference also committed itself to considering the future status of the Charter in a year's time as one of four specific items of further constitutional reform of the Union to be concluded in a new IGC in 2004;
- E. In the Laeken Declaration of 15 December 2001 the European Council established a constitutional Convention with legitimacy corresponding to that of the Charter Convention, under the chairmanship of Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, former President of the French Republic, to consider, among other things, whether the Charter 'should be included in the basic treaty and ... whether the European Community should accede to the European Convention on Human Rights';
- F. The Convention has set up a working group under the chairmanship of Commissioner Vitorino to deal with the modalities and consequences of the incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty and accession by the EC/EU to the European Court of Human Rights<sup>1</sup>;

Content

- G. The Charter embraces the classical human rights of the ECHR as developed by the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg. It has a much wider scope, however. First, as befits a catalogue of rights that stem from the competence of the European Union as laid down in the Treaties and as developed by the case law of the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg. Second, importantly, the Charter reaffirms the rights and principles resulting from the constitutional traditions and international treaty obligations common to Member States. Third, the Charter addresses modern scientific and technological developments. Fourth, the Charter fully reflects and respects the European social model;

- H. Like the Bills of Rights common to the constitutions of most Member States, the Charter draws together in a single text a comprehensive catalogue of not only specific rights but also general freedoms, values and principles. In style, form and precision it is a familiar document;
- I. While the Charter was not intended to create new rights, it succeeded in making existing rights more visible. In building a fresh, large consensus around a new formulation of rights, the Charter brings greater clarity and salience to them. It reflects contemporary European norms of good governance with respect to equality and anti-discrimination, social policy, ecology, civic rights, administration and justice. The rights are indivisible: in Europe, liberty, equality and solidarity hang together;
- J. The Charter is a dynamic document, seeking, as in the Preamble, to “strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments”. Its purpose is to assist the Union in its task of further developing common values while respecting the diversity of national identities. Its formulation allows for the future development of the acquis communautaire;
- K. The Charter, therefore, has a durable quality. Despite its unsettled legal status, it was fully legitimised by the manner of its drafting, and it was designed to last. While no such constitutional document can be perfect, and all such documents must be amendable, to open it up now for revision, especially so early in its life, might reduce its integrity and moral force. Experience of the application of a mandatory Charter is needed before amendment can be contemplated. In any case, the current Convention has not been mandated by the Laeken Declaration to re-write the Charter; it should be made clear that such a revision can only be carried out using, at the very least, the same method as for revision of other constitutional provisions,
- L. There may nevertheless have to be some technical changes made to the Charter in relation to the 'horizontal clauses' to enable it to be incorporated in the Treaty;

Scope

- M. The Charter does not attribute competence to the Union. On the contrary, it has the effect of limiting the exercise of power by the EU institutions because of their obligation to respect the Charter. The institutions also have the duty within their competence to promote respect for the provisions of the Charter;
- N. The Charter does not limit the competences of Member States under the Treaties. It is not a substitute for the fundamental rights regimes of Member States, but a complement to them;
- O. The Charter is addressed to the institutions and bodies (and agencies) of the European Union and the Member States when and in so far as they implement Union law and policy;
- P. In so far as the Charter postulates a direct relationship between the citizen on the one hand and supranational authority on the other, it will help the Union respect the principle of subsidiarity. The Charter should set the tone for the whole constitutional settlement;

Effect

- Q. Although the Charter is not directly justiciable, its status as a solemn proclamation means that it has already become, as expected, an important reference document. It is respected by the EU institutions and is invoked by both Member States and citizens<sup>1</sup>, in particular through the petitions submitted to the European Parliament and the complaints lodged with the European Ombudsman. The Commission is determined to regard the Charter as binding upon itself and instituted internal procedures to ensure compliance with its provisions.<sup>2</sup> It treats the Charter as a general principle of Community law. In making legislative proposals, the Commission lays claim to have respected the Charter on a systematic basis<sup>3</sup>;
- R. The Council has not yet chosen to regard the Charter as mandatory, but it has referred expressly to the Charter in four Decisions and in two Resolutions<sup>4</sup>;
- S. Rule 58 of its Rules of Procedure states that Parliament shall pay particular attention to ensuring that legislative acts are in conformity with the Charter of Fundamental Rights; furthermore, Parliament has used the Charter as a template for its annual reviews of the situation as regards fundamental rights in the EU; references to the Charter have appeared frequently in the Parliament's reports and resolutions, as well as in MEPs' questions to the Commission and Council;
- T. Three acts adopted under the codecision procedure have also relied on references to the Charter (access to documents, social exclusion and financial collateral).<sup>5</sup> Numerous others are pending;
- U. The Ombudsman and the Committee on Petitions have received many petitions and approaches from citizens citing the Charter, although there are numerous apparent misunderstandings of its scope or level of protection. Nevertheless they have been in the forefront of those who have actively deployed the Charter in the interests of the citizen. They have upheld complaints and used their powers of own initiative over discrimination in the recruitment and employment policies of the EU institutions in respect of age, sex, race, freedom of expression and parental leave. They also apply systematically the Code of Good Administrative Behaviour to seek to give effect to the provisions of the Charter. They consider that the Charter should be binding whenever Community law is being applied. The

Committee on Petitions and the European Ombudsman and his network of national ombudsmen could play an important role in promoting and monitoring the implementation of the Charter, and the Ombudsman could be empowered to refer important fundamental rights cases to the Court of Justice;

- V. There have been several attempts to call the Charter in aid of litigation in the European Courts. Advocates-General are making an increased number of references to the Charter in their Opinions, and it has become an important source of guidance for the judges.<sup>1</sup> In one case the Court of First Instance has decided that the Charter confirms a right to judicial review as a general principle of Community law.<sup>2</sup> In another case, the same Court, citing the Charter, has sought to widen the access to effective judicial remedy of a party directly but not individually concerned<sup>3</sup>; even though the Court of Justice has ruled against that interpretation because it would cause the Community courts to go beyond their competences<sup>4</sup>, it has nevertheless, at the same time, suggested amending the Treaty accordingly<sup>5</sup>. The European Court of Human Rights has also begun to make positive references to the Charter<sup>6</sup>;
- W. Not only the European Parliament and Commission<sup>7</sup> but also the Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of the Regions have called for the Charter to become legally binding. This powerful message was recently reinforced by the Convention's Civil Society Forum and Youth Convention;

Consonance with ECHR

- X. Fears the Charter would pose a threat to the credibility of the ECHR and the European Court of Human Rights have not been realised. The jurisdiction of the Strasbourg court provides an external monitoring of and the assertion of minimum standards upon the human rights performance of the 44 States of the Council of Europe. The jurisdiction of the Luxembourg court provides an internal control on and an insistence on a high level of respect for human rights within the European Union's legal space. The significance of the Charter is that it provides for a more extensive rights-based regime within the European Union;
- Y. As has been said repeatedly by both the European Parliament and the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, the best means of ensuring coherence between the ECHR and EU human rights law would be for the Union to accede to the former. It is important to remove the anomaly whereby the EU, which enjoys competences attributed by its Member States. Is not a high contracting party to the ECHR alongside those same Member States. If it were to sign up to the ECHR, the EU would be subject to the same external control in respect of human rights as that of its Member States. On the one hand, the existence of the Charter makes EU accession to the ECHR neither unnecessary nor irrelevant. Accession is desirable for its own sake whatever the status of the Charter. On the other hand, accession to the ECHR does not render the incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty any less necessary or relevant; considers this accession as a forerunner to other EU accessions to international instruments for the protection of fundamental human rights;

- Z. Even after accession of the EU to the ECHR, the European Court of Justice would remain the court of last instance for Community law. Its relationship with the European Court of Human Rights would be exactly the same as that of national supreme or constitutional courts who recognise the role of the European Court of Human Rights to verify consistency and compatibility with pan-European human rights norms. The European Union, once endowed with international legal personality, would be represented directly at the Court of Human Rights, thereby strengthening the authority and autonomy of both the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights;
1. Notes that the procedure adopted for the Charter's creation, in conjunction with the wide use made of it by the institutions already, courts and citizens, invests it with great authority; believes that the Charter's effectiveness would be significantly strengthened if the rights laid down in it were to become enforceable under EU law before the courts;
  2. Urges the Convention to enhance legal certainty and end political confusion as to the Charter's scope and level of protection by giving it the status of primary law, thereby making it a central reference point for the Court of Justice and national courts; to this end, stresses that the Charter should be incorporated into the constitutional law of the European Union;
  3. Warns of the dangers of refusing to make the Charter mandatory upon all the EU institutions, bodies and agencies and on Member States when and in so far as they implement EU law and policy, thereby disappointing the expectations of European citizens;
  4. Maintains that an increased status for the Charter is highly desirable in the context of enlargement because it will serve to enshrine a fundamental rights regime at the heart of the European integration process thereby reassuring old, new and potential Member States alike;
  5. Points out that making the Charter binding will initiate a new phase in the development of EU citizenship and that, in order to protect the citizen from any abuse by the European Union of its enlarged powers, judicial remedies will need to be developed;
  6. Proposes, therefore, that the Convention, in close consultation with the Courts, draws up measures to improve direct access to the Court of First Instance (with a right of appeal to the Court of Justice) to enhance the legal protection of individuals; believes that national courts in the Member States and candidate countries must be made more aware of their obligation to deploy the Charter on behalf of the citizen;
  7. Finds it unthinkable to have a modern constitution of the European Union without a binding Bill of Rights, and takes the view that if the Convention drafts a new treaty without the Charter it will fall short of having the constitutional effect which is both necessary and desirable;
  8. Believes that the Charter should be incorporated in the new constitutional treaty without making any changes to its provisions;

9. Notes that the Charter once incorporated should be amendable only according to the most solemn constitutional provisions; insists that any subsequent development of the Charter must be drafted by a new special Convention, to be established at a later stage;
  10. Expects that such a new Convention would be gender-balanced and would work to reinforce the principle of equality between the sexes;
  11. Acknowledges the already good collaboration between the Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights; reiterates its support for the opening of accession negotiations by the Union, to become a high contracting party to the ECHR and other international instruments in the field of human rights;
  12. Recalls that European Union accession to the ECHR is a complement to and not a substitute for the granting of mandatory status to the Charter under EU law, both actions being necessary and timely;
  13. Invites the European Parliamentary delegation to the Convention to submit this resolution as a formal contribution to the Convention;
  14. Instructs its President to forward this resolution to the Council, the Commission, the governments and parliaments of the Member States and candidate countries, the Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights.

B. SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

PART ONE: CONSTITUTIONAL STRUCTURE

PREAMBLE

TITLE I: DEFINITION AND OBJECTIVES OF THE UNION

Article 1

- Decision to establish [an entity called the European Community, European Union, United States of Europe, United Europe].
- A Union of European States which, while retaining their national identities, closely coordinate their policies at the European level, and administer certain common competences on a federal basis.
- Recognition of the diversity of the Union.
- A Union open to all European States which share the same values and commit themselves to promote them jointly.

Article 2

This article sets out the values of the Union: human dignity, fundamental rights, democracy, the rule of law, tolerance, respect for obligations and for international law.

Article 3

Objectives of the Union

This article establishes the general objectives, such as:

- protection of the common values, interests and independence of the Union
- promotion of economic and social cohesion
- strengthening of the internal market, and of economic and monetary union

- promotion of a high level of employment and a high degree of social protection
- a high level of environmental protection
- encouragement for technological and scientific progress
- creation of an area of liberty, security and justice
- development of a common foreign and security policy, and a common defence policy, to defend and promote the Union's values in the wider world.

These objectives shall be pursued by appropriate means, depending on whether competences are allocated wholly or partly to the Union, or exercised jointly by the Member States.

Article 4

Explicit recognition of the legal personality of the [European Community/Union, United States of Europe, United Europe]

TITLE II: UNION CITIZENSHIP AND FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Article 5

This article establishes and defines Union citizenship: every citizen of a Member State is a citizen of the Union; enjoys dual citizenship, national citizenship and European citizenship; and is free to use either, as he or she chooses; with the rights and duties attaching to each.

The article sets out the rights attaching to European citizenship (movement, residence, the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in municipal elections and elections to the European Parliament, diplomatic protection in third countries, right of petition, right to write to, and obtain a reply from, the European institutions in one's own language).

The article establishes the principle that there shall be no discrimination between citizens of the Union on grounds of nationality.

Article 6

The wording of this article will depend on the proceedings of the Working Group on the Charter.

It could be modelled on Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union.

It could:

- either refer to the Charter;
- or state the principle that the Charter is an integral part of the Constitution, with the articles of the Charter being set out in another part of the Treaty or in an annexed protocol;
- or incorporate all the articles of the Charter.

TITLE III: UNION COMPETENCE AND ACTIONS*Article 7

This article sets out the principles of Union action, which must be carried out in accordance with the provisions of the treaty, within the limits of the competences conferred by the treaty, and in compliance with the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality.

Article 8

This article establishes the principle that any competence not conferred on the Union by the Constitution rests with the Member States.

It establishes the primacy of Union law in the exercise of the competences conferred on the Union.

It would set out the rules for effective monitoring of subsidiarity and proportionality. The role of National Parliaments in this respect would be mentioned.

It determines the rules governing the adaptability of the system (Article 308).

It sets out the obligation of loyal cooperation of Member States vis-à-vis the Union, and the principle that the acts of the Institutions are implemented by the Member States.

ANNEX

FREIBURG DRAFT OF A EUROPEAN CONSTITUTIONAL TREATY

Status: November 12, 2002

Preface

This draft of a European Constitutional Treaty has been prepared on the basis of intensive discussions in the framework of a Franco-German working group. It is the result of an academic research project; it is not a mandated expert opinion or an advisory paper for any specific institution.

The following people were members of the research working group:

Prof. Jean François Flauss, Strassbourg/Lausanne;

Jean Marie Woehrling, General Secretary of the Commission Centrale pour la Navigation du Rhin, Strassbourg;

Johannes Schoo, Director in the Legal Service of the European Parliament, Luxembourg;

Prof. Dr. Jürgen Schwarze, Europa-Institute Freiburg e. V.;

the research assistants of Freiburg University Nicolai Böcker, Sebastian Strohmayer, Lukas Wasielewski.

This draft was translated into English by Dr. Marcus Geiss and Quynh Hoang.

Dr. Karl von Wogau, MEP, Strassbourg; Dr. Jan-Peter Hix, Legal Service of the Council, Brussels, as well as Florian Schmidt, LL.M., also research assistant in Freiburg, took part in the deliberations of the working group from time to time.

Insofar as expert opinions of the members of the working group have found their way into the draft, such expertise reflects their personal opinion only.

The seeds of this project were sown by a comparative research project which was carried out by the undersigned in cooperation with research teams from five other Member States of the EU.

This earlier project arrived at the conclusion that, despite all the differences in terms of historical development and conceptual features, there was clear evidence for an approximation of the analyzed national constitutional orders in particular due to the requirements of European integration which meant the time seemed right to draft a European Constitutional Treaty.

The results of the above mentioned research project on constitutional law have been published in their entirety in 2000 by the Nomos Verlag, Baden-Baden in a tome called "Die Entstehung einer europäischen Verfassungsordnung" (ed. J. Schwarze).

They are also available in an English language version („The Birth of a European Constitutional Order", Nomos-Verlag, Baden-Baden 2001) and a French edition („La naissance d'un ordre constitutionnel européen", Nomos Verlag, Baden-Baden 2001).

The idea for the current project which has resulted in this draft of a European Constitutional Treaty was born at a time when the Constitutional Convent which is now chaired by the former French President Giscard d'Estaing was not even agreed upon let alone constituted.

In keeping with the earlier project, this research project has again been kindly sponsored by the Fritz Thyssen Stiftung.

This draft follows the model of a treaty dichotomy, i.e. the separation into two component parts: One (fundamental) part consisting of the actual Constitutional Treaty which is complemented by a second Treaty on the Policies of the Union. Specific amendments and modifications notwithstanding, the rules of the existing Treaties are contained in the Treaty on the Policies of the Union. This differentiation would have the following consequences: As far as the Treaty on the Policies of the Union is concerned, there would be special rules that would allow for easier treaty amendments in the future – albeit subject to the continued requirement for unanimity of the Member States. In keeping with the aims and the nature of the research project, the draft presented hereafter only contains the (fundamental) Treaty for a European Constitution. This approach is justified particularly in view of the fact that the necessary amendments within the Treaty on the Policies of the Union are mainly technical in nature.

The draft focuses on four issues which have been identified in the course of the meetings of the European Council at Nice and Laeken as having priority for the European constitutional reform:

1. A better delimitation of competencies between the Union and its Member States.
2. An improved standard for the protection of human rights by recourse to the Charter of Fundamental Rights.
3. The simplification of the Treaties.
4. The reform of the institutional structure involving the national parliaments.

This draft offers a workable model and proposals regarding these key issues. Furthermore, it proposes certain material modifications towards a reform of the Treaties, based on the extended remit of Laeken. These modifications notwithstanding, the draft is largely based on the current primary law, aiming predominantly at a simplification of the text of the Treaty.

The work of the Convention hitherto has been taken into account in this draft. We reserve the right to continue to amend and modify the presented draft text in the course of the further deliberations of the Convention and in view of the evolving European public debate.

A preliminary draft of this text was discussed on October 11/12, 2002 in Freiburg by a larger group of experts. We now present an updated version. It is to be hoped that the Freiburg Draft will not only serve to inspire academic debate but may also be of use for the deliberations of the Convention and the subsequent Intergovernmental Conference.

Section A: Fundamental Provisions

Art. 1 [Treaty on the Constitution for the European Union]

- (1) Through this Treaty the Member States establish a Constitution for the European Union
- (2) Continuing the process of European integration achieved so far, the Union aims to promote the peaceful co-existence of the peoples in a spirit of open-minded international cooperation, to safeguard a closer unity of the Member States within a uniform institutional framework and to secure economic welfare as well as social balance in an internal market. The Union shall place the citizens of the Union at the heart of its activities.
- (3) This Treaty provides the foundations for the activities of the Union and limits the exercise of its competencies vis-à-vis the Member States and the citizens of the Union.
- (4) The Union has legal personality.

Art. 2 [Fundamental Provisions of the Union]

- (1) The Union is founded on the principles which are common to the legal orders of all the Member States, i.e. the principles of liberty, democracy, the rule of law, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, solidarity and compliance with the rules of public international law. It shall take its decisions as openly and as close to the citizens as possible.
- (2) The Union shall respect the national identity and the organisational structure of its Member States. It shall respect the variety of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe.
- (3) The Member States and the Union are committed to exercising their respective competencies in a spirit of mutual loyalty. The Member States are also obliged to cooperate loyally amongst themselves.

Art. 3 [Primacy and Direct Effect of the Union Law]

- (1) The Union law shall prevail over the law of the Member States.
- (2) Insofar as Union law places direct and unconditional obligations on the Member States, it shall also have direct effect for the individual.

Art. 4 [Fundamental Rights]

- (1) In consideration of the common constitutional traditions of the Member States and the guarantees enshrined in the European Convention on Human Rights, the Union respects the human rights as contained in the Charter of Fundamental Rights solemnly proclaimed at Nice on December 7, 2000.
- (2) The Charter of Fundamental Rights is part of this Constitutional Treaty. It aims to strengthen the standard of human rights' protection for the citizens of the Union both vis-à-vis the institutions and bodies of the Union and the Member States in cases where they implement Union law. It does not interfere with the standard of protection for human rights granted by the constitutional law of the Member States and the European Convention on Human Rights.

Art. 5 [Citizenship of the Union]

- (1) Every person holding the nationality of a Member State shall be a citizen of the Union.
- (2) The citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights conferred by this Treaty, in particular
  - the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in elections to the European Parliament and at municipal elections of the Member State, in which they reside permanently;
  - the right to move and reside freely within the territory of all the Member States;
  - the right to protection by the diplomatic and consular authorities of any Member State.
- (3) The details shall be regulated by a law requiring qualified majority in the Council according to Article 55 paragraph 2.

Art. 6 [Prohibition of Discrimination]

Within the scope of application of this Constitutional Treaty and the Treaty on the Policies of the Union and without prejudice to any special provisions contained therein, any discrimination on grounds of nationality by the Union and the Member States shall be prohibited.

Art. 7 [Tasks]

- (1) It shall be part of the tasks of the Union
  - to create and maintain a European internal market including a common trade policy, to strengthen economic and social cohesion and to establish an economic and monetary union;
  - to maintain and develop the Union as an area of freedom, security and justice;
  - to safeguard its identity on the international scene, in particular through the implementation of a common foreign and security policy including the progressive framing of a common defence policy.
- (2) These tasks shall be carried out in compliance with the rules on the competencies of the Union.

Art. 8 [Principles governing the Exercise of its Tasks]

In implementing its policies, the Union shall respect the following principles:

- the solidarity between the Member States;
- a harmonious, balanced and sustainable development of economic activities;
- sustainable and non-inflationary growth;
- a high degree of competitiveness and convergence of economic performance;
- a high level of employment and of social protection;
- a high level of protection and improvement of the quality of the environment and the quality of life;
- equality between men and women;
- the fight against discrimination within the meaning of Article 21 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Art. 9 [Competencies of the Union]

- (1) To enable the Union to carry out its tasks, the Member States delegate to the Union the sovereign rights of legislation, administration and jurisdiction as set out in this Treaty.
- (2) The Union and its institutions shall act only in compliance with the competencies expressly assigned to them in this Treaty.

Union Policies or of any rule of law relating to the application of these Treaties. Any natural or legal person may, under the same conditions, demand that decisions and Commission-regulations shall be declared void.

(5) Action for Failure to Act

The Member States and the Union may bring an action to establish that an institution of the Union has infringed this Treaty, the Treaty on Union Policies or any rule relating to the application of these Treaties by failing to adopt a decision. Any natural or legal person may, under the same conditions, bring a complaint that the Union has failed to address a legal act to that person.

(6) Fundamental Rights Complaint

Any natural or legal person may contest a legal act of the Union due to a violation of any of the rights granted to it by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the Union if no other judicial recourse is available for seeking review of the violation of the fundamental right in question. Specific requirements for the acceptance of a Fundamental Rights Complaint may be provided for.

(7) Action for Damages

The Court of Justice shall have jurisdiction in disputes relating to the non-contractual liability of the Union to pay damages.

Art. 66 [The European Court]

(1) The European Court shall comprise at least one Judge per Member State. It may be supported in its tasks by Advocates-General.

(2) Specialised judicial panels may be attached to the European Court which shall exercise judicial tasks in certain specific areas.

(3) The Judges and Advocates-General of the European Court shall be chosen from persons whose independence is beyond doubt and who possess the ability required for appointment to high judicial office in their respective Member State. They shall be appointed by unanimous decision of the Council upon a proposal by the governments of the Member States for a term of twelve years. They may not be reappointed.

(4) The Judges shall elect the President of the European Court from among their number for a term of four years. He may be re-elected.

(5) The European Court shall sit in Chambers.

(6) The European Court shall appoint its Registrar. It shall establish its Rules of Procedure in agreement with the Court of Justice. These Rules of Procedure shall require the approval of the Council.

Art. 67 [Procedures with the European Court]

(1) The Law on the Courts of the Union shall determine which of the court actions listed in Article 65 shall be decided by the European Court in first instance. In accordance with the Law on the Courts of the Union, decisions of the European Court shall be subject to a right of appeal to the European Court of Justice on points of law only.

(2) Certain categories of procedures may be allocated to the specialized Chambers in the first instance. In accordance with the Law on the Courts of the Union, the decisions of the Chambers may be contested before the European Court and, in exceptional cases, this further decision may also be subject to appeal to the European Court of Justice on points of law only.

Subject : Draft of Articles 1 to 16 of the Constitutional Treaty

Members of the Convention will find in Annex I a draft of Articles 1 to 16 (Titles I, II and III) as proposed by the Praesidium, and in Annex 2 an explanatory note.

These Articles generally correspond to the description given in the document containing the draft structure for the Constitutional Treaty (CONV 369/02). A few minor changes have been made to the numbering to take account of the debate in the Convention. The draft texts given here reflect the reports of the Working Groups on Legal Personality, the Charter, Economic Governance, Complementary Competencies, the Principle of Subsidiarity and External Action, as well as the guidelines that emerged on the basis of their recommendations during the plenary debate.

DRAFT TEXT
OF THE ARTICLES OF THE TREATY
ESTABLISHING A CONSTITUTION FOR EUROPE

TITLE I: Definition and objectives of the Union

Article 1: Establishment of the Union

1. Reflecting the will of the peoples and the States of Europe to build a common future, this Constitution establishes a Union [entitled ...], within which the policies of the Member States shall be coordinated, and which shall administer certain common competences on a federal basis.
2. The Union shall respect the national identities of its Member States.
3. The Union shall be open to all European States whose peoples share the same values, respect them and are committed to promoting them together.

Article 2: The Union's values

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights, values which are common to the Member States. Its aim is a society at peace, through the practice of tolerance, justice and solidarity.

Article 3: The Union's objectives

1. The Union's aim is to promote peace, its values and the well-being of its peoples.
2. The Union shall work for a Europe of sustainable development based on balanced economic growth and social justice, with a free single market, and economic and monetary union, aiming at full employment and generating high levels of competitiveness and living standards. It shall promote economic and social cohesion, equality between women and men, and environmental and social protection, and shall develop scientific and technological advance including the discovery of space. It shall encourage solidarity between generations and between States, and equal opportunities for all.

3. The Union shall constitute an area of freedom, security and justice, in which its shared values are developed and the richness of its cultural diversity is respected.
4. In defending Europe's independence and interests, the Union shall seek to advance its values in the wider world. It shall contribute to the sustainable development of the earth, solidarity and mutual respect among peoples, eradication of poverty and protection of children's rights, strict observance of internationally accepted legal commitments, and peace between States.
5. These objectives shall be pursued by appropriate means, depending on the extent to which the relevant competences are attributed to the Union by this Constitution.

Article 4: Legal personality

The Union shall have legal personality.

TITLE II: Fundamental rights and citizenship of the Union

Article 5: Fundamental rights

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Constitution. The Charter is set out [in the second part of/in a Protocol annexed to] this Constitution.<sup>1</sup>
2. The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Article 6: Non-discrimination on grounds of nationality

In the field of application of this Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Article 7: Citizenship of the Union

1. Every national of a Member State shall be a citizen of the Union. Citizenship of the Union shall be additional to national citizenship; it shall not replace it. All citizens of the Union, women and men, shall be equal before the law.
2. Citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights and be subject to the duties provided for in this Constitution. They shall have:
  - the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States;
  - the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in elections to the European Parliament and in municipal elections in their Member State of residence under the same conditions as nationals of that State;
  - the right to enjoy, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which they are a national is not represented, the protection of the diplomatic and consular authorities of any Member State on the same conditions as the nationals of that State;
  - the right to petition the European Parliament, to apply to the Ombudsman, and to write to the institutions and advisory bodies of the Union in any of the Union's languages and to obtain a reply in the same language.
3. These rights shall be exercised in accordance with the conditions and limits defined by this Constitution and by the measures adopted to give it effect.

EXPLANATORY NOTE*TITLES I and IIArticle 1:

This Article establishes the Union and describes its fundamental characteristics. In response to requests made at the plenary, the wording proposed is designed to adequately express the dual dimension of a Union of States and of peoples of Europe in terms appropriate to a Constitutional Treaty.

Because of its fundamental political importance, it was deemed advisable to emphasise in Article 1 the Union's respect for the national identity of its Member States; Article 9(6) then lists certain features of national identity which more specifically require respect in the legal sense when the Union is exercising its competences.

It also seems appropriate already to list the conditions for membership of the Union in Article 1, although the procedures for accession of new Member States, suspension of rights and withdrawal from the Union would be dealt with in more detail in Title X.

Article 2

This Article concentrates on the essentials – a short list of fundamental European values. Further justification for this is that a manifest risk of serious breach of one of those values by a Member State would be sufficient to initiate the procedure for alerting and sanctioning the Member State (see Article 45 of the preliminary draft Treaty which would incorporate the mechanism set out in Article 7 TEU), even if the breach took place in the field of the Member State's autonomous action (not affected by Union law). This Article can thus only contain a hard core of values meeting two criteria at once: on the one hand, they must be so fundamental that they lie at the very heart of a peaceful society practising tolerance, justice and solidarity; on the other hand, they must have a clear non-controversial legal basis so that the Member States can discern the obligations resulting therefrom which are subject to sanction.

That does not, of course, prevent the Constitution from mentioning additional, more detailed elements which are part of the Union's "ethic" in other places, such as, for instance, in the Preamble, in Article 3 on the general objectives of the Union, in the Charter of Fundamental Rights (which, unlike this Article, does not, however, apply to autonomous action by the Member States), in Title VI on "The democratic life of the Union" and in the provisions enshrining the specific objectives of the various policies.

Article 3

The philosophy of this Article is to set out the general objectives justifying the very existence of the Union and its action for its citizens in a more cross-sectoral fashion and not to list the specific objectives pursued by the various policies of the Union which are to be found in Part Two of the Treaty.

The fundamental difference between this Article and Article 2 therefore needs to be emphasised: while Article 2 enshrines the basic values which make the peoples of Europe feel part of the same "union", Article 3 sets out the main aims justifying the creation of the Union for the exercise of certain powers in common at European level.

Article 4

In accordance with the recommendation from Working Group III (CONV 305/02), this Article confers legal personality on the Union.

An Article on the Union's legal capacity (see Article 282 TEC), given its highly technical nature, should appear in Part Two of the Constitutional Treaty.

Article 5:

The text proposed reflects two central recommendations by Working Group II (CONV 354/02), on the one hand to incorporate in the Constitution the Charter of Fundamental Rights so that it has constitutional status and is legally binding and, on the other hand, to enable the Union to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights.

As to the technique for incorporating the Charter, the fact that the complete text (with all the drafting adjustments mentioned in the Working Group's final report) will appear either in a separate second part of the Constitution or as a Protocol annexed to it will safeguard its fully binding legal nature and allow the general rules concerning future amendments of the Constitution to be applied to the Charter. Moreover, that technique will also keep the structure of the Charter intact and avoid making the first part of the Constitution more lengthy. At the same time, the reference to the Charter in the first few articles of the Constitution will underline its constitutional status.

The legal basis in paragraph 2 enabling the Union to accede to the ECHR also expressly provides that accession must not affect the division of competences between the Union and the Member States, in line with a recommendation from Working Group II. Only the European Convention on Human Rights is mentioned in this paragraph because of the fact that a Court of Justice opinion in 1996 had rejected Community competence to accede to that Convention on the basis of considerations specific to it. This paragraph is not therefore intended to rule out the possibility of Union accession to other international conventions relating to human rights on the basis of the competences conferred in Part Two of the Treaty.

Paragraph 3 draws on Article 6(2) TEU as it now stands and is intended to indicate clearly that, in addition to the Charter, Union law recognises additional fundamental rights as general principles resulting from two sources – the European Convention on Human Rights on the one hand and the constitutional traditions common to the Member States on the other. As stressed by various members of the Convention in Working Group II (see pages 9 and 10 of the final report, CONV 354/02) and at the plenary, the usefulness of this provision is to make clear that incorporation of the Charter does not prevent the Court of Justice from drawing on those two sources to recognise additional fundamental rights which might emerge from any future developments in the ECHR and common constitutional traditions. That is in line with classic constitutional doctrine which never interprets the catalogues of fundamental rights in constitutions as being exhaustive, thus permitting the development, through case-law, of additional rights as society changes.

ANNEX*THE EU CONVENTION, THE COUNCIL OF EUROPE AND THE FUTURE OF EUROPE*Submitted by Rt Hon David Heathcoat-Amory, MP:
The views of five delegates to the Council of Europe

Five members of the Council of Europe have come together to remind us of some basic facts, and challenge the present autopilot mode of Convention thinking.

All of us should welcome the forthcoming enlargement of the European Union.

But these delegates have a basic message to tell: when EU officials and MEPs say it will reunite Europe, they are wrong.

Europe has already been re-united – in the Common European Home that is their organisation, the Council of Europe.

We must avoid the creation of a second common home which would be at the expense of the Council.

These members, experienced in European politics, fear that the European Union, as it enlarges, will also expand its activities into areas of their competence.

They fear that the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights will compete with the European Convention of Human Rights;

They fear that the Luxembourg Court will clash with the Strasbourg Court;

They fear that the broad legal framework that already exists for Europe based on the Council of Europe's 185 conventions will compete with double standards imposed by the EU;

They fear that the work of their Congress of Local and Regional Authorities in promoting local democracy and transfrontier co-operation will be duplicated by the EU;

They fear that the EU Convention will make recommendations to the Inter – Governmental Conference that will threaten the primacy of the work of the Council of Europe, and undermine the assets they have been developing for over half a century.

This Paper appeals to the EU Convention not to re – invent the Europe we already have – the confederation that is the Council of Europe.

A. Introduction.

The EU Convention will pave the way for institutional reform and a possible constitutional framework. Its outcome will have consequences for all the institutions of Europe including the Council of Europe (COE).

The Council of Europe, not the Common Market - the present EU, was established in 1949 as the political forum for dialogue between governments (through the Committee of Ministers) and national parliaments (in its Parliamentary Assembly) to avoid and resolve disputes.

Today, with 44 member states, it is the only pan-European organisation to represent the entire continent. It can fairly claim the greatest expertise in the field of human rights, democratic institutions, the rule of law, and cultural and educational co-operation.

The Council of Europe represents a confederation of European nation states which, through its conventions, provides a legal framework for the entire continent. Its European Convention on Human Rights, enforced by the Court in Strasbourg, upholds the highest standards of human rights anywhere in the world.

The EU Convention provides an opportunity to confirm the leading role of the COE in the future architecture of the continent. In particular its recommendations to the IGC should avoid competing with or duplicating the work of the Council of Europe.

B. Human Rights and a European Constitution

The European Convention on Human Rights, with its protocols, has been the standard setting 'charter' of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Europe for over 50 years. It is required to be ratified by all COE member states. This includes all EU and EU applicant states. It can be enhanced by the addition of further protocols.

The EU Charter of Fundamental Rights, adopted at the Nice European Council, defines the rights and freedoms of EU citizens. Its status will be considered by the IGC. It is anticipated to become legally binding under the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg and incorporated into an EU constitution.

The EU Charter of Fundamental Rights should not complicate or compete with the European Convention of Human Rights. The Luxembourg Court should not confuse the findings of the Strasbourg Court.

This can be avoided if the EU were to apply for accession to the European Convention of Human Rights to create a single legal mechanism for the protection of human rights applied on an equal basis to all European states.

The European Convention of Human Rights would be an appropriate basis for any EU Constitution. The European Court in Strasbourg should be recognised as the principle judicial authority of Europe.

C. A Legal Framework for the Continent

The 185 Conventions of the Council of Europe, which member states are obliged or encouraged to ratify, provide a legal framework for the entire continent of Europe defining standards on human dignity and democracy, culture, educational and social cohesion, daily life and the media.

They can be enhanced by additional Protocols, and incorporated into national laws.

There is no justification for a separate legal framework for the European Union.

D. The role of National Parliaments in the EU

It is anticipated that the EU Convention will make proposals on a more precise delimitation of competence between the European Union and its member states, and the role of national parliaments in the European architecture.

These may lead to the EU Council concentrating on decision making, the EU Commission on its executive role, with legislative tasks performed by the European Parliament.

A role for national parliaments should be introduced into the European Parliament.

This can be done by introducing an inter-parliamentary chamber to the European Parliament: a body of representatives of national parliaments to form, in due course, a second chamber.

This inter-parliamentary chamber could have responsibility for scrutinising policies that continue to be intergovernmental and areas in which competence is complimentary or shared such as foreign affairs, security and defence, police and judiciary co-operation in criminal matters, and other matters concerning the entire continent.

The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) is the only inter-parliamentary assembly exclusive to Europe, and soon to be representative of every European national parliament.

Members of the national delegations to the PACE are practical politicians representing local constituencies. This double mandate can be used to enhance the parliamentary dimension of the EU.

The PACE can form the basis of any new role for national parliaments that would make up the “democratic deficit” of the European Parliament. That it represents 44 states should be no impediment – rather an asset in being able to promote a constitutional ideal.

E. Local Government in Europe: the CLRAE

The Council of Europe's Congress of Local Regional Authorities (CLRAE) is the only pan-European organisation for promoting local democracy structures and trans-frontier co-operation.

The EU Convention should not seek to introduce duplication or parallel activities by the EU which would undermine the CLRAE.

ANNEX*Initiative for the Incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the European Constitution

The European integration process is rooted in the values, fundamental rights and freedoms enshrined in the European Charter of Fundamental Rights.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights is a unique expression of European identity. It is proof that the European Union is something far more than an economic community, that it is a community united by the shared values of the countries and peoples of Europe.

To the citizens of Europe the Charter is confirmation that in this integrating community to which they belong they have not only duties but also rights. Hence the Charter has a key role to play in helping Europe's citizens identify with the Union.

We therefore welcome the emerging consensus on the need to make the Charter an integral and legally binding part of the European constitution, without thereby conferring on the Union any new competences.

Given the fundamental nature of the Charter, its political impact is just as important as its legally binding status. Anyone looking up the European constitution expects to see his fundamental rights and freedoms spelt out right at the beginning. To tuck away the Charter in some protocol would be to deny its real worth and importance.

We therefore call for the entire Charter to be included in a prominent position in the text of the European Constitutional Treaty itself.

We call on all members of the Convention to endorse this initiative.

Incorporation of the Charter in the EU Constitutional treaty

The Charter of Fundamental Rights makes more visible the values from which the Union draws her inspiration and strength. Those values are firmly rooted in the constitutional traditions of the Member State democracies.

It is the compromise on the Charter reached by Working Group II that offers the possibility of a consensus on giving the Charter a formal place in the Union Constitution. But that possible consensus is not based upon matters of political presentation, such as whether the Charter should appear in Part I or Part II of the Constitution or be annexed to it in some way. Such matters are of secondary importance.

Of primary importance, for the citizen and his or her Government, is the concrete meaning of the Charter and any implications for the law of the Union and for the law and constitutions of the Member States. The amendments to the horizontals and other work proposed by Working Group II should help clarify what our citizens may expect, and from whom they may expect it. This work needs to be completed. We must ensure that an incorporated Charter is indeed faithful to the consensus view that it should not change the competences of the Union.

We therefore call for the draft Constitution to clarify precisely that the application of an incorporated Charter would be governed by Part VII of that Charter, as amended by Working Group II; and for the work required on the associated legal explanations to be concluded as soon as possible. A decision on how precisely the Charter should be recognised in the Constitution can logically be made after that work is completed.

Subject : Study by the European University Institute, presented by Vice-President Amato:*"Ten reflections on the Constitutional Treaty for Europe"

The Secretary General of the Convention has received from Mr Giuliano Amato, Vice President of the Convention, the attached contribution concerning a paper by the European University Institute.

The European University Institute has produced a weighty study on the main topics that are currently under the attention of the Convention: preamble, Charter, competences, simplification of instruments, institutions, main policy areas, entry into force and revision. The study has been edited by Prof. Bruno de Witte, and other distinguished scholars have signed each of the chapters.

I do not endorse every single word of this study, but I consider it would be very useful for all the members of the Convention to be able to give it the attention it deserves. To this effect I ask you to kindly circulate it as a contribution presented by me.

Fundamental Rights and Citizenship

Gráinne de Búrca

1 – Introduction

Given the lack of political agreement over its legal status which followed the proclamation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights in 2000,<sup>1</sup> and given the deadlock which has persisted for decades in relation to the question of accession by the EC to the ECHR, one of the more striking results to have emerged from the Convention process so far has been the overall support both within the Working Group on the Charter (II)<sup>2</sup> and within the plenary Convention for the legal incorporation of the Charter into the Treaties and for accession of the EU (with single legal personality) to the ECHR. These two issues were considered to be politically difficult, and the broad consensus quickly reached on their resolution has been somewhat surprising.

I will focus in this contribution on what I perceive to be the main issues which now arise in relation to the incorporation of the Charter into the Treaties: first, whether the incorporation of the Charter into a constitutional treaty of this kind could have the effect of altering the ‘fundamental rights acquis’; secondly, whether it should be integrated in its entirety into the basic treaty or incorporated by reference and annexed in a protocol or otherwise; third, whether the amendments proposed by Working Group II to the horizontal clauses would affect the substance of the Charter,

contrary to the decision taken by the Group not to re-open any substantive questions which had been agreed by the previous Convention which drafted the Charter; and fourth, a number of residual questions including access to justice, the need for a ‘mainstreaming’ or ‘objectives’ clause, and the need for a clause authorising accession to the ECHR will be identified.

Before addressing the topic of the Charter and fundamental rights, the subject of citizenship will briefly be discussed.

2 – Citizenship

At first glance, it seems that the debate on a new constitutional treaty for the Union has not generated any proposals for change in the notion of EU citizenship which has existed for over ten years. No working group dealt specifically with the issue. Presumably this implies that change was not considered vital in this area; or perhaps it simply reflects the more general absence of focus on substantive issues within most of the Convention’s working groups: the only four which could be considered to focus on “substantive” matters were those on justice and home affairs, defence, economic governance, and belatedly, social policy, but even several of these have been preoccupied more with institutional than with substantive issues.

As far as citizenship is concerned, however, the basic framework elaborated by the Praesidium in its draft constitutional treaty of October 2002<sup>3</sup> provides essentially that ‘Union citizenship’ should be incorporated in an early Article (currently article 5) of such a new constitutional text. The existing rights and attributes of EU citizenship under the EC Treaty, namely the rights of movement, residence, voting and standing as a candidate in municipal and European Parliament elections etc, are referred to in the draft outline of Article 5. I will argue below, when discussing the substantive provisions of the Charter, that if the Charter is to be incorporated with its substance unchanged, then Article 5 (or equivalent) of the new constitutional treaty should not repeat all of the rights again, but rather should simply introduce the concept of EU citizenship, and should refer to the Charter articles for enumeration of the rights.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP

One curious and undesirable novelty, however, has been proposed in the Preliminary draft constitutional treaty, and this is that EU citizenship should be reconceptualised as ‘dual citizenship’, such that a national of any member state may ‘use either, as he or she chooses’. The notion of dual citizenship is an unfortunate way of describing the co-existence of national and EU citizenship. If it is intended as a description of the currently existing relationship between EU and national citizenship it is misleading, and if it is intended to define these categories in a new way for the future, under the basic Constitutional Treaty, then it is a regrettable move. The concept of dual citizenship suggests full and competing loyalties/relationships to two different and entirely separate polities, each of which makes similar claims of allegiance on the individual. This could be an undesirable development in a number of ways.

In the first place, EU and national citizenship, from the time of their introduction by the Maastricht Treaty, have been conceptualised as complementary rather than competing, and as mutually reinforcing rather than as alternatives. Each is seen as encompassing a relationship which is distinct from yet connected with the other (just as the Member States are distinct from yet part of the EU), so that neither status in itself should interfere with or challenge the essence of the other. European citizenship reflects the relationship between a member state national and the EU polity, defining the core legal and political rights pertaining to that relationship, but it is not an entirely separate and alternative status to national citizenship. Further, the ‘complementary’ nature of the two citizenships has been reflected not only in understanding and practice since the Maastricht Treaty, but also in the legal texts adopted since then. Thus the citizenship provisions of the Amsterdam Treaty were amended precisely in this way, specifying in Article 17(1) that ‘citizenship of the Union shall complement and not replace national citizenship’. The sentiment underlying this declaration could well be applied to the proposal to introduce a notion of dual citizenship, in the sense that ‘citizenship of the Union should complement and not compete with national citizenship’.

A second criticism of the language of dual citizenship is that it suggests two full and co-equal relationships between citizen and polity, as though the relationship between the individual and the EU were the same as that between the individual and his or her member state of nationality. Yet this is not what is currently represented by EU citizenship. It may reflect an aspiration, a hope that the EU may develop into a fully federal polity, but at present the notion of EU citizenship has neither the same content as, nor is a real alternative to national citizenship, and it does not reflect the substantive relationship of belonging to a full political and social community. Certainly many hope that the notion of EU citizenship will one day evolve into a more meaningful status of this kind, but to label it as such at present (which the conceit of dual citizenship suggests) risks painting a glossy veneer of constitutional language on something which remains rather empty in content. Indeed, the current opposition of so many Member States to the provision in the Commission's draft proposal on the right of movement and residence of EU citizens which would grant a permanent right of residence to an EU citizen in another Member State after a five-year residence period,<sup>4</sup> provides a sharp reminder that EU and national citizenship are far from equal alternatives. And the failure of various Member States and sub-national regions in many cases to facilitate the right of non-nationals to vote or to stand in local and European Parliament elections, as the EC Treaty currently requires them to do, also suggests that the practice of EU citizenship in its present form remains rather thin.<sup>5</sup>

For these reasons, the concept of “dual” citizenship is a problematic one in the context of EU citizenship, and I would recommend against introducing it into the basic constitutional treaty.

3 – The Charter of Fundamental Rights

A. Maintaining the fundamental rights acquis

A first question to be addressed is whether the Charter will replace all other references to fundamental rights currently contained in the Treaties such as in Article 6 TEU, and whether it will ‘crystallise’ the fundamental rights jurisprudence of the Court of Justice for the future. While the Charter was drafted on the basis that it would be essentially declaratory of the existing legal situation, and that it would not reduce or restrict the fundamental rights acquis built up over the years, it must nevertheless be recognised that the relatively open-ended and non-exhaustive approach adopted by the ECJ could possibly be restricted by the constitutional enactment of the Charter, if the latter is henceforth to be taken as the definitive and closed list of EU rights and values.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP

On the one hand, the Preamble to the Charter declares that the Charter “reaffirms ... the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States”, including specifically the ECHR and the two Social Charters (of the Council of Europe and the EC respectively). However, this seems merely to suggest that the rights actually specified in the Charter are derived from national constitutions and from these common international obligations, rather than that the EU continues to hold itself bound or at least inspired by international human rights obligations and standards more broadly. Further, while Article 53 of the Charter makes mention of human rights derived from international law and international agreements to which the Member States are party, as well as national constitutions, this is done merely to affirm that the Charter should not be used in such a way as to restrict those rights within their proper sphere of application. What is missing, however, is any equivalent in the Charter or its preamble to the ECJ’s often-repeated statement that “fundamental rights form an integral part of the general principles of law ... for that purpose, the Court draws inspiration from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States and from the guidelines supplied by international treaties for the protection of human rights on which the Member States have collaborated or to which they are signatories”. This assertion of a category of general principles of EU law inspired by international human rights treaties is more fluid and is non-exhaustive (take the example often cited of the rights of minorities, which are protected under the European Framework Convention on the Rights of Minorities and under the ICCPR, but not mentioned in the Charter, although the former are international agreements on which Member States have ‘collaborated’ in accordance with ECJ case law), by comparison with the enumerated rights approach of the Charter, even if the latter are themselves derived from international law and from ECJ case law.

It is possible, of course, that the ECJ will continue to adopt an open approach to human rights protection, and to make references to the general principles of law and to internationally protected rights which are not specifically mentioned in the Charter, even though the Charter will exist as a first and primary reference point. It was indeed an article of faith during the drafting of the Charter that it was not to change the existing state of the law, but rather was designed to showcase the fundamental rights acquis of the EU. Nonetheless, if the Charter as it stands is incorporated as one of the first articles in a new constitutional document, then there is a danger that it may become the authoritative reference point for EU fundamental rights, to the detriment of international human rights norms which are not specifically included.

For this reason, in order to make sure that the normatively open acquis is not ‘closed’ by the incorporation of the Charter in a basic constitutional treaty, it would be advisable to include in the new treaty—for example in Article 2 of the preliminary draft constitutional treaty—a clause affirming that openness e.g. by mentioning the general principles of EU law which are inspired by international law.

B. Full incorporation of the text of the Charter or incorporation by reference?

The majority of the Working Group favoured the full incorporation of the text of the Charter articles into the constitutional treaty, rather than incorporating it by reference by one of the other suggested methods. However, the debate in the Convention plenary indicated a range of views, and in the preliminary draft constitutional text, the three main options are set out for consideration: (a) a reference to the Charter (b) a statement of the fact that the Charter is an integral part of the Constitution with the articles of the Charter being set out elsewhere in the treaty or in an annexed protocol (c) full incorporation of all articles of the Charter.

It seems likely that the Working Group favoured the “full incorporation” option (c) primarily for symbolic purposes, in the sense of indicating the central place of these values and principles in the new constitutional text, rather as the Bill of Rights tends to be a central chapter in modern state constitutions. And while this option poses various difficulties due to the way in which the Charter was drafted as a separate and self-standing instrument, yet with complex overlaps and interactions with the existing EC Treaty, it seems nonetheless to be the best way forward for a number of reasons.

Option (a) Incorporation by simple reference

Option (a), to include a reference to the Charter, would presumably be along the lines of the current Article 6 of the EU Treaty, indicating that the Union commits itself to respect fundamental rights as they result from the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights, along with the ECHR and national constitutional traditions. Such a reference would place the Charter outside the constitutional treaty, as a source of inspiration for the fundamental rights recognised by the EU, rather than as an integral part of the new constitutional text, and would identify the Charter as one of the sources of rights alongside others. This would maintain the value of openness of the current position, but it seems to be the option less favoured both within the Working Group and also within the Convention's plenary debate. Certainly it would not give the prominence or centrality to the EU's commitment to human rights which the actual incorporation of the Charter into a new constitutional treaty would do. Had the question of the Charter's incorporation into the Treaties arisen at a time when there was no serious discussion of an EU constitution, then the option of incorporation by an additional reference in Article 6 of the EU Treaty would possibly have been the best solution. However, the fact that the current process and the 2004 IGC is likely to produce a basic constitutional text for the EU introduces a fundamental symbolic and substantive change, which would make the omission of the Charter from the new constitution a much more significant exclusion.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP

For this reason, option (a) of incorporation by reference would not be the best solution in the current context.

Option (b) Incorporation by reference and by inclusion of the Charter in a protocol to the constitutional treaty

Option (b) provides an intermediate solution. On the one hand it would achieve the full incorporation of the Charter into the new constitutional text with equal legal status alongside all other provisions of the latter, rather than leaving it as an external source of inspiration only [as under option (a)]. And on the other hand it would achieve this without the awkwardness of inserting a relatively lengthy and self-standing text such as the Charter, with its own preamble, into the first articles of a new constitutional treaty.

However, this solution has two disadvantages. The first and most important is that it would lack the symbolic commitment of placing the Charter centrally within a new constitutional text, and would seem to relegate it to the less pivotal status of a protocol or annex. Given the importance of the message conveyed by placing the Charter's commitment to human dignity, equality and solidarity at the heart of a new documentary constitution, this would be a very significant loss. Further, while one apparent advantage of the incorporation-by-reference option is that it would seem to avoid some of the problems of duplication and overlap between the provisions of the Charter and those of the existing EC Treaty, that advantage would in fact be one of appearance only. This is because, given the equal legal status of the Charter and the Treaties under option (b), the practical problem of actual legal overlap and duplication would remain, even if the location of the Charter as a separate integral document in an annex or protocol would superficially reduce the degree of textual and visual awkwardness.

GRÁINNE DE BÚRCA

For this reason, option (b) of incorporation by reference combined with inclusion of the Charter in a protocol or annex to the Treaty, should not be the preferred solution.

Option (c) Full incorporation of all of the Charter provisions

Option (c), which would incorporate the full text of the Charter into a constitutional treaty was the choice favoured by most of the Convention Working Group members, and has also been proposed in the ‘Feasibility Study’ draft Constitution recently prepared by the Lamoureux working group for the Commission (published 4 December 2002, and referred to, rather strangely, as Penelope).<sup>6</sup> The essential value and importance of this approach would be the visibility and symbolism of setting out, at an early point in the new constitutional text, what is effectively a constitutional bill of rights. While this approach presents certain practical and legal problems which will be discussed below, it is nonetheless, in my view, the option to be preferred. In particular, the solution proposed in the Penelope draft of having a separate Part II in the basic constitutional treaty containing the full Charter would be preferable to placing it in the middle of something like Part I of the Praesidium’s October 2002 draft. The detailed policies and legal bases would then be contained in a separate Part III of the constitutional treaty.

A first problem, however—one which has animated most of the political discussion of a constitutional treaty or a constitution for the EU—is arguably that of simplicity and readability. From this perspective, one might doubt the wisdom of incorporating a document of fifty-four articles into a basic constitutional treaty, which, according to the Praesidium’s preliminary draft would contain no more than forty-six articles. However, the prospect of simplifying by reducing the number of articles in the Charter and changing its text in any substantive way (other than by the purely cosmetic change of ‘grouping’ several current Charter articles together under a smaller number of umbrella articles of the new constitutional treaty, as was mooted during the Convention debate on the Working Group’s final draft) would be ill-advised, given the almost unchallenged assumption so far that the substance of the Charter should remain unchanged, in deference to the procedure by which it was drafted and proclaimed in 2000.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP

Perhaps a more substantial problem in relation to the feasibility of option (c), however, is that the Charter was drafted as a complete and integral instrument with its own preamble, its own internal coherence and with a set of final horizontal clauses, rather than being designed as one part of a larger text. Further, as a consequence of its having been drafted as a separate and complete instrument by the first Convention, the Charter contains many provisions which either duplicate, partially overlap with, repeat in slightly different form, or are somewhat in tension with provisions of the existing EC Treaty. If all of the Charter's provisions are to be incorporated into the new constitutional treaty in their current form it is inevitable that consequential changes to the substance of the existing EC Treaty will need to be made, and it seems likely that some duplication will in any event persist.

On the basis of the Praesidium's preliminary draft, it seems that the fundamental provisions establishing the single market and all of the legislative bases for action would be contained in a separate part of the constitutional text, which obviously raises the question of the relationship between legal bases such as the current Articles 12, 13 and 141 of the EC Treaty and the 'corresponding' rights contained in provisions of the Charter such as Articles 21 and 23. It seems unlikely, despite the opinion of the Working Group to that effect, that the 'referral clause' in Article 52(2) of the Charter is sufficient to deal with the replications and overlaps which are likely to result from its incorporation into the constitutional Treaty containing much of what currently exists in the EC Treaty. It would seem, on the contrary, that a significant 'cleaning-up' job would need to be done on the remaining provisions of the EC Treaty which intersect or overlap with the provisions of the Charter and which are likely to be included in the new constitutional document.

As an initial step in the direction of this task, annexed at the end of this paper is a table illustrating the various articles of the Charter which correspond in different ways with—whether by overlapping with, repeating, or even potentially contradicting—provisions contained in the current EC Treaty. In some of these instances, it is evident that versions of these EC Treaty provisions would have to be included in the remaining Part of the preliminary draft constitutional treaty. The comments in the third column of the table attempt to indicate those cases where it is possible to envisage the EC Treaty provisions being adapted so as to relate more directly to the corresponding provision in the Charter, e.g. to provide the legal basis and mechanism for implementing or fleshing out the right expressed in the Charter.

In other words, for provisions such as Articles 21 and 23 (discrimination and gender equality), or 27, 28, 30 and 31 (workers' rights), which would have corresponding legal bases in the relevant Part of the constitutional treaty, the latter provisions could make direct reference to the Articles of the Charter. These could be expressed in a form such as: ‘the Council, acting under the [co-decision procedure] shall adopt legislation to combat discrimination in accordance with Article [21, 23...] of the Charter of Rights’. A similar and careful coordination of the competence provisions of the constitutional treaty in the field of social policy with the declaration of workers’ rights and other social rights contained in the Charter would need to be undertaken. In other instances, for example the exhortatory provisions concerning cultural diversity, consumer protection and health protection, these could be mentioned in the remaining part of the constitutional treaty by means of an express reference to the relevant Charter provision. In the case of the citizenship provisions, as argued above, it would be advisable for the current draft of Article 5 of the preliminary draft constitutional text only to introduce and assert the basic concept of EU citizenship, rather than listing all of the specific rights pertaining to it. Instead, what is now draft Article 5 should refer to the Charter for a listing of the specific rights and incidents of EU citizenship. Finally, a corresponding legal basis providing power to adopt legislation to implement the citizenship rights contained in the Charter would be needed in the remaining part of the constitutional treaty. Indeed, the Penelope draft included an additional article 57 in the text of the Charter itself conferring competence to adopt measures to implement and facilitate the citizenship rights contained therein. This, however, is not recommended, since there are no other competence provisions in the Charter itself, and corresponding competence provisions for many other Charter rights will in any case need to be contained in the remaining part of the constitutional treaty.

Therefore it is recommended that the Charter (complete with preamble) be incorporated, along the lines indicated in the Penelope draft, in Part II of a three-part Constitutional Treaty, before Part III which would contain the detailed policies and legal bases. It could, if considered necessary, be specified that Part III of the constitutional Treaty should be read in conformity with the more fundamental Parts I and II.

C. Proposed Working Group amendments to the horizontal clauses of the Charter

Article 51(1) and (2)

The amendments proposed by the WG are shown in italics:

"51 (1): The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions and bodies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP

and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it by other parts of [this Treaty / the Constitutional Treaty].

51 (2): This Charter does not extend the scope of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for [the Community or] the Union or modify powers and tasks defined by the other [Chapters / parts] of [this Treaty / the Constitutional Treaty]."

A number of commentators had earlier pointed out the tension between the obligation in Article 51(1) on the institutions of the EU to ‘promote’ the application of the rights contained in the Charter and the assertion in Article 51(2) that the Charter does not modify powers or tasks defined by the Treaty. As a consequence of this, the Working Group has proposed something of a ‘belt and braces’ approach, supplementing both paragraphs (1) and (2) with limiting clauses designed to further underscore the intention not to increase, change or extend any of the existing powers under the EC or EU treaties. Arguably, these additional clauses are superfluous, somewhat ugly to read, and they do not remove the tension in question. It seems simply inevitable (and from the point of view of at least some, desirable) that the existence and incorporation of the Charter will influence the nature and interpretation of EU tasks and powers, although in subtler ways than the bald notion of ‘establishing new power’ suggests. The explicit articulation for the first time in the basic EU constitutional treaty of an array of fundamental rights seems unlikely not to ‘modify’ the way other aspects of the EU’s powers and tasks are construed, at least by the Court of Justice if not by other actors. The fiction that the Charter of Rights, whether fully legally incorporated or not, ‘makes no difference’ to anything in the EU legal and political order is not an easy one to maintain, and although no doubt there were strong interests to be appeased within the Working Group which led to the belt and braces approach as a way of maintaining this fiction, the amended Article 51 presents a curious picture. It is of course a feature typical of the way in which the EU operates—in particular at high constitutional moments such as these—that bold and powerful new developments such as the constitutional incorporation of a new Bill of Rights are accompanied by a series of countervailing safeguards and even contradictory limiting provisions. Nevertheless, it seems unlikely that there will be much political opposition to the newly proposed ‘double padlock’ provision, and on the contrary that there will be clear political support for it as an assertion of the limits of EU competence.

GRÁINNE DE BÚRCA

However, for the reasons just given, it is recommended that the amendments proposed by the Working Group to Article 51 of the Charter be rejected.

Article 52(4)

The amendment proposed by the Working Group in adding this new subparagraph is:

"52(4) Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions."

This proposal seems a useful one. It reads as a direction to the Court of Justice to interpret the rights contained in the Charter in harmony with national constitutional traditions, in so far as the rights in question are derived from those traditions. This direction to strive for 'soft harmony' between national constitutional rights and the expression of those rights contained in the Charter is a more promising constitutional means of addressing the tension between them rather than positing the supremacy of one over the other—quite apart from the fact that political agreement on such a supremacy clause (of either kind) would be virtually impossible to achieve. Like the provision already contained in Article 52(3) concerning the relationship between the Charter and corresponding provisions of the ECHR, this proposed amendment leaves many questions open, but that seems inevitable and appropriate to the complexity of Europe's legal pluralism.

It is recommended that the Working Group's proposed amendment to Article 52(4) of the Charter be accepted.

Article 52(5)

The amendment proposed by the Working Group in adding this new subparagraph is:

"52 (5) The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality."

Article 52(5), like the proposed amendments to Article 51 discussed above, seems to be a legally superfluous and fuzzy political compromise. This is the one amendment proposed by the Working Group which seems to be an attempt—or perhaps better described as a compromise proposal in response to such an attempt—to revisit the substance and content of the Charter, despite the Group's assertion that it proceeded on the basis that the content of the Charter which had been proclaimed at the Nice European Council should not be re-opened. If the 'integrity' of the Charter as a whole, on account of the mechanism by which it was drafted and proclaimed is to be taken seriously, then this in itself provides a clear argument against including the proposed amendment in Article 52(5).

The amendment seems likely to have been pressed by one of the UK members of the Working Group—although a large majority of the Working Group supported it—in particular since the UK government's previous representative on the Convention which drafted the Charter in 2000, Tony Goldsmith, had fought hard for a distinction between rights and principles to be made in the text, but had been defeated in this attempt at an early stage of the Charter drafting process.<sup>7</sup> The main thrust behind this position seems to be the wish not to render many of the so-called economic and social rights (which are considered to require positive action and social expenditure) justiciable, and therefore to reclassify them as 'principles', while maintaining the more traditional and often negatively framed civil and political rights (which are considered to require only non-interference) as justiciable individual rights. According to the proposed amendment, Charter provisions "which contain principles ... shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of [acts which implement these principles] and in ruling on their legality".

Without needing to engage in the longstanding academic and policy debate on the distinction between economic/social and civil/political rights, and on their alleged indivisibility under international law,<sup>8</sup> the likelihood of the proposed amendment rendering all 'social rights' contained in the Charter non-justiciable seems in any case extremely slight. This is partly because the distinction which the amendment introduces between 'principles' and 'subjective rights'—to use the language of the Working Group's explanatory note on the proposed amendment<sup>9</sup>—is extremely hazy, and partly because there is no clear division between economic/social and civil/political rights in the Charter. The latter division does not in any case map neatly onto a distinction between ‘rights requiring positive action or expenditure’ and rights which require only non-interference for their protection.

Further, the polarisation of the notions of justiciability and non-justiciability underlying the proposed amendment reflects a simplistic and legally unsophisticated understanding of the function and operation of a Charter of Rights such as this. It is unlikely that the rights and values set out in the Charter will be used in any significantly different way from the way in which fundamental rights and provisions of the ECHR have until now been used in litigation before the ECJ. The legal and constitutional culture within which the ECJ has operated over the past four decades, and the approach it has adopted to fundamental rights adjudication has shown no indicating of following the strong paradigm associated with the US legal system of rights as weapons used to ‘trump’ legislation. Indeed the complaint has more usually been that the ECJ does not ‘take rights seriously’ in the sense that it has only extremely rarely struck down any provision of EU law, other than individual administrative or staff actions, for violation of human rights.<sup>10</sup> Instead, the articulation of legal rights in a text such as the ECHR and now the EU Charter is much more likely to continue to function as a source of values and norms other than those set out in the other Treaties, to influence the interpretation of EU legislative and other measures, and to feed into policy-making and into EU activities more generally. And it is unlikely that the ECJ’s role and approach in relation to these values and norms will change very much from the approach it has demonstrated to date with other fundamental rights and norms derived from the ECHR and national constitutional law.

There is therefore a range of arguments in favour of abandoning the Working Group’s proposed amendment to Article 52(5) (which, incidentally, was accepted in the Penelope draft). It represents an attempt to re-open the substance of the Charter as agreed by the previous Convention by consensus; it is premised on a very unclear distinction between ‘principles’ and everything else; it is based on a rather crude understanding of the notion of justiciability; and it reflects a lack of awareness of the role and approach which has over the years been adopted by the ECJ (and CFI) in cases raising fundamental rights issues. The best that can be said about the proposed amendment is that the ECJ can decide for itself what constitutes a 'principle', and that this language is unlikely to restrict it in drawing on the range of values and norms expressed in the Charter in its adjudicative role.

It is recommended that the Working Group's proposed amendment to Article 52(5) of the Charter be rejected.

Article 52(6)

The amendment proposed by the Working Group in adding this new subparagraph is:

"52 (6) Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter."

This seems to be an exhortatory and fairly uncontroversial amendment encouraging those who apply and interpret the Charter to pay full account to national laws and practices when the Charter specifies this.

It is recommended that the Working Group's proposed amendment to Article 52(6) of the Charter be accepted.

D. Some remaining questions

(1) Is there a need, in particular because of Opinion 2/94 of the ECJ, for a special clause to be inserted in the new treaty authorising the EU to accede to the ECHR? Some have argued that, for the sake of legal certainty and clarity, such a clause does need to be included, and this is certainly the view taken by the Working Group. It seems unlikely that such a provision would be legally or constitutionally necessary, however, given that the circumstances in which Opinion 2/94 was written will have radically changed if a new constitutional treaty along the lines which are currently emerging comes into force. In the first place, a Charter of Rights will be incorporated into the treaty; secondly, the EU will have legal personality; and more generally the institutional and constitutional architecture which existed at the time of the 1996 Opinion will have altered in many significant ways. Arguably such a clause is not strictly necessary, but the Working Group recommendation to include a legal basis in the new Treaty may well be sensible for the avoidance of doubt and to help provide political impetus at a later stage to accede. The Penelope draft has included such a clause in a new Article 55(1) of the Charter, which would be incorporated into Part II of a new EU Constitution.

GRÁINNE DE BÚRCA

It is recommended that a provision be included in the constitutional treaty containing an explicit legal basis for accession by the EC/EU to the European Convention on Human Rights.

(2) Should there be a reform of Article 230 to complement the incorporation of the Charter of Rights? The Charter Working Group did not wish to make a recommendation on this issue, on the basis that it was not properly within their mandate, and that it should be addressed either by the Working Group on Justice and Home Affairs together with other questions of judicial control by the ECJ, or as part of the work on judicial control of subsidiarity. There are few questions on which the EU law academic world (not to mention the CFI and the Advocates General of the ECJ) is so united as that the right of individuals to seek judicial review by the ECJ under Article 230 is excessively restrictive, and that it undermines respect for the principle of access to justice in the EU. The adoption of the Charter of Rights only heightens this sense (and not only because of the content of Article 57 of the Charter itself on access to court), and the response that the ECJ is already overburdened simply cannot provide an answer to the criticisms of locus standi under Article 230. The problem of overburdening is a significant one which must be addressed in the reflections on reform of the judicial system after the introduction of the Nice Treaty changes, but it cannot be addressed entirely at the expense of individual access to justice. There are very strong arguments for introducing a reform to Article 230, and the incorporation of the Charter into a new constitutional treaty provides a forceful new reason for doing so.

It is recommended that the current Article 230 of the EC Treaty be amended to provide for less restrictive locus standi for individuals before the Court of Justice.

(3) Should there be a human rights mainstreaming clause, along the lines of the 'environmental' and 'gender equality' integration clauses of the current EC Treaty? There are strong arguments to be made in favour of such a clause, in particular because the Council has asserted in its Annual Reports on Human Rights in the Union that it is committed to mainstreaming human rights concerns into all EU internal and external policies. However, given the extreme caution displayed in the 'horizontal articles' of the Charter in relation to any possible change in the nature of EU powers, it seems likely that a mainstreaming article would be viewed with political suspicion in various quarters as a possible Trojan horse for smuggling a more positive or proactive human rights dimension into EU policy. Nonetheless, a new constitutional Treaty which places protection for human rights in a central position and which incorporates a Charter of Fundamental Rights, would be enhanced by a human rights mainstreaming clause which should not, if the Council's annual reports are to be believed, bring about any major change in current practice.

It is recommended that a human rights integration clause, along the lines of the current Articles 3(2) and 6 of the EC Treaty on gender equality and environmental protection, be included in the constitutional treaty.

(4) Should there be a clause in the constitutional treaty which makes protection of human rights an explicit objective of the Union? Since the ECJ handed down its Opinion 2/94 on accession to the ECHR,<sup>11</sup> the question whether the EU legislature could act under Article 308 on the basis that protection of human rights is an objective of the Union has remained unclear. Some have taken the view that the Court's opinion indicated a negative answer, while others have taken the opposite view.<sup>12</sup> Joseph Weiler has recently argued, in the context of the current constitutional debate, that the opportunity should be taken now to insert an express objective of this kind into the reformed treaty.<sup>13</sup> This would constitute a positive step in favour of a more proactive human rights policy, but it seems unlikely to have political support in view of the opposite tendency displayed in relation to Article 51(1) and (2) of the Charter.

It is recommended that protection for human rights be specified as an objective of the EC/EU.

(5) Should there be a provision for establishing a mechanism to enforce the 'suspension of rights' provision of the Treaty where there is a 'serious and persistent breach' of fundamental rights by a member state—currently Article 45 of the preliminary draft constitutional treaty? The absence of such a mechanism is a fact to which a number of commentators have drawn attention, but some would treat it as a matter of implementing detail rather than a central constitutional issue. Further, it is also an issue which would raise the same ‘increased competences/powers’ fears as demonstrated in Article 51 of the Charter, since an enforcement mechanism would probably entail a monitoring procedure, and hence a degree of supervision of Member State activities. From this perspective, it may be better at least initially to allow a process to evolve in an organic way, as seems to be suggested by the approach adopted in the European Parliament’s most recent Annual reports on human rights within the Union.<sup>14</sup>

Thank you for your welcome letter setting out how we might approach the challenges of the last few weeks of the Convention. I agree that your proposals will help us to make the best use of the short time we have left for our endeavours.

I hope you will forgive me for raising one point. Your letter suggests that it is now settled that the Charter should form Part II of the Constitution. As you know, our Government has always held the view that we could make no commitment to the incorporation of the Charter until we had sight of the whole package outlined in the recommendations of the Working Group.

The UK, with Denmark, Ireland, Latvia, the Netherlands and Sweden, set out a common position on this as recently as 14 April (Contrib. 659/03). We made it clear that we could not agree a specific method of incorporation without seeing the whole technical package. That remains the case, and I would therefore be most grateful if you could confirm the position set out by the Working Group, and endorsed by the Plenary, that decisions on the placement of the Charter will be taken after the additional work has been completed and agreed.

The challenge is to find ways to give our citizens legal certainty and clarity in relation to the Charter's ambiguous or conflicting texts. I hope and believe that a completed package from the Working Group may help us find an answer on the Charter's status on which we can all soon agree.

I should be grateful if you would circulate this to fellow members of the Convention.

Peter Hain

Explanatory Note

Subject: Incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights as Part II of the Constitution

1. Members of the Convention will find attached the text of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the Union, incorporated into the Constitution as its Part II. The Praesidium draws the attention of the members of the Convention to the following:

- a) The text reproduces the wording of the Charter as proclaimed in December 2000, except for the amendments to the Charter's general provisions on which Working Group II reached consensus and for some purely technical adaptations as explained in d) below. This is in line with the recommendation of the Working Group, followed by the Plenary, to refrain from any changes to the substance of the Charter. The drafting amendments to the text proclaimed at Nice in December 2000 are highlighted.
- b) Concerning the amendments to the Charter's general provisions in Articles 51 and 52, the text takes over faithfully the wording suggested by Working Group II on which a large consensus emerged in the Plenary. The only slight drafting change to the language agreed by the Working Group is that the text now refers to powers and tasks conferred / defined "in", rather than "by", the Constitution; this corresponds to the general line the Convention takes in Part I Articles that the competences are conferred by the Member States, not by the Constitution itself.

In the particular case of Article 52 § 2 of the Charter (i.e. the clause referring, for rights in the Charter based on the existing Treaties, to the conditions and limits defined by those Treaties), the Working Group concluded that there continues to be a need for such a referral clause, recognising however that Article 52 § 2 will logically need a drafting adjustment, which the Group could not undertake given that it would depend on the exact overall architecture of the Constitutional Treaty, which was still unknown at the time. In the Praesidium's view, the adjustment of Article 52 § 2 suggested in the annex (based on a drafting suggestion made by Sir Neil MacCormick within the Working Group), would be the most appropriate formula for such a referral clause, ensuring legal certainty and continuity as intended by original Article 52 § 2: It would ensure that those Charter rights which merely "restated" rights already enshrined in the EC Treaty (notably the rights of EU citizens) are subject to the conditions and limits which so far figured in the EC Treaty and will now be taken over in Part III or, in some cases <sup>1</sup>, in Part I of the Constitution.

- c) Article 42 Charter on access to documents is the only case in which an amendment in substance to a right in the Charter has become necessary in the light of this Convention's work. This right was merely restated in the Charter with the scope approved by the Treaty of Amsterdam; however, as reflected in draft Article [36], Part I, this Convention now wishes to go further, extending the right to documents of the institutions, bodies and agencies generally.

- d) The following technical adaptations have been made to the Charter text:
- i) the terms "Community" and "Treaty establishing the European Community" / "Treaty on European Union" have been replaced with "Union" and with "Constitution".
  - ii) the 7 "Chapters" of the Charter now become the 7 "Titles" of Part II of the Constitution.
  - iii) the heading of Title 7 has been expanded and now reads "general provisions governing the interpretation and application of the Charter". This appears appropriate in order to clarify - as was requested in a contribution from several Convention members<sup>2</sup> - that, following insertion of the Charter as Part II, the general provisions found in that Title govern the interpretation and application of the Charter as a whole, and that they apply only to this Part of the Constitution.
  - iv) where the current Charter text refers to the "institutions and bodies of the Union", the formula "institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union" must now be used<sup>3</sup>.

2. The Praesidium examined the question, raised in several amendments of Convention members, whether certain fundamental rights should be repeated in Part I of the Constitution although, by virtue of the incorporation of the Charter, they will also appear in Part II of the Constitution, or whether these duplications should be eliminated by deleting the respective provisions in Part I.

In this respect, the Praesidium reached the conclusion that the reference to the rights of EU citizens (as well as that to non discrimination on the basis of nationality) both in Part I and the Charter is justified in that these rights are constitutive of the very notion of European citizenship as introduced by the Treaty of Maastricht. They (or at least some of them, such as freedom of movement or voting rights of EU citizens in the country of residence) are special to the Union, and, by definition, cannot be guaranteed at national level. That distinguishes them from the other Charter rights, such as freedom of expression, of religion, etc., which are analogous to fundamental rights protected in national constitutions.

As to the rights of the Charter repeated in the Title on "Democratic Life" of Part I, the Praesidium considered that the right of access to documents as well as that of protection of personal data (two rights which are complementary in a sense), are seen, at least by many members of the Convention, as key components of the Union's particular mode of democratic life at supranational level. For these convention members, Articles I-49 § 3 and I-50 of Part I, would look incomplete if containing only rules on modalities, limits and legal bases on transparency and data protection, but not the statement of the right itself. At the same time, it would not be illogical to see these two rights reappearing in the Charter (Part II of the Constitution), which would stress that they also belong to the genuinely fundamental rights of the Union<sup>4</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> As the previous Convention's Praesidium stated in its Explanations, the formula "institutions and bodies of the Union" was used in the Charter with the intent of "referring to all the authorities set up by the Treaties or by secondary legislation (see Article 286(1) TCE)". Given that now the draft Constitution now consistently refers to "institutions, bodies and agencies" - cf. Articles I-49 § 3 and I-50 of Part I, and the Articles on the Court of Justice in Part III -, the same formula must be used in the Charter.

<sup>4</sup> Precisely that argument was already made by Advocate-General Léger (in Case 353/99 P, Council v. Hautala) with respect to the Charter article on right of access to documents.

3. Working Group II stressed that the "Explanations" to the Charter, which had been drawn up at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Charter Convention (and which, although not submitted to the Plenary of the previous Convention, played a role in securing consensus on the Charter text within that Convention), are one important tool of interpretation ensuring a correct understanding of the Charter. It recommended that its own explanations on the drafting adjustments to the horizontal clauses of the Charter should be fully integrated with the original Explanations. The Group furthermore recommended that, upon possible incorporation of the Charter, attention should then be drawn in an appropriate manner to the Explanations which, though they state that they have no legal value, are intended to clarify the provisions of the Charter; in particular, it would be important to publicise them more widely.

Following that recommendation, the Praesidium agreed that the technical work of producing such an updated and consolidated version of the Explanations of 2000 should be carried out under the authority of the Chairman of Working Group II who would consult with members of that Working Group and then submit the product to the Praesidium for endorsement, before the end of the Convention. This work is under way.

PART II: THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE UNION

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of ~~the Community and~~ the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, ~~the Treaty on European Union, the Community Treaties,~~ the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the ~~Community Union~~ and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European ~~Communities~~ Union and of the European Court of Human Rights.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, Treaty establishing the European Community and of the Treaty on European Union, and without prejudice to the special provisions of those Treaties, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Article 22: Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Article 23: Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Article 24: The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Article 25: The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Article 26: Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

~~CHAPTER TITLE IV.~~ SOLIDARITY

Article 27: Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by ~~Union~~Community law and national laws and practices.

Article 28: Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with ~~Community~~Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Article 29: Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Article 30: Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with ~~Community~~Union law and national laws and practices.

Article 31: Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Article 32: Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Article 33: Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Article 34: Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by ~~Community~~Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with ~~Community~~Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by ~~Community~~Union law and national laws and practices.

Article 35: Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Article 36: Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the ~~Constitution~~Treaty establishing the European ~~Community~~, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Article 37: Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Article 38: Consumer Protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

CHAPTER TITLE V. CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Article 39: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Article 40: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Article 41: Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the institutions, ~~and bodies~~ and agencies of the Union.
2. This right includes:
  - a) the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - b) the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - c) ~~the~~ obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the ~~Community~~ Union make good any damage caused by its institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every person may write to the institutions of the Union in one of the official languages of the ~~Treaties~~ Union and must have an answer in the same language.

Article 42: Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to ~~European Parliament, Council and Commission~~ documents of the institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union, in whatever form they are produced.

Article 43: Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the Ombudsman of the Union cases of maladministration in the activities of the ~~Community~~ institutions, ~~or bodies~~ or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance acting in their judicial role.

Article 44: Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Article 45: Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the ~~Constitution Treaty establishing the European Community~~, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Article 46: Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

CHAPTER TITLE VI. JUSTICE*Article 47: Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Article 48: Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Article 49: Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Article 50: Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

CHAPTER-TITLE VII. GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article 51: Scope

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions, ~~and~~ bodies and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the other Parts of the Constitution.
2. This Charter does not extend the scope of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for ~~the Community or the Union~~, or modify powers and tasks defined ~~by~~ in the other Parts of the Constitution ~~Treaties~~.

Article 52: Scope of guaranteed rights

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution ~~which are based on the Community Treaties or the Treaty on European Union~~ shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant parts ~~by those Treaties~~.
3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Article 53: Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union, ~~the Community~~ or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Article 54: Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

– Revised text of Part One

Members of the Convention will find attached the draft text of Part One of the Treaty establishing the Constitution together with that of the Protocols on the application of the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality and the role of the national Parliaments, as revised by the Praesidium in the light of the comments and amendments received and the discussions in plenary.

The Articles in Title IV "The institutions" are the only ones to be sent to the members of the Convention without change from the original version contained in CONV 691/03 of 23 April 2003. The very numerous amendments received and the comments made at the plenary on these Articles often go in opposing directions, particularly on central questions, including the three linked questions highlighted in the note of 23 April (representation in the European Parliament, definition of the qualified majority, and composition of the Commission). The Praesidium therefore thinks it would be appropriate to devote more time to discussion and thought on those subjects.

At a later stage, as these thoughts mature, the Praesidium will submit a revised version of Title IV to the Convention.

Members' attention is drawn to the fact that the Articles in Part I are numbered consecutively. The references to the Articles in Part III will be specified when they have been finalised.

ANNEX 1*DRAFT TEXT – PART ONE*TITLE I: DEFINITION AND OBJECTIVES OF THE UNION*Article I-1: Establishment of the Union

1. Reflecting the will of the citizens and States of Europe to build a common future, this Constitution establishes the European Union, on which the Member States confer competences to attain objectives they have in common. The Union shall coordinate the policies by which the Member States aim to achieve these objectives, and shall exercise in the Community way the competences they confer on it.
2. The Union shall be open to all European States which respect its values and are committed to promoting them together.

Article I-2: The Union's values

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights. These values are common to the Member States in a society of pluralism, tolerance, justice, equality, solidarity and non-discrimination.

Article I-3: The Union's objectives

1. The Union's aim is to promote peace, its values and the well-being of its peoples.
2. The Union shall offer its citizens an area of freedom, security and justice without internal frontiers, and a single market where competition is free and undistorted.
3. The Union shall work for a Europe of sustainable development based on balanced economic growth, with a social market economy aiming at full employment and social progress.

It shall aim at a high level of protection and improvement of the quality of the environment. It shall promote scientific and technological advance.

It shall combat social exclusion and shall promote social justice and protection, equality between women and men, solidarity between generations and protection of children's rights.

It shall promote economic, social and territorial cohesion, and solidarity among Member States.

The Union shall respect its rich cultural and linguistic diversity, and shall ensure that Europe's cultural heritage is safeguarded and enhanced.

4. In its relations with the wider world, the Union shall uphold and promote its values and interests. It shall contribute to peace, security, the sustainable development of the earth, solidarity and mutual respect among peoples, free and fair trade, eradication of poverty and protection of human rights and in particular children's rights, as well as to strict observance and development of international law, including respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter.
5. These objectives shall be pursued by appropriate means, depending on the extent to which the relevant competences are attributed to the Union in this Constitution.

Article I-4: Fundamental freedoms and non-discrimination

1. Free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, and freedom of establishment shall be guaranteed within and by the Union, in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution.
2. In the field of application of this Constitution, and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Article I-5: Relations between the Union and the Member States

1. The Union shall respect the national identities of its Member States, inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, including for regional and local self government. It shall respect their essential State functions, including for ensuring the territorial integrity of the State, and for maintaining law and order and safeguarding internal security.
2. Following the principle of loyal cooperation, the Union and the Member States shall, in full mutual respect, assist each other to carry out tasks which flow from the Constitution.

The Member States shall facilitate the achievement of the Union's tasks and refrain from any measure which could jeopardise the attainment of the objectives set out in the Constitution.

Article I-6: Legal personality

The Union shall have legal personality.

TITLE II: FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION

Article I-7: Fundamental rights

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes the Second Part of this Constitution.
2. The Union shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in this Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Article I-8: Citizenship of the Union

1. Every national of a Member State shall be a citizen of the Union. Citizenship of the Union shall be additional to national citizenship; it shall not replace it.
2. Citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights and be subject to the duties provided for in this Constitution. They shall have:
  - the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States;
  - the right to vote and to stand as candidates in elections to the European Parliament and in municipal elections in their Member State of residence, under the same conditions as nationals of that State;

- the right to enjoy, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which they are nationals is not represented, the protection of the diplomatic and consular authorities of any Member State on the same conditions as the nationals of that State;
  - the right to petition the European Parliament, to apply to the Union Ombudsman, and to write to the Institutions and advisory bodies of the Union in any of the Union's languages and to obtain a reply in the same language.
3. These rights shall be exercised in accordance with the conditions and limits defined by this Constitution and by the measures adopted to give it effect.

TITLE III: UNION COMPETENCES AND ACTIONS

Article I-9: Fundamental principles

1. The limits of Union competences are governed by the principle of conferral. The use of Union competences is governed by the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality.
2. Under the principle of conferral, the Union shall act within the limits of the competences conferred upon it by the Member States in the Constitution to attain the objectives set out in the Constitution. Competences not conferred upon the Union in the Constitution remain with the Member States.
3. Under the principle of subsidiarity, in areas which do not fall within its exclusive competence the Union shall act only if and insofar as the objectives of the intended action cannot be sufficiently achieved by the Member States, either at central level or at regional and local level, but can rather, by reason of the scale or effects of the proposed action, be better achieved at Union level.

TITLE II: FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION

Article I-7: Fundamental rights

1. ~~The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of this Constitution. The Charter is set out [in the second part of/in a Protocol annexed to] this Constitution.~~
The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes the Second Part of this Constitution.
2. The Union ~~may accede~~ shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined ~~by~~ in this Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Comments:

1. In the light of the positions expressed by a large majority of Convention members, the solution of incorporation of the Charter in a new Part Two appears to be the one likely to meet broad consensus within the Convention.

The wording of the first paragraph fits in better with that solution than did the previous draft. It is based on amendments by Costa, Eduarda Azevedo, d'Oliveira Martins, Nazaré Pereira, Duhamel + 8; Teufel, Schlüter, Palacio, and corresponds exactly to the last sentence of the Charter preamble.

2. On accession to the ECHR, there was general support at the additional meeting on 26 March for the wording adopted: "...the Union shall seek accession ..." (see also am. Kiljunen and Vanhanen, Svensson, Hjelm-Wallén + 4, Van der Linden+ 3, Tiilikainen, Brok + 15).
3. As for the amendments aiming at including other international agreements in the area of human rights (Söderman, Michel + 5, Paciotti, Kaufmann, Voggenhuber, Lichtenberger, MacCormick, Duff + 6, Spini, Nagy), it is clear that this paragraph, as amended by the Praesidium, cannot be interpreted as ruling out the possibility of accession to other human rights conventions, a possibility which is opened up pursuant to other legal bases laid down in the Constitution (namely the various policies linked to such conventions, and even the flexibility clause in Article I-17). This paragraph may ask that the Union seek accession only in the specific case of the ECHR; however this particular formula is not in any way intended to rule out the possibility of accession to other conventions. As the Praesidium has already pointed out, only the European Convention on Human Rights is mentioned in this paragraph because of the fact that a Court of Justice opinion in 1996 had rejected Community competence to accede to that Convention on the basis of considerations specific to it.

WG II 27

Note for the Members of Working Group II

Subject: Consultation on the updated and consolidated version of the Explanations on the Charter

1. As you will remember, our Working Group stressed in its final report that the "Explanations" to the Charter, which had been drawn up at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Charter Convention (and which, although not submitted to the Plenary of the previous Convention, played a role in securing consensus on the Charter text within that Convention), are one important tool of interpretation ensuring a correct understanding of the Charter. It recommended that its own explanations on the drafting adjustments to the horizontal clauses of the Charter should be fully integrated with the original Explanations. The Group furthermore recommended that, upon possible incorporation of the Charter, attention should then be drawn in an appropriate manner to the Explanations which, though they state that they have no legal value, are intended to clarify the provisions of the Charter; in particular, it would be important to publicise them more widely.

Following that recommendation, the Praesidium agreed that the technical work of producing such an updated and consolidated version of the Explanations of 2000 should be carried out under my authority, and that I should consult you, as members of Working Group II, on this technical work and then submit the product to the Praesidium for endorsement, before the end of the Convention.

I therefore herewith send you a draft updated and consolidated version of these Explanations and kindly ask you to send me your comments or suggestions on them by 10 June, noon, at the latest (to be sent to the Secretariat: clemens.ladenburger@consilium.eu.int).

2. My general approach to this technical exercise, as explained in more detail below, is to leave intact as much as possible the original Explanations of 2000, and to amend them only to the extent strictly necessary in order to reflect the work done by our Working Group and this Convention as a whole, without changing the original Explanations in substance.

I have therefore limited myself to:

- a) adding, to the Explanations under Articles 51 and 52, language reflecting the work done by our Working Group on these horizontal clauses, and making some necessary consequential adaptations in the remaining Explanations;
- b) adapting the references made to the EC or EU Treaty by inserting references to the appropriate provisions in Parts I and III of the Constitution and by taking into account the progress achieved by this Convention in certain areas;
- c) amending the references made to secondary Union law, and adding a few citations of important recent case law of the Court of Justice;
- d) correcting a few misprints or erroneous citations in the original Explanations.

3. As to the point a) above, I have, firstly, added some language to the Explanations under Article 51, so as to reflect fully the important clarification we have consensually reached in the Working Group, that incorporation of the Charter does not in any way lead to an extension of the Union's competences as defined by the other Parts of the Constitution. I felt it would be particularly appropriate to stress this same point again more specifically in connection with Article 21 (non-discrimination) and its relation to Article III-5 (ex-Article 13 TEC), in the light of the statements made by the representatives of the Legal Services to our Working Group.

4. On Article 52 § 3 (rights corresponding to ECHR rights), I have added a passage from our Working Group report which, although we convened that the clause itself should not be amended, does provide additional clarification on its interpretation, as requested by some members of our Group. In that connection, I have also added to that passage the sentence, currently found in the explanations under Article 53, on the ECHR as a minimum standard to be respected in any instance. The crucial importance of this rule - which is special to the ECHR - in particular for the regime of limitations of rights corresponding to the ECHR, was stressed in our hearings of Judges Skouris and Fischbach and of the 3 Legal Services, this is why I feel that point must be made under Article 52, not Article 53.

5. On Article 52 § 4, I have added language from the Working Group report on the rights resulting from common constitutional traditions.

6. Under Article 52 § 5, I have included language drawn from the Working Group report in order to explain the distinction between rights and principles.

I do not however intend to enter into an attempt of attributing the various individual Charter articles to the category of "right" or that of "principle". Rather, I wish to respect the spirit of the Charter Convention, confirmed by our Working Group, that the character as a right or a principle of individual articles is expressed as clearly as possible in the wording of the respective articles, which should permit future jurisprudence to rule on the exact attribution, taking into account the guidance provided by the Explanations. I also wish to respect the status quo of the existing Explanations which do qualify a number of Articles as principles.

Therefore, I have merely cited, for illustration, two examples of Articles which, in the light of their wording, are clearly principles and already expressly qualified as such in the existing Explanations (i.e., Article 26, starting with the words: "The Union recognises and respects..."; Article 37: "A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated...."). At the same time, I personally deem it important to stress that in some cases a Charter Article may actually contain both elements of a right and of a principle, and to give two further examples for that phenomenon (which in my personal view the judges might encounter even in relation to more Charter articles than the ones cited).

Finally, having enshrined a legal distinction between "rights" and "principles" in Article 52 § 5, we must be consequent and eliminate here and there in the Explanations a purely colloquial use - inconsistent with Article 52 § 5 - of the word "principle", i.e. as synonymous for "rule" or for "general principle of law", if we want to avoid that Article 52 § 5 is discredited and the reader of the Explanations confused. The most striking example for this use can be found in the Explanations to Article 1 (Human Dignity), but it also occurs under Articles 20, 41, 47, 49 and 50 - articles which correspond to "general principles of law" or come from the ECHR - and indeed in some explanations to the horizontal clauses themselves. As you will see, I have exercised care to replace the term "principle" in these cases by a neutral expression. In one case (Article 14), I have, following precisely the same logic, replaced the word "right" by a neutral wording, because it is in fact the whole article 14 (which contains both elements of a right and of a principle, as reflected already in the Explanations) that is extended to access to vocational and continuing training.

7. Finally, I have put a sentence of explanation for Article 52 § 6, equally taken from our Working Group report.

8. On item b) above (references to the Treaties), you will, first, note the slightly adapted wording of the Explanations under the referral clause in amended Article 52 § 2. Moreover, you will see that I have inserted, throughout the text, references to the new Articles of the Constitution replacing the TEC / TEU articles cited in the current Explanations. Where the Explanations of 2000 used the wording "this Article is based on...", I have put "has been based on..." (the respective TEC / TEU article), and added the indication of the new Constitution article replacing or amending the old article, in order to make the origin of the respective Charter article clear.

I also amended those passages of the Explanations touching on areas where our Convention, in drafting Part I or III articles, is likely to make progress in substance as compared to the situation of 2000. This concerns notably the right of access to documents (see explanations under Articles 42), the Union's system of judicial review (see explanations under Article 47), and the establishment of the Area of Freedom, Security and Justice for which respect of fundamental rights is particularly relevant (e.g., explanations under Articles 6, 18, 24). Obviously, these amended explanations are preliminary and depend on what the Convention decides with respect to these subject.

9. As regards points c) and d), you will see a number of references to recent secondary law of the Union, adopted notably in the field of social law. I have also included a few citations of new landmark cases of the Court of Justice, which are fundamental to the understanding of certain rights recognised in the Charter (cf. Explanations to Articles 1 and 3, 45, and 50). Finally, I corrected a few erroneous citations made to the European Social Charter or the Revised European Social Charter.

10. Finally, I have adapted the introductory formula of the Explanations in order to take account of this updating exercise.

I also propose to rephrase slightly the sentence about the status of the Explanations, in a way I believe to be faithful to the spirit of our Working Group, which agreed that these Explanations should be an important tool of interpretation and that they should be publicised more widely. I feel that, at least in some languages, the current wording could be misread as an excessively negative statement. For example, in English the words "they have no legal value" might be misunderstood in the sense - certainly unintended by the Praesidium of the former Convention - that the Explanations should have no legal importance or relevance whatsoever. That could of course not be said of any accompanying explanatory text to which the Courts should have due regard when interpreting the law concerned and which, hence, are indeed designed to be of considerable legal relevance. Therefore, it seems to me that we should remedy that misunderstanding in the languages concerned; the formula suggested "although they do not as such have the status of law, they are a valuable tool of interpretation..." would appropriately make the point.

DRAFT UPDATED EXPLANATIONS,
RELATING TO THE COMPLETE TEXT OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION (AS AMENDED BY THE EUROPEAN CONVENTION WITH A VIEW TO ITS INCORPORATION INTO THE CONSTITUTIONAL TREATY)

N.B.: the original text for this document is doc. CHARTE 4473/00 CONVENT 49 of 11 October 2000 (with a revision of the French version only: doc. CHARTE 4473/1/00 CONVENT 49 REV 1 of 19 Octobre 2000), containing the "explanations" prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Charter Convention. All amendements proposed to that original text are indicated in "track-change" format below.)

These explanations have originally been prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. They have been updated at the instigation of the Praesidium of the European Convention, in the light of the drafting adjustments made to the text of the Charter by that Convention (notably to Articles 51 and 52) and of further developments of Union law. ~~They have no legal value and are simply~~ Although they do not as such have the status of law, they are a valuable tool of interpretation intended to clarify the provisions of the Charter.

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of ~~the Community and the Union~~ and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, ~~the Treaty on European Union, the Community Treaties~~, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the ~~Community Union~~ and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union ~~Communities~~ and of the European Court of Human Rights.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

CHAPTER-TITLE I. DIGNITY*Article 1*Human dignity

Human dignity is inviolable. It must be respected and protected.

Explanation

The dignity of the human person is not only a fundamental right in itself but constitutes the real basis of fundamental rights. The 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights enshrined ~~this principle~~ human dignity in its preamble: "Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world." In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, 2001 ECR 7079, at grounds n° 70 - 77, the Court of Justice confirmed that the fundamental right to human dignity is part of Union law.

It results that none of the rights laid down in this Charter may be used to harm the dignity of another person, and that the dignity of the human person is part of the substance of the rights laid down in this Charter. It must therefore be respected, even where a right is restricted.

Article 2*Right to life

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to the death penalty, or executed.

Explanation

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article is based on the first sentence of Article 2(1) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"1. Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law..."

2. The second sentence of the provision, which referred to the death penalty, was superseded by the entry into force of Article 1 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"The death penalty shall be abolished. No-one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed."

Article 2(2) of the Charter is based on that provision.

3. The provisions of Article 2 of the Charter correspond to those of the above Articles of the ECHR and its Protocol. They have the same meaning and the same scope, in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter. Therefore, the "negative" definitions appearing in the ECHR must be regarded as also forming part of the Charter:

- (a) Article 2(2) of the ECHR:

"Deprivation of life shall not be regarded as inflicted in contravention of this article when it results from the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary:

(a) in defence of any person from unlawful violence;

(b) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained;

(c) in action lawfully taken for the purpose of quelling a riot or insurrection."

- (b) Article 2 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR:

"A State may make provision in its law for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war; such penalty shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions..."

Article 3

Right to the integrity of the person

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his or her physical and mental integrity.
2. In the fields of medicine and biology, the following must be respected in particular:

the free and informed consent of the person concerned, according to the procedures laid down by law,

- the prohibition of eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons,
- the prohibition on making the human body and its parts as such a source of financial gain,
- the prohibition of the reproductive cloning of human beings.

Explanation

1. In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, 2001 ECR 7079, at grounds n° 70, 78 - 80, the Court of Justice confirmed that the fundamental right to human integrity is part of Union law and encompasses, in the context of medicine and biology, the free and informed consent of the donor and recipient.

2. The principles of Article 3 of the Charter are already included in the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine, adopted by the Council of Europe (ETS 164 and additional protocol ETS 168). The Charter does not set out to depart from those principles, and therefore prohibits only reproductive cloning. It neither authorises nor prohibits other forms of cloning. Thus it does not in any way prevent the legislature from prohibiting other forms of cloning.

32. The reference to eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons, relates to possible situations in which selection programmes are organised and implemented, involving campaigns for sterilisation, forced pregnancy, compulsory ethnic marriage among others, all acts deemed to be international crimes in the Statute of the International Criminal Court adopted in Rome on 17 July 1998 (see its Article 7(1)(g)).

Article 4

Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Explanation

The right in Article 4 is the right guaranteed by Article 3 of the ECHR, which has the same wording: "No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment". By virtue of Article 52(3) of the Charter, it therefore has the same meaning and the same scope as the ECHR Article.

Article 5

Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
3. Trafficking in human beings is prohibited.

Explanation

1. The right in Article 5(1) and (2) corresponds to Article 4(1) and (2) of the ECHR, which has the same wording.

It therefore has the same meaning and scope as the ECHR Article, by virtue of Article 52(3) of the Charter. Consequently:

- no limitation may legitimately affect the right provided for in paragraph 1;*
- in paragraph 2, "forced or compulsory labour" must be understood in the light of the "negative" definitions contained in Article 4(3) of the ECHR:*

"For the purpose of this article the term "forced or compulsory labour" shall not include:

- (a) any work required to be done in the ordinary course of detention imposed according to the provisions of Article 5 of this Convention or during conditional release from such detention;*
- (b) any service of a military character or, in case of conscientious objectors in countries where they are recognised, service exacted instead of compulsory military service;*
- (c) any service exacted in case of an emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;*
- (d) any work or service which forms part of normal civic obligations."*

2. Paragraph 3 stems directly from ~~the principle of~~ human dignity and takes account of recent developments in organised crime, such as the organisation of lucrative illegal immigration or sexual exploitation networks. The annex to the Europol Convention contains the following definition which refers to trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation: "traffic in human beings: means subjection of a person to the real and illegal sway of other persons by using violence or menaces or by abuse of authority or intrigue with a view to the exploitation of prostitution, forms of sexual exploitation and assault of minors or trade in abandoned children". Chapter VI of the Convention implementing the Schengen Agreement, which has been integrated into the "acquis communautaire", in which the United Kingdom and Ireland participates ~~and Ireland has requested to participate~~, contains the following wording in Article 27(1) which refers to illegal immigration networks: " The Contracting Parties undertake to impose appropriate penalties on any person who, for financial gain, assists or tries to assist an alien to enter or reside within the territory of one of the Contracting Parties in breach of that Contracting Party's laws on the entry and residence of aliens." On 19 July

2002, the Council adopted a framework decision on combating the trafficking in human beings (O.J. L 203/1) whose Article 1 defines in detail the offences concerning trafficking in human beings for the purposes of labour exploitation or sexual exploitation, which the Member States must make punishable by virtue of that framework decision.

CHAPTER TITLE II. FREEDOMS

Article 6

Right to liberty and security

Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person.

Explanation

The rights in Article 6 are the rights guaranteed by Article 5 of the ECHR, and in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, they have the same meaning and scope. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on them may not exceed those permitted by the ECHR, in the wording of Article 5:

- "1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases and in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law:*
- (a) the lawful detention of a person after conviction by a competent court;*
  - (b) the lawful arrest or detention of a person for non-compliance with the lawful order of a court or in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation prescribed by law;*

- (c) the lawful arrest or detention of a person effected for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so;
  - (d) the detention of a minor by lawful order for the purpose of educational supervision or his lawful detention for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority;
  - (e) the lawful detention of persons for the prevention of the spreading of infectious diseases, of persons of unsound mind, alcoholics or drug addicts or vagrants;
  - (f) the lawful arrest or detention of a person to prevent his effecting an unauthorised entry into the country or of a person against whom action is being taken with a view to deportation or extradition.
2. Everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and of any charge against him.
  3. Everyone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1.c of this article shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial. Release may be conditioned by guarantees to appear for trial.
  4. Everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful.
  5. Everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this article shall have an enforceable right to compensation."

provisions as regards the categorisation of offences and punishments and certain aspects of procedural law.

Article 7

Respect for private and family life

Everyone has the right to respect for his or her private and family life, home and communications.

Explanation

The rights guaranteed in Article 7 correspond to those guaranteed by Article 8 of the ECHR. To take account of developments in technology the word "correspondence" has been replaced by "communications".

In accordance with Article 52(3), the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those of the corresponding article of the ECHR. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on this right are the same as those allowed by Article 8 of the ECHR:

- "1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.*
- 2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."*

Article 8

Protection of personal data

1. Everyone has the right to the protection of personal data concerning him or her.

2. Such data must be processed fairly for specified purposes and on the basis of the consent of the person concerned or some other legitimate basis laid down by law. Everyone has the right of access to data which has been collected concerning him or her, and the right to have it rectified.
3. Compliance with these rules shall be subject to control by an independent authority.

Explanation

This Article ~~is~~ has been based on Article 286 of the Treaty establishing the European Community and Directive 95/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 281, 23.11.1995) as well as on Article 8 of the ECHR and on the Council of Europe Convention of 28 January 1981 for the Protection of Individuals with regard to Automatic Processing of Personal Data, which has been ratified by all the Member States. Reference is also made to the meanwhile adopted regulation N° 45/2001 of the European Parliament and the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data by the Community institutions and bodies and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 8, 12.1.2001). This regulation has set up the independent authority mentioned in Article 286 TEC and in paragraph 3 of this Article. –Provision with respect to the conditions of exercise of ~~The~~ right to protection of personal data is now to be made in Article [I-50] of the Constitution. ~~exercised under the conditions laid down in the above Directive, and may be limited under the conditions set out by Article 52 of the Charter.~~

Article 9

Right to marry and right to found a family

The right to marry and the right to found a family shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 12 of the ECHR, which reads as follows: "Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family according to the national laws governing the exercising of this right." The wording of the Article has been modernised to cover cases in which national legislation recognises arrangements other than marriage for founding a family. This Article neither prohibits nor imposes the granting of the status of marriage to unions between people of the same sex. This right is thus similar to that afforded by the ECHR, but its scope may be wider when national legislation so provides.

Article 10

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right includes freedom to change religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or in private, to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. The right to conscientious objection is recognised, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in paragraph 1 corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article 9 of the ECHR and, in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, has the same meaning and scope. Limitations must therefore respect Article 9(2) of the Convention, which reads as follows: "Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."

The right guaranteed in paragraph 2 corresponds to national constitutional traditions and to the development of national legislation on this issue.

Article 11

Freedom of expression and information

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.
2. The freedom and pluralism of the media shall be respected.

Explanation

1. Article 11 corresponds to Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.*
- 2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary."*

Pursuant to Article 52(3) of the Charter, the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those guaranteed by the ECHR. The limitations which may be imposed on it may therefore not exceed those provided for in Article 10(2) of the Convention, without prejudice to any restrictions which ~~Community~~ competition law of the Union may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR.

2. Paragraph 2 of this Article spells out the consequences of paragraph 1 regarding freedom of the media. It is based in particular on Court of Justice case law regarding television, particularly in case C-288/89 (judgment of 25 July 1991, Stichting Collectieve Antennevoorziening Gouda and others [1991] ECR I-4007), and on the Protocol on the system of public broadcasting in the Member States annexed to the EC Treaty and now to the Constitution, and on Council Directive 89/552/EC (particularly its seventeenth recital).

Article 12

Freedom of assembly and of association

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association at all levels, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters, which implies the right of everyone to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his or her interests.
2. Political parties at Union level contribute to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 of this Article corresponds to Article 11 of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.*

2. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State."

The meaning of the provisions of paragraph 1 is the same as that of the ECHR, but their scope is wider since they apply at all levels including European level. In accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, limitations on that right may not exceed those considered legitimate by virtue of Article 11(2) of the ECHR.

2. This right is also based on Article 11 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.
3. Paragraph 2 of this Article corresponds to Article ~~[1-45 § 4] of the Constitution~~<sup>191</sup> ~~of the Treaty establishing the European Community.~~

Article 13

Freedom of the arts and sciences

The arts and scientific research shall be free of constraint. Academic freedom shall be respected.

Explanation

This right is deduced primarily from the right to freedom of thought and expression. It is to be exercised having regard to Article 1 and may be subject to the limitations authorised by Article 10 of the ECHR.

Article 14

Right to education

1. Everyone has the right to education and to have access to vocational and continuing training.
2. This right includes the possibility to receive free compulsory education.
3. The freedom to found educational establishments with due respect for democratic principles and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be respected, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right.

Explanation

1. This Article is based on the common constitutional traditions of Member States and on Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions."

It was considered useful to extend this ~~right~~ article to access to vocational and continuing training (see point 15 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and Article 10 of the Social Charter) and to add the principle of free compulsory education. As it is worded, the latter principle merely implies that as regards compulsory education, each child has the possibility of attending an establishment which offers free education. It does not require all establishments which provide education, in particular private ones, to be free of charge. Nor does it exclude certain specific forms of education having to be paid for, if the State takes measures to grant financial compensation. Insofar as the Charter applies to the Union, this means that in its training policies the Union must respect free compulsory education, but this does not, of course, create new powers. Regarding the right of parents, it must be interpreted in conjunction with the provisions of Article 24.

2. Freedom to found public or private educational establishments is guaranteed as one of the aspects of freedom to conduct a business but it is limited by respect for democratic principles and is exercised in accordance with the arrangements defined by national legislation.

Article 15

Freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work

1. Everyone has the right to engage in work and to pursue a freely chosen or accepted occupation.
2. Every citizen of the Union has the freedom to seek employment, to work, to exercise the right of establishment and to provide services in any Member State.
3. Nationals of third countries who are authorised to work in the territories of the Member States are entitled to working conditions equivalent to those of citizens of the Union.

Explanation

Freedom to choose an occupation, as enshrined in Article 15(1), is recognised in Court of Justice case law (see inter alia judgment of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraphs 12 to 14 of the grounds; judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 8 October 1986, Case 234/85 Keller [1986] ECR 2897, paragraph 8 of the grounds).

This paragraph also draws upon Article 1(2) of the European Social Charter, which was signed on 18 October 1961 and has been ratified by all the Member States, and on point 4 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers of 9 December 1989. The expression "working conditions" is to be understood in the sense of Article ~~[III-102+40]~~ of the Constitution of the EC Treaty.

The second paragraph deals with the three freedoms guaranteed by Articles ~~[I-4]~~ and ~~[III-15, III-19 and III-26]~~ of the Constitution ~~39, 43 and 49 et seq~~ of the EC Treaty, namely freedom of movement for workers, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

The third paragraph ~~is~~ has been based on TEC Article 137(3), fourth indent, now replaced by Article ~~[III-99 (1) (g)]~~ of the Constitution, and on Article 19(4) of the European Social Charter signed on 18 October 1961 and ratified by all the Member States. Article 52(2) of the Charter is therefore applicable. The question of recruitment of seamen having the nationality of third States for the crews of vessels flying the flag of a Member State of the Union is governed by ~~Community~~ Union law and national legislation and practice.

Article 16

Freedom to conduct a business

The freedom to conduct a business in accordance with ~~Community~~ Union law and national laws and practices is recognised.

Explanation

This Article is based on Court of Justice case law which has recognised freedom to exercise an economic or commercial activity (see judgments of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraph 14 of the grounds, and of 27 September 1979, Case 230-78 SPA Eridiana and others [1979] ECR 2749, paragraphs 20 and 31 of the grounds) and freedom of contract (see inter alia Sukkerfabriken Nykøbing judgment, Case 151/78 [1979] ECR I, paragraph 19 of the grounds, and judgment of 5 October 1999, C-240/97 Spain v. Commission, ~~[1999] ECR I-6571~~ ~~[not yet published]~~, paragraph 99 of the grounds) and ~~Articles [I-3 (2)] of the Constitution~~~~TEC Article 4(1) and (2)~~, which recognises free and undistorted competition. Of course, this right is to be exercised with respect for ~~Community~~Union law and national legislation. It may be subject to the limitations provided for in Article 52(1) of the Charter.

Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law insofar as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 1 of the Protocol to the ECHR:

"Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties."

This is a fundamental right common to all national constitutions. It has been recognised on numerous occasions by the case law of the Court of Justice, initially in the Hauer judgment (13 December 1979, ECR [1979] 3727). The wording has been updated but, in accordance with Article 52(3), the meaning and scope of the right are the same as those of the right guaranteed by the ECHR and the limitations may not exceed those provided for there.

Protection of intellectual property, one aspect of the right of property, is explicitly mentioned in paragraph 2 because of its growing importance and Community secondary legislation. Intellectual property covers not only literary and artistic property but also patent and trademark rights and associated rights. The guarantees laid down in paragraph 1 shall apply as appropriate to intellectual property.

Article 18

Right to asylum

The right to asylum shall be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and in accordance with the Constitution Treaty establishing the European Community.

Explanation

The text of the Article ~~has been~~ based on TEC Article 63, now replaced by Article [III-162] of the Constitution, which requires the Union to respect the Geneva Convention on refugees. Reference should be made to the Protocols relating to the United Kingdom and Ireland annexed to the [Treaty of Amsterdam] Constitution and to Denmark to determine the extent to which those Member States implement ~~Community~~ Union law in this area and the extent to which this Article is applicable to them. This Article is in line with the Protocol on Asylum annexed to the ~~EC Treaty~~ Constitution.

Article 19

Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.
2. No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 of this Article has the same meaning and scope as Article 4 of Protocol No 4 to the ECHR concerning collective expulsion. Its purpose is to guarantee that every decision is based on a specific examination and that no single measure can be taken to expel all persons having the nationality of a particular State (see also Article 13 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights).

*Paragraph 2 incorporates case law from the European Court of Human Rights regarding Article 3 of the ECHR (see Ahmed v. Austria, judgment of 17 December 1996, [1996] ECR VI-2206 and Soering, judgment of 7 July 1989).*

CHAPTER TITLE III. EQUALITY*Article 20

Equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to a general principle of law which is included in all European constitutions and has also been recognised by the Court of Justice as a basic principle of Community law (judgment of 13 November 1984, Case 283/83 Racke [1984] ECR 3791, judgment of 17 April 1997, Case 15/95 EARL [1997] ECR I-1961, and judgment of 13 April 2000, Case 292/97 Karlsson, not yet published).

Article 21

Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.
2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, ~~Treaty establishing the European Community and of the Treaty on European Union, and without prejudice to the special provisions of those Treaties,~~ any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 draws on Article 13 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article III-5, Article 14 of the ECHR and Article 11 of the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine as regards genetic heritage. Insofar as this corresponds to Article 14 of the ECHR, it applies in compliance with it.

There is no contradiction or incompatibility between paragraph 1 and Article [III-5] of the Constitution which has a different scope and purpose: Article [III-5] confers power on the Union to adopt legislative acts, including harmonisation of the Member States' laws and regulations, to combat certain forms of discrimination, listed exhaustively in that Article. Such legislation may cover all action of Member State authorities in any area, as well as relations between private individuals. In contrast, the provision in paragraph 1 does not create any power to enact anti-discrimination laws in these areas of Member State or private action, nor does it lay down a sweeping ban of discrimination in such wide-ranging areas. Instead, it only addresses discriminations by the institutions and bodies of the Union themselves, when exercising powers conferred under other articles of Parts I and III the Constitution, and by Member States only when they are implementing Union law. Paragraph 1 therefore does not alter the extent of powers granted under Article [III-5] nor the interpretation given to that Article.

Paragraph 2 corresponds to Article [I-4 (2)] of the Constitution~~Article 12 of the EC Treaty~~ and must be applied in compliance with that Article ~~the Treaty~~.

Article 22*Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Explanation

This Article ~~is~~ has been based on Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union and on Article 151(1) and (4) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-176 (1) and (4) of the Constitution, concerning culture. Respect for cultural and linguistic diversity is now also laid down in Article [I-3 (3)] I of the Constitution. The Article-It is also inspired by declaration No 11 to the Final Act of the Amsterdam Treaty on the status of churches and non-confessional organisations, now taken over in Article [I-51] of the Constitution.

Article 23

Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Explanation

The first paragraph has been ~~is~~ based on ~~Articles 2 and 3(2) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Articles [I-3] and [III-1] of the Constitution~~ which impose the objective of promoting equality between men and women on the ~~Community~~ Union, and on Article 141(3) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-103 (1)] of the Constitution. It draws on Article 20 of the revised European Social Charter of 3 May 1996 and on point 16 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers.

It is also based on Article 141(3) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-103 (3)] of the Constitution, and Article 2(4) of Council Directive 76/207/EEC on the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women as regards access to employment, vocational training and promotion, and working conditions.

Paragraph 2 takes over in shorter form ~~Article III-103 (4) of the Constitution~~ ~~Article 141(4) of the EC Treaty~~ which provides that the principle of equal treatment does not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in order to make it easier for the under-represented sex to pursue a vocational activity or to prevent or compensate for disadvantages in professional careers. In accordance with Article 52+(2), the present paragraph does not amend Article [III-103 (4)+141(4)-EC].

Article 24

The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Explanation

This Article is based on the New York Convention on the Rights of the Child signed on 20 November 1989 and ratified by all the Member States, particularly Articles 3, 9, 12 and 13 thereof.

Paragraph 3 takes account of the fact that, as part of the establishment of an area of freedom, security and justice, Union legislation on civil matters having cross-border implications, for which Article III-165 of the Constitution confers power, may include notably visiting rights ensuring that children can maintain on a regular basis a personal and direct contact with both his or her parents.

Article 25

The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Explanation

This Article draws on Article 23 of the revised European Social Charter and Articles 24 and 25 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers. Of course, participation in social and cultural life also covers participation in political life.

Article 26

Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

Explanation

The principle set out in this Article is based on Article 15 of the European Social Charter and also draws on ~~Article 23 of the revised Social Charter and~~ point 26 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

CHAPTER TITLE IV. SOLIDARITY

Article 27

Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union~~Community~~ law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

This Article appears in the revised European Social Charter (Article 21) and in the Community Charter on the rights of workers (points 17 and 18). It applies under the conditions laid down by ~~Community-Union~~ law and by national laws. The reference to appropriate levels refers to the levels laid down by ~~Community-Union~~ law or by national laws and practices, which might include the European level when ~~Community-Union~~ legislation so provides. There is a considerable ~~Community-Union~~ acquis in this field: Articles [III-100 and III-101 of the Constitution~~138 and 139 of the EC Treaty~~], and Directives 2002/14/EC (general framework for informing and consulting employees in the European Community), 98/59/EC (collective redundancies), ~~77/187/EEC~~ 2001/23/EC (transfers of undertakings) and 94/45/EC (European works councils).

Article 28*Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with ~~Community-Union~~ law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 6 of the European Social Charter and on the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (points 12 to 14). The right of collective action was recognised by the European Court of Human Rights as one of the elements of trade union rights laid down by Article 11 of the ECHR. As regards the appropriate levels at which collective negotiation might take place, see the explanation given for the above Article. The modalities and limits for the exercise of ~~C~~collective action, including strike action, comes under national law and practices, including the question of whether it may be carried out in parallel in several Member States.

Article 29

Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 1(3) of the European Social Charter and point 13 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Article 30

Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with ~~Community~~ Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

This Article draws on Article 24 of the revised Social Charter. See also Directive 77/187/EEC 2001/23/EC on the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, and Directive 80/987/EEC on the protection of employees in the event of the insolvency of their employer, as amended by Directive 2002/74/EC.

Article 31

Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Explanation

1. Paragraph 1 of tThis Article is based on Directive 89/391/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work. It also draws on Article-3 of the Social Charter and point 19 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers, and, as regards dignity at work, on Article 26 of the revised Social Charter. The expression "working conditions" must be understood in the sense of Article III-102 of the Constitution-140 of the EC Treaty.
2. Paragraph 2 is based on Directive 93/104/EC concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time, Article 2 of the European Social Charter and point 8 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers.

Article 32

Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Explanation

This Article is based on Directive 94/33/EC on the protection of young people at work, Article 7 of the European Social Charter and points 20 to 23 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Article 33

Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Explanation

Article 33(1) is based on Article 16 of the European Social Charter. The second paragraph draws on Council Directive 92/85/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health at work of pregnant workers and workers who have recently given birth or are breastfeeding and Directive 96/34/EC on the framework agreement on parental leave concluded by UNICE, CEEP and the ETUC. It is also based on Article 8 (protection of maternity) of the European Social Charter and draws on Article 27 (right of workers with family responsibilities to equal opportunities and equal treatment) of the revised Social Charter. "Maternity" covers the period from conception to weaning.

Article 34

Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Community-Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Community-Union law and national laws and practices.

3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by ~~Community~~ Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

The principle set out in Article 34(1) ~~is~~ has been based on Articles 137 and 140 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Articles [III-99 and III-102] and on Article 12 of the European Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers. The Union must respect it when exercising the powers conferred on it by Articles [III-99 and III 102] of the Constitution~~140 of the Treaty establishing the European Community~~. The reference to social services relates to cases in which such services have been introduced to provide certain advantages but does not imply that such services must be created where they do not exist. "Maternity" must be understood in the same sense as in the preceding Article.

The second paragraph is based on Articles 12 (4) and 13(4) of the European Social Charter and point 2 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and reflects the rules arising from Regulation No 1408/71 and Regulation No 1612/68.

The third paragraph draws on Article 13 of the European Social Charter and Articles 30 and 31 of the revised Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter. The Union must respect it in the context of policies based on Article [III-99] of the Constitution~~137(2) of the Treaty establishing the European Community~~, particularly the last subparagraph.

Article 35

Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article are based on Article ~~[III-174]~~ of the Constitution~~152~~ of the EC Treaty and on Articles 11 and 13 of the European Social Charter. The second sentence of the Article takes over Article ~~III-174~~ 152(1).

Article 36

Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the ~~Constitution~~Treaty establishing the European Community, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Explanation

This Article ~~fully respects~~ is fully in line with Article ~~III-3~~ of the Constitution~~16~~ of the Treaty establishing the European Community and does not create any new right. It merely sets out the principle of respect by the Union for the access to services of general economic interest as provided for by national provisions, when those provisions are compatible with ~~Community~~Union legislation.

Article 37

Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article ~~are~~ have been based on Articles 2, 6 and 174 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Articles I-2, III-2 and III-124. It also draws on the provisions of some national constitutions.

Article 38*Consumer Protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article have been~~are~~ based on Article 153 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article III-127 of the Constitution.

CHAPTER TITLE V. CITIZENS' RIGHTS*Article 39*Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Explanation

Article 39 applies under the conditions laid down in Parts I and III of the Constitution ~~by the Treaty~~, in accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter. Article 39(1) corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article [I-8 (2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article III-7 for the adoption of detailed arrangements for the exercise of that right)~~19(2) of the EC Treaty~~ and Article 39(2) corresponds to Article [I-19 (2)] of the Constitution~~190(1) of that Treaty~~. Article 39(2) takes over the basic principles of the electoral system in a democratic State.

Article 40*Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to the right guaranteed by Article [I-8 (2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article III-7 for the adoption of detailed arrangements for the exercise of that right)~~19(1) of the EC Treaty~~. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions set out in these Articles of Parts I and III of the Constitution~~the Treaty~~.

Article 41*Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the institutions, ~~and bodies~~ and agencies of the Union.

2. This right includes:
- the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the ~~Community~~ Union make good any damage caused by its institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every person may write to the institutions of the Union in one of the official languages of the ~~Treaties~~ Union and must have an answer in the same language.

Explanation

*Article 41 is based on the existence of the Union as a Community subject to the rule of law whose characteristics were developed in the case law which enshrined inter alia ~~the principle of good administration as a general principle of law~~ (see inter alia Court of Justice judgment of 31 March 1992 in Case C-255/90 P, Burban [1992] ECR I-2253, and Court of First Instance judgments of 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-2589, and 9 July 1999 in Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and others [1999] ECR II-2403). The wording for that right in the first two paragraphs results from the case law (Court of Justice judgment of 15 October 1987 in Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097, paragraph 15 of the grounds, judgment of 18 October 1989 in Case 374/87 Orkem [1989] ECR 3283, judgment of 21 November 1991 in Case C-269/90 TU München [1991] ECR I-5469, and Court of First Instance judgments of 6 December 1994 in Case T-450/93 Lisrestal [1994] ECR II-1177, 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-258), and the wording regarding the obligation to give reasons comes from Article 253 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [I-37(2)] of the Constitution.*

Paragraph 3 reproduces the right guaranteed by Article ~~[III-333] of the Constitution~~<sup>288</sup> of the EC Treaty. Paragraph 4 reproduces the right guaranteed by Articles [I-8, fourth indent, and III-9] of the Constitution~~the third paragraph of Article 21 of the EC Treaty~~. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, those rights are to be applied under the conditions and within the limits defined by Part III of the Constitution~~the Treaties~~.

The right to an effective remedy, which is an important aspect of this question, is guaranteed in Article 47 of this Charter.

Article 42

Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to ~~European Parliament, Council and Commission~~ documents of the institutions agencies and bodies of the Union, in whatever form they are produced.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article has been taken over from ~~is the right guaranteed by~~ Article 255 of the EC Treaty. The European Convention has extended this right to documents of institutions, bodies and agencies generally, regardless of their form, see Article [I-49 (3)] of the Constitution. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, ~~the right of access to documents is exercised under the conditions and within the limits for which provision is made in Article [I-49 (3)]~~ applies under the conditions defined by the Treaty.

Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the Ombudsman of the Union cases of maladministration in the activities of the ~~Community~~ institutions, or bodies or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance acting in their judicial role.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article is the right guaranteed by Articles [I-8 and III-232 of the Constitution]~~21 and 195 of the EC Treaty~~. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these two Articles~~by the Treaty~~.

Article 44

Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article is the right guaranteed by Articles [I-8 and III-231] of the Constitution~~21 and 194 of the EC Treaty~~. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these two Articles~~by the Treaty~~.

Article 45

Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Constitution~~Treaty~~ ~~establishing the European Community~~, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Explanation

*The right guaranteed by paragraph 1 is the right guaranteed by Article [I-8, first indent] of the Constitution~~18 of the EC Treaty~~ (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-6]; and the judgement of the Court of Justice of 17 September 2002, C-413-99 Baumbast, [2002] ECR 709). In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions and within the limits defined for which provision is made in Part III of the Constitution~~by the Treaty~~.*

Paragraph 2 refers to the power granted to the ~~Community~~ Union by Articles [III-161 to III-163] of the Constitution ~~62(1) and (3) and Article 63(4) of the EC Treaty~~. Consequently, the granting of this right depends on the institutions exercising that power.

Article 46

Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

Explanation

The right guaranteed by this Article is the right guaranteed by Article [I-8] of the Constitution; cf. also the legal base in Article [III-8] ~~20~~ of the EC Treaty. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these Articles ~~by the Treaty~~.

CHAPTER TITLE VI. JUSTICE*Article 47*Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Explanation

The first paragraph is based on Article 13 of the ECHR:

"Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity."

However, in ~~Community~~ Union law the protection is more extensive since it guarantees the right to an effective remedy before a court. The Court of Justice enshrined ~~the principle that right~~ in its judgment of 15 May 1986 (Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651; see also judgment of 15 October 1987, Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097 and judgment of 3 December 1992, Case C-97/91 Borelli [1992] ECR I-6313. According to the Court, ~~this principle that right~~ also applies to the Member States when they are implementing ~~Community~~ Union law. The inclusion of this precedent in the Charter ~~is~~ has not been intended to change the appeal system laid down by the Treaties, and particularly the rules relating to admissibility for direct actions before the Court of Justice of the European Union. The European Convention has considered the Union's system of judicial review including the rules on admissibility, and confirmed them while amending them as to certain aspects, as reflected in Articles [III-254 to III-285] of the Constitution, and in particular in Article [III-266 (4)]. ~~This principle is therefore to be implemented according to the procedures laid down in the Treaties. It~~ Article 47 applies to the institutions of the Union and of Member States when they are implementing Union law and does so for all rights guaranteed by Union law.

The second paragraph corresponds to Article 6(1) of the ECHR which reads as follows:

"In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law. Judgment shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice."

In ~~Community~~ Union law, the right to a fair hearing is not confined to disputes relating to civil law rights and obligations. That is one of the consequences of the fact that the ~~Community~~ Union is a community based on the rule of law as stated by the Court in Case 294/83, "Les Verts" v. European Parliament (judgment of 23 April 1986, [1988] ECR 1339). Nevertheless, in all respects other than their scope, the guarantees afforded by the ECHR apply in a similar way to the Union.

With regard to the third paragraph, it should be noted that in accordance with the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, provision should be made for legal aid where the absence of such aid would make it impossible to ensure an effective remedy (ECHR Judgment of 9.10.1979, Airey, Series A, Volume 32, 11). There is also a system of legal assistance for cases before the Court of Justice of the European Union ~~Communities~~.

Article 48

Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Explanation

Article 48 is the same as Article 6(2) and (3) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.*
3. Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights:
  - (a) to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him;*
  - (b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence;*
  - (c) to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require;*
  - (d) to examine or have examined witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;*
  - (e) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court."*

In accordance with Article 52(3), this right has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Article 49

Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.

2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.

3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Explanation

This Article follows the traditional rule ~~principle~~ of the non-retroactivity of laws and criminal sanctions. There has been added the ~~principle~~ rule of the retroactivity of a more lenient penal law, which exists in a number of Member States and which features in Article 15 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Article 7 of the ECHR is worded as follows:

- "1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.*

- 2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations."*

In paragraph 2, the reference to "civilised" nations has been deleted; this does not change the meaning of this paragraph, which refers to crimes against humanity in particular. In accordance with Article 52(3), the right guaranteed here therefore has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Paragraph 3 states the general principle of proportionality between penalties and criminal offences which is enshrined in the common constitutional traditions of the Member States and in the case law of the Court of Justice of the Communities.

Article 50

Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

Explanation

Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR reads as follows:

- "1. No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings under the jurisdiction of the same State for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of that State.*
- 2. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the reopening of the case in accordance with the law and the penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case.*
- 3. No derogation from this Article shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention."*

The "non bis in idem" ~~principle~~rule applies in ~~Community~~Union law (see, among the many precedents, the judgment of 5 May 1996, Cases 18/65 and 35/65, Gutmann v. Commission [1966] ECR 103 and a recent case, the decision of the Court of First Instance of 20 April 1999, Joined Cases T-305/94 and others, Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij NV v. Commission [1999] ECR II-931). The rule prohibiting cumulation refers to cumulation of two penalties of the same kind, that is to say criminal law penalties.

In accordance with Article 50, the "non bis in idem" ~~principle~~rule applies not only within the jurisdiction of one State but also between the jurisdictions of several Member States. That corresponds to the acquis in Union law; see Articles 54 to 58 of the Schengen Convention and the judgment of the Court of Justice of 11 February 2003, C-187/01 Gözütok (not yet published), Article 7 of the Convention on the Protection of the European Communities' Financial Interests and Article 10 of the Convention on the fight against corruption. The very limited exceptions in those Conventions permitting the Member States to derogate from the "non bis in idem" ~~rule~~principle are covered by the horizontal clause in Article 52(1) of the Charter concerning limitations. As regards the situations referred to by Article 4 of Protocol No 7, namely the application of the principle within the same Member State, the guaranteed right has the same meaning and the same scope as the corresponding right in the ECHR.

CHAPTER TITLE VII. GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article 51

Scope

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions, ~~and~~ bodies and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it by other Parts of the Constitution.

2. This Charter does not extend the scope of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for ~~the Community or the Union~~, or modify powers and tasks defined by the other Parts of the Constitution~~Treaties~~.

Explanation

The aim of Article 51 is to determine the scope of the Charter. It seeks to establish clearly that the Charter applies primarily to the institutions and bodies of the Union, in compliance with the principle of subsidiarity. This provision ~~is~~ has been drafted in keeping with Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union, which requires the Union to respect fundamental rights, and with the mandate issued by Cologne European Council. The term "institutions" is enshrined in ~~the EC Treaty~~, Part I of the Constitution, Article [I-18(2)]<sup>7</sup> of which lists the institutions. The expression "bodies and agencies" ~~term "body"~~ is commonly used in the Constitution to refer to all the authorities set up by the ~~Treaties~~ Constitution or by secondary legislation (see, e.g., Article [I-49 or I-50] of the Constitution<sup>286(1)</sup> ~~of the Treaty establishing the European Community~~).

As regards the Member States, it follows unambiguously from the case law of the Court of Justice that the requirement to respect fundamental rights defined in a Union context is only binding on the Member States when they act in the ~~context~~ scope of ~~Community~~ Union law (judgment of 13 July 1989, Case 5/88 Wachauf [1989] ECR 2609; judgment of 18 June 1991, ERT [1991] ECR I-2925); judgment of 18 December 1997 (C-309/96 Annibaldi, [1997] ECR I-7493). The Court of Justice recently confirmed this case law in the following terms: "In addition, it should be remembered that the requirements flowing from the protection of fundamental rights in the Community legal order are also binding on Member States when they implement Community rules..." (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, [2000] ECR 2737, paragraph 37 of the grounds, ~~not yet published~~). -Of course this ~~principle~~ rule, as enshrined in this Charter, applies to the central authorities as well as to regional or local bodies, and to public organisations, when they are implementing Union law.

Paragraph 2, together with the second sentence of paragraph 1, confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the competences and tasks which the other Parts of the Constitution Treaties confer on the ~~Community and the~~ Union. Explicit mention is made here of the logical consequences of the principle of subsidiarity and of the fact that the Union only has those powers which have been conferred upon it. The fundamental rights as guaranteed in the Union do not have any effect other than in the context of the powers determined by [Parts I and III of the Constitution]the Treaty. Consequently, an obligation, pursuant to the second sentence of paragraph 1, for the Union's institutions to promote principles laid down in the Charter, may arise only within the limits of these same powers.

Paragraph 2 also confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the scope of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union as established in the other Parts of the Constitution. The Court of Justice has already established this rule with respect to the fundamental rights recognised as part of Union law (judgment of 17 February 1998, C-249/96 Grant, 1998 ECR I-621, paragraph 45 of the grounds). In accordance with this rule, it goes without saying that the incorporation of the Charter into the Constitution cannot be understood as extending by itself the range of Member State action considered to be "implementation of Union law" (within the meaning of paragraph 1 and the above-mentioned case law).

Article 52

Scope of guaranteed rights

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter ~~which are based on the Community Treaties or the Treaty on European Union~~ for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant Parts ~~by those Treaties~~.

3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.

4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.

5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.

6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Explanation

The purpose of Article 52 is to set the scope of the rights guaranteed. Paragraph 1 deals with the arrangements for the limitation of rights. The wording is based on the case law of the Court of Justice: "...it is well established in the case law of the Court that restrictions may be imposed on the exercise of fundamental rights, in particular in the context of a common organisation of the market, provided that those restrictions in fact correspond to objectives of general interest pursued by the Community and do not constitute, with regard to the aim pursued, disproportionate and unreasonable interference undermining the very substance of those rights" (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, paragraph 45 of the grounds). The reference to general interests recognised by the Union covers both the objectives mentioned in Article [I-2] of the Constitution and other interests protected by specific ~~Treaty~~ provisions of the Constitution such as Articles [I-5 (1), III-15, III-40, III-339]30 or 39(3) of the EC Treaty.

Paragraph 2 ~~clarifies~~ specifies that where a rights were already expressly enshrined in the Treaty establishing the European Community and have merely been restated in the Charter (notably the rights derived from Union citizenship), ~~results from the Treaties~~ it they remain is subject to the conditions and limits for which provision was made in that Treaty and is now made in Parts I and III of the Constitution. ~~laid down by them~~. The Charter does not alter the system of rights conferred by the EC Treaty and now taken over by Parts I and III of the Constitution ~~ies~~.

Paragraph 3 is intended to ensure the necessary consistency between the Charter and the ECHR by establishing the ~~principle~~-rule that, insofar as the rights in the present Charter also correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR, the meaning and scope of those rights, including authorised limitations, are the same as those laid down by the ECHR. This means in particular that the legislator, in laying down limitations to those rights, must comply with the same standards as are fixed by the detailed limitation arrangements laid down in the ECHR, which are thus made applicable for the rights covered by this paragraph, without thereby adversely affecting the autonomy of ~~Community~~ Union law and of that of the Court of Justice of the European ~~Communities~~ Union.

The reference to the ECHR covers both the Convention and the Protocols to it. The meaning and the scope of the guaranteed rights are determined not only by the text of those instruments, but also by the case law of the European Court of Human Rights and by the Court of Justice of the European ~~Union~~ Communities. The last sentence of the paragraph is designed to clarify ~~allow the Union to guarantee that the Article does not prevent more extensive protection already achieved or which may subsequently be provided for (i) in Union legislation or (ii) in some Articles of the Charter which, although based on the ECHR, go beyond the ECHR because Union law acquis has already reached a higher level of protection (e.g., Articles 47 and 50).~~ In any event, the level of protection afforded by the Charter may never be lower than that guaranteed by the ECHR.

The Charter does not affect the possibilities of Member States to avail themselves of Article 15 ECHR, allowing derogations from ECHR rights in the event of war or of other public dangers threatening the life of the nation, when they take action in the areas of national defence in the event of war and of the maintenance of law and order, in accordance with their responsibilities recognised in Articles [I-5 (1), III-13, III-158] of the Constitution.

The list of rights which may at the present stage, without precluding developments in the law, legislation and the Treaties, be regarded as corresponding to rights in the ECHR within the meaning of the present paragraph is given hereafter. It does not include rights additional to those in the ECHR.

1. Articles of the Charter where both the meaning and the scope are the same as the corresponding Articles of the ECHR:

- Article 2 corresponds to Article 2 of the ECHR
- Article 4 corresponds to Article 3 of the ECHR
- Article 5(1) and (2) correspond to Article 4 of the ECHR
- Article 6 corresponds to Article 5 of the ECHR
- Article 7 corresponds to Article 8 of the ECHR
- Article 10(1) corresponds to Article 9 of the ECHR
- Article 11 corresponds to Article 10 of the ECHR without prejudice to any restrictions which ~~Community~~ Union law may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR
- Article 17 corresponds to Article 1 of the Protocol to the ECHR
- Article 19(1) corresponds to Article 4 of Protocol No 4
- Article 19(2) corresponds to Article 3 of the ECHR as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights
- Article 48 corresponds to Article 6(2) and(3) of the ECHR
- Article 49(1) (with the exception of the last sentence) and (2) correspond to Article 7 of the ECHR

2. Articles where the meaning is the same as the corresponding Articles of the ECHR, but where the scope is wider:

- Article 9 covers the same field as Article 12 of the ECHR, but its scope may be extended to other forms of marriage if these are established by national legislation
- Article 12(1) corresponds to Article 11 of the ECHR, but its scope is extended to European Union level
- Article 14(1) corresponds to Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR, but its scope is extended to cover access to vocational and continuing training
- Article 14(3) corresponds to Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR as regards the rights of parents
- Article 47(2) and (3) correspond to Article 6(1) of the ECHR, but the limitation to the determination of civil rights and obligations or criminal charges does not apply as regards Union law and its implementation
- Article 50 corresponds to Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR, but its scope is extended to European Union level between the Courts of the Member States.

- Finally, citizens of the European Union may not be considered as aliens in the scope of the application of ~~Community~~ Union law, because of the prohibition of any discrimination on grounds of nationality. The limitations provided for by Article 16 of the ECHR as regards the rights of aliens therefore do not apply to them in this context.

The rule of interpretation contained in paragraph 4 has been based on the wording of Article 6 § 2 of the Treaty on European Union and takes due account of the approach to common constitutional traditions followed by the Court of Justice (e.g., judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 18 May 1982, Case 155/79, AM&S, [1982] ECR 1575.. Under that rule, rather than following a rigid approach of "a lowest common denominator", the Charter rights concerned should be interpreted in a way offering a high standard of protection which is adequate for the law of the Union and in harmony with the common constitutional traditions.

Paragraph 5 clarifies the distinction between "rights" and "principles" set out in the Charter. According to that distinction, subjective rights shall be respected, whereas principles shall be observed (Article 51 § 1). Principles are implemented through legislative or executive acts; accordingly, they become significant for the Courts when such acts are interpreted or reviewed. They do not however give rise to direct claims for positive action by the Union's institutions or Member States authorities. This is consistent both with case law of the Court of Justice (Cf. notably recent case law on the "precautionary principle" in Article 174 § 2 TEC: judgment of the CFI of 11 September 2002, T-13/99, Pfizer vs. Council, with numerous references to earlier case law; and a series of judgments on Article 33 (ex-39) on the principles of agricultural law, e.g. judgment of the Court of Justice C-265/85, Van den Berg, 1987 ECR 1155: scrutiny of the principle of market stabilisation and of reasonable expectations) and with the approach of the Member States' constitutional systems to "principles" particularly in the field of social law. For illustration, examples for principles recognised in the Charter include e.g. Articles 26 and 37. In some cases, an Article of the Charter may contain both elements of a right and of a principle, e.g., Articles 23 and 33.

Paragraph 6 refers to the various Articles in the Charter which, in the spirit of subsidiarity, make reference to national laws and practices.

Article 53

Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union, ~~the Community~~ or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Explanation

This provision is intended to maintain the level of protection currently afforded within their respective scope by Union law, national law and international law. Owing to its importance, mention is made of the ECHR. ~~The level of protection afforded by the Charter may not, in any instance, be lower than that guaranteed by the ECHR, with the result that the arrangements for limitations may not fall below the level provided for in the ECHR.~~ [transferred to the explanations under Article 52 § 3].

Article 54

Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to Article 17 of the ECHR:

"Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention."

TITLE I: DEFINITION AND OBJECTIVES OF THE UNION

Article I-1: Establishment of the Union

With regard to paragraph 1, some amendments call for the term "citizens" to be replaced by "peoples" (am. 2 Lopes), or for the latter term to be added (am. 1 Balázs). There is also a suggestion to begin the second sentence with "in accordance with this Constitution" (am. 2 Hain), and to delete the reference to the Union's coordinating role (am. 4 Wuermeling) or state that certain policies of the Member States are coordinated, without mentioning the Union as the subject (am. 9 Teufel). Some would like the sentence to be reformulated avoiding the expression "Community way" (am. 5 Kohout) or wish to return to the expression "federal basis" (am. 8 Duff + 3).

As for paragraph 2, am. 1 Balázs wishes to return to the previous Praesidium version (requiring that values also be shared by peoples). Am. 6 Kaufmann proposes deleting the paragraph, on the grounds that Article I-57(1) is sufficient.

Furthermore, the insertion of a new paragraph referring to the "Community acquis" as a foundation of the Union is requested by am. 3 Lopes. Am. 7 by Hjelm-Wallén + 5 seeks another paragraph providing for decisions to be taken as openly and as close to citizens as possible.

Articles I-2: The Union's values

A number of amendments request the addition of equality to the list in the first sentence (am. 1 Dybkjaer, am. 4 Kaufmann, am. 8 Hjelm-Wallén + 3, am. 10 Duff + 4, am. 11 Michel + 4, am. Fischer 9: equality, including between women and men). Others propose a reference to respect for minority rights in this sentence (am. 3 Balázs + 10, am. 7 Bonde). One amendment proposes saying "fundamental rights" instead of "human rights" (am. 6 Berès + Duhamel).

TITLE II: FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION

Article I-7: Fundamental rights

On paragraph 1, some are asking for the Charter to be incorporated as a protocol, rather than as Part Two of the Constitution (am. 2 de Vries, am. 3 Hain, am. 6 Kalniete, am. 7 Hjelm-Wallén + 2). One Convention member thought it should be specified that the provisions of the Charter as Part Two would constitute directly applicable law (am. 5 Kaufmann). One amendment suggests that the institutions, bodies and agencies should respect Charter rights on the basis of Articles 51 et seq. of the Charter, "in the spirit" of the comments on it (am. 4 Fini).

On paragraph 2, while some would prefer to weaken the wording concerning the ECHR, proposing "may seek accession ..." (am. 3 Hain), or "may accede" (am. 9 de Villepin), others on the contrary would like it to be strengthened (am. 1 Demiralp). Other amendments would like explicitly to mention the possibility for the Union to accede to other human rights conventions (am. 5 Kaufmann, am. 8 Duff + 5). Some propose adding "to this end, a declaration laying down the conditions of such accession is annexed to the Final Act" (am. 9 de Villepin).

Article I-8: Citizenship of the Union

- Deletion of the list in paragraph 2 is requested by am. 2 Kohout and am. 3 Kaufmann.
- Am. 1 Borrell + 2 and am. 3 Kaufmann propose granting entitlement to European citizenship to third-country nationals residing in the Union on a long-term basis.

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, equality, in particular between men and women, the rule of law and respect for human rights, values which are common to the Member States. Its aim is a society at peace, through the practice of tolerance, justice and solidarity

Explanation (if any) :

It is of utmost importance, that equality between men and women remain among both the values and the objectives of the Union in the future Constitutional Treaty.

The European Union is NOT a discrimination free society. The European Union today is NOT gender equal. Women all over Europe are, on a daily basis, experiencing discrimination in its various forms - be it as concrete as violence or as subtle as the paygap or the glass ceiling which hinders the advancement of women. Gender equality must be a FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLE of the European Union, which cannot be ignored or negotiated away if Europe is to be a gender equal society.

We cannot speak of any sort of free choice until we have changed the unequal foundation, which is at the moment our starting point.

Die Union beruht auf den folgenden Werten: Achtung der Menschenwürde, Freiheit, Demokratie, Rechtsstaatlichkeit und Achtung der Menschenrechte; diese Werte sind allen Mitgliedstaaten gemeinsam. Die Union strebt eine friedliche Gesellschaft an, in der Toleranz, Gerechtigkeit und Solidarität herrschen.

Amendement proposé

- (1) Die Union beruht auf den folgenden Werten: Achtung der Menschenwürde, Freiheit, Demokratie, Rechtsstaatlichkeit und Achtung der Menschenrechte; diese Werte sind allen Mitgliedstaaten gemeinsam. Die Union strebt eine friedliche Gesellschaft an, in der Toleranz, Gerechtigkeit und Solidarität herrschen.
- (2) Die Werte der Europäischen Union umfassen die Wertvorstellungen derjenigen, die an Gott als die Quelle der Wahrheit, Gerechtigkeit, des Guten und des Schönen glauben, als auch derjenigen, die diesen Glauben nicht teilen, sondern diese universellen Werte aus anderen Quellen ableiten.

Begründung:

Diese Formulierung erkennt die Werte an, die wesentlich für die europäische Zivilisation sind, unabhängig davon, ob sie auf einem Glauben an Gott beruhen oder auf einer anderen Quelle.

The Union is founded (5 words deleted) on human dignity, liberty, equality, democracy, the rule of Law, respect for human rights, solidarity and justice, values which are common to the Member States.

---

Explication éventuelle:

Equality is a key value in modern constitutions and must be included in the article on the founding values of the Union.

Article 2: Les valeurs de l'Union

L'Union se fonde sur les principes de respect de la dignité humaine, de liberté, de démocratie, de l'Etat de droit, et de respect des droits de l'Homme et des libertés fondamentales, valeurs qui sont communes aux Etats membres.

Explication éventuelle :

AMENDMENT FORM*Suggestion for amendment of Article : 2*By Mr : Edmund Wittbrodt*Status : - Member

1. The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, the rule of law, ~~and~~ respect for human rights and the equality of women and men, values which are common to the Member States. Its aim is a society at peace, through the practice of tolerance, justice and solidarity.
  2. The Union's values include the values of those who believe in God as the source of truth, justice, good and beauty as well as of those who do not share such a belief but respect these universal values arising from the other sources.
  3. The European Union bases on the principle of solidarity among its Member States while carrying out its missions.

Explanation (if any) :

1. This follows the EPP suggestion, but changes the order of words.
2. Inspired by the Preamble of the Constitution of Poland, follows the EPP suggestion.
3. Solidarity in the first paragraph has a different meaning than traditional "solidarity" in the Union's policies. This point is essential for the newcomer States.

AMENDMENT FORM*Suggestion for amendment of Article : 2*By Lord Tomlinson*Status : Alternate

I would prefer to see a re-ordering of values in order to give primacy to democracy, the rule of law, respect for human rights and then refer to human dignity and liberty which in any event arise from the other values.

The second sentence seems to me to say that our aims are self-evidently "good" but producing concepts incapable of clear definition. What specifically is the measure of a "society at peace", "tolerance" and "solidarity". What are the intended meanings by which we measure?

Article 2: The Union's values

2.1 The Union is founded on shared values of liberty, human dignity, democracy, the rule of law and respect for fundamental rights. Its aim is a society at peace, enriched by its cultural diversity, practising and promoting tolerance, justice and solidarity.

2.2 The Union shall respect its national and regional identities.

---

Explanation :

2.1 The formulation of 'shared' rather than 'common' values is to indicate a positive commitment to the unity of Europe. 'Common' is a more passive concept.

Liberty takes priority in a list of values.

If we have 'human dignity' already we need the wider notion of 'fundamental' rights, which is also consistent with the Charter.

A reference to the value of European culture is surely desirable at this point, as is the idea of promoting by example what it is we as Europeans practise.

2.2 This clause is taken over from Article 1. 2. The qualification of national identities being 'of its Member States' is dropped in the interests of pluralism and historical accuracy. There are many national identities within the states of Europe.

Likewise we include regional identities. The Constitution must cater for the emergence of a post-national democratic identity with flourishing regions and localities.

L'Union se fonde sur les principes de respect de la dignité humaine, de liberté, de démocratie, de l'État de droit, et de respect des droits de l'Homme et des libertés fondamentales, valeurs qui sont communes aux États membres.

Elle vise à être une société pratiquant la tolérance, la justice et la solidarité.

Explanation (if any) :

Il serait préférable de garder la notion de 'principes', bien connue du droit communautaire et qui est employée par l'article 6 du TUE. La référence aux libertés fondamentales figure actuellement à l'art. 6 (1) TUE.

Its aim is a society at peace, through the practice of, tolerance, justice, and solidarity.

Explanation

<sup>1</sup> Equality between of men and women is one of the core values of the Union (expressed for example in Article 3.2 EC: "In all the activities ... the Community shall aim to eliminate inequalities, and to promote equality, between men and women"). Manifest risk of serious breach of this value should be sufficient to initiate the procedure for alerting and sanctioning a Member State. Promotion of equality between men and women must also remain a general objective for the Union (Article 3).

Article 2: The Union's values

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights, values which are common to the Member States. Its aim is a society at peace, through the practice of tolerance, justice and solidarity.

Article 2: The Union's values

1. The Union is founded on the values of ~~respect for~~ human dignity, liberty, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, values which are common to the Member States. Its aim is a society at peace, through the practice of tolerance, justice, equality and solidarity.
2. The Union's values include the values of those who believe in God as the source of truth, justice, good and beauty as well as of those who do not share such a belief but respect these universal values arising from other sources.

Explanation:

- It should be kept in mind that infringement of the values in Para 1, first sentence will lead to the application of the sanction procedure under the present Article 7 of the EU Treaty, which eventually could lead to the suspension of voting rights of a Member State in the Council. This is why we agree with the Praesidium to keep the values in the first sentence short and concise. However, this should not preclude listing further aims and fundamental principles in the second sentence and in a second paragraph of Article 2.
- Para 1, first sentence emphasises the aim of equality – which includes equality before the law and in particular equality between women and men – in order to underline the fundamental rights included in Chapter III of the Charter of Fundamental Rights (which is an integral part of the Constitution, see our amendment to Article 5). Chapter III of the Charter is entitled “Equality” and includes equality before the law; the directly effective prohibition of all discriminations based on sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation; and the directly-effective prohibition of discrimination based on grounds of nationality within the scope of application of Part Two of the Constitution.

- Para 2, which has been inspired by the Preamble of the Constitution of Poland, recognises values which are essential for the European civilisation, regardless of whether they are linked to believing in God or to another source of values. Without these values, Europe would not be what it is today. See also Article 57(2) of the EPP Discussion Paper (Frascati text, as amended, 27 January 2003)

Explanation (if any) :

Die Würde des Menschen ist das höchste Gut in unserer Gesellschaft. Aus ihr leiten sich die Menschenrechte ab. Die bloße Achtung der Würde des Menschen wird ihrer Bedeutung nicht gerecht. Die Würde des Menschen muss in der Europäischen Union unantastbar sein (vgl. Art. 1 der Grundrechtecharta).

Der Wert der Gleichheit spiegelt das Ergebnis der Arbeitsgruppe "Soziales Europa" wider.

Auch die Sozialstaatlichkeit ist nach dem Selbstverständnis aller Mitgliedstaaten ein grundlegender Wert ihrer jeweiligen Verfassungsordnung. Sie ist damit ein gemeinsamer Wert aller Mitgliedstaaten. In der deutschen Verfassung gehört die Sozialstaatlichkeit sogar, wie die Demokratie, die Rechtsstaatlichkeit und die Menschenwürde, zu den obersten, durch die Ewigkeitsgarantie geschützten Verfassungsgütern.

Satz 2 und 3 sind zu tauschen, da sonst der Eindruck entstehen könnte, die Mitgliedstaaten seien nicht den Werten der Toleranz, der Gerechtigkeit und der Solidarität verpflichtet.

AMENDMENT FORM

Suggestion for amendment of Article 2*By: Robert MaclennanStatus : AlternateArticle 2: The Union's values

- 2.1 The Union is founded on shared values of liberty, human dignity, democracy, the rule of law and respect for fundamental rights. Its aim is a society at peace, enriched by its cultural diversity, practising and promoting tolerance, justice and solidarity.
- 2.2 The Union shall respect the identities of the Member States and the national and regional identities within them.

Explanation :

2.1 The formulation of 'shared' rather than 'common' values is to indicate a positive commitment to the unity of Europe. 'Common' is a more passive concept.

Liberty takes priority in a list of values.

If we have 'human dignity' already we need the wider notion of 'fundamental' rights, which is also consistent with the Charter.

A reference to the value of European culture is surely desirable at this point, as is the idea of promoting by example what it is we as Europeans practice.

2.2 This clause is taken over from Article 1. 2. The addition of ' and the national and regional identities within them' is proposed in the interests of pluralism and historical accuracy. There are many national identities within Europe.

Likewise we should include regional identities. The Constitution must cater for the emergence of a post-national democratic identity with flourishing regions and localities.

2 Insert after Member States «which have signed the European Convention on Human Rights as a prerequisite of treaty membership »

Explication éventuelle*The Union does not need to sign the Convention if member states have. This is a more logical approach, and one which does not confer upon the Union an attribute of statehood.

2 Delete « human dignity »

Explication éventuelle*Although a worthy concept, dignity is a subjective term once placed in a lawyer's brief.

2 Insert after « human rights » « as set out in national laws »

Explication éventuelle*Many of these terms are subjective. Treaty creep will place priority in the rights expressed in this article, as interpreted by the courts, over the rights as determined by national parliaments, and those set out elsewhere in Community agreements.

2 After « human rights », insert « freedom of speech »

Explication éventuelle*This supports the bravery of whistleblowers. The institutions are currently masked by silence.

Déposée par Madame ou Monsieur : M. Louis Michel, M. Karel de Gucht, M. Elio di Rupo, Mme Anne Van Lancker, membres de la Convention et M. Pierre Chevalier et Mme Marie Nagy, membres suppléants de la Convention

Explication éventuelle :

L'article 2 énonce les valeurs sur lesquelles repose l'Union. La valeur d'« égalité » devrait toutefois y être ajoutée de même que la tolérance, la justice et la solidarité (ce qui permet de faire l'économie de la seconde phrase qui est d'ailleurs dans le texte du Praesidium rédigée sous forme d'objectif (« vise à ») plutôt que de valeur.

Article 2 The Union's values

Suggested Amended version of Article 2:

“The Union is founded on respect for human dignity, liberty, human rights, tolerance, democracy, solidarity, justice and the rule of law, values which are common to the Member States.”

Solidarity is a fundamental value of the EU not just an objective. Solidarity should be included as a fundamental value of the European Union on the same level as freedom, justice, pluralistic democracy and human rights. This is rightly recommended by Working Group XI (Social Europe) and, in my view, the Convention should be four-squarely fully behind this recommendation.

The adoption by the Convention of such an amended clauses would represent an important development away from the rather peripheral reference to solidarity in Article 2 TEC which, in the heading “Principles”, inter alia, refers to “economic and social cohesion and solidarity among Member States”.

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights, values which are common to the Member States.

Explanation (if any) :

The Treaty should not conflate values with aims and objectives. The aims of the second sentence in the Praesidium draft would be better suited to the Preamble.

It would be useful to have clarification on the intended meaning of 'solidarity' if it is to remain in the values.

In Article 3.4, it is stated that the Union "shall seek to advance its values", which relates to Article 2. ## FICHE AMENDEMENT

Proposition d'amendement à l'Article : 2

Déposée par M. Hubert HAENEL, membre, et M. Robert BADINTER, suppléant.

Article 2: Les valeurs de l'Union

L'Union européenne est fondée sur les principes de liberté, d'égalité, de solidarité, de démocratie, de l'État de droit et de respect des droits de l'homme, communs à tous les États membres. Elle promeut ces valeurs dans le monde. ~~Elle vise à être une société paisible pratiquant la tolérance, la justice et la solidarité.~~

Explication éventuelle :

Il est inutile de mentionner ici le principe de la dignité humaine qui est intégré dans les droits de l'homme. En revanche, le principe de solidarité doit être explicitement inscrit.

Il convient en outre d'ajouter que l'Union doit promouvoir ces valeurs dans le monde.

Explanation (if any) :

Debate at the Convention revealed that this aspect of respect for diversity is properly recognised as a value rather than objective of the Union. In a later Title of the Constitution this point will have to be taken up in a way that ensures the Union's institutions have competence to give support to linguistic diversity, in particular in relation to regional and minority languages, and lesser-used languages. In addition, I draw attention to the text in the European parliament's Napolitano Report suggesting a new Article 151a in the Community Treaty about 'respecting and promoting linguistic diversity, including regional and minority languages'.

Article I-2: The Union's values

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, equality, democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights. These values are common to the Member States in a society of pluralism, tolerance, justice, [~~delete: equality~~] solidarity and non-discrimination.

Explanation (if any) :

Placing "equality" in the second sentence of the article is NOT innocent. In the present draft from the Presidium "equality" is NOT a value. Almost the contrary. As it stands the values are common for societies, which in addition are characterised by pluralism, tolerance, equality and more. But that means something which one is exactly characterised by, not something absolute. One can measure whether a society is based on (at least formally) equality. In addition concrete legislation and legislative practice exist. This is not the case in relation to pluralism and tolerance.

FICHE AMENDEMENT

Proposition d'amendement à l'Article I-7

Déposée par Monsieur de Villepin

Qualité : - Membre

Article I-7: Droits fondamentaux

1. L'Union reconnaît les droits, les libertés et les principes énoncés dans la Charte des droits fondamentaux qui constitue la deuxième partie de la présente Constitution.
3. Les droits fondamentaux, tels qu'ils sont garantis par la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales et tels qu'ils résultent des traditions constitutionnelles communes aux États membres, font partie du droit de l'Union en tant que principes généraux.

Explication éventuelle :

Lors de la discussion par la Convention du projet d'article 5 de la future constitution, le représentant des autorités françaises à la Convention a présenté un amendement ne contestant pas l'introduction d'une base juridique permettant l'adhésion de l'Union à la CEDH, mais indiquant que cette adhésion ne devait être mentionnée que comme une possibilité. Etant donnée la nouvelle proposition du Præsidium, qui n'a pas retenu notre amendement, les autorités françaises souhaitent que l'adhésion de l'Union à la CEDH soit explicitement subordonnée à l'adoption d'une déclaration annexée à l'acte final de la CIG qui permettrait d'entourer cette adhésion de toutes les garanties nécessaires. La formule employée par le Præsidium selon laquelle « L'adhésion à cette Convention ne modifie pas les compétences de l'Union telles que définies dans la présente Constitution » n'est pas suffisante.

AMENDMENT FORM

Title II: Fundamental Rights and Citizenship of the Union

Suggestion for amendment of Article : Article I-7: Fundamental Rights

By Members: Mr Andrew Duff, Mr Lamberto Dini, Mr Paul Helminger, Mr Rein Lang, Mr Dimitrij Rupel, Lord MacLennan.

TITLE II: FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION*Article I-7: Fundamental rights

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes the Second Part of this Constitution.
  2. The Union shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in this Constitution. The Union may also seek accession to other international human rights conventions.
  3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Explanation:

7.2 Although the ECHR is the principal human rights convention, and in the light of the jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice may need a specific mention in the Constitution, it is by no means the only one. We need to provide for EU activism in the field of human rights.

AMENDMENT FORM*Suggestion for amendment of Article I – 7:*By Ms Sandra Kalniete*Status : Member

The Charter shall be annexed to the Constitutional Treaty as a Protocol.

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Constitution. The Charter is set out in a Protocol annexed to this Constitutional Treaty.

Explanation (if any) :

The Union is a specific entity which is legally based on several Establishing treaties. Taking into account that the constitutional issues in the EU are decided on the basis of the agreement between the Member States in the form of treaties, the new Treaty should be defined as a Constitutional Treaty.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights itself consists of more than 50 articles and it is thus not practical to include the entire text of the Charter into the body of the Constitutional Treaty text. Given the orderly structure of the Constitutional Treaty and the laconic nature of its text, the Charter of Fundamental rights should be annexed to the Treaty as a protocol.

To provide a unified implementation of the provisions of the Charter, the Commentary should be elaborated.

AMENDMENT FORM*Suggestion for amendment of Article I-7.1:

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights ~~which constitutes the Second Part of~~ in a Protocol to this Constitution.<sup>1</sup>

---

Explanation

<sup>1</sup> To have the Charter as a Protocol would be more in line with the overall constitutional architecture.

Articolo I-7: Diritti fondamentali

1. L'Unione riconosce i diritti, le libertà e i principi sanciti nella Carta dei diritti fondamentali che costituisce la parte II della Costituzione. Nello spirito del “commentario alla Carta” e sulla base degli articoli 51 e ss della II parte, le istituzioni, gli organi e le agenzie dell'Unione rispettano tali diritti e libertà e osservano tali principi promuovendone l'applicazione secondo le rispettive competenze.
2. L'Unione persegue l'adesione alla Convenzione europea di salvaguardia dei diritti dell'uomo e delle libertà fondamentali. L'adesione a tale Convenzione non modifica le competenze dell'Unione definite nella Costituzione.
3. I diritti fondamentali, garantiti dalla Convenzione europea di salvaguardia dei diritti dell'uomo e delle libertà fondamentali e risultanti dalle tradizioni costituzionali comuni agli Stati membri, fanno parte del diritto dell'Unione in qualità di principi generali.

Article I-7: Fundamental rights

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles ~~set out in~~of the Charter of Fundamental Rights ~~which constitutes the Second Part of~~that is set out in a Protocol annexed to this Constitution.
2. The Union shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in this Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Explanation (if any): Firstly, the Dutch Government would like to point out that many articles (especially the articles of title VI, part I of the Constitution) are a repetition of what is already laid down in the Charter of Fundamental Rights. If the Charter would become a part of the Constitution, such a repetition is obviously undesirable. Therefore, if the Charter would become a part of the Constitution, which the Dutch government does not support, these articles will have to be deleted and/or adjusted. See for further background information the relevant declaration of the Dutch Government Representative (CONV 659/03).

Furthermore, the articles 14, 15, 29 and 35 of part II of the Constitution should not be legally enforceable. A declaration attached to the Constitution should make this very clear.

Article I-7: Droits fondamentaux*• Remplacer le terme « s'emploie » par « accomplit tout ce qui lui incombe afin de » :

2. L'Union ~~s'emploie~~ accomplit tout ce qui lui incombe afin à d'adhérer à la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'Homme et des libertés fondamentales. L'adhésion à cette Convention ne modifie pas les compétences de l'Union telles que définies dans la présente Constitution.

Explication éventuelle :

Avec l'incorporation de la Charte des droits fondamentaux dans le Traité constitutionnel l'Union franchit un pas considérable dans le domaine de la protection des droits fondamentaux. Par ailleurs, dans le cadre de la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'Homme et des libertés fondamentales, qui a valeur constitutionnelle, il y a un processus dynamique qui a permis un développement sans précédent en ce qui concerne la protection de ses droits et libertés depuis 1950. Compte tenu du fait que tous les Etats membres et les futurs Etats membres de l'Union sont aussi partie à cette Convention, il conviendrait d'éviter toute duplication et concurrence entre le système communautaire et européen en ce qui concerne les droits fondamentaux. En outre, l'adhésion de l'Union à la Convention européenne permettrait d'éviter une nouvelle division en Europe sur la base des droits fondamentaux.

AMENDMENT FORM*Suggestion for amendment of Article : I-7*By Mr : Hain*Status : - Member -

Explication éventuelle :

Les droits des mineurs doivent être considérés comme fondamentaux et inclus dans le nouveau Traité. Jusqu'à maintenant, les bébés sont seulement considérés comme d'éventuelles victimes, des personnes à charge et interdites de travail. Ou encore exclusivement comme objet de protection plutôt que comme sujets de droits. Ceci est en contradiction avec l'esprit et al lettre de la Convention sur les droits de l'enfant de 1989.

L'ajout permettra entre autre de :

1. garantir que la politique et la législation de l'Union n'auront plus un impact négatif sur les mineurs ;
2. reconnaître la transnationalité des droits des enfants, évident aussi dans le fait qu'une série de directives européennes ont un impact sur les mineurs, comme celles en matière de media et de politique pour les consommateurs, de réglementation de l'asile ou du combat contre les phénomènes du trafic et de l'abus de mineurs ;

AMENDMENT FORM*Suggestion for amendment of: Article 5 (1)By: Professor Jürgen Meyer, delegate of the German BundestagStatus : - Member -

---

Aim:

To incorporate the Charter of Fundamental Rights, including the preamble, at the beginning, or at least in the second part, of the Constitution

---

Explanation :

With the Charter of Fundamental Rights, the EU has made it unmistakably clear that it considers itself to be a European union of values going beyond a purely economic community. The Charter incorporates, in one single text, in chapters on human dignity, freedoms, equality, solidarity, citizens' rights and justice, a balanced and up-to-date catalogue of specific rights, general freedoms, values and principles. At the same time, it reaffirms the constitutional traditions common to the Member States and the unique European social model. The European citizens have already begun to invoke the Charter in their petitions to the European parliament and their complaints to the European Ombudsman. The commitment to safeguarding fundamental and human rights demonstrated by the EU in the Charter belongs at the beginning of a future European Constitution. This applies in particular to the preamble, which is the result of intense debates and a balanced political compromise in the first Convention.

In case the charter should be integrated in the second part of the constitution, Art. 5 should read as follows :

Article 5: Fundamental rights

- (1) The fundamental rights of the citizens of the Union, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall derive from the Charter of Fundamental Rights in the second part of this Constitution.
- (2) The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and to other international agreements safeguarding human rights. Accession to these agreements shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

Articolo 5: Diritti fondamentali

1. I diritti fondamentali dell'Unione europea sono enunciati nella Carta dei diritti fondamentali che costituisce la prima parte della Costituzione (resto soppresso).

[2. L'Unione può aderire alla Convenzione europea di salvaguardia dei diritti dell'uomo e delle libertà fondamentali, ai trattati e alle organizzazioni internazionali che assicurano la protezione dei diritti fondamentali. Tali adesioni non modificano le competenze dell'Unione definite dalla presente Costituzione.]

3. Soppresso

---

Explication éventuelle:

1. La Carta dei diritti fondamentali non costituisce un'aggiunta alla Costituzione, ma una sua parte.

2. Il paragrafo potrebbe anche essere soppresso perché l'attribuzione della personalità giuridica all'Unione e l'integrazione della Carta dei diritti fondamentali nella Costituzione dovrebbero superare gli ostacoli all'adesione individuati dalla Corte di Giustizia (che ha rilevato la mancanza di competenza dell'Unione nel campo dei diritti fondamentali). Ove così non fosse bisognerebbe aggiungere analoga facoltà di adesione ai trattati e alle organizzazioni che assicurano la protezione dei diritti fondamentali affinché la specifica autorizzazione ad aderire alla CEDU non appaia come limitativa.

3. Il paragrafo è superfluo e fonte di possibili equivoci. Esso ripete la formula dell'articolo 6 paragrafo 2 del Trattato UE che è superato dall'avvenuta approvazione della Carta dei diritti fondamentali e dalla sua integrazione nella Costituzione. Infatti, sia i diritti derivanti dalle tradizioni costituzionali comuni, sia quelli sanciti dalla CEDU sono già inclusi nella Carta, come risulta dal preambolo e dagli articoli 52 e 53 della stessa. Poiché i cataloghi dei diritti fondamentali presenti nelle costituzioni non sono mai interpretabili come esaustivi, non c'è bisogno di citare queste fonti per consentire un'eventuale interpretazione evolutiva della Carta. Al contrario, poiché nel preambolo della stessa sono indicate altre fonti da cui sono tratti i diritti fondamentali vigenti nell'Unione, la menzione di sole due fonti rischia di avere un significato limitativo.

Proposition d'amendement à l'Article 5

Article 5: Fundamental rights

1. The fundamental rights of the European Union are stated in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes the first part of the Constitution.

2. The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and to international treaties and organisations that ensure the protection of fundamental rights. Accession to these shall not affect the Union's competencies as defined by this Constitution.

3. Suppressed

---

Explication éventuelle:

1. The Charter of Fundamental rights is not an appendage of the Constitution but a part of it.

2. The paragraph could be suppressed because the attribution of legal status to the Union and the integration of the Charter of Fundamental Rights in the Constitution should overcome the obstacles to accession noted by the Court of Justice (it noticed the Union's lack of competence in the area of fundamental rights). Where this is not the case, an analogous provision for accession to treaties and organisations that ensure the protection of fundamental rights should be added, so that the specific authorisation given for accession to the ECHR is not considered a limiting factor.

3. The paragraph is superfluous and a source of possible misconceptions. It repeats the words of article 6 paragraph 2 of the EU Treaty, which was superseded by the approval of the Charter of Fundamental Rights and its integration into the Constitution. In fact, both the rights that derive from common constitutional traditions, and those sanctioned by the ECHR are included in the Charter, as can be seen in the preamble and articles 52 and 53 of the same. Since the catalogues of fundamental rights present in the constitutions can never be interpreted as exhaustive, there is no need to quote these sources in any future elaboration of the Charter. On the contrary, since the preamble to the same indicates other sources for the fundamental rights in force in the Union, to mention just two sources could be seen as a limiting factor.

The Union wants to accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

Explanation (if any) :

The reasons why the EU should accede to the ECHR have been adequately and convincingly set out in the final report unanimously adopted by Working Group II and largely endorsed by the Plenary Convention, where a very strong tendency in favour of accession emerged.

It is therefore essential to ensure that accession is not only made legally possible in the future EU-Constitution, but also effectively pursued as an option agreed upon by the Convention, in order to maintain the parallelism which was expediently established by the Laeken Declaration between the Charter and the ECHR.

The most appropriate way to secure this is to lay down an obligation to this effect in the future Constitution, as proposed by the amendment above. Alternatively, and in any event, a clear statement to the effect that the EU should accede to the ECHR should be made by the Convention, either in the introduction or in the explanations to the Constitutional Treaty.

Article 5: Fundamental rights

- 5.1 The Charter of Fundamental Rights, as set out in Chapter Two, shall be an integral part of the Constitution.
- 5.2 The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and other international human rights conventions. Accession to them shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.
- 5.3 Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Explanation:

5.1 Of the options available for the installation of the Charter in the Constitution, its publication as a second chapter of Part One would seem to offer the greatest visibility and comprehension. Its annexation as a Protocol would be equivalent in legal terms, but it would in that case be necessary to spell out (and therefore repeat without divergence) some of the Charter's key points in this Title II.

The Chapter Two solution proposed here would allow the Convention to shorten radically Article 7 on citizenship.

5.2 Although the ECHR is the principal human rights convention, and in the light of the jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice may need a specific mention in the Constitution, it is not the only one.

La nouvelle deuxième phrase se lit comme suit :

L'adhésion à cette Convention ne modifie pas la répartition des compétences entre l'Union et les Etats Membres telles que définies par la présente Constitution.

---

Explication éventuelle :

Cette modification semble nécessaire, car la phrase « l'adhésion à cette Convention ne modifie pas les compétences de l'Union » ne reflète pas correctement le but recherché, tel que défini dans la note explicative (p.13), qui est d'empêcher la répartition des compétences entre l'Union et les Etats Membres de pâtir de l'adhésion.

Ainsi l'article 5(1) devient comme suit :

La charte des droits fondamentaux fait partie intégrante de la Constitution. La charte figure dans un Protocole annexé à celle-ci.

Explication éventuelle :

Le but de la Convention est de rédiger un texte constitutionnel simple et lisible pour les citoyens. Intégrer la Charte telle qu'elle est, conduirait à un texte constitutionnel nécessairement volumineux. En outre, son intégration textuelle dans le futur Traité nécessiterait la modification de certains de ses articles. Matériellement, il serait difficile pour la Convention de se livrer à un tel exercice.

Fiche amendement*Proposition d'amendement à l'article : 5*Déposée par MM. Santer, Helminger, Fayot*En qualité de MEMBRES

Il est proposé de reprendre la Charte dans un Titre Ier de la Constitution. Il faut noter que la plupart des dispositions du Titre II consacré aux « droits fondamentaux et à la citoyenneté de l'Union » se retrouvent déjà dans la Charte. L'actuel Titre Ier deviendrait le Titre II. Le nouveau premier titre pourrait être complété par les dispositions ne figurant pas dans la Charte, telles que la définition de la citoyenneté de l'Union et l'adhésion de l'Union à la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'Homme et des libertés fondamentales. Cette disposition devrait être formulée de la manière suivante :

Explication :

L'Union possédant dorénavant la personnalité juridique a vocation à adhérer à la CEDH. L'amendement vise à prendre un engagement ferme à cet égard, indispensable dans un souci d'unicité et de cohérence de la future interprétation et jurisprudence en matière de droits de l'Homme et de libertés fondamentales.

Aggiungere un par. 4 :

"L'Unione europea darà una considerazione preminente all'interesse superiore del fanciullo in tutte le decisioni prese nell'ambito delle disposizioni del Trattato, così come sancito dalla Convenzione sui diritti del fanciullo."

Motivazione:

I diritti dei minori devono essere compresi tra quelli fondamentali e devono essere inclusi nel nuovo Trattato. Fino ad ora i bambini sono considerati solo come eventuali vittime, persone a carico o impedimenti al lavoro. Dunque ancora esclusivamente come oggetto di tutela piuttosto che come soggetti di diritto, E ciò in contrasto con lo spirito e la lettera della Convenzione sui Diritti del Fanciullo del 1989. L'inserimento contribuirebbe inoltre a:

1. garantire che le politiche e la legislazione dell'Unione non abbiano più un impatto negativo sui minori;
2. riconoscere la transnazionalità dei diritti dei minori, evidente anche dal fatto che una serie di direttive europee hanno un impatto sui minori, come quelle in materia di media e di politiche per i consumatori, o politiche per regolare l'asilo o per combattere il fenomeno del traffico e di abuso di minori; garantire che l'UE rispetti e tenga in considerazione i diritti dei minori nell'approvazione delle leggi che possono avere un impatto diretto o indiretto sui minori. I bisogni e i diritti dei minori differiscono da quelli degli adulti, e ciò è ampiamente espresso nella Convenzione sui diritti del fanciullo, ratificata da tutti gli stati membri dell'Unione, così come dai Paesi candidati all'adesione.

- Replace the title “Constitution” by the “Constitutional treaty” (in the whole text);
- Delete the following part of first sentence “shall be an integral part of the Constitution”;
- The Charter shall be annexed to the Constitutional Treaty as a Protocol.

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Constitution. The Charter is set out ~~in the second part of~~ in a Protocol annexed to this Constitutional Treaty.

Explanation (if any) :

The Union is a specific entity, which is based on the several establishing Treaties. Taking into account that the constitutional issues in the EU are approved on the basis of the agreement between the Member States in form of the treaties, the new Treaty should be defined as the Constitutional Treaty.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights itself consists of more than 50 articles and it is thus not practical to include the entire text of the Charter into the body of the Constitutional Treaty text. Given the orderly structure of the Constitutional Treaty and the laconic nature of its text, the Charter of Fundamental rights should be annexed to the Treaty as a Protocol.

Insertion of the Charter as a Protocol should allow the Member States when they decide on the entering into force of the Constitutional Treaty to decide separately about the entering into force of the Protocol. This would allow the Member States to negotiate a time schedule that will determine when the given rights will become binding.

2. The Union [may accede] shall seek accession to<sup>3</sup> to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

Explanation

<sup>1</sup> The Charter should not be set out in Part II of the Treaty (The Charter does not provide any legal basis for the implementation of policies).

(2) Zusätzlich zu den in der Grundrechtecharta anerkannten Rechten achtet die Union die Grundrechte, wie sie in der Europäischen Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten gewährleistet sind und wie sie sich aus den gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten ergeben.

(3) Die Union kann der Europäischen Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten beitreten. Der Beitritt zu dieser Konvention berührt nicht die in dieser Verfassung festgelegten Zuständigkeiten der Union.

~~(3) Die Grundrechte, wie sie in der Europäischen Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten gewährleistet sind und wie sie sich aus den gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten ergeben, gehören zu den allgemeinen Grundsätzen des Gemeinschaftsrechts.~~

Explanation (if any) :

Das Wort "integral" in Absatz 1 ist überflüssig. Die Charta sollte an herausragender Stelle des Verfassungvertrags erscheinen (am besten unmittelbar nach der Präambel der Verfassung). Die Protokolllösung scheidet aus, da sie nicht der Würde und dem Stellenwert der Charta als Ausdruck der europäischen Werteordnung entspricht. Der neue Absatz 2 übernimmt die Formulierung aus Art. 6 (2) EUV. Der bisherige Absatz 2 sollte aus systematischen Gründen Absatz 3 werden.

(a) In Article 1.1. citizens of the EU – along with peoples and States- should be mentioned;

(b) In Article 3.2. social market economy should be added as EU objective;

(c) In Article 5.2. in stead of:

The Union ‘may’ accede

The Union shall accede

Explanation:

With respect to (c) above - The question of accession is of “constitutional significance” and the Convention must pronounce itself clearly in favour of accession. Under the conclusions of Working Group II accession is regarded as a complementary (to incorporation of the Charter) and not an alternative option.

Article 5: Fundamental rights

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Constitution. The Charter is set out [in the second part of/in a Protocol annexed to] this Constitution.

2. The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

IMPORTANT STRUCTURAL AMENDMENT:

The Charter should be inserted in its full text at the very beginning of the Constitution, in Part One, in a Title I “Charter of Fundamental Rights and Citizenship of the Union”.

The Constitution would then start with “Human Dignity” as Article 1, would include Citizenship of the Union (Article 17 EC) as Article 51 of the Charter and would end with Article 55 (Prohibition of abuse of rights).

As a consequence, Title I of the Praesidium text should become Title II. The Articles of the Praesidium text should be renumbered accordingly.

For a full-text example, see the EPP Discussion Paper (Frascati text, as amended, 27 January 2003).

Article 5: Fundamental rights

Explanation:

Para 1:

– The insertion of the Charter as a full text and at the very beginning of the Constitution was clearly the preferred option of Convention Working Group II “Charter” (see page 3 of its Final Report, where “insertion of the text of the Charter articles at the beginning of the Constitutional Treaty” is presented as the first of three options. It is then said: „a large majority of the Group would prefer the first option in the interest of a greater legibility of the Constitutional Treaty“. We share this recommendation of the Working Group for the following reasons:

- (1) To integrate the full text of the Charter into the Constitution makes its rights and duties clearly visible to the citizens of the Union which, according to the Charter, should be placed at the heart of the Union’s activities.*
- (2) To start the Constitution with the Charter would stress that the Union is a “Union of values”. It would reflect the fundamental respect of the Union for human dignity (which would figure prominently as Article 1 of the Constitution) and thereby give the best possible evidence of the Christian origins of European civilisation. It should be recalled that the Constitutions of Finland, the Netherlands, Portugal and Germany also start with Fundamental Rights (the latter did so after the historic experience of a barbaric and inhuman regime which had come to power under a Constitution which had placed the Fundamental Rights Chapter in an Annex to the Constitution of Weimar ...).*
- (3) The full-text integration of the Charter at the beginning of the Constitution also would make the drafting of the rest of the Constitution simpler and shorter. In particular, it would make numerous Articles of the current acquis superfluous as they are already fully integrated into the Charter. For example: the Charter already includes all rights related to Union citizenship (Articles 39-46 Charter; today Articles 18-21, 255 EC of the Treaty), which therefore would not have to be repeated in the Constitutional Text, as currently suggested by the Praesidium text in Article 7; the Charter also includes the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality (Article 21(2) Charter), equality between women and men (Article 21(1), 23 Charter; today Article 141 EC Treaty) as well as a number of economic rights granted by the EC Treaty, such as the right of free movement of workers, of services and the freedom of establishment (Article 15(2) Charter; today Articles 39, 43, 49 EC Treaty); the Charter includes furthermore a number of the important transversal objectives of the EC Treaty, such as a high level of human health protection (Article 35 Charter; today Article 152(1) EC Treaty), a high level of environment protection (Article 37 Charter; today Article 2, 6, and 174 EC Treaty) and a high level of consumer protection (Article 38* Charter; today Article 153 EC Treaty); and finally, the Charter already guarantees access to services of general interest in order to promote economic and social cohesion of the Union (Article 36 Charter; see today Article 16 EC Treaty). Following inclusion of the full Charter at the beginning of Part One of the Constitution, all these provisions would not to have be repeated in the remaining text of the Constitution. Their legal importance would be beyond doubt, in view of their prominent location.

- It is no counter-argument to a full-text integration of the Charter that such an integration could lead to problems regarding its Preamble. The essential elements of the preamble of the Charter can easily be integrated into the Preamble of the Constitution which should take over the main elements of the Charter. For an illustrative example, see the Preamble in the EPP Discussion Paper (Frascati text, as amended, 27 January 2003), which combines the Preamble of the Charter with elements of the ECSC Treaty, the EU Treaty and the EC Treaty. See also our amendment proposing integration of such a Preamble in the Constitutional Text.
- The Charter states, in its Article 51 (2) that it does not extend the scope of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks defined by this Constitution (text of the Charter, as clarified by the recommendations of Convention Working Group II “Charter”).

Para 2:

- Enabling clause for ECHR accession: could better be integrated either as an additional provision at the end of the Charter or, alternatively, in the constitutional provisions on the treaty-making power of the Union. As an example for the latter, see Article 124(2), subpara 2, 5th indent of the EPP Discussion Paper (Frascati text, as amended, 27 January 2003).

Para 3:

- is a superfluous provision if the Charter is integrated into the Constitution. It is the very purpose of the Charter to reaffirm the fundamental rights as integral parts of primary law as they result from the ECHR and from the constitutional traditions of the Member States (as well as from other sources) – see the fifth paragraph of the Preamble of the Charter.

  3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Explanation (if any) :

It is clear that the Charter of Fundamental Rights belongs to provisions that are constitutional to their nature. It follows that the Charter should be annexed to the Constitution as a protocol with a status equivalent to that of Part I. Since the Charter and the ECHR are complementary to each other, there should a clearer commitment by the Union to bring about the accession to the ECHR

2. The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and to the Framework Convention on Minority Rights. Accession to that Convention and to the Framework Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

Explanation

The adhesion to the Framework Convention would solve an important deficiency of the present acquis, which is missing an effective protection of national and ethnic minorities. The Central European part of the continent, which is about to join the EU brings into the union a great number of national and ethnic minorities. However the Copenhagen democracy criteria give clear guidelines for the candidate countries for safeguarding national minority rights, unfortunately neither the present acquis nor the Charter of Fundamental Rights deal sufficiently with national minority rights. This would mean, that after adhesion the level of national minority rights protection would considerably fall due to the lack of clear guidelines in these areas.

3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

---

Explanation:

- 1) A reference to the Charter as an “integral part” of the Constitutional Treaty is not in line with the recommendations from WG II.
- 2) There was general agreement in the Convention that the Charter should be made legally binding through a direct reference in the first part of the Constitutional Treaty and annexed to the Treaty in a protocol.

Aim:

Reformulate Article 5.1:

"The Charter of Fundamental Rights, as set out in Chapter Two, shall be an integral part of the Constitution.

---

Explanation :

It would be better for the Charter of Fundamental Rights to be inserted as a second part of the Constitution rather than annexed to it as a Protocol. In this respect, it is worth recalling that the American Bill of Rights was added two years after the adption of the US Constitution, with the enactment of the first ten amendments. Consequently, articles 8-9 ought to be redrafted, to avoid any redundancy.

Article 5: Fundamental rights

1. ~~The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Constitution. The Charter is set out [in the second part of/in a Protocol annexed to] this Constitution.~~<sup>1</sup>
2. The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Charter of Fundamental Rights, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Explanation (if any) :

We can only consider integration of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the Constitution, provided that this does not thereby become substantive EU law which could result in direct claims by citizens against their government.

---

---

Explanation (if any) :

Abs. 1:

Die vollständige Wiedergabe des Wortlautes der Grundrechtecharta ist unverzichtbar. Darüber hinaus ist ein redaktioneller Verweis auf den Zweiten Teil unnötig und in einer Verfassung unüblich.

Absatz 2 und 3 sollten getauscht werden, da es sich bei Absatz 2 - anders als bei Absatz 1 und 3, die materielle Gewährleistungen enthalten - um eine Ermächtigungsgrundlage handelt.

Abs. 3 (ex-Abs. 2):

Die Union sollte die Möglichkeit haben, auch anderen Verträgen zum Schutz der Menschenrechte beizutreten.

Explication éventuelle:

La Charte des droits fondamentaux ne constitue pas un ajout à la Constitution, elle en sera une partie.

Sur la suppression du paragraphe 2 de l'article 5: l'attribution de la personnalité juridique à l'Union prévue dans l'article 4 et l'intégration de la Charte des droits fondamentaux dans la Constitution prévue dans l'article 5 paragraphe 1 devrait surmonter les obstacles à l'adhésion à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme. Ceci répondrait aux exigences de la Cour de Justice.

Sur la suppression du paragraphe 3 de l'article 5: ceci devient superflu et source d'éventuels équivoques. Il répète le contenu de l'article 6 paragraphe 2 du Traité de l'UE qui deviendra obsolète après l'intégration de la Charte des droits fondamentaux dans la Constitution. En effet, les droits qui résultent des traditions constitutionnelles communes aux Etats membres ainsi que ceux qui sont garantis par la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme font déjà partie de la Charte, voir dans son préambule et dans ses articles 52 et 53.

AMENDMENT FORM

Suggestion for amendment of Article 5

By: Mr Józef Oleksy

Proposed Amendments:

Article 5: Fundamental rights

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Constitution. The Charter is set out in the second part of this Constitution.

3. delete

Explanation:

It is assumed that the Charter will become the second part of the Treaty. In addition to this, the deletion of para. 3 confirms the treaty legitimacy of the Charter of Fundamental Rights and not the European Convention on Human Rights ( ECHR ), which the Union may (or may not) choose to adapt . As the Charter of Fundamental Rights is raised to an act of constitutional rank and includes basic rights, including those, which the Court of Justice articulated in the form of general legal rules, questions arise as to why provisions on basis rights are kept as general rules.

AMENDMENT FORM*Suggestion for amendment of Article 5 para 2*By Mr : MacCormick, Neil*Status : - Alternate

Article 5 para 2: insert 19 words :

The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and to other international agreements for the protection and promotion of human rights.. Accession to the European Convention or other like Conventions shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

Explanation (if any) : It is particularly urgent for the Union to accede to the European Convention, but there are other instruments to which it may be or become desirable to accede.

5.1 Delete

Explication éventuelle

The integration of the Charter overturns the consensus reached by its authors. Integrating the text establishes a new legal hierarchy. It sets European law against established national practice, and creates immense legal uncertainty which can only be settled through the ECJ acting as a constitutional arbiter, a role for which it was manifestly not established.

5.2 Delete

Explication éventuelle

This creates ambiguity of institutions, between the ECJ and the ECHR.

5.3 Delete

Explication éventuelle

As the explanatory note explicitly states, this article is intended to expand Union competences by case law, and not through the treaties. This is most undemocratic. A better and simpler solution would be to require members of the Union to be signatories of the European Convention on Human Rights.

FICHE AMENDEMENT*Proposition d'amendement à l'Article : 5*Déposée Monsieur : Hannes FARNLEITNER*Qualité : - Membre

[..]

The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Constitution. The Charter is set out [in the first ~~second~~ part of ~~in a Protocol annexed to~~] this Constitution.

---

Explication:

In accordance with the recommendations of Working Group II (see pages 3 and 6 of CONV 354/02) the text of the Charter Articles should be inserted “at the beginning of the Constitutional Treaty” (therefore into the first part of the Constitution). If the Plenary intends not to follow this recommendation of “a large majority of the Group” the Charter should be annexed to the Constitution as a Protocol.

Art. 5 para 2 should in any case remain in part one of the Constitution.

L'Union peut adhérer à la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales ainsi qu'à d'autres accords internationaux de protection des droits fondamentaux. L'adhésion à cette Convention ou à ces accords ne modifie pas les compétences de l'Union telles que définies par la présente Constitution
  3. Les droits fondamentaux, tels qu'ils sont garantis par la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales et tels qu'ils résultent des traditions constitutionnelles communes aux Etats membres, font partie du droit de l'Union en tant que principes généraux.

Explication éventuelle :

1. Même si l'intégration de la Charte dans une deuxième partie ou dans un Protocole n'emporte pas en elle-même des implications juridiques, il reste que la Charte doit, en raison de son importance, être intégrée dans le corps même de la Constitution et ne peut donc être reléguée dans un document annexée à celle-ci.
2. Outre la possibilité d'une adhésion de l'Union à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, la Constitution devrait prévoir que l'Union puisse adhérer à d'autres instruments de protection des droits fondamentaux.

1. The Union recognises the rights, freedoms and principles in the Charter of Fundamental Rights. The scope, applicability and legal effect of the Charter are described in Part VII of that Charter.
  2. The Union may accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not extend the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.
  3. See comment below.

Explanation (if any) :

We cannot accept the Charter of Fundamental Rights being ‘an integral part of the Constitution’ as it stands.

In paragraph 2, I have replaced ‘affect’ by ‘extend’ for clarity. The paragraph confers a power upon the Union to accede to the ECHR but it does not address the issue of the Union procedures applicable to ECHR accession. The modalities of accession would need to be discussed in detail at a later date, at which time we would need to ensure our derogations were protected. The agreement of the Contracting Parties to the ECHR to an amendment to the ECHR to enable Union accession would also be needed.

The point in paragraph 3 is currently a principle of Community case law – and would be better remaining as such. Its formalisation here could have implications for CFSP, as it is extended from a principle of the Community to a principle of the Union.

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be an integral part of the Consitution. The Charter is set out ~~[in the second part of /~~in a Protocol annexed to]this Constitution. The Charter shall not affect the Union's competences as defined elsewhere in this Constitution.

Explanation (if any) :

Without prejudice to the political decision to be reached as to whether the Charter is to be incorporated, if it is to be incorporated, for reasons of simplicity and clarity, it should be included in a Protocol to the Treaty.

Article 5.1, in keeping with the wording of Article 5.2, should reflect the fact that incorporation of the Charter shall respect the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it by other parts of the Treaty.

The question of the standing of the commentary drawn up by the Praesidium of the Charter Convention must also be addressed in a satisfactory way in the drafting of the relevant further part of the Constitution.

The Union may accede to ~~the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms~~ international agreements for the protection and promotion of human rights. Accession to ~~that Convention~~ shall not affect the Union's competences as defined by this Constitution.

Explanation (if any) :

The possibility for the Union to accede to the ECHR is greatly to be welcomed. As currently drafted, however, this Article would prevent the Union from acceding to international human rights agreements developed by, for example, the United Nations and the ILO. Nor could the Union accede to other Council of Europe conventions.

The question of whether the Union should accede to international human rights agreements is a matter of policy. The Constitution should leave the matter open, to be debated on a case-by-case basis, as is the situation in the Member States.

Explanation (if any) :*Absatz 1:

Die bloße Anerkennung der Bestimmungen des Teils II der Verfassung durch die Union wird dem Stellenwert, der der Grundrechtecharta eingeräumt werden soll, nicht gerecht. Die Bestimmung muss vielmehr unmissverständlich zum Ausdruck bringen, dass die Grundrechtecharta unmittelbar geltendes Recht darstellt, das von der Union strikt einzuhalten ist.

Absatz 2:

Die vom Präsidium vertretene Auslegung, wonach dem Gutachten 2/94 des EuGH zu entnehmen sei, dass es für den Beitritt zu anderen internationalen Menschenrechtskonventionen keiner besonderen Rechtsgrundlage bedarf, ist keineswegs zwingend. 10. Juni 2003

— Herrn

Clemens Ladenburger

Sekretariat des Europäischen Konvents

Per email

clemens.ladenburger@consilium.eu.int

Sehr geehrter Herr Ladenburger,

vielen Dank für Ihr Schreiben vom 3. Juni 2003 und die Vorschläge zur Anpassung der Erläuterungen zum Chartatext.

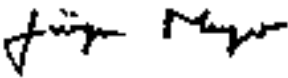

Für überzeugend halte ich die Überarbeitung der Erläuterungen mit Blick auf die im Europäischen Konvent bereits erzielten Integrationsfortschritte. Ebenso entsprechen die sprachlichen Klarstellungen und die Anpassung der Referenzen zur Rechtsprechung des EuGH dem von der Arbeitsgruppe II verfolgten Ziel, die Erläuterung als Interpretationshilfe für die Chartabestimmungen zu aktualisieren.

Nicht akzeptabel ist für mich als Mitglied des ersten und des zweiten Konvents allerdings die veränderte Formulierung zum rechtlichen Status der Erläuterungen. Die im Grundrechtekonvent gefundene Formel war Teil des schwierigen Endkompromisses und sollte von zweiten Konvent schon aus Respekt vor der Erarbeitung der Grundrechtecharta nicht wieder aufgeschnürt werden.

Darüber hinaus hat es zu keiner Zeit unter den Delegierten des Europäischen Konvents eine mehrheitlich getragene Zustimmung zu einer Veränderung der Eingangsformel der Erläuterungen gegeben. Ausserdem waren die Erklärungen inhaltlich nicht Gegenstand der Beratungen im ersten oder zweiten Konvent.

Ich halte es nicht für wünschenswert, die von vielen Delegierten politisch nicht gewollte Andeutung einer Aufwertung der Erläuterungen durch die technische Überarbeitung in den Text aufzunehmen. Dies gilt umso mehr mit Blick auf eine eventuelle spätere Erklärung der Regierungskonferenz zu den Charta-Erläuterungen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

(Meyer)

À l'attention du Commissaire

M. Antonio VITORINO

President GT II

Monsieur le Commissaire,

faisant suite à la note WGII 27 du 3 juin dernier, je tiens à vous féliciter vivement pour le soin avec lequel le travail a été fait. Personnellement, je ne partage pas la thèse, soutenue à la page 63 de la version française, concernant la distinction nette qu'il y aurait entre "droits" et "principes". Je crois, au contraire, qu'il s'agit d'une distinction partiellement dépassée, pas seulement par la doctrine, mais aussi par la jurisprudence constitutionnelle (cfr. par exemple, l'arrêt de la Cour Constitutionnelle italienne n. 309 du 16 juillet 1999 en matière de droit à la santé).

Néanmoins, je reconnais que mon opinion n'est pas importante, puis qu'il s'agit d'un travail confié exclusivement à la responsabilité des fonctionnaires-juristes et qui n'est pas soumis à la discussion et à l'approbation de la Convention. Pour cette raison, aucun renvoi et aucune mention à ce précieux travail ne peuvent être faits dans le traité constitutionnel ou, en général, dans des actes ayant une valeur juridique contraignant pour les institutions de l'Union et/ou des Etats membres.

Meilleures salutations.

Technical Explanations to the Charter of Fundamental Rights

Thank you for your note of 3 June (WG II 27) consulting Members of Working Group about your proposed changes to the original texts of the technical Explanations to the Charter of Fundamental Rights. I attach a note detailing some specific concerns. They are relatively few in number and this reflects, if I may say so, the typically thorough and sensitive work which has been done by you and the Secretariat

As you know, the Explanations have always been a key element in my Government's consideration of the Charter. Given the tightness of the deadline, compounded by all our other tasks and absences due to the Convention I hope you will understand it if I find that I need to revert to you later on this topic after I have completed necessary further consultation with my Ministerial colleagues.

In that context, there are two general points about WG II 27 which I should like to make in this covering letter. First, as regards the identification of “principles” within the meaning of Article 52(5), it remains my Government’s view that it would be very desirable to offer a full list of the pure and hybrid principles that may be found in the Charter. Even if that is not possible we believe that the Explanations to Articles 21, 23, 25, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33 and 34(3) should mention the word principles or refer to 52(5). At the very least two examples of each type of principle under 52(3) should be offered. I propose that Articles 25 and 28 are given in the Explanation to 52(5) as examples of pure principles, and that the other example given of a hybrid principle is Article 21, not Article 33.

My second general point concerns the legal status of the Explanations. As you know, we have discussed this and I have also spoken to some other members of the Working Group. It seems to me that if the Convention is to choose legal incorporation of the Charter into the Constitution, we must ensure reference to the Explanations. In particular, I believe that we need a reference in the Constitution, recognising the interpretative status of the technical Explanations and indicating where they may be found. You say in your note that the Courts must have due regard to the Explanations when interpreting the law concerned. Specific provision is needed to ensure that outcome.

AMENDED EXPLANATIONS: DETAILED COMMENTS FROM UK

Art 14

For the sake of avoidance of doubt it would be helpful to insert “or vocational and continuing training” in line 6 of the second paragraph after “which provide private education”.

Art 18

It would be desirable to clarify still further that, in accordance with Article 52(2), this Article is subject to the conditions and limits in [III-162].

Art 21

Replace sentence beginning “Such legislation” with “Such legislation may cover action of MS authorities (as well as relations between private individuals) in any area within the scope of EU law.”

Art 47

An important linguistic point, already accepted in the provisions on the Court elsewhere in the Constitution, “the appeal system laid down by the Treaties” should be “the system of judicial review laid down by the Treaties”. Also, in the third sentence it would be more accurate here to say “general principle of Union law” rather than “right”.

Art 52 (which should be re-titled in the interests on accuracy, perhaps “Interpretation”)

- In the second paragraph, “merely been restated” should be clarified: after “Paragraph 2 clarifies that” delete the remainder of the sentence and insert “that rights which were based on the TEC or TEU, and which are now found in other parts of this Constitution, remain subject to the conditions and limits now made in Parts I and III of this Constitution or Union acts made thereunder”.
- In the Explanation to 52(3) I propose that we should replace “Union legislation” with “Union law” and delete (ii) altogether.
- In the Explanation to 52(4) we consider that the last sentence should be withdrawn, leaving the substantive provision to speak for itself.

- In the Explanation to 52(5) it would be more accurate to say “principles may be implemented” (rather than “are” implemented); and in the following sentence to say that “they become significant for the Courts only when acts implementing the principles are interpreted or reviewed.”

Minor linguistic points

- “have been drafted” (e.g. in line 4 of the Explanation to 51) reads oddly in English. “was drafted” would be preferable and this method could helpfully be employed throughout.
- there are some other minor points which we will pass on direct to the Secretariat.

Dear Mr Ladenburger

Many thanks to Mr Vitorino and yourself for excellent work in the paper concerning the Explanations of the Charter and on the revised Explanations themselves.

I want to record my entire satisfaction with the work that has been done. I have no amendment of substance to propose.

As I said to you last Thursday, however, it occurred to me in a conversation with Lady Scotland (to whom I am copying this) that an allusion to the Explanations in Part IV of the Treaty might be of value. My suggestion would be for an added Article IV-5 bis:

'The Explanations of the Charter annexed to the Constitution do not form part of it, and do not constitute binding law, but are recognised as a valuable [perhaps 'an authoritative'] tool of interpretation of the Articles of the Charter that comprise Part II of the Constitution.'

Yours sincerely

Neil MacCormick

Mr Antonio Vitorino,
Praesidium of the European Convention,
Brussels.

10 June 2003

Dear Antonio,

I am most grateful for your very helpful note of 3 June (WG II 27) concerning your proposed changes to the original texts of the Explanations to the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

The recognition in the Explanations that they are a valuable tool of interpretation of the Charter's provisions is important. As you are aware, they are an essential element in my Government's approach to incorporation of the Charter as a legally binding catalogue of fundamental rights.

The updating of the Explanations and the granting to them of appropriate legal recognition was a crucial element in the compromise reached at the Working Group. As you have acknowledged, it will be necessary for the Courts to have regard to and to take full account of the Explanations of the Charter provisions when interpreting any of its elements. Hence, when the text of the Explanations is finalised, it will be essential to ensure that they are given an explicit legal reference in an appropriate context in the Treaty. It is important that this matter be resolved at the Convention.

I fully support the amendments to the Explanations which you have proposed and we consider them to be both necessary and helpful. I wish to propose some additional amendments which would improve the text. I have also proposed a technical amendment to the Charter's Preamble and to Article 41 of the Charter (as reworded by you). These proposals are attached.

Yours sincerely,

Bobby McDonagh

EXPLANATIONS OF THE TEXT OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS - AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY MR BOBBY MCDONAGH

Amendments are proposed below to the Charter’s Preamble; to aspects of the Explanations; and to Article 41 of the Charter (as amended).

Proposed new wordings are in italics and bold lettering.

AMENDMENT TO PREAMBLE

Fifth paragraph to read:

“This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, Parts I and III of the Constitution, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights”.

Reason:

The references to the EC and EU Treaties have been deleted and not replaced with anything. It would be preferable to insert a reference to (the other parts of the Constitution) or (Parts I and III of the Constitution)

AMENDMENTS TO EXPLANATIONS

ARTICLE 2.2

In paragraph 2 of the Explanations after the words in quotes , viz: “The death penalty shall be abolished. No-one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed”, add – Article 1 of Protocol

No. 13 reiterates that provision.

Reason:

The references to the death penalty in the Explanations could be updated in light of the fact that Protocol 13 to the ECHR will enter into force on 1 July 2003. The Protocol has been signed or ratified by all EU Member States and acceding States and it removes for States Parties thereto the possibility of retaining the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war.

ARTICLE 21

The second paragraph should be replaced by the following – There is no contradiction or incompatibility between paragraph 1 and Article (III-5) of the Constitution which has a different purpose and scope: Article (III-5) provides, without prejudice to the other provisions of the Constitution and within the limits of the powers conferred by it on the Union, a legal base for the adoption by the Union of legislative acts, including harmonisation of the Member States’ laws and regulations, to combat certain forms of discrimination, listed exhaustively in that Article. Such legislation may cover action of Member State authorities as well as relations between private individuals. In contrast, the provision in paragraph 1 does not create any power to enact anti-discrimination laws. It only addresses discrimination by the institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union themselves, when exercising powers conferred under other Articles of Parts I and III of the Constitution and by Member States only when they are implementing Union law. Paragraph 1 therefore does not alter the extent of the powers granted under Article (III-5) nor the interpretation given to that Article.

Reason:

The explanation, when seeking to distinguish Article III – 5 of the Constitution from Article 21 of the Charter, gives an overly expansive definition of the Union’s competence under the former.

ARTICLE 52.5

Amend the first sentences of paragraph 5 to read:

“Paragraph 5 clarifies the distinction between “rights” and “principles” set out in the Charter. According to that distinction, subjective rights shall be respected, whereas principles shall be observed (Article 51.1). Where parts I and III of the Constitution provide a legal base for legislative action, principles may be (delete are) implemented through legislative or executive acts; accordingly they become significant for the courts when such Acts are interpreted or reviewed. They do not however give rise to direct claims for positive action by the Union’s institutions or Member States authorities.”

Amend the final sentence of paragraph 5 to change the examples / illustrations of principles recognised the Charter (given as Articles 26 and 37) to include Article 28 (collective bargaining) as an example of a principle. This could be added or, if necessary to limit to two examples, substituted for Article 37.

Reason:

These amendments would bring greater clarity to the Explanations.

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 41 OF THE CHARTER (AS AMENDED)

Article 41, paragraph 4 should be reworded as follows – “Every person may write to the Institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Treaty establishing the Constitution and must have an answer in the same language.”

Reason:

This clarification, which has been agreed with the Secretariat, is designed to maintain the current status of the Irish language in accordance with the existing Treaty arrangements. A similar amendment has been agreed to Article I-8 of the Constitutional Treaty.

Manuel Lobo Antunes (9/06/03 15:37):

›1. On the documents transmitted, I have the following comments:

›a) on the Charter- article 42 (access to documents) could be completed with a reference to the text of nr 4 of the draft article 49-I, as to make clear that some limits could be imposed by law on the access to certain documents (vg documents emanated from Europol, Eurojust or the future Public Preosecutor) for reasons of private or public interest;

›2. I can accept the text of the draft updated explanations.

›3. I continue to believe that the explanations should serve exclusively as a tool of interpretation of the Charter.

›Best Regards,

›Manuel Lobo Antunes

›Gov. Alternate

›Member of the WG on the Charter

Dear Mr. Vitorino,

I sincerely welcome your efforts to update the Explanations. I believe that the proposed amendments will clarify the important and complex issues of the scope, interpretation and application of the Charter. I completely agree with you that attention should be drawn in an appropriate manner to the Explanations and that they should be publicised more widely, so that courts and citizens can get access to this excellent tool for interpretation of the Charter. I also agree with your suggestion to use a more precise formula regarding the value of the Explanations. The courts should have due regard to the Explanations when interpreting the Charter.

Best regards,

Ingvar Svensson
Member of Working Group II

Members of the Convention will find attached the text of :

- Part I of the Constitution, preceded by the Preamble,
- Part II (Charter of Fundamental Rights),
- Protocol on the role of national parliaments in the European Union,
- Protocol on the application of the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality, with a view to the plenary session of 13 June 2003.

PART ONE

TITLE I: DEFINITION AND OBJECTIVES OF THE UNION

Article I-1: Establishment of the Union

1. Reflecting the will of the citizens and States of Europe to build a common future, this Constitution establishes the European Union, on which the Member States confer competences to attain objectives they have in common. The Union shall coordinate the policies by which the Member States aim to achieve these objectives, and shall exercise in the Community way the competences they confer on it.
2. The Union shall be open to all European States which respect its values and are committed to promoting them together.

Article I-2: The Union's values

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights. These values are common to the Member States in a society of pluralism, tolerance, justice, solidarity and non-discrimination.

TITLE II: FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION

Article I-7: Fundamental rights

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes the Second Part of this Constitution.
2. The Union shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Accession to that Convention shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in this Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Article I-8: Citizenship of the Union

1. Every national of a Member State shall be a citizen of the Union. Citizenship of the Union shall be additional to national citizenship; it shall not replace it.
2. Citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights and be subject to the duties provided for in this Constitution. They shall have:
  - the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States;
  - the right to vote and to stand as candidates in elections to the European Parliament and in municipal elections in their Member State of residence, under the same conditions as nationals of that State;

PART TWO

THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE UNION

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

TITLE I*DIGNITYArticle II-1
Human dignity

Human dignity is inviolable. It must be respected and protected.

Article II-2
Right to life

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to the death penalty, or executed.

Article II-3

The right to marry and the right to found a family shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.

Article II-10
Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right includes freedom to change religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or in private, to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. The right to conscientious objection is recognised, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

Article II-11

Freedom of expression and information

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.
2. The freedom and pluralism of the media shall be respected.

Article II-12

Freedom of assembly and of association

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association at all levels, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters, which implies the right of everyone to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his or her interests.
2. Political parties at Union level contribute to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union.

Article II-13

Freedom of the arts and sciences

The arts and scientific research shall be free of constraint. Academic freedom shall be respected.

Article II-14

Right to education

1. Everyone has the right to education and to have access to vocational and continuing training.
2. This right includes the possibility to receive free compulsory education.
3. The freedom to found educational establishments with due respect for democratic principles and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be respected, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right.

Article II-15

Freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work

1. Everyone has the right to engage in work and to pursue a freely chosen or accepted occupation.
2. Every citizen of the Union has the freedom to seek employment, to work, to exercise the right of establishment and to provide services in any Member State.
3. Nationals of third countries who are authorised to work in the territories of the Member States are entitled to working conditions equivalent to those of citizens of the Union.

Article II-16

Freedom to conduct a business

The freedom to conduct a business in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices is recognised.

Article II-17

Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law insofar as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

Article II-18

Right to asylum

The right to asylum shall be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and in accordance with the Constitution.

Article II-19

Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.
2. No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

TITLE III*EQUALITY

Article II-20

Equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law.

Article II-21

Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.
2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Article II-22

Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Article II-23

Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Article II-24

The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Article II-25
The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Article II-26
Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

TITLE IV
SOLIDARITY

Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-28

Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Article II-29

Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Article II-30

Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-31

Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Article II-32

Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Article II-33
Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Article II-34
Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-35
Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Article II-36
Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the Constitution, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Article II-37
Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Article II-38
Consumer protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

TITLE V
CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Article II-39
Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Article II-40
Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Article II-41
Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union.
2. This right includes:
  - (a) the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - (b) the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - (c) the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the Union make good any damage caused by its institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every person may write to the institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Constitution and must have an answer in the same language.

Article II-42
Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to documents of the institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union, in whatever form they are produced.

Article II-43
Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the Ombudsman of the Union cases of maladministration in the activities of the institutions, bodies or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance acting in their judicial role.

Article II-44
Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Article II-45
Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Constitution, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Article II-46
Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

TITLE VI
JUSTICE

Article II-47
Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Article II-48

Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Article II-49

Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Article II-50

Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

TITLE VII

GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article II-51 Scope

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the other Parts of the Constitution.
2. This Charter does not extend the scope of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks defined in the other Parts of the Constitution.

Article II-52 Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant Parts
3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Article II-53
Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Article II-54
Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

| Subject :        | Updated Explanations relating to the text of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. |

Members of the Convention will find attached, for information, the updated explanations relating to the text of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, produced under the authority of the Chairman of Working Group II and endorsed by the Praesidium.

UPDATED EXPLANATIONS,
RELATING TO THE COMPLETE TEXT OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION (AS AMENDED BY THE
EUROPEAN CONVENTION AND INCORPORATED AS PART II
OF THE TREATY ON A CONSTITUTION FOR EUROPE)

These explanations were originally prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. They have been updated at the instigation of the Praesidium of the European Convention, in the light of the drafting adjustments made to the text of the Charter by that Convention (notably to Articles 51 and 52) and of further developments of Union law. Although they do not as such have the status of law, they are a valuable tool of interpretation intended to clarify the provisions of the Charter.

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

TITLE I. DIGNITY

Article 1

Human dignity

Human dignity is inviolable. It must be respected and protected.

Explanation

The dignity of the human person is not only a fundamental right in itself but constitutes the real basis of fundamental rights. The 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights enshrined human dignity in its preamble: "Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world." In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, 2001 ECR 7079, at grounds n° 70 - 77, the Court of Justice confirmed that a fundamental right to human dignity is part of Union law.

It results that none of the rights laid down in this Charter may be used to harm the dignity of another person, and that the dignity of the human person is part of the substance of the rights laid down in this Charter. It must therefore be respected, even where a right is restricted.

Article 2

Right to life

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to the death penalty, or executed.

Explanation

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article is based on the first sentence of Article 2(1) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"1. Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law..."

2. The second sentence of the provision, which referred to the death penalty, was superseded by the entry into force of Article 1 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"The death penalty shall be abolished. No-one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed."

Article 2(2) of the Charter is based on that provision.

3. The provisions of Article 2 of the Charter correspond to those of the above Articles of the ECHR and its Protocol. They have the same meaning and the same scope, in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter. Therefore, the "negative" definitions appearing in the ECHR must be regarded as also forming part of the Charter:

- (a) Article 2(2) of the ECHR:

"Deprivation of life shall not be regarded as inflicted in contravention of this article when it results from the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary:

(a) in defence of any person from unlawful violence;

(b) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained;

(c) in action lawfully taken for the purpose of quelling a riot or insurrection."

- (b) Article 2 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR:

"A State may make provision in its law for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war; such penalty shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions..."

Article 3

Right to the integrity of the person

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his or her physical and mental integrity.
2. In the fields of medicine and biology, the following must be respected in particular:

the free and informed consent of the person concerned, according to the procedures laid down by law,

- the prohibition of eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons,
- the prohibition on making the human body and its parts as such a source of financial gain,
- the prohibition of the reproductive cloning of human beings.

Explanation

1. In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, 2001 ECR 7079, at grounds n° 70, 78 - 80, the Court of Justice confirmed that a fundamental right to human integrity is part of Union law and encompasses, in the context of medicine and biology, the free and informed consent of the donor and recipient.

2. The principles of Article 3 of the Charter are already included in the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine, adopted by the Council of Europe (ETS 164 and additional protocol ETS 168). The Charter does not set out to depart from those principles, and therefore prohibits only reproductive cloning. It neither authorises nor prohibits other forms of cloning. Thus it does not in any way prevent the legislature from prohibiting other forms of cloning.

3. The reference to eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons, relates to possible situations in which selection programmes are organised and implemented, involving campaigns for sterilisation, forced pregnancy, compulsory ethnic marriage among others, all acts deemed to be international crimes in the Statute of the International Criminal Court adopted in Rome on 17 July 1998 (see its Article 7(1)(g)).

Article 4

Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Explanation

The right in Article 4 is the right guaranteed by Article 3 of the ECHR, which has the same wording: "No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment". By virtue of Article 52(3) of the Charter, it therefore has the same meaning and the same scope as the ECHR Article.

Article 5

Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
3. Trafficking in human beings is prohibited.

Explanation

1. The right in Article 5(1) and (2) corresponds to Article 4(1) and (2) of the ECHR, which has the same wording.

It therefore has the same meaning and scope as the ECHR Article, by virtue of Article 52(3) of the Charter. Consequently:

– no limitation may legitimately affect the right provided for in paragraph 1;

– in paragraph 2, "forced or compulsory labour" must be understood in the light of the "negative" definitions contained in Article 4(3) of the ECHR:

"For the purpose of this article the term "forced or compulsory labour" shall not include:

- (a) any work required to be done in the ordinary course of detention imposed according to the provisions of Article 5 of this Convention or during conditional release from such detention;*
- (b) any service of a military character or, in case of conscientious objectors in countries where they are recognised, service exacted instead of compulsory military service;*
- (c) any service exacted in case of an emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;*
- (d) any work or service which forms part of normal civic obligations."*

2. *Paragraph 3 stems directly from human dignity and takes account of recent developments in organised crime, such as the organisation of lucrative illegal immigration or sexual exploitation networks. The annex to the Europol Convention contains the following definition which refers to trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation: "traffic in human beings: means subjection of a person to the real and illegal sway of other persons by using violence or menaces or by abuse of authority or intrigue with a view to the exploitation of prostitution, forms of sexual exploitation and assault of minors or trade in abandoned children". Chapter VI of the Convention implementing the Schengen Agreement, which has been integrated into the Union's acquis, in which the United Kingdom and Ireland participate, contains the following wording in Article 27(1) which refers to illegal immigration networks: " The Contracting Parties undertake to impose appropriate penalties on any person who, for financial gain, assists or tries to assist an alien to enter or reside within the territory of one of the Contracting Parties in breach of that Contracting Party's laws on the entry and residence of aliens." On 19 July 2002, the Council adopted a framework decision on combating the* trafficking in human beings (O.J. L 203/1) whose Article 1 defines in detail the offences concerning trafficking in human beings for the purposes of labour exploitation or sexual exploitation, which the Member States must make punishable by virtue of that framework decision.

TITLE II. FREEDOMS

Article 6

Right to liberty and security

Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person.

Explanation

The rights in Article 6 are the rights guaranteed by Article 5 of the ECHR, and in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, they have the same meaning and scope. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on them may not exceed those permitted by the ECHR, in the wording of Article 5:

- "1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases and in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law:*
- (a) the lawful detention of a person after conviction by a competent court;*
  - (b) the lawful arrest or detention of a person for non-compliance with the lawful order of a court or in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation prescribed by law;*

- (c) the lawful arrest or detention of a person effected for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so;
  - (d) the detention of a minor by lawful order for the purpose of educational supervision or his lawful detention for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority;
  - (e) the lawful detention of persons for the prevention of the spreading of infectious diseases, of persons of unsound mind, alcoholics or drug addicts or vagrants;
  - (f) the lawful arrest or detention of a person to prevent his effecting an unauthorised entry into the country or of a person against whom action is being taken with a view to deportation or extradition.
2. Everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and of any charge against him.
  3. Everyone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1.c of this article shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial. Release may be conditioned by guarantees to appear for trial.
  4. Everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful.
  5. Everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this article shall have an enforceable right to compensation."

The rights enshrined in Article 6 must be respected particularly when the European Parliament and the Council adopt laws and framework laws in the area of judicial cooperation in criminal matters, on the basis of Articles [III-166, III-167 and III-169] of the Constitution, notably to define common minimum provisions as regards the categorisation of offences and punishments and certain aspects of procedural law.

Article 7

Respect for private and family life

Everyone has the right to respect for his or her private and family life, home and communications.

Explanation

The rights guaranteed in Article 7 correspond to those guaranteed by Article 8 of the ECHR. To take account of developments in technology the word "correspondence" has been replaced by "communications".

In accordance with Article 52(3), the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those of the corresponding article of the ECHR. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on this right are the same as those allowed by Article 8 of the ECHR:

- "1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.*
- 2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."*

Article 8

Protection of personal data

1. Everyone has the right to the protection of personal data concerning him or her.

2. Such data must be processed fairly for specified purposes and on the basis of the consent of the person concerned or some other legitimate basis laid down by law. Everyone has the right of access to data which has been collected concerning him or her, and the right to have it rectified.
3. Compliance with these rules shall be subject to control by an independent authority.

Explanation

This Article has been based on Article 286 of the Treaty establishing the European Community and Directive 95/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 281, 23.11.1995) as well as on Article 8 of the ECHR and on the Council of Europe Convention of 28 January 1981 for the Protection of Individuals with regard to Automatic Processing of Personal Data, which has been ratified by all the Member States. Article 286 EC Treaty is now replaced by Article [I-50] of the Constitution. Reference is also made to regulation N° 45/2001 of the European Parliament and the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data by the Community institutions and bodies and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 8, 12.1.2001). The above-mentioned directive and regulation contain conditions and limitations for the exercise of the right to the protection of personal data.

Article 9

Right to marry and right to found a family

The right to marry and the right to found a family shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 12 of the ECHR, which reads as follows: "Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family according to the national laws governing the exercising of this right." The wording of the Article has been modernised to cover cases in which national legislation recognises arrangements other than marriage for founding a family. This Article neither prohibits nor imposes the granting of the status of marriage to unions between people of the same sex. This right is thus similar to that afforded by the ECHR, but its scope may be wider when national legislation so provides.

Article 10

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right includes freedom to change religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or in private, to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. The right to conscientious objection is recognised, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in paragraph 1 corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article 9 of the ECHR and, in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, has the same meaning and scope. Limitations must therefore respect Article 9(2) of the Convention, which reads as follows: "Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."

The right guaranteed in paragraph 2 corresponds to national constitutional traditions and to the development of national legislation on this issue.

Article 11

Freedom of expression and information

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.
2. The freedom and pluralism of the media shall be respected.

Explanation

1. Article 11 corresponds to Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.*
- 2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary."*

Pursuant to Article 52(3) of the Charter, the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those guaranteed by the ECHR. The limitations which may be imposed on it may therefore not exceed those provided for in Article 10(2) of the Convention, without prejudice to any restrictions which competition law of the Union may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR.

- Paragraph 2 of this Article spells out the consequences of paragraph 1 regarding freedom of the media. It is based in particular on Court of Justice case law regarding television, particularly in case C-288/89 (judgment of 25 July 1991, Stichting Collectieve Antennevoorziening Gouda and others [1991] ECR I-4007), and on the Protocol on the system of public broadcasting in the Member States annexed to the EC Treaty and now to the Constitution, and on Council Directive 89/552/EC (particularly its seventeenth recital).*

Article 12

Freedom of assembly and of association

- Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association at all levels, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters, which implies the right of everyone to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his or her interests.
- Political parties at Union level contribute to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 of this Article corresponds to Article 11 of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.*

2. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State."

The meaning of the provisions of paragraph 1 is the same as that of the ECHR, but their scope is wider since they apply at all levels including European level. In accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, limitations on that right may not exceed those considered legitimate by virtue of Article 11(2) of the ECHR.

2. This right is also based on Article 11 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.
3. Paragraph 2 of this Article corresponds to Article [I-45 § 4] of the Constitution.

Article 13

Freedom of the arts and sciences

The arts and scientific research shall be free of constraint. Academic freedom shall be respected.

Explanation

This right is deduced primarily from the right to freedom of thought and expression. It is to be exercised having regard to Article 1 and may be subject to the limitations authorised by Article 10 of the ECHR.

Article 14

Right to education

1. Everyone has the right to education and to have access to vocational and continuing training.
2. This right includes the possibility to receive free compulsory education.
3. The freedom to found educational establishments with due respect for democratic principles and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be respected, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right.

Explanation

1. This Article is based on the common constitutional traditions of Member States and on Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions."

It was considered useful to extend this article to access to vocational and continuing training (see point 15 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and Article 10 of the Social Charter) and to add the principle of free compulsory education. As it is worded, the latter principle merely implies that as regards compulsory education, each child has the possibility of attending an establishment which offers free education. It does not require all establishments which provide education or vocational and continuing training, in particular private ones, to be free of charge. Nor does it exclude certain specific forms of education having to be paid for, if the State takes measures to grant financial compensation. Insofar as the Charter applies to the Union, this means that in its training policies the Union must respect free compulsory education, but this does not, of course, create new powers. Regarding the right of parents, it must be interpreted in conjunction with the provisions of Article 24.

- 2. Freedom to found public or private educational establishments is guaranteed as one of the aspects of freedom to conduct a business but it is limited by respect for democratic principles and is exercised in accordance with the arrangements defined by national legislation.*

Article 15

Freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work

1. Everyone has the right to engage in work and to pursue a freely chosen or accepted occupation.
2. Every citizen of the Union has the freedom to seek employment, to work, to exercise the right of establishment and to provide services in any Member State.
3. Nationals of third countries who are authorised to work in the territories of the Member States are entitled to working conditions equivalent to those of citizens of the Union.

Explanation

Freedom to choose an occupation, as enshrined in Article 15(1), is recognised in Court of Justice case law (see inter alia judgment of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraphs 12 to 14 of the grounds; judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 8 October 1986, Case 234/85 Keller [1986] ECR 2897, paragraph 8 of the grounds).

This paragraph also draws upon Article 1(2) of the European Social Charter, which was signed on 18 October 1961 and has been ratified by all the Member States, and on point 4 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers of 9 December 1989. The expression "working conditions" is to be understood in the sense of Article [III-102] of the Constitution.

The second paragraph deals with the three freedoms guaranteed by Articles [I-4] and [III-15, III-19 and III-26] of the Constitution, namely freedom of movement for workers, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

The third paragraph has been based on TEC Article 137(3), fourth indent, now replaced by Article [III-99 (1) (g)] of the Constitution, and on Article 19(4) of the European Social Charter signed on 18 October 1961 and ratified by all the Member States. Article 52(2) of the Charter is therefore applicable. The question of recruitment of seamen having the nationality of third States for the crews of vessels flying the flag of a Member State of the Union is governed by Union law and national legislation and practice.

Article 16

Freedom to conduct a business

The freedom to conduct a business in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices is recognised.

Explanation

This Article is based on Court of Justice case law which has recognised freedom to exercise an economic or commercial activity (see judgments of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraph 14 of the grounds, and of 27 September 1979, Case 230-78 SPA Eridiana and others [1979] ECR 2749, paragraphs 20 and 31 of the grounds) and freedom of contract (see inter alia Sukkerfabriken Nykøbing judgment, Case 151/78 [1979] ECR I, paragraph 19 of the grounds, and judgment of 5 October 1999, C-240/97 Spain v. Commission, [1999] ECR I-6571, paragraph 99 of the grounds) and Article [I-3 (2)] of the Constitution, which recognises free competition. Of course, this right is to be exercised with respect for Union law and national legislation. It may be subject to the limitations provided for in Article 52(1) of the Charter.

Article 17

Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law insofar as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 1 of the Protocol to the ECHR:

"Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties."

This is a fundamental right common to all national constitutions. It has been recognised on numerous occasions by the case law of the Court of Justice, initially in the Hauer judgment (13 December 1979, ECR [1979] 3727). The wording has been updated but, in accordance with Article 52(3), the meaning and scope of the right are the same as those of the right guaranteed by the ECHR and the limitations may not exceed those provided for there.

Protection of intellectual property, one aspect of the right of property, is explicitly mentioned in paragraph 2 because of its growing importance and Community secondary legislation. Intellectual property covers not only literary and artistic property but also inter alia patent and trademark rights and associated rights. The guarantees laid down in paragraph 1 shall apply as appropriate to intellectual property.

Article 18

Right to asylum

The right to asylum shall be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and in accordance with the Constitution.

Explanation

The text of the Article has been based on TEC Article 63, now replaced by Article [III-162] of the Constitution, which requires the Union to respect the Geneva Convention on refugees. Reference should be made to the Protocols relating to the United Kingdom and Ireland annexed to the [Treaty of Amsterdam] Constitution and to Denmark to determine the extent to which those Member States implement Union law in this area and the extent to which this Article is applicable to them. This Article is in line with the Protocol on Asylum annexed to the Constitution.

Article 19

Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.
2. No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 of this Article has the same meaning and scope as Article 4 of Protocol No 4 to the ECHR concerning collective expulsion. Its purpose is to guarantee that every decision is based on a specific examination and that no single measure can be taken to expel all persons having the nationality of a particular State (see also Article 13 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights).

*Paragraph 2 incorporates the relevant case law from the European Court of Human Rights regarding Article 3 of the ECHR (see Ahmed v. Austria, judgment of 17 December 1996, [1996] ECR VI-2206 and Soering, judgment of 7 July 1989).*

TITLE III. EQUALITY

Article 20

Equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to a general principle of law which is included in all European constitutions and has also been recognised by the Court of Justice as a basic principle of Community law (judgment of 13 November 1984, Case 283/83 Racke [1984] ECR 3791, judgment of 17 April 1997, Case 15/95 EARL [1997] ECR I-1961, and judgment of 13 April 2000, Case 292/97 Karlsson, [2000] ECR 2737).

Article 21

Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.
2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 draws on Article 13 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by [Article III-5] of the Constitution, Article 14 of the ECHR and Article 11 of the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine as regards genetic heritage. Insofar as this corresponds to Article 14 of the ECHR, it applies in compliance with it.

There is no contradiction or incompatibility between paragraph 1 and Article [III-5] of the Constitution which has a different scope and purpose: Article [III-5] confers power on the Union to adopt legislative acts, including harmonisation of the Member States' laws and regulations, to combat certain forms of discrimination, listed exhaustively in that Article. Such legislation may cover action of Member State authorities (as well as relations between private individuals) in any area within the limits of the Union's powers. In contrast, the provision in paragraph 1 does not create any power to enact anti-discrimination laws in these areas of Member State or private action, nor does it lay down a sweeping ban of discrimination in such wide-ranging areas. Instead, it only addresses discriminations by the institutions and bodies of the Union themselves, when exercising powers conferred under other articles of Parts I and III of the Constitution, and by Member States only when they are implementing Union law. Paragraph 1 therefore does not alter the extent of powers granted under Article [III-5] nor the interpretation given to that Article.

Paragraph 2 corresponds to Article [I-4 (2)] of the Constitution and must be applied in compliance with that Article.

Article 22

Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Explanation

This Article has been based on Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union and on Article 151(1) and (4) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-176 (1) and (4)] of the Constitution, concerning culture. Respect for cultural and linguistic diversity is now also laid down in Article [I-3 (3)] of the Constitution. The Article is also inspired by declaration No 11 to the Final Act of the Amsterdam Treaty on the status of churches and non-confessional organisations, now taken over in Article [I-51] of the Constitution.

Article 23

Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Explanation

The first paragraph has been based on Articles 2 and 3(2) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Articles [I-3] and [III-1] of the Constitution which impose the objective of promoting equality between men and women on the Union, and on Article 141 (1) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-103 (1)] of the Constitution. It draws on Article 20 of the revised European Social Charter of 3 May 1996 and on point 16 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers. It is also based on Article 141(3) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-103 (3)] of the Constitution, and Article 2(4) of Council Directive 76/207/EEC on the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women as regards access to employment, vocational training and promotion, and working conditions.

Paragraph 2 takes over in shorter form Article [III-103 (4)] of the Constitution which provides that the principle of equal treatment does not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in order to make it easier for the under-represented sex to pursue a vocational activity or to prevent or compensate for disadvantages in professional careers. In accordance with Article 52 (2), the present paragraph does not amend Article [III-103 (4)].

Article 24

The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Explanation

This Article is based on the New York Convention on the Rights of the Child signed on 20 November 1989 and ratified by all the Member States, particularly Articles 3, 9, 12 and 13 thereof.

Paragraph 3 takes account of the fact that, as part of the establishment of an area of freedom, security and justice, Union legislation on civil matters having cross-border implications, for which Article [III-165] of the Constitution confers power, may include notably visiting rights ensuring that children can maintain on a regular basis a personal and direct contact with both his or her parents.

Article 25

The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Explanation

This Article draws on Article 23 of the revised European Social Charter and Articles 24 and 25 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers. Of course, participation in social and cultural life also covers participation in political life.

Article 26

Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

Explanation

The principle set out in this Article is based on Article 15 of the European Social Charter and also draws on point 26 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

TITLE IV. SOLIDARITY

Article 27

Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

This Article appears in the revised European Social Charter (Article 21) and in the Community Charter on the rights of workers (points 17 and 18). It applies under the conditions laid down by Union law and by national laws. The reference to appropriate levels refers to the levels laid down by Union law or by national laws and practices, which might include the European level when Union legislation so provides. There is a considerable Union acquis in this field: Articles [III-100 and III-101] of the Constitution, and Directives 2002/14/EC (general framework for informing and consulting employees in the European Community), 98/59/EC (collective redundancies), 2001/23/EC (transfers of undertakings) and 94/45/EC (European works councils).

Article 28

Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 6 of the European Social Charter and on the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (points 12 to 14). The right of collective action was recognised by the European Court of Human Rights as one of the elements of trade union rights laid down by Article 11 of the ECHR. As regards the appropriate levels at which collective negotiation might take place, see the explanation given for the above Article. The modalities and limits for the exercise of collective action, including strike action, come under national laws and practices, including the question of whether it may be carried out in parallel in several Member States.

Article 29*Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 1(3) of the European Social Charter and point 13 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Article 30*Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

This Article draws on Article 24 of the revised Social Charter. See also Directive 2001/23/EC on the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, and Directive 80/987/EEC on the protection of employees in the event of the insolvency of their employer, as amended by Directive 2002/74/EC.

Article 31

Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Explanation

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article is based on Directive 89/391/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work. It also draws on Article 3 of the Social Charter and point 19 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers, and, as regards dignity at work, on Article 26 of the revised Social Charter. The expression "working conditions" must be understood in the sense of Article [III-102] of the Constitution.
2. Paragraph 2 is based on Directive 93/104/EC concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time, Article 2 of the European Social Charter and point 8 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers.

Article 32

Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Explanation

This Article is based on Directive 94/33/EC on the protection of young people at work, Article 7 of the European Social Charter and points 20 to 23 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Article 33

Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Explanation

Article 33(1) is based on Article 16 of the European Social Charter. The second paragraph draws on Council Directive 92/85/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health at work of pregnant workers and workers who have recently given birth or are breastfeeding and Directive 96/34/EC on the framework agreement on parental leave concluded by UNICE, CEEP and the ETUC. It is also based on Article 8 (protection of maternity) of the European Social Charter and draws on Article 27 (right of workers with family responsibilities to equal opportunities and equal treatment) of the revised Social Charter. "Maternity" covers the period from conception to weaning.

Article 34

Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

The principle set out in Article 34(1) is based on Articles 137 and 140 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Articles [III-99 and III-102] and on Article 12 of the European Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers. The Union must respect it when exercising the powers conferred on it by Articles [III-99 and III-102] of the Constitution. The reference to social services relates to cases in which such services have been introduced to provide certain advantages but does not imply that such services must be created where they do not exist. "Maternity" must be understood in the same sense as in the preceding Article.

The second paragraph is based on Articles 12 (4) and 13(4) of the European Social Charter and point 2 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and reflects the rules arising from Regulation No 1408/71 and Regulation No 1612/68.

The third paragraph draws on Article 13 of the European Social Charter and Articles 30 and 31 of the revised Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter. The Union must respect it in the context of policies based on Article [III-99] of the Constitution.

Article 35

Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article are based on Article 152 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-174] of the Constitution, and on Articles 11 and 13 of the European Social Charter. The second sentence of the Article takes over Article [III-174 (1)].

Article 36

Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the Constitution, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Explanation

This Article is fully in line with Article [III-3] of the Constitution and does not create any new right. It merely sets out the principle of respect by the Union for the access to services of general economic interest as provided for by national provisions, when those provisions are compatible with Union law.

Article 37*Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article have been based on Articles 2, 6 and 174 of the EC Treaty, which have now been replaced by Articles [I-3 (3), III-2 and III-124] of the Constitution. It also draws on the provisions of some national constitutions.

Article 38*Consumer Protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article have been based on Article 153 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-127] of the Constitution.

TITLE V. CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Article 39

Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Explanation

Article 39 applies under the conditions laid down in Parts I and III of the Constitution, in accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter. Article 39(1) corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article [I-8 (2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-7] for the adoption of detailed arrangements for the exercise of that right) and Article 39(2) corresponds to Article [I-19 (2)] of the Constitution. Article 39(2) takes over the basic principles of the electoral system in a democratic State.

Article 40

Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to the right guaranteed by Article [I-8 (2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-7] for the adoption of detailed arrangements for the exercise of that right). In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions set out in these Articles of Parts I and III of the Constitution.

Article 41

Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union.
2. This right includes:
  - the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the Union make good any damage caused by its Institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every person may write to the Institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Constitution and must have an answer in the same language.

Explanation

Article 41 is based on the existence of the Union as subject to the rule of law whose characteristics were developed in the case law which enshrined inter alia good administration as a general principle of law (see inter alia Court of Justice judgment of 31 March 1992 in Case C-255/90 P, Burbán [1992] ECR I-2253, and Court of First Instance judgments of 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-2589, and 9 July 1999 in Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and others [1999] ECR II-2403). The wording for that right in the first two paragraphs results from the case law (Court of Justice judgment of 15 October 1987 in Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097, paragraph 15 of the grounds, judgment of 18 October 1989 in Case 374/87 Orkem [1989] ECR 3283, judgment of 21 November 1991 in Case C-269/90 TU München [1991] ECR I-5469, and Court of First Instance judgments of 6 December 1994 in Case T-450/93 Lisrestal [1994] ECR II-1177, 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-258) and the wording regarding the obligation to give reasons comes from Article 253 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [I-37(2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-300] of the Constitution for the adoption of legislation in the interest of an open, efficient and independent European public service).

Paragraph 3 reproduces the right now guaranteed by Article [III-333] of the Constitution. Paragraph 4 reproduces the right now guaranteed by Articles [I-8, fourth indent, and III-9] of the Constitution. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, those rights are to be applied under the conditions and within the limits defined by Part III of the Constitution.

The right to an effective remedy, which is an important aspect of this question, is guaranteed in Article 47 of this Charter.

Article 42

Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to documents of the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union, in whatever form they are produced.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article has been taken over from Article 255 of the EC Treaty, on the basis of which Regulation 1049/2001 has subsequently been adopted. The European Convention has extended this right to documents of institutions, bodies and agencies generally, regardless of their form, see Article [I-49 (3)] of the Constitution. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, the right of access to documents is exercised under the conditions and within the limits for which provision is made in Articles [I-49 (3) and III-301].

Article 43*Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the European Ombudsman cases of maladministration in the activities of the Institutions, bodies or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the European Court of Justice and the High Court acting in their judicial role.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article is the right guaranteed by Articles [I-8 and III-232 of the Constitution]. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these two Articles.

Article 44*Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article is the right guaranteed by Articles [I-8 and III-231] of the Constitution. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these two Articles.

Article 45

Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Constitution, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Explanation

The right guaranteed by paragraph 1 is the right guaranteed by Article [I-8, first indent] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-6]); and the judgement of the Court of Justice of 17 September 2002, C-413/99 Baumbast, [2002] ECR 709). In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions and within the limits defined for which provision is made in Part III of the Constitution.

Paragraph 2 refers to the power granted to the Union by Articles [III-161 to III-163] of the Constitution. Consequently, the granting of this right depends on the institutions exercising that power.

Article 46

Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

Explanation

The right guaranteed by this Article is the right guaranteed by Article [I-8] of the Constitution; cf. also the legal base in Article [III-8]. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these Articles.

TITLE VI. JUSTICE

Article 47

Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Explanation

The first paragraph is based on Article 13 of the ECHR:

"Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity."

However, in Union law the protection is more extensive since it guarantees the right to an effective remedy before a court. The Court of Justice enshrined that right in its judgment of 15 May 1986 as a general principle of Union law (Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651; see also judgment of 15 October 1987, Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097 and judgment of 3 December 1992, Case C-97/91 Borelli [1992] ECR I-6313). According to the Court, that general principle of Union law also applies to the Member States when they are implementing Union law. The inclusion of this precedent in the Charter has not been intended to change the system of judicial review laid down by the Treaties, and particularly the rules relating to admissibility for direct actions before the Court of Justice of the European Union. The European Convention has considered the Union's system of judicial review including the rules on admissibility, and confirmed them while amending them as to certain aspects, as reflected in Articles [III-254 to III-285] of the Constitution, and in particular in Article [III-266 (4)]. Article 47 applies to the institutions of the Union and of Member States when they are implementing Union law and does so for all rights guaranteed by Union law.

"In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law. Judgment shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice."

In Union law, the right to a fair hearing is not confined to disputes relating to civil law rights and obligations. That is one of the consequences of the fact that the Union is a community based on the rule of law as stated by the Court in Case 294/83, "Les Verts" v. European Parliament (judgment of 23 April 1986, [1988] ECR 1339). Nevertheless, in all respects other than their scope, the guarantees afforded by the ECHR apply in a similar way to the Union.

With regard to the third paragraph, it should be noted that in accordance with the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, provision should be made for legal aid where the absence of such aid would make it impossible to ensure an effective remedy (ECHR Judgment of 9.10.1979, Airey, Series A, Volume 32, 11). There is also a system of legal assistance for cases before the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Article 48

Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Explanation

Article 48 is the same as Article 6(2) and (3) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.*
- 3. Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights:*
  - (a) to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him;*
  - (b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence;*
  - (c) to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require;*
  - (d) to examine or have examined witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;*

- (e) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court."

In accordance with Article 52(3), this right has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Article 49

Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Explanation

This Article follows the traditional rule of the non-retroactivity of laws and criminal sanctions. There has been added the rule of the retroactivity of a more lenient penal law, which exists in a number of Member States and which features in Article 15 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Article 7 of the ECHR is worded as follows:

- "1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was* committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.

2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations."

In paragraph 2, the reference to "civilised" nations has been deleted; this does not change the meaning of this paragraph, which refers to crimes against humanity in particular. In accordance with Article 52(3), the right guaranteed here therefore has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Paragraph 3 states the general principle of proportionality between penalties and criminal offences which is enshrined in the common constitutional traditions of the Member States and in the case law of the Court of Justice of the Communities.

Article 50

Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

Explanation

Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR reads as follows:

- "1. No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings under the jurisdiction of the same State for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of that State.*
2. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the reopening of the case in accordance with the law and the penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case.

3. No derogation from this Article shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention."

The "non bis in idem" rule applies in Union law (see, among the many precedents, the judgment of 5 May 1996, Cases 18/65 and 35/65, Gutmann v. Commission [1966] ECR 103 and a recent case, the decision of the Court of First Instance of 20 April 1999, Joined Cases T-305/94 and others, Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij NV v. Commission [1999] ECR II-931). The rule prohibiting cumulation refers to cumulation of two penalties of the same kind, that is to say criminal law penalties.

*In accordance with Article 50, the "non bis in idem" rule applies not only within the jurisdiction of one State but also between the jurisdictions of several Member States. That corresponds to the acquis in Union law; see Articles 54 to 58 of the Schengen Convention and the judgment of the Court of Justice of 11 February 2003, C-187/01 Gözütok (not yet published), Article 7 of the Convention on the Protection of the European Communities' Financial Interests and Article 10 of the Convention on the fight against corruption. The very limited exceptions in those Conventions permitting the Member States to derogate from the "non bis in idem" rule are covered by the horizontal clause in Article 52(1) of the Charter concerning limitations. As regards the situations referred to by Article 4 of Protocol No 7, namely the application of the principle within the same Member State, the guaranteed right has the same meaning and the same scope as the corresponding right in the ECHR.*

TITLE VII. GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article 51

Scope

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the other Parts of the Constitution.
2. This Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks defined in the other Parts of the Constitution.

Explanation

The aim of Article 51 is to determine the scope of the Charter. It seeks to establish clearly that the Charter applies primarily to the institutions and bodies of the Union, in compliance with the principle of subsidiarity. This provision was drafted in keeping with Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union, which required the Union to respect fundamental rights, and with the mandate issued by Cologne European Council. The term "institutions" is enshrined in Part I of the Constitution, Article [I-18(2)] of which lists the institutions. The expression "bodies and agencies" is commonly used in the Constitution to refer to all the authorities set up by the Constitution or by secondary legislation (see, e.g., Article [I-49 or I-50] of the Constitution).

As regards the Member States, it follows unambiguously from the case law of the Court of Justice that the requirement to respect fundamental rights defined in a Union context is only binding on the Member States when they act in the scope of Union law (judgment of 13 July 1989, Case 5/88 Wachauf [1989] ECR 2609; judgment of 18 June 1991, ERT [1991] ECR I-2925); judgment of 18 December 1997 (C-309/96 Annibaldi [1997] ECR I-7493). The Court of Justice confirmed this case law in the following terms: "In addition, it should be remembered that the requirements flowing from the protection of fundamental rights in the Community legal order are also binding on Member States when they implement Community rules..." (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, [2000] ECR 2737, paragraph 37 of the grounds). Of course this rule, as enshrined in this Charter, applies to the central authorities as well as to regional or local bodies, and to public organisations, when they are implementing Union law.

Paragraph 2, together with the second sentence of paragraph 1, confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the competences and tasks which the other Parts of the Constitution confer on the Union. Explicit mention is made here of the logical consequences of the principle of subsidiarity and of the fact that the Union only has those powers which have been conferred upon it. The fundamental rights as guaranteed in the Union do not have any effect other than in the context of the powers determined by Parts I and III of the Constitution. Consequently, an obligation, pursuant to the second sentence of paragraph 1, for the Union's institutions to promote principles laid down in the Charter, may arise only within the limits of these same powers.

Paragraph 2 also confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union as established in the other Parts of the Constitution. The Court of Justice has already established this rule with respect to the fundamental rights recognised as part of Union law (judgment of 17 February 1998, C-249/96 Grant, 1998 ECR I-621, paragraph 45 of the grounds). In accordance with this rule, it goes without saying that the incorporation of the Charter into the Constitution cannot be understood as extending by itself the range of Member State action considered to be "implementation of Union law" (within the meaning of paragraph 1 and the above-mentioned case law).

Article 52

Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.

2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant Parts.
3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by Institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Explanation

The purpose of Article 52 is to set the scope of the rights and principles of the Charter, and to lay down rules for their interpretation. Paragraph 1 deals with the arrangements for the limitation of rights. The wording is based on the case law of the Court of Justice: "...it is well established in the case law of the Court that restrictions may be imposed on the exercise of fundamental rights, in particular in the context of a common organisation of the market, provided that those restrictions in fact correspond to objectives of general interest pursued by the Community and do not constitute, with regard to the aim pursued, disproportionate and unreasonable interference undermining the very substance of those rights" (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, paragraph 45 of the grounds). The reference to general interests recognised by the Union covers both the objectives mentioned in Article [I-2] of the Constitution and other interests protected by specific provisions of the Constitution such as Articles [I-5 (1), III-15, III-40, III-339].

Paragraph 2 refers to rights which were already expressly guaranteed in the Treaty establishing the European Community and have been recognised in the Charter, and which are now found in other Parts of the Constitution (notably the rights derived from Union citizenship). It clarifies that such rights remain subject to the conditions and limits applicable to the Union law on which they are based, and for which provision is now made in Parts I and III of the Constitution. The Charter does not alter the system of rights conferred by the EC Treaty and now taken over by Parts I and III of the Constitution.

Paragraph 3 is intended to ensure the necessary consistency between the Charter and the ECHR by establishing the rule that, insofar as the rights in the present Charter also correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR, the meaning and scope of those rights, including authorised limitations, are the same as those laid down by the ECHR. This means in particular that the legislator, in laying down limitations to those rights, must comply with the same standards as are fixed by the detailed limitation arrangements laid down in the ECHR, which are thus made applicable for the rights covered by this paragraph, without thereby adversely affecting the autonomy of Union law and of that of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

The reference to the ECHR covers both the Convention and the Protocols to it. The meaning and the scope of the guaranteed rights are determined not only by the text of those instruments, but also by the case law of the European Court of Human Rights and by the Court of Justice of the European Union. The last sentence of the paragraph is designed to allow the Union to guarantee more extensive protection. In any event, the level of protection afforded by the Charter may never be lower than that guaranteed by the ECHR.

The Charter does not affect the possibilities of Member States to avail themselves of Article 15 ECHR, allowing derogations from ECHR rights in the event of war or of other public dangers threatening the life of the nation, when they take action in the areas of national defence in the event of war and of the maintenance of law and order, in accordance with their responsibilities recognised in Articles [I-5 (1), III-13, III-158] of the Constitution.

The list of rights which may at the present stage, without precluding developments in the law, legislation and the Treaties, be regarded as corresponding to rights in the ECHR within the meaning of the present paragraph is given hereafter. It does not include rights additional to those in the ECHR.

1. Articles of the Charter where both the meaning and the scope are the same as the corresponding Articles of the ECHR:

- Article 2 corresponds to Article 2 of the ECHR
- Article 4 corresponds to Article 3 of the ECHR
- Article 5(1) and (2) correspond to Article 4 of the ECHR
- Article 6 corresponds to Article 5 of the ECHR
- Article 7 corresponds to Article 8 of the ECHR
- Article 10(1) corresponds to Article 9 of the ECHR
- Article 11 corresponds to Article 10 of the ECHR without prejudice to any restrictions which Union law may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR
- Article 17 corresponds to Article 1 of the Protocol to the ECHR
- Article 19(1) corresponds to Article 4 of Protocol No 4
- Article 19(2) corresponds to Article 3 of the ECHR as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights
- Article 48 corresponds to Article 6(2) and(3) of the ECHR
- Article 49(1) (with the exception of the last sentence) and (2) correspond to Article 7 of the ECHR

2. Articles where the meaning is the same as the corresponding Articles of the ECHR, but where the scope is wider:

- Article 9 covers the same field as Article 12 of the ECHR, but its scope may be extended to other forms of marriage if these are established by national legislation
- Article 12(1) corresponds to Article 11 of the ECHR, but its scope is extended to European Union level
- Article 14(1) corresponds to Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR, but its scope is extended to cover access to vocational and continuing training
- Article 14(3) corresponds to Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR as regards the rights of parents
- Article 47(2) and (3) correspond to Article 6(1) of the ECHR, but the limitation to the determination of civil rights and obligations or criminal charges does not apply as regards Union law and its implementation

- Article 50 corresponds to Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR, but its scope is extended to European Union level between the Courts of the Member States.
- Finally, citizens of the European Union may not be considered as aliens in the scope of the application of Union law, because of the prohibition of any discrimination on grounds of nationality. The limitations provided for by Article 16 of the ECHR as regards the rights of aliens therefore do not apply to them in this context.

The rule of interpretation contained in paragraph 4 has been based on the wording of Article 6 § 2 of the Treaty on European Union (cf. now the wording of Article [I-7 § 3] of the Constitution) and takes due account of the approach to common constitutional traditions followed by the Court of Justice (e.g., judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 18 May 1982, Case 155/79, AM&S, [1982] ECR 1575). Under that rule, rather than following a rigid approach of "a lowest common denominator", the Charter rights concerned should be interpreted in a way offering a high standard of protection which is adequate for the law of the Union and in harmony with the common constitutional traditions.

Paragraph 5 clarifies the distinction between "rights" and "principles" set out in the Charter. According to that distinction, subjective rights shall be respected, whereas principles shall be observed (Article 51 (1)). Principles may be implemented through legislative or executive acts (adopted by the Union in accordance with its powers, and by the Member States only when they implement Union law); accordingly, they become significant for the Courts only when such acts are interpreted or reviewed. They do not however give rise to direct claims for positive action by the Union's institutions or Member States authorities. This is consistent both with case law of the Court of Justice (Cf. notably case law on the "precautionary principle" in Article 174 (2) TEC (replaced by [Article III-124] of the Constitution): judgment of the CFI of 11 September 2002, T-13/99, Pfizer vs. Council, with numerous references to earlier case law; and a series of judgments on Article 33 (ex-39) on the principles of agricultural law, e.g. judgment of the Court of Justice C-265/85, Van den Berg, 1987 ECR 1155: scrutiny of the principle of market stabilisation and of reasonable expectations) and with the approach of the Member States' constitutional systems to "principles" particularly in the field of social law. For illustration, examples for principles recognised in the Charter include e.g. Articles 25, 26 and 37. In some cases, an Article of the Charter may contain both elements of a right and of a principle, e.g., Articles 23, 33 and 34.

Paragraph 6 refers to the various Articles in the Charter which, in the spirit of subsidiarity, make reference to national laws and practices.

Article 53

Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Explanation

This provision is intended to maintain the level of protection currently afforded within their respective scope by Union law, national law and international law. Owing to its importance, mention is made of the ECHR.

Article 54

Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to Article 17 of the ECHR:

"Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention."

PREFACE

to Parts I and II of the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe submitted to the European Council meeting in Thessaloniki on 20 June 2003.

PREFACE

Noting that the European Union was coming to a turning point in its existence, the European Council which met in Laeken, Belgium, on 14 and 15 December 2001 convened the European Convention on the Future of Europe.

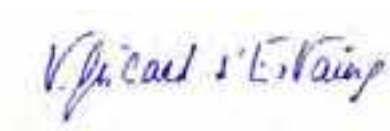

The Convention was asked to draw up proposals on three subjects: how to bring citizens closer to the European design and European Institutions; how to organise politics and the European political area in an enlarged Union; and how to develop the Union into a stabilising factor and a model in the new world order.

The Convention has identified responses to the questions put in the Laeken declaration:

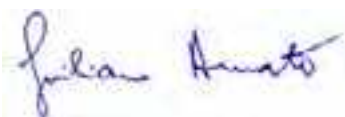

- it proposes a better division of Union and Member State competences;
- it recommends a merger of the Treaties and the attribution of legal personality to the Union;
- it establishes a simplification of the Union's instruments of action;
- it proposes measures to increase the democracy, transparency and efficiency of the European Union, by developing the contribution of national Parliaments to the legitimacy of the European design, by simplifying the decision-making processes, and by making the functioning of the European Institutions more transparent and comprehensible;
- it establishes the necessary measures to improve the structure and enhance the role of each of the Union's three institutions, taking account, in particular, of the consequences of enlargement.

The Laeken declaration also asked whether the simplification and reorganisation of the Treaties should not pave the way for the adoption of a constitutional text. The Convention's proceedings ultimately led to the drawing up of a draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe, which achieved a broad consensus at the plenary session on 13 June 2003.

That is the text which it is our privilege to present today, 20 June 2003, to the European Council meeting in Thessaloniki, on behalf of the European Convention, in the hope that it will constitute the foundation of a future Treaty establishing the European Constitution.

PART I

TITLE I: DEFINITION AND OBJECTIVES OF THE UNION

Article 1: Establishment of the Union

1. Reflecting the will of the citizens and States of Europe to build a common future, this Constitution establishes the European Union, on which the Member States confer competences to attain objectives they have in common. The Union shall coordinate the policies by which the Member States aim to achieve these objectives, and shall exercise in the Community way the competences they confer on it.
2. The Union shall be open to all European States which respect its values and are committed to promoting them together.

Article 2: The Union's values

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights. These values are common to the Member States in a society of pluralism, tolerance, justice, solidarity and non-discrimination.

TITLE II: FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION

Article 7: Fundamental rights

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes Part II of the Constitution.
2. The Union shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Such accession shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in the Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Article 8: Citizenship of the Union

1. Every national of a Member State shall be a citizen of the Union. Citizenship of the Union shall be additional to national citizenship; it shall not replace it.
2. Citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights and be subject to the duties provided for in the Constitution. They shall have:
  - the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States;
  - the right to vote and to stand as candidates in elections to the European Parliament and in municipal elections in their Member State of residence, under the same conditions as nationals of that State;

PART II

THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE UNION

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice. The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

TITLE I: DIGNITY

Article II-1: Human dignity

Human dignity is inviolable. It must be respected and protected.

Article II-2: Right to life

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to the death penalty, or executed.

Article II-3: Right to the integrity of the person

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his or her physical and mental integrity.
2. In the fields of medicine and biology, the following must be respected in particular:
  - (a) the free and informed consent of the person concerned, according to the procedures laid down by law,
  - (b) the prohibition of eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons,
  - (c) the prohibition on making the human body and its parts as such a source of financial gain,
  - (d) the prohibition of the reproductive cloning of human beings.

Article II-4: Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article II-5: Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
3. Trafficking in human beings is prohibited.

TITLE II: FREEDOMS

Article II-6: Right to liberty and security

Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person.

Article II-7: Respect for private and family life

Everyone has the right to respect for his or her private and family life, home and communications.

Article II-8: Protection of personal data

1. Everyone has the right to the protection of personal data concerning him or her.
2. Such data must be processed fairly for specified purposes and on the basis of the consent of the person concerned or some other legitimate basis laid down by law. Everyone has the right of access to data which has been collected concerning him or her, and the right to have it rectified.
3. Compliance with these rules shall be subject to control by an independent authority.

Article II-9: Right to marry and right to found a family

The right to marry and the right to found a family shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.

Article II-10: Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right includes freedom to change religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or in private, to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. The right to conscientious objection is recognised, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

Article II-11: Freedom of expression and information

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.
2. The freedom and pluralism of the media shall be respected.

Article II-12: Freedom of assembly and of association

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association at all levels, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters, which implies the right of everyone to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his or her interests.
2. Political parties at Union level contribute to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union.

Article II-13: Freedom of the arts and sciences

The arts and scientific research shall be free of constraint. Academic freedom shall be respected.

Article II-14: Right to education

1. Everyone has the right to education and to have access to vocational and continuing training.
2. This right includes the possibility to receive free compulsory education.
3. The freedom to found educational establishments with due respect for democratic principles and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be respected, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right.

Article II-15: Freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work

1. Everyone has the right to engage in work and to pursue a freely chosen or accepted occupation.
2. Every citizen of the Union has the freedom to seek employment, to work, to exercise the right of establishment and to provide services in any Member State.
3. Nationals of third countries who are authorised to work in the territories of the Member States are entitled to working conditions equivalent to those of citizens of the Union.

Article II-16: Freedom to conduct a business

The freedom to conduct a business in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices is recognised.

Article II-17: Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law insofar as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

Article II-18: Right to asylum

The right to asylum shall be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and in accordance with the Constitution.

Article II-19: Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.
2. No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

TITLE III: EQUALITY*Article II-20: Equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law.

Article II-21: Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.
2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Article II-22: Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Article II-23: Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Article II-24: The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private Institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Article II-25: The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Article II-26: Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

TITLE IV: SOLIDARITY

Article II-27: Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-28: Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Article II-29: Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Article II-30: Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-31: Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Article II-32: Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Article II-33: Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Article II-34: Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-35: Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Article II-36: Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the Constitution, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Article II-37: Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Article II-38: Consumer protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

TITLE V: CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Article II-39: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Article II-40: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Article II-41: Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union.
2. This right includes:
  - (a) the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - (b) the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - (c) the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the Union make good any damage caused by its Institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every person may write to the Institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Constitution and must have an answer in the same language.

Article II-42: Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to documents of the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union, in whatever form they are produced.

Article II-43: European Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the European Ombudsman cases of maladministration in the activities of the Institutions, bodies or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the European Court of Justice and the High Court acting in their judicial role.

Article II-44: Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Article II-45: Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Constitution, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Article II-46: Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

TITLE VI: JUSTICE

Article II-47: Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Article II-48: Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Article II-49: Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Article II-50: Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

TITLE VII: GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article II-51: Field of application

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the other Parts of the Constitution.
2. This Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks defined in the other Parts of the Constitution.

Article II-52: Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant Parts
3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by Institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Article II-53: Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Article II-54: Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

| Subject :        | Updated Explanations relating to the text of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. |

Members of the Convention will find attached, for information, the updated explanations relating to the text of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, produced under the authority of the Chairman of Working Group II and endorsed by the Praesidium (this revised version contains adapted cross-references to Articles in Parts I and III of the Constitution).

UPDATED EXPLANATIONS,
RELATING TO THE COMPLETE TEXT OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION (AS AMENDED BY THE
EUROPEAN CONVENTION AND INCORPORATED AS PART II
OF THE TREATY ON A CONSTITUTION FOR EUROPE)

These explanations were originally prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. They have been updated at the instigation of the Praesidium of the European Convention, in the light of the drafting adjustments made to the text of the Charter by that Convention (notably to Articles 51 and 52) and of further developments of Union law. Although they do not as such have the status of law, they are a valuable tool of interpretation intended to clarify the provisions of the Charter.

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, goods, services and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

TITLE I. DIGNITY

Article 1

Human dignity

Human dignity is inviolable. It must be respected and protected.

Explanation

The dignity of the human person is not only a fundamental right in itself but constitutes the real basis of fundamental rights. The 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights enshrined human dignity in its preamble: "Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world." In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, 2001 ECR 7079, at grounds n° 70 - 77, the Court of Justice confirmed that a fundamental right to human dignity is part of Union law.

It results that none of the rights laid down in this Charter may be used to harm the dignity of another person, and that the dignity of the human person is part of the substance of the rights laid down in this Charter. It must therefore be respected, even where a right is restricted.

Article 2

Right to life

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to the death penalty, or executed.

Explanation

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article is based on the first sentence of Article 2(1) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"1. Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law..."

2. The second sentence of the provision, which referred to the death penalty, was superseded by the entry into force of Article 1 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"The death penalty shall be abolished. No-one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed."

Article 2(2) of the Charter is based on that provision.

3. The provisions of Article 2 of the Charter correspond to those of the above Articles of the ECHR and its Protocol. They have the same meaning and the same scope, in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter. Therefore, the "negative" definitions appearing in the ECHR must be regarded as also forming part of the Charter:

- (a) Article 2(2) of the ECHR:

"Deprivation of life shall not be regarded as inflicted in contravention of this article when it results from the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary:

(a) in defence of any person from unlawful violence;

(b) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained;

(c) in action lawfully taken for the purpose of quelling a riot or insurrection."

- (b) Article 2 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR:

"A State may make provision in its law for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war; such penalty shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions..."

Article 3

Right to the integrity of the person

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his or her physical and mental integrity.
2. In the fields of medicine and biology, the following must be respected in particular:

the free and informed consent of the person concerned, according to the procedures laid down by law,

- the prohibition of eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons,
- the prohibition on making the human body and its parts as such a source of financial gain,
- the prohibition of the reproductive cloning of human beings.

Explanation

1. In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, 2001 ECR 7079, at grounds n° 70, 78 - 80, the Court of Justice confirmed that a fundamental right to human integrity is part of Union law and encompasses, in the context of medicine and biology, the free and informed consent of the donor and recipient.

2. The principles of Article 3 of the Charter are already included in the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine, adopted by the Council of Europe (ETS 164 and additional protocol ETS 168). The Charter does not set out to depart from those principles, and therefore prohibits only reproductive cloning. It neither authorises nor prohibits other forms of cloning. Thus it does not in any way prevent the legislature from prohibiting other forms of cloning.

3. The reference to eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons, relates to possible situations in which selection programmes are organised and implemented, involving campaigns for sterilisation, forced pregnancy, compulsory ethnic marriage among others, all acts deemed to be international crimes in the Statute of the International Criminal Court adopted in Rome on 17 July 1998 (see its Article 7(1)(g)).

Article 4

Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Explanation

The right in Article 4 is the right guaranteed by Article 3 of the ECHR, which has the same wording: "No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment". By virtue of Article 52(3) of the Charter, it therefore has the same meaning and the same scope as the ECHR Article.

Article 5

Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
3. Trafficking in human beings is prohibited.

Explanation

1. The right in Article 5(1) and (2) corresponds to Article 4(1) and (2) of the ECHR, which has the same wording.

It therefore has the same meaning and scope as the ECHR Article, by virtue of Article 52(3) of the Charter. Consequently:

– no limitation may legitimately affect the right provided for in paragraph 1;

– in paragraph 2, "forced or compulsory labour" must be understood in the light of the "negative" definitions contained in Article 4(3) of the ECHR:

"For the purpose of this article the term "forced or compulsory labour" shall not include:

- (a) any work required to be done in the ordinary course of detention imposed according to the provisions of Article 5 of this Convention or during conditional release from such detention;*
- (b) any service of a military character or, in case of conscientious objectors in countries where they are recognised, service exacted instead of compulsory military service;*
- (c) any service exacted in case of an emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;*
- (d) any work or service which forms part of normal civic obligations."*

2. *Paragraph 3 stems directly from human dignity and takes account of recent developments in organised crime, such as the organisation of lucrative illegal immigration or sexual exploitation networks. The annex to the Europol Convention contains the following definition which refers to trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation: "traffic in human beings: means subjection of a person to the real and illegal sway of other persons by using violence or menaces or by abuse of authority or intrigue with a view to the exploitation of prostitution, forms of sexual exploitation and assault of minors or trade in abandoned children". Chapter VI of the Convention implementing the Schengen Agreement, which has been integrated into the Union's acquis, in which the United Kingdom and Ireland participate, contains the following wording in Article 27(1) which refers to illegal immigration networks: " The Contracting Parties undertake to impose appropriate penalties on any person who, for financial gain, assists or tries to assist an alien to enter or reside within the territory of one of the Contracting Parties in breach of that Contracting Party's laws on the entry and residence of aliens." On 19 July 2002, the Council adopted a framework decision on combating the trafficking in human beings (O.J. L 203/1) whose Article 1 defines in detail the offences* concerning trafficking in human beings for the purposes of labour exploitation or sexual exploitation, which the Member States must make punishable by virtue of that framework decision.

TITLE II. FREEDOMS

Article 6

Right to liberty and security

Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person.

Explanation

The rights in Article 6 are the rights guaranteed by Article 5 of the ECHR, and in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, they have the same meaning and scope. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on them may not exceed those permitted by the ECHR, in the wording of Article 5:

- "1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases and in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law:*
- (a) the lawful detention of a person after conviction by a competent court;*
  - (b) the lawful arrest or detention of a person for non-compliance with the lawful order of a court or in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation prescribed by law;*

- (c) the lawful arrest or detention of a person effected for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so;
  - (d) the detention of a minor by lawful order for the purpose of educational supervision or his lawful detention for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority;
  - (e) the lawful detention of persons for the prevention of the spreading of infectious diseases, of persons of unsound mind, alcoholics or drug addicts or vagrants;
  - (f) the lawful arrest or detention of a person to prevent his effecting an unauthorised entry into the country or of a person against whom action is being taken with a view to deportation or extradition.
2. Everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and of any charge against him.
  3. Everyone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1.c of this article shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial. Release may be conditioned by guarantees to appear for trial.
  4. Everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful.
  5. Everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this article shall have an enforceable right to compensation."

The rights enshrined in Article 6 must be respected particularly when the European Parliament and the Council adopt laws and framework laws in the area of judicial cooperation in criminal matters, on the basis of Articles [III-171, III-172 and III-174] of the Constitution, notably to define common minimum provisions as regards the categorisation of offences and punishments and certain aspects of procedural law.

Article 7

Respect for private and family life

Everyone has the right to respect for his or her private and family life, home and communications.

Explanation

The rights guaranteed in Article 7 correspond to those guaranteed by Article 8 of the ECHR. To take account of developments in technology the word "correspondence" has been replaced by "communications".

In accordance with Article 52(3), the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those of the corresponding article of the ECHR. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on this right are the same as those allowed by Article 8 of the ECHR:

- "1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.*
- 2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."*

Article 8

Protection of personal data

1. Everyone has the right to the protection of personal data concerning him or her.

2. Such data must be processed fairly for specified purposes and on the basis of the consent of the person concerned or some other legitimate basis laid down by law. Everyone has the right of access to data which has been collected concerning him or her, and the right to have it rectified.
3. Compliance with these rules shall be subject to control by an independent authority.

Explanation

This Article has been based on Article 286 of the Treaty establishing the European Community and Directive 95/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 281, 23.11.1995) as well as on Article 8 of the ECHR and on the Council of Europe Convention of 28 January 1981 for the Protection of Individuals with regard to Automatic Processing of Personal Data, which has been ratified by all the Member States. Article 286 EC Treaty is now replaced by Article [50] of the Constitution. Reference is also made to regulation N° 45/2001 of the European Parliament and the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data by the Community institutions and bodies and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 8, 12.1.2001). The above-mentioned directive and regulation contain conditions and limitations for the exercise of the right to the protection of personal data.

Article 9

Right to marry and right to found a family

The right to marry and the right to found a family shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 12 of the ECHR, which reads as follows: "Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family according to the national laws governing the exercising of this right." The wording of the Article has been modernised to cover cases in which national legislation recognises arrangements other than marriage for founding a family. This Article neither prohibits nor imposes the granting of the status of marriage to unions between people of the same sex. This right is thus similar to that afforded by the ECHR, but its scope may be wider when national legislation so provides.

Article 10

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right includes freedom to change religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or in private, to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. The right to conscientious objection is recognised, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in paragraph 1 corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article 9 of the ECHR and, in accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, has the same meaning and scope. Limitations must therefore respect Article 9(2) of the Convention, which reads as follows: "Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."

The right guaranteed in paragraph 2 corresponds to national constitutional traditions and to the development of national legislation on this issue.

Article 11

Freedom of expression and information

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.
2. The freedom and pluralism of the media shall be respected.

Explanation

1. Article 11 corresponds to Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.*
- 2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary."*

Pursuant to Article 52(3) of the Charter, the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those guaranteed by the ECHR. The limitations which may be imposed on it may therefore not exceed those provided for in Article 10(2) of the Convention, without prejudice to any restrictions which competition law of the Union may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR.

- Paragraph 2 of this Article spells out the consequences of paragraph 1 regarding freedom of the media. It is based in particular on Court of Justice case law regarding television, particularly in case C-288/89 (judgment of 25 July 1991, Stichting Collectieve Antennevoorziening Gouda and others [1991] ECR I-4007), and on the Protocol on the system of public broadcasting in the Member States annexed to the EC Treaty and now to the Constitution, and on Council Directive 89/552/EC (particularly its seventeenth recital).*

Article 12

Freedom of assembly and of association

- Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association at all levels, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters, which implies the right of everyone to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his or her interests.
- Political parties at Union level contribute to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 of this Article corresponds to Article 11 of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.*

2. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State."

The meaning of the provisions of paragraph 1 is the same as that of the ECHR, but their scope is wider since they apply at all levels including European level. In accordance with Article 52(3) of the Charter, limitations on that right may not exceed those considered legitimate by virtue of Article 11(2) of the ECHR.

2. This right is also based on Article 11 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.
3. Paragraph 2 of this Article corresponds to Article [45 § 4] of the Constitution.

Article 13

Freedom of the arts and sciences

The arts and scientific research shall be free of constraint. Academic freedom shall be respected.

Explanation

This right is deduced primarily from the right to freedom of thought and expression. It is to be exercised having regard to Article 1 and may be subject to the limitations authorised by Article 10 of the ECHR.

Article 14

Right to education

1. Everyone has the right to education and to have access to vocational and continuing training.
2. This right includes the possibility to receive free compulsory education.
3. The freedom to found educational establishments with due respect for democratic principles and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be respected, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right.

Explanation

1. This Article is based on the common constitutional traditions of Member States and on Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions."

It was considered useful to extend this article to access to vocational and continuing training (see point 15 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and Article 10 of the Social Charter) and to add the principle of free compulsory education. As it is worded, the latter principle merely implies that as regards compulsory education, each child has the possibility of attending an establishment which offers free education. It does not require all establishments which provide education or vocational and continuing training, in particular private ones, to be free of charge. Nor does it exclude certain specific forms of education having to be paid for, if the State takes measures to grant financial compensation. Insofar as the Charter applies to the Union, this means that in its training policies the Union must respect free compulsory education, but this does not, of course, create new powers. Regarding the right of parents, it must be interpreted in conjunction with the provisions of Article 24.

- 2. Freedom to found public or private educational establishments is guaranteed as one of the aspects of freedom to conduct a business but it is limited by respect for democratic principles and is exercised in accordance with the arrangements defined by national legislation.*

Article 15

Freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work

1. Everyone has the right to engage in work and to pursue a freely chosen or accepted occupation.
2. Every citizen of the Union has the freedom to seek employment, to work, to exercise the right of establishment and to provide services in any Member State.
3. Nationals of third countries who are authorised to work in the territories of the Member States are entitled to working conditions equivalent to those of citizens of the Union.

Explanation

Freedom to choose an occupation, as enshrined in Article 15(1), is recognised in Court of Justice case law (see inter alia judgment of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraphs 12 to 14 of the grounds; judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 8 October 1986, Case 234/85 Keller [1986] ECR 2897, paragraph 8 of the grounds).

This paragraph also draws upon Article 1(2) of the European Social Charter, which was signed on 18 October 1961 and has been ratified by all the Member States, and on point 4 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers of 9 December 1989. The expression "working conditions" is to be understood in the sense of Article [III-107] of the Constitution.

The second paragraph deals with the three freedoms guaranteed by Articles [4] and [III-18, III-22 and III-29] of the Constitution, namely freedom of movement for workers, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

The third paragraph has been based on TEC Article 137(3), fourth indent, now replaced by Article [III-104 (1) (g)] of the Constitution, and on Article 19(4) of the European Social Charter signed on 18 October 1961 and ratified by all the Member States. Article 52(2) of the Charter is therefore applicable. The question of recruitment of seamen having the nationality of third States for the crews of vessels flying the flag of a Member State of the Union is governed by Union law and national legislation and practice.

Article 16

Freedom to conduct a business

The freedom to conduct a business in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices is recognised.

Explanation

This Article is based on Court of Justice case law which has recognised freedom to exercise an economic or commercial activity (see judgments of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraph 14 of the grounds, and of 27 September 1979, Case 230-78 SPA Eridiana and others [1979] ECR 2749, paragraphs 20 and 31 of the grounds) and freedom of contract (see inter alia Sukkerfabriken Nykøbing judgment, Case 151/78 [1979] ECR 1, paragraph 19 of the grounds, and judgment of 5 October 1999, C-240/97 Spain v. Commission, [1999] ECR I-6571, paragraph 99 of the grounds) and Article [3 (2)] of the Constitution, which recognises free competition. Of course, this right is to be exercised with respect for Union law and national legislation. It may be subject to the limitations provided for in Article 52(1) of the Charter.

Article 17

Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law insofar as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 1 of the Protocol to the ECHR:

"Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties."

This is a fundamental right common to all national constitutions. It has been recognised on numerous occasions by the case law of the Court of Justice, initially in the Hauer judgment (13 December 1979, ECR [1979] 3727). The wording has been updated but, in accordance with Article 52(3), the meaning and scope of the right are the same as those of the right guaranteed by the ECHR and the limitations may not exceed those provided for there.

Protection of intellectual property, one aspect of the right of property, is explicitly mentioned in paragraph 2 because of its growing importance and Community secondary legislation. Intellectual property covers not only literary and artistic property but also inter alia patent and trademark rights and associated rights. The guarantees laid down in paragraph 1 shall apply as appropriate to intellectual property.

Article 18

Right to asylum

The right to asylum shall be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and in accordance with the Constitution.

Explanation

The text of the Article has been based on TEC Article 63, now replaced by Article [III-167] of the Constitution, which requires the Union to respect the Geneva Convention on refugees. Reference should be made to the Protocols relating to the United Kingdom and Ireland annexed to the [Treaty of Amsterdam] Constitution and to Denmark to determine the extent to which those Member States implement Union law in this area and the extent to which this Article is applicable to them. This Article is in line with the Protocol on Asylum annexed to the Constitution.

Article 19

Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.
2. No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 of this Article has the same meaning and scope as Article 4 of Protocol No 4 to the ECHR concerning collective expulsion. Its purpose is to guarantee that every decision is based on a specific examination and that no single measure can be taken to expel all persons having the nationality of a particular State (see also Article 13 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights).

*Paragraph 2 incorporates the relevant case law from the European Court of Human Rights regarding Article 3 of the ECHR (see Ahmed v. Austria, judgment of 17 December 1996, [1996] ECR VI-2206 and Soering, judgment of 7 July 1989).*

TITLE III. EQUALITY*Article 20*Equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to a general principle of law which is included in all European constitutions and has also been recognised by the Court of Justice as a basic principle of Community law (judgment of 13 November 1984, Case 283/83 Racke [1984] ECR 3791, judgment of 17 April 1997, Case 15/95 EARL [1997] ECR I-1961, and judgment of 13 April 2000, Case 292/97 Karlsson, [2000] ECR 2737).

Article 21*Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.
2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Explanation

Paragraph 1 draws on Article 13 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by [Article III-8] of the Constitution, Article 14 of the ECHR and Article 11 of the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine as regards genetic heritage. Insofar as this corresponds to Article 14 of the ECHR, it applies in compliance with it.

There is no contradiction or incompatibility between paragraph 1 and Article [III-8] of the Constitution which has a different scope and purpose: Article [III-8] confers power on the Union to adopt legislative acts, including harmonisation of the Member States' laws and regulations, to combat certain forms of discrimination, listed exhaustively in that Article. Such legislation may cover action of Member State authorities (as well as relations between private individuals) in any area within the limits of the Union's powers. In contrast, the provision in paragraph 1 does not create any power to enact anti-discrimination laws in these areas of Member State or private action, nor does it lay down a sweeping ban of discrimination in such wide-ranging areas. Instead, it only addresses discriminations by the institutions and bodies of the Union themselves, when exercising powers conferred under other articles of Parts I and III of the Constitution, and by Member States only when they are implementing Union law. Paragraph 1 therefore does not alter the extent of powers granted under Article [III-8] nor the interpretation given to that Article.

Paragraph 2 corresponds to Article [4 (2)] of the Constitution and must be applied in compliance with that Article.

Article 22

Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Explanation

This Article has been based on Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union and on Article 151(1) and (4) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-181 (1) and (4)] of the Constitution, concerning culture. Respect for cultural and linguistic diversity is now also laid down in Article [3 (3)] of the Constitution. The Article is also inspired by declaration No 11 to the Final Act of the Amsterdam Treaty on the status of churches and non-confessional organisations, now taken over in Article [51] of the Constitution.

Article 23

Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Explanation

The first paragraph has been based on Articles 2 and 3(2) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Articles [3] and [III-2] of the Constitution which impose the objective of promoting equality between men and women on the Union, and on Article 141 (1) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-108 (1)] of the Constitution. It draws on Article 20 of the revised European Social Charter of 3 May 1996 and on point 16 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers. It is also based on Article 141(3) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-108 (3)] of the Constitution, and Article 2(4) of Council Directive 76/207/EEC on the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women as regards access to employment, vocational training and promotion, and working conditions.

Paragraph 2 takes over in shorter form Article [III-108 (4)] of the Constitution which provides that the principle of equal treatment does not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in order to make it easier for the under-represented sex to pursue a vocational activity or to prevent or compensate for disadvantages in professional careers. In accordance with Article 52 (2), the present paragraph does not amend Article [III-108 (4)].

Article 24

The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Explanation

This Article is based on the New York Convention on the Rights of the Child signed on 20 November 1989 and ratified by all the Member States, particularly Articles 3, 9, 12 and 13 thereof.

Paragraph 3 takes account of the fact that, as part of the establishment of an area of freedom, security and justice, Union legislation on civil matters having cross-border implications, for which Article [III-170] of the Constitution confers power, may include notably visiting rights ensuring that children can maintain on a regular basis a personal and direct contact with both his or her parents.

Article 25

The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Explanation

This Article draws on Article 23 of the revised European Social Charter and Articles 24 and 25 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers. Of course, participation in social and cultural life also covers participation in political life.

Article 26

Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

Explanation

The principle set out in this Article is based on Article 15 of the European Social Charter and also draws on point 26 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

TITLE IV. SOLIDARITY

Article 27

Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

This Article appears in the revised European Social Charter (Article 21) and in the Community Charter on the rights of workers (points 17 and 18). It applies under the conditions laid down by Union law and by national laws. The reference to appropriate levels refers to the levels laid down by Union law or by national laws and practices, which might include the European level when Union legislation so provides. There is a considerable Union acquis in this field: Articles [III-105 and III-106] of the Constitution, and Directives 2002/14/EC (general framework for informing and consulting employees in the European Community), 98/59/EC (collective redundancies), 2001/23/EC (transfers of undertakings) and 94/45/EC (European works councils).

Article 28

Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 6 of the European Social Charter and on the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (points 12 to 14). The right of collective action was recognised by the European Court of Human Rights as one of the elements of trade union rights laid down by Article 11 of the ECHR. As regards the appropriate levels at which collective negotiation might take place, see the explanation given for the above Article. The modalities and limits for the exercise of collective action, including strike action, come under national laws and practices, including the question of whether it may be carried out in parallel in several Member States.

Article 29*Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Explanation

This Article is based on Article 1(3) of the European Social Charter and point 13 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Article 30*Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

This Article draws on Article 24 of the revised Social Charter. See also Directive 2001/23/EC on the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, and Directive 80/987/EEC on the protection of employees in the event of the insolvency of their employer, as amended by Directive 2002/74/EC.

Article 31

Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Explanation

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article is based on Directive 89/391/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work. It also draws on Article 3 of the Social Charter and point 19 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers, and, as regards dignity at work, on Article 26 of the revised Social Charter. The expression "working conditions" must be understood in the sense of Article [III-107] of the Constitution.
2. Paragraph 2 is based on Directive 93/104/EC concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time, Article 2 of the European Social Charter and point 8 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers.

Article 32

Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Explanation

This Article is based on Directive 94/33/EC on the protection of young people at work, Article 7 of the European Social Charter and points 20 to 23 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Article 33

Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Explanation

Article 33(1) is based on Article 16 of the European Social Charter. The second paragraph draws on Council Directive 92/85/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health at work of pregnant workers and workers who have recently given birth or are breastfeeding and Directive 96/34/EC on the framework agreement on parental leave concluded by UNICE, CEEP and the ETUC. It is also based on Article 8 (protection of maternity) of the European Social Charter and draws on Article 27 (right of workers with family responsibilities to equal opportunities and equal treatment) of the revised Social Charter. "Maternity" covers the period from conception to weaning.

Article 34

Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.

Explanation

The principle set out in Article 34(1) is based on Articles 137 and 140 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Articles [III-104 and III-107] and on Article 12 of the European Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers. The Union must respect it when exercising the powers conferred on it by Articles [III-104 and III-107] of the Constitution. The reference to social services relates to cases in which such services have been introduced to provide certain advantages but does not imply that such services must be created where they do not exist. "Maternity" must be understood in the same sense as in the preceding Article.

The second paragraph is based on Articles 12 (4) and 13(4) of the European Social Charter and point 2 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and reflects the rules arising from Regulation No 1408/71 and Regulation No 1612/68.

The third paragraph draws on Article 13 of the European Social Charter and Articles 30 and 31 of the revised Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter. The Union must respect it in the context of policies based on Article [III-104] of the Constitution.

Article 35

Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article are based on Article 152 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-179] of the Constitution, and on Articles 11 and 13 of the European Social Charter. The second sentence of the Article takes over Article [III-179 (1)].

Article 36

Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the Constitution, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Explanation

This Article is fully in line with Article [III-6] of the Constitution and does not create any new right. It merely sets out the principle of respect by the Union for the access to services of general economic interest as provided for by national provisions, when those provisions are compatible with Union law.

Article 37

Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article have been based on Articles 2, 6 and 174 of the EC Treaty, which have now been replaced by Articles [3 (3), III-4 and III-129] of the Constitution. It also draws on the provisions of some national constitutions.

Article 38

Consumer Protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

Explanation

The principles set out in this Article have been based on Article 153 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-132] of the Constitution.

TITLE V. CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Article 39

Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Explanation

Article 39 applies under the conditions laid down in Parts I and III of the Constitution, in accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter. Article 39(1) corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article [8 (2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-10] for the adoption of detailed arrangements for the exercise of that right) and Article 39(2) corresponds to Article [19 (2)] of the Constitution. Article 39(2) takes over the basic principles of the electoral system in a democratic State.

Article 40

Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to the right guaranteed by Article [8 (2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-10] for the adoption of detailed arrangements for the exercise of that right). In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions set out in these Articles of Parts I and III of the Constitution.

Article 41

Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union.
2. This right includes:
  - the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the Union make good any damage caused by its Institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every person may write to the Institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Constitution and must have an answer in the same language.

Explanation

Article 41 is based on the existence of the Union as subject to the rule of law whose characteristics were developed in the case law which enshrined inter alia good administration as a general principle of law (see inter alia Court of Justice judgment of 31 March 1992 in Case C-255/90 P, Burbán [1992] ECR I-2253, and Court of First Instance judgments of 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-2589, and 9 July 1999 in Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and others [1999] ECR II-2403). The wording for that right in the first two paragraphs results from the case law (Court of Justice judgment of 15 October 1987 in Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097, paragraph 15 of the grounds, judgment of 18 October 1989 in Case 374/87 Orkem [1989] ECR 3283, judgment of 21 November 1991 in Case C-269/90 TU München [1991] ECR I-5469, and Court of First Instance judgments of 6 December 1994 in Case T-450/93 Lisrestal [1994] ECR II-1177, 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-258) and the wording regarding the obligation to give reasons comes from Article 253 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [37(2)] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-304] of the Constitution for the adoption of legislation in the interest of an open, efficient and independent European administration).

Paragraph 3 reproduces the right now guaranteed by Article [III-337] of the Constitution.

Paragraph 4 reproduces the right now guaranteed by Articles [8, fourth indent, and III-12] of the Constitution. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, those rights are to be applied under the conditions and within the limits defined by Part III of the Constitution.

The right to an effective remedy, which is an important aspect of this question, is guaranteed in Article 47 of this Charter.

Article 42

Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to documents of the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union, in whatever form they are produced.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article has been taken over from Article 255 of the EC Treaty, on the basis of which Regulation 1049/2001 has subsequently been adopted. The European Convention has extended this right to documents of institutions, bodies and agencies generally, regardless of their form, see Article [49 (3)] of the Constitution. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, the right of access to documents is exercised under the conditions and within the limits for which provision is made in Articles [49 (3) and III-305].

Article 43*Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the European Ombudsman cases of maladministration in the activities of the Institutions, bodies or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the European Court of Justice and the High Court acting in their judicial role.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article is the right guaranteed by Articles [8 and III-237 of the Constitution]. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these two Articles.

Article 44*Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Explanation

The right guaranteed in this Article is the right guaranteed by Articles [8 and III-236] of the Constitution. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these two Articles.

Article 45

Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Constitution, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Explanation

The right guaranteed by paragraph 1 is the right guaranteed by Article [8, first indent] of the Constitution (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-9]); and the judgement of the Court of Justice of 17 September 2002, C-413/99 Baumbast, [2002] ECR 709). In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions and within the limits defined for which provision is made in Part III of the Constitution.

Paragraph 2 refers to the power granted to the Union by Articles [III-166 to III-168] of the Constitution. Consequently, the granting of this right depends on the institutions exercising that power.

Article 46

Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

Explanation

The right guaranteed by this Article is the right guaranteed by Article [8] of the Constitution; cf. also the legal base in Article [III-11]. In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these Articles.

TITLE VI. JUSTICE

Article 47

Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Explanation

The first paragraph is based on Article 13 of the ECHR:

"Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity."

However, in Union law the protection is more extensive since it guarantees the right to an effective remedy before a court. The Court of Justice enshrined that right in its judgment of 15 May 1986 as a general principle of Union law (Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651; see also judgment of 15 October 1987, Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097 and judgment of 3 December 1992, Case C-97/91 Borelli [1992] ECR I-6313). According to the Court, that general principle of Union law also applies to the Member States when they are implementing Union law. The inclusion of this precedent in the Charter has not been intended to change the system of judicial review laid down by the Treaties, and particularly the rules relating to admissibility for direct actions before the Court of Justice of the European Union. The European Convention has considered the Union's system of judicial review including the rules on admissibility, and confirmed them while amending them as to certain aspects, as reflected in Articles [III-258 to III-289] of the Constitution, and in particular in Article [III-270 (4)]. Article 47 applies to the institutions of the Union and of Member States when they are implementing Union law and does so for all rights guaranteed by Union law.

The second paragraph corresponds to Article 6(1) of the ECHR which reads as follows:

"In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law. Judgment shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice."

In Union law, the right to a fair hearing is not confined to disputes relating to civil law rights and obligations. That is one of the consequences of the fact that the Union is a community based on the rule of law as stated by the Court in Case 294/83, "Les Verts" v. European Parliament (judgment of 23 April 1986, [1988] ECR 1339). Nevertheless, in all respects other than their scope, the guarantees afforded by the ECHR apply in a similar way to the Union.

With regard to the third paragraph, it should be noted that in accordance with the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, provision should be made for legal aid where the absence of such aid would make it impossible to ensure an effective remedy (ECHR Judgment of 9.10.1979, Airey, Series A, Volume 32, 11). There is also a system of legal assistance for cases before the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Article 48

Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Explanation

Article 48 is the same as Article 6(2) and (3) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
3. Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights:
  - (a) to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him;
  - (b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence;
  - (c) to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require;
  - (d) to examine or have examined witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;
  - (e) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court."

In accordance with Article 52(3), this right has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Article 49

Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Explanation

This Article follows the traditional rule of the non-retroactivity of laws and criminal sanctions. There has been added the rule of the retroactivity of a more lenient penal law, which exists in a number of Member States and which features in Article 15 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Article 7 of the ECHR is worded as follows:

- "1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.*

2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations."

In paragraph 2, the reference to "civilised" nations has been deleted; this does not change the meaning of this paragraph, which refers to crimes against humanity in particular. In accordance with Article 52(3), the right guaranteed here therefore has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Paragraph 3 states the general principle of proportionality between penalties and criminal offences which is enshrined in the common constitutional traditions of the Member States and in the case law of the Court of Justice of the Communities.

Article 50

Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

Explanation

Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR reads as follows:

- "1. No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings under the jurisdiction of the same State for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of that State.*
2. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the reopening of the case in accordance with the law and the penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case.

3. No derogation from this Article shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention."

The "non bis in idem" rule applies in Union law (see, among the many precedents, the judgment of 5 May 1996, Cases 18/65 and 35/65, Gutmann v. Commission [1966] ECR 103 and a recent case, the decision of the Court of First Instance of 20 April 1999, Joined Cases T-305/94 and others, Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij NV v. Commission [1999] ECR II-931). The rule prohibiting cumulation refers to cumulation of two penalties of the same kind, that is to say criminal law penalties.

*In accordance with Article 50, the "non bis in idem" rule applies not only within the jurisdiction of one State but also between the jurisdictions of several Member States. That corresponds to the acquis in Union law; see Articles 54 to 58 of the Schengen Convention and the judgment of the Court of Justice of 11 February 2003, C-187/01 Gözütok (not yet published), Article 7 of the Convention on the Protection of the European Communities' Financial Interests and Article 10 of the Convention on the fight against corruption. The very limited exceptions in those Conventions permitting the Member States to derogate from the "non bis in idem" rule are covered by the horizontal clause in Article 52(1) of the Charter concerning limitations. As regards the situations referred to by Article 4 of Protocol No 7, namely the application of the principle within the same Member State, the guaranteed right has the same meaning and the same scope as the corresponding right in the ECHR.*

TITLE VII. GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article 51

Scope

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the Institutions, bodies and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the other Parts of the Constitution.
2. This Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks defined in the other Parts of the Constitution.

Explanation

The aim of Article 51 is to determine the scope of the Charter. It seeks to establish clearly that the Charter applies primarily to the institutions and bodies of the Union, in compliance with the principle of subsidiarity. This provision was drafted in keeping with Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union, which required the Union to respect fundamental rights, and with the mandate issued by Cologne European Council. The term "institutions" is enshrined in Part I of the Constitution. The expression "bodies and agencies" is commonly used in the Constitution to refer to all the authorities set up by the Constitution or by secondary legislation (see, e.g., Article [49 or 50] of the Constitution).

As regards the Member States, it follows unambiguously from the case law of the Court of Justice that the requirement to respect fundamental rights defined in a Union context is only binding on the Member States when they act in the scope of Union law (judgment of 13 July 1989, Case 5/88 Wachauf [1989] ECR 2609; judgment of 18 June 1991, ERT [1991] ECR I-2925); judgment of 18 December 1997 (C-309/96 Annibaldi [1997] ECR I-7493). The Court of Justice confirmed this case law in the following terms: "In addition, it should be remembered that the requirements flowing from the protection of fundamental rights in the Community legal order are also binding on Member States when they implement Community rules..." (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, [2000] ECR 2737, paragraph 37 of the grounds). Of course this rule, as enshrined in this Charter, applies to the central authorities as well as to regional or local bodies, and to public organisations, when they are implementing Union law.

Paragraph 2, together with the second sentence of paragraph 1, confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the competences and tasks which the other Parts of the Constitution confer on the Union. Explicit mention is made here of the logical consequences of the principle of subsidiarity and of the fact that the Union only has those powers which have been conferred upon it. The fundamental rights as guaranteed in the Union do not have any effect other than in the context of the powers determined by Parts I and III of the Constitution. Consequently, an obligation, pursuant to the second sentence of paragraph 1, for the Union's institutions to promote principles laid down in the Charter, may arise only within the limits of these same powers.

Paragraph 2 also confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union as established in the other Parts of the Constitution. The Court of Justice has already established this rule with respect to the fundamental rights recognised as part of Union law (judgment of 17 February 1998, C-249/96 Grant, 1998 ECR I-621, paragraph 45 of the grounds). In accordance with this rule, it goes without saying that the incorporation of the Charter into the Constitution cannot be understood as extending by itself the range of Member State action considered to be "implementation of Union law" (within the meaning of paragraph 1 and the above-mentioned case law).

Article 52

Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.

2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant Parts.
3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by Institutions and bodies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Explanation

The purpose of Article 52 is to set the scope of the rights and principles of the Charter, and to lay down rules for their interpretation. Paragraph 1 deals with the arrangements for the limitation of rights. The wording is based on the case law of the Court of Justice: "...it is well established in the case law of the Court that restrictions may be imposed on the exercise of fundamental rights, in particular in the context of a common organisation of the market, provided that those restrictions in fact correspond to objectives of general interest pursued by the Community and do not constitute, with regard to the aim pursued, disproportionate and unreasonable interference undermining the very substance of those rights" (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, paragraph 45 of the grounds). The reference to general interests recognised by the Union covers both the objectives mentioned in Article [2] of the Constitution and other interests protected by specific provisions of the Constitution such as Articles [5 (1), III-18 (3), III-43, III-342].

Paragraph 2 refers to rights which were already expressly guaranteed in the Treaty establishing the European Community and have been recognised in the Charter, and which are now found in other Parts of the Constitution (notably the rights derived from Union citizenship). It clarifies that such rights remain subject to the conditions and limits applicable to the Union law on which they are based, and for which provision is now made in Parts I and III of the Constitution. The Charter does not alter the system of rights conferred by the EC Treaty and now taken over by Parts I and III of the Constitution.

Paragraph 3 is intended to ensure the necessary consistency between the Charter and the ECHR by establishing the rule that, insofar as the rights in the present Charter also correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR, the meaning and scope of those rights, including authorised limitations, are the same as those laid down by the ECHR. This means in particular that the legislator, in laying down limitations to those rights, must comply with the same standards as are fixed by the detailed limitation arrangements laid down in the ECHR, which are thus made applicable for the rights covered by this paragraph, without thereby adversely affecting the autonomy of Union law and of that of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

The reference to the ECHR covers both the Convention and the Protocols to it. The meaning and the scope of the guaranteed rights are determined not only by the text of those instruments, but also by the case law of the European Court of Human Rights and by the Court of Justice of the European Union. The last sentence of the paragraph is designed to allow the Union to guarantee more extensive protection. In any event, the level of protection afforded by the Charter may never be lower than that guaranteed by the ECHR.

The Charter does not affect the possibilities of Member States to avail themselves of Article 15 ECHR, allowing derogations from ECHR rights in the event of war or of other public dangers threatening the life of the nation, when they take action in the areas of national defence in the event of war and of the maintenance of law and order, in accordance with their responsibilities recognised in Articles [5 (1), III-16, III-163] of the Constitution.

The list of rights which may at the present stage, without precluding developments in the law, legislation and the Treaties, be regarded as corresponding to rights in the ECHR within the meaning of the present paragraph is given hereafter. It does not include rights additional to those in the ECHR.

1. Articles of the Charter where both the meaning and the scope are the same as the corresponding Articles of the ECHR:

- Article 2 corresponds to Article 2 of the ECHR
- Article 4 corresponds to Article 3 of the ECHR
- Article 5(1) and (2) correspond to Article 4 of the ECHR
- Article 6 corresponds to Article 5 of the ECHR
- Article 7 corresponds to Article 8 of the ECHR
- Article 10(1) corresponds to Article 9 of the ECHR
- Article 11 corresponds to Article 10 of the ECHR without prejudice to any restrictions which Union law may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR
- Article 17 corresponds to Article 1 of the Protocol to the ECHR
- Article 19(1) corresponds to Article 4 of Protocol No 4
- Article 19(2) corresponds to Article 3 of the ECHR as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights
- Article 48 corresponds to Article 6(2) and(3) of the ECHR
- Article 49(1) (with the exception of the last sentence) and (2) correspond to Article 7 of the ECHR

2. Articles where the meaning is the same as the corresponding Articles of the ECHR, but where the scope is wider:

- Article 9 covers the same field as Article 12 of the ECHR, but its scope may be extended to other forms of marriage if these are established by national legislation
- Article 12(1) corresponds to Article 11 of the ECHR, but its scope is extended to European Union level
- Article 14(1) corresponds to Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR, but its scope is extended to cover access to vocational and continuing training
- Article 14(3) corresponds to Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR as regards the rights of parents
- Article 47(2) and (3) correspond to Article 6(1) of the ECHR, but the limitation to the determination of civil rights and obligations or criminal charges does not apply as regards Union law and its implementation
- Article 50 corresponds to Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR, but its scope is extended to European Union level between the Courts of the Member States.

- Finally, citizens of the European Union may not be considered as aliens in the scope of the application of Union law, because of the prohibition of any discrimination on grounds of nationality. The limitations provided for by Article 16 of the ECHR as regards the rights of aliens therefore do not apply to them in this context.

The rule of interpretation contained in paragraph 4 has been based on the wording of Article 6 § 2 of the Treaty on European Union (cf. now the wording of Article [7 § 3] of the Constitution) and takes due account of the approach to common constitutional traditions followed by the Court of Justice (e.g., judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 18 May 1982, Case 155/79, AM&S, [1982] ECR 1575). Under that rule, rather than following a rigid approach of "a lowest common denominator", the Charter rights concerned should be interpreted in a way offering a high standard of protection which is adequate for the law of the Union and in harmony with the common constitutional traditions.

Paragraph 5 clarifies the distinction between "rights" and "principles" set out in the Charter. According to that distinction, subjective rights shall be respected, whereas principles shall be observed (Article 51 (1)). Principles may be implemented through legislative or executive acts (adopted by the Union in accordance with its powers, and by the Member States only when they implement Union law); accordingly, they become significant for the Courts only when such acts are interpreted or reviewed. They do not however give rise to direct claims for positive action by the Union's institutions or Member States authorities. This is consistent both with case law of the Court of Justice (Cf. notably case law on the "precautionary principle" in Article 174 (2) TEC (replaced by [Article III-129] of the Constitution): judgment of the CFI of 11 September 2002, T-13/99, Pfizer vs. Council, with numerous references to earlier case law; and a series of judgments on Article 33 (ex-39) on the principles of agricultural law, e.g. judgment of the Court of Justice C-265/85, Van den Berg, 1987 ECR 1155: scrutiny of the principle of market stabilisation and of reasonable expectations) and with the approach of the Member States' constitutional systems to "principles" particularly in the field of social law. For illustration, examples for principles recognised in the Charter include e.g. Articles 25, 26 and 37. In some cases, an Article of the Charter may contain both elements of a right and of a principle, e.g., Articles 23, 33 and 34.

Paragraph 6 refers to the various Articles in the Charter which, in the spirit of subsidiarity, make reference to national laws and practices.

Article 53

Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Explanation

This provision is intended to maintain the level of protection currently afforded within their respective scope by Union law, national law and international law. Owing to its importance, mention is made of the ECHR.

Article 54

Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

Explanation

This Article corresponds to Article 17 of the ECHR:

"Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention."

In order to prepare for the plenary session devoted to civil society which will take place on 24-25 June 2002, members of the Convention will find attached a digest of the contributions which have been submitted to the Forum since the inaugural session of the Convention, up to and including 7 June 2002.

DIGEST OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE FORUM

Introduction

1. The Laeken declaration setting up the Convention on the future of the European Union also set up a Forum to allow organisations representing civil society to provide input into the wider debate. The Forum takes the form of a structured network, through a dedicated website, where organisations may register and post their contributions. It has been operational since the inaugural session of the Convention at the end of February.
2. So far 160 organisations have registered and contributed to the debate. Registration has been at the average rate of about eight per week, rising rapidly over the last few weeks as organisations were encouraged to apply in time for their contribution to be taken into account for the second June plenary session.
3. The 160 organisations represent a wide cross section of civil society. The majority of them have interests which are Europe-wide, although there are also many national organisations which have chosen to register. There is a rather uneven spread of national organisations, with several Member States not being represented at all, and only a limited number originating in the candidate countries.

4. The Forum is divided into four categories, and organisations are invited to select the most appropriate category when registering. The breakdown of the 160 organisations by category is as follows:

|---------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| political or public authority (including at sub-national level)     | 17         |
| socio-economic interests (social partners, professional groups etc) | 16         |
| academic interests and think tanks                                  | 28         |
| other civil society organisations, NGOs etc                         | 99  |
| TOTAL                                                               | 160 |

5. Each organisation is invited to submit a contribution, together with a one page summary. Both of these are posted on the website. Given the number and range of the contributions, this digest of them makes no claim to be comprehensive. Its aim is rather to distil some of the key issues and concerns which are reflected in the input to the forum as a whole. This should provide Members of the Convention with an overview of the Forum, and thereby help civil society contribute to the work of the Convention. Those wishing to have a complete view of the Forum will need to turn to the contributions themselves on the website.
6. The range of contributions does not lend itself to drawing substantive conclusions from the Forum. But certain broad themes run through many contributions. The first is the wish to see the Union operating more closely to those it seeks to serve. That means both taking decisions at the appropriate level and ensuring that Europe's citizens have a greater stake in those decisions, at whatever level they are taken. Secondly, and linked to the first, is the concern to improve the level of involvement of civil society, through its constituent organisations, in the European decision-making process, and to recognise in the Treaty its particular role. Thirdly, there is a strong emphasis on the Union both respecting fundamental rights as they are currently defined, and where appropriate, extending them. Many organisations believe this can only be fully achieved by incorporating the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the Treaty. Fourthly, each sectoral interest group puts particular emphasis on effective and legitimate decision-making, often calling for a move to decision-taking by QMV coupled with co-decision in the relevant policy area.

7. Beyond these broad themes, there are many other issues raised. These will be considered below according to the four categories, which although designed to make the Forum easier to manage, are to some extent arbitrary, with a number of organisations not fitting obviously into any one particular category (hence the large number which have opted for the fourth or 'other' category).

Political or public authorities

8. The majority of organisations which have registered under this heading represent regional or sub-regional organisations. As such, much of the content of their contributions relates to the issue of the role and status of sub-national bodies within the European Union. A number take as their starting point the need to include in the Treaty a recognition of the right of citizens to local democracy, possibly by integrating into the Treaty the Charter of the Council of Europe on local autonomy. Many also look for concrete implementation of the local democracy provisions in Article 1 of the Treaty on European Union, which call for decisions to be taken as closely as possible to the citizen, as well as simplification in particular of those legislative provisions which require implementation at the sub-national level (implying a very close involvement of regional and local authorities at all stages of the legislative process).
9. Some call for a clear recognition of the four levels of government: European, national, regional and local. Others seek explicit recognition in the Treaty of the role of regions and local authorities, and several consider that, in the absence of a detailed list of competences, an effective system of subsidiarity control (both ex-ante and ex-post) needs to be established.

10. Several contributions refer to the need to take greater account of the financial consequences on sub-national bodies of decisions taken at a European level. There are a number of calls to give regions with legislative power the right of access to the European Court of Justice, special recognition in the Treaty, and the right to participate in meetings of COSAC.

Socio-economic interests

11. A relatively small number of organisations registered in this category. They mostly represent the interests of employees or particular sectors of the economy such as cooperatives and public services.
12. A number of these organisations argue for a greater balance between economic policy and social objectives. There is a call for some core elements of the European social model, for example the goal of full employment, to be explicitly included in the Treaty. Some organisations call for greater recognition for the cooperative sector, as well as the area of services of general interest. There is a demand for institutionalised dialogue with social partners, including enlarging the number of interlocutors to make them more representative. The issue of greater employee participation is also raised. Several organisations call for integrating the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the Treaty in order to provide for greater recognition of basic social rights.

Academic interests and Think-tanks

13. The contributions to the Forum from academic institutions and think tanks are inevitably of a rather different nature than many of the non-governmental organisations. Many of their proposals are not necessarily designed to serve a particular interest, but rather to help take forward the broader debate on the future structure of the European Union. Several have outlined possible models for a future constitution, including proposals on how to merge the Communities and the Union and to adapt the pillar structure. A number have addressed specific issues which the Convention has already examined (e.g. the delimitation of competences).

14. Several student groups have submitted a draft constitution or 'manifesto' for Europe. A number of think tanks have submitted ideas on future institutional arrangements, including some detailed proposals on the issue of the election of the President of the Commission and the future role of the High Representative for CFSP. The idea of a common language has been floated, as has the possibility of creating regional unions to act as groups within the EU as a whole. There is also a call for greater transparency in lobbying practices.

Other Civil society organisations.

15. By far the largest number of organisations registered under this category. As a result a wide variety of issues is covered. Several distinct areas of interest can however be identified.
16. A number of organisations from the 'social' sector registered in this category. Many of their concerns overlap with those raised under the social-economic category (see above). However also included are organisations particularly concerned with issues of gender equality and support for families. There is a call for a more active policy of gender equality, including gender mainstreaming in all major policy areas. A number of organisations call for a greater emphasis on human development policies, including support for families and the fight against poverty. Some refer to the increasing use of an 'open coordination' approach in the social sector, and ask that this be formally recognised in the Treaty. Several contributions call for the Union to recognise explicitly the objective of greater social cohesion. There is a call for a more coherent and sustainable common agricultural policy.

17. There are a number of organisations with an interest in the field of development. Many of them underline the importance of placing development policy and poverty eradication at the heart of external policy, and wish to maintain a distinct development organisational framework within both Commission and Council. A number call for the Treaties to be amended to reflect the central role of development policy, and to give a legal base for consultation with civil society. There is a call for the European Development Fund to be integrated into the Community budget, and for development policy to become a shared Community/Member State competence.
18. In the environment sector, a number of organisations call for better recognition of the importance of environmental protection and sustainable development. In particular there were calls to take better account of sustainability in CAP reform, extend QMV with co-decision for environmental decisions (in particular Article 175 (2) of the EC Treaty), and include environmental rights in the Charter of Fundamental Rights.
19. This category also includes a number of contributions from organisations working in the field of human rights. In general, these organisations seek to maintain and strengthen concern for human rights as a key element in all policies. Most call for the incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the Treaty, and many consider that this should be accompanied by some strengthening of the Charter. Some also ask for the Union to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights. A number call for better provisions for ensuring gender equality, the rights of the child, and the protection of the family and of handicapped persons.
20. Several organisations in the cultural field submitted contributions under this category. They call for a much stronger cultural element in the European Union of the future, with a stronger commitment to the existing provisions in Article 151 TEC, and a move to decision-making by QMV and co-decision. Several call for the formal recognition in the Treaty of the plurality of education, and of access to education under equal conditions. There is also a call for a specific legal basis for support for sport.

21. There are calls from a number of religious organisations for a future constitutional treaty to contain a spiritual element, with an explicit recognition of the religious and spiritual heritage of Europe. Several also want to see Declaration number 11, on the respect for the status of churches, incorporated into the Treaty.

22. A number of citizens organisations have sent contributions under this category. They call in general for greater transparency in the functioning of the Union, as well as greater participation of individual citizens, making use as far as possible of new technology. A number call for a single referendum, or a guarantee of national referenda, on the Treaty which they consider should be the outcome of the Convention. There are also contributions from several political parties as well as 'European' organisations (both 'pro-European/federalist' and 'eurosceptic'). A number of them call for a federal constitution for Europe, and some contain detailed proposals on possible future institutional structures. On the other hand, there are several organisations which express concern in particular at the continuing lack of democratic accountability within the Union, and call for a greater involvement of national parliaments.

Follow-up

23. This digest covers all contributions sent to the Forum by the first June plenary session (7 June 2002). Organisations are continuing to register, and are encouraged to do so. The site can of course be accessed by everyone, including members of the Convention, and the Convention secretariat will also continue to monitor contributions closely.

Members of the Convention will find attached reports from the meetings of the eight contact groups, covering different sectors of civil society, which took place between 10 and 18 June 2002.

SOCIAL SECTOR

Chairman: Klaus Hänsch

No of participants registered: 105 (74 organisations)

A meeting with representatives of non-governmental organisations working in the "social" sector took place in the morning of Thursday 13 June, under the chairmanship of Mr Klaus Hänsch, member of the Praesidium of the Convention. 74 organisations had registered to attend the meeting – about eighty individuals were present on the day, of whom 30 took the floor.

The participants were drawn from a wide range of interest groups, and this was reflected in the scope of subjects covered in the discussion. Mr Hänsch opened the discussion by underlining the importance of the various contact group meetings as an opportunity for organisations from civil society to provide input into the work of the Convention. There would be a further opportunity at the plenary session on 24 and 25 June, in preparation for which each contact group was invited to designate a number of representatives to speak on behalf of their sector. Mr Hänsch provided the group with information about the organisation of the plenary session.

This summary is not an exhaustive record of all the points raised in the discussion. There were however a number of issues which were mentioned by several participants, and a few themes which can be identified as being of general concern to the sector as a whole. These are as follows:

- A number of speakers called for the full incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the Treaty, and some called for extending its scope to include issues such as the right to education.
- Many sought formal recognition in the Treaty of the role of civil society, including a right to be consulted.
- References were made to the increasing use of the open method of coordination, and a number of speakers called for this to be formally recognised in the Treaty.

- Several called for a greater balance between economic and social policy, with explicit recognition in the Treaty of a "social" economy, and the inclusion of objectives such as full employment, the eradication of poverty and social exclusion, and sustainable development.
- Some proposed that there should be a more coherent approach to the Lisbon process, with a synchronisation of economic and employment guidelines at the Spring European Council. There was also a request for greater involvement of the European Parliament in these processes.
- Several speakers called for more support for services of general interest, cooperatives and non-profit-making organisations.
- There was a call for greater recognition of, and support for, families, and more emphasis on improving the treatment of migrants.
- There were several calls for concrete measures to end discrimination on grounds of gender and sexual orientation, as well as discrimination against the handicapped.
- Several speakers involved in scientific research establishments underlined the importance of science as a motor for the European economy and called for greater support from the Union for basic scientific research.

The Chairman welcomed the various contributions, which constituted a substantive input to the work of the Convention. After commenting briefly on a number of specific points, he invited those present to designate speakers to represent the sector at the plenary session on 24 and 25 June.

It was agreed that the social platform would themselves designate three representatives to speak for five minutes each. In addition, issues of non-discrimination would be addressed by Mary McPhail of the European Women's Lobby, and Economic/Social issues would be addressed by Rita Kessler from the Association Internationale de la Mutualité.

ENVIRONMENT

Chairman: Giorgos Katiforis

Number of organisations registered: 14

Number of participants registered: 20

The meeting was chaired by Mr Giorgos KATIFOROS, member of the Praesidium of the Convention.

After an introduction by Mr Katiforis on the aims and method of the contact group, the floor was taken by Mr David Lawrence, Director of Directorate-General A: Sustainable Development and Policy support of the Commission's Environment DG, who gave an unofficial account of some of the projects and objectives of the Environment Directorate-General.

Statements were then made by representatives of the following organisations: Eurogroup for Animal Welfare, European Agricultural Convention, European Landowners Organisation, European Women's Lobby, European Environmental Bureau.

Main proposals put forward by the representatives of organisations:*Fundamental rights

1. Include environmental rights in the Charter of Fundamental Rights, amending it to be worded in terms of rights.
2. Add to fundamental rights the right of access to healthy food, the right to information, the right to a clean environment and clean water, the right to environmental services, the right to food free from GMOs.
3. Introduce the concept of animal welfare into the Treaty.

The Union's tasks

1. Maintain objectives and principles essential for environment and sustainable development, in particular as laid down in Articles 2, 6, 174 and 228 of the EC Treaty.
2. Review objectives of the Agriculture Policy, by bringing Art. 33 into line with the requirements of sustainability, quality food production, health and environmental protection, appropriate and sensitive rural development.
3. Establish no fixed list of competencies.
4. Jointly develop agricultural and rural policies incorporating the concept of sustainable development and ensuring biodiversity and land and water management, moving away from the aim of production and towards the aim of rural development.
5. Promote local traditions and traditional trades, particularly in relation to food, and promote rural tourism.
6. Abolish the Euratom Treaty.

Instruments

1. Replace unanimity by qualified majority with codecision for environmental decisions by changing Art. 175(2) and Art. 99 of the EC Treaty, as for any other matters.
2. Open the door to the European Court of Justice for environmental cases.
3. Include a general provision in the Treaty for broad, open and timely public participation.
4. Extend transparency requirements to all EU institutions and bodies.
5. End secrecy in the Council, which should meet in public.
6. Give the Economic and Social Committee no additional role as representative of civil society.
7. Strengthen the existing institutions: improve the transparency and democratic working of the existing institutions. Extend codecision powers to the EP, as well as a (limited) right of initiative.

Subsidiarity and competence

Decentralise agricultural policy.

ANNEXE III*ACADEMIA

Chairman: Giuliano Amato

Number of organisations registered: 43

Number of participants registered: 65

1. Mr Giuliano Amato, Vice-Chairman of the European Convention, chaired the meeting of the contact group bringing together representatives of the academic world and "think tanks" in preparation for the meeting of the Convention on 24 and 25 June 2002 devoted to hearing from civil society. Around forty organisations had registered to take part in the meeting (see attached list), of whom about thirty were actually represented.

2. Mr Amato began by saying that this was a first meeting designed to put the various organisations in touch with one another. He encouraged them to collaborate and organise themselves during the Convention's proceedings and in particular to react promptly to the documents it produced. The Chairman pointed out that it was possible to identify five sub-groups within the contact group:
  - the academic world (universities, research centres, other ad hoc groups)
  - "think tanks"
  - movements promoting the European ideal, several of which were made up of young people or students
  - scientific research organisations
  - other NGOs from civil society representing various interests (European citizenship, women's movement, etc.), often participating in other sectoral contact groups as well.

3. The Chairman underlined the importance of the expertise provided by the academic world and also of the support of civil society in legitimising the final outcome of the Convention's work. It would therefore be necessary to consider, after the Convention meeting on 24 and 25 June, how to continue interacting with civil society in general and, possibly, with a contact group from academic circles and think tanks. The membership of the contact group might vary depending on the subjects raised. Experts could also be invited to take part in the working groups which had been set up, while the Convention Forum would continue to collect contributions.

4. The Chairman then invited participants to give an introduction to the organisation or network (for example AGORA or CEPS/EPIN) they represented and talk about their current and future activities which had a bearing on the Convention. They were also able to give their general views on the running of the Convention and the various topics it dealt with. The following points may be made at this stage:
  - Several participants raised the question of the final result of the Convention, in, particular the method to be used for drafting any basic Treaty and the structure of the Union which it would embody. The representatives of the European University Institute in Florence drew attention to their expertise in treaty reorganisation and said they were available to continue their work, taking into account the new context offered by the Convention. Other university centres or think tanks also declared their willingness to contribute to this undertaking, particularly with regard to questions of a more institutional nature or relating to European defence. The Chairman nevertheless pointed out that the Convention's financial resources were very limited.

- The participants also raised the matter of how to involve citizens more in the constitutional process now under way. Several supported the idea of holding a Europe-wide referendum to approve the outcome of the Convention or the IGC, or even of distributing a questionnaire in advance to all Europeans on what they expected from the European Union (based on an experiment already conducted in Hungary by ECOSTAT). Several youth groups mentioned their initiatives (for example, AEGEE, "Génération européenne"), in particular the drafting of a manifesto (international students of Political Sciences, Paris), and their desire to increase opportunities for mobility and language training. Another idea put forward was to make provision in the Treaties for systematic participation by civil society in the European decision-making process.
- Several institutional questions were raised, in particular relating to the executive function (relations between the Commission and the Council), the consistency of external action, and the problems of European public finances. Some suggested identifying the Council's legislative function and universalising the codecision procedure.
- The European organisations involved in scientific research drew attention to the important role of research and innovation in European society and its interaction with the industrial world. The intergovernmental research organisations (EIROForum) stressed the importance of a common European vision in this context. The GALILEO programme was a good example of closer collaboration between research organisations (in this case the European Space Agency) and the European Community. The latter could be represented more often, for example by the Commission, in these various organisations. In the case of the ESA, this would no doubt mean that the Treaties would have to include an indication of the Union's competence with regard to space policy. Finally, emphasis was placed on the need for mobility, not only of researchers, but also of staff of European institutions and intergovernmental research organisations.

- Women's organisations (for example, European Women's Lobby, Women citizens of Europe network) stressed the need to raise the profile of the principle of gender equality, particularly by including it in the preamble to the Treaties, or even by adding another Title. There was also a proposal to incorporate in the Charter of Fundamental Rights a general provision on non-discrimination between the sexes which citizens would be able to invoke directly, as in the case of the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of nationality.
5. Following that exchange of views, Mr Amato invited participants to appoint those in the contact group who would take the floor during the Convention meeting on 24 and 25 June. He suggested that participants should confer within the various sub-groups identified above and told them that, like the seven other groups representing civil society, they would have a total of 25 to 30 minutes. Mr Amato also proposed that one organisation from the candidate countries be represented.

The result is that eight people will take the floor, each for around three minutes:

Academic world:

- Mr Jean-Victor Louis (AGORA and European University Institute, Florence)
- Ms Florence Deloche-Gaudez (Political Sciences, Paris)

Think tank :

- Ms Kirsty Hughes (Centre for European Policy Studies / European Policy Institutes Network – CEPS/EPIN)
- Mr Stanley Crossick (European Policy Centre – EPC)

European /Youth movements:

- Ms Pascale Joannin (Robert Schuman Foundation)

Scientific Research:

- Mr Antonio Rodota (European Intergovernmental Research Organisations EIROForum)

Academic women's movements:

- Ms Teresa Freixes (Women Citizens of Europe Network)

Candidate countries

- Mr Karoly Lorant (Institute for Economic Analysis and Informatics, Hungary – ECOSTAT)

CITIZENS AND INSTITUTIONS

Chairman: Jean-Luc Dehaene

Number of organisations registered: 66

Number of participants registered: 94

1. The meeting was chaired by Mr Jean-Luc Dehaene, vice-Chairman of the Convention; 94 participants were registered, representing 66 organisations.
Most of the contributions focussed on institutional questions, or those relating to citizenship and participatory democracy.

2. As regards the institutions, the organisations which took the floor called in particular for:
  - a Constitution for Europe, which would be clear and readable for citizens
  - the Community method to be maintained and a simple and clear decision-making process to be introduced
  - the Council not to be the government of the Union, since it was the institution least capable of taking decisions and was not democratically answerable to any elected European assembly
  - for the government of the Union to be in the hands of the Commission, which alone was capable of representing the common interests of citizens
  - the President of the Commission to be elected by the European Parliament
  - the Union's competence in the area of economic and social policy to be reinforced
  - for the Union to take on the role of co-regulator of the globalisation process
  - the European Constitution to be approved by a European referendum or national referendums (one organisation was opposed).

3. On the question of citizenship and participatory democracy, the organisations in particular asked for the following to be incorporated in the Treaty:
- the right of citizens to be informed about Europe
  - the Charter of fundamental rights
  - the "pursuit of the common good" as one of the Union's basic objectives
  - the principles of sustainable development, which must include the economic and social dimension of the environment
  - regular holding of a "civil dialogue" similar to the Social Dialogue
  - parity democracy
  - the importance of services of general interest for social cohesion and in the interests of European citizens
  - principles of horizontal subsidiarity
  - the right of citizens to participate in all stages of European decision-making and implementation of decisions, particularly via consultation in the context of a real partnership and joint evaluation of the political results achieved
  - the statute of European association
  - recognition of the role of non-profit-making organisations (cooperatives, mutual societies, associations).

There was also a call for religious freedom to be incorporated in the Charter of Fundamental Rights and also to tighten up Article 13 dealing with racism and xenophobia.

4. At the close of the meeting, the following were chosen to speak at the plenary:
- Mr Fernand HERMAN (Federalist Voice)
  - Ms Alison WESTON (JEF – Europe)
  - Ms Charlotte ROFFIAEN (A.C.N. – Forum de la Société civile)
  - Ms Maria MIGUEL SIERRA (European Network Against Racism)
  - Mr Pawel KRZECZUNOWICZ (Polish NGO Office in Brussels).

REGIONS AND LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Chairwoman: Ana Palacio

Number of organisations registered: 18

Number of organisations or local authorities registered: 138

Number of participants registered: 187

The meeting was chaired by Ms Ana PALACIO, member of the Praesidium of the Convention. The first speaker was Mr Eduardo ZAPLANA, first vice-Chairman of the Committee of the Regions. The European organisations representing local and regional authorities which had submitted a contribution to the Forum had the opportunity to present their work at the beginning of the discussions.

A. Proposals on which there was consensus among the organisations

The organisations thanked Ms PALACIO for setting up the contact group and called unanimously for the group to hold regular meetings until the Convention had completed its proceedings. They also asked that the Convention set up a special working group to deal with matters relating to regional and local authorities.

The regional and local governments, having been elected by universal suffrage, pointed out that they were part of the system of government of the Union and were very frequently responsible for implementing Community legislation.

Fundamental rights

1. Incorporate the Charter of Fundamental Rights, and in particular the Preamble thereto, into the Treaty
2. Include regions and local authorities in Article 6 of the TEC
3. Incorporate into the Treaty (in accordance with methods still to be defined) guarantees of local democracy, a common European cultural heritage, in particular by incorporating the Council of Europe's European Charter of Local Self-government, which has already been signed and ratified by all candidate countries and most Member States.

The Union's tasks

1. Draw up a constitutional Treaty which clarifies and specifies the Union's task
2. Among the Union's objectives, special importance to be attached to the task of ensuring economic, social and territorial cohesion.
3. Establish a legal instrument to facilitate cross-border cooperation between territorial authorities within the EU and at its external borders.
4. Treaty to include positive discrimination in favour of the Union's outermost regions.

Instruments

5. All participants call for excessively detailed legislation which then has to be implemented by local and regional authorities to be dropped (for example in Sweden the counties have to implement between 60 and 70% of Community legislation)
6. All participants request that, in line with the current excellent practice in Austria, there should be systematic ex ante consultation very early on in the legislative process, in the spirit of true partnership between the institutions and local and regional authorities. The Treaty should make it compulsory for there to be consultation on all policies with major regional or local effects and on all policies with financial consequences for regions and cities. Moreover, there should be a "consultation code" to guarantee that practices are fair and transparent.

Participants denounced the shortcomings of consultation by means of Green or White Papers and called for the principles of good governance to be written into the Treaty.

Subsidiarity and Competence

7. The words in Article 1 of the TEU, "as closely as possible to the citizen" to be translated into reality;
8. Introduce true subsidiarity, which should recognise the four levels of government in Europe: European, national, regional and local;
9. Amend Article 5 of the TEC so that the role of local and regional authorities is recognised, with due regard for the internal structures of the Member States;
10. Amend Article 10 of the TEC as regards fair cooperation which must also be applied to local and regional authorities;
11. In the absence of a precise list of different types of competence, a system of ex-ante and ex-post checking should be introduced as a top priority, the best guarantee of proper control of subsidiarity being as described in paragraph 15 below;
12. The "principle of relation", a concept of German constitutional law, to be recognised in the Treaty; according to that principle the European legislator should be responsible for the financial consequences of his decisions or give the territorial authorities, when they have to apply the decisions, as is often the case, the means to do so (e.g. the European Council in Lisbon said that each school should have an Internet connection, but the resulting cost has to be borne by local authorities).

Requests relating to the Committee of the Regions

13. Recognition of the CdR as a Union institution (in practice recognition of the right of appeal to the Court in defence of its prerogatives).
14. Adjustment of the balance of the CdR because of the under-representation of the local level in some delegations.

B. Special requests from regions with legislative powers (RPL)

15. Right of individual appeal to the European Court of Justice by RPLs (appeal to check legality)
16. As a minimum, right of appeal via the Committee of the Regions (it should be noted that the European Parliament was given active legal capacity by the Treaty of Nice).
17. Special status for RPLs in the Treaty/or LAMASSOURE proposal that the regions should be "partners of the Union".
18. Participation of regional assemblies in COSAC.
19. Participation of regional ministers in the Council on the basis of Article 203 of the TEC.

C. Nominations for organisations to speak at the plenary:

- Assembly of European Regions
  - Association des Régions Frontalières de l'Europe
  - Conference of Peripheral Maritime Regions of Europe
  - Council of European Municipalities and Regions
  - EUROCITIES

HUMAN RIGHTS

Chairman: António Vitorino

No of participants registered: 94 (64 organisations)

1. The contact group, facilitated by Commissioner Vitorino, covered a wide range of issues, notably human rights aspects of the Union's internal and external policies. Sixty-four organisations (ninety-four persons) registered to participate in the meeting. A number of participating organisations represent a wider international network of organisations.
2. All participants highlight that the European Union is a Union of values and that the protection and promotion of these values have to be put at the centre stage of the Union's policies, both internally and externally. There is also a general acknowledgement that enhanced transparency and accountability of the institutions, more focus on gender equality in the EC Treaty and in the Union's policies and an intensified dialogue with the civil society are of major importance when it comes to putting human rights into practise.
3. As regards human rights within the European Union, a vast majority of speakers calls for incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into the treaties to make it legally binding. Many of them believe that the text of the Charter should be amended to include or strengthen a number of rights, and that the Convention should address this issue. Others mentioned the risk that reopening the Charter might lead to weakening of the text and proposed to provide for a possibility of future review of the text after its incorporation.

4. Cataloguing rights is not sufficient and many speakers agree that concrete protection of rights depends on effective implementation and control mechanisms, as well as mainstreaming human rights into all EU policies. In this context, some call for an extension of the competences of the Court of Justice, notably in the current "third pillar". The Union's accession to the European Convention on Human Rights (as well as to other international human rights instruments, such as the revised European Social Charter) is recommended by a large number of participants.
5. As regards the external dimension, a number of speakers called for an active and consistent human rights policy, based on the principles of universality and indivisibility of fundamental rights. International human rights standards should guide the Union's relations with third countries.

A number of participants feel that due attention should be given to social, economic and cultural rights and that these rights should be strengthened both in the Union's legal framework and in its policies.

DEVELOPMENT

Chairman: Henning Christophersen

Co-Chairs: Ms Anne Van Lancker, Lord Tomlinson, Mr Kimmo Kiljunen

No of participants registered: 42 (29 organisations)

- All the participants welcomed the idea of consulting civil society through contact groups and the plenary session. Some participants mentioned the need to institutionalise the dialogue with civil society, though some warned about the need to avoid this slowing down the decision-making process.
- Need to strengthen the EU's policy and establish a relationship between development and the objectives of the external policy in terms of policy objectives, decision-making process and implementing mechanisms to recognise development policy more clearly as one of the elements of the EU's external policy.
- Need to ensure consistency of other EU policies with its development objectives.
- The Development Council should not, at least at this stage, be abolished.
- The eradication of poverty should be given highest priority in the new Treaty.
- The social aspects should be more strongly emphasised in the external as well as internal dimension of the EU.
- Focus on democracy and respect for human rights should be deeply rooted in EU development policy.
- The European Development Found should be incorporated into the Community Budget and subject to the same procedures as the rest of EU development assistance.
- The Charter of Fundamental Rights should be incorporated into the Treaty.

- All the participants expressed their satisfaction at the candidate countries' participation in the work of the Convention. The candidate countries' presence creates a new situation not only by the fact that they are less developed in terms of income but also in terms of development policy. This will however change over time as pre-accession policy also helps to build up their development policy.
  - Focus on equal treatment and equal opportunities for men and women.
  - The Chairman and Co-Chairs expressed their willingness to continue the dialogue through contributions from contact group members, especially concrete proposals related to the issues raised.

ANNEX VIII*CULTURE

Chairman: Alojz Peterle

Number of organisations registered: 53

Number of participants registered: 71

1. On 12 June Mr Peterle, member of the Praesidium of the European Convention chaired a hearing ("contact group") at the European Parliament in Brussels of civil society organisations engaged in the cultural area. He was assisted by Mr van Mierlo, member and by Ms Birzniece, alternate. Mr van der Linden, member and Ms Palacio, member of the Praesidium also participated in all or part of the hearing. Secretariat support was provided by the Convention secretariat.
2. 53 organisations had registered to take part in this hearing (see attached list of participants). Five discussion topics had been selected to take account of the diversity of governmental and non-governmental organisations attending the hearing:
  - arts and heritage;
  - cultural cooperation;
  - languages and minorities;
  - churches and religious associations;
  - education.
3. In his introduction, the Chairman asked the organisations and NGOs to give their views on the topics and issues appearing in the Laeken declaration and on those tackled during the initial Convention sessions. An exhaustive account of contributions is unnecessary, but the following points may be noted:

- the actions conducted by the Union in the cultural field were deemed generally inadequate. A European action did not jeopardise decisions taken at national level but rather supplemented them. There should be encouragement for actions which would enhance a feeling of European cultural belonging;
- many speakers urged that the Charter of Fundamental Rights be included in the Treaty. Some suggested that it be amended by including a reference to the right to culture or a mention of the spiritual or cultural values which provided the impetus for European integration;
- several speakers wanted the provisions of the Treaty relating to culture (Article 151) to be maintained and made subject to a decision by qualified majority (instead of the current unanimity with a European Parliament codecision procedure). A number of speakers stated that the most important measures adopted by the Union in the field of culture had often had a legal basis other than Article 151, in order, in their view, to get round the unanimity obligation. Some speakers spoke of their support for the Protocol on the system of public broadcasting in the Member States annexed to the Treaties and wanted it to be maintained;
- a number of speakers deplored the fact that insufficient account was taken in the European Treaties of the special nature of cultural property, which could not be regarded in the same way as other goods and should receive or continue to receive special treatment, especially as regards the rules on State aids for the film industry;
- those speaking on behalf of Churches or religious communities expressed their support for declaration No 11 amended to the Final Act of the Amsterdam Treaty on the status of churches and non-confessional organisations. They furthermore considered that the values uniting the European continent and which were to be found in European principles (values such as peace, liberty, human dignity, solidarity and democracy) owed much to the religious and in particular Christian heritage of Europe. This heritage and link should not be overlooked and should appear in European texts. One speaker pointed out, however, that an increasingly large proportion of the population no longer referred to this religious heritage and that if it were mentioned it would create divisions between believers and non-believers;

- several speakers recalled the existence of minority languages or cultures within the European Union. Their place should be recognised and support given for their further development.
4. At the end of the statements and discussions, the Chairman reminded participants that the Convention session on 24 and 25 June would be devoted to hearing representatives of civil society. Organisations engaged in the cultural field would have 25 to 30 minutes to present their views, followed by a discussion of the same length with members of the Convention. The Chairman asked the attending organisations to inform him of the way in which they would be using their speaking time. Following brief consultations, the following arrangements were adopted:
- cultural cooperation, arts and heritage, education: 10 minutes to be shared between Mr von des Gablentz (Europa Nostra) and Ms Chabaud (European Forum for the Arts and Heritage);
  - Churches and religions: 10 minutes, Mr Jenkins (Conference of European Churches);
  - languages and minorities: 5 minutes.

All speakers are invited to take account of the suggestions made by participants on the content of their contributions to the European Convention.

Subject : Note on the plenary session
Brussels, 24 and 25 June 2002 <sup>1</sup>

I. Report by the Chairman on Seville meeting with the European Council

1. The Chairman outlined the main elements of the report given by him to the Seville European Council. These covered the launch of the Convention, its progress to date, and the preliminary conclusions which could be drawn from the work so far. On the last point, the Chairman had reported that there was general agreement that there should be no new transfer of competences to the Community (with the exception of cross-border aspects of Justice and Home Affairs), that there should be a stronger control over the respect for subsidiarity, that both the instruments and language of the Union/Community needed simplifying, that consideration needed to be given to deepening activity in three specific areas (External Relations, Justice and Home Affairs and possibly Economic and Financial affairs) and that democratic legitimacy should be made clearer. A written copy of the Chairman's report was subsequently circulated to Members of the Convention. The Chairman said that his report had been warmly received by Heads of State/Government who had expressed broad support for the objective of simplification, and had stressed the need for the Convention to respect the timetable set.

<sup>1</sup> A verbatim record of the plenary session is to be found on the website www.european-convention.eu.int.

2. In response to two interventions from Members of the Convention, the Chairman agreed that democratic legitimacy within the Union had two sources, the European Parliament and national parliaments. He also confirmed that his report to Seville represented his assessment as Chairman, and did not necessarily represent a view shared by each Member of the Convention.

II. Opening of session devoted to civil society

3. The session devoted to civil society was opened by Vice-Chairman Dehaene as Chairman. He underlined the importance attached by the Convention to the views of civil society. The plenary session was neither the beginning nor the end of a process of consultation which would continue throughout the period of the Convention. He underlined the four building blocks of this process. Firstly, the Forum allowed non-governmental organisations to provide written contributions to the Convention, and a summary of the contributions to date had been circulated to Convention members (CONV 112/02). Secondly, the debates organised at a national level were a vital component of the process; written reports on these debates had been received and circulated. It was important that they should continue. Thirdly, eight contact groups had been established to allow for an exchange of views with specific sectors of civil society. They had also allowed representatives to be designated who would speak on behalf of each sector at the plenary session. The contact groups were complementary to the briefing meetings being organised for civil society by the Economic and Social Committee. Finally the session itself was an opportunity for the Convention as a whole to hear the views of civil society.

Social Sector Contact Group

4. The Chairman of the group (Mr HÄNSCH) said that the meeting of the contact group with organisations from the social sector had underlined a number of points of concern. In particular there had been many calls for incorporation of the Charter on Fundamental Rights into the Treaty, the expectation that the Convention would prepare a draft constitutional treaty, a strong emphasis on the need for wider social and employment issues to be more central objectives of the EU, inclusion of the open coordination method in the Treaty, and a formalisation in the Treaty of the dialogue with civil society. There had also been calls for stronger support for services of general interest.

5. The following five representatives took the floor on behalf of this sector :

Mr ALHADEFF, on behalf of the social platform,

Ms WILKINSON, also on behalf of the social platform,

Ms SUTTON, also representing the social platform,

Ms McPHAIL, representing the European Women's Lobby,

Ms DAVID, representing the European Standing Conference of Cooperatives, Mutual Societies, Associations and Foundations.

The following issues were raised.

6. It was considered important that the Convention should be a fully open process. A legal basis in the Treaty for the dialogue with civil society was requested, though it was made clear that this in no way undermined the normal democratic process, but rather enriched it, since civil society had the potential to contribute a great deal to the development of the Union.
7. Concern was expressed that the European social model was being dismantled. Europe's citizens sought security in its widest sense. All of Europe's internal policies should be at the service of social development. It was proposed that the open method of coordination should be incorporated in the Treaty, but it was underlined that the open character of the process also implied full consultation of NGOs, social partners, and regions/local authorities. A request was made for a specific commitment to combating poverty to be included in the Treaty.
8. There were calls for extending the scope of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, as well as for including it in the Treaty. The accession of the Community to the European Convention on Human Rights was proposed. The importance of ensuring freedom from discrimination for all Europe's citizens was underlined.
9. The developments so far to bring about gender equality were described as erratic. Gender equality should become an explicit objective of the Union, and a new title covering gender equality provisions should be included in the Treaty. Participation and representation in the institutions should be on a gender parity basis.

10. The important role of public and non-profit making companies within the Union was underlined. There should be more explicit recognition in the Treaty of the role of services of general interest, and a derogation for them from competition rules.
11. The Observers representing the social partners were then invited to take the floor.

Mr JACOBS, representing UNICE, welcomed the initiative of convening a session devoted to civil society. He urged the Convention to rethink and clarify the process of consultation with key stakeholders. UNICE was in favour of a constitutional Treaty, supported moves to greater transparency, favoured maintenance of the Community method, a single legal personality and more extensive use of QMV. It did not wish to see a catalogue of competences.

12. Mr GABAGLIO, representing ETUC, urged the Convention to strike a balance between economic and social policy. The Lisbon process was important, and further policy coordination should be encouraged. European citizenship should be strengthened. Consultation of social partners should be formalised. In addition the Union needed to strengthen its role globally in order to support fairer globalisation.
13. Mr CRAVINHO, representing CEEP, supported calls for formal Treaty recognition of services of general interest, given their importance within the European economy. Specifically public costs should be considered compatible with competition rules. The social dialogue should be developed further, and the open method of coordination should be supported.
14. In response to these interventions, a number of members of the Convention expressed support for the general call for greater emphasis on social dialogue, the maintenance of the European social model and the incorporation into the Treaty of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. However a question was raised about the practical implications of incorporating the Charter, and doubts were expressed by one member over the extent to which the organisations which had taken the floor were representative; their source of financing was relevant to this and should be declared.

Environment Contact Group

15. The Group Chairman, Mr KATIFORIS, referred to the importance of environmental issues which had been underlined by the contact group; this reflected an increasing recognition that natural resources were not available in limitless abundance. The following three representatives took the floor on behalf of this sector:

Mr HALLO, representing the European Environment Bureau,

Mr SPOONER, representing the European Agricultural Convention,

Ms de JONCKHEERE, representing the European Landowners Organisation,

16. It was stressed that environmental protection should be a top priority for the Union. The existing Treaty provided a secure basis for environmental policy and should not be changed. But the following issues should be addressed: inclusion of a Treaty article on dialogue with civil society, opening up the work of the Council, inclusion of environmental rights in the Charter, extending the role of QMV and co-decision, replacement of the Euratom Treaty, and the introduction of a Treaty provision on animal welfare.
17. The common agriculture and rural policy (CARP) should be reformed. Decision-making should be made more transparent and accountable. The CAP was much too complex. A new CARP should be decided on the basis of co-decision, and stakeholders should be involved. The basis of the CARP should be widened to include such areas as access to healthy food and clean water, and should be based on the principles of sustainable development. Developing countries should be given greater access to agricultural markets.
18. Furthermore, policies to bridge the gap between urban and rural interests were considered necessary. The right to own property and land should be included in the Charter, which should be incorporated into the Treaty. There should be an extension of co-decision, and subsidiarity should be reinforced and a body to monitor it should be established.
19. In response, support was expressed by one member of the Convention for the call for a more fully integrated agricultural and rural policy. It was also noted that environmental policy was almost invariably a transnational issue.

The Observers representing the Economic and Social Committee were then invited to take the floor.

20. Mr FRERICHS referred to the need for the composition of the ESC, as a representative body, to be clearly redefined and the criteria clarified. The ESC and the Committee of the Regions had complementary roles and should work efficiently together.
21. Mr BRIESCH underlined the essential role of the ESC. It was not part of civil society but achieved full legitimacy through the fact that its members were mandated by their organisations in the Member States. The ESC looked for a constitutional Treaty encompassing the objective of full employment, equality, recognition for the particular role of services of general interest, and an extension of QMV.
22. Ms SIGMUND stressed the importance of social cohesion, which should be included in the Treaty, and of culture as a basis of social activity. Greater emphasis should be placed on developing the social dialogue, though full participation in this should be limited to fully representative organisations. This dialogue should include the subject of subsidiarity.

Academia and Think Tanks sector and Citizens and Institutions sector

23. The discussions concerning these sectors were led by Mr Giuliano AMATO and Mr Jean-Luc DEHAENE respectively. The following had been designated to represent the first sector:

Academic world:

- Mr Jean-Victor LOUIS (AGORA and European University Institute, Florence)
- Ms Florence DELOCHE-GAUDEZ (Political Sciences, Paris)

Think Tanks:

- Ms Kirsty HUGHES (Centre for European Policy Studies / European Policy Institutes Network – CEPS/EPIN)
- Mr Stanley CROSSICK (European Policy Centre – EPC)

European /Youth movements:

- Ms Pascale JOANNIN (Robert Schuman Foundation)

Scientific Research:

- Mr Antonio RODOTA (European Intergovernmental Research Organisations EIROForum and European Research Advisory Board - EURAB)

Women's academic movements:

- Ms Teresa FREIXES (Women Citizens of Europe Network)

Candidate countries:

- Mr Karoly LORANT (Institute for Economic Analysis and Informatics, Hungary – ECOSTAT)

24. The second sector had designated:

- Mr Fernand HERMAN (Federalist Voice)
- Ms Alison WESTON (Young European Federalists)
- Ms Charlotte ROFFIAEN (Active Citizenship Network - Forum of Civil Society)
- Ms Maria MIGUEL SIERRA (European Network Against Racism)
- Mr Pawel KRZECZUNOWICZ (Polish NGO Office in Brussels)

25. The presentations in these two sectors were largely along the same lines as both of them focussed on matters closely related to the Convention's work, concerning the institutions, the future of Europe and participatory democracy.

26. Emphasis was placed on the importance of the Convention's working methods, and particularly the working party structure, and on the time constraints weighing upon the Convention. Questions were asked, and suggestions made, concerning methods and time limits.

27. Majority support was expressed for the Convention's search for daring solutions, and there was consensus on the need to frame a constitutional Treaty or Charter in simple and clear language. Various speakers raised the idea of holding a referendum or referendums to approve the founding text resulting from the Convention.

28. The Academia and Think Tanks sector offered its services to the Convention, and would be available for any specific work or research that might be required of them. Various statements were made in support of that sector's imminent role in the training of young people, who were Europe's driving and initiating force.

29. Several variants were suggested for the architecture of the institutions, including more widespread use of majority voting and the codecision procedure, election of the Commission President by the European Parliament, opening up to the public the debates of a – reformed – Council when acting as legislator, and strengthening of the Commission's executive role and authority to control application of the subsidiarity principle.
30. Agreeing that more action than legislation would be required in the coming period, all speakers wanted to strengthen the Union's political nature, as well as its capacity to act in the field of foreign and defence policy and to take decisions on political issues reflecting European citizens' expectations.
31. The safeguarding and promotion of more participatory democracy featured in many statements, as did the inclusion in the Treaty of the principle of a regular dialogue with civil society, which should in practice lead to consultation of the relevant representative organisations at an early stage in the framing of Union legislation.
32. Various women's and young people's networks also adopted positions on the architecture of the institutions along the lines stated previously.
33. In the ensuing debate speakers expressed broad support for the work of the organisations in these sectors, organisations, highlighting their role, although some found that the organisations involved were insufficiently representative of opinions in Europe, and a number of them were receiving financial support from the institutions.
34. On this matter Mr Söderman, the European Ombudsman, said that since he had taken up his duties (almost 7 years ago) he had received 10 000 applications from citizens on cases of maladministration by Community institutions. He stressed that considerable progress had been made to make European citizenship a reality today. In particular, rules had been drawn up on public access to documents, and the Charter had been adopted. The European Parliament had accordingly adopted a code of good administrative behaviour in September 2001. Yet citizens were not yet very aware of how to ensure respect for their rights. This was due to the fact that there was little information on this in the Treaty. He suggested that the Treaty include a Chapter on citizens' (judicial and non-judicial) means of redress in cases where their rights (including their fundamental rights) were not respected. That chapter would then also contain provisions on possible means available before national courts, the Court of Justice's constitutional role, the right to petition the European Parliament and the right to contact a national ombudsman or the European Ombudsman. He suggested that the latter be enabled to seize the Court of Justice if he considered that a fundamental right had been violated.

***

The session on 25 June 2002 was opened by the Chairman, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, who then passed the chair to Mr Jean-Luc Dehaene.

Regional and Local Authorities sector

35. The discussions concerning this sector were led by Ms Ana PALACIO.

The first speakers were the Observers from the Committee of the Regions, namely:

Mr Eduardo ZAPLANA, Vice-Chairman of the Committee of the Regions, President of the Region of Valencia

Mr Jos CHABERT, former Chairman of the Committee of the Regions

Mr Patrick DEWAELE, Minister-President of the Flemish Region

Mr Manfred DAMMEYER, Member of the Nordrhein-Westfalen State Parliament

Mr Claude du GRANRUT, Regional Councillor (Picardie)

Mr Claudio MARTINI, President of the Tuscany Region.

36. The following were subsequently designated as speakers:

– Dr Heinrich HOFFSCHULTE, First Vice-President of the Council of European Municipalities and Regions

– Mr Anders GUSTAV, Member of the Bureau of the Conference of Peripheral Maritime Regions of Europe;

– Mr Lambert VAN NISTELROOIJ, Vice-Chairman of the Assembly of European Regions;

– Ms Eva-Riitta SIITONEN, President of EUROCITIES;

– Mr Jens GABBE, Secretary-General of the Association of European Border Regions;

– Mr Manfred DÖRLER, President of the Voralberg Parliament, for the Conference of Legislative Assemblies of the Regions of Europe (CALRE).

37. Both the Observers and the representatives of the organisations highlighted the special nature of local and regional entities as citizens' elected representatives, and called for respect for their areas of competence and their tasks, which consisted largely in implementing Union legislation. It was further emphasised that Europe was being governed at four levels: local, regional, national and European.
38. The Observers said that the Committee of the Regions ought to become a Union institution and have the right to bring actions before the Court of Justice of the European Communities. They wanted the areas in which consultation of the Committee of the Regions was mandatory to be extended and the Committee's opinions to be given greater importance by obliging the institutions to give reasons where they disagreed with those opinions.
39. All speakers representing the sector underlined the need to bolster the Union's institutions, calling for a constitutional Treaty and stating their commitment to policies with a strong territorial impact, including cross-border policies, which they felt should not be re-nationalised.
40. There were also calls to make Union legislation less detailed and to associate territorial entities, which were most frequently required to implement that legislation, closely at an early stage of legislative drafting. All manifested their commitment to strict control of the subsidiarity principle, to be understood first and foremost as a principle of closeness to citizens. Here, it was proposed that the Treaty include the "principle of connexity" whereby the legislator should assume the financial consequences of its decisions or give territorial entities, when they had to apply the decisions, the means to do so.
41. A number of representatives of regions with legislative competence called for the right of individual referral to the Court of Justice of the European Communities, greater presence of regional ministers in the Council (Art. 203 TEC) and participation by their regional assemblies in the COSAC. Lastly, several requests were made for a special session of the Convention to be devoted to the role of regional and local entities.

Human Rights sector

42. This sector, headed by Mr António VITORINO, had chosen the following representatives;
- Mr Dick OOSTING (Amnesty International);
  - Ms Laëtitia SEDOU (OMTC – World Organisation Against Torture-Europe);
  - Ms Sophie SPILIOTOPOULOS (Association of Women of Southern Europe and EWLA).
43. Here, statements made suggested in particular that it was not enough to protect human rights by sound texts (such as the Charter or the ECHR), but that this also required the proper functioning of the institutions (more transparency, notably on internal matters and accountability), effective control by parliaments (national and European) and by the Ombudsman, respect for the principle of gender equality and greater involvement of civil society. Some statements also emphasised that the Union ought to make human rights the key component of all its policies. It was suggested that "human rights" be replaced by "rights of the individual".
44. Respect for human rights by the Union in the Justice and Home Affairs sector was highlighted. The criticism was made that Union activity in this sector was not sufficiently transparent and that control by the Court of Justice was incomplete.
45. By and large, this sector's representatives suggested that the new Treaty (particularly its preamble) incorporate the Charter of Fundamental Rights. Some proposed a review of the Charter's provisions, in particular those that were less protective of the acquis communautaire, whilst others felt that in the present circumstances it was more appropriate not to reopen the discussion on all the Charter's provisions, but to consider only technical adaptations.
46. It was further stressed that incorporation of the Charter could not be viewed as an alternative to the Union's accession to the European Convention on Human Rights, the benefits of which were underscored. Reference was made here to explicit recognition of the Union's legal personality. A further consequence of the Charter's incorporation into the Treaty was that Member States would be required to comply with its provisions when implementing Community law.

47. Mr Söderman, the European Ombudsman, stated that he had tried to encourage the institutions to apply the Charter since its adoption. He had done so in particular in the following areas: right to freedom of expression for Union officials, right to paternity leave, non-discrimination on grounds of age in recruitment matters, no indirect discrimination concerning women, secondment of national officials, right to good administration by the Institutions.

Development sector

48. This sector, headed by Mr CHRISTOPHERSEN, had chosen the following representatives:
- Mr Simon STOCKER (Eurostep);
  - Ms Claire GODIN (Equilibres et Populations);
  - Ms Meral GEZGIN ERIS (Economic Development Foundation).
49. It was proposed that a legal basis be included in the Treaty which would allow for more vigorous action and to link the Union's internal policy more closely to its external development policy. The principles of sustainable development and adequate social protection should be incorporated into the Treaty.
50. Eradication of poverty should also be made a component of the Union's external policy. The point was made that 20% of the world's population owned 86% of the world's wealth whereas 20% of the poorest countries owned only 1,4% of it.
51. At present, development matters were covered by complementary competences. It was emphasised that a clearer definition of the Member States' and the Union's competences would make the Union's development policy more effective and that greater transparency of the institutions was needed.
52. The principle of gender equality should be guaranteed in development programmes (here, a practical guide could be drawn up on how to mainstream the principle of gender equality in development policy).
53. It was considered essential to provide for more programmes on education in third-world countries. It was also mentioned that undertakings based in the EU should be prohibited from becoming involved in activities where there was abuse of child labour in developing countries.

Cultural sector

54. For this sector, headed by Mr Aloiz PETERLE, the following representatives were selected:
- for cultural cooperation, art and heritage and education: Mr von der GABLENTZ (Europa Nostra) and Ms CHABAUD (European Forum for the Arts and Heritage);
  - for churches, religion and beliefs: Mr JENKINS (Conference of European Churches);
  - For languages and minorities: Mr BREZIGAR (European Bureau for Lesser-Used Languages).
55. It was proposed that the Treaty should mention the fundamental values which form the common basis of our societies and which should contain references in particular to: human dignity, the promotion of peace and reconciliation, freedom and justice, solidarity and sustainable development, tolerance, democracy, human rights, the rule of law, respect for minorities and cultural diversity. The Union should, moreover, strengthen its capabilities and resources in the area of conflict prevention in the world and as regards the peaceful settlement of conflicts.
56. The defence of fundamental values, human dignity and cultural diversity are at the heart of European integration. It was suggested that a People's Europe could be constructed only if Europe plays a role in culture and education. For enlargement to succeed, the citizens of the candidate countries must feel that they belong to the Union, and culture is the means to achieve this.
57. It was suggested that Article 151 EC should be amended to provide for qualified majority voting rather than unanimity as at present, and that Articles 149 and 150 of the EC Treaty should be merged.
58. Furthermore, the wish was expressed that the principle of cultural diversity should figure explicitly in the Treaty and that national public policies on culture should be regarded as forming part of services of general interest. To this end, Article 87 (State aids) and Article 133 (common commercial policy) of the EC Treaty should take account of the specific nature of cultural and educational activities. The latter cannot reasonably be viewed solely from a commercial perspective or a competition standpoint.

59. It was also proposed that the Protocol annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam on Public Service Broadcasting in the Member States should be incorporated into the text of the Treaty, inasmuch as pluralism of information and media should be listed among the common fundamental values of the Union, in the same way as cultural diversity.
60. Mr Dehaene, Vice-Chairman, closed the debates by stating that the proceedings had been a milestone in a long-term process. He indicated that the dialogue with civil society would be pursued, that the forum website would continue and remain open to the contribution that civil society might wish to make to the work of the Convention. He also mentioned the importance of the debates at national level. Lastly, speaking on behalf of the Praesidium, he announced that the latter would take other initiatives aimed at pursuing the dialogue with civil society, which he regarded as highly enriching, above all for the Convention.
61. Closing the session, the Chairman underlined the importance of this debate and congratulated all the participants. He then provided some information on the organisation of the Youth Convention. He emphasised the importance of the latter for a Europe orientated towards the future in an ever-changing world.

PRESIDENCE DE Mr GISCARD D'ESTAING(La réunion est ouverte à 14.57 h)*

Le Président.- Notre session d'aujourd'hui est essentiellement dédiée à l'audition de la société civile. Ceci explique d'ailleurs son organisation particulière : d'une part, le fait que nous siégeons dans ce grand hémicycle afin que chacune et chacun puisse y prendre place, et d'autre part le fait que les conventionnels sont de part et d'autre, ce qui n'est pas leur situation habituelle tandis que les représentants de la société civile occupent le centre de l'hémicycle.

Notre ordre du jour prévoit que je vous informe tout d'abord en quelques mots, du rapport que j'ai présenté au Conseil européen de Séville. La présentation de ce rapport est une des obligations qui résultent de la déclaration de Laeken. Il y est décrit comme étant un rapport oral. Il ne fait donc pas l'objet d'une discussion préalable. Par contre, une fois qu'il est prononcé, étant donné le grand nombre de participants, il acquiert un caractère public. Par conséquent, il sera adressé personnellement, à chacun des membres de la convention, dans un délai de vingt-quatre heures. Il sera donc disponible pour la séance de demain.

FR

Le Président. – Je vais vous faire un bref compte-rendu de ce que j'ai dit d'une part, et des réactions du Conseil d'autre part.

Mon compte-rendu a porté sur trois points: le démarrage de la convention, le déroulement de ses travaux et les premières orientations qu'on peut en tirer. Sur le démarrage de convention, ce n'est pas la peine d'y revenir puisque vous avez participé à ce démarrage. Je dirais simplement que j'ai souligné le fait que les Etats Membres et les pays candidats participent à ces travaux sur un pied d'égalité et que c'est actuellement la seule enceinte européenne où cette situation s'observe. J'ai indiqué d'autre part que les contributions des conventionnels des pays membres et des pays candidats sont d'une grande qualité. C'était pour moi l'occasion de vous en remercier.

J'ai noté qu'il semblait qu'un esprit de la Convention commençait à se créer : via un dialogue interne dans la convention, et parfois via des échanges d'arguments en vue d'aboutir à des positions plus proches. J'ai rappelé que la composition de la Convention souligne le caractère binaire de l'Union Européenne, avec ses deux sources de légitimité : la source historico-identitaire, avec les gouvernements et les parlements nationaux et la source euro-continentale avec le Parlement européen et les Institutions européennes. J'ai rappelé que nous avons décidé de procéder en trois phases: phase d'écoute, phase d'étude et phase de recommandations et de propositions. J'ai également souligné que les sessions d'aujourd'hui et de demain, consacrées à l'écoute de la société civile et préparées par le vice-président Monsieur Jean-Luc Dehaene, allaient clôturer cette phase d'écoute. J'ai donné des indications sur nos cinq sessions et la création de nos groupes de travail.

En ce qui concerne les premiers enseignements qu'ont apporté nos débats, j'ai retenu les points suivants: tout d'abord, la nécessité d'accroître la légitimité de l'Union Européenne, c'est-à-dire donner une définition précise des compétences de l'Union, qui puisse être connue de tous, en précisant qu'il n'y avait pas eu à la Convention de demande de compétences nouvelles dans la vie intérieure des Etats, à l'exception de la compétence sur l'action judiciaire et policière transfrontalière. J'ai noté que le consensus paraissait marquer une préférence pour affirmer que les compétences de l'Union sont exclusivement celles qui résultent des traités, toutes les autres restant de la compétence des Etats Membres. J'ai fait remarquer au Conseil Européen que ceci supposait une réécriture des articles des Traités qui ne définissent pas le caractère européen de la compétence, ou qui en tout cas, le définissent en des termes trop imprécis. J'ai souligné qu'il existait une demande forte, j'ai même dit qu'elle était quasi unanime, pour la mise en place d'un mécanisme efficace et transparent, qu'il soit politique ou juridictionnel, en vue d'assurer le respect du principe de subsidiarité. Et enfin, j'ai fait remarquer que, compte tenu de l'évolution du monde, il paraissait exister un consensus afin de ménager, à l'avenir, une possibilité d'évolution des compétences, à condition que ces modifications fassent l'objet d'une procédure transparente et démocratique. J'ai indiqué que les seuls domaines où s'exprimaient une demande supplémentaire, une demande "pour plus d'Europe", pour utiliser l'expression de la présidence espagnole, étaient les trois domaines suivants: le renforcement de la politique extérieure et la présence internationale de l'Union, le renforcement de l'action transfrontalière dans le domaine de la sécurité et de la justice et de la lutte contre la criminalité organisée et l'immigration illégale, et enfin une meilleure coordination en matière économique et financière. J'ai signalé que cette dernière émanait d'un certain nombre de conventionnel.

Pour ce qui est de la simplification, j'ai indiqué que la demande portait sur une réduction significative du nombre des procédures de décision et pour ce qui est de la législation communautaire, la demande portait sur la généralisation de la procédure de codécision et du vote à la majorité qualifiée. Et enfin, et j'espère que nous en donnerons un exemple ici-même cet après-midi et demain, j'ai plaidé pour la simplification du langage afin de le rendre compréhensible à nos concitoyens, en remplaçant, par exemple, les expressions de directive et de règlement par loi-cadre et loi européenne. J'ai également parlé de l'établissement de bases juridiques pour la simplification nécessaire des traités. Le dernier point que j'ai évoqué est la légitimité démocratique. En effet, il existe une demande de davantage d'efficacité et de démocratie dans la prise de décisions. Je rappelais que contrairement à des affirmations rapides et parfois injustes, la légitimité démocratique existe. Elle existe à la fois dans le rôle des parlements nationaux dans l'exercice de leur pouvoir par rapport à leur gouvernement représenté au Conseil et grâce à l'action du Parlement Européen, qui joue un rôle essentiel dans la définition de la législation européenne. Mais j'ai indiqué que cette légitimité démocratique est insuffisamment perçue ou mal perçue par l'opinion européenne.

Ce sont là les éléments que j'ai indiqués en répondant à deux critiques que nous avons entendu s'exprimer, dans notre enceinte ou à l'extérieur de celle-ci, et que j'ai tenu à mentionner. La première critique est de ne pas aller plus vite. J'ai indiqué, avec l'approbation du Conseil européen, que nous refusons de sacrifier la phase d'écoute, et que si nous n'allions pas plus vite dans la formulation de certaines positions, c'était pour attendre d'avoir entendu les membres de la société civile. La deuxième critique est le fait de ne pas prendre position sur les contributions qui nous sont adressées. Certaines d'entre elles ont attiré, à juste titre, l'attention médiatique. J'ai rappelé que ces contributions nous sont précieuses et j'ai d'ailleurs remercié leur auteurs, notamment le Parlement Européen, la Commission Européenne et certains Etats ou groupes d'Etats membres. Mais j'ai précisé que notre mission à la Convention est différente. Elle n'est pas de réagir au jour le jour sur les contributions qui nous sont adressées mais de parvenir à une vue globale pour aboutir à une proposition globale. Et j'ai indiqué que le fait qu'il y ait des contributions nombreuses et importantes montre que l'onde de rénovation engendrée par la mise en place de la convention se propage désormais dans l'ensemble du dispositif européen, ce qui est une excellente chose. Enfin j'ai conclu en essayant de répondre à la question suivante : "Pourrions-nous parvenir à une proposition globale et équilibrée?" Et la réponse a été de dire qu'il est encore trop tôt pour l'affirmer, mais que la convention avance dans le chemin qu'elle s'est tracé en vue de l'élaboration d'un traité constitutionnel.

Voilà donc le compte-rendu que j'ai présenté à Séville, au Conseil Européen. Ce n'est pas à moi de dire comment il a été accueilli. Cette tâche revient naturellement aux Membres du Conseil. J'ai ressenti, personnellement, l'expression d'une approbation forte et chaleureuse. On la retrouve d'ailleurs dans les conclusions de la Présidence où il est dit que le Conseil européen appuie la démarche générale suivie par la convention et qu'il souhaite qu'elle poursuive sur cette voie et aboutisse, dans les délais prévus, à un résultat positif, dans la perspective de la conférence intergouvernementale décidée à Laeken. Je souligne les trois derniers mots "en vue de la révision des traités". Ce point est très important puisqu'il s'agit d'une proposition dont l'utilité est qu'elle puisse s'inscrire dans cette perspective de révision des traités. Le texte est un texte de style diplomatique. C'est pourquoi, j'ai ajouté l'ambiance du Conseil Européen, et notamment cette approbation que j'ai ressentie comme forte et chaleureuse.

Les Membres du Conseil européen rendront compte eux-mêmes de leurs interventions. La majorité d'entre eux est intervenue. Ils ont insisté sur trois points. Tout d'abord, ils souhaitent une participation accrue des représentants nommés par les gouvernements aux travaux de la convention. Ensuite, ils appuient très fortement le travail de simplification, à la fois des textes et des instruments, engagée par la convention. En enfin, ils insistent sur le respect du calendrier. Concernant le respect du calendrier, je leur ai indiqué que nous ferions tout notre possible pour respecter celui qui nous avait été fixé mais que néanmoins, nous ne le ferions pas en sacrifiant la qualité de nos travaux. Ainsi, ce serait au début de l'année deux mille trois, en phase rédactionnelle des textes, que nous serions à même de les informer plus complètement des modalités et des délais d'achèvement complet de nos travaux.

Voilà donc, Mesdames et Messieurs les Conventionnels, le compte-rendu de ce que j'ai indiqué au Conseil Européen et la réaction qui l'a suivi. S'il y a des questions brèves sur ce sujet, je me tiens à la disposition de ceux qui lèveraient leur carton pour leur répondre. Je vous demanderai toutefois de ne pas être trop nombreux parce que nous ne voulons pas retarder la phase de l'audition.

Voggenhuber (PE). - Herr Präsident! Ich entnehme Ihrer schriftlichen Unterlage und auch Ihrer Aussage, dass Sie vor allem die historische Legitimation durch nationale Parlamente betont haben. Davon abgesehen, dass im Konvent eine solche historische Legitimation gar nicht zur Sprache kam, im Gegenteil, das Demokratiedefizit massiv angesprochen wurde, möchte ich Sie fragen, ob Sie dabei bedacht haben, dass die nationalen Parlamente ihre Kontrolle und Legitimation gar nicht mehr ausüben können, weil der Rat geheim tagt, weil sie in der Praxis völlig überfordert sind, beispielsweise eine Europol zu kontrollieren, weil Mehrheitsentscheidungen des Rates diese Parlamente präjudizieren und die mittelbare Legitimationskette längst durchbrochen haben und dass daher diese historische Legitimation in keiner Weise mehr für einen angemessenen demokratischen Standard sorgt?

Di Rupo (Parl.-BE). – J'ai trouvé votre exposé extrêmement intéressant, voire brillant. Mais comme vous nous demandez notre avis, nous ne sommes bien entendu pas engagés par vos propos. Ceux-ci sont bien ceux du Président de la Convention, car ne serait-ce que sur les compétences, la manière avec laquelle les choses ont été exprimées mériterait certainement de longs débats qu'il n'est pas question de mener pour l'heure. Vous nous avez donc fait part de votre compte-rendu au Conseil, du climat, ce qui n'est jamais sans intérêt ainsi que des réactions formelles. Je voulais juste dire que le fait que nous ne réagissions pas aujourd'hui dans le détail sur tel ou tel point, en particulier dans le domaine des compétences, ne nous empêchait pas d'y revenir dans le futur. Je pense que c'était implicite. Toutefois, comme je suis d'un style plutôt lent et que j'aime les choses explicites, je me suis autorisé à vous poser cette question. J'espère que vous ne l'avez pas trouvée outreucidante, Monsieur le Président.

FR

Le Président. – Tout d'abord, Monsieur Voggenhuber, à propos de la légitimité, ou plutôt du rôle du Parlement dans la légitimité démocratique, j'ai indiqué la chose suivante. Je cite mon texte, puisque je ne suis pas allé plus loin que cela. Les deux sources de légitimité démocratique de l'Union, c'est-à-dire les Parlements nationaux et le Parlement Européen, doivent être vécues comme complémentaires et non comme antagonistes, ce qui est souvent, ou ce qui a été parfois, la tendance. Je dis également qu'une initiative forte devra être prise afin de rapprocher ces deux sources de légitimité démocratique de l'Union en leur donnant en même temps une plus grande lisibilité dans l'opinion publique. J'indique que lorsque la Convention aura progressé sur ce point, je ferai part au Conseil Européen de ses réflexions. La Convention progressera notamment grâce aux travaux du groupe de travail, présidé par Madame Stewart, qui désormais est en charge d'approfondir vos réflexions sur cette question.

Ensuite, la remarque de Monsieur Di Rupo est tout à fait judicieuse mais il n'y a pas d'ambiguïté. Le texte de Laeken dit que le Président de la Convention présente un compte-rendu. Il s'agit donc d'un compte-rendu présenté par lui-même, qui a un caractère oral et qui donc n'a pas valeur contraignante en ce qui concerne les travaux ultérieurs de la convention. Et donc, à cet égard, vous pourrez, comme vous le souhaitez, continuer à apporter votre contribution, notamment en matière de compétences, sujet important et sensible.

Nous pouvons maintenant passer au deuxième point de notre ordre du jour, à savoir l'écoute de la société civile. Je voudrais simplement, avant de transmettre la présidence à Monsieur Jean-Luc Dehaene, dire aux représentants de la société civile que nous attachons, et que personnellement j'attache, la plus grande importance à leur contribution. Nous l'avons d'ailleurs prouvé en refusant de nous laisser entraîner dans une démarche précipitée concernant les orientations de notre Convention. Nous avons d'abord voulu écouter les représentants de la société civile. Nous nous sommes efforcés d'apporter le plus grand soin possible dans le travail de préparation. A cet effet, je remercie les membres du Praesidium et les Conventionnels eux-mêmes qui ont participé à cette préparation. Dans ce débat, il n'y aura que deux règles. La première est la liberté d'expression. Et la seconde est le respect des autres. La première de ces règles, est donc la liberté d'expression. Cela signifie que chacun s'exprimera comme il l'entendra. Il n'y a eu, il n'y a et il n'y aura aucune censure sur le contenu des propos tenus ici. Chacun peut ressentir ou avoir le besoin d'exprimer des convictions, des jugements, des préférences qui sont les siens. La seule limite est apportée par le deuxième principe, à savoir le respect des autres, qui a lui même une double forme. D'abord, une attitude de tolérance vis-à-vis des points de vue ou des propositions qui peuvent être aimés par les uns et pas par les autres, et qui ne correspondent pas à sa propre conviction. Et ensuite le respect très scrupuleux des temps de parole, puisque nous avons huit heures de débat pour huit groupes de sujets, et que tout débordement des temps de parole, notamment au début, empièterait sur le temps qui reste pour les derniers groupes de contact ou pour les derniers sujets. Ceci mutilerait ou amputerait les travaux d'audition de la société civile. Ce n'est pas pour nous un exercice de style, c'est un enrichissement de la Convention, à un stade où elle n'a pas encore arrêté ses orientations et ses propositions et où elle veut écouter avec soin les représentantes et les représentants de la société civile.

Dehaene (Vice-Président). – Monsieur le Président, je voudrais souligner qu'effectivement, cette session d'écoute avec la société civile fait partie intégrante des travaux de la Convention et que, d'ailleurs, la déclaration de Laeken et par conséquent, le Conseil Européen nous a donné comme mission d'être à l'écoute de la société civile. Je pense pouvoir affirmer aussi que, si nous voulons que les résultats de la Convention soient portés par la société civile, celle-ci doit être associée de fort près aux travaux de la Convention.

Tout d'abord, je voudrais souligner que cette session n'est ni le début du forum de la société civile ni sa fin, car je pense qu'il est effectivement important que nous trouvions les moyens pour que, tout au long de la Convention, la société civile puisse régulièrement se faire entendre et réagir par rapport à l'avancée de nos travaux. Par ailleurs, la société civile a déjà eu l'occasion d'apporter sa contribution à la Convention. Les nombreuses interventions au niveau du web le prouvent. Selon moi, le forum a pris quatre dimensions : le forum sur internet, les débats nationaux, les divers groupes d'écoute avec les ONG et enfin la séance d'aujourd'hui. Tout d'abord, en ce qui concerne le forum sur le net, toutes les organisations ont reçu l'occasion, ou ont l'occasion, d'apporter des contributions, de réagir. Nous avons essayé de regrouper ces organisations en quatre groupes. Pour le moment, il y a dix-sept organisations qui se sont inscrites comme étant politiques ou de collectivité publique, seize comme groupe à caractère socio-économique, vingt-huit comme appartenant au monde académique et aux cercles de réflexion et quatre-vingt dix-neuf comme appartenant à la société civile, aux ONG ou autres. Le secrétariat s'est efforcé de synthétiser les contributions des différentes ONG, même si ce fut loin d'être aisé. Dans le cadre du forum, on compte, pour l'instant cent-soixante contributions provenant de diverses organisations. Lors du travail de synthèse, nous avons dû nous en tenir aux grandes lignes. Néanmoins, il est clair que chaque membre de la Convention peut prendre connaissance de l'ensemble des contributions en consultant le forum. Le secrétariat a dégagé quatre thèmes généraux ressortant des contributions au forum. Premièrement, il s'agit du souhait d'une Europe plus proche du citoyen. On entend par là une Union qui est à l'écoute, mais aussi des décisions qui sont prises au niveau approprié. On souligne par là, comme d'ailleurs à la Convention, le principe de subsidiarité. Deuxièmement, il s'agit du renforcement du rôle de la société civile et sa reconnaissance dans les Traités. Troisièmement, il s'agit de l'importance des droits fondamentaux et le souhait qu'ils soient intégrés dans les Traités et même étendus. Quatrièmement, il s'agit de l'importance d'un processus de décision efficace. On entend par là qu'à l'avenir, le vote à la majorité qualifiée et la codécision soient appliqués dans de plus nombreux cas. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, il est impossible de donner ici un résumé de toutes les contributions. Je recommande dès lors de lire attentivement l'aperçu donné par le secrétariat, et surtout de consulter les contributions elles-mêmes.

Ensuite, il faut parler de la deuxième voie que nous avons suivie, à savoir celle des débats nationaux. Les débats nationaux sont vitaux. Nous l'avons souligné en Convention à plusieurs reprises. Et il existe le danger que la convention ne soit à l'écoute que d'ONG organisées au niveau européen. C'est fort important, mais je pense qu'il faut que nous décentralisons et que nous ayons également des contacts avec les ONG au niveau national. A cet effet, nous avons demandé aux divers membres de la convention de nous donner un aperçu de ce qui s'organise au niveau national. D'ailleurs, vous avez reçu les vingt-deux contributions que nous avons reçues et qui vous donneront un aperçu de l'organisation des débats nationaux. Vous pouvez également en prendre connaissance sur le web. Je pense qu'il est intéressant aussi de lire cet aperçu. En effet, il peut donner des idées sur la manière d'organiser et d'alimenter le débat national. Il va de soi que nous demandons que ces débats nationaux continuent dans les semaines à venir. Nous sommes également prêts, à partir de la convention, du secrétariat, du praesidium et des membres, à participer à ces forums nationaux.

La troisième voie suivie est celle des contacts avec les ONG européennes, et là aussi vous savez que nous avons, avec la participation du secrétariat du Comité économique et social, déjà organisé deux réunions où l'ensemble des ONG ont pu s'exprimer, mais aussi rencontrer des membres de la convention pour s'entretenir des thèmes dont nous discutons ici. Mais avant d'en venir à cela, je voudrais également souligner que nous avons des observateurs provenant du Comité des Régions, du Comité économique et social et du monde des partenaires sociaux qui participeront aux débats d'aujourd'hui. Ils représentent des parties importantes de la société civile. Non seulement ils participent à la Convention en tant qu'observateur, mais ils se chargent également d'assurer un feed-back des travaux de la Convention auprès de leurs organisations. Nous espérons qu'ils continueront à le faire durant l'ensemble de la Convention. Avec l'aide du Comité économique et social, nous continuerons à avoir des réunions, en suivant un rythme plus ou moins mensuel, où l'ensemble des ONG seront invitées et pourront rencontrer des membres du praesidium, échanger des opinions ainsi que réagir aux propositions qui seront faites par la Convention, une fois la phase d'écoute terminée.

Pour la réunion d'aujourd'hui, nous avons organisé des groupes de contact, huit en tout, qui permettra à l'ensemble des ONG de s'exprimer. Chacun de ces groupes de contact, a fait une synthèse qui a été mise à votre disposition, de telle sorte que vous avez également une vue générale de ce qui s'est dit lors des différents débats. Environ quatre cents organisations y ont participé. Cela représente plus de six cents participants. Un grand nombre de ces organisations correspond d'ailleurs à un réseau encore plus large et chacune d'elle représente aussi plusieurs ONG nationales. Ces réunions ont également permis de désigner les portes-parole qui interviendront aujourd'hui et référeront de ce qui s'est dit dans les différents groupes de contact. Je vous rappelle que nous poursuivrons les travaux et que, dès mercredi prochain, une réunion est prévue, où nous pourrions évaluer les débats d'aujourd'hui. Monsieur Vitorino participera également au débat dans le prolongement de la dernière session dont un des thèmes était le troisième pilier. Voilà où nous en sommes à ce stade et voilà la façon dont le forum de la société civile a été organisé. Je répète que ceci n'est pas un point final du forum de la société civile. L'effort doit se poursuivre. Nous le poursuivrons et nous espérons qu'il se poursuivra aussi bien au niveau national qu'au niveau européen avec les membres de la convention. J'en viens alors au déroulement de la session d'aujourd'hui. Nous avons regroupé les interventions par groupe de contact. Nous souhaitons également donner la parole aux observateurs dans le prolongement du groupe de contact avec lequel ils ont le plus de liens. Nous prévoyons également un moment où les membres de la Convention pourront intervenir dans le débat, après chacun des huit groupes qui se sont réunis avant la Convention. Le membre du Praesidium, qui a présidé à ces débats, ouvrira chaque partie, après quoi nous donnerons la parole aux orateurs désignés. Nous avons prévu un même laps de temps pour chacun des groupes. Ce sont les groupes qui ont désigné leur porte-parole. Le résultat est que normalement, il y aura un temps de parole plus long que prévu si un groupe n'a désigné, par exemple, que trois intervenants au lieu de huit. Ces choix ont été fait par les groupe, en connaissance de cause puisque nous avons défini l'organisation des débats. A l'instar du Président, je tiens à souligner que, dans un souci de respect de chacun, nous devons strictement nous limiter au temps de parole imparti. Vous avez reçu l'ordre du jour. Il prévoit que nous commençons par le groupe de contact « secteur social ». Je donnerai donc immédiatement la parole à Monsieur Klaus Hänsch qui va présider le groupe. Après quoi, prendront successivement la parole Monsieur Alhadeff , Madame Wilkinson, Madame Sutton, Madame Mc Phail et Madame David en qualité de portes-parole désignés par ce groupe de contact. Je donne sans plus attendre la parole à Monsieur Klaus Hänsch.

Hänsch (PE). - Herr Präsident, Herr Vorsitzender! Die Nichtregierungsorganisationen aus dem sozialen Sektor haben sich am 13. Juni getroffen, um die heutige Sitzung vorzubereiten. Wir hatten einen sehr intensiven und informativen Dialog. Ungefähr 30 Teilnehmer an dem Vorbereitungstreffen haben sich an diesem Dialog beteiligt, und was wir heute hören werden, kann natürlich nur ein Ausschnitt aus dem sein, was die Kontaktgruppe am 13. Juni diskutiert hat, ein Ausschnitt aus der Vielfalt der verschiedenen Positionen und Meinungen. Aber wir glauben, dass das ein repräsentativer Ausschnitt sein wird. Wir haben uns einvernehmlich auf die Sprecher geeinigt, die Sie jetzt gleich aus der Kontaktgruppe "Sozialer Sektor" hören werden.

Es steht mir nicht zu, Schlussfolgerungen zu ziehen. Aber lassen Sie mich doch ein paar Hauptelemente aus der Diskussion am 13. Juni nennen. Das erste und einvernehmliche war, dass alle die Integration der Charta der Europäischen Grundrechte als verbindliches Recht in den neuen Vertrag gefordert haben. Das zweite war eine klare Forderung nach dem Entwurf eines Verfassungsvertrages. Die dritte Grundlinie, die in der Diskussion erkennbar war: der Wunsch und die Forderung nach einer stärkeren Betonung der Sozial- und Beschäftigungspolitik in den Zielen der Europäischen Union und eine Einbindung der Sozial- und Beschäftigungspolitik über den Lissabon Prozess in den neuen europäischen Verfassungsvertrag.

Einvernehmlich war auch die Forderung nach einer Verbesserung und Vereinfachung der Entscheidungsverfahren, insbesondere im sozialen Bereich, schließlich die Aufnahme des Prinzips der offenen Koordinierung in den Vertrag und letztlich die vertragliche Absicherung des Dialogs und der Kooperation der Europäischen Union mit der Zivilgesellschaft.

Wir haben uns geeinigt, dass durch Redner folgende Fragen vertreten werden: erstens, die Fragen, die mit der Rolle der Dienste von allgemeinem Interesse in der künftigen Politik der Europäischen Union zusammenhängen, zweitens, die Probleme der Gleichberechtigung von Männern und Frauen, drittens, die soziale Dimension der Europäischen Union, die hier durch die soziale Plattform dargestellt und diskutiert wird.

Es gab ein klares erkennbares Drängen darauf, dass der Dialog zwischen dem Konvent und den Nichtregierungsorganisationen im sozialen Sektor mit der heutigen Veranstaltung nicht beendet ist, sondern dass dieser Kontakt und dieser Dialog weitergeht. Wir brauchen ihn beide, die sozialen Organisationen und der Konvent!

Alhadeff (NGO-SOC). – Mr President, I congratulate the Convention in taking this initiative of inviting representatives of civil society to address you about their concerns over the future of Europe.

The Social Platform is here with three representatives, and we have divided our speaking time between us. The Platform brings together 38 networks and federations of NGOs, active in the social sector at European level. Our members represent over 1,800 individual organisations and many millions of citizens. For example, our membership includes the European Anti-Poverty Network, the European Disability Forum, the European Network Against Racism, the Women's Lobby, the International Lesbian and Gay Association, as well as other well known groups such as Save the Children, the Red Cross, Caritas, or my own organisation Solidar.

Our members have campaigned for the Charter of Fundamental Rights and argued, after the Nice Summit, that it was a great disservice to our Union to have such a secretive way of taking important decisions. One of the Laeken objectives is to bring Europe closer to the citizen. From where we stand, it would be a great start if our fellow citizens felt that this Union did a good job in protecting them, their values and their way of life. Unfortunately, that does not seem to be the case.

The mere decision to launch this Convention, welcome as it is, will in itself change little. That will depend on the outcome of your work and will take time. We argue that even if the results are good, we believe the European Union will need to engage with civil society to ensure that it creates a real connection with its citizens.

Shortly, my colleagues from the Social Platform, Mrs Wilkinson and Mrs Sutton will present our key demands on social issues.

My main point is to ask you to support the call of the Civil Society Contact Group for a Treaty article giving a legal base to the civil dialogue. We recognise the primacy of political dialogue and the very special role of social dialogue in our concept of European democracy. We also believe that it is time the Union recognises that civil society is an important component in this quest to regain the affections of its citizens.

You will hear some citizens oppose this position. Some say that it is a threat to democracy. We argue quite the contrary. Without our partnership, politicians will simply not be able to take forward the idea of Europe. What a waste, what an under-used asset we have: millions of citizens and thousands of associations throughout Europe, from small island communities to town centres, committed to the public good and ready to be engaged in the European policy debate.

You must give us the tools; recognise the role of civil society at European level in the Treaty and give a strong signal to the Commission to work with us to put in place and learn to use this terrific potential. Until that is done, we will continue to hear politicians lament how remote the European Union is and how so very few bother to vote in European elections.

The Laeken Summit and this Convention are just the beginning; turning around the apathy of our citizens will take more than a few words in a few summit conclusions. By your decision to invite us here today you have broken new ground. Our challenge to you is to break yet more ground by having a Treaty article on civil dialogue. In this task, you can be sure of our support and our continued work with you.

Wilkinson (NGO-SOC). – En effet, vous cherchez à rapprocher l'Europe des citoyens. Je crois que tout le monde veut cela. Pour que l'Europe puisse être plus proche de ses citoyens, l'Europe doit commencer à faire sens pour les citoyens. Dans un monde incertain, l'Europe doit apporter des sécurités ; je dis bien des sécurités, et non pas la sécurité. Or, les citoyens ont l'impression que l'Europe ne contribue pas à la construction de ces sécurités, mais qu'au contraire l'Europe apporte un risque. Par exemple, le risque du démantèlement des modèles sociaux construits dans chaque Etat membre, sans reconstruction de sécurités équivalentes au niveau européen.

Pour que l'Europe commence à faire sens pour tous les citoyens, il est nécessaire de repenser complètement les objectifs de l'Union. L'Union doit être repensée autour de l'accès de tous aux droits fondamentaux. Ceci sera abordé plus en détails par Diana, qui va me succéder. Je ne m'y attarderai donc pas. On doit trouver au centre des objectifs de l'Union un développement social durable. Pour y parvenir, les politiques, économiques, monétaires, le marché intérieur, la politique de la concurrence doivent être au service du développement social. Le développement social ne peut être traité comme un sous-produit du développement économique, mais il doit être intégré dans toutes les politiques de l'Union. Pour y arriver, il faut introduire la pratique de l'évaluation des politiques au regard de leur effet sur le développement social. Pour rééquilibrer l'économique et le social, il est souhaitable que les conclusions des Conseils européens de Lisbonne et de Göteborg soit intégrées dans le nouveau Traité. Je vous rappelle que le Conseil Européen de Lisbonne a décidé, entre autres, de faire dans les dix ans qui viennent, des progrès significatifs dans l'éradication de la pauvreté. Le Conseil de Lisbonne a aussi décidé d'utiliser la méthode ouverte de coordination pour la lutte contre la pauvreté et l'exclusion sociale. Il nous paraît important que cette avancée soit inscrite dans les Traités. L'éradication de la pauvreté devra également figurer parmi les objectifs de l'Union. Et le Traité devra intégrer la méthode ouverte de coordination. Mais pour que cette méthode soit effectivement ouverte, il faut que tous les acteurs concernés (partenaires sociaux, collectivités locales et ONG bien entendu, qui sont concernées au premier chef) puissent participer à cette méthode ouverte, à la fois au niveau européen et au niveau national. Et je vous demande, Messieurs les Conventionnels et Mesdames les Conventionnelles, d'inscrire cette participation dans les Traités.

Sutton (NGO-SOC). – Mr President, the Convention's stated aim is to bring Europe closer to its citizens. What really is the future for the European project? On what basis should we develop a European Union which is closer to its citizens and their expectations?

The Social Platform does not pretend to have all the answers to these questions, but we want to make recommendations which come directly from our work with some of Europe's most disadvantaged and excluded citizens. The Laeken Declaration poses the question of incorporation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. The Charter plays an important part within the work of EU, with the EU institutions systematically evaluating proposals with reference to the Charter. It is clear now that it has important political weight. We believe it must now be given important legal status and be incorporated into the Treaty.

The Social Platform therefore recommends incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty. The Charter is an excellent document, as it recognises for the first time some key new rights, such as recognition for the rights of the child. However, it still contains some gaps, such as the right to housing, the right to family unity and protection against poverty. It must therefore remain a living document, capable of being amended in the future.

When the Charter is incorporated into the Treaty, a mechanism for amending and improving the Charter must be included. This could, for example, be via a system of additional protocols adopted by all Member States and annexed to the Charter with the same legal force. This process must be undertaken with the explicit guarantee of rights that have already been expressed in the Charter.

The Platform believes that the EU should be given the legal personality and competence to ratify the European Convention on Human Rights - as the most comprehensive human rights instrument - and also other relevant international and European texts. In our view, this would be complementary to the incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty.

Even if the Charter were to be incorporated into the Treaty, it would still mean that the EU lacks the competence to develop a human rights policy as such - although competences do exist in a fragmented way. The Convention should therefore also recommend adding a competence to take action to promote the respect of fundamental rights within the EU. This would not only create an obligation for the EU to refrain from violating human rights, but also create a positive obligation to ensure that these rights are respected throughout Europe. Creating a positive obligation for the EU to ensure that human rights are respected within the Union is an efficient way to develop a proactive approach and could reduce the need for individuals to complain to the Court of Justice.

It is unacceptable that citizens in the EU today still face significant discrimination. Treaty revision must strengthen the basis for fighting discrimination. Article 13 must be strengthened and given direct effect. Discrimination today in the EU seriously affects lesbians and gays, people from ethnic minorities, women, young people and older people.

In conclusion, Europe must be brought closer to its citizens. The Convention must not miss an opportunity to do this by recommending the specific inclusion of a legal base on civil dialogue. The Charter must be incorporated into the Treaty, and the European Union must accede to the ECHR. Finally, the fight against poverty should be an explicit objective of the Union.

McPhail, (NGO-SOC). – Mr President, I welcome this opportunity to participate in this meeting of the Convention representing the European Women's Lobby which brings together over 3,000 women's organisations across Europe working to achieve equality of women and men.

The European Women's Lobby is also a member of the Platform of European Social NGOs and an active contributor to the Civil Society Contact Group. This Group has brought together a common statement which is available to you outside on the NGO stands.

Points from this statement will be picked by the different groups during the course of this afternoon and tomorrow morning.

Turning to issues of gender equality, it is clear that while there have been many positive developments for women in recent decades in Europe and globally, these developments have often been uneven, erratic and reversible in times of economic and political instability. While the lives of many women have improved, there are still millions of women and girls whose lives and aspirations are crushed by the weight of poverty and economic deprivation, exclusion from political participation, violations of basic human rights - in particular through violence and sexual exploitation in times of war and peace - and by restrictions to their personal autonomy, in access to reproductive rights, as well as in many other ways.

We all know that achieving equality of women and men requires changes at many different levels including changes in personal attitudes and relationships, changes in social institutions and legal frameworks, changes in economic institutions and changes in political and decision-making structures.

Today, I will highlight only four of the key recommendations brought forward by the European Women's Lobby and by other women's NGOs in relation to changes in the future Treaty that will support the achievement of equality of women and men.

Firstly, it is essential that the right to equality of women and men is established as one of the ultimate aims of the European Union and as a fundamental prerequisite for European democracy and should therefore be written into the preamble of a future Treaty.

Secondly, we are calling for the introduction of a new provision in the Treaty, with direct effect, prohibiting discrimination based on sex, as is the model currently for the provision prohibiting discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Thirdly, we are calling for the introduction of a new title on equality of women and men which will provide a firm legal basis for all actions in relation to gender equality, with a clear commitment to the full implementation of the human rights of all women and girls and recognising the diversity of women's lives and experiences. Amongst others, the following rights should be recognised: the right to individual social protection at all stages of life including during periods of caring for children and other dependants; the rights of women and men to control all aspects of their health, in particular sexual and reproductive health; the right of women and men to reconcile family and working life and the right to pregnancy and maternity protection.

In this new title, we also call for the specific recognition that violence against women constitutes a major obstacle to gender equality. This must lead to the development of a comprehensive policy combating all forms of violence against women, including trafficking in women and prostitution, which are fundamental violations of women's human rights.

Fourthly, we believe that the equal participation of women and men in all democratic processes is a prerequisite for democracy. We are therefore calling for the introduction of effective mechanisms which will ensure the equal participation of women and men in decision-making, and in the composition of all assemblies, bodies and institutions of the European Union.

We want to see a successful enlargement of the European Union leading to a union that is a dynamic and effective political body and that is seen as legitimate, accessible and accountable by all the people of Europe, a Europe where justice, solidarity, equality of women and men, respect for human rights, poverty eradication and sustainable development are the political priorities shaping all political, economic and security actions both within Europe and globally.

Finally, I take this opportunity to wish you well in the challenging work ahead. We are relying on your continued openness to dialogue with civil society, your positive vision of the future of Europe and your political leadership to ensure success.

David (NGO-SOC). – L'Europe est bien plus qu'un marché. Elle est porteuse d'un modèle de société, à la recherche d'un équilibre entre compétitivité et solidarité ainsi que d'un mode de vie social et culturel, fruit de son histoire. Les coopératives, mutualités, associations et fondations, organisations à but non lucratif qui forment l'économie sociale représentent huit pourcent de l'ensemble des entreprises européennes et dix pourcent de l'emploi total. Leur succès ne se mesure pas seulement à leur poids et à leurs performances économiques qui sont un moyen pour réaliser leur finalité. Ils se mesurent surtout au vu de leur participation à l'intérêt général, au vu de leur rapport en terme de solidarité, de cohésion sociale et d'ancrage sur les territoires. Un Européen sur trois en est membre. Coopérative, mutualité, associations et fondations participent de ce modèle économique et social européen original car pluraliste dans ses formes d'entreprendre, modèle qu'il ne faut absolument pas faire disparaître en ne retenant qu'un seul type d'entreprise. L'enjeu est tellement important qu'il mérite d'être inscrit dans le Traité. Il convient également d'ajouter à l'endroit définissant l'action de l'Union, l'adoption de règles permettant la mise en oeuvre de la pluralité des formes d'organisation pour entreprendre dans le respect de la spécificité de chacune.

Les services d'intérêt général, plus particulièrement les services sanitaires et sociaux, que les coopératives, mutualités, associations et fondations mettent en oeuvre à côté d'autres acteurs publics, concourent à garantir les droits fondamentaux, que toutes nos organisations demandent d'intégrer dans le Traité (Charte de Nice). Ces services d'intérêt général contribuent également à réaliser les objectifs que l'Union devrait préciser en préambule au Traité, en plus de la paix, de la recherche du plein emploi, du progrès social, de l'exercice d'une véritable démocratie participative et du développement durable pour tous, au niveau de l'Union et aussi au niveau mondial dans les négociations internationales.

Je suis donc ici la porte-parole, non seulement de la Conférence européenne permanente des coopératives, mutualités, associations et fondations, que j'ai l'honneur de présider, et de leurs membres actifs sur tous le territoire de l'Union, mais aussi de nombreuses associations qui l'ont exprimé lors de la réunion de préparation de cette audition telles que Caritas Europa, Eurodiacona, ITI Welfare et des associations dont l'objet est la promotion des services d'intérêt général au niveau européen telles que ISUP etc. Nous vous demandons avec force de proposer d'intégrer dans le Traité la reconnaissance du rôle des services d'intérêt général. Ceci permettrait à tous ceux qui assurent de tels services de participer à leur définition, à leur mise en oeuvre et d'être financés dans le cadre de règles de transparence, de proportionnalité, d'évaluation pluraliste, de participation démocratique des citoyens. Ceci implique également la possibilité de dérogation aux règles de la concurrence, notamment au regard des aides d'Etat. Ceci sécuriserait leur fonctionnement dans un environnement juridique adapté à leur vocation, au service de l'intérêt général. Dans cette perspective, un article du Traité, qui se situe actuellement à l'article 16, devrait être complété par le paragraphe suivant: « A cet effet, le Conseil statuant à la majorité qualifiée, sur proposition de la Commission, propose toute disposition en vue de clarifier les modalités d'application des règles de concurrence à ses services. Ce faisant, il prend en compte les spécificités de ces services, ainsi que les spécificités des opérateurs à but non lucratif qui fournissent ces services ». Seule la reconnaissance de nos organisations et des services d'intérêt général qu'elles rendent, leur reconnaissance dans le Traité leur permettrait de remplir pleinement leurs objectifs, qui correspondent à ceux de l'Union.

Jacobs (NGO-SOC). – Mr President, as a social partner, UNICE regards the work of the Convention as a priority, and we welcome this initiative to enable civil society to participate actively in the Convention.

Companies are an important part of civil society, and UNICE represents more than 16 million companies, mostly small and medium-sized, providing employment for more than 106 million people. UNICE considers the process of economic integration to be the main dynamic behind the peace, stability and prosperity achieved in Europe over the past 50 years.

From a business perspective, the EU must deliver a business-friendly environment in which companies can operate and compete on a level playing field and adapt to the increasing challenges that globalisation brings. This will lead to wealth-creation and employment opportunities.

Firstly, since today we are discussing the interaction between the EU and civil society, it is crucial that the Convention recommends ways to rethink the methods for consulting relevant stakeholders. The current system for the consultation of civil society is not satisfactory. UNICE proposes the adoption of a comprehensive code for consultation. This code should set out clear guidelines for the definition of core stakeholders, the purpose, content, methodology and timeframe of the consultation. The representation of organisations should also be duly taken into account.

In addition, UNICE, as a social partner at European level, calls for a clear distinction to be made between social dialogue and consultation with civil society. Social dialogue at European level is clearly structured and is an autonomous process involving the social partners. UNICE believes that Articles 138 and 139 provide an appropriate framework for agreements made by social partners and do not need to be modified.

Secondly, we need a single text providing a clear division of competences and a related decision-making procedure. The structure of this should be comprehensive in order to clarify the basic values, objectives and competences of the EU. We need a European Union which is capable of refocusing its actions on to its main task, not necessarily a detailed catalogue of competences that would deprive it of the flexibility it needs to adapt to new tasks and challenges.

Thirdly, the European Union must improve the efficiency and transparency of its institutions. In order to guarantee quick and efficient decision making, UNICE calls for the preservation of the Community method and a strong, independent Commission which acts as a guardian of the Treaties, proposing legislation to the Council and Parliament in the interest of the whole Community. We are also in favour of qualified majority voting as a general rule.

Finally, we would welcome a stronger emphasis on the international dimension in the framing of EU policy: discussion in the Convention has shown the need for stronger representation in international political and economic affairs. In order to make the European Union's external commercial policy more effective and coherent, UNICE supports giving the EU a legal personality.

In conclusion, I would like to thank the Praesidium for inviting representatives of civil society to contribute to the current debate. We encourage the Convention to maintain close links with this forum.

Gabaglio (NGO-SOC). - Signor Presidente, alla vigilia dei Consigli europei di Laeken e di Barcellona, la Confederazione europea dei sindacati ha convocato grandi manifestazioni per chiedere - un po' controcorrente rispetto a certi umori dell'opinione pubblica - più Europa: più Europa sociale, naturalmente, del lavoro e dei cittadini. Questa presa di posizione riflette un'adesione al processo di integrazione europea che viene da lontano, ma riflette anche, con pari forza, la necessità di cambiamenti. Rispondere a queste attese del mondo del lavoro comporta, secondo noi, un riequilibrio tra le diverse dimensioni - economica, monetaria e sociale - dell'Unione e il suo completamento con la realizzazione di un'unione politica.

Il primo riequilibrio riguarda il sociale rispetto all'economico. L'Unione è oggi essenzialmente sinonimo di mercato e di moneta. Nel Trattato attuale esistono, certo, obiettivi sociali ma, a parte il ritardo della loro concretizzazione - basti pensare che ci sono voluti quarant'anni dopo il Trattato di Roma affinché l'Unione ricevesse, ad Amsterdam, nuove competenze in materia di occupazione e di lavoro - questi obiettivi restano subordinati a quelli di carattere economico. Per superare questa situazione occorre che il nuovo trattato costituzionale riconosca il modello sociale europeo come elemento fondante dell'Unione, in modo che la sua organizzazione economica si ispiri ai principi dell'economia sociale e di mercato.

Il secondo riequilibrio riguarda l'unione economica e monetaria. Questa è, per ora, solo un'unione monetaria. C'è qui una contraddizione evidente tra un'Europa che diviene ogni giorno di più un'entità economica unica e la debolezza, per non dire l'assenza, di un governo coerente di questa realtà. Ciò impedisce di trarre profitto del valore aggiunto rappresentato dall'integrazione realizzata e di mettere il mercato e la moneta pienamente al servizio della strategia di Lisbona di modernizzazione dell'economia europea, ma anche di piena occupazione e più forte coesione sociale. E' quindi più che mai urgente creare gli strumenti e le procedure di un coordinamento delle politiche economiche, di bilancio e di investimento, nonché di armonizzazione fiscale a livello europeo. In questo quadro occorrerà anche meglio definire il contributo della Banca centrale al perseguimento degli obiettivi generali di sviluppo e di occupazione dell'Unione.

Dimensione politica vuol dire rafforzamento della cittadinanza europea ma anche ruolo dell'Europa nel mondo. Il primo passo da compiere, quanto alla cittadinanza, è l'integrazione, con una pienezza di effetti giuridici, della Carta di Nizza nel nuovo trattato costituzionale. In ogni caso, l'Unione deve favorire la più ampia partecipazione dei cittadini e della società civile, e questa riunione, oggi, è di buon auspicio in questa direzione.

Con riferimento all'Europa nel mondo, il movimento sindacale è a favore di una più forte e indipendente soggettività politica dell'Unione e delle relazioni internazionali, nella convinzione che essa possa dare un contributo determinante al governo democratico dei processi di globalizzazione, alla condizione, naturalmente, che l'Europa sappia parlare con una sola voce, che salvaguardi il suo modello sociale, che integra in modo originale le ragioni del mercato con quelle della giustizia sociale e della solidarietà, proprio quello che manca negli attuali processi di globalizzazione. Anche per questa via ritorna l'importanza, quindi, di affermare la centralità del modello sociale europeo.

Un aspetto che ci sta particolarmente a cuore riguarda, poi, il ruolo delle parti sociali. Questo è già riconosciuto nel Trattato attraverso il dialogo sociale, compresa una funzione di correzione in materia di condizioni di lavoro. Una dichiarazione comune, presentata a Laeken dalle parti sociali, fa stato della volontà di approfondire il dialogo sociale, ma anche di chiedere la formalizzazione di sedi e di procedure di concertazione sociale. Nel momento in cui l'Europa sta passando ad una fase di profonde trasformazioni economiche, che suscitano comprensibilmente inquietudine e disorientamento, dialogo e concertazione sociale sono gli strumenti indispensabili per guidare il cambiamento e realizzare con il consenso, e solo con il consenso, le riforme socialmente accettabili. Fin d'ora vorrei, tuttavia, sottolineare che il movimento sindacale intende presentare delle proposte relative alla necessità di sviluppare un sistema europeo di relazioni industriali che sia complementare a quelli nazionali. Se questo obiettivo è riconosciuto di interesse generale, occorre allora che i diritti sindacali di associazione, di contrattazione e anche di sciopero, siano riconosciuti anche nella loro dimensione transnazionale. Se lo spazio economico è europeo, i diritti dei lavoratori non possono restare solo nazionali.

Presidente, in questa occasione ho riassunto le nostre attese; in altre presenteremo proposte più precise e dettagliate. Mi permetto solo di sottolineare un punto: il consenso sociale, agli occhi del mondo del lavoro, al progetto europeo e la legittimità democratica rispetto ai cittadini dipenderanno dal tipo di risposte che l'Europa potrà dare a queste attese.

Cravinho (NGO-SOC). – Mr President, the European Centre for Enterprises with Public Participation and of Enterprises of General Economic Interest, known as CEEP, is one of the three cross-sectoral social partners. I will speak on social partners but first I would like to mention some points specific to CEEP, namely services of general interest.

General interest is one of the common values of the European Union, illustrating the European economic and social model and even distinguishing it from other models of reference. It must form a pillar of the future European project, especially with enlargement in prospect. We support a modern vision of general interest which contributes to a convergence between the development of the European Union's global economic performance and the social and territorial balance of European society.

In the judicial context of the single market, services of general interest have been perceived as not respecting and even being incompatible with the principles of the open market and free competition anchored in the Treaty. We disagree. The reality is more subtle and we believe they are one of the European Union's strongest advantages. Services of general interest are, and must remain, an essential driving force for the economic performance and the competitiveness of Europe in the context of globalisation. They can and should benefit from the advantages of the market economy, on condition that their objectives and missions are preserved. CEEP asks the Convention to ensure that the draft for a new constitutional treaty positively recognises services of general interest, giving them a status which means they are considered not as derogations to the basic law, but rather as a pillar of European society, responding to the ever-increasing expectations of Community citizens and consumers at all territorial levels.

In concrete terms, we expect certain principles to be explicitly provided for in the future Treaty. Firstly, services of general interest should form part of the common values of the European Union, and that accomplishment should be one of its objectives. They are a constitutive part of the economic and social model for European Union. The Community and Member States, each within their respective competences, should firstly take into account the implementation of services of general interest in order to accomplish the missions mentioned in Article 2. We also believe that the future Treaty should recognise and ensure that the funding of supplementary costs due to public service requirements should be considered compatible with competition rules.

Secondly, we suggest that these principles should be either enshrined in an extension of Article 16 or outlined in a specific chapter on services of general interest.

Thirdly, implementation by sector - in those sectors ruled by Community internal market directives - should come under specific directives or compulsory provisions in directives on the opening-up of public services to the market.

I now come to the subject of social dialogue. European social dialogue seems well established and yet some challenges still lie ahead. The European labour market consists of not one, but 15 different labour markets. The European social dialogue is not a stand-alone process; in its various elements and results it is a major contribution to a competitive Europe and, at the same time, to inclusion, gender mainstreaming and to developing the learning society.

There will always be a need for European social dialogue as a means to strengthen employment, economic reforms and social cohesion. In attaining those objectives, CEEP is of the opinion that European social dialogue should be strengthened by developing both cross-industry and sectoral dialogue. CEEP is in favour of the open method of coordination and the possibility it gives for each Member State to adjust regulations to fit specific systems. However, the social partners' participation in the consultation process must be enshrined in the Treaty. CEEP is of the opinion that social dialogue cannot function well at European level if it is not applied satisfactorily at national level. Therefore, CEEP places even greater emphasis on the participation of the social partners at national level, and especially at local and regional level. CEEP thus urges the Convention to support European social dialogue.

Hain (Ch.E/G.-GB). – Mr President, this Convention will not make any impact on the daily lives of most people unless we negotiate a constitutional check that goes beyond modifying the "pillar" structure or revising comitology procedures. That is why the issues raised by the social partners and the social sector group are so vital.

Our citizens want a Europe with a strong social dimension, a Europe which is the most dynamic knowledge-based society in the world, but above all they want jobs. Europe also needs a mix of regulation and flexibility. The European Union is so much more than just a market. As Emilio Gabaglio said, it has shared values of social justice and of human rights. It cannot be a credible force for good in the world if its citizens are badly treated at work, or civil rights and equal opportunities are denied.

This does not mean uniformity or harmonisation of standards. How would social justice be served if European Union legislation, for example, resulted in high unemployment in areas with low productivity? Instead, we should aim for deeper cooperation on the employment and social challenges we face. We need to reform the social dialogue to produce a system based on genuine partnership.

At the Luxembourg and Lisbon Summits, the European Union developed the open method of coordination. As Klaus Hänsch and others have said, the new Treaty should enshrine this approach as one of the main instruments of European Union action. Yes, that methodology must be refined. But this method of achieving our social objectives is flexible, far quicker than legislation and it works.

Let us use the Lisbon process to tackle some of the most important political issues in Europe today, redoubling our efforts to raise participation - especially for older workers - to reform welfare systems to make work pay, promote employability through training and education, reform pensions to ensure a secure future and lift families out of poverty. This Convention must ensure that our Europe is a Europe for the people and not just a Europe for the European elite.

Van Lancker (PE). - Voorzitter, ik ben de vertegenwoordigers van de NGO's en de sociale partners vandaag bijzonder dankbaar omdat ze een aantal thema's aan de orde hebben gesteld die totnogtoe niet zo hoog op de agenda van de Conventie stonden. We hebben het gehad over bevoegdheden, over wie doet wat, over de rol van de nationale parlementen, over subsidiariteit en proportionaliteit, over de derde pijler en de pijlerstructuur. Onze voorzitter Valéry Giscard d'Estaing heeft de Raad van Sevilla gemeld dat er maar op drie fronten vraag is naar meer politieke Europese integratie. En voor vandaag staat een betere coördinatie op het economische en financiële vlak als enige thema op de agenda.

Mijnheer de voorzitter, ik denk dat de NGO's en de sociale partners vandaag aan ons aller agenda een heel belangrijk punt hebben toegevoegd, namelijk de sociale integratie. Ik weet wel dat sommige collega's nu zullen zeggen dat er in het Verdrag al sociale doelstellingen van de Unie zijn opgenomen. Die sociale doelstellingen hebben we al en die bevoegdheden kunnen we uitoefenen. Er is hier vandaag door velen verwezen naar de Lissabon-doelstellingen. Maar wie het Verdrag aandachtig leest, weet dat het in feite de kar voor de paarden spant, dat de sociale doelstellingen een soort correctie vormen op het functioneren van de interne markt, terwijl volgens ons toch die interne markt in feite in dienst zou moeten staan van de sociale doelstellingen. Ik zou dan ook graag weten waar we thema's zoals het evenwicht tussen de doelstellingen en de basisartikelen van het constitutioneel Verdrag kunnen aankaarten.

Een tweede boodschap die ik goed begrepen heb, is dat we een sociaal Europa nooit zullen realiseren zonder de sociale dialoog te versterken en zonder de civiele dialoog. Ik denk dat we ook wat dat betreft onze conclusies op het vlak van de constitutionele teksten moeten trekken.

Barrau (Parl.-FR). –La présence des ONG du secteur social au sein de la convention et des représentants de tous les organismes qui se préoccupent de cette dimension sociale constitue un pas important. Mais est-ce suffisant? Le secrétaire général de la Confédération européenne des syndicats l'a dit tout à l'heure. A Barcelone par exemple, des milliers de personnes étaient dans la rue, pour demander plus d'Europe, mais une autre Europe. Allons-nous enfin écouter ce message ? Devrons-nous encore déplorer des abstentions aux prochaines élections du Parlement européen pour dire qu'il faudrait sans doute faire une autre Europe ? Je crois que nous pouvons nous mettre d'accord sur l'introduction de la Charte dans le Traité Constitutionnel. Cela me semble clair. Nous pouvons également faire des avancées dans le domaine de l'égalité homme-femme. Enfin, nous pouvons bâtir un véritable Traité social, touchant le problème des services publics, des retraites. Il faut, comme le disait Madame Wilkinson tout à l'heure, et j'ai beaucoup aimé son expression, "faire en sorte" que l'Europe ne soit pas un élément d'insécurité pour ceux qui vivent autour de nous, mais au contraire, mais plutôt un élément d'espoir. Si l'Europe est un élément d'insécurité sociale ou économique, elle sera perçue comme une sorte de nez-en-avant de la mondialisation et ce sera, à cet égard, une insuffisance par rapport à notre modèle européen. Voilà l'objectif et voilà pourquoi le secteur social est très important.

Lopes (Ch.E/G.-PT). - Senhor Presidente, além dos aspectos correntes sobre o tema da sociedade civil, convém lembrar que a Europa deveria constituir um verdadeiro espaço de referência dos seus cidadãos, o que não tem acontecido. Por outro lado, a construção europeia não assenta numa base ideológica sólida, o que a distancia dos cidadãos. É óbvio que o tema de hoje, a articulação entre a economia e a sociedade, constitui um ponto de confluência das múltiplas tensões de modernização a que todos os europeus estão sujeitos e que, de resto, já deram origem a diversos ecos em várias das intervenções anteriores.

Gostaria de propor quatro aspectos:

- primeiro: a Europa tem de assumir uma visão inovadora de transformação das economias e das sociedades com audácia e criatividade, preservando no chamado "modelo social europeu" o que ele tem positivo e apostando na criação de um novo impulso colectivo que seja facilmente compreendido e aceite pelos cidadãos;
- segundo: a Europa deverá identificar causas que valham a pena na construção europeia e que vão para além das regulamentações pesadas e burocráticas, para além de subsídios para financiar ineficiências, etc.;
- terceiro: deverá igualmente reconhecer a diferença entre o mero "preservar", numa atitude política sem visão e basicamente estática, e o criar ou inventar conceito dinâmico que possa permitir-nos avançar realmente numa direcção escolhida por todos.
- quarto: assim, a principal tarefa que agora incumbe aos responsáveis europeus é mostrar que a construção da Europa terá de assentar não na atitude de razoabilidade defensiva que é a União Europeia de hoje, mas, sim, no dinamismo inovador que deverá caracterizá-la no futuro e deverá permitir-lhe responder à pressão da competição global.

Thorning-Schmidt (PE). - Hr. formand, det, de sociale partnere siger til os i dag, er, at Europa ikke må være et usikkerhedsmoment for borgerne, og der er efter min opfattelse en fællesnævner for det, der bliver sagt, nemlig at den sociale dialog skal styrkes i traktaterne. Det synes jeg, at vi nøje skal tage til efterretning. Der bliver også sagt, at de offentlige tjenester er utroligt vigtige, og at vi ikke må lade dem stå helt frit. Det synes jeg også, at vi skal tage til efterretning. Og alt det her vil naturligvis give anledning til eftertanke.

Men jeg er naturligvis også lidt bekymret over det, der ikke bliver sagt i dag. Et af de områder, jeg ikke har hørt noget om, er børns rettigheder, og det kunne jeg godt tænke mig, at de sociale partnere uddyber for os, hvis vi får mulighed for det. Og så er jeg også lidt bekymret generelt, hr. formand, for dem, som ikke er her i dag. De sociale partnere, vi ser her i dag, er faktisk - undskyld jeg siger det - nogen vi godt kender. Jeg er lidt bekymret for alle de ngo'er, alle dem i det civile samfund, som ikke er til stede i dag. For vi ved faktisk, at mellem 30 og 40% af borgerne ude i samfundet er bekymrede over EU's udvikling, og jeg håber, at det civile samfund og alle ngo'erne vil tage den bekymring alvorligt og give os nogle ideer til - og jeg mener det meget alvorligt - give os nogle ideer til, hvordan vi kan komme i en rigtig dialog med borgerne, så vi måske kan få de 30-40%, som er bekymrede over hele projektet, beroliget, så det ikke længere behøver at bekymre os så voldsomt.

Farnleitner (Ch.E/G.-AT). - Herr Präsident! Zunächst möchte ich meinen Eindruck wiedergeben, dass wir sehr dankbar sein müssen, dass wir aus diesem Dialog mit der Zivilgesellschaft so viele Anregungen - zum Teil kritische, zum Teil sehr unterstützende - für das gefunden haben, was im Konvent schon besprochen wurde. Ich möchte aber zwei Dinge besonders hervorheben. Zum einen: Wir sollten die Mitarbeit der civil society in der EU institutionalisieren. Ich habe schon in einem früheren Beitrag gesagt: Ich würde es sehr begrüßen, wenn wir etwa die Organisationen der civil society in eine der Gruppen des WSA integrieren könnten, so dass dieser Dialog permanent stattfindet und nicht nur aus Anlass von einigen Kongressen und Konventen.

Der zweite Punkt: Ich bin sehr dafür, das Sozialmodell Europa stärker abzusichern, aber ich bin sehr dagegen, dass diese Bemühungen offenbar dazu dienen, bestimmten Ländern die Flucht aus der nationalen Verantwortung zu erleichtern. Ich glaube, dass das europäische Sozialmodell - basierend auf Generationenvertrag und Solidarität - heute zeigt, dass die Migration innerhalb Europas, also die der Europäer, zurückgeht, weil die sozialen Systeme der einzelnen Länder besser werden. Daher schließe ich mich ausdrücklich Peter Hain an und meine, dass wir im sozialen Bereich nicht Kompetenzen verlagern, sondern eher mit besseren Instrumenten das bench-marking, best practices und gegenseitige Stimulierung herbeiführen sollten.

Ich halte es auch für zweckmäßig, den sozialen Dialog in den Verträgen neu zu verankern. Wir haben zu viele alte Spieler, und viele spielen nicht mit. Oligopolisierung der Interessenvertretung sollte nicht stattfinden. Ich plädiere für mehr Organisationen der Klein- und Mittelbetriebe, für mehr Organisationen aus dem Dienstleistungsbereich. Wir alle wissen: Wenn es in der Liberalisierung an die letzten hard cores von traditionell verfassten Institutionen geht, dann landen wir beim civil sector, beim service public. Ich habe in einer anderen Funktion einmal gesagt, sehr oft ist es auch self service public. Daher sollten wir durchaus sagen, öffentliche Dienstleistungen ja, aber unter gleichen Leistungsvorgaben, wie sie viele andere in der Wirtschaft haben.

Berès (PE). – Chers collègues, je me réjouis du débat que nous avons aujourd'hui sur ce thème, parce que je crois que c'est vraisemblablement l'un de ceux où le besoin de dialogue avec la société civile se fait le plus ressentir. C'est elle qui peut nourrir notre agenda, même si à la fin, lorsque nous évaluerons les résultats de nos travaux, nous ne devons pas les regarder à l'aune de l'agenda de chaque organisation mais bien en ayant une capacité d'approche globale. Dans cet esprit-là, je veux retenir trois idées fortes du dialogue que nous venons d'avoir. Premièrement, s'agissant des principes et des valeurs, un certain consensus semble se dégager pour demander de la Charte. Je m'en réjouis. Cette Charte ne devrait pas être une table de la loi immuable. Mais la question de sa révision ne doit pas être à l'ordre du jour, ce sont des mécanismes de révision futurs qui devraient être envisagés. Deuxièmement, s'agissant des compétences et des objectifs, j'entends ici ou là qu'on revendique un changement des objectifs de l'Union. Une fois de plus, je m'en réjouis. Au fond, l'une des questions qui nous sera posée est de savoir si après le passage à l'euro, nous avons achevé l'oeuvre du premier pilier ou si nous devons imaginer que le marché intérieur n'est pas juste la libre circulation des personnes mais peut-être aussi un peu d'harmonisation fiscale et beaucoup de normes sociales. En ce qui concerne l'équilibre entre loi de la concurrence et place des services d'intérêt général, je constate que beaucoup en ont parlé. Nous devons faire rentrer dans le droit européen cette notion de bien collectif européen qui nous a déjà tant manqué et qui risque de nous manquer encore davantage demain. Troisièmement, s'agissant de la méthode, il est nécessaire de faire entrer la méthode ouverte de coordination dans nos Traités et d'associer les partenaires sociaux à l'élaboration des politiques économiques et sociales, qui sinon ne sont pas comprises et ne peuvent pas être reprises par nos Etats Membres.

Barnier (CE). – Nous sommes très nombreux ici à mesurer l'importance de ces deux journées de dialogue et d'écoute avec les représentants de la société civile. Nous savons que ce sont eux, et au-delà d'eux et avec eux, des millions d'autres citoyens, souvent d'ailleurs bénévoles, qui témoignent sur le terrain, dans chacun de nos Etats, que l'Union, comme l'a dit tout à l'heure une représentante, ne se résume pas, ou ne se réduit pas, à un grand supermarché organisé et que nous sommes en train de construire un modèle européen de société que nous voulons faire vivre. Je voudrais simplement marquer mon intérêt, mon soutien, ma disponibilité sur quelques points qui ont été évoqués par les uns et par les autres. Le premier point est la question des services d'intérêt général. Au-delà de l'article seize du Traité, qui existe et qu'il faut faire vivre, nous travaillons, comme le Conseil de Séville l'a dit, sur un projet de directive-cadre. Le deuxième point est la gouvernance et la meilleure consultation sur lequel nous attendons également les réactions de la société civile. Et le troisième point, que personne n'a cité, est le souci de prolonger ou d'amplifier une politique européenne de cohésion économique, sociale et territoriale. Je voudrais également signaler deux autres points qui suscitent notre intérêt : tout d'abord la Charte et l'inclusion des droits dans le Traité, point sur lequel Monsieur Vitorino reviendra demain et ensuite, mon intérêt pour une réflexion sur la méthode du dialogue social qui, selon moi, pourrait trouver utilement une référence dans le prochain Traité Constitutionnel auquel nous travaillons.

Bruton (Parl.-IE). - Mr President, Diana Sutton, Mary McPhail and others have called for the incorporation of the rights into the Charter and the Treaty, for their direct effect and for new Charter rights such as housing and reproductive rights.

I have two questions for colleagues. Firstly, against whom would these new rights be enforceable by the courts? In other words, who would pay any costs? Would national laws be overridden? Secondly, would these positive rights, for example to housing, be uniform in all Member States, regardless of the economic development of that particular Member State?

Heathcoat-Amory (Parl.-GB). - Mr President, the emphasis on bringing Europe closer to its citizens has been very refreshing in the speeches we have heard and is absolutely right. The EU has democratic legitimacy in a technical sense, but in the eyes of millions of citizens it is not democratically accountable and accessible in a way that they understand.

My question for the contributors is: to what extent are they representative? I would like future contributors to tell us more about how many members they have, how they organise themselves and how they are structured. Also, a number of them receive funding directly from the European Union or indirectly from other budget sources. This is obviously relevant. If they are commenting on the EU institutions, it is relevant that they are receiving money from the budget and that should be declared.

Et nous savions bien quand nous avons fait la Charte combien il était difficile de faire passer le chapitre sur la solidarité. La liberté d'entreprendre dans la Charte est absolue, mais les droits sociaux sont étroitement encadrés. Et j'aurais une furieuse envie de poser une question, par exemple à Monsieur Gabaglio, afin de connaître son avis sur la question de la solidarité et sur la façon dont il serait possible de quand même élargir peu à peu les droits sociaux. Je sais qu'il est impossible de réouvrir la Charte mais nous allons en discuter avec Monsieur Vitorino car il faut tout de même qu'il y ait une dynamique sociale dans cette Charte. Ce n'est pas une Bible au contenu immuable.

La domanda che io vorrei porre, in particolare ai partner sociali, riguarda un'affermazione di Emilio Gabaglio il quale ha detto, a mio parere giustamente, che occorre avere una possibilità di dialogo e di concertazione fra le parti sociali anche a livello europeo, e ha aggiunto che questo livello dovrebbe essere complementare al dialogo e alla concertazione che si svolge a livello nazionale. Vorrei capire meglio il parere, sia suo che degli imprenditori, su questo punto, in particolare perché credo che in qualche modo un dialogo europeo, se si stabilisce e diventa effettivamente valido, probabilmente ha anche un carattere di quadro per il dialogo nazionale.

Figel (Gouv.-SK). – Mr President, Slovakia's response to the call of the European Council in Nice for a wider and deeper debate on the future of the European Union was the establishment of the National Convention on the European Future of Slovakia. It has been meeting regularly since it was convened for the first time in May 2001.

The National Convention aims to provide a suitable forum for Slovak citizens interested in discussing the challenging questions of Slovakia's future in the EU. The objective of our National Convention is to foster a nationwide discussion on the questions defined by the declarations on the future of the EU from Nice and from Laeken, since the National Convention should reflect the entire spectrum of our society. There has been special emphasis on the composition of the National Convention. It is made up of representatives of the main political parties, academic circles, churches, various interest groups, trade unions, municipalities and regions and representatives of several non-governmental organisations.

Meetings are open to the press, and proceedings are regularly published on an Internet site. They represent, in particular, an opportunity for a number of segments of Slovakia's civil society to participate in the debate on the future of Europe.

Our non-governmental organisations have been playing an integral role in fostering discussion of our country's future in an enlarged European Union. Many active organisations have joined the Slovak Forum of Non-Governmental Organisations that was established in September 2001, as a common platform of Slovak NGOs working in the area of European integration.

The forum helps to map and coordinate the activities of various NGOs and provides the basis for further cooperation among NGOs and also between NGOs and official state institutions. The main activities of non-governmental organisations have focused on preparing the country for public concerns and the public for EU accession.

Some NGOs have worked effectively as policy advocacy groups calling for further reforms of our country's way into the European Union. Today, several NGOs are playing an important role in providing space and ideas in the debate on the future of Europe.

Κατηφόρης (Ch.E./G.-GR). – Κύριε Πρόεδρε, η Ομάδα Επαφής για το Περιβάλλοντος συνήλθε στις 17 Ιουνίου με τη συμμετοχή 14 Μη Κυβερνητικών Οργανώσεων, από τις οποίες το Ευρωπαϊκό Γραφείο Περιβάλλοντος, που είναι δευτεροβάθμια οργάνωση, αντιπροσώπευε 130 περιβαλλοντολογικούς οργανισμούς στην Ευρωπαϊκή Ένωση και στις υποψήφιες χώρες.

Κατά την συνεδρίαση έγινε μια πρώτη ανταλλαγή ιδεών και καθορίστηκαν από την πλευρά των οργάνωσεων οι ομιλητές που θα παρουσιάσουν το θέμα στη Συνέλευση. Το περιβάλλον, όπως είναι γνωστό είναι το πρώτο θέμα που βγήκε μέσα από την Κοινωνία των Πολιτών, χωρίς να έχουν προηγηθεί πολιτικές πρωτοβουλίες, για να καταλάβει μια από τις κεντρικές θέσεις στην πολιτική ζωή. Παράλληλα, η χρήση του περιβάλλοντος έγινε επίσης ζωτικό θέμα. Αποκτήσαμε, σε πολύ μεγαλύτερο βαθμό από άλλοτε, συνείδηση ότι όταν χρησιμοποιούμε το περιβάλλον χρησιμοποιούμε πολλές φορές αγαθά που δεν είναι σε απεριόριστη προσφορά, σε απεριόριστα αποθέματα.

Η βιομηχανία απέκτησε συνείδηση ότι πρέπει και να ελέγχει τη χρήση που κάνει, αλλά και να υπερασπίζεται την ορθή χρήση. Τους ίδιους προσανατολισμούς απέκτησαν και διάφοροι άλλοι χρήστες του περιβάλλοντος. Έτσι, μια κίνηση των πολιτών δημιούργησε μια σειρά από πολιτικά κόμματα και από πολιτικές κινήσεις, δημιούργησε έναν ολόκληρο νέο κλάδο νομοθεσίας, δημιούργησε επίσης έναν νέο κλάδο της οικονομικής επιστήμης. Παρόλον όμως ότι δημιουργήθηκαν πολιτικές και επιστημονικές κινήσεις κλασικού τύπου, η κοινωνία των πολιτών εξακολούθησε να δρα αυτόνομα και να εμπνέει νέες πολιτικές κινήσεις και να δίνει νέες ιδέες. Ίσως αυτό είναι ένα από τα πιο ενδιαφέροντα φαινόμενα της δραστηριοποίησης της κοινωνίας των πολιτών, που συνεχίζεται παρόλον ότι ένα μέρος της πέρασε στην τυποποιημένη, ας το πούμε έτσι, πολιτική ζωή.

Δεν είναι δικό μου έργο να συνοψίσω την πολύ ενδιαφέρουσα συζήτηση που έγινε στην συνάντηση της Ομάδας Επαφής. Οι εκπρόσωποι των ΜΚΟ που έλαβαν μέρος στην συνάντηση της Ομάδας Επαφής τόνισαν και αυτοί μερικά κύρια σημεία, τα οποία αναφέρονται στην Χάρτα των θεμελιωδών δικαιωμάτων και ζήτησαν να περιληφθούν περιβαλλοντικά δικαιώματα στην Χάρτα, όπως επίσης ζήτησαν να περιληφθεί στην Συνθήκη και ένα πολύ ενδιαφέρον σημείο, η έννοια της ευημερίας των ζώων.

Στο θέμα των αποστολών της Ένωσης, επικέντρωσαν την προσοχή τους στο θέμα της αγροτικής πολιτικής. Ζήτησαν η αγροτική πολιτική να αλλάξει χαρακτήρα, να αποκτήσει ενδιαφέρον για την αειφορία, για την ποιότητα των τροφίμων, για την υγεία και για την προστασία του περιβάλλοντος, για την ευαίσθητη χρήση της υπαίθρου και για την βιοποικιλότητα. Επίσης, ζήτησαν κάτι το οποίο θα φανεί πιο αμφισβητήσιμο, την κατάργηση της Συνθήκης της Ευρατόμ. Στα θεσμικά θέματα επέμειναν ότι όπου υπάρχει η αρχή της ομοφωνίας στα θέματα του περιβάλλοντος, πρέπει να αντικατασταθεί από την αρχή της ενισχυμένης πλειοψηφίας και της συναπόφασης και να παίξει μεγαλύτερο ρόλο το Ευρωπαϊκό Δικαστήριο, να επεκταθεί η αρχή της διαφάνειας και το Συμβούλιο να δίνει δημοσίως τις συζητήσεις τους για τα θέματα αυτά.

Μείναμε σύμφωνοι στην Ομάδα Επαφής ότι θα συνεχίσουμε τις συναντήσεις μας και θα προσπαθούμε να τροφοδοτούμε τη Συνέλευση με τις ιδέες που θα προκύπτουν στις συζητήσεις αυτές.

Hallo (NGO-ENVI). - Mr President, I speak on behalf of eight of the largest European environmental and nature protection organisations, including the European Environmental Bureau - with members in all Member States and many applicant countries - Greenpeace, Friends of the Earth, the World Wildlife Fund, Birdlife and others. This group is sometimes called the Green G8 and we have submitted a common statement, parts of which have been summarised. As the Green G8 we also belong to the Civil Society Contact Group and we support the common statement which was referred to earlier by our colleagues from the Social Platform. I also speak on behalf of the Eurogroup on Animal Welfare.

I speak on behalf of all of these organisations and their millions of members, and also on behalf of the overwhelming majority of Europeans who support environmental protection. In their towns and villages, in their regions and countries and especially at European level, time and again, the Eurobarometer and other surveys have shown that Europe's citizens place a high priority on environmental protection. They place it high on their list of concerns and high on the list of concerns for European policy.

The high priority that European citizens ascribe to environmental protection and sustainable development is recognised in the Treaty of Amsterdam. This Treaty establishes sustainable development as a primary objective for the EU. It requires environmental protection to be part of every EU policy area, balancing environmental protection and internal market considerations.

In short, environmental protection and sustainable development are already firmly anchored in the Treaty. That is my first point. Do not change these key texts. Leave these provisions unchanged. This should be welcome advice: at last you are being asked not to do something. It is also essential, however, to make some general changes concerning transparency and the democratic working of the EU decision-making process. These changes will prove important, not just for the environment but also in general. I will group these changes into three areas: rights, institutions and policies.

Regarding rights, are you indeed serious about bringing Europe closer to its citizens? If so, then the citizen needs to be better informed, at an earlier stage, about Commission initiatives for law and policy. The citizen needs to be consulted. We share the point already made that there should be a Treaty article on civil dialogue and provision for broad, open, timely public participation.

Secondly, do you seriously believe that secret decision-making on legislation by the Council of Ministers is still acceptable? No, it is time to end the secrecy in the Council.

Thirdly, is it right that citizens have no right to challenge the institutions in court? This question is being considered by the Convention's working group on the Charter and the European Convention on Human Rights. Our question is, why should there be less protection for the citizen at EU level than he or she enjoys at national level? The door to the European Court of Justice is closed, it is time to open that door and give access to the Court of Justice, including on environmental cases, to citizens and their organisations.

As far as the Charter itself is concerned, it is important overall, but the environmental article is flawed. It is not phrased in terms of a right. It could possibly undermine the key Treaty articles that I mentioned before. The environmental article needs to be phrased in terms of a right before the Charter is incorporated into a binding document as part of the Treaty.

On institutions, it is time to end the paralysis in decision-making which results from the requirement of unanimity. In the environmental area, all decision-making should be by qualified majority voting and in co-decision with the European Parliament, including decision-making on fiscal or economic measures for environmental protection.

Secondly, there needs to be clarity for the citizen about who does what. We support strengthening transparency and the working of the existing institutions - principally the Council, the Commission and Parliament - rather than extending the powers of advisory bodies. European decision-making is already complicated enough for the citizens and their organisations to follow. It is going to burden us more than we can bear, I fear, if we add more layers, more responsibilities and more institutional roles, and it is an illusion to believe that this would bring Europe closer to the citizens.

On policies, Euratom's objective of promoting nuclear energy is outdated. It should be replaced by an objective to protect health and the environment from the hazards of nuclear energy. Perhaps this could be part of a more general article on sustainable energy policy.

Agriculture policy objectives are equally outdated and desperately need to be changed. My colleague from the AgriCultural Convention will say more on this point.

Thirdly, we support a treaty article on animal welfare as proposed by our colleagues from the Eurogroup on Animal Welfare. This article should state that one of the Community's activities will be to take measures to ensure respect for animal welfare.

In conclusion, a word about subsidiarity: it is now a general principle but it started life in the Treaty as part of the environment article. Subsidiarity is an elastic term and the Convention can spend a long time debating it. I recommend you do not. As I have already made clear, there are other, clearer demands for transparency, democracy and institutional reform. Europe's citizens expect clear answers to these straightforward demands. Do not fix what is not broken.

Finally, my colleagues in the Member States are making these same points in the national debates in which I hope you will participate. I welcome Mr Dehaene's point that this is not by any means the end of the process. I look forward to the dialogue and to your questions.

Spooner (NGO-ENVI). – Mr President, I speak on behalf of the European AgriCultural Convention which brings together a wide range of representatives from civil society including consumers, environmentalists, heritage conservationists, farmers, development NGOs and some government officials and politicians from all corners of Europe, east, west, north and south.

We share serious concerns about the negative side effects of centrally-controlled, production-focused agricultural policy. We came together to form a vision for the future of agriculture in an enlarged Europe. I urge you to read our statement which is the result of an innovative, dynamic and effective process of consultation. I wanted to thank the President for supporting this initiative by his presence at our AgriCultural Convention gathering. We seek to answer his questions and continue to work on detailed recommendations both to the Convention and to the mid-term review of the Common Agricultural Policy. All are welcome to contribute to our open dialogue and process.

We hope to be able to act as an independent contact group specifically on the issue of the future of agriculture and rural development. We are happy to put forward a few key points through this environment contact group, as the environmental dimension is central to our vision.

I will focus on two key constitutional areas, firstly decision-making and, secondly, the establishment of a new Common Agricultural and Rural Policy. I stress the rural, a CARP. Regarding decision-making, we call on the Convention to ensure accountability in decision-making related to agriculture. This is not the case at present. The Common Agricultural Policy has reached levels of complexity that even the experts can no longer master. With compulsory spending rules, sectoral policies run by sectoral management committees and decision-making limited to very few players, there is little democratic accountability.

We make four key recommendations. Firstly, that the broad lines of the Common Agricultural and Rural Policy be decided and funded at Community level. Secondly, that the CARP be subject to co-decision between the Council and the European Parliament, both for policy and budget. Thirdly, that policy coordination be encouraged between different Commission Directorates-General: environment, regional, social, industry, consumer development, culture and external relations interests also need to be taken into account in agricultural policy-making.

Perhaps most importantly, we urge you to explore the application of open governance principles to Common Agricultural and Rural Policy management, especially in terms of improving the participation of stakeholders. In the agricultural area there have been some very good experiences with participatory democracy. Notably, the Leader-type programmes which promote integrated territorial programmes, public-private partnerships, competence exchange and networking between regional groups. Both the quality of policy and the effectiveness of implementation are improved by involving the relevant actors and stakeholders. These approaches should be central to the future Common Agricultural and Rural Policy.

Secondly, as regards the establishment of the Common Agricultural and Rural Policy, we call on the Convention to set out the foundations for a new CARP in the Treaty. We propose inclusion of some new rights: the right to healthy food and to transparent information about its production and safety; the right to a healthy environment and clean water; the right to produce and consume GMO-free food. As we see agriculture and forestry both as an archive of the past and laboratory for the future, this is not a call for a ban but a call for responsibility and freedom of choice.

We request changes to the articles of the Nice Treaty, in Title 2, especially Article 33, to set out the objectives of a CARP based on the core EU principles of sustainable development. The current Common Agricultural Policy does not meet sustainable development criteria. We believe that the CARP should ensure: the viability of agricultural production in Europe, based on responsible yields; provide fair income to farmers and good prospects for young farmers; protect environmental resources such as soil, water, and biodiversity; provide quality and variety of healthy food; ensure animal welfare and foster the development of local economies and cultures, not just agriculture.

We call for a CARP designed to give developing countries fair access to western markets and to develop food security within their own countries. We believe it is essential to use the WTO development round to advocate an integrated approach to rural development and sustainable farming practices across the world. The US Farm Bill is a regrettable step backwards; the EU must not let this prevent it from taking the lead in negotiating globally responsible solutions.

We recommend a significant shift of funding from production support towards rural development; the promotion of economic diversity and jobs in the countryside; payment for environmental services such as maintenance of clean water supply; infrastructural improvements; the promotion of artisanal foods, tourism and so on.

Enlargement provides an opportunity which several candidate countries are rightly taking to start this shift towards rural development. Representatives from new Member States were particularly dynamic in our Convention, and we hope to see changed leadership in old Member States as well.

To summarise, we call for a Common Agricultural and Rural Policy based on two key sets of principles: sustainable development and democratic accountability. We envision a CARP clearly identified as a Community policy, based on networks of integrated territorial programmes and developed and managed in the spirit of participatory democracy.

The European AgriCultural Convention being an ongoing process, we encourage your feedback on our document and to open up a positive dialogue.

De Jonckheere (NGO-ENVI). – Mr President, the European Landowners' Association is glad to contribute to the debate on the future to the European Union, and would like to take this opportunity to thank you for all your work. We hope this hearing is just a beginning and can serve as an example for further collaboration with civil society.

Land stands at the centre of the rural world. Landowners are involved in farming and forestry; they provide and manage land and building for rural housing and for rural businesses. They generate employment for local people; they provide land for sporting tourism, hunting and other leisure pursuits. They are responsible for managing the majority of Europe's landscapes and environments, and they contribute to the consolidation of the social thread uniting the rural communities. They are committed to the future of the countryside. The European Landowners Association is thus well placed to speak for Europe's rural areas.

Furthermore, different organisations have subscribed formally to this contribution, namely the Confédération européenne des propriétaires forestiers, the Federation of Associations for Hunting and Conservation of the EU, the Groupement européenne intervenant dans l'immobilier, the European Historic Houses Association, the Ruralité Environnement Développement organisation and the Nature 2000 forum.

We believe that one of the big challenges for the European Union in the future will be to bridge the growing cultural gap between town and country, which is at its widest in discussions on environmental matters. To caricature the issue: urban populations wish to spend their leisure time in a museum-like preserved countryside, accusing the rural community of not managing it in an environmentally sustainable way. Rural actors likewise accuse the urban community of shaping policies in an unrealistic way -without proper knowledge of the rural needs, without consulting stakeholders and without providing the financial means for environmental services.

This statement reflects the problem quite well and indicates the uniting rule that Europe has to play. Europe should foster cohesion, social and economic but also territorial cohesion. We would like to see a Europe where the countryside is consolidated through coherent and integration rural policies and where the rural stakeholders are consulted from the earliest stage of the decision-making process. Such policies should be able to avert the current misunderstandings between rural and urban cultures which hamper the achievement of our common objectives of social, economic and environmental integration.

Land ownership has proved to be very effective in consolidating rural communities. It gives people in the countryside a long-term perspective and a sense of responsibility towards future generations. We want the Europe of the future to foster these rural communities, to attract people to the countryside, to halve emigration to the big cities, to support the creation of rural employment and to promote a balanced, vibrant and prosperous rural economy. We want our countryside to remain a nice environment to live and work in and we believe landowners and land users are Europe's biggest allies in creating such a future.

The right of property is a fundamental right and has been recognised as such in numerous international declarations and conventions of which the most important are the Declaration of Rights of 1789, the European Convention of Human Rights and, more recently, the European Charter of Fundamental Rights.

It is essential for the further development of a democratic Europe that the Charter is duly integrated as such in the constitutional Treaties. In order to make these rights effective and enforceable, broader access for all individuals to the constitutional court should be assured. A fully democratic Europe also requires the integral involvement of the European Parliament on the same level as the Council, for all European decisions through the extension of the co-decision procedure. It is also essential for the coherence of human rights protection in the European Union to adhere in the long run to the European Convention on Human Rights.

We all have high environmental expectations for the future but we believe that a key factor for the achievement of these objectives will be Europe's capacity to stimulate environmental policies through voluntary agreements and not through compulsory legislation.

The key concepts here are proportionality and early stakeholder involvement. A proportionality check at any level of implementation, be it European or national, is essential to preserve the delicate balance of the countryside. All too often, European legislation in certain countries has led to a disproportionate burden being placed on the shoulders of landowners and land users, a burden dramatically detrimental for both the conservation of the environment and for the fragile economic balance of rural businesses.

We believe that an efficient European decision-making process should incorporate, at the earliest stage, an integrated social and economic impact assessment for any environmental programme - just as an early environmental impact assessment is required for any important economic project.

Early stakeholder involvement is crucial to the success of any environmental policy. Procedures should be established to determine which actors are directly affected or concerned by specific policies and how they will be consulted throughout the decision-making and implementation process.

We are therefore eager to participate actively in any discussion in the general interest where environmental policy might lead to limitations of the right of property.

As regards the clarification, delineation or delimitation of competences, we are convinced that it should be ruled by the principle of added value. The European Union derives its powers from the Member States and should intervene only where intervention has a proven added value.

There are many subjects currently dealt with in such a way that there is total confusion as to whether it is a national or a Community competence. An example could be the upcoming Commission communication on the planning of land use. Not only is property, by virtue of Article 295 of the Treaty, as it stands now, a national competence, but special planning, furthermore, is by definition a matter that can best be dealt with at the lowest level. Land-use planning aims at organising the territory in the light of the needs of the population that vary considerably as a result of different climatic, geographical, social and economic conditions of each region or state.

We believe that this kind of confusion as to who ought to do what and who does what is damaging for citizens' understanding of the European machinery. It is also harmful to the European Union itself because it allows the Member States to take advantage of this confusion to blame Europe for certain decisions they are themselves responsible for. In order to assure the full respect of this principle, the Convention should consider the creation of a specific monitoring body composed of European and national parliamentarians to evaluate the added value of each European decision -and hence the principle of subsidiarity.

In conclusion, we believe that land ownership performs a crucial role in the sustainable management of rural areas. Small and medium-sized enterprises and, in particular, family businesses are the most stable employers in the countryside. We would therefore ask the Convention to incorporate the preservation of a balanced, viable and sustainable countryside in harmony with its people and their activities, with nature and with the cities, into the missions of the European Union.

In the words of the European Countryside Movement, we are convinced that a genuine rural development policy is fundamental for the success of enlargement and to ensure the balanced structural development of all rural areas in an enlarged Europe. We all want the benefits of an improved environment but only some are able to produce it. We are therefore convinced that balance and harmony in the countryside can only be achieved if there is a fair payment for the production of environmental and cultural landscape services.

Le Président. – Ceci conclut les interventions du groupe « environnement ». J'ai une demande de parole et une carte bleue. La parole est à Monsieur Michael Frendo pour deux minutes.

EN

Frendo (Parl.-MT). - Mr President, if the principle of subsidiarity were applied to the sphere of the environment, it would inevitably be taken higher up rather than pushed lower down, because, since national frontiers are meaningless, the best place to take decisions regarding the environment is at European level.

Perhaps equally important is that Europe should be strong enough to influence not only European action but also action on a global level. There have indeed been many instances on a global level where it is clear that it is not enough being strong at European level. It is also important to be strong internationally because what happens in one country or a number of countries affects all the other countries in the world.

It is important, therefore, that we strengthen the European Union's action in this field, despite its success since the signing of the Single European Act and various other treaties.

My second point is that it is important to give serious consideration to the point raised by the groups from civil society that we should also have a distinctive right to a healthy environment. This distinctive right could be part of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, depending upon the application of this Charter. It is important that we emphasise that the environment is important by giving it a clear place in terms of rights in the Charter itself.

Basile (Parl.-IT). - Signor Presidente, mi rifaccio all'interessante contributo della signora Spooner e al successivo contributo della signora De Jonckheere. Credo che l'idea di realizzare una PARC sia molto interessante. Va, questo, nella direzione della multifunzionalità dell'agricoltura, dell'esigenza di creare attività comuni a più settori e anche della sostenibilità economica, non solo, appunto, ambientale. Occorre una rivoluzione come c'è stata agli inizi degli anni '90 grazie all'allora Commissario, oggi collega della Convenzione, Ray McSharry, il quale creò una politica agroambientale e forestale. C'è il problema, però, di come inserire tutte queste idee nel Trattato costitutivo; c'è inoltre il problema di fare i conti con il bilancio - vedi la posizione presa in questi giorni dalle autorità tedesche - e poi l'esigenza di organizzare un contributo per far sì che queste esigenze e quest'approccio vengano inseriti nel Trattato costitutivo. Vi è anche il problema di fare i conti con i paesi in via di adesione, che presentano forti problemi per quanto riguarda la materia ambientale e, infine, l'esigenza che quest'approccio sia sposato dalle organizzazioni internazionali.

Voggenhuber (PE). - Herr Präsident! Ich möchte mich bei den Vertretern der Zivilgesellschaft bedanken und ihnen sagen, wie wohl es tut, sie heute hier zu hören. Es gibt nämlich einen großen Unterschied, ob die Zivilgesellschaft von den Politikern beschworen wird oder ob sie selbst zu Wort kommt. Auch im Konvent wurde sie immer wieder als Stimmung gegen Europa beschworen, als Stimmung für die Renationalisierung, als Stimmung für die Rückverlagerung von Kompetenzen. Das, was sie heute gesagt und getan haben, hilft, den Blick auf die wirklichen Zukunftsfragen Europas zu lenken: die europäische Demokratie, die Grundrechte der Menschen auf europäischer Ebene, die europäische Sozialunion als eine angemessene Antwort auf die Globalisierung, die soziale und ökologische Nachhaltigkeit. Das sind tatsächlich die Probleme. Viele Konventsmitglieder haben sich in den vergangenen Wochen bemüht, genau diese Themen in den Konvent einzubringen, mit mäßigem Erfolg. Sehr oft wurde die Zivilgesellschaft als Zeuge dafür aufgerufen, dass die Zeit noch nicht reif ist, dass die Menschen noch nicht reif sind, dass Europa noch nicht reif ist, und ich danke Ihnen sehr dafür, heute diesen Spuk zerstört zu haben und selbst aufzutreten zu sein, um ein anderes Zeugnis abzugeben. Ein Vorredner hat vor der Flucht aus der nationalen Verantwortung gewarnt. Das, was in Wahrheit geschieht, ist die Flucht Europas aus der Verantwortung, und ich danke Ihnen dafür, dass Sie das klar gemacht haben.

Frerichs (NGO-ENVI), Représentant des Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschusses. - Herr Präsident, meine sehr verehrten Damen und Herren! Wir sind uns alle einig: Auftrag des Konvents ist es, die Verfassung der Europäischen Union zu entwerfen, und zwar nach demokratischen Prinzipien, um die Union und ihre Institutionen in die Lage zu versetzen, ihre Aufgaben transparent für das Verständnis der Bürger und effizient im Dienste der Bürger wahrzunehmen. Ich wünsche mir, dass es durch die Arbeit des Konvents möglich wird, diese Union, die als Union der Staaten entstanden ist, mehr und mehr zu einer Union der Bürger zu machen. Das wird nicht zu Lasten der Mitgliedstaaten und ihrer Regionen gehen; vielmehr wird das den Regionen und Staaten eine neue Legitimation verschaffen, da ihre gemeinsamen Probleme dadurch besser - weil im Einklang mit ihren Bürgern - bewältigt werden können.

In einer solchen demokratischen Union, die notwendigerweise nach föderalen Prinzipien organisiert sein muss, um angesichts der Vielfalt und Verschiedenheit der in der Union versammelten Staaten, Nationen und Kulturen funktionieren zu können, muss die Zivilgesellschaft einen Ort haben, an dem sich ihre Vertreter treffen und ihren gemeinsamen Willen zum Ausdruck bringen können, ihre gemeinsamen Forderungen formulieren und ihre gemeinsamen Vorschläge erarbeiten können. Diesen Ort bietet nach seiner Berufung durch den Vertrag ebenso wie nach Tradition und 44jähriger Praxis der Europäische Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschuss, dem die zukünftige Verfassung die Mittel und die Möglichkeit geben sollte, seine Rolle als institutionalisierte Repräsentanz der organisierten Zivilgesellschaft immer besser zu spielen.

Aufgrund meiner persönlichen Erfahrungen nach zwölf Jahren der Mitgliedschaft im EWSA und am Ende meiner zweijährigen Mandatszeit als Präsident dieser Institution möchte ich heute in Kenntnis der unterschiedlichen Auffassungen, die dazu auch im EWSA selbst bestehen, einige Vorschläge machen. Erstens schlage ich vor, ein transparentes Verfahren für die Auswahl und Ernennung der Mitglieder des Ausschusses einzuführen. Es müssen die Regeln dieses Verfahrens festgelegt werden. Es müssen die Voraussetzungen für eine Bewerbung beschrieben werden. Das Verfahren muss bekannt gemacht werden, die Entscheidungen müssen begründet werden. Quantitative oder qualitative Repräsentativität, zivilgesellschaftliche Präsenz, allgemeine Bedeutung, Engagement und Leistung zugunsten der Allgemeinheit, das sind die wichtigsten Kriterien, die der Auswahl der Organisationen, deren Vertreter in den Ausschuss entsandt werden, zugrunde gelegt werden müssen.

Zweitens schlage ich vor, die Bestimmung über die Zusammensetzung des EWSA folgendermaßen neu zu fassen. Der Ausschuss besteht aus Vertretern der Unternehmer- und Arbeitgeberverbände, aus Vertretern der Gewerkschaften und Arbeitnehmer sowie aus Vertretern anderer Organisationen der Zivilgesellschaft, die wirtschaftliche, soziale, kulturelle oder ideelle Zwecke im allgemeinen Interesse verfolgen. Mit dem Ausschuss der Regionen, der die politische und territoriale Subsidiarität verkörpert, steht der EWSA, der die gesellschaftliche und funktionale Subsidiarität verkörpert, in einem Verhältnis der Komplementarität. Beide Ausschüsse haben ihre Würde, ihre eigenen Aufgaben und eine jeweils besondere, jeweils anders geartete Bedeutung für die Bürger, auf deren Wohl und Interesse ihre Bemühungen ausgerichtet sind. Die Bürger sind auf den politischen Rahmen, in dem sie in den Gemeinden, Städten und Regionen leben, angewiesen. Ebenso brauchen die Bürger aber auch den gesellschaftlichen Rahmen, der von den Organisationen, Verbänden und Gewerkschaften dargestellt wird. Die Parität der Behandlung im institutionellen System der Europäischen Union gibt diesem Umstand einen angemessenen Ausdruck. Die gleichrangige Einbeziehung der zivilgesellschaftlichen wie der gebietskörperschaftlichen Dimension in die Meinungs- und Willensbildung der Union im Interesse einer optimalen governance macht Sinn, denn diese beiden Dimensionen ergänzen und befruchten sich gegenseitig.

Ich bin zuversichtlich, dass es gelingen wird, beide Dimensionen in der neuen Verfassungsordnung der Europäischen Union in einer Weise zur Geltung zu bringen, die über den Status quo weit hinausreichen wird und die ihrer Bedeutung für die Gestaltung unseres transnationalen Gemeinwesens besser gerecht wird.

Briesch (NGO-ENVI). – Monsieur le Président, Mesdames, Messieurs, l'Union Européenne repose sur des idéaux communs à l'ensemble des Etats membres qui associent les valeurs de base que sont la démocratie, les droits de l'homme, l'état de droit, de solidarité de cohésion, dans un esprit de dialogue et de recherche du consensus et d'un équilibre social. Ces différents éléments constituent, ce qu'on appelle à juste titre, le modèle social européen. Il est inscrit dans les traités instituant l'Union Européenne sous la forme d'objectifs généraux, notamment la réalisation d'un taux d'emploi élevé, d'un développement durable par le biais de la promotion du dialogue social, qui revient en priorité aux partenaires sociaux. Le dialogue social européen est un mécanisme qui dispose de pouvoirs législatifs. Il est clairement défini en terme de participants, de pouvoir et de procédure. Son statut est quasi constitutionnel. C'est la raison pour laquelle son rôle et sa responsabilité ne peuvent être transférés à d'autres politiques ou à d'autres acteurs. Toutefois, le Comité économique et social, institution que j'ai l'honneur de représenter ici avec mes collègues, a de par sa composition, un caractère divers et varié, et son activité est un élément essentiel du modèle européen. Il favorise le dialogue entre toutes les composantes de la société, en prenant en compte les préoccupations et les souhaits des citoyens au plus près des réalités, pour les formuler, les faire connaître au travers des avis et, de manière plus pratique, par le travail réalisé sur le terrain à tous les niveaux et dans tous les pays.

Le Comité n'est pas le forum du dialogue social. Toutefois, il devrait pouvoir, à la demande des partenaires sociaux ou d'autres organismes, élaborer des avis exploratoires sur des sujets nouveaux et importants. Le Comité tire sa légitimité du fait que tous ses membres, en vertu de leur expertise, ont été mandatés par des organisations représentatives des Etats membres pour jouer un rôle constructif dans le processus de formation d'opinions qui associe tous les acteurs de la société civile. Cet aspect doit être maintenu et précisé. La pérennité du Comité, le renforcement de son rôle est nécessaire. Il s'impose naturellement comme le lieu du dialogue civil, c'est à dire comme le représentant de la société civile organisée qui, au delà des associations d'employeurs ou de chefs d'entreprises et des syndicats, englobe également les organisations représentatives d'un grand nombre d'autres activités et intérêts.

Au delà du travail en cours concernant les compétences de l'Union, son rôle ou l'application la plus adéquate de la subsidiarité, il convient au préalable de préciser, affirmer ce que nous voulons faire ensemble, quelle Europe nous voulons et pourquoi faire. Dans ce sens, le Comité souhaite promouvoir l'aspect qualitatif en terme de légitimité démocratique d'amélioration des droits des citoyens via un Traité constitutionnel ou une Constitution qui intègre les différents aspects constituant le modèle social, notamment le plein emploi, les services d'intérêts généraux, l'égalité entre homme et femme ou l'économie sociale de marché. Ainsi, on obtiendrait une Union rassemblée, apte à prendre des décisions et à affirmer des propositions et des positions par l'extension du vote à la majorité qualifiée. On arriverait également à une gouvernance économique et sociale, accompagnée d'une simplification des instruments de la gouvernance économique. Enfin, cela aurait des effets sur le rôle et la place de l'Union dans le monde, en terme de paix, de liberté, de démocratie et de droits de l'homme. Cela favoriserait l'émergence d'un nouvel ordre économique ayant pour objectif l'éradication de la misère et de la pauvreté.

Dans cet esprit, l'Union doit jouer un rôle majeur dans la mise en oeuvre d'un nouvel équilibre mondial fondé sur la solidarité, la justice, la démocratie, les libertés sociales et civiques. De ce fait, nous attendons de la Convention une nouvelle définition des fondements constitutionnels de l'Union, dans un esprit fédéral et démocratique. Et, sur la base de ce qui a déjà été réalisé, nous plaçons pour un renforcement du modèle européen. L'histoire de nos pays montre que l'établissement des modèles sociaux n'est dû qu'en partie au pouvoir et à la législation et que la contribution des partenaires sociaux et les relations entre les organisations de la société civile ont été déterminantes. Leur créativité, leur capacité d'orientation de la société doivent trouver une place équivalente au niveau européen. De ce fait, il est essentiel que la Charte des droits fondamentaux soit incluse dans le traité ou dans la nouvelle Constitution. La cohésion sociale est un facteur essentiel de la formation d'une identité européenne, surtout dans la perspective des efforts requis pour intégrer les pays qui vont nous rejoindre. Tout en se reconnaissant dans les valeurs fondamentales défendues par la Charte, les pays européens ont des traditions, des cultures et des histoires différentes. Cette diversité est une richesse pour l'Europe qu'il convient de préserver.

La méthode communautaire doit demeurer la base de la future architecture institutionnelle de l'Union, qui se caractérise par un équilibre entre la diversité culturelle et l'unité politique, et permet au modèle social européen de se développer. L'expérience nous a appris que chaque fois qu'on met en oeuvre la méthode communautaire, on obtient des résultats satisfaisants. En effet, l'intérêt de l'Union n'est ni la somme des intérêts des Etats membres, ni leur plus petit dénominateur commun. Il ne peut donc pas être déterminé lors de négociations, au cours desquelles chaque participant dispose d'un droit de veto. En définitive, nous sommes convaincus que seule une structure fédérale et démocratique permet de s'attaquer, avec des chances de succès, aux problèmes d'ordre politique et pratique urgents, tout en donnant un sens à la citoyenneté de l'Union en consentant un effort constant dans la recherche de l'unité dans la diversité.

Sigmund (NGO-ENVI). - Herr Präsident! Der Europäische Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschuss, den ich als Beobachterin im Konvent vertreten darf, will, wie das auch meine Vorredner schon gesagt haben, aktiv und effektiv zum politischen Meinungsbildungsprozess beitragen. Seine Funktion steht dabei weder in Konkurrenz zu den Anhörungen des Europäischen Parlaments, noch ersetzt der Ausschuss die direkten Konsultationen der Kommission mit den Organisationen der Zivilgesellschaft. In diesem Selbstverständnis sind wir zwar institutionelle Plattform der organisierten Zivilgesellschaft, aber nicht deren Filter.

Wir wissen, dass auch für den Europäischen Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschuss Reformbedarf besteht. Einiges ist schon getan, Vieles ist noch zu tun. So sind beispielsweise wichtige europäische Nichtregierungsorganisationen nicht direkt im Ausschuss vertreten. Neben der heute von unserem Präsidenten, Herr Frerichs, gemachten Anregung, die Nominierungspraxis der Mitglieder neu zu überdenken, werden wir aber auch Wege finden und suchen, die Zusammenarbeit schon jetzt noch besser zu organisieren und zu strukturieren, um möglichst viele Kräfte der Zivilgesellschaft in unsere Arbeit einzubinden.

Lassen Sie mich kurz ein Thema berühren, das mir besonders am Herzen liegt, das der Kultur. Kultur ist die gemeinsame Handlungsgrundlage zivilgesellschaftlichen Handelns, vorausgesetzt, dass man Kultur in ihrer weitesten Definition als Bekenntnis zu gemeinsamen Werten versteht. Zur Kultur gehören neben der Erhaltung von bestehenden Gütern eben auch Erziehung, Bildung, Wissenschaft und Forschung, aber auch jeder öffentliche Diskurs, der auf gemeinsamen Wertvorstellungen basiert. Kultur als Prozess lässt gleichzeitig Vielfalt und Identifikation zu. Ich schlage deshalb vor, dass sich der Konvent in einer der Arbeitsgruppen auch mit der Definition des Kulturbegriffs beschäftigt und den Artikel 151 des Vertrages entsprechend weiterentwickelt.

Wir sind weiters der Ansicht, dass der Grundsatz der Solidarität nicht nur zur Demokratie gehört, sondern auch der Schlüssel zivilgesellschaftlichen Handelns ist. Daher schlage ich vor, neben dem Prinzip der Subsidiarität und dem Prinzip der Verhältnismäßigkeit auch Solidarität als leitendes Prinzip explizit in den Vertragstext aufzunehmen.

Wie bereits klargestellt wurde, hat der Europäische Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschuss mit dem sozialen Dialog nichts zu tun. Er ist der Ort des zivilen Dialogs. Wir sind entschlossen, diesen zivilen Dialog auf europäischer Ebene zu fördern und zu seiner Strukturierung beizutragen. Dazu ist es aber unerlässlich, dass alle, die vom zivilen Dialog sprechen, das selbe meinen. Wir definieren den zivilen Dialog als öffentlichen, interaktiven Diskurs, in den auch normative Inhalte einfließen können. Wir brauchen diesen zivilen Dialog nicht nur zur Schaffung einer europäischen Öffentlichkeit, als Grundlage einer europäischen Identität, sondern auch als transparentes, direktes und dauerhaftes Instrument der Beteiligung der Zivilgesellschaft.

Um diesen zivilen Dialog zu strukturieren, müssen bestimmte Vorfragen geklärt sein. Erstens: Am zivilen Dialog können nur Organisationen teilnehmen, die sowohl quantitativ als auch qualitativ repräsentativ sind, d.h., die neben einer möglichst umfassenden Vertretung der Betroffenen auch im Stande sind, aufgrund ihrer Organisation und Expertise substantiell zu diesem Dialog beizutragen.

Zweitens: Wir müssen unterscheiden zwischen Konsultation und Partizipation. Partizipation als Oberbegriff ist nicht nur Recht auf Anhörung, sondern darüber hinaus aktive Beteiligung am Meinungsbildungsprozess, der dem Legislativprozess vorausgeht.

Drittens: Wir müssen die verschiedenen Aspekte der Subsidiarität berücksichtigen. Subsidiarität umfasst eben nicht nur den vertikalen, territorialen, sondern auch den horizontalen, funktionalen Aspekt. Ich schlage vor, dass sich der Konvent mit dem Verfahren und den Inhalten des zivilen Dialogs auseinandersetzt und die Teilnahmebedingungen diskutiert. Ort der Entwicklung des zivilen Dialogs kann der Europäische Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschuss mit seinen vorhandenen Strukturen und Erfahrungen sein. Ich rege daher an, dass der Konvent eine Arbeitsgruppe "Ziviler Dialog" bildet. Ich bin sicher, dass die im Europäischen Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschuss eingerichtete Dialogrunde mit den Vertretern der Zivilgesellschaft, an der auch regelmäßig Präsident Dehaene teilnimmt, bereit und im Stande ist, einer solchen Arbeitsgruppe konstruktive Beiträge zu liefern.

Maij-Weggen (PE). - Voorzitter, dank u wel dat u me nog de gelegenheid geeft om iets te zeggen. Ik wilde nog reageren op wat de vertegenwoordiger van het European Environmental Bureau heeft gezegd, namelijk dat het ontbreken van een hoofdartikel over dierenbescherming een hele lastige kwestie is. Ik wil dat graag onderstrepen. De Europese Unie maakt al sinds de jaren '80 dierenbeschermingswetgeving. We hebben importstops gekregen op ivoor, op zeehondenvellen, op walvisproducten, we hebben het transport van dieren geregeld, we hebben kalverboxen en legbatterijen afgeschaft en toch is er eigenlijk geen enkel artikel in de Verdragen dat ons toestemming geeft om dat te doen. Die wetgeving wordt altijd aangehaakt aan externe handel, aan landbouw of aan milieuwetgeving. Ik denk dat het juridisch gezien heel belangrijk is dat er een artikel komt dat echt op dierenbescherming gericht is. Daarmee zouden we heel veel burgers een plezier doen en bovendien zouden we daarmee de juridische correctheid van het werk van de Europese Commissie ondersteunen. Dus ik wil dat punt van de vertegenwoordiger van het European Environmental Bureau onderstrepen. Misschien zou het goed zijn als een van ons met zo'n voorstel kwam. Het is een kleinigheid maar het is wel heel nuttig en belangrijk. Veel burgers zullen het met dankbaarheid zien.

PRÉSIDENCE DE Mr GISCARD D'ESTAING

Le Président.- Je souhaiterais dire un mot sur le décès de Monsieur Pierre Werner, survenu aujourd'hui au Luxembourg. Monsieur Pierre Werner a été un homme d'état qui a joué un rôle très important dans la construction de l'Europe. Nous l'avons connu dès le départ lorsque le Luxembourg était pays fondateur de l'Union européenne. Il a été successivement et longuement, ministre des Finances, puis président du Conseil du Luxembourg. Lorsqu'on a entamé la première réflexion sur la possibilité d'une union monétaire européenne, ses collègues, ministres des Finances de l'Europe des six de l'époque, l'ont chargé de présenter un rapport sur la possibilité de réaliser une union monétaire. Ce rapport qui reste connu dans l'histoire communautaire sous le nom de rapport Werner, a posé de façon lointaine les bases de la culture de l'Union européenne. Plus particulièrement, il a fortement insisté sur la convergence nécessaire des situations économiques et des politiques économiques, comme condition du succès de l'Union monétaire. Monsieur Werner était un homme très respecté de ses collègues et très aimé pour sa tolérance, sa modération et son grand humanisme. C'est pour cela que je vous demanderai de bien vouloir respecter une minute de silence, en souvenir de ce grand homme européen.

Amato (Vicepresidente). - Presidente, colleghi, il gruppo che io ho cominciato a coordinare è un gruppo che ha caratteristiche peculiari, in parte diverse da quelle di altri gruppi. E', infatti, composto largamente da istituti universitari, centri di ricerca - quelli che chiamiamo think tanks - organizzazioni giovanili che si occupano prevalentemente, o quasi esclusivamente, di Europa, organizzazioni femminili e organismi scientifici. Nel suo insieme, perciò, il gruppo si rivolge alla Convenzione, non presentando le ragioni di un interesse sociale o collettivo specifico - l'ambiente, i diritti degli animali, l'agricoltura - ma facendo lobby per l'Europa: il suo interesse specifico prevalente è l'Europa, l'organizzazione dell'Europa, le Istituzioni europee, ciò che l'Europa dovrebbe fare.

E' un gruppo, dunque, particolarmente vicino al lavoro che la Convenzione sta facendo e interessato a contribuire ad ogni aspetto di questo lavoro. E' un vero peccato che non possano parlare tutti; è stato molto difficile scegliere quelli che potessero parlare. Si sa, il mondo dell'Accademia ha realizzato, ben prima che Ulrich Beck se ne accorgesse, la società degli individui, e gli individui, in genere, parlano ciascuno per sé: sono otto quindi quelli che parleranno per questo gruppo. Credo che abbiamo il record quanto a numero di partecipanti: è comunque un record e ne siamo orgogliosi. Spero che ciascuno sappia attenersi al suo tempo di parola di tre minuti. Comunque abbiamo programmato di vederci ancora: a tutti noi è piaciuto il primo incontro del gruppo di contatto. Contiamo di incontrarci ancora, e contiamo, con questo gruppo, di seguire i lavori della Convenzione attraverso i documenti di cui dispone e anche attraverso i documenti dei gruppi di lavoro della Convenzione stessa, al di là delle singole idee che il gruppo ha già cominciato a fornire, con particolare riguardo, naturalmente, ai temi dell'organizzazione, anche scientifica, che stavano a cuore ad alcuni dei partecipanti.

Voglio qui sottolineare, tra le diverse idee che già sono emerse, quella che ha trovato il consenso più ampio. Proprio per la peculiarità delle caratteristiche dei partecipanti a questo gruppo questi organismi sono ben consapevoli di non rappresentare interamente la società civile. Vorrei che tutti i partecipanti a questo nostro lavoro fossero consapevoli del fatto che la società civile è costituita da milioni e milioni di cittadini europei, che nessuna delle nostre organizzazioni in realtà riesce a rappresentare, e che il lavoro della Convenzione va a quei cittadini, e deve stabilire un contatto con quei cittadini. Come farlo? Questa è una domanda che il nostro gruppo si è posto. Organizzare, sia pure informalmente, un referendum tra i cittadini europei? I giovani hanno proposto: "Prepariamo un manifesto, un manifesto chiaro e semplice; facciamo valutare questo manifesto dai nostri cittadini". E' un'idea che la Convenzione dovrà valutare e che magari dovrà cercare di realizzare con i soldi della Commissione o del Parlamento o del Consiglio, dato che noi, Convenzione, abbiamo molte idee ma pochi soldi per realizzarle.

Louis (NGO-ACAD). – Mon intention n'est pas de m'adresser à votre Convention pour exposer les objectifs et les travaux réalisés par Agora, un réseau créé en 2001, hors de tout esprit de chapelle ou de volonté impérialiste, à l'initiative du mouvement européen international afin de tenter d'assurer une réflexion en commun d'instituts, associations et réseaux de recherche en matière européenne. Je souhaite plutôt profiter de cette brève occasion pour tenter de traduire les sentiments et la volonté d'observateurs attentifs de la scène européenne à un moment capital de l'histoire de l'intégration. Nous ressentons tous l'importance exceptionnelle des défis auxquels l'Union et le monde sont confrontés, je ne vous ferai pas l'affront de penser qu'il est nécessaire de vous les rappeler.

Aujourd'hui, au sein de votre Convention, des choses impensables hier encore sont devenues possibles. Un momentum s'est créé. Soyez assurés que le monde académique qui n'a pas de revendication sectorielle à formuler, ainsi que l'a rappelé le Président Amato, appuie et soutient majoritairement la Convention dans la définition de solutions audacieuses. Agora a été de ceux qui ont plaidé pour un agenda ambitieux et pour une tâche de nature constitutionnelle. Il a été comblé sur ces deux points par la déclaration de Laeken.

Aujourd'hui comme hier, la responsabilité des universitaires est, d'une part, de poursuivre la recherche fondamentale et, d'autre part, de suivre, voire de précéder la réflexion qui est menée au sein des groupes de travail que vous avez créés. Il y a là des agendas certes incomplets mais à propos desquels existe un acquis considérable, et des juristes, des politologues et des économistes qui réfléchissent à la construction européenne. Nous sommes prêts à vous aider et nous souhaitons continuer à être effectivement consultés pour trouver des solutions adaptées à l'Europe unifiée, tout en préservant ce qui a fait le succès de l'intégration, ce que l'on appelle modestement l'acquis communautaire et les traits fondamentaux de son ordre juridique. Une certaine expertise s'est également développée dans le domaine de la restructuration et de la simplification des Traités, notamment à l'Institut universitaire européen de Florence. Celui-ci a décidé de poursuivre cette tâche, en particulier au sein du Centre Robert Schuman. A cet effet, je crois que l'occasion est bonne pour ajouter que le Centre Robert Schuman vient de créer une Chaire Pierre Werner sur l'Union Monétaire.

Les universitaires ont aussi une responsabilité fondamentale à l'égard de la société civile dans son ensemble. Ils doivent, dans des circonstances historiques, sortir de ce qu'on appelle souvent leur tour d'ivoire, pour contribuer à bâtir le consensus indispensable afin que cette volonté ambitieuse et légitime de doter l'Europe unifiée d'une Charte Constitutionnelle ou d'un Traité Constitutionnel efficace et démocratique soit couronnée de succès. Ce défi, qui est le vôtre, est aussi celui de la communauté académique.

Deloche-Gaudez (NGO-ACAD). – Comme beaucoup d'entre vous ici, nous estimons que cette Convention est une chance pour l'Europe mais en même temps, nous ne pouvons nous empêcher d'être un peu inquiets. Tout d'abord, nous sommes inquiets car la tâche de la Convention est de produire un texte nouveau, de nature constitutionnelle, qui dessine une Union dans laquelle les Européens se reconnaissent. Or, après plusieurs mois de travaux, la Convention n'a pas encore produit de texte. Bien sûr, la complexité du chantier engagé peut l'expliquer mais, en même temps, la difficulté même de la tâche invite à ne pas trop repousser la phase de rédaction. Une autre source de préoccupation provient de ce que seule une minorité d'Européen connaît l'existence même de la Convention. C'est pourquoi nous aimerions attirer votre attention sur deux points.

Le premier point est l'importance décisive des groupes de travail au sein de la Convention. Compte tenu de la taille de votre assemblée, compte tenu de votre mandat extrêmement exigeant, compte tenu du choix de privilégier la recherche du consensus, la rédaction de projets de document final par les conventionnels eux-mêmes semble essentiellement pouvoir s'opérer via les groupes de travail. En effet, les groupes de travail permettent aux conventionnels, y compris aux représentants des pays candidats, de s'atteler à un travail de rédaction et de le faire en concertation régulière, notamment avec des représentants du monde académique, qui peuvent ainsi mettre leur expertise au service de la Convention, en particulier sur des points juridiques précis.

Le deuxième point concerne les relations entre la Convention et les Européens. On peut penser qu'il est dans l'intérêt même de la Convention de s'attacher le plus grand nombre possible d'Européens, ne serait-ce que pour renforcer la légitimité des résultats obtenus par rapport à la conférence intergouvernementale sensée y faire suite. Pour y arriver, je mentionnerai trois pistes possibles. Premièrement, comme évoqué au sein de notre groupe de travail, il s'agira d'utiliser des termes précis, clairs, simples, dès lors qu'il s'agit d'Europe, et certains représentants du monde académique sont prêts à participer à cet effort de simplification du vocabulaire. Deuxièmement, il s'agira d'appeler à privilégier l'approbation du texte fondateur résultant de ce processus par referendum dans les Etats Membres, et réfléchir à la question d'un referendum européen. En effet, on peut penser qu'il faut donner du pouvoir au citoyen européen, pour qu'il s'intéresse à la Convention, et dire dès à présent qu'il aura ce pouvoir. Et quel meilleur pouvoir que le vote qui, de surcroît, peut devenir le vecteur d'une identité européenne partagée. Troisièmement, il s'agira de davantage s'appuyer sur l'université qui représente tout de même quatorze millions d'étudiants, de jeunes qui vivront dans l'Europe de demain et qui peuvent être une force de mobilisation et de proposition formidables. En témoigne le succès d'un projet pédagogique inédit lancé par les départements Sciences Politiques l'an dernier, qui ont, à partir de nouveaux enseignements des étudiants de Sciences Politiques mais aussi des universités partenaires des départements Sciences Politiques en Europe, rédigé un manifeste pour l'Europe qu'ils ont adressé à la convention.

Monsieur le Président, Mesdames et Messieurs les Conventionnels, je voudrais conclure mon intervention en vous remerciant de nous écouter, en vous souhaitant sincèrement bonne chance et en espérant que nous, représentants du monde académique, experts comme étudiants, pourrions et saurons contribuer à votre aventure.

Hughes (NGO-ACAD). – Mr President, I represent a Europe-wide network of think tanks called EPIN, the European Policy Institutes Network. We have 34 think tanks in all 28 EU Member States and applicant countries.

We have been meeting in Brussels monthly, having an ongoing dialogue with some members of the Convention and we hope to have an opportunity to have a dialogue with all members of the Convention at our network meetings over the coming years.

I would also like to mention another network, TEPSA, the Trans-European Policy Studies Association, which is also developing analysis to input to the Convention.

As you might imagine in a large group of think tanks, EPIN has no single, unique, uniform view on the future of Europe. I would like, therefore, to present some short comments on two areas drawn from our recent discussions.

First a few key points on democracy and institutions. We need to democratise the Commission. We do not believe there is adequate legitimacy at the moment. The election of the Commission President by the European Parliament or by national parliaments is the route forward.

Secondly, we agree that national parliaments should play a greater role and should be involved in controlling subsidiarity, possibly through a new committee within the Council. We find positive the idea, put forward by Michel Barnier, of national MPs attending the Council in legislative mode, together with their ministers.

On the controversial idea of a new President of the European Council, we have diverging views on this in our network. Some of us find it entirely negative and something that would upset the institutional balance, others stress the positive element of continuity and leadership. We all agree that we do not want to see a directoire developing in Europe.

We also look forward to the Convention, and not only the Council, putting forward its views on this.

Secondly, we must strengthen the Common Foreign and Security Policy, the question is how fast we can do this. First of all, even if we are not going to do this in the other pillars we must abolish the rotating presidency in the CFSP. We must strengthen the position of the High Representative and the coordination of that office with the Commission. More detailed strategic orientations are needed for the CFSP, and we must look at its budgetary provisions, which are currently extremely low, if we are serious about it. We must increase coordination across the different dimensions of EU international policy, some of us would go further and merge the three pillars.

In conclusion I would welcome the work and structure of the Convention and the opportunity to address you here today. We are ready to contribute our expertise to your work and to your working groups. In that regard I would make one call to the Convention: you are meeting here today in the open, in public, in consultation with us: we hope you will do the same with your working groups.

Crossick (NGO-ACAD). – Mr President, in three minutes I cannot do justice to the extensive work which the European Policy Centre is carrying out on the Convention, but you would not want me to, it is all on our website and on display outside.

I wish to focus on one issue, the appointment of the President of the Commission: a point which was made by the preceding speaker and which I would like to develop further. We believe it essential that the Commission President has a democratic mandate. At the same time, we believe it essential that there should be a development of true European politics, as the Union progresses from a diplomatic towards a democratic polity. This belief is independent of reform of the presidency of the European Council or of the Council.

As the Seville discussions showed, the more you look at these presidencies, the more problems arise. We do not see the leadership of the Commission and the leadership of the European Council as an "either/or" battle. We need both strong European Council leadership and strong Commission leadership and therefore feel that both should be strengthened in the forthcoming ITC.

If we are to achieve political legitimacy for the European Union; if we are to persuade our citizens to buy into the process; the European Union must be politicised. We must have truly European political parties built on real policy alternatives. Voters must be given the choice between different visions of Europe and between different leaders and teams. This holds true whatever the issues being addressed. Our recommendation, therefore, is that European political groups nominate their candidates for the Commission presidency before the European Parliament elections, that Parliament elects the President from among those nominated and that the European Council confirms the appointment by qualified majority voting.

We understand the possible concern about the Commission being politicised. In our opinion, there is no other way to deliver both democracy and legitimacy. Although this procedure legally requires a treaty amendment, the system could in practice be introduced for the 2004 elections were the European Council and Parliament to agree.

I wish you every success in the critically important task that lies ahead of you.

Joannin (NGO-ACAD). – Nous sommes ici finalement pour continuer cette formidable aventure qu'a lancée le président Robert Schuman le neuf mai mi neuf cent cinquante. Imaginer l'Europe du vingt et unième siècle, c'est bien sûr réussir l'élargissement mais c'est aussi répondre aux interrogations que formulent les Européens face aux nouveaux défis qui nous sont posés. C'est, enfin, donner un visage et des institutions à notre Europe. C'est la raison pour laquelle je souhaiterais que vous soyez le plus ambitieux possible. Offrez une vraie Constitution à l'Europe, un vrai texte fondateur qui à la fois rappelle les grands principes de civilisation que nous partageons, et permet de régler le fonctionnement harmonieux de l'Union. Il ne faut pas seulement un Traité de plus, qui ne susciterait que la molle adhésion des Européens mais une vraie Constitution qui déterminerait les compétences que l'Union doit absolument assumer et celles qui doivent être exercés au plus près des citoyens pas forcément par l'Etat, mais éventuellement par des collectivités encore plus proches d'eux.

En matière économique, on pourrait imaginer une Union qui se doterait de prérogatives essentielles à la préparation de l'avenir dans le domaine de l'utilisation des nouvelles technologies, de la recherche ou de la biotechnologie. En effet, il s'agit là de choses que les citoyens comprennent et désirent. Ils voient bien que l'Europe a du retard. Tout ce qui concerne le long terme doit être partagé au niveau de l'Union et confié à ses soins. Et pour cela, l'Europe doit disposer d'un budget beaucoup plus important. C'est alors seulement que pourront être traités les grandes questions sociales.

En matière culturelle, il faut favoriser l'Europe des réseaux, faire que les Européens se comprennent mieux et se connaissent mieux entre eux, et surtout avoir la capacité de lancer, dans la durée, une vraie politique culturelle d'aide et de soutien à la création. En effet, l'Europe est avant tout un continent de cultures.

Enfin, dans le domaine politique, quel est le projet de l'Europe? Quels sont les objectifs que nous poursuivons et qui nous imposent de nous unir? Comme au premier jour, la paix et la sécurité sont gages de la prospérité. Il faut assurer en outre la sécurité extérieure et intérieure de l'Union. Selon moi, les gens sont prêts désormais à l'accepter mais il convient d'aller plus loin que ce qu'on a fait jusqu'à présent. En effet, nous n'avons pas peur de dire que nous souhaitons une Europe fédérale, dont le principe est de permettre à la diversité de s'unir pour obtenir l'efficacité. Nous souhaitons un Parlement plus proche de ses électeurs, une deuxième chambre qui représente les Etats, quelle qu'en soit la composition, et un vrai gouvernement, responsable et accessible.

Mesdames et Messieurs les Conventionnels, vous avez reçu un très large mandat. Ne décevez pas les Européens. Il faut être très ambitieux. Les véritables novations constitutionnelles ont toujours été le fruit du travail inspiré et volontaire d'hommes et de femmes qui se sont placés au-dessus des simples contingences politiques du moment. Les Américains de Philadelphie n'ont pas hésité à le faire, et personne ne le leur a reproché. Les citoyens européens sont beaucoup plus favorables à la construction européenne qu'on ne l'avoue généralement. Ils veulent plus d'Europe, et sont plus Européens que leurs dirigeants. Ils savent que l'échelon communautaire est bien plus approprié que celui des Etats pour mener à bien certaines tâches. Alors dans votre ambition et vos audaces, Messieurs les Conventionnels ou Mesdames les Conventionnelles, vous ne devez penser qu'au jugement de l'histoire. Nous sommes avec vous et à vos côtés dans cette noble mission.

Rodota (NGO-ACAD). – Mr President, as Director-General of the European Space Agency, I am representing EIROForum (European Intergovernmental Research Organisations Forum), the association of European intergovernmental research organisations set up in line with the "European Research Area" initiative launched by the Commissioner responsible for research, Philippe Busquin. It comprises seven institutions, each of which has its own research centre, or places first class facilities at the disposal of European scientists.

These institutions are: ESA (European Space Agency), CERN (European Organisation for Nuclear Research), ESO (European Southern Observatory), EMBL (European Molecular Biology Laboratory), EFDA (European Fusion Development Agreement), ESRF (European Synchrotron Radiation Facility) and finally ILL (Institute Laue-Langevin).

Each of the EIROForum member organisations, by European and global standards, is indisputably a centre of excellence in its own field.

EIROForum seeks to mobilise the collective experience of its member organisations in fundamental research and management of large international projects for the benefit of European research, doing so in cooperation with industry. In addressing the Convention, EIROForum confirms its complete support of the Presidency Conclusions of the Barcelona European Council, which set an objective to raise expenditure on research to 3% of the GDP of all Member States by 2010.

EIROForum trusts that the EU will confirm its commitment to European scientific research in particular, by broadening the scope of the relevant title, especially with regard to the objectives defined in Article 163.

EIROForum proposes to establish permanent relations between the Community and each of the EIROForum member organisations so that the Community will be able to take part in preparation of its members' activities which have a bearing on Community policies.

EIROForum requests, on behalf of its member organisations, a right of direct access to the institutions of the European Union so that they may support the adoption of legislative or regulatory measures, consistent with the policies of the EU, which would be useful or necessary to implement initiatives that such organisations may wish to pursue.

Freixes (NGO-ACAD). - Señor Presidente, señoras y señores, la Red Ciudadanas de Europa acoge con gran satisfacción e interés la oportunidad de participar en la consulta de la Convención Europea. La Red ha advertido en diferentes ocasiones del déficit democrático que supone la ausencia de equilibrio de género en la composición de la Convención. Desde la Red consideramos que, en este proceso tan importante para el futuro de una Europa ampliada, no se pueden realizar sólo cambios formales en los Tratados para definir mejor las competencias y adaptar las instituciones a las nuevas necesidades, sino que se tienen que sentar las bases para una Europa más fuerte, más democrática, más libre y con una calidad de género adecuada.

Para ello, proponemos que el mainstreaming de género o transversalidad de la igualdad, reconocido ya en los artículos 2 y 3 del Tratado de la Comunidad Europea, dentro del respeto al acervo comunitario, esté presente en todas las políticas de la Unión, como fin y como medio. La Red exhorta a la Convención a que adopte un enfoque de mainstreaming de género en sus propios trabajos y a que introduzca la evaluación del impacto de género en sus decisiones.

En aplicación del acervo comunitario sobre igualdad de oportunidades, las nuevas instituciones de la Unión han de incorporar el principio de la representación equilibrada en los procesos de toma de decisiones. Para ello, el Parlamento Europeo debe ser elegido mediante un sistema electoral que incorpore la representación equilibrada como uno de los principios fundamentales a respetar en su configuración.

La Comisión Europea debería cambiar la ubicación de los órganos responsables de la política de igualdad creando una Dirección General de Igualdad integrada directamente en la Presidencia de la Comisión y transversal al resto de direcciones generales. Y la institución del Defensor del Pueblo debería ser reforzada con mejores instrumentos de protección de los derechos, nombrándose un defensor o defensora adjunto especializado en género.

Las políticas de la Unión también deben incorporar la necesaria calidad de género en sus contenidos. Para ello es necesario que se introduzca en el Tratado constitucional un título específico sobre la igualdad de oportunidades y, además, sería también necesario crear, con base constitucional, un observatorio de género como órgano independiente para hacer el seguimiento de las políticas de igualdad en el ámbito de la Unión Europea.

Por otra parte, consideramos que la Carta de los Derechos Fundamentales debe ser incluida en los textos constitucionales de la Unión, con respeto total del acervo comunitario y de la jurisprudencia del Tribunal de Justicia en materia de igualdad de oportunidades.

Por último, como fundadoras e integrantes de la Red Euromed de Mujeres, consideramos que la Unión debe condicionar sus relaciones con terceros países al respeto de los derechos fundamentales, incluyendo los derechos de las mujeres como parte indivisible de los derechos humanos universales. Europa ha de constituir un referente de calidad política en el orden internacional. El proceso de constitucionalización está siendo seguido con gran atención tanto en los países candidatos a la ampliación como en otros continentes, que esperan encontrar en el ejemplo europeo los modelos de legitimidad, igualdad, libertad, justicia social y calidad de género. Instamos a la Convención a que no defraude las expectativas abiertas por este proceso.

Lorant (NGO-ACAD). – Mr President, the candidate countries and their one hundred million citizens look at membership of the EU with hopes and with fears. With hopes that they will be part of a strong, democratic and developing community that helps the development of their nations. With fears that their economies will have to face the competition of much stronger forces and their sovereignty and national identity might be eroded.

To find a political and economic solution that is advantageous for the west and helps the development of the east is a great challenge for the Convention. To unite the technological knowledge of the west with the natural and human resources of the east provides us with good possibilities for cooperation.

The common values we share might be the solid basis for this cooperation. According to a poll carried out by Hungarian civil society organisations and a think tank named ECOSTAT, the Hungarian civil society groups share almost the same values as their western counterparts.

For instance, the great majority of these organisations in the west and the east believe that the new Europe should be built on the principles of democracy and solidarity. Instead of the free market economy, a socially responsible market economy would be in concordance with European values and should be the basis for a common European identity.

These civil organisations are aware that a common Europe has the capacity to defend the social market economy as its own model of development against the uncontrollable forces of globalisation and can present it to the less developed countries as a successful way of pursuing lasting progress.

It turned out from our poll, and it was somewhat of a surprise, that two-thirds of the respondents were ready to sacrifice 1% to 5% of their income to help the progress of the less developed nations of south-east Europe. I do not believe that the feeling of solidarity is weaker in the west. To create pan-European solidarity, we need common goals, common visions that touch the heart of the people, that are worth fighting for.

Many say, and this also came out of our poll, that Europeans need a single voice. In order to have a single voice, we first need a common awareness. To reach a common awareness, we need a common broadcasting system without the distortions created by profit-seeking interests. We need some kind of "Voice of Europe" which, on the basis of the values we share, gives us information about each other's lives, about our joy and sadness, about our hopes and fears.

Half a century ago, Jean Monnet and Robert Schuman were able to show a road, a programme for peaceful cooperation between nations that were enemies a few years earlier. This was an innovation.

After 50 years of separation, bringing together nations from the two parts of Europe now requires innovation, a new approach that ensures another 50 years of peace and prosperity.

Attalidis (Gouv.-CY). – Mr President, I would say that in order for this Convention to be successful it has to do many things, and these surely include the two following elements, in which universities and think tanks can have an important contribution.

The first is that the Convention has to bear clearly in mind the wishes of European citizens. Many in the Convention have spoken of this need, to bear in mind what European citizens think about the European Union, what they are satisfied and dissatisfied about and what their concerns for the future are. Academic institutions and think tanks have contributed to our knowledge about this, and it would be very useful if we had their scientific input on a continuing basis about these issues. Some in the Convention have mentioned a referendum, but there are also other less dramatic but scientific methods which could be used.

Another prerequisite for the success of the Convention is the generation of ideas which contribute to better functioning of the institutions, greater effectiveness, greater democracy and legitimacy of the European Union.

Again, university institutions and think tanks have a great deal to contribute. We have heard many useful suggestions from the eight representatives here this evening. It would be useful if we could find a way for the continuing association of universities and think tanks with the Convention. Their continuing contribution could be very useful.

Duff (PE). – Mr President, it is a curious feature of European integration that many of those who practise it really wish to be scholars, and many of those who study it actually wish to practise it. The result of that cross-dressing makes the academic study of European integration extremely sharp and rich. If there is a central intellectual problem that we face, and I would appeal for assistance from my scholar friends here, that problem is to define precisely where the executive authority lies inside the Union and to clarify precisely its dual nature. One subject which should be more of a focus for enquiry than it is at present is the strange creature of the European Council, which has become slightly stranger since the Seville Summit.

I would ask that what we say and propose be subjected to strong criticism. Our contributions require strong critique so that we are forced to think and speak more clearly.

Finally, please stimulate the debate within universities and call on us to assist you in fomenting a clear, critical appraisal of all the issues in front of us.

Hübner (Gouv.-PL). – Mr President, my brief comments might be slightly biased by the fact that I do not only represent the government of Poland but also come from the academic community. That, however, is not the only reason I highly value the role of the academic community in shaping European integration and the future of Europe.

We had started to work hand in hand with the academic community on the future of Europe long before the Convention was launched. Our transition, our association process, our accession process, and now our Convention process are living examples of close cooperation, shared responsibility and the shared role between the political and academic communities. What academia brings are, firstly, fresh and visionary ideas, which are currently lacking. It also puts an end to political correctness - of which there is too much at the moment. Academia also gives us the chance to think the unthinkable and then to make it happen.

My main message today, however, would be that the academic community is not only an expert, it is not only a think tank. It is also an essential educator and its role, therefore, is also to present the European project to young European citizens in such a way that they do not see it as cast in stone by us, but rather as a living project. It is also important that they see the reformed European Union as a project which they will take over from us, not just to implement but also to continue.

Muscardini (PE). - Signor Presidente, il mondo accademico dalla sua nascita ha rappresentato la cultura nel suo aspetto più ampio, e oggi la cultura europea non è la somma pedissequa delle culture e delle tradizioni nazionali ma l'insieme di queste culture che contribuiscono a mettere a confronto esperienze e speranze e costituiscono quel valore aggiunto che è e sarà la cultura europea di questo terzo millennio. Per questo motivo riteniamo fondamentale che il rapporto tra Istituzioni europee ed ambienti accademici diventi sempre più forte e coordinato. Il mondo della ricerca lamenta che a questo settore l'Europa non abbia dato sufficiente attenzione politica ed economica e anche questo è un problema che la Convenzione deve affrontare. La Convenzione che definirà, per quanto le compete, i nuovi compiti per le Istituzioni europee e la nuova Europa che designerà il futuro di milioni di cittadini che chiedono più informazione, più consultazione e confronto, maggiore partecipazione, dovrà affrontare e risolvere il problema di dare una maggiore attenzione alla ricerca scientifica, la quale, a sua volta, dovrà rispondere a esigenze etiche: la scienza non può stravolgere le leggi di natura al punto da creare forme di vita diverse da quelle esistenti.

La nuova Europa dovrà avere un rapporto istituzionale con il mondo accademico affinché la ricerca e la conoscenza, che nelle loro forme più variegata sono indiscutibile mezzo di unione e comprensione reciproca, abbiano la stessa attenzione che dedichiamo all'economia e alla finanza. La cultura della politica e la politica della cultura, dunque, per ridare fiducia ai giovani: il loro distacco dalla politica, infatti, è il segno più evidente del distacco della politica dalla società. Con un rapporto più stretto tra Europa e università, tra Istituzioni europee e centri di elaborazione del pensiero, di analisi della realtà, di studio del futuro, potremo ridare segnali chiari e progetti attuabili ai cittadini, sia dell'Unione sia dei paesi ai quali ci rivolgiamo, per contribuire a migliorare le condizioni di vita e le condizioni sociali.

Serracino-Ingloft (Gouv.-MT). – Mr President, academics are often accused of narcissism, but I do not think that today's speakers have displayed too pronounced a tendency towards self-contemplation. Yet their specific role in the governance of Europe surely deserves a lot more attention than it has received. We are now recognising that there is a very special role to be fulfilled by wise men in the variable workings of democracy. Indeed, a role similar to that of the elders in kinship-based societies is now appearing to be taken up by think tanks. Many democracies, such as the United Kingdom, have institutions like the House of Lords which are now almost exclusively restricted to fulfilling this function. Many other democracies have sought to give places in their senates and other upper chambers to experts, in virtue of their expertise.

In the Working Group on Subsidiarity, to which I belong, we call upon experts to advise us. In the Convention as a whole we have not yet given sufficient attention to the best way of integrating experts into the European political network.

Our best academics and think tanks have chosen not to highlight self-description in their contribution, rather, they have exemplified what they can do by their contributions. It may have been noticed that, on behalf of the Government of Malta, I have been modestly promoting here the model of Network Europe.

Duhamel (PE). – Merci Monsieur le Président, et surtout merci à mes amis universitaires d'avoir ramené un peu de passion dans nos débats. Très franchement, la jeunesse de Jean-Victor Louis fait plaisir à entendre, sans compter Florence Deloche, Stanley Crossick, Pascal Joannin etc. Je crois que deux mille trois peut être l'année de toutes les espérances, avec la réunification de l'Europe et avec, je l'espère, le Traité constitutionnel que nous proposerons. Mais deux mille quatre risque d'être l'année de tous les dangers parce que, forcément, l'un ou l'autre de ces thèmes seront soumis dans beaucoup de pays à référendum, et cela sera une nouvelle occasion pour les populistes de se soulever une fois de plus contre l'Europe. Afin d'éviter cela, nous avons besoin de nos amis universitaires. Les universitaires sont les professeurs, les professeurs sont les étudiants, les étudiants sont les jeunes. Ce sont ceux qui veulent l'Europe et ce sont ceux pour lesquels nous faisons l'Europe. Par conséquent, je propose que ce groupe de contact continue à travailler, se mette en relation avec l'Institut universitaire européen de Florence afin de lui demander de nous préparer des documents techniques utiles notamment sur la simplification, le Président de notre Convention insiste là-dessus à juste titre. Nous lui demanderons également des propositions terminologiques et des propositions d'éléments de Traité non plus à droit constant mais en fonction de l'évolution de travaux de la convention. Ce serait une manière de continuer avec eux les grandes batailles de demain. Merci.

Carnero González (PE). - Señor Presidente, la igualdad entre el hombre y la mujer es efectivamente, y al mismo tiempo, un principio, un objetivo y una misión de la Unión Europea. Por eso, quiero subrayar la importancia de las palabras pronunciadas por D<sup>a</sup>. Teresa Freixes, en nombre de la Red Ciudadanas de Europa, exigiendo dos cosas esencialmente a nuestro trabajo. La primera, que en la propuesta de constitución europea que hagamos se incluya una base jurídica que haga de la política en favor de la plena igualdad entre el hombre y la mujer algo presente y primordial en todas las actuaciones de la Unión. Y la segunda cuestión, que los órganos de la Unión estén constituidos paritariamente: 50% mujeres, 50% hombres.

Si ese mensaje se transmite en nuestra propuesta constitucional, estoy seguro que, desde luego, ese 51% de europeas que esperan algo de nuestros trabajos van a apoyarnos.

Spini (Parl.-IT). - Signor Presidente, vorrei esprimere anch'io tutto il mio apprezzamento per questo gruppo di contatto, per il lavoro fatto dal Vicepresidente Amato e dagli altri professori che sono intervenuti. Oggi il signor Haider parla della nostra Convenzione, su un giornale, in questi termini: "La Convenzione europea mi sembra una terapia occupazionale per politici disoccupati". Be', se non altro, diamo occupazione anche a un po' di accademici e quindi ci possiamo consolare.

Mi limiterò a tre soli punti: sul referendum io sono favorevole, però lo vedrei dopo la Conferenza intergovernativa, perché altrimenti rischierebbe di essere un elemento di disturbo, dato che dobbiamo mandare alla Conferenza intergovernativa un testo forte. Metterei quindi la Conferenza intergovernativa fra la nostra deliberazione e il referendum. Quale secondo punto, sono molto favorevole al manifesto diretto potenzialmente ai quattordici milioni di studenti universitari europei, che sono la classe dirigente di domani. Questo sarebbe un punto molto importante. Il resto lo lascio alla prossima domanda.

Kirkhope (PE). – Mr President, reference was made earlier to academics simplifying matters. My experience of academics over the years has shown that this has not always been their major priority, but I welcome that. I believe that their work is complementary to those of us who are politicians and whose job it is to simplify matters for those we hope will vote for us.

I am looking optimistically at the work of the academics and I hope we will continue to use them to bring about some objectivity from time to time, some innovation and indeed some vision. I have not heard too much of that today, but I am hopeful that if we continue to have them on board in a complementary way, the Convention will be very well served by their contribution. I therefore support the calls for academics to remain with us in some capacity, but maintain that we should use them in the way that academics have always been used: for those roles that I have mentioned.

Giscard d'Estaing (Président). – Chers collègues, j'ai levé mon carton bleu parce que voulais dire deux choses à Madame Gaudes à la suite de son intervention. Tout d'abord, elle a, en effet, publié une étude très intéressante sur le fonctionnement de la Convention précédente, qui était celle présidée par le Président Roman Herzog, laquelle a abouti à la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux. Je l'ai étudiée avant que nous débutions nos propres travaux afin de voir dans quelle mesure il y avait analogie et dans quelle mesure nous pouvions utiliser la même méthode. La différence, et Monsieur Vitorino le sait, c'est qu'il y avait un seul sujet, et qu'en réalité il y avait déjà des textes écrits et qu'il fallait donc faire la synthèse ou trouver les éléments communs de ces textes écrits. Dans la présente Convention, nous avons beaucoup de sujets. En outre, il va falloir inventer ou créer sur certains points des textes nouveaux. Nous ne pouvions donc pas prendre la même méthode. Pensez, par exemple, qu'à l'heure actuelle, nous n'avons pas encore parlé de politique internationale ni de politique de défense. Imaginez qu'il y a un mois et demi ou deux mois le bureau ait proposé un texte à la Convention. La convention se serait révoltée, et ce à juste titre. Notre méthode est l'itineration, c'est à dire que nous avançons bloc par bloc. Nous étudions des sujets et lorsque nous voyons que nous ne les connaissons pas suffisamment, nous créons des groupes de travail jusqu'à ce que nous ayons les éléments qui nous permette de construire la pyramide. Mais la pyramide, Madame Gaudez, nous réussirons à la construire. Ensuite, vous avez raison lorsque vous parlez d'absence de notoriété ou de communication. C'est un problème de société médiatique. Nos travaux sont un peu arides, à moins que nous organisions des séances d'affrontement au sein de la Convention. Si c'était utile, certains des Conventionnels s'y prêteraient volontiers d'ailleurs. Toutefois, quand nous formulerons des propositions, il est probable que le débat sera plus communicant que cette phase qui est une phase d'écoute. Mais cette phase d'écoute, et vous, membres de la société académique européenne, en êtes tous témoins, nous la menons avec le plus grand soin, la plus grande attention et le plus grand respect possible.

Birzniece (Parl.-LV). – Mr President, this is how we in Latvia see the national debate on the future of Europe: "all year round I gather songs waiting for midsummer night; midsummer night is here at last, and it is time to sing all the songs!" This is one of the folk songs sung by Latvians around the world last night and this morning. Today is the most popular Latvian holiday: the summer solstice, midsummer night. The sun has reached its highest point, and we all participate in the annual wedding of the sky father and earth mother.

But how does this legend from south western Latvia relate to Latvia's national debate about the future of Europe? Regardless of the forum for this national debate in Latvia - it might involve casual debates about Latvia and the EU by two people at the local public house or at the dinner table - which is formally organised through the National Convention, the most common topic and issue discussed is the impact of the EU on the Latvian national identity.

The Latvian Government and the NGO European movement in Latvia organised and held their first meeting of the Latvian National Convention on the future EU on 9 May, Europe Day. This meeting in Riga was co-chaired by the prime minister and the president of the European movement in Latvia and was broadcast live on Latvian state radio, with over 200 participants from different social groups and regions of Latvia attending.

While the Convention is focusing on the future EU in five, ten or 20 years from today, most of the Latvian public is concerned about debating the immediate future relations between Latvia and the EU, and especially the potential EU Member States. The first official meeting of the National Convention in Latvia became a discussion about the concerns, benefits and drawbacks of EU membership for Latvia.

Currently the Latvian National Convention is creating six working groups to parallel the existing working groups of the EU Convention. We are looking for the mythical "blooming fern" at midsummer night, and we hope that this will be a valuable asset for the future of the EU.

Le Président. – Nous en arrivons au dernier groupe pour ce soir. Ce dernier a été constitué en plus de ce que le Président m'avait proposé à l'origine. C'est un groupe qui s'est surtout occupé de la participation des citoyens dans les institutions et que j'ai moi-même présidé. Nous avons eu beaucoup de participants et ils se sont surtout groupés autour de suggestions concernant les institutions d'une part et concernant la citoyenneté et la démocratie participative d'autre part. Vous pourrez prendre connaissance de leurs suggestions dans la note de synthèse qui vous a été remise. Les cinq porte-parole sont répartis entre d'une part, ceux qui mettront plus l'accent sur la problématique des institutions et d'autre part, ceux qui mettront plus l'accent sur la participation du citoyen.

Herman (NGO-CITI/INST). – Président, Mesdames et Messieurs conventionnels, cet après-midi, vous avez longuement entendu divers représentants de la société civile. Ils ont exposé ce qu'ils attendaient de l'Europe. Ces attentes sont nombreuses et pressantes. Nous partageons la plupart d'entre elles mais la douzaine de mouvements européens, couvrant pratiquement tous les pays, au nom desquels je m'adresse à vous, sont avant tout préoccupés par la capacité des institutions à réaliser ces attentes. En effet, rien ne serait plus néfaste, et pour l'Europe et pour la démocratie, qu'une proclamation répétée d'ambitions élevées, sans réalisation concrète. Si le triangle institutionnel Commission, Parlement, Conseil a pu, dans sa configuration actuelle, réaliser l'Union monétaire, l'Union douanière, le marché intérieur et, finalement, l'Union monétaire, c'est qu'il s'agissait avant tout d'établir des règles communes, c'est-à-dire faire oeuvre législative ou réglementaire. Avec l'Union monétaire et surtout l'Union politique et ses ambitions internationales, nous aurons beaucoup plus besoin d'actions que de législations. C'est pourquoi il nous faut renforcer la fonction exécutive de cet ensemble. En d'autres termes, il faut à l'Europe un gouvernement.

Les citoyens en expriment l'aspiration, beaucoup plus que leurs dirigeants. Ce gouvernement ne pourra jamais être le Conseil, et ce pour quatre raisons très simples. Premièrement, gouverner une des plus grandes puissances commerciales et financières du monde est devenu aujourd'hui une fonction à temps plein qui ne peut plus être exercée à titre subsidiaire quelques heures par mois par des personnes totalement absorbées par la gestion de leur pays. Deuxièmement, les membres du Conseil sont élus ou désignés pour défendre l'intérêt national et non l'intérêt européen. Ainsi, ils n'hésitent jamais à sacrifier celui-ci au profit de celui-là et ils se chargent d'en faire la démonstration tous les jours, et pas plus tard que ce week-end, à Séville. Troisièmement, responsables devant leur Parlement national, ils ne seront jamais sanctionnés pour n'avoir pas bien servis l'intérêt commun. Ils n'ont aucun compte à rendre devant les représentants élus des citoyens européens. En effet, en matière européenne, ils sont démocratiquement irresponsables. Quatrièmement, bien que composé dans chacun de leur pays de personnes très fortes, le Conseil est la plus faible des institutions car divisé sur la plupart des questions. Un attelage composé de chevaux vigoureux mais tirant dans des directions opposées, nous mènera beaucoup moins loin qu'un attelage de rossinantes faméliques tirant dans la même direction. Parce qu'elle est juridiquement indépendante vis-à-vis des gouvernements et politiquement responsable devant le Parlement qui peut la censurer, la Commission a pour vocation de devenir le gouvernement de l'Europe. Mais pour pouvoir rester efficace et continuer à voter pour décider, le collège ne devrait pas compter plus de membres qu'il n'y a de portefeuilles à pourvoir, c'est-à-dire, entre douze et quinze maximum. Un système de rotation donnant à chaque Etat membre un droit égal à proposer un commissaire, devrait permettre de respecter le principe de l'égalité des Etats. La légitimité de cet exécutif, serait encore renforcée par l'élection de son Président par le Parlement européen qui, pour cette occasion, et dans un premier temps, fonctionnerait comme un collège de grands électeurs. Ultérieurement, on pourrait envisager une élection directe.

En ce qui concerne la fonction législative, il convient de généraliser la co-décision Parlement - Conseil. Celui-ci votant toujours à la double majorité, majorité des Etats, à condition qu'il représente la majorité des citoyens. C'est clair, tout le monde peut comprendre ça mais ce n'est pas le système actuel. En ce qui concerne la répartition des compétences, nous nous rangeons derrière le rapport Lamassoure et pour ce qui est de la politique extérieure, derrière les propositions de la Commission. Pour la simplification et surtout la lisibilité du système, il convient de mettre fin à la coexistence des trois piliers avec pour seule dérogation les problèmes de défense militaire où la méthode intergouvernementale et la collaboration renforcée resteront de mise encore un certain temps. Dès sa création, la CEE disposait d'une personnalité juridique au plan international. Il serait incroyable que l'Union, qui était supposée faire accomplir à l'Europe un pas en avant dans l'intégration, en soit privée, ce qui l'empêche d'agir modu proprio dans tous les domaines du second et du troisième pilier, dès qu'il s'agit de relations avec les tiers. Il convient également de revoir la procédure de modification du Traité constitutionnel. En bonne démocratie, il est impensable, voire insupportable que la volonté des représentants de trois cent ou quatre cent millions d'habitants puisse être tenue en échec par un ou deux pays qui représenteraient moins d'un million d'habitants. A la question de savoir s'il convient de faire ratifier par voix de référendum le résultat des travaux de la Convention, les mouvements que je représente se montrent perplexes. Toutefois, tous sont d'accord pour que l'Europe favorise, par tous les moyens, non seulement la consultation, mais aussi l'implication des citoyens et des représentants de la société civile dans la formulation des normes et des décisions européennes.

Weston (NGO-CITI/INST). – Mr President, I speak on behalf of the Youth Contact Group on the Convention. This is a platform which brings together all the major European youth transnational political parties plus a number of other young organisations from across the European continent. These organisations represent millions of young people across the continent, all members of the European Youth Forum.

Involving young people in the construction of the future of Europe was one of the specific goals of the Laeken Declaration. Young people are not only important for Europeans' future, but they have an essential role to play in the debates of today. Youth organisations, active at the local, regional and national levels, can play an important role in stimulating debate and in promoting the concept of European citizenship.

Youth organisations are often uniquely able to reach and represent those from the most marginalised and excluded groups. They have also been at the forefront of the enlargement process, being among the first to integrate members from outside European Union Member States. They were among the first organisations to recognise the appeal of the European ideal to young people in these countries.

It is often said that young people are not interested in politics. We do not believe this is true. This year on 9 May, Europe Day, hundreds of young people in hundreds of cities around the continent celebrated the European ideal. This clearly shows that young people are interested in Europe's future.

This common European future cannot be based on secretive horse-trading if it is to attract the loyalty and affection of its young citizens. It cannot be a Europe which substitutes diplomatic talking shops for genuine democratic accountability. It must be a Europe which offers a vision of a united and democratic future, one which offers accessible government to its citizens and has the instruments and legitimacy to meet their expectations.

These goals can only be achieved if the Convention rises to the challenge facing it today and drafts a constitution with our common European rights and values at its heart. This constitution should define the fundamental rights of EU citizens, the distribution of competences between the European and national levels and the role and powers of the European institutions. We believe that only a federal constitution can reconcile the need for effective government with protecting the fundamental principles of democracy, subsidiarity and respect for diversity. The Charter of Fundamental Rights must lie at the centre of this constitution. Effective and democratic governance also requires simplified and accountable decision-making. The exclusion of Parliament from areas of European policy-making and the Council's law-making behind closed doors can have no place in a democratic European Union.

Instead, a reformed Council representing the Member States should act in co-decision with the Parliament in all areas. Lastly, a strong Commission able to defend the European interest and accountable to the European Parliament must become the executive of the European Union.

These reforms will provide the European Union with the basic tools of democracy and will enable it to deal effectively with the challenges of today and the opportunities of tomorrow. If they are to seize these opportunities, young people and youth organisations need support. Youth work has a huge importance in engaging young citizens and in building European awareness.

The future constitution should therefore include an article which gives a strong legal basis to European Union measures in the field of youth work, contributing to bringing Europe closer to its young citizens. The Europe that we are building today should not only be a Europe of the elite, of specialists and think tanks and bureaucrats and distant institutions, Europe must have something to offer its young citizens - not only economic opportunities and a chance for greater prosperity but hope and inspiration, a common vision of a Europe united according to the rule of law which can deliver peace and stability and can protect our shared values.

The beginning of European integration in the 1950's offered the young people of six countries this hope. It has given hope to generations of young people for a better future. It is the responsibility of the Convention to ensure that the European Union, for which it is laying the foundations today, can offer the same assurance to all the young European people of the future. Do not let us down!

Roffiaen (NGO-CITI/INST). – Mr President, I speak on behalf of the Contact Group Citizens and Institutions, rather than my own organisation. I will not list our group members because the problem of the representativeness of NGOs cannot be limited to the number of their members. We sincerely hope that the dialogue between civil society and the Convention will be a model for relations between civil society and all the European institutions. Above all, it should be a real dialogue, which means that the major proposals presented during these two days should be discussed in the forthcoming plenary sessions of the Convention and/or by the working groups.

As regards the text itself, we expect a real proposal for a constitution and not only a reorganisation or simplification of the existing Treaties.

I will summarise our main proposals in three points. The promotion of a representative, participatory democracy based on parity; the need to found a new European social contract; and the need to submit the future constitution to a European referendum.

The first objective identified by the Laeken Declaration is to bring the institutions closer to citizens, increasing in particular the democratic legitimacy and the transparency of the institutions. This legitimacy can only derive from a representative, participatory democracy based on parity. I will not speak about parity because others are dealing with this topic. As regards representative democracy, I will stress three points: the increase in the European Parliament's powers, the reinforcement of the accountability of the Commission and the development of the majority rule as regards the Council's decisions.

However, a strong democracy today cannot only be representative, it also needs to be participatory. While political participation is decreasing, the active participation of citizens in civil society is increasing. This phenomenon cannot be ignored. The role of civil society, as a voluntary association advocating grass root initiatives and so on, in European policy-making must be redefined according to the principle of horizontal subsidiarity. This principle refers to the relationship between the members of civil society and the European Union, just as the principle of vertical subsidiarity relates to the relationship between the Member States and the European institutions. It means that the initiative of citizens in the general interest must be supported, as well as partnership between civil society and institutions. It also means that citizens must be involved at each step of the policy-making process, like agenda setting, policy planning and decision-making, implementation of policies and the evaluation of the result of these policies.

As regards a social contract, the fulfilment of several objectives of the EU, such as economic and social progress, high levels of employment and social protection and balanced and sustainable development are presently in doubt because of phenomena such as poverty and exclusion. The development of solidarity must be one of the priorities of the EU, especially in the context of enlargement. It is fundamental to avoid extension of the EU from 15 to 25 Member States resulting in a reduction of the European objectives to the lowest common denominator.

One way to avoid this risk is to guarantee access for all citizens to services of general interest, in order to develop economic, social and territorial cohesion. Moreover, the participation of citizens in the management and functioning of these services must be encouraged in application of the principle of horizontal subsidiarity.

Lastly, the future constitution should define the modalities of public authority intervention for the organisation, financing and the evaluation of the services of public interest.

As regards the European referendum, the submission of the future constitution to a referendum would certainly be the best way to increase the legitimacy of the European institutions and to bring them closer to citizens. The project drafted by the constitution should include an article providing that the final text of the constitution is to be submitted to a Europe-wide referendum, including the future Member States. In our opinion, such a prospect would induce the Convention to draft a simple, brief and easily understandable text, which would be a great advantage. Moreover, it would make it essential to increase and improve information to citizens, and that is crucial to prevent this Convention being yet another wasted opportunity.

Krzeczunowicz (NGO-CITI/INST). – Mr President, the task of this Convention is not only to provide answers to the questions raised in the Laeken Declaration and the expectations of its citizens, although you know better than most just how enormous a task that represents. This Convention should and must move the European Union and the wider Europe represented here away from the reactive, fearful approach to the future which is increasingly apparent in our respective national politics.

To do this, the Convention must first reaffirm the primacy of solidarity in the thinking and actions that lie at the basis of the Union's construction. This principle of solidarity has many facets in each of our countries. It must be evident for those who are underprivileged, poor or under-educated within the European Union. It must shine through efforts to bring about cohesion for the less developed regions, and underpin policies whose role will become even more positive with enlargement, especially if balanced with a greater focus on sustainable development. Beyond the borders of an enlarged Union, it has to develop an approach to the poorer nations that allows the citizens of those countries to achieve the peace and prosperity that the European Union has managed to provide for its own citizens.

In order to succeed, the involvement of citizens in ways complementary to the ballot box must be encouraged and supported. Often, there is incredulity expressed at the role of civil society and non-governmental organisations in the development of Europe. Who else but the citizens of Europe lay at the very beginnings of this Union? Who else but they came to be the prime movers of the revolutionary yet peaceful changes in Europe in 1989?

In Brussels and elsewhere, we often hear of the wall falling as though we were dealing with an error in architecture and poor building standards. The wall was pushed. These same citizens, organised in NGOs, have continued to push since 1989, be it through the development of our local government structures or through involvement in the enlargement debate.

The European Union at present provides for the inclusion of NGOs in its construction in an ill-defined, timorous way. There are positive examples, however, that can guide you in your work. Thus various actors, including NGOs, should be involved in the planning and monitoring of Structural Funds. No other single measure has done more to promote dialogue between civil society and our regional and local authorities in Poland. That simple requirement that decisions on a region's future are not made in Brussels, but via the opportunity provided by the European Union for a more inclusive approach, puts a stop to claims of democratic deficit.

Let us not delude ourselves by thinking that the disillusionment with politics so often decried when talking of the European institutions does not concern our national and local politics.

It is crucial for the Convention to set an example by inscribing a requirement for civil dialogue in the final document being considered here. It will allow for good practice at the European level to influence the development of democracy at the local and regional level. This defensive democracy must be put at the centre of your concerns for the future of Europe.

It may have been ticked off as fulfilled, as part of the Copenhagen requirements, but democracy needs continued support, be it in the applicant countries or in the Member States. Let this Convention begin the task of suffocating the egoism that is increasingly at the root of decision-making or rather the fear to make bold decisions. Let this Convention affirm that uncertainty and the fear of the future are not best tackled by selfish hunkering down within our own borders. The future is best faced through solidarity and not through selfishness. This solidarity is strong when civil dialogue is a firm element of European governance and supports the political process.

Söderman (NGO-CITI/INST). – Mr President, the Treaty of Maastricht established the European Ombudsman to enhance relations between the citizens and the European Union, mainly by tackling maladministration in the Community institutions and bodies. Over almost seven years as European Ombudsman I had, by the beginning of this month, received a total of 10 000 complaints. It is difficult to explain in five minutes what I have done in seven years. The latest annual report will be published next week and detailed information of our work is available on our website. We will email all the organisations explaining how to access this material.

I would like to thank the institutions and bodies of the European Union for their cooperative attitude to the European Ombudsman's work and their will to correct maladministration when it occurs.

There has been real progress towards making citizenship of the European Union a reality. The right of public access to documents is embodied in a regulation. Fundamental rights are laid down in the Charter and the European code of good administrative behaviour was adopted by the European Parliament in September 2001. This code gives substance to the right to good administration in Article 41 of the Charter.

Some important problems, however, remain. First, my experience as European Ombudsman is that citizens do not know how to protect their Community law rights. This is not surprising because the Treaty says little about the remedies that they can use. Furthermore, national administrations do not always apply Community law correctly either because they do not know how to do so or because they do not feel that it is really a part of their law.

Over the past seven years, we have created a network of ombudsmen and similar bodies such as petition committees, but citizens do not seem to know how they can deal with Community law cases.

Next I would like to draw your attention to the Article 226 procedure, in which the Commission investigates complaints about infringements of Community law by Member States. Despite recent improvements, the procedure is secretive, the complainant is still not recognised as a participant and delays occur because the Commission has too many cases. Furthermore, the Charter is not yet fully effective in the institutions and bodies. Generally, politicians are committed to it, but the administration can be reluctant to follow their lead. The Charter has been proclaimed, but citizens have no idea if it will be applied in practice. Finally, the code of good administrative behaviour is not yet a European administrative law to be applied uniformly by the whole European administration.

I have some proposals for your consideration. First and foremost, the Treaty should contain a chapter of remedies; it should clearly set out the possibilities for judicial and non-judicial redress when Community law rights, including fundamental rights, are not respected. Access to courts is a fundamental remedy in a democracy governed by the rule of law. We should inform citizens about their right to go to national courts to defend their rights under Community law. The important constitutional role of the European Court of Justice should be duly mentioned. The chapter should also make clear that the citizen has the right to petition the European Parliament about infringements of Community law by Member States. The Commission should have a duty to cooperate with the European Parliament in assuring that the complaint is examined using a fair procedure.

Many complaints about infringement could be effectively dealt with by a non-judicial remedy in the Member State. The chapter should therefore mention that citizens have the right to complain to an ombudsman or a similar body in each Member State. The European Ombudsman is willing to provide assistance and, if necessary, to deal with cases of principle involving fundamental rights, assuming that the chapter will be made binding whenever Community law is being applied.

The European Ombudsman could be responsible for referring cases, where a fundamental right is at stake, to the European Court of Justice. This would be in keeping with the Court's constitutional role.

(Applause)

Oriol (NGO-CITI/INST). – Je représente ENA, une organisation dont les membres sont présents dans les quinze pays de l'Union, et dont les objectifs principaux sont la lutte contre toutes les formes de racisme, et la promotion de l'égalité des droits et des chances. ENA est membre de la plate-forme sociale, une alliance d'ONG européennes du secteur social qui, dans le cadre du groupe de contact Société Civile, travaille avec des ONG actives dans les domaines des droits humains, du développement et de l'environnement, ainsi qu'avec la confédération européenne des syndicats, pour produire une contribution commune aux travaux de la Commission. Dans un débat sur la citoyenneté et les Institutions, il faut rappeler que des millions de personnes participent activement au développement de l'Union, mais ne bénéficient pas des droits découlants de la citoyenneté tel qu'elle est définie dans le Traité CE. Ces personnes sont exclues du processus décisionnel de l'Union. Ce sont les ressortissants des pays tiers. Alors que le principe de non-discrimination est au fondement-même de la construction européenne, il n'est valable que pour les nationaux d'un Etat membre de l'Union. L'Union se construit, en excluant des millions de personnes, pour beaucoup nées sur son territoire. Avec l'introduction à Amsterdam du titre quatre dans le Traité, les ressortissants de pays tiers deviennent enfin des sujets directs du droit communautaire. Le Sommet de Tampere semblait ouvrir la voie à l'élaboration de mesures tendant à combler l'inégalité entre citoyens de l'Union et ressortissants des pays tiers. A ce jour, il faut constater que, dans ce domaine, l'harmonisation est un échec. A la suite de maintes modifications, la proposition de directives sur le regroupement familial relatif aux ressortissants des pays tiers est complètement vidée de son sens. Nous sommes également sceptiques quant à la proposition de directive sur le statut des résidents de longue durée ressortissant des pays tiers.

Face au climat politique ambiant, face au populisme, au replis identitaires nationaux, face aux discours racistes et xénophobes, l'Union se doit de poser un acte fort et sans équivoque à l'intention de la classe politique et de l'opinion publique. L'Union doit, une fois pour toutes, reconnaître que toutes les personnes qui résident légalement sur son territoire sont égales. L'extension des droits liés à la citoyenneté de l'Union aux ressortissants des pays tiers légalement établis dans l'Union est indispensable pour maintenir et renforcer la cohésion sociale de nos sociétés, pour combler le déficit démocratique de l'Union et crédibiliser le projet européen qui se veut respectueux des droits fondamentaux de la personne, qui sont, par essence, universels et indivisibles. La Charte des Droits Fondamentaux doit également être revue afin d'élargir les droits des ressortissants des pays tiers. Selon la Charte, les ressortissants des pays tiers jouissent de conditions de travail équivalentes à celles des citoyens de l'Union. Ils devraient jouir non seulement des droits des travailleurs, mais également des droits de tous les citoyens, notamment le droit à la libre circulation à l'intérieur du territoire ainsi que les droits politiques. Outre la nécessité d'étendre des droits attachés à la citoyenneté, nous pensons que la Convention doit voir comment associer de manière plus étroite les citoyens à l'Union. Deux formes de démocratie peuvent être identifiées au sein de l'Union. Une démocratie participative et une démocratie électorale. D'une part, la démocratie électorale est cruciale pour légitimer notre système politique et doit être renforcée au sein de l'Union, y compris en renforçant le rôle du Parlement européen, la seule Institution élue directement. D'autre part, la démocratie participative représente la participation directe et collective des individus dans le système démocratique par d'autres voies que le vote. La démocratie participative devrait compléter la démocratie électorale. La participation devrait être accessible à toutes et à tous. Les ONG encouragent les citoyens à participer à la vie politique et sociale de la société et, par conséquent, contribuent fortement au développement de la démocratie. Nous pensons que les ONG devraient jouer un rôle consultatif important dans l'élaboration des politiques de l'Union, ce qui contribuerait à une plus grande implication des citoyens au projet européen. C'est pourquoi nous demandons la reconnaissance du statut consultatif des ONG, garantie d'un dialogue civil structuré et permanent avec toutes les institutions, via l'inclusion dans les Traités d'un article sur la consultation de la société civile.

Abitbol (PE). – Le groupe que vous avez présidé, Monsieur Dehaene, n'a pas été, me semble-t-il, à la hauteur de ce que nous avons entendu précédemment. Que la vie serait facile si tous les citoyens européens voulaient bien se mettre à ressembler à ceux que nous avons entendu tout au long de cette journée. Tout serait alors pour le mieux dans le meilleur des mondes. Hélas, notre société civile ad hoc n'est en rien représentative. Nous avons entendu ici l'ensemble des organisations subventionnées par les Institutions européennes et leur réunion fait un peu penser à cette phrase du regretté Coluche qui parlait d'une grande tombola au profit des organisateurs de tombola. Les élections, les référendum et même les sondages, y compris le dernier eurobaromètre, nous renvoient à une autre opinion publique que celle que vous nous avez modelé à votre guise. Je n'en veux pour preuve que l'euro-scepticisme croissant que vous avez publié la semaine dernière ainsi qu'une défiance de plus en plus majoritaire vis-à-vis des Institutions européennes. Deux points cependant. Je me réjouis du souhait d'un référendum pour approuver, ou pour désapprouver le projet de Traité Constitutionnel si celui-ci devait voir le jour. C'est, effectivement, la moindre des choses que de laisser chacun de nos peuples, libre de conserver sa propre loi fondamentale, seule garante d'un chez-soi politique, de cette sorte d'intimité nationale qu'on appelle démocratie, auxquels nos concitoyens restent et resteront attachés ou bien, au bout du compte, de surbordonner celle-ci à une loi supérieure dont l'application sera le fait d'une oligarchie aussi lointaine qu'anonyme. Je m'étonne un petit peu aussi que le groupe de contact ou soi-disant tel, ai fait quasiment l'impasse sur les questions liées à l'élargissement de l'Europe alors que nos opinions publiques, dont il était sensé être le représentant, sont de plus en plus réservées à ce sujet. Un reproche permanent, pardonnez-moi Monsieur le Président, que l'on pourrait faire à notre convention est de raisonner un petit peu comme si l'élargissement ne devait pas avoir lieu. Et il me semble, si vous me permettez une suggestion, que nous pourrions peut-être consacrer si pas toute une session au moins une journée de travail aux conséquences spécifiques liées à l'élargissement de l'Europe.

Le Président. – Merci beaucoup. Bien entendu, je ne peux pas laisser passer votre remarque de manipulation. Pour autant que je sache, toutes les organisations, qu'elles croient en l'Europe ou qu'elles soient sceptiques, ont été invitées à participer au débat. Le site web et nos réunions étaient ouvertes à tout le monde. Je ne vois pas où est la manipulation. La seule chose qui pourrait arriver est que ceux qui pourraient s'exprimer ne répondent pas à l'invitation.

De Rossa (Parl.-IE). – Mr President, I will refer briefly to the last speaker's comments on subsidised organisations. I would not be here as a politician unless I was subsidised by the citizens of Europe. My political party could not survive as an effective political organisation without a subsidy from the citizens of Europe. So please let us move to the real debate about the views being expressed here today, rather than this petty discussion about who is paying for whom.

I warmly welcome the chance to have dialogue here today with civil society organisations. We have heard an affirmation of the notion that we have society in Europe, rather than a simple economic view of Europe as an economy. It is important to bear in mind the idea that citizens are more than simply units of consumption and that the weight of their opinion cannot be measured solely by their capacity to purchase or to consume, that we have more dimensions to our lives and to our personalities than simply our capacity to buy and sell.

It is important that notion should be incorporated into the constitutional treaty that we are preparing here. There is currently far too much emphasis in our Treaties on Europe as an economy, Europe as a market, Europe as a single currency. We must pay attention to the kind of values we incorporate into the constitutional treaties that we are preparing. In that respect, I would urge very strongly the idea of amending and improving Article 16, which underpins the notion of universal public services. The rights of citizenship include the right to be able to move about the European Union and the right to be able to receive a letter regardless of how remote your home is in the European Union.

In conclusion, we should also incorporate the notion of civil dialogue and social dialogue in our Treaties, bearing in mind the different and distinct functions that each serve in a European Union which has a constitution and which is federal in nature.

Moscovici (Ch.E/G.-FR). Tout d'abord, contrairement à M. Abitbol, j'ai trouvé très intéressants les travaux du groupe de contact, qui relaient d'ailleurs ce qui a été dit dans les débats nationaux, à savoir qu'il y a un souhait des citoyens de voir la réflexion porter d'abord sur le contenu du projet européen, avant de parler du contenant institutionnel. Parce que notre objectif doit être de trouver une légitimité nouvelle à l'Union et, pour cela, il faut être capable d'abord de délivrer des preuves d'Europe. Si nous voulons répondre au populisme, il faut d'abord que l'Europe soit populaire.

Ensuite, il y a un lien évident entre le contenu et le contenant, et donc la nécessité de réforme ne fait pas de doute. Dans l'immédiat, il faut remédier au défaut de lisibilité du projet européen et en favorisant prioritairement l'émergence d'un espace public démocratique à l'échelle européenne.

Ensuite, la concrétisation de cette exigence suppose, dans le respect des équilibres sur lesquels repose la méthode communautaire, des réformes ambitieuses des trois composantes du triangle institutionnel – n'en négligeons aucune – à savoir le Conseil, la Commission et le Parlement. J'ai trouvé là des propositions très intéressantes. Je pense au couplage de la désignation du président de la Commission avec les élections européennes, à la régionalisation du mode de scrutin européen et à une association plus étroite des parlements nationaux aux affaires européennes.

Enfin, le renforcement de la légitimité de l'Union passe naturellement par une plus grande proximité avec le citoyen et, sur ce point, je partage l'idée évoquée par le groupe de contact: une association plus étroite de la société civile aux processus de décision. C'est l'objectif de notre session d'aujourd'hui. C'était l'objectif des débats nationaux. Il faut travailler, sans doute, à relancer cette idée et à la pérenniser dans une nouvelle démarche. Je terminerai en disant que, pour des raisons tout à fait symétriques à celles de M. Abitbol, je pense effectivement que la formule du référendum s'imposera pour adopter le Traité que proposera la Convention.

Speroni (Ch.E/G.-IT). - Signor Presidente, trovo fondate talune preoccupazioni sul ruolo dei ministri all'interno del Consiglio. I ministri vengono spesso accusati di privilegiare gli interessi nazionali, ma un rappresentante - che sia ministro o parlamentare - ha il dovere di interpretare e sostenere la volontà dei rappresentati, anche quando questa volontà è volta a tutela di interessi. L'Europa è comunità di uomini e donne uniti per vivere meglio, per meglio sfruttare le possibilità di sviluppo e progresso, per condividere i vantaggi di questa unione, ideali ma anche materiali. Questo è tra i nostri compiti: proporre una Costituzione che, in una visione democratica, contempra esigenze comuni ma anche differenti, perché nessuno possa poi dolersi di essere cittadino dell'Unione.

Kauppi (PE). - Arvoisa puhemies, haluaisin lyhyesti kommentoida herra Hermanin puheenvuoroa, jossa hän mielestäni erinomaisella tavalla esitti ne syyt, joiden takia Eurooppa-neuvostosta ei voida tehdä EU:n hallitusta. Nykyään Eurooppa-neuvoston kokoukset, kuten viime viikonloppunakin saimme todeta, ovat ylikuormitettuja, ja se johtuu siitä Jacques Delorsin jo 1980-luvulla määrittelemästä tosiasista, että kaikki haluavat saada Eurooppa-neuvoston puolioikeudellisen hyväksynnän erilaisille hyville asioille, myös kansalaisjärjestöt.

Pääministereiden aikapulakin tulee olemaan jo liian suuri ongelma. Kolmenkymmenen valtion unionissa jo pelkkä pääministerin kierros eri maiden pääkaupungeissa kestäisi varmasti melkein puoli vuotta. Niinpä olen tullut siihen tulokseen, että tästä rotaatiosta pj-kausien osalta on jollakin aikavälillä luovuttava. Vaikka ne ovat olleet tärkeä tasa-arvon ilmentymä myös kansalaisjärjestöille, on järkevää siirtyä jonkinlaiseen ryhmäpuheenjohtajuuteen ja järjestää tämä konsultaatio kansalaisjärjestöjen kanssa eri tavalla.

Vielä haluaisin todeta lyhyesti, että avoimuus on kuitenkin aivan a ja o siinä, miten Eurooppa-neuvoston toiminta, joka kuitenkin tulee olemaan tärkeä osa Euroopan hallintoa ja hallintotapaa, järjestetään. Avoimuus, jota Sevillassa pikkuaskeleella lisättiin, on tärkeää. Me tarvitsemme lisää avoimuutta. Se, että kansalaiset tietävät ainoastaan yhteispäätösmenettelyasioissa, mitä neuvoston suljettujen ovien takana tapahtuu, ei ole riittävää. Tämä on sellainen asia, jota meidän pitäisi vaatia kovemmalla äänenpainolla.

MacCormick (PE). – Mr President, one feature of parliamentary democracies in the modern world is that the elected legislature tends in practice to become subordinate to the executive, to which it is in theory superior. One of the great merits of the European Parliament is that this does not happen. We are not subject to masters. We do not have a single, all-purpose majority, and the upshot is that the Commission, as the executive, can by no means be sure of getting its own bills through all the time: most are heavily amended both by the Parliament and by the Council.

This is a vital feature of the situation and whatever we do in the way of improving the answerability of the Commission should not be such as to deprive the European Parliament of that particular, highly democratic virtue which it has, one which makes us much more accessible to civil society and more open to argument and discussion than we would be under other circumstances.

EN

Bruton (Parl.-IE). – Mr President, the election of the President of the Commission by Parliament, as suggested by Mr Herman and others, could put the Commission in a subordinate and dependent position vis-à-vis Parliament and blur the separation of powers which is the keystone of our current institutional balance.

In contrast, the direct election of the President by the people would avoid these dangers and would also directly associate each citizen with the person of the Presidency. It would do more to bring the people and the European Union closer together than any other proposal, including a referendum on the Treaty. At the end of the day, in modern times, people vote for the individual as much as they do for abstract ideas.

Hjelm-Wallén (Ch.E/G.-SE). - Herr ordförande! Det civila samhället betyder väldigt mycket för en levande debatt om EU. Därför är öppenheten ifrån EU:s sida helt avgörande.

För ett år sedan åstadkom det svenska ordförandeskapet ganska stora förändringar vad gäller öppenhet, men mer behövs. Som representant för den svenska regeringen har jag föreslagit att vi bör gå vidare så att allmänheten får tillgång till handlingar också i fråga om de institutioner som inte ännu finns med på listan.

I förslaget ingår också att EU-tjänstemän skall ha yttrandefrihet som de har i många av våra länder. Vi behöver bättre förvaltning, som ombudsman Söderman sade, och öppenhet vad gäller rådets arbete när det handlar om lagstiftning. Jag tror att dessa öppenhetsfrågor är väldigt viktiga för hela kontakten med det civila samhället.

Nahtigal (Gouv.-SI). – Je voudrais simplement vous parler du forum slovène qui travaille très dur et qui se réunit souvent en même temps que la Convention. Il soutient la légitimité des membres slovènes de la Convention. Le futur de l'Europe se joue en Slovénie sous la houlette du Président et du gouvernement. Lors des discussions sont également présents des représentants des universités, des syndicats, des organisations universitaires, des étudiants, l'académie slovène de Sciences et d'Art ainsi que différentes autres communautés. Nous nous penchons sur des sujets semblables à ceux du Parlement. Par exemple, nous nous demandons ce que nous attendons de l'Union Européenne, quel sera le rôle des petites nations dans l'Union Européenne du futur ou encore comment garantir les diversités culturelles en Europe. Le Président du Parlement, Monsieur Cox, s'est rendu récemment à Ljubjana pour évoquer la question. Selon moi et c'est mon voeu le plus cher, le débat qui se déroule en Slovénie renforce sans aucun doute la légitimité dont a parlé tout à l'heure Monsieur Moscovici.

Nous reprendrons notre débat à neuf heures trente demain matin. Mme Palacio présentera d'abord les travaux du groupe de contact « Régions et collectivités locales ». Ensuite, les observateurs du Comité des régions prendront la parole. En fin de matinée, je vous donnerai quelques indications sur la session des jeunes, sur son organisation et son déroulement, et également quelques indications sur nos propres travaux, puisque nous avons notre session du mois de juillet qu'il convient de préparer. Dans la salle d'à côté, un verre de l'amitié est proposé à ceux et celles d'entre vous qui désirent prolonger leurs échanges avant la reprise de nos travaux demain matin à neuf heures trente.

Palacio Vallelersundi (Ch.E/G.-ES). – Il me revient, en effet, l'honneur de faire rapport de la première réunion du groupe de contact « régions et collectivités locales » qui s'est tenue le dix juin dernier. Tout d'abord, je tiens à souligner la qualité des interventions qui ont été présentées pendant cette journée. Ensuite, je tiens à remercier les cent quatre-vingt-sept collectivités locales et leurs organisations représentatives qui se sont inscrites dans notre groupe de contact et ont consacré une entière journée à dialoguer en détail sur des questions liées aux travaux de la Convention. Monsieur le Président, elles m'ont demandé avec insistance que notre dialogue se poursuive à intervalle régulier, tout au long du mandat de la Convention. Je leur ai, d'ores et déjà, fixé rendez-vous pour une nouvelle rencontre de travail à l'automne prochain. Mon impression générale est que les organisations européennes des collectivités territoriales ont fait preuve d'un grand équilibre entre ambition et réalisme. Issus du suffrage universel, les gouvernements locaux et régionaux font historiquement partie du système de gouvernement de l'Union. C'est ce système qui caractérise l'Union Européenne dans son ensemble est une structure complexe et diversifiée qui s'organise sur quatre niveaux de responsabilité : l'Union Européenne, les Etats membres, les Régions et les collectivités locales qui, cela dit en passant, ont souvent précédé la naissance de nos Etats. Je vais simplement souligner deux des idées fortes qui sont apparues lors de ces débats. La première idée est qu'il est nécessaire de trouver des normes de gouvernance permettant de réguler de manière optimale les relations entre les différentes sphères de gouvernements. A cet égard, nous avons pu constater ensemble qu'il est nécessaire de mettre en place des procédures de consultation très en amont du processus décisionnel. Je crois très sincèrement que des procédures claires, transparentes et menées en temps utile résoudraient un grand nombre des difficultés que rencontrent les régions et les collectivités locales dans la mise en oeuvre de la législation communautaire. La deuxième idée, exprimée par tous, est le soutien du travail mené au sein du Comité des Régions qui dispose d'un statut d'observateur au sein de notre convention. Ainsi, sans plus attendre, Monsieur le Président, je cède la parole au premier Vice-Président Eduardo Zaplana, qui a lui aussi pris part à cette journée de travail.

Zaplana (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). - Señor Presidente, atendiendo a la invitación formulada por el Praesidium, esta mañana los seis representantes del Comité de las Regiones queremos transmitir a la Convención las demandas y las expectativas de los municipios y de las regiones de las que el Comité de las Regiones es, precisamente, cauce de expresión oficial en el seno de la Unión Europea.

Quiero manifestar que hemos abierto un proceso de debate intenso y riguroso no sólo en el seno del Comité sino también en diálogo con las asociaciones europeas representativas de las entidades locales y regionales y con los países candidatos. Este diálogo lo realizamos con el fin de presentar contribuciones escritas que estén investidas del más amplio respaldo y que expresen ante la Convención la posición común de las autoridades locales y regionales. Oirán ustedes hoy intervenciones de distinto contenido, fruto de los debates existentes en el seno del Comité de las Regiones, pero me centraré en aquellas cuestiones básicas que concitan el acuerdo unánime en el mundo regional y local.

Pienso que esta Convención no puede pasar por alto la enorme relevancia que tienen hoy los municipios y las regiones en la aplicación de las políticas de la Unión Europea. En materias tan diversas como protección del medio ambiente, transportes y telecomunicaciones, política regional, agricultura o pesca son, en muchos casos, los Gobiernos locales y regionales los llamados a ejecutar las decisiones de las instituciones y órganos comunitarios. Parece lógico, pues, que desde los municipios y las regiones se reclame una participación más sólida en la adopción de estas decisiones. No hay que olvidar por otro lado que los municipios y las regiones son los niveles de gobierno más cercanos e inmediatos a los ciudadanos, piezas básicas, por tanto, para la edificación de una Unión Europea más próxima, como reclamaba la declaración de Laeken.

Parece, pues, una exigencia que el nuevo marco institucional de la Unión Europea deba fortalecer el papel de los municipios y las regiones y el cauce para ello ya existe. El cauce es el Comité de las Regiones. No es preciso, por tanto, inventar nuevos mecanismos de participación de los municipios y las regiones en la política europea. Se trata, más bien, de mejorar y reforzar el instrumento del que ya disponemos. Otra cosa sería, desde nuestro punto de vista, retroceder o adentrarnos en caminos de gran incertidumbre.

El Comité de las Regiones concita consenso o al menos mucho más que cualquier otra vía. La apuesta por el mundo regional y local no puede ser otra. Y desde el Comité de las Regiones deseamos plantear a la Convención las siguientes demandas fundamentales, demandas que posteriormente desarrollaremos mediante una contribución escrita y que son, en primer lugar, la atribución al Comité de las Regiones del rango de institución de la Unión Europea, pues no parece razonable que una asamblea formada por representantes de instituciones de gobierno investidos de legitimidad democrática tenga el carácter de un mero órgano auxiliar de la Comisión y el Consejo. En segundo lugar, la atribución al Comité de las Regiones de legitimación activa ante al Tribunal de Justicia. En tercer lugar, ampliación de la lista de materias en que es preceptiva la consulta al Comité hasta extenderla a todas aquellas decisiones que afecten a las competencias de los entes locales y regionales. Y, en cuarto lugar, el fortalecimiento de los efectos jurídicos de los dictámenes, obligando, concretamente, a las restantes instituciones a motivar de forma expresa las razones por las que, en su caso, se apartan del dictamen del Comité.

Pensamos que la atención de estas cuatro reivindicaciones que desde el Comité de las Regiones planteamos como demandas mínimas e irrenunciables mejoraría claramente la participación de los entes locales y regionales en las decisiones de la Unión sin alterar, por otro lado, el actual equilibrio institucional ni introducir complicaciones innecesarias en los procedimientos de adopción de las normas.

Es imposible, Señor Presidente, por limitaciones de tiempo, desarrollar estos puntos con mayor detalle. Nuestros debates son, como es lógico, mucho más amplios y mucho más ambiciosos, pero esta posición es defendida por todos y confío en que también lo será por la Convención.

Y permítame tan solo concluir con unas palabras del Presidente de la Convención, en su discurso inaugural del pasado 28 de febrero: "al mundo de hoy -afirmaba- le hace falta una Europa fuerte, unida y pacífica". Yo pienso que una Europa fuerte es también una Europa mejor vertebrada en la que las ciudades y las regiones puedan sentirse coprotagonistas.

Chabert (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). - Dank u wel mijnheer de voorzitter, waarde collega's, het Comité van de Regio's is de jongste instelling van de Europese Unie. Het werd opgericht bij het Verdrag van Maastricht. Het heeft tot taak de lokale en regionale overheden nauwer te betrekken bij het Europees besluitvormingsproces. Het Comité is dan ook het enige officiële orgaan dat hen bij de Europese Unie vertegenwoordigt.

Ongeveer drie kwart van alle wetgevende acties van de Unie is van rechtstreekse invloed op de regionale, lokale bevolking en wordt uitgevoerd door de lokale en regionale overheden. Het is bijgevolg logisch dat deze bij de besluitvorming worden betrokken. Dit vereenvoudigt aanzienlijk de toepassing van de wetten en de verwezenlijkingen van de programma's van de Europese Unie.

Mijnheer de voorzitter, waarde collega's, een goed werkende democratie, die dicht bij de mensen staat, begint aan de basis. "Bottom-up" is het parool, en dit is des te meer het geval voor alle regio's die wetgevende macht hebben, zoals in Duitsland, Oostenrijk, België, Spanje, Italië, Portugal en zelfs in het Verenigd Koninkrijk. Dankzij hun nationale grondwet bezitten deze regio's op bepaalde gebieden soevereine rechten, die Europa moet eerbiedigen zoals dit ook gebeurt voor de nationale overheden.

Krachtens de Verdragen is de raadpleging van het Comité van de Regio's verplicht in tien gevallen: het gaat hier om materies die zeer dicht de burger raken. Regionale ontwikkeling, cultuur, onderwijs, volksgezondheid, Europese infrastructuurnetwerken voor energie en vervoersnetwerken, werkgelegenheid, beroepsopleiding, leefmilieu, vervoer en sociaal beleid. In deze gevallen kunnen de wetgevende organen van de Unie, de Raad en het Parlement, geen beslissing treffen indien het Comité van de Regio's terzake geen advies heeft verstrekt.

Ik wil nu nog niet voorstellen om deze lijst van de gevallen van verplichte raadpleging uit te breiden. Ik wil er wel op aandringen dat het Comité nauwer bij de wetgevende werkzaamheden van de uitgebreide Europese Unie wordt betrokken, zonder dat dit vanzelfsprekend tot vertraging van de werkzaamheden van de wetgevers mag leiden. Ik ben er immers van overtuigd dat Europa slechts door de bevolking begrepen, gedragen en aanvaard zal worden indien deze nauw bij het institutioneel mechanisme betrokken wordt via haar rechtstreekse, lokale en regionale vertegenwoordigers. Die zullen op dat ogenblik de ambassadeurs worden van Europa en niet langer de Europese Unie verantwoordelijk kunnen stellen voor alles wat misloopt.

Zo zou ik willen voorstellen dat de Raad en het Parlement, vooraleer zij hun beslissingen treffen, het Comité zouden inlichten over de eventuele redenen waarom zij dat advies niet hebben overgenomen. Ik moge u erop wijzen dat de Commissie dit nu reeds regelmatig doet. Het Comité moet ook betrokken worden bij de trilogie Commissie - Raad - Parlement in het kader van de medebeslissingsprocedure. Dit moet ten minste het geval zijn in de tien gevallen van verplichte raadpleging. Het Comité van de Regio's moet een Europees wetgevend besluit voor een beperkte duur kunnen opschorten indien de wetgevende overheid het advies van het Comité niet heeft opgevolgd zonder hiervoor de redenen op te geven.

Het Comité herhaalt vanzelfsprekend zijn eis om een klacht te kunnen indienen bij het Europees Hof van Justitie indien het subsidiariteitsbeginsel niet wordt nageleefd en het vraagt eveneens vertegenwoordigd te zijn in het op te richten politiek orgaan dat de naleving van de subsidiariteitsbeginsel ex ante moet nagaan.

Mijnheer de voorzitter, ik denk dat een belangrijke versterking van de rol van het Comité van de Regio's aanzienlijk zal kunnen bijdragen tot een versterking van de doeltreffendheid, de transparantie en het democratisch karakter van onze instellingen in een uitgebreide Europese Unie. Deze Conventie heeft een historische kans om de burgers van l'Europe profonde nauwer te betrekken bij Europe. Wij mogen deze kans niet missen.

Dewael (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). - Mijnheer de voorzitter en waarde collega's, deze zitting is gewijd aan het contact met de civiele maatschappij. Ik vind het ook nodig om de stem van democratisch verkozen en dicht bij de bevolking aanleunende bestuursniveau's te laten horen.

Als minister-president van Vlaanderen en als waarnemer in deze Conventie voor het Comité van de Regio's, wil ik aandacht vragen voor de regio's. Vlaanderen is een sterke regio met uitgebreide bevoegdheden en een grote autonomie.

Regio's, en in het bijzonder regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden, zijn een onmiskenbare realiteit in het huidige Europa. In vele lidstaten heeft zich een belangrijk decentralisatieproces voltrokken. Ik denk dat deze regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden, net als een Europese lidstaat, de vinger aan de pols moeten kunnen houden van de voorbereiding, de totstandkoming, de besluitvorming, de evaluatie, de controle en de aansprakelijkheid bij het Europees beleid. Om hun belangen in Europa te verdedigen, moeten de subnationale entiteiten nu langs twee kanalen te werk gaan.

In de eerste plaats op het terrein van de regionale organen in Europa, zoals het Comité van de Regio's en ik steun dan ook de verzoeken om het Comité te versterken, zoals die geuit zijn door mijn collega's. Erkenning als instelling, motiveringsplicht, toegang tot het Hof van Justitie. Ook op het terrein van hun eigen nationale regeringen. Want deze moeten als kernspelers in de Unie, die voorlopig slechts lidstaten erkent, ervoor warm worden gemaakt om de zaak van de regio's tot de hunne te maken. Daar moet ook een derde mogelijkheid bijkomen. Met name de directe en rechtstreekse erkenning door de Europese instellingen van het regionale bestuursniveau.

Het volgende basisprincipe moet, denk ik, daarbij het uitgangspunt zijn. De lidstaten waren en zijn nog altijd het ankerpunt en de basis van de Europese Unie. Ten tweede, het nieuwe Europese interinstitutionele kader moet wel aan de lidstaten de ruimte en de vrijheid geven om de subnationale entiteiten hun rol te laten spelen, waarbij in de eerste plaats gedacht moet worden aan de regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden.

Ten derde, Europa mag de regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden niet onthouden wat deze zelf op het nationale vlak hebben verkregen, want een dergelijke erkenning houdt, denk ik, ook voor de Unie voordelen in. Het is voor Europa nodig en interessant om zich te verzekeren van de betrokkenheid van alle actoren bij het Europese besluitvormingsproces.

Ten vierde, dit is ook belangrijk, kunnen de regio's via de EU, anderzijds ook geen aanspraak maken op meer rechten en bevoegdheden dan deze waarvan zij binnen de eigen lidstaat kunnen genieten. Daarom heb ik samen met medeconventieleden Karel de Gucht en Andrew Duff een voorstel ingediend om een aparte werkgroep op te richten, die zich specifiek moet uitspreken over de problematiek van de subnationale entiteiten en de regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden.

Ik ben persoonlijk van mening, mijnheer de voorzitter, collega's, dat het Spaans constitutioneel model een aantal interessante mogelijkheden biedt. Dit model laat immers aan de verschillende autonome gemeenschappen de ruimte om zichzelf te constitueren. Ook een Europees grondwettelijke systeem kan een kader vormen dat lidstaten en subnationale overheden dan verder kunnen invullen. Op die wijze wordt de grondwettelijke situatie en de institutionele autonomie van elke lidstaat gerespecteerd. De lidstaten kunnen dan binnen dit Europees grondwettelijke kader met een verklaring aanduiden welke hun regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden of Europese partnerregio's zijn. In die verklaring kan de draagwijdte van de bevoegdheden van de regio's worden vermeld in relatie tot het constitutioneel verdrag van de Europese Unie. Vanzelfsprekend worden de lidstaten niet verplicht om gebruik te maken van de mogelijkheid van zo'n verklaring. Op die manier kunnen regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden binnen de Europese structuren hun legitieme rol spelen op het wetgevende, uitvoerende en justitiële vlak. Voor andere regio's, die veeleer over administratieve bevoegdheden beschikken en lokale besturen zijn eerder de uitvoerende Europese bevoegdheden van belang.

Zoals reeds werd gezegd, moeten op het wetgevende vlak de regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden minstens het recht krijgen, om door de Europese Commissie te worden geraadpleegd, wanneer deze maatregelen plant die eerder onder hun bevoegdheden vallen. Ook moeten de lidstaten het recht krijgen om hun politiek gewicht in de besluitvorming van de ministerraden naar eigen inzicht te verdelen. Ook voor de regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden is het op wetgevend gebied essentieel dat er richtsnoeren zijn voor de regeling van de bevoegdheden tussen het Europese, het nationale en het regionale beleidsniveau.

Ten slotte, moeten de regio's met wetgevende bevoegdheden een rechtstreekse toegang krijgen tot het Europees Hof van Justitie. Ik denk dat dat logisch voortvloeit uit de grondwettelijke situatie waarin verschillende regio's zich nu al bevinden. Ook hier moet Europa zich aanpassen aan het democratische rechtsgevoel. Enkel wanneer Europa meer ruimte geeft aan de regio's, zal het ook zijn doelstellingen van democratie, transparantie, efficiëntie en verantwoordelijkheid kunnen realiseren.

Dammeyer (NGO-REG/LOCAUT), - Herr Präsident, verehrte Kolleginnen und Kollegen im Konvent! Das künftige Europa hat ungefähr 500 Mio. Einwohner. Es ist eine blanke Illusion anzunehmen, dass ein solches Europa zentral regiert oder verwaltet werden kann. Es bedarf verantwortlicher dezentraler Strukturen, und die Regionen, die Städte und Gemeinden, die Kreise und Provinzen sind nötig, um ein demokratisches Europa zu gestalten. Die Regionen und Kommunen sind keine nachgeordneten Instanzen oder dezentrale Behörden der Europäischen Union oder der Mitgliedstaaten. Sie sind es jetzt nicht, und sie werden es in der Zukunft auch nicht sein. Im Gegenteil, ihre Repräsentanten sind die gewählten Repräsentanten der Bürgerinnen und Bürger. Sie haben eigene Befugnisse, und sie verlangen Respekt vor ihren Aufgaben und Zuständigkeiten. Daher rührt die berechtigte Forderung nach dem Respekt vor der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung in ganz Europa. Daher rührt die Forderung, auch die Stellung der Regionen zu respektieren. Das gilt vor allem für die konstitutionellen Regionen mit Gesetzgebungsbefugnis. Sie sind schon jetzt im Rat der Europäischen Union an den europäischen Entscheidungen und Gesetzgebungen beteiligt, aber sie verlangen für sich auch den Zugang zum Europäischen Gerichtshof, wenn sie in ihren Rechten von der Europäischen Union beeinträchtigt sind.

Die Regionen verlangen Einfluss auf die Willensbildung, auf die Entscheidungsfindung und auf die Rechtsetzung auf europäischer Ebene. Sie wollen an den europäischen Entscheidungen beteiligt sein. Sie wollen Subjekte und nicht bloß Objekte europäischer Entscheidungen sein. Als solches Organ betrachten sie übereinstimmend den Ausschuss der Regionen - Frau Palacio Vallelersundi hat darauf bereits hingewiesen -, der weiterentwickelt werden muss gegenüber seinen bisherigen Befugnissen und Arbeitsweisen, in seiner Zusammensetzung und in seinen Aufgaben und Funktionen. Er muss mehr und anders als beratend tätig werden. Der Konvent trägt auch Verantwortung für diese Weiterentwicklung.

Der Ausschuss der Regionen soll Organ der Europäischen Union sein. In bestimmten Fällen soll er beschlussfassend tätig sein. Man kann sich denken, dass das in Fragen der Regional- und der Strukturpolitik der Regionalfonds sein könnte, aber auch, wenn die Politik für den ländlichen Raum Regionalpolitik ist. Er soll ein Vetorecht haben, so dass die streitigen Fragen binnen dreier oder sechs Monate zwischen dem Ausschuss der Regionen und dem Rat oder der Kommission oder dem Europäischen Parlament verhandelt werden können. Wenn die Kommission oder der Rat vom Votum des Ausschusses der Regionen in Fällen, in denen er zwangsläufig gehört werden muss, abweichen wollen, müssen sie verpflichtet sein, ihr Abweichen zu begründen. In allen Fällen, in denen der Ausschuss der Regionen nach den Verträgen obligatorisch befasst wird, muss er an dem Prozess beteiligt werden, der bislang Trilog genannt wird. Er muss Zugang zum Europäischen Gerichtshof haben, wenn er sich in seinen Rechten verletzt fühlt.

Von Anbeginn an galt auch der Ausschuss der Regionen als Hüter der Subsidiarität. In seinen Stellungnahmen haben wir oft darauf hingewiesen, dass die Handlungsbefugnisse der europäischen Ebene durch die Verträge beschränkt und durch das Subsidiaritätsprinzip begrenzt sind. Wir haben dann auch Wege aufgewiesen, aber es ist klar, dass an diesen Prozessen, wie Subsidiarität interpretiert und gehandhabt werden soll, die Regionen beteiligt sein müssen und damit der Ausschuss der Regionen seinen Anteil haben muss.

Wenn also ein politisches Organ geschaffen werden soll, das die Kontrolle der Subsidiaritätspraxis in der Europäischen Union ausüben soll, egal ob ex ante oder ex post, wenn es nur ein politisches Organ ist, wird es erforderlich sein, dass daran auch der Ausschuss der Regionen beteiligt wird.

Die Regionen und die Kommunen haben ihre eigenen eigenständigen und verfassungsgemäßen Aufgaben in allen Mitgliedstaaten. Ihre Befugnisse sollen respektiert und nicht beeinträchtigt werden. Ihre Repräsentanten müssen an der politischen Willensbildung Europas beteiligt werden. Viele Konventsmitglieder haben in ihren bisherigen Beiträgen schon genau darauf hingewiesen. Sie haben Recht damit. Wir möchten ihnen vortragen, wie man so etwas praktisch tun kann.

Granrut (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). – Monsieur le Président, permettez-moi, tout d'abord de vous féliciter de votre initiative de consacrer une session à l'écoute des attentes des représentants de la société civile, et que dans un souci d'efficacité, divers groupes de contact aient amorcé le riche dialogue que nous avons connu hier, et qui se poursuit aujourd'hui. L'un de ces groupes de contact a réuni, sous la présidence avertie de Madame Palacio, les diverses associations européennes d'élus locaux et régionaux. Ayant participé à ce groupe de contact, je voudrais insister sur l'une de ses conclusions qui me semble tout à fait essentielle, à savoir le consensus de toutes les associations présentes (municipalités, petites et grandes, régions à pouvoir législatif ou non) provenant des états membres ou des états candidats, sur deux points. Premièrement, les autorités locales et régionales, légitimées par le suffrage universel de leurs concitoyens, se sentent mandatées pour participer à la construction de l'Union européenne, dès lors que celle-ci se veut transparente et démocratique. Ces mêmes autorités qui font partie du système de gouvernement de l'Union, considèrent que le Comité des régions est leur représentant institutionnel et politique dans l'architecture de l'Union et qu'il doit être reconnu comme tel. C'est ce dernier point que je voudrais développer. L'Europe est diverse, non seulement par les Etats qui la composent, mais peut-être plus encore par les collectivités territoriales qui composent ses états, et qui ont souvent un passé historique de gestion autonome. C'est une source historico-identitaire, complémentaire à celle qui a été mentionnée à Séville. Cette diversité doit être préservée car elle est la garantie du maintien des racines culturelles et politiques des citoyens européens ainsi que du dynamisme de la démocratie locale et participative. L'élus local, qu'il soit municipal, provincial, ou régional est à la fois le premier dépositaire de la légitimité démocratique. C'est aussi celui qui connaît le mieux et qui exprime le plus efficacement les besoins ou les aspirations de ceux qui, par leur vote, ont fait le geste de lui déléguer la parcelle de pouvoir que leur octroie leur qualité de citoyen. Le Comité des régions regroupe l'ensemble de ces élus qui sont en charge de la vie quotidienne de leurs concitoyens dans tous ses aspects tels que le logement, l'éducation etc. Ces aspects, généralistes par définition, sont la première expression politique de ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler la société civile. De ce fait, le Comité des régions devient le lien naturel et politique entre les peuples d'Europe et l'Union à construire. L'Union européenne ne peut plus ignorer le rôle de ces acteurs régionaux et locaux de la démocratie, pas plus que celui de leur représentation ici au sein de l'architecture institutionnelle de l'Union pour plusieurs raisons. Premièrement, le processus de décentralisation qui tend à accroître leur responsabilité, correspond à un besoin profond des populations de se sentir écoutées et impliquées dans l'action publique. Tous les états d'Europe sont touchés par ce phénomène avec des variantes toutefois. Deuxièmement, ils sont désormais en charge de l'application de plus de soixante-dix pourcent de la législation européenne. Ils participent à la réussite de la mise en oeuvre des politiques de l'Union et ils sont les mieux placés pour expliquer à leurs administrés, et c'est souvent bien nécessaire, les motivations de ces politiques. Troisièmement, qu'ils soient responsables régionaux ou municipaux, nombre d'entre eux ont expérimenté un nouveau code de gouvernance basé sur la recherche du consensus et sur l'implication de tous les acteurs culturels, économiques et sociaux. Il s'agit tout simplement de mettre en place un mécanisme efficace et réaliste qui garantisse l'application des principes de subsidiarité et de proportionnalité. Non seulement, ils organisent ainsi la participation du plus grand nombre des citoyens à la prise de décisions mais dès lors qu'ils participent à la décision de la base, les citoyens peuvent remonter la chaîne du processus décisionnel et adhérer à la décision finale prise au niveau européen. Ils peuvent donc apporter à l'Europe une expression politique des attentes de la société civile, une démocratie de proximité, un nouveau mode de gestion du mandat politique, une perception citoyenne des enjeux européens. N'est ce pas donner un nouveau sens à l'Europe ? Monsieur le Président, mes chers collègues, permettez-moi de souhaiter que cette session persuade la Convention d'associer à la construction politique qu'on attend de l'Union celle qui existe au niveau régional et local, parce qu'elle est la seule qui garantisce à l'Union son ancrage démocratique.

Martini (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). - Signor Presidente, gli originari ideali dell'Unione europea sono sottoposti, oggi, a tensioni forti e sempre nuove e sembrano talora inadeguati a dar le tante risposte che i cittadini chiedono pressantemente ai responsabili politici di ogni livello. Nello stesso tempo, il quadro mondiale subisce profonde e non preventivabili modificazioni, in particolare per l'avanzare del processo di globalizzazione. E' dunque necessario, per l'Europa del futuro, un progetto politico altrettanto nuovo, che vada oltre la riforma dell'assetto istituzionale e che sappia radicare un nuovo fondamento ideale dell'Unione. Occorre rispondere ai bisogni e alle aspirazioni dei cittadini di oggi e di domani e affermare nel mondo il messaggio fondamentale di democrazia, di pace e di solidarietà. Tutto ciò va reso completamente chiaro e comprensibile dai cittadini, per farne protagonisti di questa nuova fase della vita politica del continente e rendere più democratica l'attività dell'Unione.

Dobbiamo evitare, però, ogni ipocrisia: troppo spesso si tende a porre sulle spalle dell'Unione l'intero deficit di democrazia che percorre l'Europa. A essere sinceri, questo deficit colpisce i cittadini anche a livello nazionale, regionale e locale. In ogni caso, un'Europa più forte, aperta e sociale aiuta un'effettiva ridemocratizzazione di tutta la filiera della rappresentanza politica e mette in moto energie e contributi oggi sopiti. Allora è necessario e urgente, a mio avviso, collegare più strettamente innovazioni istituzionali e progressi di contenuto: penso, ad esempio, all'obiettivo primario della coesione economica, sociale e territoriale; ad esso vanno ispirate e subordinate tutte le politiche dell'Europa: quelle agricole come quelle infrastrutturali, quelle del mercato unico come quelle monetarie, quelle della conoscenza come quelle della formazione e del lavoro.

La coesione non è soltanto un problema economico, che condiziona la stessa competitività globale dell'Unione; è soprattutto un valore politico che unisce le differenti popolazioni dell'Europa e ci fa raggiungere due obiettivi storicamente strategici per noi: la salvaguardia e la valorizzazione delle diversità e specificità e il consolidamento di una vera solidarietà comune. Ci sarà più consenso popolare se si afferma nei fatti un'Europa non monocentrica ma policentrica, ricca di diverse culture e tradizioni, unita nella salvaguardia dei diritti dei cittadini e dei lavoratori e nella solidarietà tra le diverse aree e generazioni. L'Europa deve portare tale messaggio anche all'esterno, attraverso l'esempio di equità, tolleranza e solidarietà che applica al suo interno e che pratica verso gli altri popoli. Un'Unione autorevole ed aperta saprà, ad esempio, governare il fenomeno dell'immigrazione clandestina in modo aperto e innovativo, contro il quale, in mancanza di forti segnali di pace e cooperazione, si cede verso il rimedio antistorico della repressione e della discriminazione.

Un altro esempio è possibile citare: le politiche europee verso il Mediterraneo. L'Unione si è proposta di fare molto in questa parte così prossima e delicata del mondo, ma la sua azione è stata sin qui affidata ai soli rapporti fra gli Stati, senza scommettere sul coinvolgimento delle popolazioni locali e delle loro autorità rappresentative; ma così si sono ottenuti risultati insufficienti. La via giusta è, dunque, quella della coesione fra le diverse realtà all'interno dell'Unione e della cooperazione verso l'esterno. Queste due idee forza, iscritte nel codice genetico del modello sociale europeo, non si realizzano senza il contributo fondamentale delle regioni e delle autorità locali. L'Unione deve quindi valorizzare il ruolo dei livelli di democrazia locali, che sono per tutti i cittadini primo e fondamentale elemento nell'architettura della vita sociale dei pubblici poteri democratici. Del pari, se l'Europa vuole affermare il suo ruolo di pace nel mondo, deve far leva anche sulle attività di cooperazione internazionale decentrata, nelle quali sono impegnate tante regioni e numerosi enti locali.

Tutto ciò è, in sostanza, il fondamento della carta costituzionale di una vera nuova Europa, policentrica e solidale, prossima ai suoi cittadini. Quanto più l'Europa sarà questo, tanto più potrà contare sul ruolo attivo delle regioni, e ciò giustificherà ancora di più la nostra rivendicazione fondamentale, che è quella di decentrare la vita dell'Europa senza rinazionalizzarne le politiche.

Hoffschulze (NGO-REG/LOCAUT), Rat der Kommunen und Regionen Europas. - Herr Präsident! Zunächst herzlich Dank für die Einladung, dass die Kommunen und Regionen gemeinsam ihre Anliegen hier vorstellen können. Ich bin dafür sehr dankbar, und ich wünsche Ihrer Arbeit einen großen Erfolg. Wir haben uns zusammengesetzt mit fünf Verbänden. Wir sind der RGRE, Rat der Gemeinden und Regionen Europas, die Konferenz der peripheren maritimen Regionen, die Versammlung der Regionen, die Arbeitsgemeinschaft europäischer Grenzregionen und Eurocities, deren Vertreter nach mir sprechen werden.

Ich könnte den Vortrag recht kurz fassen, weil die wesentlichen Züge in den schriftlichen Bericht eingeflossen sind, den Frau Palacio Vallelersundi Ihnen über unser Treffen am 10. Juni vorgelegt hat. Deswegen will ich auch nur einige wenige Akzente setzen. Wir haben uns darauf konzentriert, mit konkreten Vorschlägen den Weg zu ebnen für das, was wir für den Verfassungsvertrag für notwendig halten. Dies ist zum einen der Hinweis auf Artikel 1 des Vertrags über die Europäische Union, in dem es heißt: as closely as possible to the citizen, also so nahe wie möglich beim Bürger. Meine Vorredner haben wiederholt darauf hingewiesen: Dies bleibt eine Illusion, wenn man nicht anerkennt, dass insbesondere die Städte und Gemeinden, aber auch die Kreise und Regionen hier eine federführende Rolle haben. Wir sind in 60 - 70% der Entscheidungen gegenüber dem Bürger die Federführenden, die Handelnden. Bürgernähe muss durch uns möglich werden, und dies heißt eben auch Respekt vor der kommunalen und regionalen Selbstverwaltung, damit die entsprechende Flexibilität erhalten bleibt. Diese Verpflichtung zur proximity oder zur Bürgernähe muss deswegen wesentlicher Bestandteil auch des neuen Vertrages werden, wie bisher in Artikel 1 des Unionvertrags.

Wir schlagen außerdem vor, dass das Prinzip der Subsidiarität - wie es in Maastricht definiert wurde, das ist heute der Artikel 5 - präzisiert wird durch den Hinweis auf die Mitgliedstaaten mit ihren Regionen und Kommunen. Wir halten dies für eine notwendige Ergänzung dieses Artikels. Überhaupt müssen Subsidiarität und Proportionalität im Vertrag wichtige Hinweise sein. Ich betone auch Proportionalität, was bisher zu kurz gekommen ist, denn die Tiefe des Eingriffs der Union in Handlungsfähigkeiten der Regionen und Kommunen ist auch eine Frage der Proportionalität. Dies führt beispielsweise dazu, dass wir sagen: Die Union sollte sich zurücknehmen auf fundamentale Entscheidungen, auf Rahmenentscheidungen, auf Rahmenrichtlinien und sich bei Details zurückhalten.

Es wird viel diskutiert über die Kontrolle der Subsidiarität, ob sie eingehalten wird. Wir sind in unseren fünf Verbänden der Meinung, ein Instrument ist das wertvollste jenseits der politischen und der gerichtlichen Kontrolle, das ist das Prinzip der Konnexität. Wo immer Sie veranlassen, dass der, der die Musik bestellt, sie auch bezahlen muss, wird es Zurückhaltung geben, und deswegen fordern wir Sie auf, dieses Prinzip in den Verträgen zu verankern. Frau Palacio Vallelersundi hat darauf in ihrem Bericht schon Bezug genommen.

Wir haben ferner - gerade als RGRE - die Bitte, die Charta der Grundrechte, wie sie in Nizza verabschiedet wurde, in die Verträge zu integrieren. Ich nehme an, das ist bei Ihnen schon Konsens. Wir weisen aber ausdrücklich darauf hin, dass wir darin auch die Präambel integriert sehen wollen, und zwar deshalb, weil dort zum ersten Mal das Verhältnis der Union auf der einen Seite mit den Mitgliedstaaten auf der anderen Seite verankert wurde, aber mit ihrer Organisation der öffentlichen Gewalt auf nationaler, regionaler und lokaler Ebene. Diese Formulierung, für die ich den Mitgliedern des damaligen Konvents außerordentlich dankbar bin, insbesondere Präsident Herzog und Herrn de Vigo, aber auch Herr Professor Meyer, die sich damals dafür eingesetzt haben, diese Formulierung muss Einzug halten in die Verträge! Hinter dieses Niveau der Grundrechteerklärung kann eigentlich niemand mehr zurückfallen wollen. Dies kann man auch machen, indem man Artikel 6 des Vertrags beschränkt und das dort aufnimmt.

Ein weiterer Punkt ist die Bitte um Integration der Charta der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung des Europarates in einem eigenen Kapitel, wo immer sie die Essentiale ja unterbringen können. Ich halte dies für ein dringendes Signal an die neuen Staaten in Mittel- und Osteuropa, die in dieser Frage eine Zusicherung finden müssen, dass, nachdem sie aus dem Zentralismus entlassen sind, sie sich dort wiederfinden, mit der Garantie der lokalen Demokratie. Wir sind bereit, uns in einer Arbeitsgruppe, die hier im Präsidium diskutiert wird, einzubringen, falls eine Arbeitsgruppe Kommunen und Regionen eingesetzt wird.

Gustav (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). – Mr President, I speak on behalf of the CPMR which brings together 148 regions. My proposals resume the results of consultations conducted within our various organisations and a broad-based survey, a summary of which has been addressed to the Convention.

With regard to the issue of the task of the European Union, there is convergence of opinion within our cities and regions in favour of redefining the European project. We all want a Europe capable of playing a greater role in world affairs and affirming its identity within the international arena. This role demands increased responsibilities in certain policy areas, such as foreign policy, immigration and justice, international trade and sustainable development. We all want the European Union to strengthen its internal cohesion in order to cope with the growing economic, social and territorial disparities that exist not only between our states but also between and inside the different regions and cities.

We are in favour of enlargement, but it needs policies that require a certain number of adaptations. These dual missions, both at home and abroad, must become the priority of the European Union's project to be defined in the forthcoming constitutional treaty.

In conveying this clear message in the Treaty, which would commit the European Union to a greater balance between its economic dimension and its social and political dimensions, we might more easily restore a climate of confidence between our populations and the European integration process.

Two conditions are necessary. Firstly, from a legal point of view, there is a need to emphasise the priority value of the principle of economic and social cohesion set out in the Treaty. The notion of territorial cohesion needs to be added. It is vital to ensure that a Member State's commitment to reducing the disparities between the EU territories is made clearly visible. This objective should be pursued for all regions and cities.

Secondly, from a more operational point of view, we need to execute and adapt this principle through ambitious Community policies. At present, most policies that have an impact on the development of our territories fail to contribute sufficiently towards this. We need to ensure that this gap does not persist in future. We are therefore against renationalisation in areas such as regional and agricultural policy. This would undermine the principle of cohesion within the European Union.

Far-reaching reforms are necessary to make the policies with a high territorial impact more participatory by ensuring a greater involvement of actors on the ground when they are being drawn up, by means of consultation mechanisms. These policies should be more flexible and better adapted to territorial diversities, for example in areas such as transport policy, the common agricultural policy or the system of state aids. They should be more decentralised in their implementation. In all these areas, competences are shared between the European Union, the Member States and the regions and cities and should remain so. The chapters of the Treaty thus need to be streamlined and follow the same plan, a plan that would detail the content, the instruments, the degree of flexibility and also the distribution of competences.

We must strengthen our partnership to coordinate better our public policies, if we wish to complete our internal market effectively. For us this is one of the major challenges of the discussions on the division of competences. Let us avoid, however, a move towards too inflexible a system that would not only hinder the progress of the European integration process but also hinder cooperation between public sector players, the European Union, the Member States and the regions and cities.

Van Nistelrooij (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). – Mr President, for the European regions, this is a great day. The Committee of the Regions and all the organisations are moving in one direction, with more possibilities for direct participation in Europe. We agree what that direction should be. The most important point is that Europe cannot be strong and lasting if we do not root it in the regions and communities as they exist and are active in all Member States.

From our point of view, the objective of the Convention must be a new constitutional treaty which creates a union of states and associates regional and local authorities, giving them the right to define and implement policies.

On the basis of the existing treaties and in accordance with the principles of subsidiarity and our daily practice in regions, the constitutional treaty should summarise the competences of the European Union. These competences of the European Union could be classified as exclusive competences, shared competences and complementary competences. Central areas of responsibility of Member States, which limit the exercise of the European Union responsibilities, should be protected in the future treaty in order to improve clarity of task allocation. But, above all, the regional and local governments must be involved.

Protecting minorities, guaranteeing their rights, implementing European regulations and promoting culture at the national, regional and local levels are all important responsibilities.

The financial consequences of European Union action for regional and local governments need to be taken into account from the outset, given that the local and regional governments implement most European legislation.

Although there is a need for specific competences to be set out, the European Union needs to be able to address new issues and add new competences, if necessary, but only where the Council and the Parliament so agree - possibly on the basis of a special majority. Furthermore, the European Court of Justice should have the power to determine whether the European Union's other institutions are acting beyond the scope of their competences.

It is also important to expand the division of responsibilities by applying a series of principles which are already the subject of the Treaties: the principle of limited individual powers and the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality.

It is very important that we cooperate in the special Working Group on Subsidiarity because it is the keystone on which to build the future Europe.

Gabbe (NGO-REG/LOCAUT), - Herr Präsident! Ich spreche für die Arbeitsgemeinschaft europäischer Grenzregionen, der 160 Grenzgebiete angehören. Ich komme aber gleich mit einem Thema, das so gar nicht in den juristischen Rahmen passt. Etwas haben wir in der Vergangenheit gelernt: Die grenzübergreifende Zusammenarbeit ist nicht immer eine nationale Priorität, aber sie ist mit Sicherheit eine topeuropäische Priorität, denn ob uns die Integration in Europa gelingt, das wird sich auch an den Grenzen entscheiden. Das heißt, wir brauchen in den europäischen Verträgen eine Absicherung dieser grenzübergreifenden Zusammenarbeit als politische Aufgabe der EU und als politisches langfristiges Ziel.

Wir sprechen von dem Reichtum der Bürger, der regionalen Vielfalt als Reichtum. Einen Reichtum soll man mehr und pflegen. Der Reichtum besteht aber in Unterschieden, und diese Unterschiede treffen sich an den Grenzen. Sie sind nicht verursacht von der regional-lokalen Ebene, die dieses überwinden muss, die grenzüberschreitende Zusammenarbeit in die Praxis bringen muss. Das heißt aber, dass der Bürger, der seine Identität und seine Vielfalt nicht verlieren will, der mit diesen Barrieren - seien sie sozialer, wirtschaftlicher, psychologischer Natur, manchmal zwischen den Ohren - an den Grenzen lebt, kooperieren muss, um dies zu überwinden.

Das heißt, wir brauchen nicht nur den Rahmen der Verfassung, wir brauchen sicherlich auch eine eigenständige europäische Politik und ein eigenständiges Instrument. Die Kommission erreicht mit ihrer eigenständigen Politik 40% der Bevölkerung in den Grenzgebieten, mit der interregionalen Kooperation fast 100%, und das lebt bei den Bürgern. Also dürfen wir das nicht auf Teilbereiche aufsplitten. Wir müssen diese Politik europaweit machen, und wir müssen ein eigenständiges Instrument schaffen, das sie aus den Strukturfonds herauslöst, damit wir in diesen Bereichen europäische Politik losgelöst von nationalen Hindernissen machen können.

Ich möchte abschließen mit dem Hinweis, dass grenzüberschreitende Zusammenarbeit sicherlich ein Prüfstein dafür ist, ob es gelingt, in Partnerschaft und Subsidiarität miteinander zu leben, ob es gelingt, trotz unterschiedlicher Partner, trotz unterschiedlicher Mentalitäten zu kooperieren, ob wir Bürgerinstanzen und Politiker trotz der Unterschiede grenzüberschreitend beteiligen und ob es uns gelingt, für den Bürger das Leben in seiner Gemeinde, in seiner Nation in Europa so zu gestalten, dass er nicht glaubt, er ist in einem Halbkreis. Aus dem Grunde die Bitte, den rechtlichen Rahmen, der unbedingt nötig ist, damit wir politisch keinen nationalen Wechselbädern ausgesetzt sind, juristisch zu verankern und eine Politik und ein Instrument zu schaffen, die diese transeuropäische Kooperation ermöglichen.

Siitonen (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). – Mr President, I represent Eurocities, the network of more than 100 European major cities. We in Eurocities have been working together with the other European networks of local and regional authorities to develop a common approach to the important issues being addressed by the Convention.

Together, we are calling for a more inclusive and participatory approach to governance in the European Union. This means ensuring more effective cooperation among all the spheres of governance: local, regional, national and European.

It is important to recognise that the cities and regions play a major role in terms of the implementation and financing of policies and legislation which have been decided at European level. In a number of important areas, including economic, social and environmental policies, competences are already being shared among different spheres of governance.

We welcome the proposal that the existing Treaties should be replaced by a common text, which would be a constitutional treaty. This is necessary in order to make the European Union more transparent and to clarify relations between the EU institutions and the local, regional and national authorities. We believe that the principle of local self-governance should be included in the Treaty, together with a clear definition of subsidiarity.

It is also important to clarify the aims and objectives of the European Union. The concept of sustainable development is very important, and we would like to see a more holistic and integrated approach towards policy-making which takes into account the economic, social, environmental and cultural dimensions. In particular, we would like to see a better balance between the objectives of economic growth and social cohesion.

Across a wide range of policy areas, local and regional authorities have a positive contribution to make to the policy-making process. In order to ensure good governance, it is essential that the experience and expertise of the cities and regions should be taken into account at an early stage in the development of proposals for new policies and legislation.

We are therefore calling for a more systematic dialogue between the Commission and representatives of local and regional authorities. Our existing European networks could play a useful and necessary role which would complement the valuable work being done by the Committee of the Regions.

Cities and regions have sometimes faced problems with the implementation of EU directives. We think more decisions should be left to the responsible authorities who can take account of specific local circumstances. Local and regional authorities are close to the citizens. We most often know what needs to be done and how best to do it. We are convinced that closer dialogue between the different spheres of governance will bring positive benefits for everyone in terms of improving the quality and the effectiveness of policies and legislation.

We hope the Convention will consider our proposals and we look forward to continuing our dialogue with you all during the coming months.

Doerler (NGO-REG/LOCAUT). - Herr Präsident, meine sehr geehrten Damen und Herren! Die Präsidenten der gesetzgebenden Versammlungen bzw. Parlamente auf regionaler Ebene, die ich hier vertrete, sind sehr erfreut, dass wir gehört werden. Sind es doch die Regionalparlamente, die die legislative Kompetenz auf regionaler Ebene inne haben. Acht Länder der Europäischen Union verfügen über Parlamente auf regionaler Ebene. Es gibt derzeit 70 Regionalparlamente. Deutschland, Österreich, Belgien, Spanien und Italien setzen sich in der Gesamtheit ihres Staatsgebildes aus gesetzgebenden Regionen zusammen. In Großbritannien haben Schottland und Nordirland legislative Kompetenzen, in Portugal verfügen die Azoren und Madeira über eigene Parlamente, und in Finnland sind es die Åland-Inseln. Insgesamt leben 203 Mio. Menschen, das sind 54% der Bevölkerung in der Europäischen Union, in gesetzgebenden Regionen.

Diese Regionalparlamente arbeiten seit längerer Zeit intensiv zusammen. So haben sie die 1998 in Oviedo die CALRE gegründet und treffen sich seither jährlich einmal, um ihre gemeinsamen Interessen zu beraten. Im letzten Jahr haben die Präsidenten in Madeira eine gemeinsame Erklärung zum europäischen Reformprozess angenommen, wie er vom Vertrag von Nizza in Gang gesetzt wurde. Zur Kompetenzabgrenzung haben sich die Präsidenten zu einer doppelten Strategie entschlossen. Zum einen schlagen sie unter Anwendung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips bessere Kompetenzabgrenzung sowie einen Kompetenzkatalog vor. Zum anderen sind sie der Ansicht, dass die Kompetenzaufstufung von weiteren Maßnahmen begleitet werden sollte. Hier nennen sie einerseits die Überarbeitung des Artikels 10, in dem die Achtung der mitgliedstaatlichen Verfassung und somit ihrer internen Organisation durch die europäischen Institutionen verankert werden sollte.

Was die Kontrolle anbelangt, streben die Präsidenten ein Klagerecht der gesetzgebenden Versammlung beim Gerichtshof an. Das wurde von meinen Vorrednern schon angeschnitten. Der Ausschuss der Regionen muss ebenfalls gestärkt werden, indem ihm der Status einer Institution zukommt und das Klagerecht beim Gerichtshof verankert wird. Die Präsidenten sind der Meinung, dass die Rolle der Parlamente in der zukünftigen Union stärker sein sollten als in der Vergangenheit. Das europäische Rechtssystem, das auf drei Ebenen gründet, muss zu einer offenen Kooperation zwischen nationalen Parlamenten, Europäischem Parlament und regionalen Parlamenten führen.

Wir sind auch überzeugt, dass die Grundrechtscharta in die Verträge aufgenommen werden muss und die Rolle der Bürgerinnen und Bürger zu verstärken ist. Seit letzten Oktober können wir Fortschritte - bescheidene, aber doch sichtbare - verzeichnen. Das Europäische Parlament hat sich dafür ausgesprochen, obwohl sonst keine Lösung für den Status der gesetzgebenden Regionen gefunden wurde, dass die Präsidenten der Regionalparlamente in die Arbeit des Regionalausschusses miteinbezogen werden sollen. Das ist ein wichtiger Fortschritt.

Während der Arbeit des Konvents wurde das Problem der gesetzgebenden Regionen angesprochen. Die Regionalparlamente, die die Arbeit des Konvents unterstützen, sind erfreut über die heutige Gelegenheit, ihre Ansicht direkt vor dem Konvent äußern zu können. Das Thema befindet sich im Stadium stetiger Entwicklung, und die Debatte ist noch nicht geschlossen. Wir sind uns dessen bewusst, dass unsere ehrgeizigen Ziele in ein realistisches Ergebnis münden müssen. Dabei ist aber den Aufgaben, die uns unsere nationale Verfassung vorgegeben hat, Rechnung zu tragen. Ich möchte Ihnen jedenfalls versichern, dass den Positionen des Konvents von den Präsidenten der Regionalparlamente große Aufmerksamkeit zuteil wird, und wir werden dem bei unseren nächsten Arbeiten im Rahmen der CALRE Rechnung tragen.

Teufel (Parl.-DE). - Herr Präsident, meine sehr verehrten Damen und Herren! Das Selbstverwaltungsrecht der Städte und Gemeinden ist bisher in keinem einzigen Vertragswerk verankert. Das muss sich ändern, denn die Regionen und Kommunen sind etwas anderes als das, was heute Zivilgesellschaft genannt wird. Sie sind keine gesellschaftliche Vereinigung von Bürgern, sie sind aber auch nicht lediglich administrative Einheiten. Sie sind die politischen Körperschaften, die den Bürgern am nächsten stehen. Dies gilt für das praktische Leben, es gilt aber auch für die Identität der Bürger.

Sie sind elementarer Grundpfeiler der Demokratie in Europa seit der griechischen Antike. Das Europa des Mittelalters bis zur Neuzeit war ein Europa der Städte. Das künftige Europa muss daher eine föderative und subsidiäre Struktur haben. Aufgebaut werden muss es von unten nach oben auf der Basis der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung. Den lokalen Gebietskörperschaften kommt deswegen eine ganz besondere Rolle zu. Ich unterstütze auch die Forderung, die Rolle der Regionen in der künftigen europäischen Verfassungsordnung im Herbst im Konvent zu diskutieren. Auch der Ausschuss der Regionen sollte so gestärkt werden, wie es deren Vertreter heute morgen in der Anhörung dargelegt haben.

Diese Diskussion muss in einer Arbeitsgruppe vertieft werden. Dazu bereits heute drei Gesichtspunkte: Wichtig ist, dass in einem neuen Verfassungsvertrag noch deutlicher wird, dass die bereits heute in Artikel 6 Absatz 3 EU-Vertrag verankerte Achtung der nationalen Identität der Mitgliedstaaten auch den innerstaatlichen Aufbau der Mitgliedstaaten umfasst. Bei der Definition des Subsidiaritätsprinzips sollte ein Hinweis aufgenommen werden, dass vor dem Erlass von EU-Regelungen die Handlungsmöglichkeiten der Mitgliedstaaten einschließlich ihrer Regionen und Kommunen berücksichtigt werden müssen. Im Rahmen ihrer Rechte und Zuständigkeiten sollten die Regionen mit Gesetzgebungsbefugnis wie auch der Ausschuss der Regionen ein eigenständiges Klagerecht vor dem Europäischen Gerichtshof erhalten. Auf dieser Grundlage können die Regionen und Kommunen zu tatkräftigen Partnern der Europäischen Union werden.

Bonde (PE). - Hr. formand, på topmødet i Sevilla fik vi et gennembrud på åbenhed, men Frankrig og Luxembourg blokerede et planlagt gennembrud; derfor efterlyser jeg franske og luxembourgske kolleger, der vil være med til at lægge pres på deres regeringer.

Så til emnet om lokale og regionale myndigheders indflydelse på EU-lovgivningen. Der har vi jo en stærk folkelig støtte i Eurobarometer nr. 52 og 53, hvor 60% de af europæiske borgere foretrækker lovgivning ved lokale, regionale og nationale myndigheder, og kun 18% foretrækker et højere niveau. Alligevel har vi 85.000 sider EU-lovgivning, 10.000 love og lige så mange ændringsforslag, som efterhånden også berører alle de regionale lovgivende myndigheder. Hovedparten af den regionale lovgivning er i dag indrammet af EU-regler.

Det, vi derfor har brug for, er et reelt subsidiaritetsprincip, som styres nedefra og opefter, og der har vi prøvet med Kommissionens initiativmonopol at få de nationale parlamenter og de regionale lovgivende parlamenter til at foretage en parallel læsning af alle EU-lovforslag, således at der bliver mulighed for at bremse overnational lovgivning, hvis den går de nationale og regionale lovgivende parlamenter for nær. De regionale myndigheder kunne også få søgsmålsret ved domstolen. Regionsudvalget kunne få vetoret i forbindelse med fortolkningen af subsidiaritetsprincippet, og de kunne f.eks. lave en årlig rapport om subsidiaritet, så vi kunne få mange eksempler på overcentralistisk lovgivning på bordet.

Som eksempel kan nævnes, at vi i en dansk kommune har oplevet, at det lokale sporvejselskab ikke var i stand til at styre sin egen virksomhed. Efter min opfattelse ville det være en oplagt EU-sag, hvis de bød på sporvejskørsel i Hamburg eller et andet sted, men når de holder sig til deres egen kommune, kan jeg ikke se, hvorfor Kommissionen skal blande sig i det. Lad os få den type eksempler på bordet til den arbejdsgruppe om subsidiaritet, der mødes igen her i eftermiddag, så vi kan slå et slag for decentralisering.

Speroni (Ch.E/G.-IT). - Signor Presidente, giusto una visione dell'Europa a più livelli - Unione, Stati, regioni, autonomie locali - va riordinata, come già sancisce la rinnovata Costituzione italiana. L'Unione deve riconoscere tali livelli, astenendosi tuttavia dal definire i particolari, restando ogni Stato libero di darsi l'assetto istituzionale interno ritenuto più confacente alle esigenze dei propri cittadini. Vediamo che, anche qui, nell'ambito della Convenzione, Belgio e Danimarca, secondo i propri ordinamenti istituzionali e le proprie scelte, hanno inviato esponenti regionali come membri, così come questi Stati si fanno rappresentare nel Consiglio, in talune occasioni, da ministri delle regioni secondo le loro competenze legislative. L'Unione deve quindi rispettare tali scelte e coordinare i propri ordinamenti con gli assetti istituzionali degli Stati, dando un ruolo, nei propri procedimenti decisionali, a quelle regioni cui gli Stati abbiano riconosciuto competenze legislative; di conseguenza, le regioni devono avere diretto accesso alla Corte di giustizia di Lussemburgo.

Concludo ricordando che, nell'Ufficio di presidenza della Convenzione, regioni e autonomie locali sono degnamente rappresentate dal Presidente Giscard, presidente di consiglio regionale in Francia, e dal Vicepresidente Dehaene, borgomastro in Belgio.

Wittbrodt (Parl.-PL). - Mr President, democracy cannot exist if it does not have a solid basis. The basis for democracy is a just civil society, which functions through non-governmental organisations and through regional and local authorities, including Euro-regions and sub-regions. If we want Europe to be closer to its citizens, we have to conduct dialogue directly with the citizens. We will not be able to achieve this if we act without the commitment of NGOs. Therefore, the Convention's decision to open itself up to NGOs is an excellent one. This session shows how rich and beautiful Europe is in its national and regional diversity. I agree that it should be preserved.

Some of the proposals submitted by the NGOs are, in my view, very important. Firstly, as we know, subsidiarity is a basic principle for the Union. Subsidiarity is even more important for the existence and actions of NGOs. After all, regional, local and small voluntary organisations have a great impact on the development of civil society. The subsidiarity principle must, however, be accompanied by adequate instruments, including financial resources.

Secondly, local and regional level organisations have to be consulted in the decision-making process which directly refers to them. We should enhance and facilitate civil society involvement in the decision-making process and the new constitutional treaty should contain such statements. We should also bring in proposals from the European Commission's White Paper on European Governance.

Thirdly, the idea of civil society is based on common universal values such as the protection of human rights, and solidarity with the poor. Europe must find a deeper spiritual and religious dimension. This, and the Charter on Fundamental Rights should also be anchored in the constitutional treaty.

Barnier (CE). – Monsieur le Président, chers amis, chers collègues, j'ai relevé dans les interventions ce matin trois points qui méritent, me semble-t-il, notre attention et notre soutien.

Premier point, assez général, un attachement aux grandes politiques communautaires qui font, je le disais hier dans le dialogue avec des organisations sociales, que l'Union ne se réduit ni ne se résume à un supermarché organisé, et qu'elle est beaucoup plus que cela. Elle est une communauté. Elle est également l'attachement à la politique de cohésion, à la politique régionale, à la politique agricole mais aussi à la politique de concurrence. Qu'on ne renationalise donc pas ces politiques, qu'on ne les détricote pas. C'est un premier point important, majeur, même, dans le grand débat sur l'avenir de l'Union.

Deuxième point: si ce premier point est acquis, il est alors possible de décentraliser la vie de l'Union, de reconnaître le fait régional dans la gestion de certaines politiques, et d'aller assez loin, comme nous y travaillons actuellement, de telle sorte qu'il y ait peut-être moins de bureaucratie à Bruxelles et plus de responsabilités, de confiance à l'échelon régional. Et ce qui a été demandé pour la politique transfrontalière vaut sans doute pour d'autres politiques régionales auxquelles nous réfléchissons pour après 2007.

Dernière conviction: sans remettre en cause l'autonomie institutionnelle des États membres, qui est un principe fondamental de la construction européenne, il est possible, pour réduire la fracture démocratique et pour rapprocher les citoyens de la construction européenne, de s'appuyer davantage sur le cadre démocratique de dialogues, de débats, d'informations que constituent les régions. Voilà pourquoi, Monsieur le Président, je voulais remercier le Comité des régions, les principales organisations qui se sont exprimées ce matin, non seulement pour la qualité de leurs interventions depuis le début de la matinée, mais aussi pour la qualité de leurs relations avec la Commission européenne et les autres institutions.

Duhamel (PE). – Monsieur le Président, nous passons donc de l'écoute à l'étude. Je voudrais profiter de ce que beaucoup de gens y ont fait allusion ce matin pour enfoncer le clou de la simplification du vocabulaire. Simplifier l'Union européenne va être très difficile, simplifier sa langue est assez aisé. Ne pourrait-on pas poser la question, par exemple, de la pertinence de la terminologie ? Par exemple, on parle de Comité des régions, alors qu'en vérité, il s'agit d'un Comité des pouvoirs locaux. Afin d'avancer sur cette question de la simplification du vocabulaire, le Praesidium ne pourrait-il pas demander à l'Institut universitaire européen de Florence de travailler sur cette problématique en liaison avec les groupes de contact que l'on a entendus hier et aujourd'hui, afin de nous adresser rapidement des propositions écrites dont nous pourrions disposer à l'automne vu d'une part, qu'il ne s'agit pas d'une question politique de fond nécessitant au préalable des discussions fortes entre nous et d'autre part, qu'il existe un accord sur cette nécessité. Pour avancer, il faut tester chacune de ces terminologies avec les personnes concernées. Ils pourraient nous y aider.

Einem (Parl.-AT). - Herr Präsident! Ich denke, es ist notwendig zu betonen, dass die Gemeinden mehr Rechte bekommen, dass der Artikel 16 ausgestaltet wird, dass die Gemeinden im Bereich der Daseinsvorsorge einen größeren Spielraum bekommen. Es wurden dazu gestern Vorschläge gemacht, ich selbst habe auch schriftliche eingereicht. Ich denke allerdings, man muss klar und deutlich Nein dazu sagen, dass alle Wünsche, die wir heute gehört haben, an die EU-Ebene gerichtet werden. Die Ausgestaltung der Struktur der Mitgliedstaaten ist die Angelegenheit der Mitgliedstaaten und muss es auch bleiben. Daher geht es primär dort darum, die Rechte der Regionen entsprechend zu respektieren. Ich bin sehr dafür, dass wir mehr Informationen an die Betroffenen, auch an die Regionen geben, damit sie sich entsprechend orientieren und an die entsprechenden Stellen wenden können. Ich bin aber sehr dagegen, dass wir diese Kraftmeierei auf europäischer Ebene einlösen müssen.

Berger (PE). - Herr Präsident! Ich denke, so sehr wir uns hier im Konvent auch bemühen werden, die Europäische Union bürgernäher und demokratischer zu gestalten, wir werden dem Bürger nie so nahe kommen, wie es die lokale Ebene und ihre Vertreterinnen und Vertreter tun können. Ich denke daher, dass wir dafür von der europäischen Ebene alles tun sollten, um die lokale Ebene zu stärken. Zum einen, dass wir das Prinzip der lokalen Selbstverwaltung anerkennen, damit insgesamt die Demokratiebilanz in der Europäischen Union besser wird. Wir müssen die Leistungen, die die Gemeinden erbringen, davor schützen, dass sie dauernd durch das europäische Wettbewerbsrecht verunsichert und behindert werden. Ich denke, wir sollten eine de minimis-Klausel einführen, die uns vor allzu tiefgehenden Regulierungen bewahrt. Wir sollten diese Ausformung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips als eine der Aufgaben des Ausschusses der Regionen sehen, in dem aber die Gemeinden in Zukunft besser vertreten sein sollten. Insgesamt denke ich, dass die europäische Ebene den Gemeinden den Rücken stärken soll, wenn es denn sein muss, auch gegen die Regionen und die Mitgliedstaaten!

Rack (PE). - Herr Präsident! Ich möchte eigentlich in die selbe Kerbe schlagen wie eine Reihe von Wortmeldungen, die jetzt gerade aus dem Kreis der Konventionalisten gekommen sind. Es ist wichtig und richtig, dass die Vertreter der Regionen und der Gemeinden Bürgernähe mit sich bringen, und wir brauchen Bürgernähe in Europa - mehr als wir derzeit haben! Aber hier gibt es sehr große Unterschiede. Es ist darauf hingewiesen worden, dass Regionen mit Legislativbefugnissen in einer ganz anderen Situation sind, wenn es um die Vertretung der Interessen ihrer Bürger geht, als wenn es um bloße rechtsanwendende Institutionen geht. Wir müssen aber auch sicher sein, dass wir das europäische Rechtsetzungsinstrument nicht noch komplizierter machen, als es schon ist. Vereinfachung ist angesagt und nicht totale Verkomplizierung, denn sonst verlieren wir all das, was wir an möglicher Bürgernähe gewinnen, sofort wieder mit mangelndem Verständnis am Gesamtsystem.

MacCormick (PE). - President, one thing seems to have become very clear to me this morning: there are very urgent issues here on which many of us profoundly agree. I understand the Praesidium is still in some doubt over whether it needs to have a working group in the autumn about regional and sub-regional government. I hope that the conversation of this morning has absolutely dispelled these doubts. It is vital that we have such a working group in order to get into the detail of these matters.

I would like to mention one point coming as I do from Scotland. It seems to me very logical that in the current structure of the states and regions of the Union, Scotland, for example, has only half as many Members in the European Parliament as Denmark. There are sixteen Danish representatives whereas there are only eight from Scotland because we are part of a large state. The population is the same but the representation is different. Apply that to the Committee of the Regions and it looks much less sensible. Luxembourg has more members of the Committee of the Regions than Galicia, Wales, Scotland and Catalonia. That is absurd. We should really look again at making the Committee of the Regions into just that: a Committee of Regions.

Amato (Vicepresidente). - Mi ha colpito, stamani, che i rappresentanti delle regioni, in particolare, si preoccupassero, giustamente, di rafforzare il ruolo del loro Comitato nella fase di elaborazione della legislazione comunitaria - trovo giusto che il loro parere conti, trovo giusto che si motivi quando se ne disattende il parere - e che si siano mostrati meno preoccupati di garantire le loro competenze legislative con lo strumento che il collega Lamassoure ha più volte proposto e che il Parlamento europeo ha accettato, che è quello di definire ovunque possibile la competenza legislativa comunitaria come una competenza di principi. In qualche modo ce lo ha chiesto la dichiarazione di Laeken dicendoci di fare una migliore delimitazione delle competenze, e questo è il presupposto più naturale per un ricorso alla Corte di giustizia che, altrimenti, fondato sull'attuale sussidiarietà, ha dei profili molto molto problematici.

Vitorino (CE). – Mr President, we in the Human Rights Contact Group have had a very lively and rich discussion which I am sure will be reflected in the contributions of the speakers that follow me.

By way of an introduction, I would like to emphasise there is an important lesson to be drawn from the Contact Group. Human rights protection in the European Union is about much more than just having good texts such as the Charter or the European Convention on Human Rights. It is a wider challenge in a European Union that wants to be a political union. It is also about structural implementation in the institutions, the mainstreaming of human rights in all European Union policies, particularly issues of gender equality. It is about effective access to the courts for everyone and it is about better parliamentary and ombudsman control, as Mr Soderman mentioned yesterday. Last, but not least, it is about enhanced transparency, accountability and the enhanced involvement of civil society in the process.

Beyond the technical issues that will be dealt with by the Working Group, there are a number of important political issues to be taken into consideration. Several members of the Contact Group have put forward concrete proposals for consideration by this plenary. Our Contact Group had a fascinating debate on the Charter. The Charter was welcomed and its importance underlined by all sides. It is an open question, however, whether the rights in the Charter should be strengthened. Some in the Contact Group emphasised this point. Others said that reopening the Charter now would not necessarily make it better.

Finally, a point which was unanimously agreed in the Contact Group was that the integration of the Charter should not be seen as an alternative to accession to the European Convention on Human Rights. Both initiatives might be considered as complementary in the sense that they both tend to reinforce fundamental rights in the European Union.

EN

Oosting (NGO-HUMRIGHTS). – Mr President, I speak on behalf of the Human Rights Contact Group and, particularly, on behalf of the extensive network of human rights, democracy and conflict prevention NGOs that have submitted a joint paper to the Convention.

That network in turn participates in the Civil Society Contact Group, together with the social, environmental and development NGOs and the ETUC and has thus contributed to that group's brief common statement already referred to yesterday. Let me underline that the common statement encapsulates the key findings and views of networks all over Europe that together stand for many millions of people and, I suspect, may be the largest European constituency that you have before you.

As the first speaker on the human rights sector, I will present our general views on the European Union's values, missions and policies in relation to human rights. More specific issues will be subsequently addressed by my colleagues, including, and particularly, the Charter and the question of accession.

Values: from an economic community that sought peace, stability and prosperity within its own borders, the European Union has become a community of values, with aspirations at a global level. The principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law are enshrined in the Treaties and are not questioned by anyone.

Yet there is a strong notion prevailing in the debates on the future of Europe that when redefining its mission, the European Union should somehow also reaffirm and strengthen its value base.

It has proclaimed that human rights should be at the heart of all its policies, internally as well as externally. But there seems to be uncertainty as to what that means. How important are human rights really for the European Union? Is this something we impose mainly on others or are we taking it seriously ourselves also?

That is not all that evident. Human rights observance within EU borders is in fact a chronic weak spot in the European Union's human rights policies. Human rights within the EU are regarded as a matter of codification and proclamation rather than of implementation and accountability. Serious human rights problems still occur inside the European Union, but these are considered as national responsibilities only. This complacent attitude is not just a credibility problem, it is also the best recipe to ensure that the candidate countries now still under close scrutiny will stop bothering too, as soon as they are full members.

Let me mention some other relevant and complicating aspects. There is no implementation framework and there are limitations in terms of instruments and competences. Article 51 of the Charter makes clear that the European Union can do no more to implement fundamental rights than it has been given powers to do.

There is no accountability, even at political level, for violations in Member States. Serious problems should be not just a matter for the Member State in question to address but must be a concern for the European Union as a whole. Article 7 of the Treaty reflects that and even provides for sanctions, but that is clearly a matter of unlikely last resort. We argue that there is a need for a positive and more proactive approach as well.

Finally, the whole domain of Justice and Home Affairs is burgeoning and poses vital questions for human rights observance by and within the European Union. However, divided as it is between the first and third pillars and subject to different regimes, it is about as untransparent as can be. So much for human rights within the European Union.

On the external front, the human rights clause has become almost a dead letter. Here too, the partners with whom the EU has signed up to a formal commitment to respect human rights do not need to bother too much either.

A fixation on the sanction element, on the one hand, and the reluctance to move beyond silent diplomacy, on the other hand, have so far prevented the development of the human rights clause into an active instrument to stop abuse and build mechanisms capable of prevention. Lack of transparency exacerbates the problem here too. The picture is not only negative; there is enormous effort and there certainly are results. The Council's own annual report on human rights is an impressive catalogue of activities. But it has so far stopped short when it comes to the question of what the result of all that effort really is.

The overall balance is not good. Where human rights within the EU are at issue, the EU remains largely invisible. Where human rights are supposed to be central in external endeavours, too often the results are limited at best and at worst sidelined by larger interests, as we saw after 11 September and again now with regard to the fight against illegal immigration.

To those who think we may be overly critical, it is precisely the EU's own very high priority for human rights and its own very high ambition to be a force for change that justify a critical assessment. If human rights are considered to be at the heart of all EU policies, it should show and it does not, not nearly enough at least.

When reviewing the overall picture, there is a clear discrepancy between the way the European Union asserts its values and the way it gives effect to those values in the field of human rights. There are good intentions, great efforts and certainly also positive results, but also an increasing sense of the collective human rights effort hitting a glass ceiling. This has to do with the nature of human rights, of course, with the highly charged and politicised context in which the battles have to be fought. Human rights work is a long haul.

The current sense of frustration also has to do with the fact that the past year has shown how fragile the human rights effort really is, how easily standards of international human rights and humanitarian law can be compromised and become negotiable. It also has to do with how the big issues - the fight against terrorism and the fight against illegal immigration - can move human rights right off the agenda; how in the major human rights crises in Israel and the Occupied Territories, in Chechnya and Columbia, there is time and again a failure to put human rights effectively at the heart of the peace process. The answer lies in part in stepping up the effort, putting words into action, and being more open and assertive. But at a different level, the EU should also reflect on how it can bring a proper human rights perspective into its policies and actions across a range of endeavours. The time to undertake that reflection clearly is now.

There is one important point I will make before concluding. When talking about a proper human rights perspective, we must be clear that it cannot be limited any longer to the traditional context of civil and political rights. The full and indivisible spectrum of human rights must be taken into account when reviewing the European Union's value base and its mission. It is necessary to take human rights out of the box they are in right now, to ensure coherence between values, objectives and the policies and methods to achieve those objectives. It is necessary to ensure coherence between the internal and external dimensions and to ensure, last but not least, that the over-arching global objective of sustainable development in its social dimension encompasses the full spectrum of human rights.

To conclude, there is a problem of delivery and implementation. There are problems of coherence and of accountability. I argue that there is a deeper problem also, a need for a comprehensive vision of the way that the European Union's fundamental values guide both its internal policies and the European Union's key role in the world. Therefore, we call for the European Union's value base to be strengthened and revitalised by asserting international human rights standards as absolute benchmarks; by developing a policy framework that reflects the inter-connections and the indivisibility of human rights; and by asserting an implementation regime. That regime will remain problematic but should engage in more direct and effective dialogue with civil society; increase transparency regarding the impact of actions and regulations; introduce proper monitoring, evaluation and accountability and review the ability of institutional arrangements to enhance these objectives.

On this last point, how all this should translate into competences in institutional arrangements is for you to determine. All we say is that it needs a strong European Union to deliver on its promises. I have no doubt that civil society will be greatly responsive to a European Union that manages to do that.

Sedou (NGO-HUMRIGHTS). – Toujours au nom des ONG du groupe de contact « Droits de l'Homme », je ciblerai là les questions relatives à la Charte et à l'adhésion à la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme. Si, effectivement, l'existence d'une charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne constitue déjà en soi une avancée, cette dernière n'est cependant pas encore entièrement satisfaisante et des lacunes sont à souligner. Sans être exhaustive, je citerai quatre aspects principaux. D'abord, en terme de protection des droits économiques et sociaux, la Charte est en retrait par rapport à la Charte sociale européenne révisée. Elle est en retrait également par rapport à la Convention européenne, tant au niveau des droits garantis qu'au vu des limitations qu'elle impose par rapport à la Convention. De plus, des formules ambiguës dans certains articles laissent une marge de manoeuvre pour des interprétations restrictives. Enfin, elle introduit, dans plusieurs articles, une distinction entre citoyens européens et ressortissants d'autres nationalités, alors qu'à nos yeux, elle devrait garantir ces droits fondamentaux à tout résident de l'Union, sans discrimination basée sur la nationalité. La charte actuelle doit donc être considérée comme complémentaire à la Convention européenne, dans la mesure notamment où elle ajoute des droits mais en aucun cas, comme une alternative, ni en terme de garanties offertes, ni en terme de contrôle juridictionnel.

Si les avis sont partagés en ce qui concerne le mode et le degré d'intégration de cette charte, il y a unanimité au sein des ONG pour considérer que cette intégration doit se faire dans le sens d'un renforcement des droits et des garanties. Cela implique tout d'abord que le mode d'intégration devra donner une force contraignante à la Charte. Cela signifie que les droits garantis par la charte doivent être considérés comme faisant partie de l'acquis communautaire minimal. Cela implique donc que toute révision ou toute modification de la charte, que nous appelons de tous nos voeux dans les délais les plus brefs, se fasse dans le sens d'une amélioration par rapport à l'acquis de base, dans le sens donc d'une avancée en terme des droits garantis. Nous estimons, par ailleurs, que le mode de révision devrait prévoir un dialogue effectif avec la société civile et les ONG concernées qui ont des revendications précises en la matière. Pour les détails, je vous renvoie aux contributions des ONG. Je soulignerai juste que certaines de ces revendications pourraient être prises en compte et intégrées dans l'élaboration du ou des nouveaux Traités, ce qui constituerait une alternative, si l'amélioration de la charte s'avérait pour le moment impossible. Nous estimons en tout cas que la référence au sein de ces textes à d'autres sources juridiques de protection des droits humains doit absolument être maintenue, notamment les références à la Convention européenne et la jurisprudence de la Cour de Strasbourg.

L'intégration de la charte aura également des conséquences en terme d'incohérence ou de dédoublements entre certains articles de la charte et des dispositions des traités, ou même du droit dérivé, au niveau des droits et de leur étendue. Je ne dresserai pas non plus ici la liste de ces problèmes. Vous pouvez trouver cela dans les contributions. Mais quelle que soit la méthode choisie pour résoudre ces questions, cela devra se faire par une approche au cas par cas, avec pour objectif de maintenir le niveau le plus élevé des droits. Au niveau des questions de compétence, il ne fait pas de doute pour nous que les compétences, tant de l'Union, que de la Cour de justice des Communautés, doivent être étendues aux dispositions de la Charte, et ce dans tous les domaines d'action de l'Union, y compris bien-sûr celui de la justice et des affaires intérieures. En effet, la législation communautaire est appelée à se développer dans des matières qui vont toucher au coeur même des libertés de tous, notamment dans les deuxième et troisième piliers (politique d'immigration, la coopération judiciaire et policière etc). Or, actuellement, cette législation n'est soumise à aucun contrôle juridictionnel digne de ce nom, ni direct ni externe. Pour qu'une telle extension des compétences de la Cour de Luxembourg soit valide, elle devrait bien-sûr s'accompagner d'un assouplissement conséquent des conditions d'accès pour les particuliers, afin d'assurer l'effectivité de ce contrôle. Elle devrait également veiller à assurer une plus grande cohérence possible avec la Cour de Strasbourg. Et là, nous souhaiterions soutenir une suggestion précise qui serait la possibilité, pour les associations, d'introduire des actions collectives auprès de la Cour, sur le modèle du système de la Charte sociale européenne.

Pour être effective, cette extension des compétences requiert bien-sûr que l'Union et ses Institutions soient dotées des moyens adéquats pour atteindre ces objectifs et pour contribuer, non seulement au respect, mais aussi à la mise en oeuvre de la Charte. Sur la question de l'adhésion à la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme, la charte ne constitue en rien une alternative à cette adhésion. D'abord, parce que la Charte ne prévoit en l'état actuel aucun système de contrôle et ensuite parce que cette adhésion représenterait une avancée, une plus-value par rapport à la Charte. En effet, elle permettrait d'assurer l'instauration d'un mécanisme de contrôle juridictionnel externe et spécialisé en matière de droits humains. Elle assurerait également une plus grande cohérence, car la plupart des actes communautaires sont soumis à une forme de contrôle indirect en matière de droits humains, au moment de leur mise en oeuvre par les états, qui eux, sont soumis à la Cour de Strasbourg, d'où un risque d'incohérence entre les systèmes des Etats et surtout, le texte, qui est à l'origine même de cette application et qui, lui, échappe à ce contrôle. L'adhésion renforcerait également l'autorité et la crédibilité du droit de l'Union, contrairement à certaines craintes exprimées et ce, non seulement sur un plan pratique mais également sur un plan symbolique. Cela renforcerait l'idée d'appartenance à une construction politique basée sur les valeurs communes.

Certaines ONG estiment également que ceci pourrait être un signal fort pour les pays candidats, mais aussi pour les Etats membres, qui les dissuaderait d'éventuelles tentations de déroger à leurs propres obligations en terme de respect des droits humains. Les questions plus précises, telles que les modalités de l'adhésion, la base juridique, la personnalité juridique ou la répartition des compétences ne constituent pas selon nous un problème juridique véritable ou insoluble. Toutes peuvent être résolues par une volonté politique véritable. De même, les craintes d'un affaiblissement ou d'une atteinte à l'autonomie du droit communautaire nous paraissent complètement injustifiées. En effet, il existe déjà des interférences entre la Cour de Luxembourg et la Cour de Strasbourg. Celles-ci ne peuvent donc que profiter d'une formalisation de ces échanges en matière de clarté et de cohérence. C'est plutôt l'absence injustifiée d'un contrôle juridictionnel crédible qui affaiblit le droit communautaire. Quelle que soit l'approche envisagée, la solution devra garantir aux individus trois principes de base : la simplicité, l'accessibilité et l'effectivité de recours possibles. Et là nous craignons que l'élaboration de formules alternatives complexes qui ont pu être suggérées, ne portent préjudice à ces principes. Je conclurai en disant que les ONG du groupe préconisent également, dans la mesure du possible, l'adhésion de l'Union aux autres instruments européens et internationaux de protection des droits humains (Charte sociale européenne révisée, Convention-cadre pour la protection des minorités et charte relative aux langues régionales et minoritaires, pactes internationaux et différentes Conventions internationales, notamment contre la discrimination tant raciale que les femmes ou les personnes handicapées). Nous souhaiterions également la signature du statut de la Cour pénale internationale. Cet engagement collectif serait un signe politique fort qui obligerait les pays qui ne l'auraient pas encore fait, de s'y soumettre également.

Spiliotopoulos (NGO-HUMRIGHTS). – Nous nous réjouissons que la convention mette les Droits Fondamentaux au coeur de son travail. L'acquis communautaire en matière de Droits Fondamentaux définit l'identité européenne. Il constitue le fondement de l'Union, voire sa raison d'être. Cet acquis découle du droit écrit, Traités et droits dérivés, des principes généraux que la Cour élabore, des Traités ratifiés par les Etats Membres et de notre édition constitutionnelle. Cet acquis est en évolution constante. La violation de cet acquis par un Etat Membre entraîne des sanctions graves. Son respect une condition primordiale de candidature à l'adhésion. L'acquis en Droits Fondamentaux est le noyau dur de l'acquis communautaire dont le Traité de l'Union exige le maintien intégral et le développement. L'objectif de la Charte était de rendre visible des droits existants, sans pour autant en bloquer l'évolution. Cependant, à côté de ces avancées incontestables, la Charte contient aussi des dispositions en retrait par rapport à l'acquis et elle ne répond pas à certaines préoccupations majeures dans l'Union. Dans la mesure où elle maintient l'acquis ou le développe, la Charte est un acquis elle-même. Ainsi, elle n'est susceptible que d'être améliorée. Je vais illustrer tout cela au moyen de quelques exemples. L'article de la Charte qui proclame l'égalité entre hommes et femmes dans tous les domaines était requis par le Traité qui érige cette égalité en mission et objectif de la Communauté. Le Traité impose l'obligation positive d'éliminer les inégalités et de promouvoir l'égalité entre hommes et femmes. Ces inégalités sont des situations de fait qui affectent surtout les femmes et sont dus à des préjugés et stéréotypes. Elles ne peuvent être éliminées sans action positive. Les femmes ne sont ni groupe ni minorité mais une des deux formes de l'être humain. Et elles souffrent souvent d'inégalités multiples.

En ce qui concerne les actions positives, la Charte doit être complétée en conformité avec le Traité afin de montrer que les actions positives ne sont pas des discriminations mais des moyens nécessaires pour atteindre l'égalité réelle. La participation équilibrée des femmes et des hommes à la prise de décision doit aussi être prévu. En matière de maternité, paternité et articulation de la vie professionnelle et familiale, l'acquis communautaire dépasse largement la Charte. Il garantit des droits cruciaux pour l'avenir, voire la survie même de l'Europe et pour la qualité de vie des femmes, des hommes et des enfants et il est en évolution constante. En ce qui concerne plus particulièrement les droits des enfants, la Charte ne reflète pas l'acquis qui découle de la Convention sur les droits de l'enfant. Des propositions concrètes à ce sujet sont faites. Elles devraient reconnaître que les enfants ne sont pas seulement des objets de protection, mais surtout des sujets de droits. La Charte interdit les expulsions collectives et le refoulement mais elle ignore les droits des ressortissants d'un Etat de ne pas être expulsé même individuellement, et de ne pas se voir refuser l'entrée dans leur pays, droit absolu et indérogeable selon la Convention des Droits de l'Homme et la jurisprudence de la Cour. La Charte devrait aussi répondre à certaines préoccupations majeures dans l'Union, notamment en interdisant toute violence physique ou morale, en reconnaissant le droit d'asile à tous ceux et celles dont les droits fondamentaux ou l'intégrité physique ou morale sont menacés, en garantissant la liberté et le pluralisme des médias en cas de concentration des médias. L'article qui interdit les discriminations constitue une avancée mais il ignore le droit à l'égalité des chances pour les personnes appartenant aux groupes et minorités. Il ignore également les droits des minorités tel que garantis par le Pacte des Droits civils et politiques.

La Charte ignore ou reconnaît insuffisamment des droits sociaux garantis par des Traités internationaux tel que le droit au travail, à un revenu minimum, à un logement décent, à la sécurité sociale, à la protection contre la pauvreté et l'exclusion sociale. Quant à son champ d'application, celui-ci est restrictif par rapport à l'acquis communautaire. La Cour exige l'application des Droits Fondamentaux là où les Etats agissent dans le domaine du droit de l'Union. Ensuite, la limitation des droits est permise sur la base de critères généraux et vagues où des critères classiques des Traités internationaux tels que la référence à une société démocratique sont absents. Dès lors, les limitations sont souvent invisibles. Par conséquent, on doit préserver les avancées de la Charte et combler ses lacunes tout en maintenant et développant l'acquis communautaire. Un des moyen d'y parvenir est de, comme le proposent nombre d'ONG, faire référence à la Charte, au paragraphe deux de l'article six du Traité de l'Union, en plus de tous les Traités ratifiés par les Etats Membres et des traditions constitutionnelles.

Il faut également renforcer les droits fondamentaux garantis par les Traités en ajoutant certaines dispositions qui serviront aussi de base pour des instruments de droits secondaires. On pourrait imaginer une disposition qui interdirait toute discrimination et exigerait l'égalité des chances pour tous sans discrimination, l'égalité des droits entre femmes et hommes dans tous les domaines et les actions positives, la protection de la maternité, de la paternité et de l'articulation de la vie familiale et professionnelle et l'interdiction de tout traitement favorable direct ou indirect en rapport avec ces situations. Il faut également reconnaître à toute personne un droit individuel à la sécurité sociale et le fonctionnement ainsi que le financement des services d'intérêt général doit être réglementé dans le but de garantir les Droits Fondamentaux. L'Union doit aussi avoir les compétences nécessaires à la mise en oeuvre des droits, y compris les droits sociaux, tel le droit à l'éducation sans oublier l'harmonisation en matière de santé publique. Il faut aussi instituer un médiateur de l'Union qui recevrait les plaintes contre les Etats Membres en vue d'éventuelles procédures d'infraction. Ce faisant, nous aurions un système cohérent et efficace de Droits Fondamentaux qui maintiendrait intégralement l'acquis et le développerait. Je terminerai en plaidant pour que "Droits Fondamentaux" soit définitivement remplacé par "Droits de l'Homme" comme vient une nouvelle fois de le proposer Madame Berès.

Muscardini (PE). - Signor Presidente, operare in campo politico, culturale e sociale ed economico affinché i diritti e la dignità della persona siano rispettati nell'Unione e nei paesi con i quali abbiamo rapporti politici, commerciali o di cooperazione, è uno degli impegni che la Convenzione si è posta nella prima riunione, discutendo delle missioni dell'Europa.

Nell'Unione spesso la dignità della persona è violata da una criminalità organizzata e transnazionale che trascina minori, bambini e bambine, sulla strada della prostituzione e della pedopornofilia, per non parlare del lavoro minorile e delle violenze domestiche. Dobbiamo difendere i diritti politici, civili, culturali ma, oggi più che mai, anche il diritto all'integrità fisica e psichica. Per difendere questi diritti, per combattere questi soprusi occorrono univoche leggi europee e anche maggiore cooperazione tra le polizie, fino ad arrivare a un organismo europeo che operi per la lotta agli specifici reati di violazione dei diritti umani. L'Europa, inoltre, ha il dovere di chiedere a tutti i governi con i quali ha rapporti di rispettare il diritto di ogni essere umano all'integrità fisica, ad una vita dignitosa, all'accesso all'informazione e alle libertà democratiche. Ogni volta che un essere umano è impedito nell'esercizio dei suoi diritti e dei suoi stessi doveri, che è sradicato dalla sua famiglia, menomato nel fisico o assoggettato con il sopruso, l'Europa della libertà, della pace e della democrazia deve avere il coraggio e la forza di intervenire, e la Convenzione ha oggi il dovere di chiedere alle future Istituzioni europee di sancire norme che vincolino i rapporti commerciali e politici a rispetto dei diritti della persona.

Nahtigal (Gouv.-SI). - Mr. President, I would like to emphasise the question of consistency. We need to look at human rights on a European level, enforced and implemented by the European Court of Justice, and ways in which we can bring in the European Court of Human Rights in order to enhance human rights at the European and wider levels.

Traditionally, case law has been created by the European Court of Human Rights. Firstly, therefore, we need to study in greater detail the level of human rights which has been traditionally adopted by these institutions before trying to incorporate the Charter of Human Rights into a European Constitution. In so doing we should take care not to lower the standard of human rights at European level once the Charter has been incorporated in the European Constitution.

We should not hesitate to enhance gradually the level of human rights in the European Constitution, perhaps by gradually amending the Constitution as we go, as was the case with the American Constitution, to which amendments were adopted over the years in the light of empirical findings and controversial cases such as the 14th Amendment etc.

The development of human rights at the European Constitutional level should, therefore, be gradual. We should not raise expectations at the beginning by incorporating social rights which are perhaps too broad and promises that we will subsequently not be able to keep.

Timmermans (Parl.-NL). - Dank u wel, voorzitter, ik heb goed geluisterd naar de bijdragen van de contactgroep en die bijdragen hebben mij gesterkt in de conclusie dat het Handvest moet worden opgenomen in de gereviseerde verdragen en dat de Europese Unie zo spoedig mogelijk moet toetreden tot het Europees Verdrag voor de Rechten van de Mens.

Dat is des te noodzakelijker nu we op het punt van de derde pijler steeds meer vorderingen maken. De bescherming van de rechten houdt op dit moment geen gelijke tred met de uitbreiding van bevoegdheden van de verschillende overheden om op die rechten in te grijpen. Iedere Europese burger heeft het recht op bescherming tegen het handelen van de overheid, of dat nu de nationale of de Europese overheid is, en daarom moet het Handvest ook zo snel mogelijk worden geïncorporeerd en moet het EVRM door Europa worden ondertekend.

Maar het gaat om meer dan alleen juridische bescherming van rechten. In onze samenleving in de Europese Unie, die gebaseerd is op lotsverbondenheid, vergen mensenrechten constant de aandacht en constant onderhoud. Als het niet goed gaat met de mensenrechten gaat het niet goed in een samenleving, en dat zijn dan altijd vroege indicatoren dat er iets fout gaat in de samenleving, die we zien in het respect voor de mensenrechten. Staat de persvrijheid onder druk, staan de rechters onder druk, dan hebben wij allemaal in de Unie een probleem en daar moeten wij elkaar op kunnen aanspreken op Unie-niveau, dat is niet meer de chasse gardée van nationale lidstaten.

Tot slot, voorzitter zou ik speciale aandacht willen vragen, zeker in de uitgebreide Unie, voor de positie van nationale minderheden. Dat is in de huidige Unie nog een onderbelicht aspect. In de uitgebreide Unie zullen wij daaraan meer aandacht moeten schenken; het gaat hier om zaken als het recht op gebruik van de eigen taal, het recht op eigen vertegenwoordiging. Voorzitter, er is veel werk te doen, laten we dit in de Conventie opnemen.

Maij-Weggen (PE). - Voorzitter dank u wel, voorzitter ik wil de inleiders hartelijk danken voor hun interventies, ik wil ze hartelijk danken voor de steun die ze ons altijd geven in het Europees Parlement als het gaat om de achtergrond van bepaalde mensenrechtenkwesties.

Naar mijn oordeel zijn mensenrechten een geweldig belangrijk thema in de Europese Unie. Het is bijzonder belangrijk dat we de lidstaten en ook toetredende landen kunnen toetsen aan een aantal elementaire zaken en daarvoor hebben we dan het EVRM, daarvoor hebben we het Handvest voor de Grondrechten, daarvoor hebben we de VN-verdragen. Het is daarom van cruciaal belang dat de Europese Unie een eigen rechtspersoonlijkheid krijgt, zodat we kunnen toetreden tot die Verdragen en ze beter kunnen toetsen. Natuurlijk moet het Handvest in de Verdragen worden geïncorporeerd.

Voorzitter, we hebben ook een taak met betrekking tot de Derde Wereld. Ik wil dat ook nog eens benadrukken vooral omdat er op dat gebied sprake is van veel hypocrisie. We hebben clausules over mensenrechten in de handelsverdragen en ook in de afspraken met betrekking tot ontwikkelingssamenwerking, maar ze worden in heel wisselende mate toegepast. Op dit moment is het zo dat zeker tien landen uitgesloten zijn van ontwikkelingssamenwerking en van handel vanwege het feit dat ze de mensenrechten niet handhaven maar er zijn ook landen, ik denk aan Soedan, Birma, waar dat niet gebeurt. De reden hiervoor is dat één of twee lidstaten zich daartegen keren en meestal omdat ze daar handelsbelangen hebben, of iets dergelijks. Het is ook heel belangrijk dat de besluitvorming bij unanimitéit wordt doorbroken wanneer het gaat om de toepassing van mensenrechten in de Derde Wereld.

De belangrijkste drie eisen voor onze conventie, voorzitter, lijken mij de volgende te zijn: de Europese Unie moet een rechtspersoonlijkheid krijgen, zodat ze toe kan treden tot alle internationale verdragen op dit gebied; het Handvest moet in de verdragen worden geïncorporeerd en het unanimitéitsbeginsel moet worden doorbroken bij de toepassing van mensenrechten buiten Europa.

Söderman, Ombudsman. - Mr President, in Nice in December 2000, the Presidents of the European Parliament, the Council and the Commission stated that the Charter was an important commitment for the Union's institutions to make to European citizens. Since then, the Ombudsman has tried to encourage the institutions to follow the Charter. This has included looking at the freedom of expression of officials, their right to parental leave, age discrimination and the recruitment procedure, indirect sex discrimination against women, the secondment of national officials, the right to good administration by following the European Code of Good Administrative Behaviour, and a suggestion that there should be a code to deal with complaints. The Commission has cooperated in dealing with most of these issues.

There can be no doubt that the Charter should be legally binding on the Union's institutions and bodies, including when they legislate. This means that the Charter will also be binding whenever Community law is being applied. The citizens should then have remedies available if the Charter is not followed. Both judicial and non-judicial remedies could be used.

The Network of Ombudsmen and similar bodies could surely make an important contribution here. The constitutional role of the Court of Justice should be further developed to include a focus on human rights. The European Ombudsman would be ready to accept responsibility for referring fundamental rights cases to the Court of Justice if no solution can be found in a normal investigation by the Ombudsman. This could limit the need for individuals themselves to seek to bring fundamental rights cases before the Community courts.

Yilmaz, Ayfer (Parl.-TR). - Mr. President, I fully share the views expressed concerning the importance of the protection and monitoring of human rights. Indeed, this question should be handled on a global scale and the Union should fulfil its responsibilities for the promotion of the human rights situation of millions of people around the world.

It is essential for the Union to defend objective values without discrimination and double standards. Extended dialogue with civil society is needed for the implementation of human rights. This is crucial for the credibility of the Union. The Union should recognise terrorism as a violation of human rights. Only with coherent and effective measures can we fight against terrorism, which has caused the death of hundreds of thousands of people.

Lastly, the Union should focus on gender equality issues. It should also ensure the protection of the rights of non-EU citizens resident in Member States.

Bruton (Parl.-IE). - Mr. President, I have a question about human rights. What is human? What is the scope, therefore, of human rights? Is a child before it is born human? If it is human, does it have human rights? For instance, the right to life under the Charter. We have heard about the rights of the child after it is born, but does the child have any rights before it is born? Does the Charter take the view, if such rights exist, that these are entirely at the discretion of the child's parents and that neither the Union nor the Member State has the responsibility to vindicate the rights of the human before the human is born? This is an important question which we need to address because it determines the scope of humanity and, therefore, the scope of human rights.

Berès (PE). – Simplement pour attirer l'attention du praesidium et peut-être du secrétariat sur un problème linguistique en ce sens qu'il ne concerne que quelques langues de l'Union, mais qui a une portée bien plus générale. Il s'agit de la façon de traiter les droits de la moitié de l'humanité, à savoir les droits de la femme. La meilleure expression que nous puissions utiliser est celle que nous avons retenue dans la précédente convention, s'agissant de la rédaction de la Charte des droits fondamentaux en parlant de droits la de la Personne. J'espère qu'il puisse en être de même dans cette convention.

Christophersen (Ch.E/G.-DK). - Hr. formand, jeg blev assisteret af tre af mine kolleger her på Konventet, Anne Van Lancker, Lord Tomlinson og Kimmo Kiljunen, og først ønsker jeg at takke dem for deres meget aktive indsats, som har bidraget til en god diskussion. Jeg har fem bemærkninger til indholdet af den diskussion.

For det første var alle deltagere meget positive over for ideen om, at Konventet konsulterer civilsamfundet, både gennem kontaktgrupper og gennem den diskussion, som vi havde i går, og som vi har i dag, og nogle gik så vidt, at de ønskede en institutionalisering af den kontakt, men det var der dog ikke enighed om. Andre advarede om, at det kunne have en forsinkende virkning, hvis det blev en del af den almindelige fællesskabsproces.

Min næste bemærkning drejer sig om de ønsker, der blev fremført af organisatorisk og strukturel karakter. For det første understregede næsten alle deltagere behovet for at etablere en langt klarere forbindelse mellem Fællesskabets udviklingspolitik og Fællesskabets øvrige eksterne politikker samt en bedre koordinations-, gennemførelses- og beslutningstagningsmekanisme på dette vigtige område. Herudover blev det understreget, at der skulle være mere kohærens, mere overensstemmelse mellem, hvad man gør på udviklingsområdet, og hvad man gør på andre politiske områder i Fællesskabet. I den forbindelse var der mange, som understregede et ønske om, at man fortsat skulle have et særligt ministerråd, som beskæftiger sig med udviklingspolitik, men vi ved jo nu, at beslutningen i Sevilla bl.a. har ført til, at disse drøftelser overføres til det råd, som behandler generelle eksterne politiske spørgsmål.

En tredje bemærkning drejer sig om det politiske indhold, som deltagerne gerne så, at en ny traktat fik, for så vidt angår udviklingspolitik. Der var ønske om, at udryddelse af fattigdom skulle have den højeste prioritet i en eventuel traktattekst; der var ønske om, at de sociale aspekter skulle understreges stærkere, både for så vidt angår den eksterne, og for så vidt angår den interne dimension i Fællesskabet; der var et ønske om, at der skulle være mere fokus på demokrati og respekt for menneskerettighederne, og endelig skulle der være mere fokus på hele ligestillingsproblematikken. I den forbindelse blev der også udtrykt ønske om, at charteret om grundlæggende rettigheder blev indføjet i traktaten.

Min næste bemærkning er, at der var et stærkt ønske om, at Den Europæiske Udviklingsfond, i fremtiden skulle inkorporeres i traktaten og i Fællesskabets budget og være underkastet samme regler, både for så vidt angår gennemførelse af politikken og udførelsen af bevillingerne, som gælder for Fællesskabet i øvrigt.

Til sidst, hr. formand, udtrykte alle deltagere en tilfredshed med, at der også i gruppen, som var samlet, var repræsentanter for ansøgerlandene. Det blev understreget, hvor vigtigt det var, at ansøgerlandene allerede fra starten af deres medlemskab er engagerede i udviklingspolitikken.

På vegne af Konventet udtrykte jeg og mine tre kolleger vores vilje til at fortsætte dialogen gennem bidrag fra medlemmerne af kontaktgruppen især, og at vi gerne så konkrete forslag blive fremsendt til Konventet.

Stockner (NGO-DEVE). – Mr President, the Development Contact Group agreed that there would be three people making the presentation. I will give a general overview presentation, followed by specific presentations on gender and a perspective from the candidate countries.

This statement of development policy is made on behalf of a wide range of European development and humanitarian NGOs. We have a collective membership of some 1,000 NGOs from all parts of the European Union working in partnership with civil society actors in countries all over the world - particularly where large numbers of people live in poverty. As part of the Civil Society Contact Group, we are actively working with NGOs from the human rights, environmental and social sectors as well as the European Trade Union Council. Your attention has already been drawn to our common statement.

I will address five areas in this statement. The first is the legal framework for the European Union's development policy. The Laeken Declaration identified the future task of Europe as being to play a stabilising role worldwide, "to shoulder its responsibilities in the governance of globalisation ... seeking to set globalisation within a moral framework, in order words to anchor it in solidarity and sustainable development".

The European Union is recognisably a global force, economically if not politically. With the introduction of the euro and upcoming enlargement, this global aspect has been and continues to be strengthened. Such a position carries responsibilities, not only to the people of Europe but also to the global community as a whole. We believe it is here that the Europe Union's development policy has to play a crucial and central role. Unlike most of the EU's policies, which are primarily motivated by the internal interests of the EU, development policy should focus on the interest of people outside our borders and particularly people living in poverty in developing countries.

As a global player, the EU needs to ensure that the legal base for its development objectives is sufficiently strong to be properly asserted. We do not believe that the current legal base under Title 20 is sufficient. We are therefore calling for the following: firstly, a common development and humanitarian policy based on its own specific objectives, identified in the Treaties, with a legal standing in the Treaties that is equal in weight to the other elements of external policies, including the CFSP. This policy needs to address the whole spectrum from relief to development in a coherent continuum as well as to address disaster preparedness.

Secondly, the eradication of poverty both within the European Union as well as externally should become one of the overall objectives of the European Union.

Thirdly, the Treaty should establish an approach to development that asserts international human rights standards as the absolute benchmark for the EU's policies and actions. The policy framework of the Treaty should reflect the interconnectedness and indivisibility of all rights - economic, social, cultural, civil and political - as set out in the UN Declaration of Human Rights and the related core charters and conventions as well as international humanitarian and refugee law.

Fourthly, the Treaty should specify that social protection needs to be integrated into the definition and implementation of Community policies. Actions are needed with a view to promoting sustainable social development both internally and externally.

Fifthly, legal instruments should be established to ensure that financial resources intended for development and humanitarian purposes are utilised strictly in accordance with the objectives and policies in these areas.

Sixthly, a comprehensive external policy framework should be established that guides all external actions. This should be based on the overriding objective to eradicate poverty, the fight against inequality and an active EU involvement in conflict prevention. We must promote sustainable models of development in which social, environmental and economic aspects are held in balance; assert international human rights standards as the absolute benchmark; promote equity and fairness in economic and social affairs, particularly for the excluded and marginalised, as well as equality between women and men, and compliance with international commitments including the millennium development goals.

The second area that I address is the institutional and political set-up of Europe's external relations. The Convention needs to address these issues to ensure that the development objectives can be effectively pursued. We strongly believe that such capacity needs to have a clear identity and definition that enables the promotion, further development and implementation of development policies based on the values that are enshrined in the objectives.

We deplore the decision taken by the European Council in Seville, according to which development and humanitarian issues will, in future, be incorporated into a General Affairs and External Relations Council. While the justification is made on the grounds of increasing coherence of policies, we fear that the result will weaken the impact of the EU's development and humanitarian policies and effectively erode the capacity of the EU to implement its responsibilities towards the global community. There is a real danger that the EU's development and humanitarian policies will become an instrument for promoting its own external interests. The linking of EU aid to migration policy and of linking aid to fisheries policies are cases in point. We need to emphasise that it is of the utmost importance that humanitarian aid remains disconnected from political considerations, as agreed under international humanitarian law.

These are some of the reasons why we urge the Convention to establish a separate working group for development.

The third area is coherence and consistency of policies. Currently, the Treaties require consistency in external actions of the EU and for policies and practices of the European Union that impact on developing countries to take account of the European Union's development objectives. We propose that, in future, the comprehensive external policy framework I have outlined should guide all of the European Union's external policies and actions. This framework should also guide all Community policies that have a direct or indirect impact on developing countries, including those of agriculture, trade, fisheries, transport, energy and so on.

The fourth area concerns visibility, transparency and civil dialogue. While recognising that steps have been taken over the past few years to make the institutions and their decision-making processes more open and accessible, they continue to lack transparency. This clearly strengthens the feeling of remoteness that European people feel towards the EU's institutions. We therefore urge the Convention to promote an increase in accountability and transparency in the workings of the European Union, including in the development of policies and positions that govern the European Union's relations with developing countries. We believe that there should be an increased role for the European Parliament in scrutinising policy that is being developed. Therefore, all of the Community's cooperation with developing countries, including under the European Development Fund, should be incorporated into the Community budget framework.

The primary objective of this Convention is to bring Europe closer to its citizens. This is an urgent and vital task for the credibility of the European Union, particularly in the face of a substantial enlargement. In this respect, a treaty article should be proposed by the Convention on establishing a civil dialogue directly between citizens and their organisations, on the one hand, and the decision-making bodies of the European Union, on the other.

This should be an additional but necessary mechanism for ensuring that a consistent and ongoing dialogue takes place. Given the role of the European Union in the world and the effect that the EU's policies and activities have on the lives of people in developing countries, specific recognition should be given to the need for a civil dialogue that includes civil society actors from developing countries. We believe that the provisions established in the Cotonou Agreement could be followed.

I now turn to the fifth and final issue, the definition of institutional competence for development. In the current Treaties, competence for development between the Community and Member States is complementary. There has been much confusion, however, in defining the basis on which complementarity can be determined. This has led to competition and inefficiency, contributing to the criticisms of the effectiveness of EU development cooperation. We believe that there is a clear need for competence for development to remain both at the level of the Community and in individual Member States. Since the development objectives reflect principles of solidarity between the people of Europe and people in developing countries, this has to be anchored and assured through a national development programme. At the same time, the European Union's global responsibility requires a development capacity at the centre of the European Union that promotes a common development policy for the EU as a whole. We would urge that our proposals for a comprehensive external policy framework should not only govern the external actions of the Community but should also guide those of the Member States. If this were so, it would be easier to contemplate definitions of complementary action guided by concepts of added value and based on comparative advantages. It would also provide a clearer framework in which the coordination of actions between Member States and the Community would be facilitated.

Let me end by observing that the true test will be in the implementation of proposals made by this Convention, and, ultimately, the decisions of the Intergovernmental Conference to follow. We would urge the Convention to address this question so that the implementation of a new Treaty is a true reflection of the principles and values that were intended.

It was in 1973 that Shridath Ramphal, then minister of foreign affairs of Guyana, famously said that as we face the future, we are conscious that a Europe that builds community by bringing economic disaster to developing countries sacrifices values that are themselves essential to the strength and permanence of that community, eroding those concepts of care and concern and of responsibility for the future of our planet, which lie at the very heart. For many outside of Europe, the question is not whether the Community is going to be a rich man's club, it is a society of rich states whose association will grow increasingly more intimate. The question, rather, is whether being rich and highly developed, the enlarged community will adopt these values and elevate them to the level of ethos.

We strongly believe that the strength of the European Union is in its ethical foundation and its intention to bring peace, stability, harmony and economic prosperity. Upon you rests the weighty responsibility to ensure that the European Union continues to place these values at the very centre of its policies. We wish you well in this important task and wholeheartedly commend to you the recommendations we have outlined above.

Godin (NGO-DEVE). – Je fais partie de l'ONG "Equilibre et Population" mais je représente aujourd'hui toutes les ONG qui ont fait partie de la réunion du groupe de contact dont Monsieur Stocker vient d'évoquer la représentativité. Concernant le thème "genre et développement", nous considérons que l'inégalité des sexes freine l'épanouissement des individus, le développement des pays et l'évolution des sociétés. Nous rappelons que l'Union Européenne, pour atteindre son objectif de réduction puis d'éradication de la pauvreté, a décidé d'inscrire l'égalité des sexes en tant que thème transversal prioritaire de sa politique de développement. Nous constatons malheureusement, que si l'Union a montré sa volonté d'inscrire cette thématique au sein des priorités de son action, dans la pratique, les résultats ne sont pas toujours probants. Nous considérons qu'il ne s'agit pas de réinventer des principes généraux qui ont déjà été arrêtés par l'Union mais plutôt de leur donner une force contraignante. Pour intégrer la dimension homme-femme évoquée dans la communication du vingt et un juin deux mille un, à l'action de l'Union, nous proposons d'assortir chacun des trois axes de plusieurs mesures concrètes, seules capables de garantir les objectifs que l'Union s'est fixée. Le premier axe est l'intégration du thème de l'égalité des femmes et des hommes dans les domaines prioritaires. Nous formulons la recommandation suivante: toutes les conditions préalables à l'égalité homme-femme devront être réaffirmées afin de constituer un ensemble de normes intégré aux règles de fonctionnement de l'Union. Il ne faut pas oublier par ailleurs que des objectifs tel que la réduction de moitié du nombre de personnes vivant dans la pauvreté d'ici deux mille quinze, reconnue par l'Union Européenne, ne pourront être atteints si la moitié de l'humanité n'est pas impliquée. Nous pensons donc que l'Union Européenne doit donner à ses engagements une force contraignante en les inscrivant dans le Traité constitutionnel qui sera élaboré par la Convention. Le deuxième axe est le renforcement de l'intégration de l'égalité des sexes dans les projets et programmes régionaux et nationaux. Nous constatons que la collecte et la diffusion des données et informations par sexe tel que les indices sexo-spécifiques proposés par le PNUD depuis mil neuf cent quatre-vingt quinze permettrait de mieux évaluer et de planifier les efforts à fournir. Nous proposons donc que l'analyse sexo-spécifique soit retenue tout au long du cycle du projet de la définition à l'évaluation, et que par ailleurs, la prise en compte de cette analyse constitue la condition préalable à la mise en oeuvre des projets et programmes tant au niveau du budget de l'Union que des cadres stratégiques de lutte contre la pauvreté qui sont proposés par les Etats récipiendaires et acceptés ou non par l'Union dans le cadre du FED. Le troisième et dernier axe est le renforcement des capacités institutionnelles en matière de genre. Nous considérons qu'une formation à l'analyse et à la prise en compte des statistiques ventilées par sexe est indispensable et doit s'entendre tant au nord qu'au sud. Ainsi, le personnel européen des directions générales ou des délégations devrait être systématiquement formé à l'approche de genre et à la prise en compte de l'analyse sexo-spécifique. Par ailleurs, le renforcement des capacités des acteurs locaux doit comporter une sensibilisation et une formation à l'approche de genre et à la prise en compte de cette analyse. Enfin, d'une façon générale, les ONG réunies au sein du groupe de contact « Développement » demandent que l'Union rédige un guide pratique recensant l'ensemble des mesures concrètes susceptibles de préciser les principes généraux concernant l'intégration de l'égalité des sexes dans la coopération au développement. Ce recueil s'imposerait à tous les acteurs concernés par l'aide communautaire au nord comme au sud. En conclusion, les ONG réunies au sein du groupe de contact « Développement » considèrent qu'aucune politique n'est neutre sous l'angle du genre et qu'il est essentiel que la dimension égalité femme-homme joue un rôle moteur dans la définition des politiques extérieures de l'Union. Ceci exige que les objectifs d'égalité des sexes et l'analyse sexo-spécifique soient intégrés pleinement dans la définition, la mise en oeuvre et l'évaluation des politiques extérieures de l'Union, y compris la politique de coopération au développement et les programmes de réduction de la pauvreté. Vous pourrez trouver cette contribution sur la passerelle.

Gezgin Eris (NGO-DEVE). – Mr President, I speak on behalf of the Economic Development Foundation, a non-governmental organisation in Turkey which has been dealing with EU affairs and Turkey-EU relations since 1965.

The launch of the Convention has triggered a lively debate in Turkey. To channel this excitement into practical action, we established a network of 113 participants representing universities and NGOs. This network, called Europe's Future Turkey Group, prepared a comprehensive opinion report covering all issues discussed in the Convention. We have submitted our views and proposals to the Convention Secretariat.

Today I speak on behalf of Europe's Future Turkey Group and the NGOs participating in the Development Contact Group, especially those from the applicant countries with whom we have identified many common points. We have observed that, in the context of the Convention discussions, development is perceived in terms of the narrow concept of the EU's development policy. According to this definition, the EU should evaluate development with respect to increasing the efficiency of allocated resources on the one hand and to improving democracy and the rule of law by relating development aid to these areas on the other hand.

For the applicant countries, however, who are at the receiving end, development is much more than this. For us, development is not only advancement in economic terms but a change in quality of life. EU membership is considered to be the fastest possible way to reach this aim. Therefore, an enlarged Europe should be committed to the promotion of sustainable economic, social, cultural and humanitarian development. Future Member States should be better informed about the principles and means of development cooperation. The EU policy of solidarity should be extended to include the recipient countries' perspectives.

At present, applicant countries receive most of the EU's development aid. This should continue for a while, since, firstly, these countries are the European Union's nearest neighbours. Secondly, today's applicant countries will attain sustainable levels of development and will become donor countries in the near future. They will also enlarge the size of the European market from which all developing countries might take advantage. This will, at the same time, enhance the EU's efficiency as a role model based on the principles of economic development, social management, solidarity and democracy. However, the strengthening of these components will depend on the reconstruction of democratic, transparent and speedy organisations focusing on skills and a knowledge-based society.

Issues such as education and youth, that are also important in shaping the future of the EU and the world, should be broadened both in Member States and countries which receive development aid.

One important topic that we all agree upon is that the EU's founding Treaties should be transformed into a constitutional treaty, in which the Charter of Fundamental Rights should be included and made legally binding. The EU also needs to be a part of the European Convention on Human Rights. The European constitutional treaty should confirm our European identity, our desire to live together in peace and our will to build Europe by sharing the assets of our cultural, local, religious and ethnic variety.

The conclusion of the enlargement process that involves 13 applicant countries will help the EU to become an important world power. The European Union will be able to strengthen its position in the international arena as long as it formulates stable policies, based on social development, harmony, security and solidarity. For a secure future, however, the attainment of stability for EU Member States is not sufficient. With its expanding borders, the European Union is turning into a real world power and its influence is highly dependent upon the ways in which it transfers universal democratic values beyond its borders and the contributions it makes to world peace.

Baroness Scotland of Asthal (Ch.E/G.-GB). – Mr President, it is right that we should hear a strong voice from civil society on development issues. The EU and its Member States combined are a major force in the fight against global poverty, providing the bulk of global development assistance.

Our efforts will play a large part in determining whether the key Millennium Development Goals set out at the UN's Millennium Assembly are actually met. These goals included halving by 2015 the proportion of people living on incomes of under one dollar a day, reducing maternal mortality rates by 75% and providing primary education for all children. To do this we need an efficient, poverty-focused programme, then, combined with a pro-development trade policy and access to the world's largest single market, our development programmes could galvanise an enlarged EU behind huge resources and progressive policies. That is certainly the United Kingdom's ambition and really should make a difference.

We must build on the clear EC development policy agreed in 2000 and the Commission's own management reforms. EC aid should add value to Member States' efforts when it is delivered strategically and efficiently. We must make good our Treaty commitment to ensure all our policies, including choices at the mid-term Common Agricultural Policy review, are consistent with our development goals. This will help us reduce absolute poverty in developing countries. Europe's people are concerned about the poor of the world. It is our duty to show that our governments and institutions can meet their aspirations.

Kiljunen (Parl.-FI). – Mr President, the figures on absolute poverty in the world are staggering. UNICEF estimates that around 10 million children die annually as a result of malnutrition. Is it not morally and politically unbearable that, in the modern world, we have several hundred million people whose most elementary need, the need for nutrition, is not satisfied? We have 800 million illiterate people, about a billion without proper health services and pure water. Nearly half of the world's population has to live on an income of less than two dollars per day.

These figures are about absolute poverty. Statistics on relative poverty are even more staggering. According to the UNDP, the richest 20% of the world's population earn 86% of world income, while the poorest 20% earn 1.4%. Is there in the world a country where income distribution is as unequal as it is on the global scale? I would say no, not a single state.

We have to ask what is lacking at global level that exists at nation-state level? In simplified terms, at supranational level, we do not have proper governance with redistributive functions.

Yesterday, I was in Oslo chairing the opening session of the World Bank annual conference on development economics. There was a demonstration against the World Bank and global institutions. I had a dilemma. I could sympathise with the worries of the demonstrators about global poverty and development problems and the need to address these problems seriously. But why be against international and supranational institutions whose task is to alleviate and solve global problems? We have the same dilemma here when developing the European Union and its institutions. Are the people, are the citizens with us?

In Finland, the government has put an effort into activating the debate on the future of the European Union, and a written report has been submitted to the Secretariat for distribution to all of us.

Palacio Vallelersundi (Ch.E/G.-ES). - Señor Presidente, se ha dicho que a los europeos les interesa la cooperación al desarrollo. Es probablemente "la nueva frontera", una de las pocas políticas que concita el interés de nuestros jóvenes. También es cierto que la Unión Europea es uno de los grandes actores internacionales de la cooperación al desarrollo en términos económicos, y eso hay que recordarlo.

Pero voy a hablar de otra cuestión, retomando las palabras de la Sra. Scotland. La cooperación al desarrollo es una de las políticas donde más claramente se ve la artificiosa complejidad de los Tratados, la confusa redacción de los preceptos y la esquizofrenia institucional que deriva del sistema de pilares. Hasta Maastricht la Comunidad Europea no tenía base jurídica específica para la cooperación al desarrollo; había una multiplicidad de bases jurídicas: el artículo 182 y siguientes para la asociación de los países de ultramar, el artículo 133 para las preferencias generalizadas y el 308 para casos de cooperación económica y técnica, a veces asociado con el artículo 113 cuando se trataba de una cooperación también comercial, incluso podía recurrirse al 238.

Bien, hoy, podríamos decir: después de Maastricht esto ha cambiado. No, señor, no ha cambiado porque las bases específicas son bases residuales, que sólo se pueden utilizar cuando no hay otra base directa. Seguimos con esa esquizofrenia y decimos: ¡Qué complejo! Pues no termina ahí la complejidad, porque tenemos bases que provienen del segundo pilar, ya que el artículo 11 del TUE incluye la cooperación al desarrollo en su planteamiento.

Esto es un ejemplo del trabajo que tiene que hacer esta Convención con los Tratados.

Akyol (Gouv.-TR). – L'éradication de la pauvreté est un des plus grand défis qui se pose à l'humanité à l'heure actuelle. Ce défi ne pourra être réalisé que par un développement soutenable et une utilisation des ressources appropriée. Chaque pays est responsable au premier chef de son développement économique et social. Toutefois, étant donné les ressources et les moyens limités dont disposent les pays en voie de développement, le soutien et la coopération des pays développés et la création d'un environnement favorable à la coopération internationale sont vitaux. En ce qui concerne l'Union Européenne, la politique de développement est une des politiques communautaires parmi les plus importantes et elle continue également à être une des dimensions significatives des relations extérieures de l'Union. Nous sommes heureux aujourd'hui dans ce contexte que ce débat ai lieu au sein de la Convention. Le Sommet de Barcelone des quinze et seize mars deux mille deux a constitué, à notre avis, une des pierres angulaires de la politique de développement de l'Union européenne. Les Etats membres se sont entendus pour utiliser l'aide au développement afin d'éradiquer la pauvreté dans les pays en voie de développement. Il a été décidé, dans ce cadre, d'augmenter de manière significative le montant global de l'aide au développement assuré par l'Union, considérant le fait que l'Union et ses membres assure cinquante-cinq pourcent de l'ensemble de l'aide internationale au développement. Les efforts de l'Union européenne à cet égard peuvent être mieux appréciés ainsi. Il est néanmoins évident qu'afin de réaliser les objectifs fixés dans le domaine du développement durable, l'Union doit déployer davantage d'efforts en terme d'allocations de ressources financières supplémentaires. A Séville, les pays membres ont également décidé d'abolir le Conseil de développement et de traiter désormais les questions relatives à la politique de développement dans le cadre des Conseils d'affaires générales et relations extérieures. Ceci peut être considéré comme un effort de la part de l'Union pour que la politique de développement devienne un élément déterminant de sa politique étrangère. Nous espérons que, par cette décision, l'Union sera capable d'exploiter plus efficacement les ressources dont elle dispose afin d'assurer le succès de la mise en oeuvre de sa politique de développement. Enfin, nous sommes convaincus que l'agenda de Doha pour le développement et le commerce jouera un rôle important lors des conférences de Johannesburg pour un développement durable.

De Rossa (Parl.-IE). – Mr President, I intervene in strong support for a working group of this Convention on the issue of development, as it is a key area of interaction between the European Union and the rest of the world. Are we to be partners or predators of the developing world?

There is a key issue here which we need to address in our Treaties and in constitutionalising them. We must incorporate an obligation on European-based companies, obliging them not be involved in slavery in developing countries and not to use tied labour or child labour. There is a whole range of issues here which need to be addressed by the European Union.

I urge that we use our position with the IMF to insist that the neo-liberal dogma, which the IMF applies to developing countries, should be altered. It is a shame and a crime to oblige developing countries literally to destroy their infrastructure in order to fit in with a neo-liberal dogma which many developed countries in Europe cannot sustain.

Basile (Parl.-IT). - Signor Presidente, vorrei pregare il signor Christophersen di chiarire meglio, anche in una prossima occasione, la sua proposta riguardante il Fondo di sviluppo europeo. In secondo luogo, sono d'accordo col signor Stocker quando afferma che finora è stata dedicata troppa attenzione alla moneta, ai mercati, all'euro, all'unificazione economica e monetaria e poca alla solidarietà e all'uomo. In terzo luogo, voglio sottolineare il problema di creare un bilancio più ricco per far fronte alle tante esigenze, per i diritti umani, per eliminare la povertà, come diceva la Baronessa Scotland. Credo che il problema del bilancio sia un problema molto importante. Il bilancio va riformato aumentando le risorse proprie, quindi il valore assoluto, e riarticolando la distribuzione fra i vari settori in considerazione delle nuove politiche.

Lenmarker (Parl.-SE). – Mr President, we are not self-critical enough in the European Union when it comes to relations with the developing countries because Europe is still far too protectionist. The important issue for the European Union is to dismantle barriers between Europe and the developing countries. Why should there be tariffs on imports from developing countries, including agricultural products?

Therefore, it is the right step to dismantle the Development Council and to bring that area of responsibility into the General Affairs Council. Relations between Europe and the developing countries require coherence in all policies, not just development aid, which is a minor part of this complex issue.

Peterle (Parl.-SI). – Chers collègues, membres distingués de la Convention, je suis très heureux et honoré au moment où la Slovénie célèbre son indépendance, de pouvoir dire quelques mots sur la culture. C'est grâce à la culture, grâce aux poètes, aux prêtres également que nous avons pu développer notre culture depuis plusieurs siècles en Slovénie. Je pense que la culture deviendra une question majeure. Nous avons le Traité sur le Charbon et l'Acier mais nous devons également brandir la culture contre les régimes dictatoriaux qui ont prévalu au vingtième siècle. Nous voulons également faire reconnaître les différentes identités culturelles et nationales car la culture est quand-même une question traitée par les institutions européennes. Nous pensons qu'il faut faire davantage. Le vote à la majorité doit être introduit pour la Charte et pour le traité. Nous pensons que la culture continue d'être sous-estimée et peu exploitée au plan intérieur et extérieur en Europe. Nous voulons que l'Union européenne s'intéresse davantage à la culture. Nous voulons une Europe unie et élargie. L'unification ne peut se faire que parmi les gens qui souhaitent effectivement vivre ensemble dans une Europe libre et unie. La diversité des langues et des cultures doit être défendue. Plus l'Europe s'intéresse à sa diversité intérieure, plus elle pourra exporter de manière globale cette richesse vers l'extérieur. C'est un concept de force. Et cette force est fondée sur la diversité culturelle. Une simplification idéologique se traduit toujours en Europe par l'émergence de grands problèmes. Je ne vois aucune contradiction entre des politiques nationales en matière de culture et d'éducation et des projets européens communs, comme par exemple le projet Erasmus. Je ne parle pas d'unification de la politique culturelle européenne. Je parle simplement d'un renforcement de notre approche aux diversités, aux spécificités culturelles en Europe. Par exemple, hier, j'ai rencontré un représentant des églises. Les églises ont précisément contribué à affirmer la diversité de la culture de l'Europe tout au long des siècles. Les choses ont quelquefois évolué différemment selon que l'on se trouvait de l'un ou de l'autre côté du « Rideau de fer ». Il s'agit là en tout cas d'un exemple de valeur ajoutée à la diversité culturelle européenne, d'attention accordée à l'être humain et d'une nécessité de transcendance. Plus de cinquante organisations ont émis des propositions très concrètes aux groupes de contact. Je terminerai en vous remerciant, Monsieur le Président, pour les mots aimables que vous avez eu envers la Slovénie à l'occasion de sa Fête nationale.

Gabletz (NGO-CULT). - Mr President, culture comes last on your agenda, but it is good this way because, as our chairman has already underlined, this is common ground, applying to all the efforts of the Convention, re-legitimising the Union at this crucial stage in its evolution.

The main message to come from the different groups at the Culture Contact Group on 12 June was that there should be more room for culture and education in a wider and stronger Union. This message is conveyed with a special sense of urgency, using this unique opportunity to make up for some of the serious deficits in the current construction of Europe.

There are four main reasons for urging the European Union to actively promote a European space of culture and education, a kind of 'fourth pillar' of common policy.

The first reason: a Europe of citizens, a democratic Union, will only emerge if the European Union can play a visible and pioneering role in the fields of culture and education. These are the fields where society prepares its future, where human and cultural values shape its identity and where its fundamental political consensus is formed.

The second reason: the enlargement process will only succeed if the build up of a wider Union is accompanied by a growing perception by all its citizens that they belong to a common European civilisation which must be revived and strengthened by the integration process.

The third reason: the world-wide challenges of economy-led globalisation and a knowledge-based society very urgently require joint European responses in the field of culture and education if Europe wants to preserve and reassert its identity and its place in the modern world.

The fourth reason: the renewed awareness of the common roots of our national and regional cultures in Europe will also help to develop a more even-handed policy in all our states in dealing with the problems of the multicultural mix which is worrying our citizens.

The European Union is a most dynamic political force in shaping Europe for the 21st century and in determining its place in the modern world. At this juncture of European evolution, it shoulders a heavy responsibility for ensuring that our continent remains a creative area of culture and of educational excellence, as it has been throughout its history.

In our age of globalisation, the wealth of Europe's cultural diversity can only be preserved by a new awareness of the common civilisation which underlies this diversity and which has helped national and regional cultures to develop and to flourish. It is crucial for the enlargement process to realise that asserting the national culture and asserting at the same time the common European civilisation is not a contradiction. On the contrary, national and European policies in this field are two sides of the same coin.

The European Union will have to live up to this very heavy responsibility at this stage in its evolution. This does not necessarily imply a transfer of powers from Member States to the European Union, but it does mean that the European Union can make full use of the present Treaty provisions dealing with culture and education. Mrs Chabaud will make a few remarks on this subject. With due respect to the principle of subsidiarity, there is ample room for common action with a view to creating a climate in the European Union which is favourable to cultural creativity and educational innovation on the basis of that common European civilisation. Often it will not be the constitutional powers that count, but the power of example, the convincing force of best practices, and the quality of European guidelines that states and regions would ignore at their own risk.

Finally, a few remarks on three particular areas. First of all: education. There is a unique chance here because all our educational systems will have to be reformed under the impact of the modern, knowledge-based society. We should use this chance to inject the necessary European dimension. After all, democracy needs educated people and a democratic Europe needs educated Europeans.

Regarding culture: economic globalisation brings a serious challenge in the restructuring of the media and the entertainment industry. It is the European Union's responsibility to identify the trends which could lead to an impoverishment of our cultural development and to develop common policies.

Finally, heritage: Europe's heritage of buildings, works of art and cultural landscapes represents a visible and tangible testimony of our common culture. Most of the monuments are more than just stones. They are a constant reminder of the original civilisation, the binding force of which has to be developed for a Europe which can catch the imagination of its citizens.

Chabaud (NGO-CULT). – L'affirmation de la présence et du respect du patrimoine mais aussi des arts, des médias, de l'éducation doit s'appuyer non seulement sur les instruments existants du Traité de Maastricht mais également sur l'observation et une meilleure mise en oeuvre des objectifs et mesures qu'ils impliquent. C'est ainsi que nous mettrons en relief les articles cent quarante-neuf, cent cinquante et bien sûr l'article cent cinquante et un, qui est au coeur de la dynamique culturelle européenne. Nos recommandations seront les suivantes : conserver l'article cent cinquante et un dans le Traité, voire même de le renforcer, faire en sorte que l'Union l'utilise comme base légale de son action complémentaire, faire en sorte que les articles soient mis en application, en particulier le paragraphe quatre de l'article cent cinquante et un, modifier le paragraphe cinq de cet article, à savoir la règle d'unanimité qui devrait être changée en vote à majorité qualifiée. Il faudrait éventuellement envisager la fusion des articles cent quarante neuf et cent cinquante sur l'éducation, tout en renforçant légèrement les instruments de l'Union en la matière.

Le domaine du cinéma et de la radio-diffusion publique recommande l'intégration du protocole d'Amsterdam dans le Traité. Le pluralisme de l'information et des médias devrait figurer parmi les valeurs fondamentales communes de l'Union Européenne, au même titre que la diversité culturelle. A cette fin, le protocole d'Amsterdam sur le système de radio-diffusion public dans les Etats Membres doit être retenu comme étant partie intégrante des Traités. En outre, les politiques publiques nationales favorisant le respect de la diversité culturelle devraient être légitimées dans le même Traité, en se voyant attribuer une garantie juridique. Ceci vaut tant pour l'article quatre-vingt sept sur le contrôle des aides d'Etat du secteur audiovisuel que pour l'article cent trente-trois sur une relation égale entre politique commerciale commune et culture. Comme pour les secteurs social et de santé, une réglementation des secteurs culturels et audiovisuels sous le seul aspect commercial et de concurrence ne correspond pas aux fonctions de ces services d'intérêt général.

L'ensemble des associations présentes le douze juin se sont accordées pour demander l'intégration de la Charte des Droits fondamentaux dans le Traité, tout en regrettant qu'hormis la mention du droit à l'éducation (article quatorze), le droit à la culture soit diffus (articles treize et vingt-cinq) et n'ait fait l'objet d'aucun article à part entière. Une autre proposition serait de considérer l'introduction du droit pour chaque citoyen, de créer une fondation la liberté de travailler à travers l'Europe entière signifie aussi mettre en oeuvre un des aspects importants de la coopération culturelle. Ces considérations tant sur les articles du Traité, toujours autour du même article cent cinquante et un, et la notion de culture comme droit fondamental soutiennent les objectifs d'une vraie action communautaire, complémentaire des Etats Membres. Il s'agit en l'occurrence de la création d'un climat favorable pour les arts et l'éducation, par des mesures d'encouragement, d'incitation à la création, à la mobilité, aux échanges, à la coopération et l'accès à la culture en général. Dans cet encouragement, on retrouve le souci de diversité culturelle à partager horizontalement et verticalement, avec la valeur primordiale de liberté du citoyen européen, grâce au pluralisme de l'information et de ses sources.

L'action de l'Union répond donc d'une manière incitative et dynamique complémentaire aux exigences de la subsidiarité dite verticale, et doit cependant reconnaître explicitement l'apport de la subsidiarité horizontale, notamment en matière d'éducation. Cette complémentarité doit être reprise afin d'établir les bases d'un dialogue, d'une consultation que je qualifierais de raisonnable avec la société civile à tous les niveaux de responsabilité politique et bien sûr à plus forte raison au niveau européen. Le maître mot est ici la transparence. L'appui unique que peuvent fournir les réseaux européens sont un atout majeur à ne pas négliger. Dans ces efforts communs de réflexion et de projection dans un avenir européen commun, il ne faut pas oublier l'importance d'initiatives fondamentales comme le rapport Ruffolo et ses recommandations, le travail d'organisations internationales telles que l'UNESCO et le Conseil de l'Europe, dont l'expérience en matière d'approche de la diversité culturelle par exemple, ou encore d'observation des politiques culturelles dans les pays européens au sens le plus large du terme, est précieuse. Ainsi, la complémentarité des expériences des divers acteurs institutionnels, réseaux culturels, artistes et intellectuels saute aux yeux. Reprenons la balle lancée par la Convention et l'initiative des groupes de contact. La Fondation européenne de la culture a proposé de réunir ceux d'entre vous qui le désirerons à l'automne, afin de partager cette expérience. Je terminerai en reprenant une phrase prononcée le douze juin, qui est en fait la véritable raison de notre participation à tous dans cette aventure sans précédent qui consiste en la refonte d'un Traité en temps de paix, en un élargissement et une intégration volontaire de l'ensemble des citoyens. La phrase que je voulais vous faire partager est la suivante « we look to the candidate countries with their all brand culture, traditions, to reinforce the place of culture at the open level ».

Jenkins (NGO-CULT). - President, I want to begin by thanking the Culture Contact Group, which agreed to Churches and religious associations, and more broadly, communities of faith and conviction, having this longer space in the presentation.

Because our associations are concerned with a wide range of topics and interests, communities of faith and conviction have difficulty finding their place in a single contact group. This time is important to a group of self-financing organisations representing between them tens of millions of citizens.

My first point is that the communities of faith and conviction shared with many others in the contact group the belief that the European Union must be a community of values. It is not simply a more efficient way of achieving policy objectives, nor is it simply a market. The values expressed in the contact group included the centrality of the human being, promotion of peace and reconciliation, liberty and justice, solidarity and sustainability, tolerance, democracy, human rights, the rule of law and respect for minorities. There was a broad consensus on all of these.

But these values must be realised. My second point is that a commitment to them has consequences. First, one of the stated objectives of the European Union should be to work for a Union based on human rights, liberty and solidarity, drawing on the richness of Europe's cultural, religious and philosophical traditions.

Second, in pursuing the common good, another key objective must be support for poverty eradication at the global level and support for the marginalised and those threatened by social exclusion globally and within the Union. This is a necessary response to the challenge in the Laeken Declaration to make the European Union a power seeking to set globalisation within a moral framework, in other words to anchor it in solidarity and sustainable development. The European Union needs the means to work with a single voice on the global scene, to develop a fair and just system of global governance.

Third, the Union should develop greater capacity for preventative diplomacy and peaceful resolution of conflicts.

Fourth, in the process of the accession of new Member States to the Union, there must be a full debate on the values which we want to pursue together. This must be reflected in the outcome of the Convention.

Fifth, a future constitutional text must incorporate fundamental rights. These are universal, based on the dignity of the human being, transcending all policies, laws or powers. Without discriminating against other convictions, for the Christian churches and other religious traditions, that dignity comes from God. For communities of faith and conviction, freedom of thought, consciousness and religion in their individual corporate and institutional dimensions are essential.

The European Humanist Federation, which was part of the group, asked for a separation between religion and governance with no differentiation between those who believe and those who do not. On the basis of the values mentioned, the institutional reforms to be proposed by the Convention should re-invigorate democracy and democratic political life and ensure that citizens sense that their concerns are heard and taken seriously.

This has two consequences: one is that there is a need to develop the democratic legitimacy and transparency of the Union and its institutions. The second, which constitutes my third point, is that the principle of subsidiarity must be made real. This is important because it is a way of respecting the diversity of Europe while seeking unity within the Union. This applies to the vertical dimension of subsidiarity: at which political level is a particular decision most appropriately made? It would be appropriate to have some kind of structure for monitoring the application of this principle in its vertical dimension and we hope that the Convention will continue to explore that aspect.

Declaration 11, the final act of the Treaty of Amsterdam, is an expression of the vertical dimension of subsidiarity. It states that the European Union respects the status of churches, religious associations and communities, and also non-confessional bodies as recognised by each Member State. We believe that this Declaration should be incorporated in a future constitutional text as a sign of respect for diversity.

It is also true of the horizontal dimension. There are structures, institutions and organisations other than political institutions which have a role to play in addressing issues in society. This aspect applies to every aspect of society - recognising the dignity of the human person and his or her relationships, starting from the family as a basic unit of society. We ask that this horizontal dimension should be taken up by a future constitutional text, providing for structured dialogue between the European Union and its institutions and the variety of institutions, associations and communities in society in general.

Within such dialogue, the communities of faith and conviction ask that the specificities of churches, religious communities and non-confessional associations should be recognised. This is not because they want a privileged position but because of their concern for and relevance to a range of topics, interests and spheres of policy making.

Here I would stress the important role played by non-statutory and charitable providers of social welfare, education and other services of general interest. This was a matter raised in the contact group not only by representatives of some communities of faith and conviction but also by organisations concerned with service provision. Provisions are needed to ensure the right to establish and maintain educational and caring institutions and to ensure that the high level of services is not put in danger by inappropriate applications of competition law or by privatisation.

My final point concerns the sources of European cultures and values. Communities of faith and conviction have contributed to the formation of European cultures and values. It must be acknowledged frankly that not all of these contributions have been positive. They have sometimes led to divisions within Europe. Nevertheless, the religious, spiritual and philosophical contribution to European values has been significant. The Christian churches believe that they have contributed and continue to contribute positively and significantly to the building of Europe.

Both in the past and nowadays, other faith communities make a contribution to the plurality and diversity which are part of Europe's rich texture. People and movements without religious or transcendental belief have contributed fully. Churches and religious associations believe that it would be entirely appropriate to acknowledge the specific contribution of the religious, spiritual and philosophical heritage in any constitutional text.

The European Humanist Federation would prefer to base itself solely on common values such as the dignity of women and men, freedom, equality, solidarity and the principles of democracy and the rule of law. Values which the Churches and religious communities would also defend.

In conclusion, I want to emphasise that the Convention's success will depend on citizens seeing the Union as a community of values which invites full participation at all levels. If citizens are to feel that they have a stake, they must have trust in the values and objectives of European integration, such as its promotion of the centrality of the human being, solidarity, subsidiarity and transparent democracy. The churches and communities of faith and conviction, in whose name I speak today, remain committed to an active role in building up this trust.

(Applause)

Brezigar (NGO-CULT). - Mr. President, the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages represents European Union citizens speaking original or minority languages, but my presence here today does not relate only to minority languages. I will focus on linguistic diversity as the general wealth of Europe. We share our point of view with other NGOs dealing with the same topic, so I will present you with an overview of our common thinking.

I will first explain the needs of the communities we represent. We expect the European Union to lay down strict provisions relating to linguistic diversity. We understand the principle of European citizenship as the affirmation of identity of every single European citizen. Europe is not a melting pot. Its real wealth lies in the richness of its cultures and languages. Europeans will accept economic standardisation only if their identity is maintained. This seems to be a European issue as well and it is our opinion that cultural and linguistic diversity should become part of the acquis communautaire.

The Union has not been active enough in this domain so far. To give an idea of the low priority given to this topic, I would stress that in the non-discrimination clause, Article 13 of the Treaty, languages have not been included, setting them at a lower level of priority than that they are given in the basic United Nations and Council of Europe human rights documents. This should be amended in accordance with Article 21 of the EU's Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Article 22 of the Charter calls upon the Union to respect linguistic diversity. This Article should also be implemented. Some will object to this, arguing that this issue falls under the principle of subsidiarity and must therefore be dealt with on a state or even a local basis. If this happens, the large, strong languages will become larger and stronger and the weaker ones will risk extinction. European Union intervention is therefore needed to keep diversity as our common wealth, our common heritage.

We understand that nowadays most states do not want to give the European Union any legislative competence in this domain, but we hope that there could at least be a general agreement about the possibility of European Union incentive measures to maintain the linguistic mosaic. It is in our common interest to do this, as no mosaic is complete if even a small piece is missing. Maintaining linguistic diversity is a European issue. It is the heritage of the whole of Europe and not only of the speakers of each particular language. These proposals are included in the document entitled 'A Package for Linguistic Diversity' which has already been forwarded to the Convention.

Finally may I assure you that the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages is willing to guarantee the Convention any support needed in the domain of regional or minority languages.

Van Mierlo (Ch.E/G.-NL). - Mijnheer de voorzitter, er is een zeer belangrijk woord gesproken. De heer Gabletz heeft namens alle culturele instellingen de indringende wens naar voren gebracht dat de Unie zich zou bevrijden van de dwanggedachte dat cultuur een exclusieve bemoeienis is van de lidstaten en dat de Gemeenschap en de Unie daar zo veel mogelijk buiten moeten blijven.

De uitspraak van de culturele instellingen is daarom zo belangrijk omdat juist zij in het verleden verondersteld werden cultuur te zien als een prerogatief van de lidstaten. Nu dat niet meer het geval lijkt te zijn, hebben wij als Conventie de plicht te bezien hoe de Unie of de Gemeenschap haar passieve rol wenst te herzien. Begrijp me niet verkeerd, voor mij staat vast dat de nationale cultuur in de eerste plaats een zaak blijft van de lidstaten, of daarbinnen van regio's of deelstaten. Europa is terecht trots op zijn culturele diversiteit en beschouwt die als zijn dierbaarste bezit. Maar het zou een taak van de Gemeenschap moeten zijn juist die diversiteit als een gemeenschappelijk belang, als een Europese cultuurgood te beschermen, te bevorderen en uit te dragen.

Dat is evenwel niet alles. Eén van de belangrijkste motieven voor het houden van deze Conventie is het algemeen levende gevoel dat de afstand tussen de Europese burgers en Europa te groot is en overbrugd moet worden. Dat kan door de transparantie en de democratie te vergroten, maar de werkelijke instrumenten daarvoor zijn cultuur en onderwijs. Ik acht het onmogelijk om dat bestaande gat te dichten zonder dat we heel doelgericht gebruik maken van deze instrumenten. De vorming van Europees denkende en Europees voelende burgers begint bij het onderwijs. Daar zouden de eerste noties van democratie moeten worden bijgebracht, zowel voor de nationale als voor de Europese.

Het is in het belang van Europa zelf dat Unie en Gemeenschap, Raad en Commissie, actief optreden in dat culturele proces van bewustwording, bijvoorbeeld door middel van gemeenschappelijke educatieprogramma's. Ik ben nu aan het eind van mijn betoog. Om die reden zou de Conventie serieus moeten bestuderen of artikel 151 zodanig kan worden herschreven dat het ons beter in staat stelt dat doel na te streven. Deze specifieke taak zou de instelling van een werkgroep kunnen rechtvaardigen.

Kelam (Parl.-EE). - Mr. Chairman, today's discussion reminds me of the Maastricht Treaty Article which declares that the European Union is based upon common European cultural heritage. It is good to remind ourselves of this cultural dimension as we move on to the next stage of enlargement. Questions about the identity of our citizens bring us back to the perception of our national and cultural identity.

However, today, in integrating Europe, we need to develop a new sense of national and cultural identity: national as well as European. This will be the 'added value' for the European project mentioned by my colleague, Mr. Peterle.

In 1912, when Gustav Suits, a poet and leader of the young Estonian movement, proclaimed 'Let us remain Estonians but let us also become Europeans', he clearly had a healthy understanding that the two are not exclusive; rather, they are complementary.

I would like to thank representatives of civil organisations for their valuable contribution to today's discussion.

Yesterday, the European AgriCultural Convention proposed the inclusion in the Treaty of the right of citizens to healthy food, a healthy environment and clean water. Today, it seems fair to speak about the right of citizens to a healthy culture, a healthy moral environment and clear ethical values. The citizens' support for the EU will ultimately depend on how clearly they perceive a united Europe as a community of values and how clearly they see their identities rooted in this. Therefore, I support proposals to include references to culture in the Treaties, stressing our common cultural, spiritual and Christian values which have been important incentives for European integration.

Tekin (Parl.-TR). - Mr. President, there have been some proposals to refer to religion in the EU Treaties. With all due respect, reference to religion in the treaties will not be in line with the universal values that the EU champions. The formula developed in the introduction to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, referring to the EU's spiritual and moral heritage, is a very well-balanced approach.

I hope for a Europe in the future where it simply does not matter if one is a Christian, a Muslim, a Jew, a Buddhist, a Shamanist or a non-believer. In short, I want a Europe that is secular, a Europe that is multicultural and multireligious.

(Applause)

Demetriou (Parl.-CY). - Mr President, I think that I express the feelings and views of all the participants in this Convention when I say that the exercise entitled 'Civil Society' has been a success. Thanks to Mr. Dehaene for organising the debate and for encouraging and stimulating the exchange of views which took place beforehand.

Spini (Parl.-IT). - Signor Presidente, il nostro lavoro avrà successo se l'Europa diventerà un soggetto politico più importante. Per diventare un soggetto politico più importante deve avere un'anima, una missione, dei valori, e credo che questi valori - giustizia, fraternità, libertà, solidarietà - siano valori in cui la tradizione cristiana si può riconoscere, e quindi credo che è sui valori che vi deve essere un intenso dialogo fra credenti e non credenti, fra i credenti di varie religioni. Da questo punto di vista io credo che, più che un omaggio rituale o un omaggio formale alla religione, dobbiamo essere capaci, negli articoli del nostro Trattato, di rispecchiare con autorevolezza e con forza questi valori. Ecco perché la religione, se deve essere citata, non dev'essere un elemento di divisione fra chi crede e chi non crede o fra chi crede in varie religioni - preferirei anzi, in questo senso, parlare di una fede - ma dev'essere un elemento di unità, di convergenza. Ecco la ragione per la quale io credo che siano importanti anche le iniziative che, a varie riprese, i presidenti di commissione hanno portato avanti per organizzare un dialogo con le religioni, ma, siccome i valori uniscono, credo che sarebbe estremamente sbagliato dividerci su temi e riferimenti formali: dobbiamo guardare, invece, alla sostanza e ai valori del nostro Trattato.

Basile (Parl.-IT). - Signor Presidente, chiedo la parola soltanto per dire che anche in Italia è stato avviato un ricco dibattito sul futuro dell'Unione europea: è stato creato un apposito Osservatorio della Convenzione europea, attivato un gruppo di lavoro interistituzionale, attivati dibattiti all'interno del Senato e della Camera dei deputati, avviate alcune iniziative per i giovani coinvolgendo tutta la società civile. Chi vuole maggiori informazioni può trovarle su Internet.

Le Président. – Ainsi se termine cette séance d'audition du forum de la société civile. Je tiens à remercier tous ceux qui ont pris la parole et qui ont contribué à cette réunion, ainsi que tous ceux qui ont participé aux réunions préparatoires. Je rappelle avec instance que ceci n'était qu'un moment fort qui s'inscrit dans une durée. J'affirme et confirme au nom du Praesidium que nous poursuivrons l'effort de dialogue avec la société civile. Le web du forum continuera. Il reste ouvert aux contributions et aux réactions que la société civile souhaiterait apporter par rapport à nos initiatives. J'insiste aussi pour que les débats nationaux soient continus et animés par les membres de la Convention. Nous poursuivrons aussi l'effort de contact avec les ONG au niveau européen, entre autres par les réunions facilitées par le Comité Economique et Social. A cet effet, nous avons encore une réunion cette semaine où nous pourrons faire le bilan de cette session. Nous prendrons d'autres initiatives avec le Praesidium afin de continuer ce dialogue qui, selon moi, est fort enrichissant pour tout le monde, et d'abord et avant tout pour la Convention. En effet, cette collaboration avec la société civile doit permettre à la Convention d'avoir un support beaucoup plus large au sein de l'opinion publique. Je passe maintenant la présidence à Monsieur le Président.

PRÉSIDENCE DE Mr GISCARD D'ESTAING

Le Président.- Le Président prend la présidence pour vous dire simplement deux choses. La première, c'est pour remercier à la fois le vice-président Monsieur Dehaene, les présidents des groupes de contact, l'ensemble des intervenants qui sont intervenus dans cette discussion pour leurs remarques très intéressantes. Je pense qu'il serait sympathique que vous marquiez votre satisfaction en les applaudissant.

La deuxième chose est que vous serez remplacés dans cet hémicycle par notre Convention des jeunes, qui se tiendra à Bruxelles du neuf au douze juillet, et sur laquelle je voulais vous donner une rapide information. Le secrétariat a reçu la liste complète des noms des jeunes participants âgés de dix-huit à vingt-cinq ans, que vous avez proposé. Une lettre de ma part, ainsi qu'un dossier d'information complet leur ont été envoyés. La parité a été respectée, avec même une surreprésentation féminines : cent quatorze femmes et quatre-vingt-seize hommes. La qualité et la diversité des jeunes nous paraissent tout à fait remarquables, même si l'on doit constater le nombre important d'étudiants, et en particulier en sciences humaines, chose compréhensible compte tenu des différentes filières de formation. Toutefois, la jeunesse au travail, la jeunesse en apprentissage, la jeunesse professionnelle sera également représentée. Vous trouverez la liste ainsi que le déroulement des séances dans le document de la convention 131/02 qui vous a été distribué. Je vais vous donner quelques détails pratiques. L'ouverture formelle de la session des jeunes se tiendra le mercredi dix juillet à dix heures trente. Cette réunion se tiendra dans cet hémicycle afin de nous permettre de les accueillir. Il est par conséquent souhaitable que tous les Conventionnels et tous les jeunes soient présents. Ils travailleront en groupe à partir du mercredi après-midi et nous, nous commencerons à travailler en tant que Convention le jeudi onze à quinze heures pour notre réunion consacrée à l'action extérieure de l'Union. Compte tenu de ce qui a été dit par un certain nombre d'orateurs de la société civile, je n'ai pas besoin d'insister sur l'importance de ce sujet. Cette réunion se tiendra dans l'hémicycle afin d'accueillir les jeunes qui assisteront à notre débat précisément sur l'action extérieure de l'Union. Le lendemain matin, le vendredi douze, ils nous présenteront leurs conclusions. Vous pourrez alors leur faire part de vos réactions et répondre à leurs questions d'une façon que nous allons définir. Comme nous avons été frappés par l'intérêt et les motivations des membres de la société civile, je vous dirai que je compte beaucoup sur leur motivation et sur leur enthousiasme. En effet, nous avons besoin de leur propositions pour imaginer et construire l'Europe de l'avenir. Dans les interventions que nous écoutons ou même que nous faisons les uns ou les autres, j'ai souvent l'impression que nous cherchons à corriger les défauts de l'Europe du passé. Or ce n'est pas le sujet. Notre sujet est la préparation de l'Europe de l'avenir, c'est à dire une Europe plus nombreuse, plus large et qui vivra et continuera à vivre dans un monde qui ne cesse de se transformer. C'est pourquoi j'attends avec beaucoup d'intérêt et d'impatience, comme vous j'en suis sûr, le résultat de leurs travaux qui seront spontanés et naturellement entièrement libres. Je fixe donc rendez-vous aux membres de la Convention le jeudi onze juillet à quinze heures.

(La réunion est levée à 13.10 h)

| Subject: | European Parliament resolution on the draft Treaty establishing a Convention for Europe and the European Parliament's opinion on the convening of the IGC |

---

Attached is the text of the resolution passed by the European Parliament, following the report by Mr José Maria Gil-Roblès Gil-Delgado and Mr Dimitri Tsatsos, on the draft Treaty establishing a Convention for Europe and the European Parliament's opinion on the convening of the Intergovernmental Conference, at its part-session in Strasbourg on 24 September 2003.

A summary of the debate is given in 12938/03 PE 1780.

ANNEX*European Constitution and IGC **European Parliament resolution on the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe and the European Parliament's opinion on the convening of the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) (11047/2003 - C5-0340/2003 - 2003/0902(CNS))*(Consultation procedure)

The European Parliament,

- having been consulted by the Council, pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 48 of the Treaty on European Union, on the convening of an intergovernmental conference (IGC) to consider the changes to be made to the treaties on which the Union is founded (11047/2003 – C5-0340/2003),
- having regard to the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe <sup>1</sup> prepared by the Convention on the Future of Europe,
- having regard to its resolution of 31 May 2001 on the Treaty of Nice and the future of the European Union <sup>2</sup>,
- having regard to its resolution of 29 November 2001 on the constitutional process and the future of the Union <sup>3</sup>,
- having regard to its resolutions of 16 May 2002 on the distribution of competences <sup>4</sup>, of 14 March 2002 on the Union's legal personality <sup>5</sup>, of 7 February 2002 on the role of the national parliaments <sup>6</sup> and of 14 January 2003 on the role of the regions in European integration <sup>7</sup>,
- having regard to the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union,
- having regard to the Commission's communication entitled "A Constitution for the Union" (COM(2003) 548),

- having regard to the report of the Committee on Constitutional Affairs and the opinions of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Human Rights, Common Security and Defence Policy; Committee on Budgets; Committee on Budgetary Control; Committee on Citizens' Freedoms and Rights, Justice and Home Affairs; Committee on Economic and Monetary Affairs; Committee on Legal Affairs and the Internal Market; Committee on Industry, External Trade, Research and Energy; Committee on the Environment, Public Health and Consumer Policy; Committee on Agriculture and Rural Development; Committee on Fisheries; Committee on Regional Policy, Transport and Tourism; Committee on Development and Cooperation; Committee on Women's Rights and Equal Opportunities and the Committee on Petitions (A5-0299/2003),

Whereas:

- A. the citizens, parliaments, governments and political parties - in both the Member States and at the European level - as well as the institutions of the Union are entitled to take part in the democratic process of drawing up a Constitution for Europe; therefore, this Resolution constitutes Parliament's evaluation of the draft Constitutional Treaty produced by the Convention on the Future of Europe,
- B. the preparation, the conduct and above all the outcome of the Nice Conference definitively demonstrated that the intergovernmental method for the revision of the Union's treaties has reached its limits and that purely diplomatic negotiations are not capable of providing solutions to the needs of a European Union with twenty-five Member States,
- C. the quality of the Convention's work on the preparation of the draft Constitution and the reform of the Treaties fully vindicates the decision of the Laeken European Council to move away from the intergovernmental method by adopting Parliament's proposal for the setting up of a constitutional Convention; the result of the Convention, in which the representatives of the European Parliament and of national parliaments played a central role, shows that open discussions within the Convention are far more successful than the method followed up to now of intergovernmental conferences held in camera,
- D. Parliament demands to be actively and continually involved not only in the Intergovernmental Conference but also in the future phases of the constitutional process,
- E. important progress has been made by the Convention's proposals, but the new provisions will have to be tested with respect to the challenges presented by the enlarged Union; the method of the Convention should apply for all future revisions,
- F. the Convention, like its predecessor on the Charter of Fundamental Rights, has initiated a new phase in European integration, during which the European Union will consolidate its legal order into a constitutional order binding on its Member States and citizens, even if the Constitution is ultimately approved in the form of an international treaty,

- G. despite the many differences of opinion initially existing between the members of the Convention, a large majority of all four component parts of the Convention, including Parliament, supported the Convention's final proposal, which is therefore based on a fresh and broad consensus, even if not all of Parliament's demands concerning democracy, transparency and efficiency in the European Union were met; to reopen the important compromises reached within the Convention would not only jeopardise the progress made by the Convention in re-founding the Union on a more efficient and democratic constitutional basis but would also subvert the whole Convention method,
- H. the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe should be evaluated on the basis of the following criteria:
- a. respect for the preservation of peace, democracy, freedom, equality, linguistic and cultural diversity, the rule of law, social justice, solidarity, the rights of minorities and cohesion, all of which can never be deemed to have been definitely achieved but must be kept under constant review as to their meaning and must be fought for anew through historical developments and over generations;
  - b. respect for the European Union as an entity united in its diversity;
  - c. confirmation of the unique nature and of the dual legitimacy of the Union drawn from its Member States and citizens;
  - d. commitment to the preservation of the principle of equivalence between the Member States and the interinstitutional balance, which guarantees the Union's dual legitimacy;
  - e. efficiency in a Union composed of twenty five or more Member States while enhancing the democratic functioning of its Institutions;
  - f. development of a system of values with cultural, religious and humanist roots which, going beyond a common market and within the framework of a social market economy, aims at a better quality of life for Europe's citizens and society at large and seeks economic growth, stability and full employment, greater promotion of sustainable development and better implementation of citizenship of the Union;
  - g. strong political legitimacy in the eyes of the Union's citizens and through the European political parties;
  - h. an overall constitutional settlement which should enhance the Union's credibility and its role at home and abroad,
1. Welcomes the progress towards European integration and democratic development represented by the Convention's proposed "Constitution for Europe", to be established through a Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe enshrined in a text expressing the political will of the European citizens and the Member States in a solemn and comprehensive way;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the draft Constitution entrenches to a significant extent the values, objectives, principles, structures and institutions of Europe's constitutional heritage, so that, to a great extent, the draft not only assumes the character of a constitutional text but also provides for its continuous evolution;
3. Welcomes the inclusion of the symbols of the Union in the draft Constitution;

Important steps towards a more democratic, transparent and efficient European Union

Democracy

4. Greatly welcomes the inclusion of the Charter of Fundamental Rights as an integral, legally binding part of the Constitution (Part II) and stresses the importance of human dignity and the fundamental rights of the individual as crucial elements of a civic, social and democratic Union;
5. Welcomes the new "legislative procedure", which will become the general rule, as an essential step towards increasing the democratic legitimacy of the Union's activities, acknowledges this notable extension of codecision and stresses that this must be pursued further;
6. Regards as positive the election of the President of the European Commission by Parliament and stresses that this is in any case an important step towards an improved system of parliamentary democracy at European level;
7. Acknowledges the possibilities for increased participation by European citizens and the social partners and, especially, the introduction of the citizens' legislative initiative;
8. Regards as important the increased role of the national parliaments and of the regional and local authorities in the Union's activities;
9. Supports national parliaments in their efforts to carry out more effectively their task of guiding and monitoring their respective governments as members of the Council of the Union, which is the effective way of ensuring the participation of national parliaments in the legislative work of the Union and in the shaping of common policies;
10. Instructs its competent Committee to organise joint meetings with representatives of national parliaments, if possible including former members of the Convention, to ensure the follow-up and evaluation of the proceedings of the Intergovernmental Conference;

Transparency

11. Regards as fundamentally important the fact that the Union will acquire a single legal personality and that the pillar structure will formally disappear, even if the Community method does not fully apply to all Common Foreign and Security Policy, Justice and Home Affairs and coordination of economic policy decisions;
12. Welcomes the introduction of a hierarchy and the simplification of the legal acts of the Union, and the explicit recognition of the primacy of the Constitution and of Union law over the law of the Member States;
13. Recognises the steps made towards greater transparency and clarification of the respective competences of the Member States and of the Union, with the retention of a certain level of flexibility to allow for future adaptations in an evolving Union comprising twenty five or more Member States;
14. Welcomes the separation of the Euratom Treaty from the legal structure of the future Constitution; urges the Intergovernmental Conference to convene a Treaty revision conference in order to repeal the obsolete and outdated provisions of that Treaty, especially those relating to the promotion of nuclear energy and the lack of democratic decision-making procedures;
15. Welcomes the commitment given by the President of the Convention that the entire text of the Constitution will be written in gender-neutral language and calls on the Intergovernmental Conference to arrange for the necessary editorial changes to be made to the draft Constitution in this respect;

Efficiency

16. Attaches great importance to the extension of qualified majority voting in the Council, as far as legislation is concerned; welcomes the improvement of the system, while underlining the need for further extensions of qualified majority voting or for the use of special qualified majority voting in the future, without prejudice to the possibilities provided for in Article I - 24 (4) of the draft Constitution;
17. Stresses that Parliament must be the responsible parliamentary body with respect to the Common Foreign and Security Policy and the European Security and Defence Policy in so far as EU competences are concerned;
18. Welcomes the fact that the draft Constitution makes other important improvements in the sphere of decision-making and policy-making, and in particular:
  - the fact that the Union has now acquired a clear commitment to a social market economy as expressed in its values and objectives, with emphasis being placed inter alia on the importance of growth, employment, competitiveness, gender equality and non-discrimination and on socially and environmentally sustainable development,

- the fact that the Legislative and General Affairs Council, although not acting as a wholly separate Legislative Council, will in the future always meet in public when performing its legislative duties,
  - the extension of qualified majority voting and co-decision to, in particular, the area of freedom, security and justice and the extension of the general system of jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities to justice and home affairs,
  - the fact that, for international agreements and the common commercial policy, the assent of Parliament will now be required as a general rule,
  - the provisions on transparency and access to documents, the simplification of the legislative and non-legislative procedures and the use of language commonly understood by citizens,
  - the abolition of the distinction between obligatory and non-obligatory expenditure in the budget and the extension of co-decision to the common agricultural policy and the common fisheries policy,
  - the introduction of a multiannual strategic programme of the Union,
  - the recognition of the growing importance of the regional dimension to European integration,
  - the modification of the rules concerning access to the Court of Justice,
  - the provisions on the adoption of delegated regulations by the Commission with "call-back" rights for Parliament and the Council,
  - the provision under which those countries which have undertaken to participate in enhanced cooperation may introduce, among themselves, qualified majority voting where unanimity is otherwise prescribed by the draft Constitution, and adopt the legislative procedure where other procedures would normally apply;
19. Endorses the solidarity clause regarding the fight against terrorism and the possibility of structural cooperation in security and defence policy while respecting NATO commitments;

Aspects requiring further monitoring during their implementation

20. Believes that the election of the President of the European Council cannot in itself solve all the current problems affecting the functioning of that institution and could entail unforeseeable consequences for the institutional balance of the Union; the role of the President must be strictly limited to that of a chairperson in order to avoid possible conflicts with the President of the Commission or the Union Minister for Foreign Affairs and not to endanger their status or encroach in any way on the Commission's role in external representation, legislative initiative, executive implementation or administration;

21. Emphasises that the provisions concerning the presidencies of Council of Ministers formations other than the Foreign Affairs Council leave the details to a subsequent decision, which should be carefully assessed, bearing in mind the requirement of coherence, efficiency and accountability and the need to address the problem of the presidency of the Council's preparatory bodies;
22. Welcomes the disappearance of the link between the weighting of votes in the Council and the distribution of seats in Parliament, as established in the Protocol on the enlargement of the European Union annexed to the Treaty of Nice; supports the system set out in the draft Constitution as regards the future composition of Parliament and suggests that this be implemented without delay, because it is a core element of the global balance between the Member States within the different institutions;
23. Understands that the creation of the office of Union Minister for Foreign Affairs will enhance the Union's visibility and capacity for action on the international stage but stresses that it is vital that the Union Minister for Foreign Affairs be supported by a joint administration within the Commission;
24. Suggests that the European Ombudsman, who is elected by Parliament, and the national ombudsmen might propose a more comprehensive system of non-judicial remedies in close cooperation with Parliament's Committee on Petitions;
25. Considers that the Intergovernmental Conference should adopt a decision on the repeal, upon entry into force of the Members' Statute adopted by Parliament on 4 June 2003, of Articles 8, 9 and 10 of the Protocol on Privileges and Immunities and of Article 4(1) and (2) of the Act on direct elections;
26. Regrets the insufficient congruence of Part III with Part I of the draft Constitution, particularly in relation to Article I-3;
27. Welcomes the introduction of the 'passerelle' clause which allows the European Council to decide to have recourse to the ordinary legislative procedure in cases where special procedures apply, after consulting Parliament and informing national parliaments;
28. Believes that Parliament must, within the budgetary procedure, retain the rights it currently has and that its powers must not be weakened; considers that the satisfactory exercise of Parliament's power to approve the multiannual financial framework presupposes the rapid opening of interinstitutional negotiations, in addition to the Intergovernmental Conference, on the structure of this framework and the nature of the constraints on the budgetary procedure; believes that the multiannual financial framework should leave the budgetary authority significant room for manoeuvre during the annual procedure;
29. Expresses its concern regarding the unsatisfactory answers given to certain fundamental questions, which were clearly pointed out in Parliament's previous resolutions, concerning in particular:

- further consolidation of economic and social cohesion policy, closer coordination of Member States' economic policies with a view to effective economic governance, and a more explicit integration of employment, environmental and animal welfare aspects in all EU policies,
  - full recognition of the role played by public services, (deletion) based on the principles of competition, continuity, solidarity and equal access and treatment for all users;
  - the suppression of the requirement of unanimity in the Council in certain vital areas, including in particular the Common Foreign and Security Policy (at least as regards the proposals made by the Union Minister for Foreign Affairs with the Commission's support), and certain areas of social policy;
30. Understands that the solution proposed for the Commission by the draft Constitution is an important part of the global institutional compromise; hopes that the reform of the Commission will not weaken its collegiality or give rise to a lack of continuity; regrets that the system envisaged makes it difficult to keep a good European Commissioner for a second term;

General assessment

31. Notes that the draft Constitution prepared by the Convention represents the result of a broad democratic consensus involving Parliament and the national parliaments and governments of the Union, thus expressing the will of the citizens;
32. Welcomes the provision whereby Parliament now also has the right to propose constitutional amendments and, moreover, must approve any attempt to amend the Constitution without convening a convention, which will enable it to exert a de facto control over the use of this new instrument of constitutional revision; regrets, however, that the unanimity of the Member States and ratification by national parliaments or in accordance with other constitutional requirements will both still be necessary to allow the entry into force of constitutional amendments of even minor importance; strongly deplores the fact that Parliament's approval is not systematically required for the entry into force of newly adopted constitutional texts;
33. Resolves that notwithstanding certain limits and contradictions, the result of the work of the Convention should be endorsed, representing as it does an historic step towards a European Union which is more democratic, efficient and transparent;
34. Believes that in the light of the experience of two Conventions this method ensures democratic legitimacy and, through its working methods, guarantees openness and participation; considers nevertheless that for future revisions it could be sensible for the Convention itself to elect its Praesidium;

Convening of the Intergovernmental Conference and ratification process

35. Approves the convening of the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) on 4 October 2003;
36. Urges the IGC to respect the consensus reached by the Convention, to avoid negotiations on the fundamental decisions reached by the Convention and to approve the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe without altering its basic balance while aiming at reinforcing its coherence;
37. Calls on the political parties, both in the Member States and at European level, the representative associations and civil society to reflect comprehensively not only on the outcome of the Convention but also on Parliament's views as expressed in this Resolution;
38. Strongly welcomes the Italian Presidency's assurance that Parliament will be closely and continuously involved in the IGC at both levels, namely that of the Heads of State or Government and that of the Foreign Affairs Ministers, and supports its intention to close the conference by December 2003;
39. Considers that the Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe must be signed by all the twenty five Member States on 9 May 2004, Europe Day, immediately after the accession of the new members to the Union;
40. Considers that Member States that hold referenda on the draft Constitution should if possible hold such referenda or ratify the draft Constitution in accordance with their constitutional provisions on the same day;
41. Welcomes the fact that the deliberations of the IGC are to be publicised on the Internet, but calls on the Commission, the governments of the Member States and the political parties to envisage using all possible information media to acquaint the general public with the content of the IGC's work and the draft Constitution, including the organisation of national fora;

42. Instructs its President to forward this resolution, constituting Parliament's opinion on the convening of the Intergovernmental Conference, to the Council, the Commission, the European Central Bank, the Heads of State or Government and the parliaments of the Member States and of the acceding and candidate States.

GENERAL COMMENTS

INTRODUCTION

1. Delegations will find attached a document produced by the IGC Secretariat which is intended to serve as a basis for the examination by legal experts of the text of the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe.<sup>1</sup>
2. On the left-hand page this document reproduces the text of the Convention's draft, with suggested changes being indicated in bold (changes to titles of Articles, which are already in bold, are italicised).
3. Opposite the text of the draft, on the right-hand page, are explanations of the suggested changes and observations on legal consistency, gaps, legally incorrect wording or ambiguities which might produce a legal risk.
4. Besides two preliminary comments, this introduction includes a number of technical remarks intended to facilitate the reading of the documents.

PRELIMINARY COMMENTS

Transitional provisions

5. Part IV of the draft Treaty establishing the Constitution provides for the repeal of the TEC and the TEU, and of other Treaties (amending and accession), of which the list is to be drawn up (Article IV-2). Implementing this approach will require provisions to be laid down to secure the succession and legal continuity. On this point, the IGC Secretariat suggests that some provisions should be added to Part IV, and in the "Protocol on the representation of citizens in the European Parliament and the weighting of votes in the European Council and the Council of Ministers", which it is suggested should be styled the "Protocol on the transitional provisions relating to the Institutions and bodies of the Union", given the expansion of its scope.
6. In cases which do not give rise to questions of political expediency (for example the continuing term in office of the members of certain Institutions or bodies), appropriate transitional provisions have been suggested.
7. For the Commission and the Union Minister for Foreign Affairs, the problem is more delicate. Firstly, both the Commission and the Secretary-General/High Representative for the CFSP in office on the date that the new Treaty enters into force will disappear on that date. Secondly, the text of the draft Constitution allows for a new Commission and the Union Minister for Foreign Affairs to be appointed only with effect from 1 November 2009. It is therefore clear that provisions must be amended to fill this gap for the period between the date when the Treaty establishing the Constitution enters into force and 1 November 2009.

However, these transitional provisions are not mechanical. They call for choices of political expediency. That is why no suggestion on this subject has been made.

Accession agreements, protocols and other primary legislation not examined by the Convention

8. This document does not deal with the approximately forty protocols which are an integral part of the current Treaties, and which have not been examined by the Convention; however, those protocols – some of which refer to Articles in the current Treaties and will therefore need technical changes – should be revised. Further, there is a need to clarify the question of the accession Treaties and other primary legislation not examined by the Convention. The Presidency has asked the Commission to assist the IGC Secretariat in this respect. The outcome of this work will subsequently be sent by the IGC Secretariat to legal experts (insofar as purely legal questions are concerned).

TECHNICAL REMARKS

Numbering and titles of Articles

9. At this stage, to avoid problems with references, Article numbers are preceded by the Roman number of the Part to which they belong (an "I" has been added for Articles in Part I). While understanding the reasoning behind this system of numbering, it should be noted that it is complicated. What is more, it risks creating confusion in several languages, particularly when the number is said aloud and then interpreted (thus "III-142" may be read out as "three – a hundred and forty two" which may lead to confusion with "three hundred and forty two"). Thus, from the point of view of legal certainty, transparency, simplicity and facility of use, it would be preferable to use continuous numbering in Arabic numerals throughout the text of the Constitution (from 1 to 465). This number could be reduced by about 30 if the suggested regrouping of Articles is carried out.

It should be noted that only the Articles in Parts I, II and IV have titles.

10. To make the texts easier to read, the numbers of the "ex Articles" in the TEC and TEU corresponding to the Articles in the draft have been indicated in brackets in Part III next to the new number of the Article, even when they have been amended by the Convention.

Abbreviations of names

11. Certain names recur frequently in the text: European Commission, Council of Ministers, names of legally binding acts (European law, European framework law, European regulation, European decision). It is suggested that their full name should be quoted once, in the Article defining them, and that for the rest of the text a shorter formulation should be used (Commission, Council, law, framework law, regulation, decision) which avoids making the wording unnecessarily cumbersome. Of course in the titles of acts the full name will be used (e.g. "European law No .../... of the European Parliament and of the Council of Ministers"). On the other hand, "European Council" and "European Parliament" will be written in full throughout the text.

Terminology and drafting

12. In the interests of editorial consistency, it is suggested that the word "proposal" should be reserved for Commission proposals, with "initiatives" by the Member States or the Minister for Foreign Affairs, "recommendations" by the ECB, etc.
13. The term "agencies", which is used in many Articles in the draft, risks giving rise to difficulties of interpretation as to whether it covers all the bodies created by an act of secondary legislation since the Treaty of Rome, where the creating act grants legal personality and defines tasks, resources, etc. It is therefore suggested that the term "agencies" should be replaced by "offices and agencies", which would cover all Community bodies without ambiguity, including executive agencies, whereas the term "agencies" risks excluding bodies called Offices, Centres, Foundations, etc. In any case this is the wording used in the OLAF Regulation <sup>2</sup> and in other provisions <sup>3</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> See also the current text of the TEC, point (c) of the first paragraph of Article 234, and the second sentence of Article 248(1); and the decision of the Representatives of the Governments of the Member States of 29 October 1993 on the location of the seats of certain bodies and departments of the European Communities and of Europol (Selected Instruments 1999, p. 803).

14. An editorial choice has been made to use the wording "the law shall determine .... [the status ...], [the conditions and restrictions ...], [the structure, functioning, tasks ...], etc." and "the law shall establish ...[measures ....], [programmes ....], etc." to avoid variations in the verbs used to describe the contents of the laws ("set", "determine", "establish", "adopt the provisions relating to", "define").
15. Unnecessary adverbs ("fully, etc.") have not been remarked upon since in most cases they are already in the text of the current Treaties.

Repetition between the Parts

16. The four-part structure chosen for the draft leads to repetition between Parts I, II and III, sometimes in non-identical terms. This modus operandi, which does not comply with the rules on the drafting quality of a legal text, results from a political choice which has been respected. The most significant occurrences are indicated on the comments page. Suggestions have been made in cases where legal difficulties result.

Title IV

For greater clarity, it is suggested that the words "and bodies" should be added to the heading of this Title. Currently the Title is called "The Union's Institutions" even though it contains provisions on the advisory bodies. It is also suggested that the headings of the two Chapters should be changed and that a new one should be added (new Chapter III) called "The Union's advisory bodies".

Title I

It is suggested that "clauses" should be replaced by "provisions".

Section 7

In view of the contents of this section, which does not only contain provisions on the harmonisation of laws, it is suggested that the section heading should be renamed as a result (see comments on Section 7).

Sections 3a and 4

It is suggested that Sections 3a and 4 should be renumbered to become Sections 4 and 5, and that the name of Section 4 should be changed (see comments on Sections 4 and 5)

Chapter III

It is suggested that the word "specific" should be deleted.

Subsection 1

Given that there is only one subsection, and that furthermore it contains only one article (see suggestions re Articles III-113, III-114 and III-115), it is suggested that it should be deleted.

Chapter II

Given that Articles III-195 to III-209 apply to the whole of the CFSP (i.e. including the ESDP, which is an integral part of it), it is suggested that these Articles should be made into a new Section entitled "Common provisions" (the current Sections 1 and 2 would become Sections 2 and 3).

Subsection 4

Change in accordance with the name given in Article I-18(2) and the heading of Article I-25.

Subsection 5

Suggested change in accordance with the change of name suggested in relation to Article I-28.

Subsection 5a

It is suggested that a new Subsection on the European Central Bank should be added (see comments re new Subsection 5a)

Protocol on the transitional provisions relating to the Institutions and bodies of the Union

It is suggested that the heading of this Protocol should be amended to reflect the major changes to its scope and field of application which are needed.

Article I-5a: Union law

The Constitution, and law adopted by the Union's Institutions in exercising competences conferred on it, shall have primacy over the law of the Member States.

Article I-6: Legal personality

The Union shall have legal personality.

TITLE II: FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION*Article I-7: Fundamental rights

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes Part II.
2. The Union shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Such accession shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in the Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Comments and suggestions

Article I-5a

It is suggested that Article I-10(1) would be more appropriate here. It has therefore become a new Article I-5a.

Article I-6

Clearer French wording, which is moreover identical with that used in Article 281 of the TEC ("a" instead of "est dotée de").

Article I-7

Paragraph 2

The wording of the legal basis in the Constitution for accession of the Union to the ECHR could be improved by replacing the words "seek accession" by "accede". That said, the only pertinent interpretation will be to regard paragraph 2, even as drafted by the Convention, as a legal basis, given Article III-227, point (a) under (ii).

Paragraph 3

It is noted that unlike Article 6(2) of the current TEU, the draft does not provide that "The Union shall respect fundamental rights...as general principles of Union law".

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, ~~goods~~, services, goods and capital, ~~and the freedom of establishment~~.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

Third paragraph

On the replacement of "biens" by "marchandises" in the French version and the order in which the freedoms are listed, see comment re Article I-4(1) above.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

Fifth paragraph

The explanations "prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium" of the Convention which drafted the Charter of Fundamental Rights have been "updated" under the authority of the Praesidium of the European Convention (cf. CONV 828/1/03 of 18 July 2003).

Because these explanations are cited in the text of the Constitutional Treaty, they must be accessible to all. They should therefore be published in the "C" series of the OJ, or inserted into a declaration by the IGC in the Final Act, which will in turn be published in the "C" series of the OJ.

TITLE I: DIGNITY*Article II-1: Human dignity

Human dignity is inviolable. It must be respected and protected.

Article II-2: Right to life

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to the death penalty, or executed.

Article II-3: Right to the integrity of the person

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his or her physical and mental integrity.
2. In the fields of medicine and biology, the following must be respected in particular:
  - (a) the free and informed consent of the person concerned, according to the procedures laid down by law,
  - (b) the prohibition of eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons,
  - (c) the prohibition on making the human body and its parts as such a source of financial gain,
  - (d) the prohibition of the reproductive cloning of human beings.

Article II-4: Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article II-5: Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
3. Trafficking in human beings is prohibited.

TITLE II: FREEDOMS*Article II-6: Right to liberty and security

Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person.

Article II-7: Respect for private and family life

Everyone has the right to respect for his or her private and family life, home and communications.

Article II-8: Protection of personal data

1. Everyone has the right to the protection of personal data concerning him or her.
2. Such data must be processed fairly for specified purposes and on the basis of the consent of the person concerned or some other legitimate basis laid down by law. Everyone has the right of access to data which has been collected concerning him or her, and the right to have it rectified.

3. Compliance with these rules shall be subject to control by an independent authority.

Article II-9: Right to marry and right to found a family

The right to marry and the right to found a family shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.

Article II-10: Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right includes freedom to change religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or in private, to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. The right to conscientious objection is recognised, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

Article II-11: Freedom of expression and information

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers.
2. The freedom and pluralism of the media shall be respected.

Article II-12: Freedom of assembly and of association

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association at all levels, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters, which implies the right of everyone to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his or her interests.
2. Political parties at Union level contribute to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union.

Article II-12Paragraph 2

On the use of the feminine in certain languages (e.g. in French "des citoyens ou citoyennes"), see comments above re Article I-3(2). It will be noted that in Part II, unlike in Part I, the feminine word ("citoyennes") follows the masculine word. (Does not apply to the English version).

Article II-13: Freedom of the arts and sciences

The arts and scientific research shall be free of constraint. Academic freedom shall be respected.

Article II-14: Right to education

1. Everyone has the right to education and to have access to vocational and continuing training.
2. This right includes the possibility to receive free compulsory education.
3. The freedom to found educational establishments with due respect for democratic principles and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be respected, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right.

Article II-15: Freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work

1. Everyone has the right to engage in work and to pursue a freely chosen or accepted occupation.
2. Every citizen of the Union has the freedom to seek employment, to work, to exercise the right of establishment and to provide services in any Member State.
3. Nationals of third countries who are authorised to work in the territories of the Member States are entitled to working conditions equivalent to those of citizens of the Union.

Article II-16: Freedom to conduct a business

The freedom to conduct a business in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices is recognised.

Article II-17: Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law insofar as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

Article II-18: Right to asylum

The right to asylum shall be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and in accordance with the Constitution.

Article II-19: Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.
2. No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

TITLE III: EQUALITY*Article II-20: Equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law.

Article II-21: Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.
2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Article II-22: Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Article II-23: Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Article II-24: The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private Institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Article II-21Paragraph 2

In the French version, this paragraph is almost identical to Article I-4(2) (except for the words "fondée sur") (the legal basis is contained in Article III-7). It is suggested that the French wording be aligned on Article I-4(2) (which corresponds to the wording of current Article 12 TEC). Since this involves repetition, it could, moreover, be deleted. (Does not affect the English version).

Article II-25: The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Article II-26: Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

TITLE IV: SOLIDARITY*Article II-27: Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-28: Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Article II-29: Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Article II-30: Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-31: Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Article II-32: Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Article II-33: Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Article II-34: Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-35: Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Article II-36: Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the Constitution, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Article II-37: Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Article II-35

It will be noted that the second sentence reproduces Article III-179(1) word for word.

Article II-37

This provision is similar to Article III-4 (as redrafted and renumbered III-1(2)(c)), but the latter does not refer to "the improvement" of the quality of the environment, or to "ensuring" environmental protection "in accordance with the principle" of sustainable development.

Article II-38: Consumer protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

TITLE V: CITIZENS' RIGHTS*Article II-39: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Article II-40: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Article II-41: Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union.
2. This right includes:
  - (a) the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - (b) the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - (c) the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.

Article II-38

This provision is similar to Article III-5 (as redrafted and renumbered III-1(3)(c)).

Article II-39Paragraph 1

Repetition of Article I-8(2)(b).

Paragraph 2

Paragraph 2 is almost identical to the first sentence of Article I-19(2) (which refers to "direct universal suffrage" in a "free and secret ballot").

Article II-40

Repetition of Article I-8(2)(b).

3. Every person has the right to have the Union make good any damage caused by its Institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every ~~citizen~~~~person~~ may write to the Institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Constitution and must have an answer in the same language.

Article II-42: Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to documents of the Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union, ~~in whatever~~ their medium~~form they are produced.~~

Article II-43: European Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the European Ombudsman cases of maladministration in the activities of the Institutions, bodies, offices or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the ~~European~~ Court of Justice of the European Union and the ~~High Court~~ acting in ~~its~~~~their~~ judicial role.

Article II-44: Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Article II-41(4)Paragraph 4

Under Articles I-8(2)(d) and III-12, the right to write to the Institutions (and advisory bodies – which are not mentioned here) of the Union in one of the languages of the Constitution and to obtain a reply in the same language is granted only to citizens of the Union, and not to "every person". As Article II-41 will in any event have to be read and interpreted in the light of Article II-52(2), it is suggested that the text be aligned as regards this point.

Article II-42

Repetition of Article I-49(3). (The wording should be aligned on that suggested for the latter Article: "whatever their medium").

Article II-43

This Article is identical in its substance to the second sentence of Article III-237(1). The right for citizens to have recourse to the Ombudsman is also mentioned in Article I-8(2)(d). For the Court of Justice of the European Union, see comment above re Article I-28.

Article II-44

This Article is almost identical to Article III-236 (except that the latter specifies that the petition must concern "a matter which comes within the Union's fields of activity" and which affects the petitioner directly). The right for citizens to petition the European Parliament is also mentioned in Article I-8(2)(d).

Article II-45: Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Constitution, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Article II-46: Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

TITLE VI: JUSTICE*Article II-47: Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Article II-45Paragraph 1

Paragraph 1 is identical in substance to Article I-8(2)(a).

Article II-46

This Article is identical in substance to Article I-8(2)(c). For the word "nationaux" in the French version, see comment above re the latter Article.

Article II-48: Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Article II-49: Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Article II-50: Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

Article II-48

On the use of the feminine/masculine in the French version (here: "Tout accusé" instead of "Tout accusé ou toute accusée ..."), see comments re Article I-3(2). (Does not affect the English version).

TITLE VII: GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article II-51: Field of application

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the other Parts of the Constitution.
2. This Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks defined in the other Parts of the Constitution.

Article II-52: Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by ~~law~~ a legislative act and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant Parts

Article II-52Paragraph 1

It is suggested that the term "law" be replaced by "a legislative act" in order to avoid any confusion with the term "law" as used in Article I-32 as a legal act of the Union.

3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Article II-53: Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union, ~~the Community~~ or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Article II-54: Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

Article II-52Paragraph 5

It is suggested that "offices and agencies" be inserted in the second line.

* Delegations are invited to submit to the Presidency before the 20th of October 2003, non-institutional questions they wish to be raised, including those related to Part III of the draft Constitution. Some of these questions have already been mentioned: Christian values, minorities, economic governance. The Presidency reminds delegations however that in order to keep the discussions on the right track, a high degree of self-discipline is needed, therefore the issues raised should be limited, as far as possible, to the strict minimum. At the same time, the Presidency will welcome drafting proposals relating to these issues.

NOTE

from: Presidency
dated: 24 October 2003
to: Delegations

---

*Subject: IGC 2003
– Non-institutional issues; including amendments in the economic and financial field*

1. Delegations will find attached a complete list, arranged by subject, of the non-institutional issues which have been submitted by delegations in response to the request from the Presidency. This list will constitute the basis for the discussions at the meeting of Ministers in Brussels on 27 October 2003. In this context, the Presidency reminds delegations that in order to keep the discussions on the right track, a high degree of self-discipline is needed.
2. The list is organised according to subject under broad headings. It does not include points relating to the scope of Qualified Majority Voting, since these are the subject of a separate document.
3. Several delegations have raised the issue of defence. However this has been identified as one of several key issues on which the Presidency has already scheduled separate discussions.

4. A series of points have been included relating to the Union's finances/budget and to economic and financial policy. Many of these points have been the subject of discussions by ECOFIN Ministers: they are marked with an asterisk (*). A large number of delegations have indicated that they are prepared to accept them as a whole. Where delegations have indicated that they attached particular importance to certain points, this has been specified. Other delegations do not feel at ease with the initiative of the ECOFIN Council and are not ready to accept the ECOFIN Ministers' package as a whole as there is a risk that it would undermine, in particular, the overall institutional balance. Some of them would however be able to accept some of the points.

  5. Several delegations referred in their submissions to issues which they did not intend to raise themselves, but on which they would support others. These have therefore only been included in the list if they were raised by other delegations.

Preamble

1. Name of the Treaty: should be Constitutional Treaty for the EU (SK)
2. Preamble: include a reference to Christian inheritance of Europe (ESP, IRL, MT, PL, PT, SK, LT; CZ wishes to enlarge even more this proposal to a reference to Ancient Greek philosophy, Roman law, Jewish and Christian roots and rationalism. T and CY opposed to such a mention.)

General

3. Union's values: include new values (Art. 2):
  - Rights of national and ethnic minorities (HU). SK and LV opposed to such a mention.
  - Equality between men and women (SW)
4. Union's objectives (Art. 3):
  - Include new objectives: economic and monetary Union and policies for economic and social cohesion (Art. 3.2) as well as public health (Art. 3.3) (GR)
  - Scope of application of Union's objectives (Art. 3): include a sentence "in accordance with this Constitutional Treaty" or a similar one to avoid misunderstandings relating to its scope of application (Art. 3.2) (PT)
5. Primacy of EU law: Doubts over formulation (UK)
6. Accession to the ECHR (Art. 7.2): include a firmer intention of accession (CZ)
7. Union's exclusive competencies (Art. 12):
  - Conclusion of international agreements: need to examine it in depth in light of existing case law (Art. 12) (IRL, FIN, SW, UK)
  - Since competition policy is an exclusive competence, a provision should be included to put an obligation on the Commission to take into account the geographical dimension for certain island nations with small populations, which does not allow them to take full advantage of the internal market possibilities and to compete on an equal footing with other MS (Art. 12.1) (CY)

8. Competencies: tourism
  - include as an area of shared competencies (Art. 13) (GR)
  - include as an area of supporting, co-ordinating or complementary actions and establish relevant legal basis (Art. 16 and related) (ESP, F, LV, MT, PL, PT, LT, CY, SK)
9. Include a new principle common to Union's legal acts (Art. 37.2): principle that the laws should be written in a manner that makes it possible for ordinary citizens to understand them (SW)
10. Introduction of equality between MS as another principle of democratic equality (Art. 44) (PT, SL)
11. Need precision on the definition of "significant number of MS" as regards "civic initiative" (Art. 46) (SK)
12. European Ombudsman (Art. 48 and related):
  - Election (instead of appointment) of the European Ombudsman (Art. 48) (GR)
  - Foresee a provision allowing the cooperation of the European Ombudsman with ombudsmen and similar bodies in the MS (Art. III-237) (GR)
13. Charter of Fundamental Rights (Part II): stronger and clearer reference or a more secure legal status of the Explanations and publication thereof (NL, UK)
14. Non-discrimination (Art. II-21): needs clarification (UK)
15. Insert a horizontal clause ensuring that social objectives are taken into account in all Union policies (create a new Article) (B)
16. Services of general economic interest (Art. III-6):
  - revert to existing terminology (ESP)
  - deletion of the full sentence in art III- 6 mentioning a European law (NL, ESP, FIN)
  - include a reference to the central role of local and regional authorities in providing these services (AUT)
  - a reference should be made to economic cohesion alongside social and territorial cohesion (PT)
  - as long as the concept is not defined, there should not be a legal basis (SW)

– Issues to be dealt with by the Legal Experts group (new mandate)

---

Delegations will find attached the list of issues to be dealt with in the meeting of the Legal Experts group (new mandate) on 11 and 12 November 2003.<sup>1</sup>

---

LEGAL EXPERTS GROUP (new mandate)

NB: All the issues in this list contain legal/technical aspects that need clarification as to their legal components. Consequently, in the interest of the smooth work process, these would gain by being examined in advance under a juridical angle before possible further consideration at political level. In no case such a clarification may be subject to negotiations and does not prejudge any political solution. Its aim is to either answer legal questions related to these issues or clarify them in order to pave the way for further consideration at political, ministerial level.

Points marked with a cross (☒ ) are those suggested by ECOFIN ministers and submitted to the IGC by the delegations indicated below.

A. GENERAL

1. Internal security (Art. 5.1 and III-163): request to change for national security. (UK, NL)
2. Primacy of EU law (Art. 5 a)<sup>2</sup>: clarification as to whether this provision accurately reflects current jurisprudence as established by the ECJ. (UK, PT)

Subject : 2003 IGC
– Draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe
(following editorial and legal adjustments by the Working Party of IGC Legal Experts)<sup>1</sup>

Editorial and legal adjustments appear in bold and deletions in strikethrough<sup>2</sup>.

Addendum 1 to this document contains Annex I and Annex II to the EC Treaty, the Protocols drawn up by the Convention and the Protocols annexed to the EU Treaty and to the EC and Euratom Treaties, as adjusted by the Working Party of IGC Legal Experts.

* * *

<sup>2</sup> Adjustments to the headings of Articles or Sections, which are already in bold, are indicated by italics. The accuracy of all cross-references between Articles or paragraphs will be checked at the end of proceedings.

The text also contains five footnotes drafted on the responsibility of the Chairman of the Working Party, on particular legal points. They concern the last recital of the Preamble to the Charter (page 68), Article III-88(1) (page 125), Article III-209 (page 182) and Article III-305(1) (page 224).

TITLE II

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNION

Article I-7: Fundamental rights

1. The Union shall recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights which constitutes Part II ~~of this Constitution~~.
2. The Union shall seek accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Such accession shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in the Constitution.
3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

Article I-8: Citizenship of the Union

1. Every national of a Member State shall be a citizen of the Union. Citizenship of the Union shall be additional to national citizenship; it shall not replace it.
2. Citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights and be subject to the duties provided for in the Constitution. They shall have:
  - (a) the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States;
  - (b) the right to vote and to stand as candidates in elections to the European Parliament and in municipal elections in their Member State of residence, under the same conditions as nationals of that State;

PART II

THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE UNION

PREAMBLE

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, ~~goods~~, services, goods and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter <sup>1</sup>.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

---

<sup>1</sup> The Legal Adviser to the IGC ~~is of the opinion that~~, suggests adding at the end of this sentence, for reasons of legal certainty and transparency, a phrase to point out that the explanations mentioned here have been updated on the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention; if this were not done, the existing text would be inaccurate. The following addition is supported by the great majority of delegations (with the German, Austrian, Belgian, Luxembourg and French delegations opposing it, because they feel that it raises issues of political desirability): "(...) the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated on the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention".

Also, since the text explicitly states that the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and of the Member States "with due regard to" those explanations, it would be legally inconceivable that the text of the explanations should not be available to those courts and to the Union's citizens. The Legal Adviser therefore suggests that they be made universally accessible, by ensuring that they are published in the "C" series of the Official Journal of the European Union.

TITLE I

Article II-16: Freedom to conduct a business

The freedom to conduct a business in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices is recognised.

Article II-17: Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law insofar as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

Article II-18: Right to asylum

The right to asylum shall be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the Geneva Convention of 28 July 1951 and the Protocol of 31 January 1967 relating to the status of refugees and in accordance with the Constitution.

Article II-19: Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.
2. No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

TITLE III

EQUALITY

Article II-20: Equality before the law

Everyone is equal before the law.

Article II-21: Non-discrimination

1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.
2. Within the scope of application of the Constitution and without prejudice to any of its specific provisions, any discrimination on grounds of nationality shall be prohibited.

Article II-22: Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

The Union shall respect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity.

Article II-23: Equality between men and women

Equality between men and women must be ensured in all areas, including employment, work and pay.

The principle of equality shall not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in favour of the under-represented sex.

Article II-24: The rights of the child

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Article II-25: The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Article II-26: Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

TITLE IV

SOLIDARITY

Article II-27: Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-28: Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Article II-29: Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Article II-30: Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-31: Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Article II-32: Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Article II-33: Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Article II-34: Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article II-35: Health care

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all Union policies and activities.

Article II-36: Access to services of general economic interest

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the Constitution, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

Article II-37: Environmental protection

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

Article II-38: Consumer protection

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

TITLE V

CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Article II-39: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

Article II-40: Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Article II-41: Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union.

2. This right includes:
- (a) the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - (b) the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - (c) the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the Union make good any damage caused by its Institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every ~~citizen~~~~person~~ may write to the Institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Constitution and must have an answer in the same language.

Article II-42: Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to documents of the Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union, ~~in whatever~~ their medium~~form they are produced.~~

Article II-43: European Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the European Ombudsman cases of maladministration in the activities of the Institutions, bodies, offices or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the ~~European Court of Justice~~ of the European Union and the ~~High Court~~ acting in ~~its~~~~their~~ judicial role.

Article II-44: Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Article II-45: Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Constitution, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Article II-46: Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

TITLE VI

JUSTICE

Article II-47: Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Article II-48: Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Article II-49: Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.

2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Article II-50: Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

TITLE VII

GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article II-51: Field of application

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the other Parts of the Constitution.
2. This Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks defined in the other Parts of the Constitution.

Article II-52: Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in other Parts of the Constitution shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by these relevant Parts

3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by Institutions, bodies, ~~offices and agencies~~ of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.

Article II-53: Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union, ~~the Community~~ or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Article II-54: Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein.

CIG 51/03

REPORT

---

from : Chairman of the Working Party of IGC Legal Experts
dated : 25 November 2003
to : Intergovernmental Conference

---

Subject : 2003 IGC: editorial and legal adjustments to the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe and to the Protocols
- Presentation of the outcome of proceedings of the Working Party – CIG 50/03

1. As instructed by the Presidency of the IGC <sup>1</sup>, a Working Party of Legal Experts has carried out a "legal verification" of the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe, drawn up by the European Convention <sup>2</sup>. The Working Party was chaired by Mr Jean-Claude Piris, Director-General of the Council Legal Service and Legal Adviser to the IGC, and in his absence by Mr Giorgio Maganza, Director in the Council Legal Service.
2. The Working Party worked on the basis of a document prepared by the IGC Secretariat with the assistance of the Council Legal Service (CIG 4/03), in which legal improvements to the draft were suggested. It also discussed suggestions made by members of the Working Party. The Working Party went on to examine the Protocols annexed to the existing Treaties, on the basis of documents prepared by the IGC Secretariat, with the assistance of the Commission (CIG 41/03, CIG 48/03 and CIG 49/03).

<sup>1</sup> Letter of 29 September 2003 from Mr Frattini to the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Member States of the European Union and to the acceding States, the candidate countries, the European Parliament and the Commission.

3. The Working Party held 15 meetings (on 9, 10, 15, 20, 21, 24, 29 and 31 October and on 5, 6, 10, 14, 18, 19 and 25 November 2003).

The outcome of proceedings is set out in CIG 50/03, which contains the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe, and in Addendum 1 thereto, which contains the Protocols to be annexed to the Constitution.

In view of the political sensitivity of the provisions on Council formations (Article I-23), the Commission and the Union Minister for Foreign Affairs (Articles I-25 to I-27 and III-250 to III-253), the common foreign and security policy (Article I-39 and Articles III-193 to III-209 and III-215) and the common security and defence policy (Article I-40 and Articles III-210 to III-214), the Working Party of Legal Experts confined itself to minimal, horizontal adjustments, basically following the drafting conventions which it had agreed on elsewhere.

The overall result merely reflects the legal drafting approach taken by the Working Party of Legal Experts and in no way affects the option available to delegations of raising any political issues.

o
o o

4. In the course of its discussions, the Working Party agreed to suggest legal and drafting improvements, including the following:

- achieving legal and editorial consistency between the different parts of the draft Constitution through greater legal consistency in provisions (e.g. deletion of needless cross-references or repetition, insertion of necessary cross-references, repositioning of some articles or paragraphs <sup>1</sup>, etc.) and more consistency in the wording used (e.g. a standard method for drafting legal bases, use of the same term to express the same idea, etc.);
- making good some omissions (e.g. through the addition of other cases in which an Institution may submit a proposed act to the legislator, the insertion of a fuller definition of the scope of a challenge to the legality of an act, the addition of a reference to laws or framework laws as instruments in the legal basis on the association of the overseas countries and territories and in that on the outermost regions, or the addition of a reference to the applicable voting rule in all cases in which the European Council adopts a binding legal act, etc.);
- the correction of legal inaccuracies (e.g. those relating to the composition of the Council, the principle of representative democracy, review of the legality of acts suspending certain of the rights deriving from membership of the Union, etc.).

<sup>1</sup> The following provisions have been repositioned:

- Article I-10(1) is moved to Article I-5a;
- Article I-10(2) is moved to Article I-5(2);
- Article I-16(3) is moved to Article I-11(5);
- Article I-24(4), first subparagraph, is moved to Article I-33(4);
- Article I-24(4), second subparagraph, is moved to Article I-22(4);
- Article III-64 is moved to Article III-65a;
- Article III-84 is moved to Article III-289a;
- Article III-85 is moved to Article III-289b;
- Article III-192 is moved to Article III-186(1);
- Article III-242 is moved to Article III-239(3);
- Article III-280 is moved to Article III-281(3);
- Article III-284 is moved to Article III-281(2);
- Article IV-1 is moved to Article I-6a;
- Article IV-9 is moved to Article IV-7a.

5. The Working Party also agreed to suggest total recasting of most of the final provisions contained in Part IV, more specifically the provisions entailed by the repeal of the existing Treaties. It accordingly suggests:
- the addition, in the preamble, of a reference to succession between Treaties and to legal continuity of the "acquis communautaire";
  - the combining, in a single Protocol, of the various transitional provisions scattered throughout the draft Constitution (e.g. the date of effect of a number of rules relating to a new composition or a new voting procedure for certain Institutions and bodies, and their composition or other rules applicable in the period between the entry into force of the new Treaty and that date, etc.);
  - the addition of transitional provisions not drawn up by the Convention, with a view to ensuring succession between the existing Treaties and the future Treaty establishing the Constitution and, in particular, legal continuity of existing Institutions, bodies, offices and agencies, the "acquis communautaire", ongoing proceedings, etc.
6. These improvements were approved by mutual agreement, in accordance with the rule established at the beginning of the Working Party's discussions.

However, the Spanish and Polish delegations stated that the transfer of the various transitional provisions scattered throughout the draft Constitution to the "Protocol on the transitional provisions relating to the Institutions and bodies of the Union" raised issues of political expediency for them. They could therefore go along with the legal drafting approach taken by the Working Party only if those issues of political expediency were resolved.

The position of the above two delegations is reflected in footnotes in CIG 50/03, as well as in a special presentation of the Protocol on transitional provisions in Addendum 1 to that document (in which the version of the Protocol drawn up under the supervision of the Legal Adviser to the IGC, which reflects the Working Party's legal drafting approach, is preceded by the version of the Protocol proposed by the Convention, without any drafting adjustment).

7. The Convention text has been left unchanged, without any comments, in a number of areas in which the IGC Secretariat had suggested legal improvements but mutual agreement could not be reached, because of opposition by one delegation or a very small number of delegations.

The Conference's attention is, however, drawn to four such areas, where the draft Constitution as it currently stands is legally incorrect <sup>1</sup>:

- (a) final recital of the preamble to the Charter of Fundamental Rights (Part Two of the draft Constitution). For reasons of legal certainty and transparency, it is suggested that a phrase be added at the end of the recital to point out that the explanations concerning the Charter which were prepared by the Praesidium of the Convention that drafted the Charter have been updated on the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention; otherwise, the current text would be inaccurate. The following addition is supported by the great majority of delegations (the German, Austrian, Belgian, Luxembourg and French delegations opposed it, as they considered that it raised issues of political expediency): "*(...) the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention".

In addition, since the text explicitly states that "the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter", it would be legally inconceivable for the text of such explanations not to be available to those courts and to Union citizens; it is therefore suggested that the explanations be made universally accessible by ensuring that they are published in the "C" series of the Official Journal of the European Union;

- (b) Article III-88(1) (legal basis allowing the adoption of specific measures for the euro area): It would seem legally incorrect not to specify the Institution which is to adopt the measures, i.e. the Council, or the procedures to be applied by it, as appropriate, according to the content of the decision to be adopted. The addition shown below is supported by the vast majority of delegations: "1. In order to ensure that economic and monetary union works properly, and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Constitution, the Council shall adopt, in accordance with whichever of the procedures referred to in Articles III-71 and III-76 is appropriate, measures specific to those Member States ~~which are members of the euro area~~ whose currency is the euro shall be adopted: (...)". Only the United Kingdom and Sweden delegations were opposed and suggested different wording.
- (c) Article III-209 (rule on non-interference between CFSP procedures and procedures for other policies): This paragraph, which does not pose any substantive problems for delegations, should be reworded in such a way as to make it more precise and legally secure. Its aim is to spell out a rule designed to prevent the Council, in the context of its powers under the CFSP, from adopting acts affecting other areas of Union activity. With the abolition of the pillars, the competences enabling the Council to act are all, without distinction, Union competences. The idea is therefore to protect not competences but the procedures and powers of the Institutions which continue to differ between the CFSP and other policies (broader powers for the European Parliament, the Commission and the Court of Justice). The following draft is endorsed by virtually all delegations (only the Spanish delegation is opposed to it). "*The implementation of the common foreign and security policy shall not affect the application of the procedures and the extent of the powers of the Institutions laid down by the Constitution for the exercise of the Union competences listed in Articles I-12 to I-14 and I-16. Similarly, the implementation of the policies listed in those Articles shall not affect ~~the competence referred to in Article I-15~~ the application of the procedures and the extent of the powers of the Institutions laid down by the Constitution for the exercise of the Union competences under this Chapter.";

- (d) Article III-305(1) (access to EIB documents): Since the draft Constitution drawn up by the Convention provides that, in the case of the ECB, public access to documents shall be granted only for its administrative activities, but not for its banking activities, the same provisions should apply to the European Investment Bank. An addition of this kind is supported by almost all delegations (only the Swedish delegation is opposed to it).
8. Finally, it has been suggested that the Conference should consider the question of how the articles in the draft should be numbered. The system adopted by the Convention (whereby the Arabic numeral of each Article is preceded by the Roman numeral of the Part to which it belongs, reverting to 1 again for each Part) gives rise to a great deal of confusion, particularly when numbers are read out aloud and then interpreted into a number of different languages (e.g. "I-10" and "110" or "III-142" and "342"). From the point of view of legal certainty, transparency, simplicity and ease of use, it would thus be preferable to use continuous numbering in Arabic numerals throughout the text of the Constitution (from 1 to 465).

A large majority of delegations endorsed the proposal for renumbering continuously throughout, provided this was accompanied by the Roman numeral of the relevant Part, so that the distinction between the four separate Parts of the Constitution could be maintained.

dated: 25 November 2003

*Subject: IGC 2003
– Naples Ministerial Conclave: Presidency proposal*

---

1. In line with the conclusions of the European Council meeting in Thessaloniki, the work of the InterGovernmental Conference has been carried out at political level. The IGC meetings so far, together with a series of bilateral contacts, have enabled the Presidency to identify a number of issues in the draft Constitutional Treaty which delegations consider need either clarifying or amending, and in some cases to draw up proposals for a possible way forward.

LEGAL/TECHNICAL ISSUES

2. In parallel with discussions at political level the Presidency, with the agreement of all delegations, set up a group of legal experts in order to undertake a legal review of the draft Treaty establishing the Constitution drawn up by the Convention. The legal experts group met in October and November under the Chair of the Legal Counsel of the IGC. The outcome of the group's proceedings has been circulated in document CIG 51/03.

3. The revised texts contained in doc. CIG 50/03 and ADD 1 incorporate all the improvements of a legal or technical nature which are suggested by common accord of the legal experts of the Member States and of the acceding States, without prejudging any amendments which delegations might wish to put forward at the political level. The Presidency considers that the texts resulting from the legal experts group should not be reopened and should serve as a reference point for ministers and Heads in their discussions on the political issues.

OTHER ISSUES

4. As a complement to this consolidated text, the Presidency submits to delegations the current document which is intended to help make progress on the political issues in order to pave the way for an overall agreement in December. This document is based on the work of the IGC to date. It contains a number of issues identified by the Presidency on the basis of clarifications, modifications and improvements requested by delegations or suggested by the Presidency. Addendum 1 contains proposals for texts.<sup>1</sup> On some issues on which it is not yet possible to draw conclusions, the Presidency describes the current situation and limits itself to setting out the outlines of a possible way forward.
5. The current document, which constitutes the basis for the discussions in Naples, is intended to evolve in the light of subsequent discussions. It could be revised to take account of the discussions up to the moment when there is a final and overall agreement. In the absence of an issue being raised in this document, the Presidency considers that the text of the draft Constitutional Treaty (as set out in CIG 50/03) remains the basis for future work. This is without prejudice to the right of delegations at any stage to ask to discuss any additional issue on which they maintain that there is a need for clarification or amendment.
6. This document is not binding on any delegation, nor does it prejudice any position taken by delegations to date. It is being circulated on the basis that none of the proposals contained in it can be considered final until agreement is reached on the draft Constitutional Treaty as a whole.

<sup>1</sup> In this Addendum, the basic text to which the amendments have been added is that circulated by the Convention on 18 July 2003 (CONV 850/03).

I. PREAMBLE / DEFINITION AND OBJECTIVES OF THE UNION

a) Christian inheritance

The Presidency has noted that this is an important issue for a number of delegations, but does not at this stage put forward suggestions for amending the Convention text. A proposal will be presented on this issue at a later stage referring not only to Europe's Christian inheritance, but also to the secular nature of the institutions of EU Member States (principe de laïcité).

b) Union's values

- Rights of minorities
- Equality between men and women

The Presidency proposes to respond to the request for a treaty reference to the rights of minorities and to equality between men and women by means of an amendment to the existing Article 2 on the values of the Union [see text in Annex 1 to Addendum 1].

c) Primacy of EU law

The Presidency proposes to address the issue of the primacy of EU law, as requested by several delegations, by means of a declaration [see text in Annex 2 to Addendum 1].

II. CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The Presidency proposes that, for reasons of transparency and legal certainty, the last preambular provision be amended to refer also to the updating of the official explanations on the Charter and that these explanations be incorporated into a declaration to the Final Act of the IGC which, together with the other declarations, will be published in the Official Journal [see text in Annex 3 to Addendum 1].

III. INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES

a) Definition of QMV

The Presidency has noted that a large number of delegations support the draft Convention text on this issue. The Presidency is nevertheless aware that for a few delegations, the Convention proposal is not acceptable as it now stands. Given these differing views and the overall objective of maintaining the institutional balance established by the Convention, the Presidency does not propose changes to the Convention's proposals on the definition of qualified majority. It is however of the opinion that it is necessary to continue to reflect on possible ways to respond to these concerns, bearing in mind the shared overall objective of having simple, efficient and transparent decision making procedures.

b) Composition of the Commission

In an enlarged Union, the Commission needs to function effectively. The Presidency considers that the Convention text provides a good basis for meeting this objective. Nevertheless the Presidency is also aware that a significant number of delegations would prefer, for reasons of legitimacy, that the Commission be composed of one national from each Member State. The Commission itself has expressed the same opinion in its communication to the InterGovernmental Conference.

The Presidency proposes, at this stage, to address delegations' concerns by clarifying the provisions of the Convention text on the precise role and responsibilities of the "non-voting" Commissioners. These clarifications could cover the following points:

- full participation by "non-voting" Commissioners in the work of the Commission, including in meetings of the College;
- the assignment to "non-voting" Commissioners by the President of the Commission of substantive dossiers with real responsibilities.

The Presidency does not exclude the possibility of a discussion on other aspects relating to the composition of the Commission during the meeting in Naples.

c) Council of Ministers – formations and Presidency

On the basis of the broad support for its earlier proposals on this issue, the Presidency maintains its approach and submits a draft text [see texts in Annexes 4 and 5 to Addendum 1]. The Presidency has taken note that a large majority of Member States are opposed to the creation of a legislative Council, but recalls that this could be done subsequently by means of a decision of the European Council.

d) Foreign Minister

The Presidency maintains its earlier proposals for clarifying the provisions on the Foreign Minister, and suggests additional adjustments in order to meet some concerns from some delegations on this issue while fully maintaining the concept of double hatting [see text in Annex 6 to Addendum 1].

e) European Council – Judicial control of its legal acts

The Presidency proposes, as agreed by a majority of delegations, that the legal acts which are intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties adopted by the European Council (which is formally becoming an institution) be subject to judicial control by the Court of Justice [see text in Annex 7 to Addendum 1].

f) European Parliament

The Presidency has noted that a large number of delegations support the draft Convention text on this issue, although some have proposed that the minimum threshold of four members per Member State should be raised.

IV. FINANCES / BUDGET / ECONOMIC AND MONETARY POLICY

The Presidency has taken into account the various views of delegations on the full range of issues covered under this heading. It submits proposals for clarification or modification on some of those points, taking into account the degree of support which they have received as well as the necessity of not calling into question the general balance achieved in the Convention, especially as far as institutional issues are concerned.

a) Financial Perspective

The Presidency has taken note of concerns expressed by some delegations over the procedures for adopting the Financial Perspective after 2013, and suggests that the Conference might discuss the idea of a "rendez-vous" clause as a possible way of meeting these concerns.

b) Budget

The Presidency has noted that a very significant number of delegations have strong objections to the provisions on the budget in the draft Constitutional Treaty as they stand now. However at this stage the Presidency considers it appropriate to maintain the provisions in the Convention text, given that the various alternative approaches put forward so far would have the effect of calling into question the overall institutional balance within the budget procedures.

c) Multilateral surveillance

The Presidency has noted that some delegations have proposed amendments to the Convention text, in particular on the procedures for establishing detailed rules for the multilateral surveillance procedure. However the Presidency proposes not to introduce changes to the text in order to maintain the balanced approach of the Convention.

d) European Central Bank

The Presidency proposes to:

- i) amend the procedures for conferring on the ECB specific tasks concerning policies relating to prudential supervision [see text in Annex 8 to Addendum 1];
- ii) enlarge the scope of provisions covered by the existing enabling clause for amending the ECSB/ECB statute [see text in Annex 9 to Addendum 1];
- iii) provide for the introduction of QMV for appointment of members of the ECB [see text in Annex 10 to Addendum 1].

e) Lamfalussy procedures

The Presidency proposes to address the concerns of some delegations on this issue by means of a declaration [see text in Annex 11 to Addendum 1].

f) EIB enabling clause

The Presidency proposes modifying the procedures for amending the statute of the EIB [see text in Annex 12 to Addendum 1].

g) EMU – decision-making process concerning the euro

The Presidency proposes two amendments to the provisions on decision-making concerning the euro [see text in Annex 13 to Addendum 1].

V. AREA OF FREEDOM, SECURITY AND JUSTICE

The Presidency has noted the concerns from a number of delegations on provisions under this chapter, and specifically on judicial cooperation in criminal law. It proposes to address these concerns (in particular those related to the existence of different legal systems) in the following ways:

- a) Criminal law
  - i) The Presidency proposes to address these particular concerns by means of amendments to the Convention text which, while not changing its substance nor the voting procedure, will inter alia give assurances to the delegations concerned that they can specifically raise their particular concerns through adequate procedures before an act is adopted [see text in Annex 14 to Addendum 1].
  - ii) The Presidency proposes to clarify that the scope of the remit of the public prosecutor concerns the fight against fraud affecting the Union's financial interests [see text in Annex 15 to Addendum 1].

- b) Civil law

The Presidency proposes to clarify some aspects of the provision on judicial cooperation in civil matters [see text in Annex 16 to Addendum 1].

VI. DEFENCE

As far as structured cooperation is concerned, taking account of the concerns expressed by a number of delegations, the Presidency submits proposals which, with a view to making such cooperation inclusive, align mutatis mutandis the structured cooperation provisions more closely with the more general provisions on enhanced cooperation in CFSP. As far as "mutual defence" is concerned, the text proposed clarifies that the clause shall not prejudice existing commitments under NATO [see text in Annex 17 to Addendum 1].

VII. CFSP

The Presidency proposes that, in order to achieve an overall balanced outcome on decision-making procedures, as well as to ensure an effective CFSP, qualified majority voting within the CFSP should be extended [see text in Annex 18 to Addendum 1].

VIII. OTHER POLICIES OF THE EU

The Presidency has taken note of the various proposals from delegations for amending or clarifying some of the provisions on policies in Part III of the draft Constitutional Treaty. In the light of reactions from all delegations, the Presidency submits proposals for changes to the Convention text or declarations on the following issues:

- a) social clause [see text in Annex 19 to Addendum 1];
- b) social security [see text in Annex 20 to Addendum 1];
- c) taxation [see text in Annex 21 to Addendum 1];
- d) social policy [see text in Annex 22 to Addendum 1];
- e) economic, social and territorial cohesion [see text in Annex 23 to Addendum 1];
- f) transport [see text in Annex 24 to Addendum 1];
- g) research and development [see text in Annex 25 to Addendum 1];
- h) energy [see text in Annex 26 to Addendum 1];
- i) public health [see text in Annex 27 to Addendum 1];
- j) sport [see text in Annex 28 to Addendum 1];
- k) tourism [see text in Annex 29 to Addendum 1];

IX. REVISION PROCEDURE

In the light of the discussions on simplified procedures for revising the Constitutional Treaty, the Presidency proposes to address the issue in two ways:

- a) as to the decision to move from unanimity to qualified majority, or from a special legislative procedure to the ordinary legislative procedure (general bridging clause), it is proposed that the text be amended to include a provision whereby that decision would not come into effect if [X] national parliaments raise an objection ("nihil obstat" procedure) [text in Annex 30 to Addendum 1];
- b) as to the decision to amend the Constitution provisions on internal policies (Title III of Part III (special revision procedure), the Presidency maintains its approach as proposed to ministers at the last IGC meeting: no increase of competencies conferred on the Union in the Constitution, decision of the European Council by qualified majority and approval by all Member States in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements. Such an approach would have the advantage of removing the requirement for an InterGovernmental Conference [text in Annex 31 to Addendum 1].

X. OTHER ISSUES

- a) Outermost regions

The Presidency proposes to include a possibility to adapt the list of outermost regions through a simpler procedure [text in Annex 32 to Addendum 1].

- b) Protocol on Denmark

In the light of the discussion in the ministerial meeting on 18 November, the Presidency proposes the amended protocol No 5 on the position of Denmark as presented in Annex 33 to Addendum 1.

- c) Services of general interest

The Presidency proposes to amend the Convention text so as to recall the competence of Member States to provide, commission and fund such services [text in Annex 34 to Addendum 1].

d) EU neighbouring small States

The Presidency has noted the request for the inclusion of a specific reference to the EU neighbouring small States, and proposes to address this by means of a declaration [text in Annex 35 to Addendum 1].

e) EU accession to the European Convention on Human Rights

In the light of discussions on this issue, the Presidency puts forward a minor amendment to the Convention text. It also suggests that this would be an appropriate issue on which qualified majority voting in the Council could apply [text in Annex 36 to Addendum 1].

f) Protection and welfare of animals

The Presidency proposes to convert the existing protocol on protection and welfare of animal into a provision to be put at the beginning of Part III of the draft Constitution [text in Annex 37 to Addendum 1].

g) Signature of Constitutional Treaty by acceding states

The three candidate countries (Bulgaria, Romania and Turkey) have requested that they be signatories to the text resulting from the InterGovernmental Conference. The Presidency proposes that these countries be invited to sign the Final Act as observers.

MISCELLANEOUS

In a final Annex, on items which were discussed but not solved in the Group of legal experts and were supported by a large majority of delegations, the Presidency proposes some adaptations to the Convention text either to make the text legally more correct or to address some of these items [see texts in Annex 38 to Addendum 1].

- a) On the delimitation between CFSP procedures and other policies' procedures, the Presidency proposes to amend the text of that rule in order to make it legally more sound.
- b) On access to documents of the European Investment Bank, the Presidency proposes to align the treatment of these documents with the treatment of the documents of the European Central Bank.
- c) On the right to vote in European Parliament elections and the fact that the Convention text deprives about 1 million people from the right to vote in such elections, the Presidency proposes to amend the text so as to correct this effect.
- d) On the role of national parliaments under the subsidiarity protocol and the protocol on national parliaments, the Presidency proposes to clarify the drafting to address the particularities of federal structures.
- e) On the fluctuation margins which must be observed in order to become member of the euro zone, the Presidency proposes to refer to the European Monetary System in the relevant provision.
- f) On the power of the Court of Justice to impose fines on Member States, the Presidency proposes amending the Convention text to clarify the power of the Court.
- g) On the legal basis to adopt European laws in common commercial policy, the Presidency proposes to clarify that urgent unilateral trade protection measures be adopted under a lighter procedure than the legislative one.

- h) On enhanced cooperation, the Presidency proposes to remove the bridging clause, and on the specific provisions concerning enhanced cooperation in CFSP, it suggests making it clearer that these follow normal CFSP procedures.
  - i) On the solidarity clause, the Presidency proposes amending the text to make it clear that any decision with defence implications will be taken by unanimity, and that the defence aspects of any such decision would be excluded from the competence of the Court of Justice.
  - j) In Article 5, the Presidency proposes to replace the term "internal" security with "national" security.
  - k) On the question as to who negotiates an agreement on the withdrawal of a Member State from the Union, the Presidency proposes amending the text to refer to the relevant aspects of the general provision on the negotiation of agreements in Part III.

– InterGovernmental Conference (12-13 December 2003): Presidency proposal

1. In line with the conclusions of the European Council meeting in Thessaloniki, the work of the InterGovernmental Conference has been conducted at political level. The meetings so far, in particular the ministerial conclave in Naples on 28-29 November, have enabled the Presidency to identify issues in the draft Constitutional Treaty which delegations consider need either clarifying or amending, and in some cases to make suggestions by way of response. The Presidency now submits a consolidated set of proposals designed to help the Conference reach an overall agreement at its meeting on 12-13 December.

LEGAL/TECHNICAL ISSUES

2. In parallel with discussions at political level the Presidency, with the agreement of all delegations, set up a group of legal experts in order to undertake a legal review of the draft Treaty establishing the Constitution drawn up by the Convention. The legal experts group met several times in October and November under the Chair of the Legal Counsel of the IGC. The outcome of the group's proceedings has been circulated in document CIG 51/03.

3. The revised texts contained in doc. CIG 50/03 + COR 1, REV 1 (fr) and ADD 1, ADD 1 COR 1 (en), and ADD 1 COR 2 incorporate all the improvements of a legal or technical nature which were introduced by common accord of the legal experts of the Member States and of the acceding States. These texts shall serve as a reference point for the discussions on the remaining political issues on 12-13 December.

OTHER ISSUES

4. Separately from the texts which constitute the outcome of the legal experts group, and in order to facilitate an overall agreement at the 12-13 December meeting, the Presidency submits proposals covering the outstanding political issues. These are set out in two separate documents.
  - A The first document (CIG 60/03 ADD 1) addresses those issues on which the discussions so far, in particular the Naples ministerial conclave, have given the Presidency sufficient guidance to be able to put forward concrete proposals. These proposals take the form of draft treaty texts. The Presidency considers that since it has taken into account the different views of delegations, this document constitutes a balanced package.
  - B The second document (CIG 60/03 ADD 2), which will be available shortly, addresses the more sensitive political issues which the Presidency intends should constitute the focus of the discussions on 12-13 December. The proposals set out in this document have been drawn up by the Presidency in the light of its consultations with delegations.

5. The proposals, tabled by the Presidency, might be revised in the light of the discussions on 12-13 December, and texts will be made available during the meeting up to the moment when there is a final and overall agreement. Where an issue is covered in neither document, nor subsequently raised by any delegation, the Presidency considers that the text of the draft Constitutional Treaty, as set out in CIG 50/03, remains unchanged.
6. The Presidency proposal is not binding on any delegation, nor does it prejudice any position taken by delegations to date. It is being circulated on the basis that none of the proposals contained in it can be considered final until agreement is reached on the draft Constitutional Treaty as a whole.
7. The final result of the IGC should therefore consist of two documents:
  - the consolidated text of the treaty, as revised by the legal experts group (CIG 50/03 + COR 1, REV 1 (fr) and ADD 1, ADD 1 COR 1 (en), and ADD 1 COR 2);
  - a single package containing amendments to this consolidated text, based on the Presidency proposals as modified in the light of the discussions.

Only afterwards will a single consolidated text be established.

ADDENDUM 2

Delegations will find attached Addendum 2 to the Presidency note contained in document CIG 60/03.

*        *

1. As stated in CIG 60/03, the Presidency submits to delegations the following ways forward on the more sensitive political issues which it intends should constitute the focus of discussions at the meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 12-13 December.

Preamble

2. The preamble, and in particular the question of whether or not to include a reference to Europe's Christian roots, was the subject of detailed discussion at the Naples ministerial meeting. While some delegations stressed the importance of a reference to Christian values in the preamble, others felt that the text proposed by the Convention made an even-handed response to the various concerns that had been raised. They therefore propose that it remain unchanged.

Composition of the Commission

3. It is generally acknowledged by all delegations that the Commission has both to satisfy the requirement for legitimacy and to function effectively.

4. A number of Member States, in particular the new ones, consider that, immediately following the most recent and extensive round of enlargement, the composition of the Commission should reflect the greater diversity of the enlarged European Union. This view, which reflects public opinion, leads these Member States to support the idea that there should be one national from each Member State in the Commission. Taking this into account, the Presidency considers that it is desirable that the composition of the Commission should respond adequately to the concerns of these delegations, while avoiding the risk that these arrangements might in the long run undermine another key requirement, for a Commission which functions effectively. The Presidency is therefore of the view that a clause could be envisaged which would provide for a reduced Commission with effect from a given date. Once there was agreement on this principle, the details of how it would operate would be decided in the light of the experience acquired by the enlarged Union as regards the functioning of the new Commission.

Qualified Majority Voting

5. The Presidency notes that a very large number of delegations continue to support the Convention text on the definition of Qualified Majority Voting, in particular because it meets the overall objective of decision-making procedures which are simple, efficient and transparent. Nevertheless the Presidency is aware that for a few delegations, the Convention proposal is not acceptable as it currently stands. The Presidency is continuing to reflect on how best to respond to the specific concerns expressed by some delegations, without losing the advantages of the Convention proposal and taking into account also the balance of the overall institutional framework.
6. On the issue of the scope of Qualified Majority Voting, a number of delegations support a further extension into other areas. At the same time, there are others who consider that, in a number of sensitive areas, unanimity should be maintained. Taking into account these different views, the Presidency is of the opinion that the Convention text in general represents a balanced compromise. However the overall issue of the scope of QMV will have to be seen in the context of the final agreement covering all the outstanding issues.

European Parliament

7. The Presidency has taken note of the concerns expressed by a number of delegations that the minimum threshold of four seats in the European Parliament creates problems of democratic legitimacy for the smallest Member States. The Presidency does not rule out the possibility of a limited increase in this threshold in order to meet these concerns, whilst maintaining the overall approach on the composition of the European Parliament.

Intergovernmental Conference

---

At its part-session on 3 and 4 December 2003 the European Parliament adopted the following in accordance with Article 37 of its Rules of Procedure:

- a Resolution on the Council and Commission statements on the preparation of the European Council in Brussels on 12 and 13 December 2003 <sup>1</sup>, and decided to forward the text thereof to the Council, and

- a Resolution on the progress report on the Intergovernmental Conference, and decided to forward the text thereof to the Italian Presidency and to the Intergovernmental Conference.

On behalf of the President of the European Parliament, I enclose the abovementioned Resolutions, and would be very grateful if you would forward the documents to those concerned.

The European Parliament,

- having regard to the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe of 18 July 2003, prepared by the European Convention,
  - having regard to its resolution of 24 September 2003 on the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe and the European Parliament's opinion on the convening of the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC)<sup>1</sup>,
  - having regard to its resolution of 20 November 2003 on the financial provisions in the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe<sup>2</sup>,
  - having regard to the Italian Presidency proposals (CIG 52/1/03),
  - having regard to Rule 37 of its Rules of Procedure,
- A. recalling that the Convention was composed of representatives of parliaments, European institutions and governments, which together achieved with difficulty compromises on many fine points of balance in the constitutional structure, and that substantial changes by the governments acting alone would be unacceptable,
- B. whereas the text of the draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe should remain the basis for the final and overall IGC agreement,
- C. whereas certain sectoral Council formations are bringing forward their own suggestions, thereby undermining the basis for stable negotiations,
1. Calls on the Heads of State and Government to continue their efforts and overcome their differences in order to arrive at a balanced and positive result on 13 December 2003;
  2. Expresses its concern at the calling into question by certain Member States of the Convention's proposals for institutional reform; recalls that any solution found to the reform of the three institutions must respect the balance between representation and efficiency;
  3. Recalls its support for the proposals in the draft Constitution regarding the definition of 'qualified majority'; perceives nonetheless a margin for compromise on the proposed figures provided that such a compromise respects the principle of the double majority and the lowering of the threshold fixed at Nice;
  4. Welcomes the Italian Presidency's proposal to extend qualified-majority voting within the CFSP in order to achieve a balanced overall outcome on decision-making procedures;

5. Welcomes the Presidency proposals, in particular with regard to introducing a horizontal clause on social policy (Article III-2a), recognising the competences of Member States in relation to services of general interest (Article III-6) and introducing in Article I-2 equality between women and men, which must, however, be recognised as a value and not merely as a principle;
6. Insists that there be no retreat from the Convention proposals for a measured extension of qualified-majority voting; stresses the importance of the Convention text on simplified procedures to move from unanimity to qualified-majority voting or from a special legislative procedure to the ordinary legislative procedure (general bridging clause);
7. Deplores the apparent decision to do away with the Legislative Council, which was intended to effect a clearer separation between the Council's law-making and executive functions, and to guarantee full transparency of the legislative process, and hopes that at least the option of introducing the Legislative Council at a later stage will be maintained;
8. Warns the IGC not to call into question the general balance achieved in the Convention on the financial and budgetary provisions; rejects any attempt to weaken Parliament's current budgetary rights as this would be a major attack on Parliament's core principles;
9. Reiterates its support for the proposals in the draft Constitution concerning the composition of the Commission; considers there to be a danger that appointing one Commissioner per Member State would impart an intergovernmental character to it;
10. Calls on the IGC to uphold the compromise reached in the Convention whereby the Union's Foreign Minister, as a full Vice-President of the Commission, presides over a joint administration comprising Commission, Council and national officials within the Commission and chairs the Foreign Affairs Council;
11. Believes that a proposal to limit the remit of the public prosecutor to the fight against fraud affecting the Union's financial interests must be accompanied by the application of the ordinary legislative procedure;
12. Insists on the importance of incorporating a light and flexible procedure to revise Part III of the Constitution;
13. Firmly backs the intention to convene a Euratom Treaty Revision Conference in order to repeal the obsolete and outdated provisions of the Treaty, notably concerning the lack of democratic decision-making procedures;
14. Instructs its President to forward this resolution to the Italian Presidency, the Council, the Commission, the parliaments of the Member States and the Intergovernmental Conference.

1. Delegations will find attached a working document for the meeting of Focal Points on Tuesday 4 May 2004. For ease of reference, it is based on document CIG 60/03 ADD1, with which delegations are familiar.
2. The Presidency wishes to stress that this is purely a working document. It is not intended to be seen in any way as a fresh overall Presidency proposal.
3. In particular, the Presidency does not believe that the time is ripe for discussion at this meeting of a number of issues connected with the scope of Qualified Majority Voting. Therefore, as will be seen from the document, no new proposals are made on these issues at this time. This is without prejudice to future proposals the Presidency may bring forward.
4. The Presidency recalls that the President of the European Council, in writing to his colleagues on 8 April, made clear that he assumed and expected that no concerns not already signalled will be raised.

ACCESSION OF THE UNION TO THE EUROPEAN CONVENTION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Article I-7

3) 1. [unchanged]

2. The Union shall accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Such accession shall not affect the Union's competencies as defined in the Constitution.

4) 3. [unchanged]

Article III-227, paragraph 8

8. The Council of Ministers shall act by a qualified majority throughout the procedure.

It shall act unanimously when the agreement covers a field for which unanimity is required for the adoption of a Union act as well as for association agreements and the agreements referred to in Article III-221 with the States which are candidates for accession.

Protocol relating to Article I-7, paragraph 2, on the accession of the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights

1. The agreement relating to the accession of the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights provided for in Article I-7, paragraph 2 of the Constitution shall take into account the following:

the specific characteristics of the Union and Union law, in particular with regard to:

- the specific arrangements for the Union's possible participation in the control bodies of the European Convention on Human Rights,
- the mechanisms necessary to ensure that proceedings by non-Member States and individual applications are correctly addressed to Member States and/or the Union as appropriate;

2. The agreement referred to in paragraph 1 shall ensure that nothing therein shall affect the situation of Member States in relation to the European Convention on Human Rights, in particular in relation to the Protocols to the Convention, measures taken by Member States derogating from the Convention in accordance with Article 15 thereof and reservations to the Convention made by Member States in accordance with Article 57 thereof.

3. Nothing in the agreement referred to in paragraph 1 shall affect Article III-281, paragraph 2 of the Constitution.

CONFERENCE OF THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE MEMBER STATES

Brussels, 13 May 2004

CIG 75/04

PRESID 17

---

from: Presidency

dated: 13 May 2004

to: Delegations

---

Subject: IGC 2003

– Discussion at Ministerial Meeting, 17/18 May 2004

---

1. The Presidency has circulated to delegations a series of draft texts on which there seems to be a likelihood of broad consensus in the context of overall agreement (CIG 76/04). The principle of nothing is agreed until everything is agreed applies. However, the Presidency does not believe that further discussion of these points at Ministerial level is necessary at this stage.
2. The Presidency would intend the Ministerial meeting on 17/18 May to focus on a number of other areas where it considers that further discussion would now be useful.
3. These include a small number of issues which were discussed by Focal Points at their meeting on 4 May on which further adjustments to the texts were considered necessary by some:
Formations of the Council of Ministers and Exercise of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers; Multiannual Financial Framework; Budget Procedure; Explanations relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights; European Court of Justice control over procedural stipulations relating to Excessive Deficit; and the Common Commercial Policy. Texts in these areas are set out in Part I of the present document.

4. Outstanding issues also include the scope of qualified majority voting. While the Presidency is not yet making new proposals, relevant texts in this area produced by the Italian Presidency are included in Part II of this document for ease of reference.
5. The Presidency notes that the issue of the future composition of the Commission can only be finally resolved as part of a balanced outcome on the major institutional questions. However, the Presidency also considers that it would be useful for Ministers to address the future composition of the Commission and, to this end, presents some ideas set out in Part III of this document.
6. To facilitate the most efficient and productive discussion, the Presidency would ask delegations to intervene only on those issues of particular concern to them or where there is a particular point they wish to raise.

o
o o

The Presidency is considering an approach which would be designed strongly to encourage and facilitate the achievement of agreement in the Conciliation Committee. It would be important in this context that both Council and Parliament be able as a general rule to endorse the outcome of the conciliation process. The Presidency sees that this could be more complex in the case of the Parliament and how it might be guaranteed could require further reflection. In the event of a failure to reach agreement in the Conciliation Committee, the Commission might be required to table a new draft budget. The situation which would apply if either or both institutions rejected or failed to adopt the Conciliation Committee's proposal would also need to be addressed. Should a new budget not be adopted in time, Article III-311 (provisional twelfths) would in any event apply.

Charter of Fundamental Rights (see Annex 4)

4. The texts as they stand appear to be broadly acceptable. However a small number of delegations wish to transfer the reference to the explanations concerning the Charter from the preamble to the body of the text. Those delegations also wish to clarify in the explanations that Article II-21 contains both rights and principles. The Presidency would welcome Ministers' views.

European Court of Justice control over procedural stipulations relating to Excessive Deficit (see Annex 5)

5. The Presidency notes that this issue will require further consideration. The text proposed by the Italian Presidency is included for ease of reference.

ANNEX 5*EXPLANATIONS RELATING TO THE

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. Following the meeting of "focal points" on 4 May 2004, delegations will find attached a series of draft texts on which there seems to be a likelihood of broad consensus in the context of an overall agreement.

While the Presidency continues to operate on the basis of the principle that nothing is agreed until everything is agreed, it does not believe that further discussion at Ministerial level is necessary at this stage.

1. Delegations will find attached a revised set of draft texts which were previously submitted to Ministers as document CIG 76/04. The Presidency has as far as possible taken into account the further comments made by Ministers at their meetings on 17-18 May and 24 May, and has added in this document some additional points on which there now appears to be broad consensus. These texts also include a series of purely technical/legal adjustments which appear in shaded characters. In addition, all modifications of texts compared to texts in doc. CIG 50/03 are in bold.
2. The Presidency considers that this document represents a fair balance between the different views of delegations. However, it submits the document in advance of the Ministerial meeting on 14 June in order to ensure that no fundamental problems remain, and to avoid further discussion on these issues at the meeting of the IGC at the level of Heads of State or Government on 17/18 June.
3. Delegations' attention is drawn to the fact that in certain cases, such as the Part III articles on the Commission, further adjustments might be required as a direct consequence of the outcome of the discussions on the remaining issues.

The Presidency does not submit at this stage any proposal on institutional issues, which will be discussed by Heads of State or Government on 17/18 June.
2. In putting forward its proposals, in particular in the field of scope of QMV, the Presidency has taken into account the different views expressed by delegations both in the IGC meetings themselves and during the many bilateral contacts which have taken place. The aim has been to introduce a fair overall balance between different delegations' views.
3. Delegations will note that in the case of the explanations relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, the Presidency submits options on which it would welcome Ministers' views.
4. The Presidency also wishes to draw the attention of delegations to a number of outstanding issues in the area of economic policy, and invites Ministers to offer their views, given that each of these points raise difficulties for some delegations.

- Eurozone provisions: One delegation has asked that the articles related to the eurozone should include a specific provision requiring the agreement of eurozone members (by QMV) before a decision is taken by the full Council on admitting new members to the eurozone (Annex 20 of doc. CIG 79/04).
  - Economic policy coordination: Article I-11.3 of the Convention text provides that the Union has competence to promote and co-ordinate the economic and employment policies of the Member States. Some delegations have sought to revert to language based on that in the current Treaty. A possible compromise formula is set out in Annex 10.
  - Declaration on the Stability and Growth Pact: The Presidency submits for the attention of delegations a draft declaration (see Annex 11). As a result the earlier text on ECJ jurisdiction over procedural stipulations relating to excessive deficit has been removed. In addition, some delegations have also advised the Presidency that they attach particular importance to amending Article III-76.6 (excessive deficit procedure) so that decisions on the existence of an excessive deficit are taken on the basis of a Commission recommendation (as currently provided for in the Treaty) rather than a proposal (as provided for in the Convention's text).
5. As regards the Preamble, the Presidency notes that, despite the strong support of several delegations for the inclusion of a specific reference to Europe's Christian or Judeo-Christian heritage, there is no sign of consensus on this matter. It has, however, proposed a limited number of drafting changes to the text, which it hopes can be agreed by Ministers.
6. As in doc. CIG 79/04, technical/legal adjustments appear in shaded characters.

ANNEX 13*EXPLANATIONS RELATING TO THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The Presidency invites the views of Ministers on the three options set out below. If agreement were reached on either option 2 or 3, the necessity to retain the preambular reference to the Explanations could be considered.

Option 1*5th paragraph of the Preamble

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared under the authority at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention.

Declaration for incorporation in the Final Act concerning the explanations relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights

The Conference takes note of the explanations relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights prepared under the authority at the instigation of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention, as set out below.

[reproduction of the explanations contained in CONV 828/1/03 REV 1 of 31 July 2003, which will be published in the "C" series of the Official Journal of the European Union.]

Option 2

As Option 1, plus

Article II-52: Scope and interpretation of rights and principles
(New paragraph 7)

7. The explanations drawn up as a way of providing guidance in the interpretation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights should be given due regard by the courts of the Union and of the Member States.

Option 3

As Option 1, plus

Article II-52: Scope and interpretation of rights and principles
(New paragraph 7)

7. This Charter shall be interpreted with due regard to the explanations prepared under the authority of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention.

Article I-2

The Union is founded on the values of respect for human dignity, liberty, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights, including the rights of persons belonging to minorities. These values are common to the Member States in a society in which pluralism, non-discrimination, tolerance, justice, solidarity and equality between women and men prevail.

Article III-2

In all the activities referred to in this Part, the Union shall aim to eliminate inequalities, and to promote equality, between men and women.

Declaration for incorporation in the Final Act
re Article III-2

The Conference agrees that, in its general efforts to eliminate inequalities between men and women, the Union will aim in its different policies to combat all kinds of domestic violence. The Member States should take all necessary measures to prevent and punish these criminal acts and to support and protect the victims.

on the accession of the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights

1. The agreement relating to the accession of the Union to the European Convention on Human Rights provided for in Article I-7(2) of the Constitution shall make provision for preserving the specific characteristics of the Union and Union law, in particular with regard to:
  - the specific arrangements for the Union's possible participation in the control bodies of the European Convention on Human Rights,
  - the mechanisms necessary to ensure that proceedings by non-Member States and individual applications are correctly addressed to Member States and/or the Union as appropriate;
2. The agreement referred to in paragraph 1 shall ensure that accession shall not affect the competences of the Union and the powers of its institutions. It shall ensure that nothing therein affects the situation of Member States in relation to the European Convention on Human Rights, in particular in relation to the Protocols to the Convention, measures taken by Member States derogating from the Convention in accordance with Article 15 thereof and reservations to the Convention made by Member States in accordance with Article 57 thereof.
3. Nothing in the agreement referred to in paragraph 1 shall affect Article III-281(2) of the Constitution.

Declaration for incorporation in the Final Act
re Article I-7 (2)

The Conference agrees that the Union's accession to the European Convention on Human Rights should be arranged in such a way as to preserve the specific features of Union law. In this connection, the Conference notes the existence of a regular dialogue between the Court of Justice of the European Union and the European Court of Human Rights; such dialogue could be reinforced when the European Union accedes to the European Convention on Human Rights.

Subject: IGC 2003

– Meeting of Heads of State or Government, Brussels, 17/18 June 2004

---

1. In paper CIG 81/04, delegations have received a set of texts which the Presidency believes will find consensus in the framework of the final overall agreement.
2. This paper contains suggested approaches on outstanding issues, both on the institutions and on other matters, for discussion by Heads of State or Government.

Institutions

3. The Presidency has always acknowledged that delegations will view arrangements on institutional questions in the round, and that any package on them must strike an overall balance. It believes that the approach it is now proposing achieves such a balance.

Voting in the Council

4. In its report to the European Council in March, the Presidency stated its belief that, to secure consensus, a solution on the question of voting must be based on the principle of double majority, must allow for greater efficiency, and must have due regard to balance among all Member States and to their specific concerns.

21. Specifically in regard to the role of the Commission in the excessive deficit procedure (Annex 5), some delegations have suggested that both references to Commission "proposals" in Article III-76(6) be changed to "recommendations". However, with a view to seeking a compromise, the Presidency has suggested only one such change, which it notes is in line with what ECOFIN Ministers broadly agreed during the Italian Presidency.
22. The Presidency also attaches a proposal in Annex 6 on the multiannual financial framework, under which unanimity would be maintained pending the application of a simple passerelle to qualified majority voting, and believes that this should be agreed in an overall package.
23. Finally, in a context where there is consensus on the content of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, on its legal status as part of the Constitution, and on the need for the Courts when interpreting the Charter to give due regard to the Explanations, the Presidency believes that its compromise proposal on the placement of a reference to the Explanations, set out in Annex 7, should be acceptable to all.

IV.2. Selected travaux préparatoires from the Treaty of Lisbon and beyond

IV.2.a. Council and IGC Documents, 2005-2007

Brussels, 18 June 2005

SN 117/05

DECLARATION BY THE HEADS OF STATE OR GOVERNMENT OF THE MEMBER STATES OF THE EUROPEAN UNION
ON THE RATIFICATION OF THE TREATY
ESTABLISHING A CONSTITUTION FOR EUROPE
(European Council, 16 and 17 June 2005)

We have held a wide-ranging review of the process of ratification of the Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe. This Treaty is the fruit of a collective process, designed to provide the appropriate response to ensure that an enlarged European Union functions more democratically, more transparently and more effectively.

Our European ambition, which has served us so well for over 50 years and which has allowed Europe to unite around the same vision, remains more relevant than ever. It has enabled us to ensure the well-being of citizens, the defence of our values and our interests, and to assume our responsibilities as a leading international player. In order to fight unemployment and social exclusion more effectively, to promote sustainable economic growth, to respond to the challenges of globalisation, to safeguard internal and external security, and to protect the environment, we need Europe, a more united Europe presenting greater solidarity.

To date, 10 Member States have successfully concluded ratification procedures, thereby expressing their commitment to the Constitutional Treaty. We have noted the outcome of the referendums in France and the Netherlands. We consider that these results do not call into question citizens' attachment to the construction of Europe. Citizens have nevertheless expressed concerns and worries which need to be taken into account. Hence the need for us to reflect together on this situation.

This period of reflection will be used to enable a broad debate to take place in each of our countries, involving citizens, civil society, social partners, national parliaments and political parties. This debate, designed to generate interest, which is already under way in many Member States, must be intensified and broadened. The European institutions will also have to make their contribution, with the Commission playing a special role in this regard.

The recent developments do not call into question the validity of continuing with the ratification processes. We are agreed that the timetable for the ratification in different Member States will be altered if necessary in response to these developments and according to the circumstances in these Member States.

We have agreed to come back to this matter in the first half of 2006 to make an overall assessment of the national debates and agree on how to proceed.

Presidency Conclusions – 15/16 June 2006

---

1. The meeting was preceded by an exposé by Mr Josep Borrell, President of the European Parliament, followed by an exchange of views.

I. EUROPE LISTENS

2. In June 2005 the Heads of State or Government called for a period of reflection during which a broad debate should take place in all Member States, involving citizens, civil society, social partners, national parliaments and political parties, with the contribution of European institutions. The European Council welcomes the various initiatives taken in the Member States in the framework of national debates, as well as a series of events organised by the Austrian Presidency, in particular the Conference "The Sound of Europe" in Salzburg on 27/28 January 2006. The European Council expresses its gratitude to the Commission for having contributed to the reflection period in the context of its Plan D and to the European Parliament for having organised together with the Austrian Parliament the joint parliamentary meeting on the "Future of Europe" on 8/9 May 2006. The European Council welcomes the intention of institutions and Member States to carry on their activities aimed at involving citizens in the debate about what Europe should stand for in the 21st century. It also welcomes the Commission's contribution "A Citizen's Agenda for Europe".
3. The European Council carried out a first assessment of the reflection period. This took place on the basis of the written report prepared by the Presidency and Council Secretariat drawing on information provided by Member States on their national debates (9701/1/06 REV 1), the "Plan D" initiative and the White Paper on a European Communication Policy. While worries and concerns have been voiced during all public debates, citizens remain committed to the European project. Reinforced dialogue with the citizens requires adequate means and commitment. Citizens expect the Union to prove its added value by taking action in response to the challenges and opportunities facing it: ensuring peace, prosperity and solidarity, enhancing security, furthering sustainable development and promoting European values in a rapidly globalising world.

---

4. The Union's commitment to becoming more democratic, transparent and effective goes beyond the reflection period. The European Council reaffirms its commitment to a Union that delivers the concrete results citizens expect, in order to strengthen confidence and trust, as set out in Part II.

II. EUROPE AT WORK

(a) Promoting freedom, security and justice

5. Progress on measures agreed in the Hague Programme aimed at addressing problems such as illegal immigration, trafficking of human beings, terrorism and organised crime while guaranteeing respect for fundamental freedoms and rights will be assessed in December 2006.
6. In the meantime further efforts are required, particularly as concerns:
- following the progress made on the Schengen Information System (SIS II) and implementation of the Schengen acquis in the new Member States, rapid finalisation of the legislative measures on border control and police cooperation and completion of the technical preparations at EU and national levels, making operational the Schengen Information System by April 2007 and the Visa Information System in 2007, thus paving the way for the enlargement of the Schengen area in 2007 provided all requirements to apply the Schengen acquis have been fulfilled, in accordance with the Hague Programme;
  - taking work forward rapidly on the Commission's proposal concerning the establishment of Common Application Centres and the collection of biometrics for the purpose of visas and initiation of a pilot project, as well as taking work forward on a Community code on visas;
  - taking work forward on visa facilitation and readmission agreements based on the process and considerations laid down in the common approach on facilitation starting with the countries with a European Perspective as referred to in the European Council conclusions of June 2003 and June 2005;

III. LOOKING TO THE FUTURE(a) Pursuing reform: the Constitutional Treaty*

42. At the meeting of the European Council on 16/17 June 2005, Heads of State or Government agreed to come back to the issue of the ratification of the Constitutional Treaty in the first half of 2006 in order to make an overall assessment of the national debates launched as part of the period of reflection and to agree on how to proceed.
43. Since last June a further five Member States have ratified the Constitutional Treaty, bringing the total number of ratifications to fifteen. Two Member States have been unable to ratify, and eight have still to complete the ratification process, one of which has recently launched the procedure to that effect. It is hoped that this process will be completed in line with the conclusions of June 2005.
44. Recalling its conclusions of June 2005, the European Council welcomes the various initiatives taken within the framework of the national debates as well as the contributions of the Commission and Parliament to the reflection period. The significant efforts made to increase and expand the dialogue with Europe's citizens, including the Commission's plan D initiative, should be continued.
45. The reflection period has overall been useful in enabling the Union to assess the concerns and worries expressed in the course of the ratification process. It considers that, in parallel with the ongoing ratification process, further work, building on what has been achieved since last June, is needed before decisions on the future of the Constitutional Treaty can be taken.
46. After last year's period of reflection work should now focus on delivery of concrete results and implementation of projects. The European Council agrees a two-track approach. On the one hand, best use should be made of the possibilities offered by the existing treaties in order to deliver the concrete results that citizens expect.

47. On the other hand, the Presidency will present a report to the European Council during the first semester of 2007, based on extensive consultations with the Member States. This report should contain an assessment of the state of discussion with regard to the Constitutional Treaty and explore possible future developments.
48. The report will subsequently be examined by the European Council. The outcome of this examination will serve as the basis for further decisions on how to continue the reform process, it being understood that the necessary steps to that effect will have been taken during the second semester of 2008 at the latest. Each Presidency in office since the start of the reflection period has a particular responsibility to ensure the continuity of this process.
49. The European Council calls for the adoption, on 25 March 2007 in Berlin, of a political declaration by EU leaders, setting out Europe's values and ambitions and confirming their shared commitment to deliver them, commemorating 50 years of the Treaties of Rome.

(b) Enlargement

50. The European Council takes note of the initial discussions on enlargement held at the informal Foreign Ministers meeting in Salzburg on 11 March and in Klosterneuburg on 27/28 May 2006. It agreed to continue and deepen this general discussion during the second half of 2006.
51. Enlargement has proved a historic opportunity contributing to ensure peace, security, stability, democracy, the rule of law as well as growth and prosperity in the European Union as a whole. Enlargement is equally helping the EU to become a more competitive and dynamic economy and be better prepared to meet the challenges of a globalised and changing world. The European Council welcomes in this context the Commission's report on the economic success of the Union's historic fifth enlargement, of which the accession of Bulgaria and Romania is an integral part.

DECLARATION

on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the signature of the Treaties of Rome

FOR CENTURIES EUROPE has been an idea, holding out hope of peace and understanding. That hope has been fulfilled. European unification has made peace and prosperity possible. It has brought about a sense of community and overcome differences. Each Member State has helped to unite Europe and to strengthen democracy and the rule of law. Thanks to the yearning for freedom of the peoples of central and eastern Europe the unnatural division of Europe is now consigned to the past. European integration shows that we have learnt the painful lessons of a history marked by bloody conflict. Today we live together as was never possible before.

WE, THE CITIZENS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION, HAVE UNITED FOR THE BETTER.

I.

IN THE EUROPEAN UNION, we are turning our common ideals into reality: for us, the individual is paramount. His dignity is inviolable. His rights are inalienable. Women and men enjoy equal rights.

WE ARE STRIVING for peace and freedom, for democracy and the rule of law, for mutual respect and shared responsibility, for prosperity and security, for tolerance and participation, for justice and solidarity.

WE HAVE A UNIQUE way of living and working together in the European Union. This is expressed through the democratic interaction of the Member States and the European institutions. The European Union is founded on equal rights and mutually supportive cooperation. This enables us to strike a fair balance between Member States' interests.

WE PRESERVE in the European Union the identities and diverse traditions of its Member States. We are enriched by open borders and a lively variety of languages, cultures and regions. There are many goals which we cannot achieve on our own, but only in concert. Tasks are shared between the European Union, the Member States and their regions and local authorities.

II.

WE ARE FACING major challenges which do not stop at national borders. The European Union is our response to these challenges. Only together can we continue to preserve our ideal of European society in future for the good of all European Union citizens. This European model combines economic success and social responsibility. The common market and the euro make us strong. We can thus shape the increasing interdependence of the global economy and ever-growing competition on international markets according to our values. Europe's wealth lies in the knowledge and ability of its people; that is the key to growth, employment and social cohesion.

III.

WE WILL FIGHT terrorism, organised crime and illegal immigration together. We stand up for liberties and civil rights also in the struggle against those who oppose them. Racism and xenophobia must never again be given any rein.

WE ARE COMMITTED to the peaceful resolution of conflicts in the world and to ensuring that people do not become victims of war, terrorism and violence. The European Union wants to promote freedom and development in the world. We want to drive back poverty, hunger and disease. We want to continue to take a leading role in that fight.

WE INTEND JOINTLY to lead the way in energy policy and climate protection and make our contribution to averting the global threat of climate change.

THE EUROPEAN UNION will continue to thrive both on openness and on the will of its Member States to consolidate the Union's internal development. The European Union will continue to promote democracy, stability and prosperity beyond its borders.

WITH EUROPEAN UNIFICATION a dream of earlier generations has become a reality. Our history reminds us that we must protect this for the good of future generations. For that reason we must always renew the political shape of Europe in keeping with the times. That is why today, 50 years after the signing of the Treaties of Rome, we are united in our aim of placing the European Union on a renewed common basis before the European Parliament elections in 2009.

Subject :        Pursuing the treaty reform process

Delegations will find attached a report from the Presidency on pursuing the treaty reform process, as requested by the European Council at its meeting in June 2006.

REPORT FROM THE PRESIDENCY TO THE EUROPEAN COUNCIL*PURSUING THE TREATY REFORM PROCESS*Introduction

This report from the German Presidency is a response to the mandate which it was given by the European Council at its meeting in June 2006. As requested at the time, the Presidency, in the light of very extensive consultations held over the last six months, provides an assessment of the state of discussion with regard to the treaty reform process and explores possible ways forward.

After two years of uncertainty following the problems encountered in the process of ratification of the Constitutional Treaty, it is clear that there is now a general desire to settle this issue and move on. All Member States recognise that further uncertainty about the treaty reform process would jeopardise the Union's ability to deliver.

Settling this issue quickly is therefore a priority. This was agreed when Heads of State or Government, together with the President of the European Parliament and the President of the Commission, met in Berlin on 25 March to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the signature of the Treaties of Rome. All were united in the aim of placing the European Union on a renewed common basis before the European Parliament elections in 2009.

The way forward clearly needs to take into account the concerns expressed by citizens during the ratification process on the future direction of the European Union and the effects of globalisation on its core values and policies. At the same time, there is a very strong demand for the Union to increase its efficiency, to enhance its democratic functioning and to improve the coherence of its external action.

Overall Assessment

In line with the mandate given to it in June 2006, the Presidency has conducted extensive bilateral consultations with the Member States as well as the European Parliament and the European Commission, both at the level of designated "focal points", and between the President of the European Council and her opposite numbers. In addition to these bilateral contacts, the Presidency organised a meeting of "focal points" in Berlin on 15 May, and a further meeting is due to take place on 19 June. Foreign Ministers have also had the opportunity to take stock of developments at meetings of the General Affairs and External Relations Council.

These consultations have proved very useful in giving the Presidency a clear idea of the various concerns of individual Member States.

The issues raised during the consultations can be grouped around a number of themes:

A different approach on structure

A certain number of Member States underlined the importance of avoiding the impression which might be given by the symbolism and the title "Constitution" that the nature of the Union is undergoing radical change. For them this also implies a return to the traditional method of treaty change through an amending treaty, as well a number of changes of terminology, not least the dropping of the title "Constitution".

Such an approach is not incompatible with the demand from those Member States which have already ratified that as much of the substance of the Constitutional Treaty as possible should be preserved. They are ready to consider the alternative method of treaty change if it helps to reach a result acceptable to everyone and thus to overcome the present stalemate. They have made it very clear however that this would represent a major concession. They insist on the need to preserve the substance of the innovations agreed upon in the 2004 IGC and to ensure as far as possible the readability and simplicity of the new Treaty.

Reinforcing the capacity of the Union to act, whilst preserving the identity of Member States

It is generally recognised that a strengthening of the institutions will help reinforce the capacity of the Union to act, and that the Union therefore has every interest in ensuring that the current Treaties are adapted in order to introduce the set of institutional reforms agreed in the 2004 IGC.

At the same time, there is concern to underline the respect for the identity of the Member States and to introduce greater clarity over the delimitation and definition of the competences of the Union and of the Member States. Furthermore, there is a clear demand from some delegations to further enhance the role of national parliaments.

Some delegations have requested that the text of the Charter of Fundamental Rights be removed from the Treaty. Others strongly oppose this move. Most of the latter could however accept it, provided that the legally binding character of the Charter is preserved by means of a cross-reference in the body of the Treaty.

Addressing other concerns

A few delegations have suggested that in several cases the text of the Treaties should be amended in order to reflect more recent developments. Many delegations would be ready to examine such amendments if considered helpful by others and provided that no new competences are conferred upon the Union. Specific suggestions include the need to address energy security and climate change. It has also been proposed that greater prominence be given to the "Copenhagen criteria" on enlargement.

The Way Forward

On the basis of its assessment of the positions of different delegations, the Presidency recommends that the June European Council agree to the rapid convening of an IGC. It suggests that the European Council give a precise and comprehensive mandate (on structure and content) to the IGC, thus allowing it to finalise its work on a new Treaty before the end of this year.

The Presidency proposes a return to the classical method of treaty change. The IGC would therefore be asked to adopt a Reform Treaty amending the existing Treaties rather than repealing them. The Treaty on the European Union as modified would keep its present name, while the Treaty establishing the European Community would become the "Treaty on the functioning of the Union", containing all the detailed implementing provisions, including the legal bases. Both Treaties would have the same legal value. The Union would have a single legal personality.

The mandate for the IGC should set out how the measures agreed upon in the 2004 IGC with a view to a more capable and democratic Union should be inserted into the Treaty on the European Union and the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union. The consultations of the past 6 months show that a number of changes will be needed to reach an overall agreement. To that end there should be further discussions with regard to the following issues:

- The question of the symbols and of the primacy of EU law
- Possible terminological changes
- The treatment of the Charter in Fundamental Rights
- The specificity of the CFSP
- The delimitation of competences between the EU and the Member States
- The role of national parliaments

Conclusion

The Presidency submits this report to delegations as a basis for reaching agreement on the way forward at the European Council on 21-22 June 2007.

Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 21/22 June 2007

---

The meeting of the European Council was preceded by an exposé by the President of the European Parliament, Mr Hans-Gert Pöttering, followed by an exchange of views.

o
o o

1. Europe is united in its resolve that only by working together can we represent our interests and goals in the world of tomorrow. The European Union is determined to contribute its ideas of a sustainable, efficient and just economic and social order to the global process.
2. The European Union faces a twofold responsibility. In order to secure our future as an active player in a rapidly changing world and in the face of ever-growing challenges, we have to maintain and develop the European Union's capacity to act and its accountability to the citizen. That is why we have to focus our efforts on the necessary internal reform process. At the same time, the European Union is called upon to shape European policy here and now for the benefit of Europe's citizens.
3. The most recent positive results include the Roaming Regulation which reduces the cost of modern communication in Europe, the creation of the European payment area which makes travelling and living together easier in the EU and the constant improvement of consumer rights which guarantee citizens the same high standards across the entire European Union.
4. With its decisions on an integrated climate and energy policy the European Council in Spring 2007 underlined the synergies between these two key areas and paved the way for improved climate protection and dealing responsibly with energy.
5. Closer crossborder police and judicial cooperation means more security for everyone. At the same time the EU is working to protect and strengthen civil liberties at European level.
6. Contributing to the day-to-day life of its citizens and securing the European Union's ability to act in the future: with this twofold goal in mind, the European Council today adopted the following conclusions.

---

7. The European Council emphasises the crucial importance of reinforcing communication with the European citizens, providing full and comprehensive information on the European Union and involving them in a permanent dialogue. This will be particularly important during the upcoming IGC and ratification process.

I. TREATY REFORM PROCESS

8. The European Council agrees that, after two years of uncertainty over the Union's treaty reform process, the time has come to resolve the issue and for the Union to move on. The period of reflection has provided the opportunity in the meantime for wide public debate and helped prepare the ground for a solution.
9. Against this background, the European Council welcomes the report drawn up by the Presidency (10659/07) following the mandate given to it in June 2006, and agrees that settling this issue quickly is a priority.
10. To this end the European Council agrees to convene an Intergovernmental Conference and invites the Presidency without delay to take the necessary steps in accordance with Article 48 of the TUE, with the objective of opening the IGC before the end of July as soon as the legal requirements have been met.
11. The IGC will carry out its work in accordance with the mandate set out in Annex I to these conclusions. The European Council invites the incoming Presidency to draw up a draft Treaty text in line with the terms of the mandate and to submit this to the IGC as soon as it opens. The IGC will complete its work as quickly as possible, and in any case before the end of 2007, so as to allow for sufficient time to ratify the resulting Treaty before the European Parliament elections in June 2009.

12. The IGC will be conducted under the overall responsibility of the Heads of State or Government, assisted by the members of the General Affairs and External Relations Council. The Representative of the Commission will participate in the Conference. The European Parliament will be closely associated with and involved in the work of the Conference with 3 representatives. The General Secretariat of the Council will provide the secretariat support for the Conference.
13. Having consulted the President of the European Parliament, the European Council invites the European Parliament, in order to pave the way for settling the issue of the future composition of the European Parliament in good time before the 2009 elections, to put forward by October 2007 a draft of the initiative foreseen in Protocol 34 as agreed in the 2004 IGC.
14. The incoming presidency is invited to ensure that the candidate countries are kept fully and regularly briefed throughout the Intergovernmental Conference.

II. JUSTICE AND HOME AFFAIRS

15. On the basis of the Tampere and Hague Programmes significant progress has been made in developing the Union as an area of freedom, security and justice. The European Council stresses the need to continue the implementation of those programmes and to work on the succession to them in order to further strengthen Europe's internal security as well as the fundamental freedoms and rights of citizens.

IGC MANDATE

The present mandate will provide the exclusive basis and framework for the work of the IGC that will be convened according to paragraph 10 of the European Council conclusions.

I. GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

1. The IGC is asked to draw up a Treaty (hereinafter called the "Reform Treaty") amending the existing Treaties with a view to enhancing the efficiency and democratic legitimacy of the enlarged Union, as well as the coherence of its external action. The constitutional concept, which consisted in repealing all existing Treaties and replacing them by a single text called "Constitution", is abandoned. The Reform Treaty will introduce into the existing Treaties, which remain in force, the innovations resulting from the 2004 IGC, as set out below in a detailed fashion.

2. The Reform Treaty will contain two substantive clauses amending respectively the Treaty on the European Union (TEU) and the Treaty establishing the European Community (TEC). The TEU will keep its present name and the TEC will be called Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, the Union having a single legal personality. The word "Community" will throughout be replaced by the word "Union"; it will be stated that the two Treaties constitute the Treaties on which the Union is founded and that the Union replaces and succeeds the Community. Further clauses will contain the usual provisions on ratification and entry into force as well as transitional arrangements. Technical amendments to the Euratom Treaty and to the existing Protocols, as agreed in the 2004 IGC, will be done via Protocols annexed to the Reform Treaty.

3. The TEU and the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union will not have a constitutional character. The terminology used throughout the Treaties will reflect this change: the term "Constitution" will not be used, the "Union Minister for Foreign Affairs" will be called High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy and the denominations "law" and "framework law" will be abandoned, the existing denominations "regulations", "directives" and "decisions" being retained. Likewise, there will be no article in the amended Treaties mentioning the symbols of the EU such as the flag, the anthem or the motto. Concerning the primacy of EU law, the IGC will adopt a Declaration recalling the existing case law of the EU Court of Justice<sup>1</sup>.

4. As far as the content of the amendments to the existing Treaties is concerned, the innovations resulting from the 2004 IGC will be integrated into the TEU and the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, as specified in this mandate. Modifications to these innovations introduced as a result of the consultations held with the Member States over the past six months are clearly indicated below. They concern in particular the respective competences of the EU and the Member States and their delimitation, the specific nature of the Common Foreign and Security Policy, the enhanced role of national parliaments, the treatment of the Charter of Fundamental Rights and a mechanism, in the area of police and judicial cooperation in criminal matters, enabling Member States to go forward on a given act while allowing others not to participate.

II. AMENDMENTS TO THE EU TREATY

5. Clause 1 of the Reform Treaty will contain the amendments to the present TEU.

In the absence of indications to the contrary in this mandate, the text of the existing Treaty remains unchanged.

6. The text of the first recital as agreed in the 2004 IGC will be inserted as a second recital into the Preamble.

7. The TEU will be divided into 6 Titles: Common Provisions (I), Provisions on democratic principles (II), Provisions on institutions (III), Provisions on enhanced cooperation (IV), General Provisions on the Union's External Action and specific Provisions on the Common Foreign and Security Policy (V), and Final Provisions (VI). Titles I, IV (present VII), V and VI (present VIII) follow the structure of the existing TEU, with amendments as agreed in the 2004 IGC.<sup>2</sup> The two other titles (II and III) are new and introduce innovations agreed in the 2004 IGC.

Common Provisions (I)

8. Title I of the existing TEU, containing inter alia Articles on the Union's values and objectives, on relations between the Union and the Member States, and on the suspension of rights of Member States, will be amended in line with the innovations agreed in the 2004 IGC (see Annex 1, Title I).

<sup>1</sup> Whilst the Article on primacy of Union law will not be reproduced in the TEU, the IGC will agree on the following Declaration: "The Conference recalls that, in accordance with well settled case-law of the EU Court of Justice, the Treaties and the law adopted by the Union on the basis of the Treaties have primacy over the law of Member States, under the conditions laid down by the said case-law." In addition, the opinion of the Legal Service of the Council (doc. 11197/07) will be annexed to the Final Act of the Conference.

---

9. The Article on fundamental rights will contain a cross reference<sup>3</sup> to the Charter of fundamental rights, as agreed in the 2004 IGC, giving it legally binding value and setting out the scope of its application.

10. In the Article on fundamental principles concerning competences it will be specified that the Union shall act only within the limits of competences conferred upon it by the Member States in the Treaties.

Provisions on democratic principles (II)

11. This new Title II will contain the provisions agreed in the 2004 IGC on democratic equality, representative democracy, participatory democracy and the citizens' initiative. Concerning national parliaments, their role will be further enhanced compared to the provisions agreed in the 2004 IGC (see Annex 1, Title II):

- The period given to national parliaments to examine draft legislative texts and to give a reasoned opinion on subsidiarity will be extended from 6 to 8 weeks (the Protocols on national Parliaments and on subsidiarity and proportionality will be modified accordingly).
- There will be a reinforced control mechanism of subsidiarity in the sense that if a draft legislative act is contested by a simple majority of the votes allocated to national parliaments, the Commission will re-examine the draft act, which it may decide to maintain, amend or withdraw. If it chooses to maintain the draft, the Commission will have, in a reasoned opinion, to justify why it considers that the draft complies with the principle of subsidiarity. This reasoned opinion, as well as the reasoned opinions of the national parliaments, will have to be transmitted to the EU legislator, for consideration in the legislative procedure. This will trigger a specific procedure:
  - before concluding the first reading under the ordinary legislative procedure, the legislator (Council and Parliament) shall consider the compatibility of the legislative proposal with the principle of subsidiarity, taking particular account of the reasons expressed and shared by the majority of national parliaments as well as the reasoned opinion of the Commission;
  - If, by a majority of 55 % of the members of the Council or a majority of the votes cast in the European Parliament, the legislator is of the opinion that the proposal is not compatible with the principle of subsidiarity, the legislative proposal shall not be given further consideration (the Protocol on subsidiarity and proportionality will be modified accordingly).

A new general Article will reflect the role of the national parliaments.

<sup>3</sup> Therefore, the text of the Charter of fundamental rights will not be included in the Treaties.

*Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 21/22 June 2007Amendments to the EU Treaty*Annex 1Title I - Common provisions

The purpose of this Annex is to clarify the exact drafting where necessary

1) *Insertion in the Preamble of the EU Treaty of the following second whereas clause<sup>*15</sup>:*

"DRAWING INSPIRATION from the cultural, religious and humanist inheritance of Europe, from which have developed the universal values of the inviolable and inalienable rights of the human person, freedom, democracy, equality and the rule of law,"

2) In Article 1, insertion of the following sentences:

At the end of the first subparagraph: "... on which the Member States confer competences to attain objectives they have in common."

To replace the last subparagraph: "The Union shall be founded on the present Treaty and on the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union. It shall replace and succeed the European Community."

2bis *Insertion of an Article 2 on the values of the Union.**

3) Replacement of Article 2 on the Union's objectives, renumbered 3, with the following text:<sup>16</sup>

1. The Union's aim is to promote peace, its values and the well-being of its peoples.

2. The Union shall offer its citizens an area of freedom, security and justice without internal frontiers, in which the free movement of persons is ensured in conjunction with appropriate measures with respect to external border controls, asylum, immigration and the prevention and combating of crime.

3. The Union shall establish an internal market. It shall work for the sustainable development of Europe based on balanced economic growth and price stability, a highly competitive social market economy, aiming at full employment and social progress, and a high level of protection and improvement of the quality of the environment. It shall promote scientific and technological advance.

It shall combat social exclusion and discrimination, and shall promote social justice and protection, equality between women and men, solidarity between generations and protection of the rights of the child.

It shall promote economic, social and territorial cohesion, and solidarity among Member States.

It shall respect its rich cultural and linguistic diversity, and shall ensure that Europe's cultural heritage is safeguarded and enhanced.

3 a. The Union shall establish an economic and monetary union whose currency is the euro.

4. In its relations with the wider world, the Union shall uphold and promote its values and interests and contribute to the protection of its citizens. It shall contribute to peace, security, the sustainable development of the Earth, solidarity and mutual respect among peoples, free and fair trade, eradication of poverty and the protection of human rights, in particular the rights of the child, as well as to the strict observance and the development of international law, including respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter.

5. The Union shall pursue its objectives by appropriate means commensurate with the competences which are conferred upon it in the Treaties."

<sup>15</sup> Throughout this Annex, this sign (*) indicates that the innovations to be inserted are the same as those agreed by the 2004 IGC.

<sup>16</sup> The following Protocol will be annexed to the Treaties:

"Protocol on internal market and competition

The High Contracting Parties, considering that the internal market as set out in Article 3 of the Treaty on European Union includes a system ensuring that competition is not distorted

Have agreed that,

to this end, the Union shall, if necessary, take action under the provisions of the Treaties, including under Article 308 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union."

Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 21/22 June 2007

- 4) *Replacement of Article 3 by an Article 4 on the relations between the Union and the Member States**, with the addition of the following at the beginning, and of a sentence at the end of the present paragraph 1, renumbered 2:

"1. In accordance with Article [I-11], competences not conferred upon the Union in the Treaties remain with the Member States.

2. The Union shall respect the equality of Member States before the Treaties as well as their national identities, inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, inclusive of regional and local self-government. It shall respect their essential State functions, including ensuring the territorial integrity of the State, maintaining law and order and safeguarding national security. In particular, national security remains the sole responsibility of each Member State.

(present paragraph 2 renumbered 3)".

- 5) Replacement of Article 6 on fundamental rights with a text reading as follows:<sup>17-18-19-20</sup>

"1. The Union recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of 7 December 2000, as adapted on [... 2007<sup>21</sup>], which shall have the same legal value as the Treaties.

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights, which has legally binding force, confirms the fundamental rights guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States.

2. The Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks as defined by the Treaties."

"The Charter does not affect in any way the right of Member States to legislate in the sphere of public morality, family law, as well as the protection of human dignity and respect for human physical and moral integrity."

<sup>19</sup> The following Protocol will be annexed to the Treaties:

"The High Contracting Parties

Whereas in Article [xx] of the Treaty on European Union, the Union recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights;

Whereas the Charter is to be applied in strict accordance with the provisions of the aforementioned Article [xx] and Title VII of the Charter itself;

Whereas the aforementioned Article [xx] requires the Charter to be applied and interpreted by the courts of the United Kingdom strictly in accordance with the Explanations referred to in that Article;

Whereas the Charter contains both rights and principles;

Whereas the Charter contains both provisions which are civil and political in character and those which are economic and social in character;

Whereas the Charter reaffirms the rights, freedoms and principles recognised in the Union and makes those rights more visible, but does not create new rights or principles;

Recalling the United Kingdom's obligations under the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and Union law generally;

Noting the wish of the United Kingdom to clarify certain aspects of the application of the Charter;

Desirous therefore of clarifying the application of the Charter in relation to the laws and administrative action of the United Kingdom and of its justiciability within the United Kingdom;

Reaffirming that references in this Protocol to the operation of specific provisions of the Charter are strictly without prejudice to the operation of other provisions of the Charter;

Reaffirming that this Protocol is without prejudice to the application of the Charter to other Member States;

Reaffirming that this Protocol is without prejudice to other obligations of the United Kingdom under the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and Union law generally;

Have agreed upon the following provisions which shall be annexed to the Treaty on European Union:

Article 1

1. The Charter does not extend the ability of the Court of Justice, or any court or tribunal of the United Kingdom, to find that the laws, regulations or administrative provisions, practices or action of the United Kingdom are inconsistent with the fundamental rights, freedoms and principles that it reaffirms.

2. In particular, and for the avoidance of doubt, nothing in [Title IV] of the Charter creates justiciable rights applicable to the United Kingdom except in so far as the United Kingdom has provided for such rights in its national law.

Article 2

To the extent that a provision of the Charter refers to national laws and practices, it shall only apply in the United Kingdom to the extent that the rights or principles that it contains are recognised in the law or practices of the United Kingdom."

<sup>20</sup> Two delegations reserved their right to join in the Protocol referred to in footnote 19.

<sup>21</sup> I.e. the version of the Charter as agreed in the 2004 IGC which will be re-enacted by the three Institutions in [2007]. It will be published in the Official Journal of the European Union.

Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 21/22 June 2007

The provisions of the Charter shall not extend in any way the competences of the Union as defined in the Treaties.

The rights, freedoms and principles in the Charter shall be interpreted in accordance with the general provisions in Title VII of the Charter governing its interpretation and application and with due regard to the explanations referred to in the Charter, that set out the sources of those provisions."

2. The Union shall accede to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Such accession shall not affect the Union's competences as defined in the Treaties.

3. Fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, shall constitute general principles of the Union's law.

6) *Insertion of an Article 7bis on the Union and its neighbours**.

Title II - Provisions on democratic principles

7) Insertion of a new Article on the role of national parliaments in the Union reading as follows:

"National parliaments shall contribute actively to the good functioning of the Union:

- a) through being informed by the institutions of the Union and having draft European legislative acts forwarded to them in accordance with the Protocol on the role of national parliaments in the European Union;
- b) by seeing to it that the principle of subsidiarity is respected in accordance with the procedures provided for in the Protocol on the application of the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality;
- c) by taking part, within the framework of the area of freedom, security and justice, in the evaluation mechanisms for the implementation of the Union policies in that area, in accordance with Article [III-260], and through being involved in the political monitoring of Europol and the evaluation of Eurojust's activities in accordance with Articles [III-276 and III-273];
- d) by taking part in the revision procedures of the Treaties, in accordance with Article [IV-443 and IV-444];
- e) by being notified of applications for accession to the Union, in accordance with Article [I-58];
- f) by taking part in the inter-parliamentary cooperation between national parliaments and with the European Parliament, in accordance with the Protocol on the role of national parliaments in the European Union."

Title V - General provisions on the Union's external action and specific provisions on the Common Foreign and Security Policy

8) In Article 11, insertion of a paragraph 1 reading as follows (the current text of paragraph 1 being deleted).<sup>22</sup>

1. The Union's competence in matters of common foreign and security policy shall cover all areas of foreign policy and all questions relating to the Union's security, including the progressive framing of a common defence policy that might lead to a common defence.

<sup>22</sup> The IGC will agree the following Declaration: "In addition to the specific procedures referred to in [paragraph 1 of Article 11], the Conference underlines that the provisions covering the Common Foreign and Security Policy including in relation to the High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy and the External Action Service will not affect the existing legal basis, responsibilities, and powers of each Member State in relation to the formulation and conduct of its foreign policy, its national diplomatic service, relations with third countries and participation in international organisations, including a Member State's membership of the Security Council of the UN.

The Conference also notes that the provisions covering the Common Foreign and Security Policy do not give new powers to the Commission to initiate decisions or increase the role of the European Parliament.

The Conference also recalls that the provisions governing the Common Security and Defence Policy do not prejudice the specific character of the security and defence policy of the Member States."

PROTOCOL (No 3)
ON THE EURO GROUP

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

DESIRING to promote conditions for stronger economic growth in the European Union and, to that end, to develop ever-closer coordination of economic policies within the euro area,

CONSCIOUS of the need to lay down special provisions for enhanced dialogue between the Member States whose currency is the euro, pending the euro becoming the currency of all Member States of the Union,

HAVE AGREED UPON the following provisions, which are annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union:

Article 1

The Ministers of the Member States whose currency is the euro shall meet informally. Such meetings shall take place, when necessary, to discuss questions related to the specific responsibilities they share with regard to the single currency. The Commission shall take part in the meetings. The European Central Bank shall be invited to take part in such meetings, which shall be prepared by the representatives of the Ministers with responsibility for finance of the Member States whose currency is the euro and of the Commission.

Article 2

The Ministers of the Member States whose currency is the euro shall elect a president for two and a half years, by a majority of those Member States.

PROTOCOL (No 5)
RELATING TO ARTICLE [I-9(2)]
OF THE TREATY ON EUROPEAN UNION
ON THE ACCESSION OF THE UNION TO THE EUROPEAN CONVENTION
ON THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES

HAVE AGREED UPON the following provisions, which shall be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union:

Article 1

The agreement relating to the accession of the Union to the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (hereinafter referred to as the "European Convention") provided for in Article [I-9(2)] of the Treaty on European Union shall make provision for preserving the specific characteristics of the Union and Union law, in particular with regard to:

- (a) the specific arrangements for the Union's possible participation in the control bodies of the European Convention;
- (b) the mechanisms necessary to ensure that proceedings by non-Member States and individual applications are correctly addressed to Member States and/or the Union as appropriate.

Article 2

The agreement referred to in Article 1 shall ensure that accession of the Union shall not affect the competences of the Union or the powers of its institutions. It shall ensure that nothing therein affects the situation of Member States in relation to the European Convention, in particular in relation to the Protocols thereto, measures taken by Member States derogating from the European Convention in accordance with Article 15 thereof and reservations to the European Convention made by Member States in accordance with Article 57 thereof.

Article 3

Nothing in the agreement referred to in Article 1 shall affect Article [III-375(2)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

PROTOCOL (No 7)*ON THE APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

WHEREAS in Article [I-9] of the Treaty on European Union, the Union recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights;

WHEREAS the Charter is to be applied in strict accordance with the provisions of the aforementioned Article [I-9] and Title VII of the Charter itself;

Whereas the aforementioned Article [I-9] requires the Charter to be applied and interpreted by the courts of the United Kingdom strictly in accordance with the explanations referred to in that Article;

WHEREAS the Charter contains both rights and principles;

WHEREAS the Charter contains both provisions which are civil and political in character and those which are economic and social in character;

WHEREAS the Charter reaffirms the rights, freedoms and principles recognised in the Union and makes those rights more visible, but does not create new rights or principles;

RECALLING the United Kingdom's obligations under the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, and Union law generally;

NOTING the wish of the United Kingdom to clarify certain aspects of the application of the Charter;

DESIROUS therefore of clarifying the application of the Charter in relation to the laws and administrative action of the United Kingdom and of its justiciability within the United Kingdom;

REAFFIRMING that references in this Protocol to the operation of specific provisions of the Charter are strictly without prejudice to the operation of other provisions of the Charter;

REAFFIRMING that this Protocol is without prejudice to the application of the Charter to other Member States;

REAFFIRMING that this Protocol is without prejudice to other obligations of the United Kingdom under the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, and Union law generally,

HAVE AGREED UPON the following provisions, which shall be annexed to the Treaty on European Union:

Article 1

1. The Charter does not extend the ability of the Court of Justice, or any court or tribunal of the United Kingdom, to find that the laws, regulations or administrative provisions, practices or action of the United Kingdom are inconsistent with the fundamental rights, freedoms and principles that it reaffirms.
2. In particular, and for the avoidance of doubt, nothing in Title IV of the Charter creates justiciable rights applicable to the United Kingdom except in so far as the United Kingdom has provided for such rights in its national law.

Article 2

To the extent that a provision of the Charter refers to national laws and practices, it shall only apply to the United Kingdom to the extent that the rights or principles that it contains are recognised in the law or practices of the United Kingdom.

A. DECLARATIONS CONCERNING PROVISIONS OF THE TREATIES

1. Declaration on Article [I-9(2)] of the Treaty on European Union

The Conference agrees that the Union's accession to the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms should be arranged in such a way as to preserve the specific features of Union law. In this connection, the Conference notes the existence of a regular dialogue between the Court of Justice of the European Union and the European Court of Human Rights; such dialogue could be reinforced when the Union accedes to that Convention.

2. Declaration on Articles [I-22, I-27 and I-28] of the Treaty on European Union

In choosing the persons called upon to hold the offices of President of the European Council, President of the Commission and Union Minister for Foreign Affairs, due account is to be taken of the need to respect the geographical and demographic diversity of the Union and its Member States.

3. Declaration on Article [I-24(7)] of the Treaty on European Union concerning the European Council decision on the exercise of the Presidency of the Council

The Conference declares that the European Council should begin preparing the decision establishing the procedures for implementing the decision on the exercise of the Presidency of the Council as soon as the Treaty amending the Treaty on European Union and the Treaty establishing the European Community is signed, and should give its political approval within six months. The draft decision is set out below:

Draft decision of the European Council on the exercise of the Presidency of the Council

Article 1

1. The Presidency of the Council, with the exception of the Foreign Affairs configuration, shall be held by pre-established groups of three Member States for a period of 18 months. The groups shall be made up on a basis of equal rotation among the Member States, taking into account their diversity and geographical balance within the Union.

2. Each member of the group shall in turn chair for a six-month period all configurations of the Council, with the exception of the Foreign Affairs configuration. The other members of the group shall assist the Chair in all its responsibilities on the basis of a common programme. Members of the team may decide alternative arrangements among themselves.

9. Declaration on Article [I-51] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union

The Conference declares that, whenever rules on protection of personal data to be adopted on the basis of Article [I-51] could have direct implications for national security, due account will have to be taken of the specific characteristics of the matter. It recalls that the legislation presently applicable (see in particular Directive 95/46/EC) includes specific derogations in this regard.

10. Declaration on Article [I-57] of the Treaty on European Union

The Union will take into account the particular situation of small-sized countries which maintain specific relations of proximity with it.

11. Declaration on the proclamation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights by the European Parliament, the Council and the Commission

The Conference declares that the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union will be solemnly proclaimed by the European Parliament, the Council and the Commission on the day the Treaty amending the Treaty on European Union and the Treaty establishing the European Community is signed. The text is as follows:

"The European Parliament, the Council and the Commission solemnly proclaim the following text as the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union:

THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE UNION

Preamble

The peoples of Europe, in creating an ever closer union among them, are resolved to share a peaceful future based on common values.

Conscious of its spiritual and moral heritage, the Union is founded on the indivisible, universal values of human dignity, freedom, equality and solidarity; it is based on the principles of democracy and the rule of law. It places the individual at the heart of its activities, by establishing the citizenship of the Union and by creating an area of freedom, security and justice.

The Union contributes to the preservation and to the development of these common values while respecting the diversity of the cultures and traditions of the peoples of Europe as well as the national identities of the Member States and the organisation of their public authorities at national, regional and local levels; it seeks to promote balanced and sustainable development and ensures free movement of persons, services, goods and capital, and the freedom of establishment.

To this end, it is necessary to strengthen the protection of fundamental rights in the light of changes in society, social progress and scientific and technological developments by making those rights more visible in a Charter.

This Charter reaffirms, with due regard for the powers and tasks of the Union and the principle of subsidiarity, the rights as they result, in particular, from the constitutional traditions and international obligations common to the Member States, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Social Charters adopted by the Union and by the Council of Europe and the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the European Court of Human Rights. In this context the Charter will be interpreted by the courts of the Union and the Member States with due regard to the explanations prepared under the authority of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention.

Enjoyment of these rights entails responsibilities and duties with regard to other persons, to the human community and to future generations.

The Union therefore recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out hereafter.

1. Children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being. They may express their views freely. Such views shall be taken into consideration on matters which concern them in accordance with their age and maturity.
2. In all actions relating to children, whether taken by public authorities or private institutions, the child's best interests must be a primary consideration.
3. Every child shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis a personal relationship and direct contact with both his or her parents, unless that is contrary to his or her interests.

Article [II-85]
The rights of the elderly

The Union recognises and respects the rights of the elderly to lead a life of dignity and independence and to participate in social and cultural life.

Article [II-86]Integration of persons with disabilities

The Union recognises and respects the right of persons with disabilities to benefit from measures designed to ensure their independence, social and occupational integration and participation in the life of the community.

TITLE IV
SOLIDARITY

Article [II-87]Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

Workers or their representatives must, at the appropriate levels, be guaranteed information and consultation in good time in the cases and under the conditions provided for by Union law and national laws and practices.

Article [II-88]Right of collective bargaining and action

Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.

Article [II-89]Right of access to placement services

Everyone has the right of access to a free placement service.

Article [II-90]Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

Every worker has the right to protection against unjustified dismissal, in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.

Article [II-91]Fair and just working conditions

1. Every worker has the right to working conditions which respect his or her health, safety and dignity.
2. Every worker has the right to limitation of maximum working hours, to daily and weekly rest periods and to an annual period of paid leave.

Article [II-92]Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

The employment of children is prohibited. The minimum age of admission to employment may not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age, without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people and except for limited derogations.

Young people admitted to work must have working conditions appropriate to their age and be protected against economic exploitation and any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with their education.

Article [II-93]Family and professional life

1. The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.
2. To reconcile family and professional life, everyone shall have the right to protection from dismissal for a reason connected with maternity and the right to paid maternity leave and to parental leave following the birth or adoption of a child.

Article [II-94]Social security and social assistance

1. The Union recognises and respects the entitlement to social security benefits and social services providing protection in cases such as maternity, illness, industrial accidents, dependency or old age, and in the case of loss of employment, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.
2. Everyone residing and moving legally within the European Union is entitled to social security benefits and social advantages in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices.
3. In order to combat social exclusion and poverty, the Union recognises and respects the right to social and housing assistance so as to ensure a decent existence for all those who lack sufficient resources, in accordance with the rules laid down by Union law and national laws and practices.

*Article [II-95]
Health care*

Everyone has the right of access to preventive health care and the right to benefit from medical treatment under the conditions established by national laws and practices. A high level of human health protection shall be ensured in the definition and implementation of all the Union's policies and activities.

*Article [II-96]
Access to services of general economic interest*

The Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the Treaties, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

*Article [II-97]
Environmental protection*

A high level of environmental protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment must be integrated into the policies of the Union and ensured in accordance with the principle of sustainable development.

*Article [II-98]
Consumer protection*

Union policies shall ensure a high level of consumer protection.

TITLE V
CITIZENS' RIGHTS

*Article [II-99]
Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament*

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which he or she resides, under the same conditions as nationals of that State.
2. Members of the European Parliament shall be elected by direct universal suffrage in a free and secret ballot.

*Article [II-100]
Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections*

Every citizen of the Union has the right to vote and to stand as a candidate at municipal elections in the Member State in which he or she resides under the same conditions as nationals of that State.

Article [II-101]
Right to good administration

1. Every person has the right to have his or her affairs handled impartially, fairly and within a reasonable time by the institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union.
2. This right includes:
  - (a) the right of every person to be heard, before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken;
  - (b) the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy;
  - (c) the obligation of the administration to give reasons for its decisions.
3. Every person has the right to have the Union make good any damage caused by its institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States.
4. Every person may write to the institutions of the Union in one of the languages of the Treaties and must have an answer in the same language.

Article [II-102]
Right of access to documents

Any citizen of the Union, and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State, has a right of access to documents of the institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union, whatever their medium.

Article [II-103]
European Ombudsman

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to refer to the European Ombudsman cases of maladministration in the activities of the institutions, bodies, offices or agencies of the Union, with the exception of the Court of Justice of the European Union acting in its judicial role.

Article [II-104]
Right to petition

Any citizen of the Union and any natural or legal person residing or having its registered office in a Member State has the right to petition the European Parliament.

Article [II-105]Freedom of movement and of residence

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Treaties, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

Article [II-106]Diplomatic and consular protection

Every citizen of the Union shall, in the territory of a third country in which the Member State of which he or she is a national is not represented, be entitled to protection by the diplomatic or consular authorities of any Member State, on the same conditions as the nationals of that Member State.

TITLE VI
JUSTICE

Article [II-107]Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources insofar as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Article [II-108]Presumption of innocence and right of defence

1. Everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
2. Respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed.

Article [II-109]Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of a criminal offence, the law provides for a lighter penalty, that penalty shall be applicable.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles recognised by the community of nations.
3. The severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence.

Article [II-110]Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

TITLE VII
GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Article [II-111]Field of application

1. The provisions of this Charter are addressed to the institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union with due regard for the principle of subsidiarity and to the Member States only when they are implementing Union law. They shall therefore respect the rights, observe the principles and promote the application thereof in accordance with their respective powers and respecting the limits of the powers of the Union as conferred on it in the Treaties.
2. The Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks as defined in the Treaties.

Article [II-112]Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter for which provision is made in the Treaties shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by those Treaties.
3. Insofar as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.
4. Insofar as this Charter recognises fundamental rights as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, those rights shall be interpreted in harmony with those traditions.
5. The provisions of this Charter which contain principles may be implemented by legislative and executive acts taken by institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union, and by acts of Member States when they are implementing Union law, in the exercise of their respective powers. They shall be judicially cognisable only in the interpretation of such acts and in the ruling on their legality.
6. Full account shall be taken of national laws and practices as specified in this Charter.
7. The explanations drawn up as a way of providing guidance in the interpretation of the Charter of Fundamental Rights shall be given due regard by the courts of the Union and of the Member States.

Article [II-113]Level of protection

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as restricting or adversely affecting human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised, in their respective fields of application, by Union law and international law and by international agreements to which the Union or all the Member States are party, including the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and by the Member States' constitutions.

Article [II-114]
Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Charter shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised in this Charter or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for herein."

12. Declaration concerning the explanations relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights

The Conference takes note of the explanations relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights prepared under the authority of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter and updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention, as set out below.

EXPLANATIONS RELATING TO THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

These explanations were originally prepared under the authority of the Praesidium of the Convention which drafted the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. They have been updated under the responsibility of the Praesidium of the European Convention, in the light of the drafting adjustments made to the text of the Charter by that Convention (notably to Articles [II-111 and II-112]) and of further developments of Union law. Although they do not as such have the status of law, they are a valuable tool of interpretation intended to clarify the provisions of the Charter.

TITLE I – DIGNITY

Explanation on Article [II-61] – Human dignity

The dignity of the human person is not only a fundamental right in itself but constitutes the real basis of fundamental rights. The 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights enshrined human dignity in its preamble: "Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world." In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, [2001] ECR 7079, at grounds 70 – 77, the Court of Justice confirmed that a fundamental right to human dignity is part of Union law.

It results that none of the rights laid down in this Charter may be used to harm the dignity of another person, and that the dignity of the human person is part of the substance of the rights laid down in this Charter. It must therefore be respected, even where a right is restricted.

Explanation on Article [II-62] – Right to life

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article is based on the first sentence of Article 2(1) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"1. Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law..."

2. The second sentence of the provision, which referred to the death penalty, was superseded by the entry into force of Article 1 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"The death penalty shall be abolished. No-one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed."

Article 2(2) of the Charter<sup>1</sup> is based on that provision.

3. The provisions of Article [2] of the Charter<sup>1</sup> correspond to those of the above Articles of the ECHR and its Protocol. They have the same meaning and the same scope, in accordance with Article [52(3)] of the Charter<sup>2</sup>. Therefore, the "negative" definitions appearing in the ECHR must be regarded as also forming part of the Charter:

- (a) Article 2(2) of the ECHR:

"Deprivation of life shall not be regarded as inflicted in contravention of this article when it results from the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary:

- (a) in defence of any person from unlawful violence;
- (b) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained;
- (c) in action lawfully taken for the purpose of quelling a riot or insurrection."

- (b) Article 2 of Protocol No 6 to the ECHR:

"A State may make provision in its law for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war; such penalty shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions..."

Explanation on Article [II-63] – Right to the integrity of the person

1. In its judgment of 9 October 2001 in case C-377/98 Netherlands v. European Parliament and Council, [2001] ECR 7079, at grounds 70, 78 to 80, the Court of Justice confirmed that a fundamental right to human integrity is part of Union law and encompasses, in the context of medicine and biology, the free and informed consent of the donor and recipient.
2. The principles of Article [3] of the Charter<sup>3</sup> are already included in the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine, adopted by the Council of Europe (ETS 164 and additional protocol ETS 168). The Charter does not set out to depart from those principles, and therefore prohibits only reproductive cloning. It neither authorises nor prohibits other forms of cloning. Thus it does not in any way prevent the legislature from prohibiting other forms of cloning.
3. The reference to eugenic practices, in particular those aiming at the selection of persons, relates to possible situations in which selection programmes are organised and implemented, involving campaigns for sterilisation, forced pregnancy, compulsory ethnic marriage among others, all acts deemed to be international crimes in the Statute of the International Criminal Court adopted in Rome on 17 July 1998 (see its Article 7(1)(g)).

Explanation on Article [II-64] - Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The right in Article [4] is the right guaranteed by Article 3 of the ECHR, which has the same wording: "No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment". By virtue of Article [52(3)] of the Charter<sup>4</sup>, it therefore has the same meaning and the same scope as the ECHR Article.

Explanation on Article [II-65] – Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. The right in Article [5]<sup>5</sup> (1) and (2) corresponds to Article 4(1) and (2) of the ECHR, which has the same wording. It therefore has the same meaning and scope as the ECHR Article, by virtue of Article [52(3)] of the Charter<sup>6</sup>. Consequently:
  - no limitation may legitimately affect the right provided for in paragraph 1;

- in paragraph 2, "forced or compulsory labour" must be understood in the light of the "negative" definitions contained in Article 4(3) of the ECHR:

"For the purpose of this article the term "forced or compulsory labour" shall not include:

- (a) any work required to be done in the ordinary course of detention imposed according to the provisions of Article 5 of this Convention or during conditional release from such detention;
- (b) any service of a military character or, in case of conscientious objectors in countries where they are recognised, service exacted instead of compulsory military service;
- (c) any service exacted in case of an emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;
- (d) any work or service which forms part of normal civic obligations."

2. Paragraph 3 stems directly from human dignity and takes account of recent developments in organised crime, such as the organisation of lucrative illegal immigration or sexual exploitation networks. The Annex to the Europol Convention contains the following definition which refers to trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation: "traffic in human beings: means subjection of a person to the real and illegal sway of other persons by using violence or menaces or by abuse of authority or intrigue with a view to the exploitation of prostitution, forms of sexual exploitation and assault of minors or trade in abandoned children". Chapter VI of the Convention implementing the Schengen Agreement, which has been integrated into the Union's acquis, in which the United Kingdom and Ireland participate, contains the following wording in Article 27(1) which refers to illegal immigration networks: "The Contracting Parties undertake to impose appropriate penalties on any person who, for financial gain, assists or tries to assist an alien to enter or reside within the territory of one of the Contracting Parties in breach of that Contracting Party's laws on the entry and residence of aliens." On 19 July 2002, the Council adopted a framework decision on combating trafficking in human beings (OJ L 203/1) whose Article 1 defines in detail the offences concerning trafficking in human beings for the purposes of labour exploitation or sexual exploitation, which the Member States must make punishable by virtue of that framework decision.

TITLE II – FREEDOMS

Explanation on Article [II-66] – Right to liberty and security

The rights in Article [6] are the rights guaranteed by Article 5 of the ECHR, and in accordance with Article [52(3)] of the Charter<sup>7</sup>, they have the same meaning and scope. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on them may not exceed those permitted by the ECHR, in the wording of Article 5:

- "1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases and in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law:
  - (a) the lawful detention of a person after conviction by a competent court;
  - (b) the lawful arrest or detention of a person for non-compliance with the lawful order of a court or in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation prescribed by law;
  - (c) the lawful arrest or detention of a person effected for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so;
  - (d) the detention of a minor by lawful order for the purpose of educational supervision or his lawful detention for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority;
  - (e) the lawful detention of persons for the prevention of the spreading of infectious diseases, of persons of unsound mind, alcoholics or drug addicts or vagrants;
  - (f) the lawful arrest or detention of a person to prevent his effecting an unauthorised entry into the country or of a person against whom action is being taken with a view to deportation or extradition.
2. Everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and of any charge against him.
3. Everyone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1.c of this Article shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial. Release may be conditioned by guarantees to appear for trial.
4. Everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful.

5. Everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this Article shall have an enforceable right to compensation."

The rights enshrined in Article [6]<sup>8</sup> must be respected particularly when the European Parliament and the Council adopt legislative acts in the area of judicial cooperation in criminal matters, on the basis of Articles [III-270, III-271 and III-273] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, notably to define common minimum provisions as regards the categorisation of offences and punishments and certain aspects of procedural law.

Explanation on Article [II-67] – Respect for private and family life

The rights guaranteed in Article 7 correspond to those guaranteed by Article 8 of the ECHR. To take account of developments in technology the word "correspondence" has been replaced by "communications".

In accordance with Article [52(3)]<sup>9</sup>, the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those of the corresponding article of the ECHR. Consequently, the limitations which may legitimately be imposed on this right are the same as those allowed by Article 8 of the ECHR:

- "1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.
2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."

Explanation on Article [II-68] – Protection of personal data

This Article has been based on Article 286 of the Treaty establishing the European Community and Directive 95/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 281, 23.11.1995) as well as on Article 8 of the ECHR and on the Council of Europe Convention of 28 January 1981 for the Protection of Individuals with regard to Automatic Processing of Personal Data, which has been ratified by all the Member States. Article 286 of the EC Treaty is now replaced by Article [I-51] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union and Article [24] of the Treaty on European Union. Reference is also made to Regulation No 45/2001 of the European Parliament and of the Council on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data by the Community institutions and bodies and on the free movement of such data (OJ L 8, 12.1.2001). The abovementioned Directive and Regulation contain conditions and limitations for the exercise of the right to the protection of personal data.

Explanation on Article [II-69] – Right to marry and right to found a family

This Article is based on Article 12 of the ECHR, which reads as follows: "Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family according to the national laws governing the exercising of this right." The wording of the Article has been modernised to cover cases in which national legislation recognises arrangements other than marriage for founding a family. This Article neither prohibits nor imposes the granting of the status of marriage to unions between people of the same sex. This right is thus similar to that afforded by the ECHR, but its scope may be wider when national legislation so provides.

Explanation on Article [II-70] – Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

The right guaranteed in paragraph 1 corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article 9 of the ECHR and, in accordance with Article [52(3)] of the Charter<sup>10</sup>, has the same meaning and scope. Limitations must therefore respect Article 9(2) of the Convention, which reads as follows: "Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."

The right guaranteed in paragraph 2 corresponds to national constitutional traditions and to the development of national legislation on this issue.

Explanation on Article [II-71] – Freedom of expression and information

1. Article [11]<sup>11</sup> corresponds to Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.
2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary."

Pursuant to Article [52(3)] of the Charter<sup>12</sup>, the meaning and scope of this right are the same as those guaranteed by the ECHR. The limitations which may be imposed on it may therefore not exceed those provided for in Article 10(2) of the Convention, without prejudice to any restrictions which competition law of the Union may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR.

2. Paragraph 2 of this Article spells out the consequences of paragraph 1 regarding freedom of the media. It is based in particular on Court of Justice case law regarding television, particularly in case C-288/89 (judgment of 25 July 1991, Stichting Collectieve Antennevoorziening Gouda and others [1991] ECR I-4007), and on the Protocol on the system of public broadcasting in the Member States annexed to the EC Treaty and now to the Treaties, and on Council Directive 89/552/EC (particularly its seventeenth recital).

Explanation on Article [II-72] – Freedom of assembly and of association

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article corresponds to Article 11 of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.
2. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State."

The meaning of the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article [12]<sup>13</sup> is the same as that of the ECHR, but their scope is wider since they apply at all levels including European level. In accordance with Article [52(3)] of the Charter<sup>14</sup>, limitations on that right may not exceed those considered legitimate by virtue of Article 11(2) of the ECHR.

2. This right is also based on Article 11 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

3. Paragraph 2 of this Article corresponds to Article [I-46(4)] of the Treaty on European Union.

Explanation on Article [II-73] – Freedom of the arts and sciences

This right is deduced primarily from the right to freedom of thought and expression. It is to be exercised having regard to Article [1]<sup>15</sup> and may be subject to the limitations authorised by Article 10 of the ECHR.

Explanation on Article [II-74] – Right to education

1. This Article is based on the common constitutional traditions of Member States and on Article 2 of the Protocol to the ECHR, which reads as follows:

"No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions."

It was considered useful to extend this Article to access to vocational and continuing training (see point 15 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and Article 10 of the Social Charter) and to add the principle of free compulsory education. As it is worded, the latter principle merely implies that as regards compulsory education, each child has the possibility of attending an establishment which offers free education. It does not require all establishments which provide education or vocational and continuing training, in particular private ones, to be free of charge. Nor does it exclude certain specific forms of education having to be paid for, if the State takes measures to grant financial compensation. Insofar as the Charter applies to the Union, this means that in its training policies the Union must respect free compulsory education, but this does not, of course, create new powers. Regarding the right of parents, it must be interpreted in conjunction with the provisions of Article [24]<sup>16</sup>.

2. Freedom to found public or private educational establishments is guaranteed as one of the aspects of freedom to conduct a business but it is limited by respect for democratic principles and is exercised in accordance with the arrangements defined by national legislation.

Explanation on Article [II-75] – Freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work

Freedom to choose an occupation, as enshrined in Article 15(1), is recognised in Court of Justice case law (see inter alia judgment of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraphs 12 to 14 of the grounds; judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 8 October 1986, Case 234/85 Keller [1986] ECR 2897, paragraph 8 of the grounds).

This paragraph also draws upon Article 1(2) of the European Social Charter, which was signed on 18 October 1961 and has been ratified by all the Member States, and on point 4 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers of 9 December 1989. The expression "working conditions" is to be understood in the sense of Article [III-213] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

Paragraph 2 deals with the three freedoms guaranteed by Articles [I-4 and III-133, III-137 and III-144] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, namely freedom of movement for workers, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

Paragraph 3 has been based on Article [137(1)(g)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, and on Article 19(4) of the European Social Charter signed on 18 October 1961 and ratified by all the Member States. Article [52(2)] of the Charter<sup>17</sup> is therefore applicable. The question of recruitment of seamen having the nationality of third States for the crews of vessels flying the flag of a Member State of the Union is governed by Union law and national legislation and practice.

Explanation on Article [II-76] – Freedom to conduct a business

This Article is based on Court of Justice case law which has recognised freedom to exercise an economic or commercial activity (see judgments of 14 May 1974, Case 4/73 Nold [1974] ECR 491, paragraph 14 of the grounds, and of 27 September 1979, Case 230-78 SPA Eridiana and others [1979] ECR 2749, paragraphs 20 and 31 of the grounds) and freedom of contract (see inter alia Sukkerfabriken Nykøbing judgment, Case 151/78 [1979] ECR 1, paragraph 19 of the grounds, and judgment of 5 October 1999, C-240/97 Spain v. Commission, [1999] ECR I-6571, paragraph 99 of the grounds) and Article [97b(1) and (3)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, which recognises free competition. Of course, this right is to be exercised with respect for Union law and national legislation. It may be subject to the limitations provided for in Article [52(1)] of the Charter<sup>18</sup>.

Explanation on Article [II-77] – Right to property

This Article is based on Article 1 of the Protocol to the ECHR:

"Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties."

This is a fundamental right common to all national constitutions. It has been recognised on numerous occasions by the case law of the Court of Justice, initially in the Hauer judgment (13 December 1979, ECR [1979] 3727). The wording has been updated but, in accordance with Article [52(3)]<sup>19</sup>, the meaning and scope of the right are the same as those of the right guaranteed by the ECHR and the limitations may not exceed those provided for there.

Protection of intellectual property, one aspect of the right of property, is explicitly mentioned in paragraph 2 because of its growing importance and Community secondary legislation. Intellectual property covers not only literary and artistic property but also inter alia patent and trademark rights and associated rights. The guarantees laid down in paragraph 1 shall apply as appropriate to intellectual property.

Explanation on Article [II-78] – Right to asylum

The text of the Article has been based on TEC Article 63, now replaced by Article [III-266] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, which requires the Union to respect the Geneva Convention on refugees. Reference should be made to the Protocols relating to the United Kingdom and Ireland annexed to the Treaties and to Denmark to determine the extent to which those Member States implement Union law in this area and the extent to which this Article is applicable to them. This Article is in line with the Protocol on Asylum annexed to the Treaties.

Explanation on Article [II-79] – Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

Paragraph 1 of this Article has the same meaning and scope as Article 4 of Protocol No 4 to the ECHR concerning collective expulsion. Its purpose is to guarantee that every decision is based on a specific examination and that no single measure can be taken to expel all persons having the nationality of a particular State (see also Article 13 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights).

Paragraph 2 incorporates the relevant case law from the European Court of Human Rights regarding Article 3 of the ECHR (see Ahmed v. Austria, judgment of 17 December 1996, [1996] ECR VI 2206 and Soering, judgment of 7 July 1989).

TITLE III – EQUALITY

Explanation on Article [II-80] – Equality before the law

This Article corresponds to a general principle of law which is included in all European constitutions and has also been recognised by the Court of Justice as a basic principle of Community law (judgment of 13 November 1984, Case 283/83 Racke [1984] ECR 3791, judgment of 17 April 1997, Case 15/95 EARL [1997] ECR I-1961, and judgment of 13 April 2000, Case 292/97 Karlsson [2000] ECR 2737).

Explanation on Article [II-81] – Non-discrimination

Paragraph 1 draws on Article 13 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-124] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, Article 14 of the ECHR and Article 11 of the Convention on Human Rights and Biomedicine as regards genetic heritage. Insofar as this corresponds to Article 14 of the ECHR, it applies in compliance with it.

There is no contradiction or incompatibility between paragraph 1 and Article [III-124] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union which has a different scope and purpose: Article [III-124] confers power on the Union to adopt legislative acts, including harmonisation of the Member States' laws and regulations, to combat certain forms of discrimination, listed exhaustively in that Article. Such legislation may cover action of Member State authorities (as well as relations between private individuals) in any area within the limits of the Union's powers. In contrast, the provision in paragraph 1 of Article [21]<sup>20</sup> does not create any power to enact anti-discrimination laws in these areas of Member State or private action, nor does it lay down a sweeping ban of discrimination in such wide-ranging areas. Instead, it only addresses discriminations by the institutions and bodies of the Union themselves, when exercising powers conferred under the Treaties, and by Member States only when they are implementing Union law. Paragraph 1 therefore does not alter the extent of powers granted under Article [III-124] nor the interpretation given to that Article.

Paragraph 2 corresponds to Article [I-4(2)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union and must be applied in compliance with that Article.

Explanation on Article [II-82] – Cultural, religious and linguistic diversity

This Article has been based on Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union and on Article 151(1) and (4) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-280(1) and (4)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, concerning culture. Respect for cultural and linguistic diversity is now also laid down in Article [I-3(3)] of the Treaty on European Union. The Article is also inspired by Declaration No 11 to the Final Act of the Amsterdam Treaty on the status of churches and non-confessional organisations, now taken over in Article [I-52] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

Explanation on Article [II-83] – Equality between women and men

The first paragraph has been based on Articles 2 and 3(2) of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [I-3] of the Treaty on European Union and Article [III-116] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union which impose the objective of promoting equality between men and women on the Union, and on Article [141(1)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union. It draws on Article 20 of the revised European Social Charter of 3 May 1996 and on point 16 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers.

It is also based on Article [141(3)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union and Article 2(4) of Council Directive 76/207/EEC on the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women as regards access to employment, vocational training and promotion, and working conditions.

The second paragraph takes over in shorter form Article [III-214(4)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union which provides that the principle of equal treatment does not prevent the maintenance or adoption of measures providing for specific advantages in order to make it easier for the under-represented sex to pursue a vocational activity or to prevent or compensate for disadvantages in professional careers. In accordance with Article [52(2)]<sup>21</sup>, the present paragraph does not amend Article [III-214(4)].

Explanation on Article [II-84] – The rights of the child

This Article is based on the New York Convention on the Rights of the Child signed on 20 November 1989 and ratified by all the Member States, particularly Articles 3, 9, 12 and 13 thereof.

Paragraph 3 takes account of the fact that, as part of the establishment of an area of freedom, security and justice, Union legislation on civil matters having cross-border implications, for which Article [III-269] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union confers power, may include notably visiting rights ensuring that children can maintain on a regular basis a personal and direct contact with both his or her parents.

Explanation on Article [II-85] – The rights of the elderly

This Article draws on Article 23 of the revised European Social Charter and Articles 24 and 25 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers. Of course, participation in social and cultural life also covers participation in political life.

Explanation on Article [II-86] – Integration of persons with disabilities

The principle set out in this Article is based on Article 15 of the European Social Charter and also draws on point 26 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

TITLE IV – SOLIDARITY

Explanation on Article [II-87] – Workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking

This Article appears in the revised European Social Charter (Article 21) and in the Community Charter on the rights of workers (points 17 and 18). It applies under the conditions laid down by Union law and by national laws. The reference to appropriate levels refers to the levels laid down by Union law or by national laws and practices, which might include the European level when Union legislation so provides. There is a considerable Union acquis in this field: Articles [III-211 and III-212] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, and Directives 2002/14/EC (general framework for informing and consulting employees in the European Community), 98/59/EC (collective redundancies), 2001/23/EC (transfers of undertakings) and 94/45/EC (European works councils).

Explanation on Article [II-88] – Right of collective bargaining and action

This Article is based on Article 6 of the European Social Charter and on the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (points 12 to 14). The right of collective action was recognised by the European Court of Human Rights as one of the elements of trade union rights laid down by Article 11 of the ECHR. As regards the appropriate levels at which collective negotiation might take place, see the explanation given for the above Article. The modalities and limits for the exercise of collective action, including strike action, come under national laws and practices, including the question of whether it may be carried out in parallel in several Member States.

Explanation on Article [II-89] – Right of access to placement services

This Article is based on Article 1(3) of the European Social Charter and point 13 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Explanation on Article [II-90] – Protection in the event of unjustified dismissal

This Article draws on Article 24 of the revised Social Charter. See also Directive 2001/23/EC on the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, and Directive 80/987/EEC on the protection of employees in the event of the insolvency of their employer, as amended by Directive 2002/74/EC.

Explanation on Article [II-91] – Fair and just working conditions

1. Paragraph 1 of this Article is based on Directive 89/391/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work. It also draws on Article 3 of the Social Charter and point 19 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers, and, as regards dignity at work, on Article 26 of the revised Social Charter. The expression "working conditions" is to be understood in the sense of Article [III-213] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.
2. Paragraph 2 is based on Directive 93/104/EC concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time, Article 2 of the European Social Charter and point 8 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers.

Explanation on Article [II-92] – Prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work

This Article is based on Directive 94/33/EC on the protection of young people at work, Article 7 of the European Social Charter and points 20 to 23 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers.

Explanation on Article [II-93] – Family and professional life

Article [33(1)]<sup>22</sup> is based on Article 16 of the European Social Charter.

The second paragraph draws on Council Directive 92/85/EEC on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health at work of pregnant workers and workers who have recently given birth or are breastfeeding and Directive 96/34/EC on the framework agreement on parental leave concluded by UNICE, CEEP and the ETUC. It is also based on Article 8 (protection of maternity) of the European Social Charter and draws on Article 27 (right of workers with family responsibilities to equal opportunities and equal treatment) of the revised Social Charter. "Maternity" covers the period from conception to weaning.

Explanation on Article [II-94] – Social security and social assistance

The principle set out in Article [34(1)]<sup>23</sup> is based on Articles 137 and 140 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, Article 12 of the European Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter on the rights of workers. The Union must respect it when exercising the powers conferred on it by Articles [III-210 and III-213] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union. The reference to social services relates to cases in which such services have been introduced to provide certain advantages but does not imply that such services must be created where they do not exist. "Maternity" must be understood in the same sense as in the preceding Article.

Paragraph 2 is based on Articles 12(4) and 13(4) of the European Social Charter and point 2 of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and reflects the rules arising from Regulation No 1408/71 and Regulation No 1612/68.

Paragraph 3 draws on Article 13 of the European Social Charter and Articles 30 and 31 of the revised Social Charter and point 10 of the Community Charter. The Union must respect it in the context of policies based on Article [III-210] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

Explanation on Article [II-95] – Health care

The principles set out in this Article are based on Article 152 of the EC Treaty, now replaced by Article [III-278] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, and on Articles 11 and 13 of the European Social Charter. The second sentence of the Article takes over Article III-278(1).

Explanation on Article [II-96] – Access to services of general economic interest

This Article is fully in line with Article [III-122] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union and does not create any new right. It merely sets out the principle of respect by the Union for the access to services of general economic interest as provided for by national provisions, when those provisions are compatible with Union law.

Explanation on Article [II-97] – Environmental protection

The principles set out in this Article have been based on Articles 2, 6 and 174 of the EC Treaty, which have now been replaced by Article [I-3(3)] of the Treaty on European Union and Articles [III-119 and III-233] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

It also draws on the provisions of some national constitutions.

Explanation on Article [II-98] – Consumer protection

The principles set out in this Article have been based on Article [153] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

TITLE V – CITIZENS' RIGHTS

Explanation on Article [II-99] – Right to vote and to stand as a candidate at elections to the European Parliament

Article [39]<sup>24</sup> applies under the conditions laid down in the Treaties, in accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter<sup>25</sup>. Article 39(1) corresponds to the right guaranteed in Article [I-10(2)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-126] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union for the adoption of detailed arrangements for the exercise of that right) and Article 39(2) corresponds to Article [I-20(2)] of the Treaty on European Union. Article 39(2) takes over the basic principles of the electoral system in a democratic State.

In accordance with Article 52(2) of the Charter, it applies under the conditions defined in these Articles in the Treaties.

Explanation on Article [II-101] – Right to good administration

Article [41]<sup>26</sup> is based on the existence of the Union as subject to the rule of law whose characteristics were developed in the case law which enshrined inter alia good administration as a general principle of law (see inter alia Court of Justice judgment of 31 March 1992 in Case C-255/90 P, Burban [1992] ECR I-2253, and Court of First Instance judgments of 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-2589, and 9 July 1999 in Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and others [1999] ECR II-2403). The wording for that right in the first two paragraphs results from the case law (Court of Justice judgment of 15 October 1987 in Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097, paragraph 15 of the grounds, judgment of 18 October 1989 in Case 374/87 Orkem [1989] ECR 3283, judgment of 21 November 1991 in Case C-269/90 TU München [1991] ECR I-5469, and Court of First Instance judgments of 6 December 1994 in Case T-450/93 Lisrestal [1994] ECR II-1177, 18 September 1995 in Case T-167/94 Nölle [1995] ECR II-258) and the wording regarding the obligation to give reasons comes from Article [253] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union (cf. also the legal base in Article [III-398] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union for the adoption of legislation in the interest of an open, efficient and independent European administration).

Paragraph 3 reproduces the right now guaranteed by Article [III-431] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union. Paragraph 4 reproduces the right now guaranteed by Articles [I-10(2)(d)] and [III-129] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union. In accordance with Article [52(2)] of the Charter<sup>27</sup>, those rights are to be applied under the conditions and within the limits defined by the Treaties.

The right to an effective remedy, which is an important aspect of this question, is guaranteed in Article [47] of this Charter<sup>28</sup>.

The right guaranteed in this Article has been taken over from Article 255 of the EC Treaty, on the basis of which Regulation No 1049/2001 has subsequently been adopted. The European Convention has extended this right to documents of institutions, bodies and agencies generally, regardless of their form, see Article [I-50(3)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union. In accordance with Article [52(2)] of the Charter<sup>29</sup>, the right of access to documents is exercised under the conditions and within the limits for which provision is made in Articles [I-50(3) and III-399] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

TITLE VI – JUSTICE

Explanation on Article [II-107] – Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

The first paragraph is based on Article 13 of the ECHR:

"Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity."

However, in Union law the protection is more extensive since it guarantees the right to an effective remedy before a court. The Court of Justice enshrined that right in its judgment of 15 May 1986 as a general principle of Union law (Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651; see also judgment of 15 October 1987, Case 222/86 Heylens [1987] ECR 4097 and judgment of 3 December 1992, Case C-97/91 Borelli [1992] ECR I-6313). According to the Court, that general principle of Union law also applies to the Member States when they are implementing Union law. The inclusion of this precedent in the Charter has not been intended to change the system of judicial review laid down by the Treaties, and particularly the rules relating to admissibility for direct actions before the Court of Justice of the European Union. The European Convention has considered the Union's system of judicial review including the rules on admissibility, and confirmed them while amending them as to certain aspects, as reflected in Articles [III-353 to III-381] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union, and in particular in Article III-365(4). Article [47]<sup>33</sup> applies to the institutions of the Union and of Member States when they are implementing Union law and does so for all rights guaranteed by Union law.

The second paragraph corresponds to Article 6(1) of the ECHR which reads as follows:

"In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law. Judgment shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice."

In Union law, the right to a fair hearing is not confined to disputes relating to civil law rights and obligations. That is one of the consequences of the fact that the Union is a community based on the rule of law as stated by the Court in Case 294/83, "Les Verts" v. European Parliament (judgment of 23 April 1986, [1988] ECR 1339). Nevertheless, in all respects other than their scope, the guarantees afforded by the ECHR apply in a similar way to the Union.

With regard to the third paragraph, it should be noted that in accordance with the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, provision should be made for legal aid where the absence of such aid would make it impossible to ensure an effective remedy (ECHR Judgment of 9.10.1979, Airey, Series A, Volume 32, 11). There is also a system of legal assistance for cases before the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Explanation on Article [II-108] – Presumption of innocence and right of defence

Article 48 is the same as Article 6(2) and (3) of the ECHR, which reads as follows:

- "2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.
3. Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights:
- (a) to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him;
  - (b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence;
  - (c) to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require;
  - (d) to examine or have examined witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;
  - (e) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court."

In accordance with Article 52(3)<sup>34</sup>, this right has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Explanation on Article [II-109] – Principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties

This Article follows the traditional rule of the non-retroactivity of laws and criminal sanctions. There has been added the rule of the retroactivity of a more lenient penal law, which exists in a number of Member States and which features in Article 15 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Article 7 of the ECHR is worded as follows:

- "1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations."

In paragraph 2, the reference to "civilised" nations has been deleted; this does not change the meaning of this paragraph, which refers to crimes against humanity in particular. In accordance with Article 52(3)<sup>35</sup>, the right guaranteed here therefore has the same meaning and scope as the right guaranteed by the ECHR.

Paragraph 3 states the general principle of proportionality between penalties and criminal offences which is enshrined in the common constitutional traditions of the Member States and in the case law of the Court of Justice of the Communities.

Explanation on Article [II-110] – Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR reads as follows:

- "1. No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings under the jurisdiction of the same State for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of that State.
2. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the reopening of the case in accordance with the law and the penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case.
3. No derogation from this Article shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention."

The "non bis in idem" rule applies in Union law (see, among the many precedents, the judgment of 5 May 1966, Cases 18/65 and 35/65, Gutmann v. Commission [1966] ECR 103 and a recent case, the decision of the Court of First Instance of 20 April 1999, Joined Cases T-305/94 and others, Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij NV v. Commission [1999] ECR II-931). The rule prohibiting cumulation refers to cumulation of two penalties of the same kind, that is to say criminal law penalties.

In accordance with Article [50]<sup>36</sup>, the "non bis in idem" rule applies not only within the jurisdiction of one State but also between the jurisdictions of several Member States. That corresponds to the acquis in Union law; see Articles 54 to 58 of the Schengen Convention and the judgment of the Court of Justice of 11 February 2003, C-187/01 Gözütok (not yet published), Article 7 of the Convention on the Protection of the European Communities' Financial Interests and Article 10 of the Convention on the fight against corruption. The very limited exceptions in those Conventions permitting the Member States to derogate from the "non bis in idem" rule are covered by the horizontal clause in Article 52(1)<sup>37</sup> of the Charter concerning limitations. As regards the situations referred to by Article 4 of Protocol No 7, namely the application of the principle within the same Member State, the guaranteed right has the same meaning and the same scope as the corresponding right in the ECHR.

TITLE VII – GENERAL PROVISIONS GOVERNING THE INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER

Explanation on Article [II-111] – Field of application

The aim of Article [51]<sup>38</sup> is to determine the scope of the Charter. It seeks to establish clearly that the Charter applies primarily to the institutions and bodies of the Union, in compliance with the principle of subsidiarity. This provision was drafted in keeping with Article [6(2)] of the Treaty on European Union, which required the Union to respect fundamental rights, and with the mandate issued by Cologne European Council. The term "institutions" is enshrined in the Treaties. The expression "bodies, offices and agencies" is commonly used in the Treaties to refer to all the authorities set up by the Treaties or by secondary legislation (see, e.g., Articles [I-50 or I-51] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union).

As regards the Member States, it follows unambiguously from the case law of the Court of Justice that the requirement to respect fundamental rights defined in a Union context is only binding on the Member States when they act in the scope of Union law (judgment of 13 July 1989, Case 5/88 Wachauf [1989] ECR 2609; judgment of 18 June 1991, ERT [1991] ECR I-2925; judgment of 18 December 1997, C-309/96 Annibaldi [1997] ECR I-7493). The Court of Justice confirmed this case law in the following terms: "In addition, it should be remembered that the requirements flowing from the protection of fundamental rights in the Community legal order are also binding on Member States when they implement Community rules ..." (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, [2000] ECR 2737, paragraph 37 of the grounds). Of course this rule, as enshrined in this Charter, applies to the central authorities as well as to regional or local bodies, and to public organisations, when they are implementing Union law.

Paragraph 2, together with the second sentence of paragraph 1, confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the competences and tasks which the Treaties confer on the Union. Explicit mention is made here of the logical consequences of the principle of subsidiarity and of the fact that the Union only has those powers which have been conferred upon it. The fundamental rights as guaranteed in the Union do not have any effect other than in the context of the powers determined by the Treaties. Consequently, an obligation, pursuant to the second sentence of paragraph 1, for the Union's institutions to promote principles laid down in the Charter may arise only within the limits of these same powers.

Paragraph 2 also confirms that the Charter may not have the effect of extending the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union as established in the Treaties. The Court of Justice has already established this rule with respect to the fundamental rights recognised as part of Union law (judgment of 17 February 1998, C-249/96 Grant, 1998 ECR I-621, paragraph 45 of the grounds). In accordance with this rule, it goes without saying that the reference to the Charter in Article [I-9] of the Treaty on European Union cannot be understood as extending by itself the range of Member State action considered to be "implementation of Union law" (within the meaning of paragraph 1 and the above-mentioned case law).

Explanation on Article [II-112] – Scope and interpretation of rights and principles

The purpose of Article [52]<sup>39</sup> is to set the scope of the rights and principles of the Charter, and to lay down rules for their interpretation. Paragraph 1 deals with the arrangements for the limitation of rights. The wording is based on the case law of the Court of Justice: "... it is well established in the case law of the Court that restrictions may be imposed on the exercise of fundamental rights, in particular in the context of a common organisation of the market, provided that those restrictions in fact correspond to objectives of general interest pursued by the Community and do not constitute, with regard to the aim pursued, disproportionate and unreasonable interference undermining the very substance of those rights" (judgment of 13 April 2000, Case C-292/97, paragraph 45 of the grounds). The reference to general interests recognised by the Union covers both the objectives mentioned in Article [I-2] of the Treaty on European Union and other interests protected by specific provisions of the Treaties such as Article [I-5(1)] of the Treaty on European Union and Articles III-133(3), III-154 and III-436 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

Paragraph 2 refers to rights which were already expressly guaranteed in the Treaty establishing the European Community and have been recognised in the Charter, and which are now found in the Treaties (notably the rights derived from Union citizenship). It clarifies that such rights remain subject to the conditions and limits applicable to the Union law on which they are based, and for which provision is made in the Treaties. The Charter does not alter the system of rights conferred by the EC Treaty and taken over by the Treaties.

Paragraph 3 is intended to ensure the necessary consistency between the Charter and the ECHR by establishing the rule that, insofar as the rights in the present Charter also correspond to rights guaranteed by the ECHR, the meaning and scope of those rights, including authorised limitations, are the same as those laid down by the ECHR. This means in particular that the legislator, in laying down limitations to those rights, must comply with the same standards as are fixed by the detailed limitation arrangements laid down in the ECHR, which are thus made applicable for the rights covered by this paragraph, without thereby adversely affecting the autonomy of Union law and of that of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

The reference to the ECHR covers both the Convention and the Protocols to it. The meaning and the scope of the guaranteed rights are determined not only by the text of those instruments, but also by the case law of the European Court of Human Rights and by the Court of Justice of the European Union. The last sentence of the paragraph is designed to allow the Union to guarantee more extensive protection. In any event, the level of protection afforded by the Charter may never be lower than that guaranteed by the ECHR.

The Charter does not affect the possibilities of Member States to avail themselves of Article 15 ECHR, allowing derogations from ECHR rights in the event of war or of other public dangers threatening the life of the nation, when they take action in the areas of national defence in the event of war and of the maintenance of law and order, in accordance with their responsibilities recognised in Article [I-5 (1)] of the Treaty on European Union and in Articles III-131 and III-262 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union.

The list of rights which may at the present stage, without precluding developments in the law, legislation and the Treaties, be regarded as corresponding to rights in the ECHR within the meaning of the present paragraph is given hereafter. It does not include rights additional to those in the ECHR.

1. Articles of the Charter where both the meaning and the scope are the same as the corresponding Articles of the ECHR:

- Article [47]<sup>54</sup>(2) and (3) corresponds to Article 6(1) of the ECHR, but the limitation to the determination of civil rights and obligations or criminal charges does not apply as regards Union law and its implementation
- Article [50]<sup>55</sup> corresponds to Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the ECHR, but its scope is extended to European Union level between the Courts of the Member States.
- Finally, citizens of the European Union may not be considered as aliens in the scope of the application of Union law, because of the prohibition of any discrimination on grounds of nationality. The limitations provided for by Article 16 of the ECHR as regards the rights of aliens therefore do not apply to them in this context.

The rule of interpretation contained in paragraph 4 has been based on the wording of Article [6(2)] [I-9(3)] of the Treaty on European Union and takes due account of the approach to common constitutional traditions followed by the Court of Justice (e.g., judgment of 13 December 1979, Case 44/79 Hauer [1979] ECR 3727; judgment of 18 May 1982, Case 155/79, AM&S, [1982] ECR 1575). Under that rule, rather than following a rigid approach of "a lowest common denominator", the Charter rights concerned should be interpreted in a way offering a high standard of protection which is adequate for the law of the Union and in harmony with the common constitutional traditions.

Paragraph 5 clarifies the distinction between "rights" and "principles" set out in the Charter. According to that distinction, subjective rights shall be respected, whereas principles shall be observed (Article 51(1)<sup>56</sup>). Principles may be implemented through legislative or executive acts (adopted by the Union in accordance with its powers, and by the Member States only when they implement Union law); accordingly, they become significant for the Courts only when such acts are interpreted or reviewed. They do not however give rise to direct claims for positive action by the Union's institutions or Member States authorities. This is consistent both with case law of the Court of Justice (cf. notably case law on the "precautionary principle" in Article [174(2)] of the Treaty on the Functioning of the Union: judgment of the CFI of 11 September 2002, T-13/99, Pfizer vs. Council, with numerous references to earlier case law; and a series of judgments on Article 33 (ex-39) on the principles of agricultural law, e.g. judgment of the Court of Justice C-265/85, Van den Berg, 1987 ECR 1155: scrutiny of the principle of market stabilisation and of reasonable expectations) and with the approach of the Member States' constitutional systems to "principles" particularly in the field of social law. For illustration, examples for principles, recognised in the Charter include e.g. Articles 25, 26 and 37<sup>57</sup>. In some cases, an Article of the Charter may contain both elements of a right and of a principle, e.g. Articles 23, 33 and 34<sup>58</sup>.

Paragraph 6 refers to the various Articles in the Charter which, in the spirit of subsidiarity, make reference to national laws and practices.

Explanation on Article [II-113] – Level of protection

This provision is intended to maintain the level of protection currently afforded within their respective scope by Union law, national law and international law. Owing to its importance, mention is made of the ECHR.

Explanation on Article [II-114] – Prohibition of abuse of rights

This Article corresponds to Article 17 of the ECHR:

"Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention."

Equally, the representatives of the governments of the Member States, meeting in an Intergovernmental Conference, in accordance with the ordinary revision procedure provided for in Article [IV-443] of the Treaty on European Union, may decide to amend the Treaties, including either to increase or to reduce the competences conferred on the Union in the said Treaties.

31. Declaration concerning the Charter of Fundamental Rights

The Charter of Fundamental Rights, which has legally binding force, confirms the fundamental rights guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States.

The Charter does not extend the field of application of Union law beyond the powers of the Union or establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks as defined by the Treaties.

32. Declaration concerning the common foreign and security policy

The Conference underlines that the provisions in the Treaty on European Union covering the Common Foreign and Security Policy, including the creation of the office of High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy and the establishment of an External Action Service, do not affect the responsibilities of the Member States, as they currently exist, for the formulation and conduct of their foreign policy nor of their national representation in third countries and international organisations.

The Conference also recalls that the provisions governing the Common Security and Defence Policy do not prejudice the specific character of the security and defence policy of the Member States.

It stresses that the EU and its Member States will remain bound by the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, by the primary responsibility of the Security Council and of its Members for the maintenance of international peace and security.

33. Declaration concerning the common foreign and security policy

In addition to the specific procedures referred to in [paragraph 1 of Article 11] of the Treaty on European Union, the Conference underlines that the provisions covering the Common Foreign and Security Policy including in relation to the High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy and the External Action Service will not affect the existing legal basis, responsibilities, and powers of each Member State in relation to the formulation and conduct of its foreign policy, its national diplomatic service, relations with third countries and participation in international organisations, including a Member State's membership of the Security Council of the UN.

50. Declaration by the Republic of Latvia and the Republic of Hungary on the spelling of the name of the single currency in the Treaties

Without prejudice to the unified spelling of the name of the single currency of the European Union referred to in the Treaties as displayed on the banknotes and on the coins, Latvia and Hungary declare that the spelling of the name of the single currency, including its derivatives as applied throughout the Latvian and Hungarian text of the Treaties, has no effect on the existing rules of the Latvian and the Hungarian languages.

51. Declaration by Poland on the Charter of Fundamental Rights

The Charter does not affect in any way the right of Member States to legislate in the sphere of public morality, family law, as well as the protection of human dignity and respect for human physical and moral integrity.

PROTOCOL (No 3)
ON THE EURO GROUP

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

DESIRING to promote conditions for stronger economic growth in the European Union and, to that end, to develop ever-closer coordination of economic policies within the euro area,

CONSCIOUS of the need to lay down special provisions for enhanced dialogue between the Member States whose currency is the euro, pending the euro becoming the currency of all Member States of the Union,

HAVE AGREED UPON the following provisions, which shall be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union:

Article 1

The Ministers of the Member States whose currency is the euro shall meet informally. Such meetings shall take place, when necessary, to discuss questions related to the specific responsibilities they share with regard to the single currency. The Commission shall take part in the meetings. The European Central Bank shall be invited to take part in such meetings, which shall be prepared by the representatives of the Ministers with responsibility for finance of the Member States whose currency is the euro and of the Commission.

Article 2

The Ministers of the Member States whose currency is the euro shall elect a president for two and a half years, by a majority of those Member States.

PROTOCOL (No 5)
RELATING TO ARTICLE 6(2)
OF THE TREATY ON EUROPEAN UNION
ON THE ACCESSION OF THE UNION TO THE EUROPEAN CONVENTION
ON THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

HAVE AGREED UPON the following provisions, which shall be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union:

Article 1

The agreement relating to the accession of the Union to the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (hereinafter referred to as the "European Convention") provided for in Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union shall make provision for preserving the specific characteristics of the Union and Union law, in particular with regard to:

- (a) the specific arrangements for the Union's possible participation in the control bodies of the European Convention;
- (b) the mechanisms necessary to ensure that proceedings by non-Member States and individual applications are correctly addressed to Member States and/or the Union as appropriate.

Article 2

The agreement referred to in Article 1 shall ensure that accession of the Union shall not affect the competences of the Union or the powers of its institutions. It shall ensure that nothing therein affects the situation of Member States in relation to the European Convention, in particular in relation to the Protocols thereto, measures taken by Member States derogating from the European Convention in accordance with Article 15 thereof and reservations to the European Convention made by Member States in accordance with Article 57 thereof.

Article 3

Nothing in the agreement referred to in Article 1 shall affect Article 292(2) of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union.

PROTOCOL (No 7)*ON THE APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS TO POLAND AND TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES,

WHEREAS in Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union, the Union recognises the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights;

WHEREAS the Charter is to be applied in strict accordance with the provisions of the aforementioned Article 6 and Title VII of the Charter itself;

WHEREAS the aforementioned Article 6 requires the Charter to be applied and interpreted by the courts of Poland and of the United Kingdom strictly in accordance with the explanations referred to in that Article;

WHEREAS the Charter contains both rights and principles;

WHEREAS the Charter contains both provisions which are civil and political in character and those which are economic and social in character;

WHEREAS the Charter reaffirms the rights, freedoms and principles recognised in the Union and makes those rights more visible, but does not create new rights or principles;

RECALLING the obligations devolving upon Poland and the United Kingdom under the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and Union law generally;

NOTING the wish of Poland and the United Kingdom to clarify certain aspects of the application of the Charter;

DESIROUS therefore of clarifying the application of the Charter in relation to the laws and administrative action of Poland and of the United Kingdom and of its justiciability within Poland and within the United Kingdom;

REAFFIRMING that references in this Protocol to the operation of specific provisions of the Charter are strictly without prejudice to the operation of other provisions of the Charter;

REAFFIRMING that this Protocol is without prejudice to the application of the Charter to other Member States;

REAFFIRMING that this Protocol is without prejudice to other obligations devolving upon Poland and the United Kingdom under the Treaty on European Union, the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and Union law generally,

HAVE AGREED UPON the following provisions, which shall be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union:

Article 1

1. The Charter does not extend the ability of the Court of Justice of the European Union, or any court or tribunal of Poland or of the United Kingdom, to find that the laws, regulations or administrative provisions, practices or action of Poland or of the United Kingdom are inconsistent with the fundamental rights, freedoms and principles that it reaffirms.
2. In particular, and for the avoidance of doubt, nothing in Title IV of the Charter creates justiciable rights applicable to Poland or the United Kingdom except in so far as Poland or the United Kingdom has provided for such rights in its national law.

Article 2

To the extent that a provision of the Charter refers to national laws and practices, it shall only apply to Poland or the United Kingdom to the extent that the rights or principles that it contains are recognised in the law or practices of Poland or of the United Kingdom.

11 AND 12 DECEMBER 2008

PRESIDENCY CONCLUSIONS

---

Delegations will find attached the revised version of the Presidency Conclusions of the Brussels European Council (11 and 12 December 2008).

Presidency conclusions - Brussels, 11 and 12 December 2008

The European Council on 11 and 12 December 2008 approved a European Economic Recovery Plan, equivalent to about 1,5 % of the GDP of the European Union (a figure amounting to around EUR 200 billion). The plan provides a common framework for the efforts made by Member States and by the European Union, with a view to ensuring consistency and maximising effectiveness. The European Council also reached agreement on the energy/climate change package which should enable this package to be finalised with the European Parliament by the end of the year. This decisive breakthrough will enable the European Union to honour the ambitious commitments entered into in this area in 2007 and to maintain its leading role in the search for an ambitious and comprehensive global agreement at Copenhagen next year. The European Council demonstrated its intent, through concrete decisions, to give new impetus to the European Security and Defence Policy in order to meet the new security challenges. Lastly, the European Council discussed the factors designed to respond to the concerns expressed during the Irish referendum and established an approach to enable the Treaty of Lisbon to come into force before the end of 2009.

The meeting of the European Council was preceded by an exposé by the President of the European Parliament, Mr Hans-Gert Pöttering, followed by an exchange of views.

I. The Treaty of Lisbon

1. The European Council re-affirms that the Treaty of Lisbon is considered necessary in order to help the enlarged Union to function more efficiently, more democratically and more effectively including in international affairs. With a view to enabling the Treaty to enter into force by the end of 2009, the European Council, while respecting the aims and objectives of the Treaties, has defined the following path.

Presidency conclusions - Brussels, 11 and 12 December 2008

2. On the composition of the Commission, the European Council recalls that the Treaties currently in force require that the number of Commissioners be reduced in 2009. The European Council agrees that provided the Treaty of Lisbon enters into force, a decision will be taken, in accordance with the necessary legal procedures, to the effect that the Commission shall continue to include one national of each Member State.

3. The European Council has carefully noted the other concerns of the Irish people presented by the Taoiseach as set out in Annex 1 relating to taxation policy, family, social and ethical issues, and Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP) with regard to Ireland's traditional policy of neutrality. The European Council agrees that, provided Ireland makes the commitment in paragraph 4, all of the concerns set out in the said statement shall be addressed to the mutual satisfaction of Ireland and the other Member States.

The necessary legal guarantees will be given on the following three points:

- nothing in the Treaty of Lisbon makes any change of any kind, for any Member State, to the extent or operation of the Union's competences in relation to taxation;

- the Treaty of Lisbon does not prejudice the security and defence policy of Member States, including Ireland's traditional policy of neutrality, and the obligations of most other Member States;

- a guarantee that the provisions of the Irish Constitution in relation to the right to life, education and the family are not in any way affected by the fact that the Treaty of Lisbon attributes legal status to the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights or by the justice and home affairs provisions of the said Treaty.

In addition, the high importance attached to the issues, including workers' rights, set out in paragraph (d) of Annex 1 will be confirmed.

Presidency conclusions - Brussels, 11 and 12 December 2008

---

4. In the light of the above commitments by the European Council, and conditional on the satisfactory completion of the detailed follow-on work by mid-2009 and on presumption of their satisfactory implementation, the Irish Government is committed to seeking ratification of the Treaty of Lisbon by the end of the term of the current Commission.

II. Economic and financial questions

5. The economic and financial crisis is a global crisis. That is why the European Union is working together with its international partners. The Summit held in Washington on 15 November 2008 at the initiative of the EU drew up an ambitious programme of work with a view to coordinated recovery of the world economy, more effective regulation of financial markets, better global governance and the rejection of protectionism. It should be implemented in accordance with the schedule laid down. The Council is requested to organise the preparation of this work together with the Commission and report to the Spring 2009 European Council on progress made, with a view to the next Summit on 2 April 2009 in London.
6. The EU has determined, in a coordinated manner, the emergency measures required to restore the smooth operation of the financial system and confidence among market players. The European Council stresses the need for Member States to be able to finalise these measures without delay. It calls for their full and rapid implementation, with the assistance of all parties involved, in accordance with the framework established by the Council on 2 December 2008. The European Council urges banks and financial institutions to make full use of the facilities granted to them to maintain and support lending to the economy and pass on key interest rate reductions to borrowers. It should be ensured in this context that measures within the common framework, particularly guarantee mechanisms, are actually applied so as to help lower the cost of financing for financial institutions, for the benefit of enterprises and households.

ANNEX 1*Statement of the Concerns of the Irish People on the Treaty of Lisbon as set out by the Taoiseach

- a) Ensuring that Ireland's requirements regarding maintenance of its traditional policy of neutrality are met;
- b) Ensuring that the terms of the Treaty of Lisbon will not affect the continued application of the provisions of the Irish Constitution in relation to the right to life, education and the family;
- c) Ensuring that in the area of taxation the Treaty of Lisbon makes no change of any kind to the extent or operation of the Union's competences;
- d) Confirming that the Union attaches high importance to:
  - social progress and the protection of workers' rights;
  - public services, as an indispensable instrument of social and regional cohesion;
  - the responsibility of Member States for the delivery of education and health services;
  - the essential role and wide discretion of national, regional and local Governments in providing, commissioning and organising non-economic services of general interest which is not affected by any provision of the Treaty of Lisbon, including those relating to the common commercial policy.

Delegations will find attached the revised version of the Presidency Conclusions of the Brussels European Council (18/19 June 2009).

---

In the midst of the deepest global recession since the Second World War the European Council again demonstrated the Union's determination to rise above present difficulties and to look to the future by taking a series of decisions intended to meet, rapidly and effectively, a wide range of challenges.

Convinced that the Lisbon Treaty will provide a better framework for action by the Union in a large number of fields, Heads of State or Government agreed on legal guarantees designed to respond to concerns raised by the Irish people, thus paving the way for them to be consulted again on that Treaty. Heads also took the first steps in the process of designating the President of the next Commission.

The economic crisis remains of paramount importance to citizens. The significant measures taken so far in support of the banking sector and the wider real economy have been successful in preventing financial meltdown and in beginning to restore the prospects for real growth. The European Council took a number of decisions intended to lead to the creation of a new financial supervisory architecture with the aim of protecting the European financial system from future risks and ensuring that the mistakes of the past can never be repeated. Top priority must be given to tackling the effects of the crisis on employment by helping people stay in work or find new jobs.

Successfully combating climate change will also contribute to moving to a sustainable economy and create new jobs. The European Council took further steps towards forging the EU's position for the Copenhagen Climate Change Conference at the end of the year. It sent out a strong signal of its intention to maintain a driving role in this process and called on the rest of the international Community to play its full part in bringing about a successful and ambitious outcome at Copenhagen.

European leaders expressed great concern at the dramatic situation in the Mediterranean area and agreed on a number of measures in order to help the Member States in the frontline to respond to the influx of illegal immigrants and to prevent further human tragedies.

The EU's role in the world remains of particular interest to European leaders. The European leaders underlined the strategic importance of transatlantic relations and welcomed the launch of the Eastern Partnership. They also stressed that the Middle East Peace Process remained a top priority for the EU in 2009. The European Council reconfirmed the great importance of stability and security in Afghanistan, Pakistan and the wider region. The European Council adopted declarations on Iran and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. In a declaration on Burma/Myanmar leaders called for the immediate and unconditional release of Aung San Suu Kyi.

---

The meeting of the European Council was preceded by an exposé by the President of the European Parliament, Mr Hans-Gert Pöttering, followed by an exchange of views. The European Council warmly thanked Mr Pöttering for the work accomplished during his tenure as President of the European Parliament.

I. Institutional issuesIreland and the Treaty of Lisbon

1. The European Council recalls that the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon requires ratification by each of the 27 Member States in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements. It reaffirms its wish to see the Treaty enter into force by the end of 2009.
2. Having carefully noted the concerns of the Irish people as set out by the Taoiseach, the European Council, at its meeting of 11-12 December 2008, agreed that, provided the Treaty of Lisbon enters into force, a decision would be taken, in accordance with the necessary legal procedures, to the effect that the Commission shall continue to include one national of each Member State.
3. The European Council also agreed that other concerns of the Irish people, as presented by the Taoiseach, relating to taxation policy, the right to life, education and the family, and Ireland's traditional policy of military neutrality, would be addressed to the mutual satisfaction of Ireland and the other Member States, by way of the necessary legal guarantees. It was also agreed that the high importance attached to a number of social issues, including workers' rights, would be confirmed.

Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 18/19 June 2009

---

4. Against this background, the European Council has agreed on the following set of arrangements, which are fully compatible with the Treaty, in order to provide reassurance and to respond to the concerns of the Irish people:
- (a) Decision of the Heads of State or Government of the 27 Member States of the European Union, meeting within the European Council, on the concerns of the Irish people on the Treaty of Lisbon (Annex 1);
  - (b) Solemn Declaration on Workers' Rights, Social Policy and other issues (Annex 2).

The European Council has also taken cognisance of the unilateral declaration of Ireland (Annex 3), which will be associated with the Irish instrument of ratification of the Treaty of Lisbon.

5. Regarding the Decision in Annex 1, the Heads of State or Government have declared that:
- (i) this Decision gives legal guarantee that certain matters of concern to the Irish people will be unaffected by the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon;
  - (ii) its content is fully compatible with the Treaty of Lisbon and will not necessitate any re-ratification of that Treaty;
  - (iii) the Decision is legally binding and will take effect on the date of entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon;
  - (iv) they will, at the time of the conclusion of the next accession Treaty, set out the provisions of the annexed Decision in a Protocol to be attached, in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, to the Treaty on European Union and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union;

ANNEX 1*DECISION OF THE HEADS OF STATE OR GOVERNMENT OF THE 27 MEMBER STATES OF THE EU, MEETING WITHIN THE EUROPEAN COUNCIL, ON THE CONCERNS OF THE IRISH PEOPLE ON THE TREATY OF LISBON

The Heads of State or Government of the 27 Member States of the European Union, whose Governments are signatories of the Treaty of Lisbon,

Taking note of the outcome of the Irish referendum of 12 June 2008 on the Treaty of Lisbon and of the concerns of the Irish people identified by the Taoiseach,

Desiring to address those concerns in conformity with that Treaty,

Having regard to the Conclusions of the European Council of 11-12 December 2008,

Have agreed on the following Decision:

SECTION A*RIGHT TO LIFE, FAMILY AND EDUCATION

Nothing in the Treaty of Lisbon attributing legal status to the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, or in the provisions of that Treaty in the area of Freedom, Security and Justice affects in any way the scope and applicability of the protection of the right to life in Article 40.3.1, 40.3.2 and 40.3.3, the protection of the family in Article 41 and the protection of the rights in respect of education in Articles 42 and 44.2.4 and 44.2.5 provided by the Constitution of Ireland.

Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 18/19 June 2009

---

SECTION B*TAXATION

Nothing in the Treaty of Lisbon makes any change of any kind, for any Member State, to the extent or operation of the competence of the European Union in relation to taxation.

SECTION C*SECURITY AND DEFENCE

The Union's action on the international scene is guided by the principles of democracy, the rule of law, the universality and indivisibility of human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for human dignity, the principles of equality and solidarity, and respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law.

The Union's common security and defence policy is an integral part of the common foreign and security policy and provides the Union with an operational capacity to undertake missions outside the Union for peace-keeping, conflict prevention and strengthening international security in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter.

It does not prejudice the security and defence policy of each Member State, including Ireland, or the obligations of any Member State.

The Treaty of Lisbon does not affect or prejudice Ireland's traditional policy of military neutrality.

It will be for Member States - including Ireland, acting in a spirit of solidarity and without prejudice to its traditional policy of military neutrality - to determine the nature of aid or assistance to be provided to a Member State which is the object of a terrorist attack or the victim of armed aggression on its territory.

Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 18/19 June 2009

---

Any decision to move to a common defence will require a unanimous decision of the European Council. It would be a matter for the Member States, including Ireland, to decide, in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty of Lisbon and with their respective constitutional requirements, whether or not to adopt a common defence.

Nothing in this Section affects or prejudices the position or policy of any other Member State on security and defence.

It is also a matter for each Member State to decide, in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty of Lisbon and any domestic legal requirements, whether to participate in permanent structured cooperation or the European Defence Agency.

The Treaty of Lisbon does not provide for the creation of a European army or for conscription to any military formation.

It does not affect the right of Ireland or any other Member State to determine the nature and volume of its defence and security expenditure and the nature of its defence capabilities.

It will be a matter for Ireland or any other Member State, to decide, in accordance with any domestic legal requirements, whether or not to participate in any military operation.

SECTION D*FINAL PROVISIONS

This decision shall take effect on the same date as the Treaty of Lisbon.

---

SOLEMN DECLARATION ON WORKERS' RIGHTS, SOCIAL POLICY AND OTHER ISSUES

The European Council confirms the high importance which the Union attaches to:

- social progress and the protection of workers' rights;
- public services;
- the responsibility of Member States for the delivery of education and health services;
- the essential role and wide discretion of national, regional and local authorities in providing, commissioning and organising services of general economic interest.

In doing so, it underlines the importance of respecting the overall framework and provisions of the EU Treaties.

To underline this, it recalls that the Treaties as modified by the Treaty of Lisbon:

- establish an internal market and aim at working for the sustainable development of Europe based on balanced economic growth and price stability, a highly competitive social market economy, aiming at full employment and social progress, and a high level of protection and improvement of the quality of the environment;
- give expression to the Union's values;
- recognise the rights, freedoms and principles set out in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union in accordance with Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union;

Presidency Conclusions – Brussels, 18/19 June 2009

---

- aim to combat social exclusion and discrimination, and to promote social justice and protection, equality between women and men, solidarity between generations and protection of the rights of the child;
- oblige the Union, when defining and implementing its policies and activities, to take into account requirements linked to the promotion of a high level of employment, the guarantee of adequate social protection, the fight against social exclusion, and a high level of education, training and protection of human health;
- include, as a shared value of the Union, the essential role and the wide discretion of national, regional and local authorities in providing, commissioning and organising services of general economic interest as closely as possible to the needs of the users;
- do not affect in any way the competence of Member States to provide, commission and organise non-economic services of general interest;
- provide that the Council, when acting in the area of common commercial policy, must act unanimously when negotiating and concluding international agreements in the field of trade in social, education and health services, where those agreements risk seriously disturbing the national organisation of such services and prejudicing the responsibility of Member States to deliver them; and
- provide that the Union recognises and promotes the role of the social partners at the level of the European Union, and facilitates dialogue between them, taking account of the diversity of national systems and respecting the autonomy of social partners.

DECISIONS

EUROPEAN COUNCIL DECISION

of 11 May 2012

on the examination by a conference of representatives of the governments of the Member States of the amendment to the Treaties proposed by the Irish Government in the form of a Protocol on the concerns of the Irish people on the Treaty of Lisbon, to be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and not to convene a Convention

(2013/106/EU)

THE EUROPEAN COUNCIL,

Having regard to the Treaty on European Union, and in particular Article 48(3) thereof,

Having regard to the proposal for the amendment of the Treaties submitted to the Council by the Irish Government on 20 July 2011 and submitted to the European Council by the Council on 12 October 2011,

Having regard to the consent of the European Parliament not to convene a Convention <sup>(1)</sup>,

Having regard to the opinion of the European Parliament <sup>(2)</sup>,

After notification of the proposal to the national parliaments,

Having regard to the opinion of the European Commission <sup>(3)</sup>,

Whereas:

(1) On 18-19 June 2009, the Heads of State or Government of the 27 Member States of the European Union, meeting within the European Council, adopted a Decision on the concerns of the Irish people on the Treaty of Lisbon and declared that, at the time of the conclusion of the next accession Treaty, they would set out the provisions of that Decision in a protocol to be annexed, in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, to the Treaty on European Union (TEU) and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU).

(2) On 20 July 2011, the Irish Government submitted, in accordance with the first sentence of Article 48(2) TEU, a proposal for the amendment of the Treaties in the form of a Protocol on the concerns of the Irish people on the Treaty of Lisbon.

(3) On 12 October 2011, in accordance with the third sentence of Article 48(2) TEU, the proposal of the Irish Government was submitted by the Council to the European Council. It was also notified to the national parliaments.

(4) At its meeting on 23 October 2011, the European Council decided, in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, to consult the European Parliament and the Commission on the proposed amendments. It also decided, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, to request the consent of the European Parliament not to convene a Convention given that, in its view, the convening of such Convention was not justified by the extent of the proposed amendments.

(5) On 18 April 2012, the European Parliament adopted a favourable opinion on the proposed amendments. It also gave its consent not to convene a Convention on account of this not being justified by the extent of the proposed amendments. On 4 May 2012, the Commission adopted a favourable opinion on the proposed amendments.

(6) Therefore, it is appropriate that, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, the European Council decide that a conference of representatives of the governments of the Member States should examine the amendments proposed by the Irish Government, define the terms of reference of the conference and decide not to convene a Convention,

on the examination by a conference of representatives of the Governments of the Member States of the amendment to the Treaties proposed by the Czech Government in the form of a Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic, to be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and not to convene a Convention

THE EUROPEAN COUNCIL,

Having regard to the Treaty on European Union, and in particular Article 48(3) thereof,

Having regard to the proposal for the amendment of the Treaties submitted to the Council by the Czech Government on 5 September 2011 and submitted to the European Council by the Council on 12 October 2011,

Having regard to the consent of the European Parliament not to convene a Convention<sup>1</sup>,Having regard to the opinion of the European Parliament<sup>2</sup>,

Whereas:

- (1) On 29 and 30 October 2009, the Heads of State or Government of the 27 Member States of the European Union, meeting within the European Council, agreed that they would, at the time of the conclusion of the next Accession Treaty and in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, attach the Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic, to the Treaty on European Union (TEU) and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU).
- (2) On 5 September 2011, the Czech Government submitted, in accordance with the first sentence of Article 48(2) TEU, a proposal for the amendment of the Treaties in the form of a Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic.
- (3) On 12 October 2011, in accordance with the third sentence of Article 48(2) TEU, the proposal of the Czech Government was submitted by the Council to the European Council. It was also notified to the national parliaments.
- (4) At its meeting on 23 October 2011, the European Council decided, in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, to consult the European Parliament and the Commission on the proposed amendments. It also decided, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, to request the consent of the European Parliament not to convene a Convention given that, in its view, the convening of such Convention was not justified by the extent of the proposed amendments.

- (5) On 4 May 2012, the Commission adopted a favourable opinion on the proposed amendments. On 22 May 2013, the European Parliament adopted its opinion, calling on the European Council not to examine the proposed amendment. At the same time it gave its consent not to convene a Convention on account of this not being justified by the extent of the proposed amendments.
- (6) After the date of its accession, Croatia should be included in the list of High Contracting Parties to the proposed Protocol.
- (7) It is appropriate that, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, the European Council decide that a conference of representatives of the governments of the Member States should examine the amendments proposed by the Czech Government, define the terms of reference of that conference and decide not to convene a Convention,

HAS ADOPTED THIS DECISION:

Article 1

The European Council hereby decides that a conference of representatives of the governments of the Member States shall examine the amendments proposed by the Czech Government in the form of a Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic, to be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the functioning of the European Union, in the wording as attached to this Decision, which will constitute the terms of reference of that conference. In view of the extent of the proposed amendments, a convention under Article 48(3) of the Treaty on European Union shall not be convened.

Ref. No.: 783/2014 – SZEU/PKÚ

Dian Theo,
Your Excellency,

As you are well aware, on 5 September 2011 the Czech government submitted to the Council a proposal for the amendment of the Treaties in the form of a Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic ("Protocol"), as agreed in October 2009 by the Heads of State or Government, meeting within the European Council.

The Government of the Czech Republic thoroughly re-examined the Protocol, inter alia with due regard to the latest case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union related to the applicability of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU. On 19 February 2014 the Government adopted a Resolution to discontinue the procedure for the conclusion of the Protocol.

In this regard, I would respectfully ask you to circulate this information among the Permanent Representatives of the Member States of the European Union and, given the fact that on 25 June 2013 the General Affairs Council recommended to the European Council to adopt a decision regarding the Protocol, to take the necessary steps to withdraw this recommendation.

Yours sincerely,

Subject: Withdrawal of the Recommendation for a European Council Decision on the examination by a conference of representatives of the governments of the Member States of the amendment to the Treaties proposed by the Czech Government in the form of a Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic, to be annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and not to convene a Convention

- Follow-up to the Resolution of the Czech Republic

1. By a letter dated 7 March 2014<sup>1</sup>, the Czech Republic indicated that after having thoroughly re-examined the Protocol, inter alia with due regard to the latest case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union related to the applicability of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU, the government of the Czech Republic has adopted a Resolution to discontinue the procedure for the conclusion of the Protocol and requested that steps be taken to withdraw the Recommendation of the Council to the European Council to adopt a draft Decision on the examination by a conference of representatives of the Governments of the Member States on the amendment to the Treaties proposed by the Czech Government.

2. The background of that process has been as follows:

- On 29 and 30 October 2009, the Heads of State or Government of the 27 Member States of the European Union, meeting within the European Council, agreed that they would, at the time of the conclusion of the next Accession Treaty and in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, attach the Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic, to the Treaty on European Union (TEU) and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU).
- On 5 September 2011, the Czech government, in accordance with the first sentence of Article 48(2) TEU, submitted to the Council a proposal for the amendment of the Treaties in the form of a Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic.
- On 12 October 2011, in accordance with the third sentence of Article 48(2) TEU, the proposal of the Czech government was submitted by the Council to the European Council. It was also notified to the national parliaments.
- At its meeting of 23 October 2011, the European Council decided, in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, to consult the European Parliament and the Commission on the proposed amendments. The European Council also decided, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 48(3) TEU, to request the consent of the European Parliament not to convene a Convention given that, in its view, the convening of such Convention was not justified by the extent of the proposed amendments.
- The European Commission adopted a favourable opinion on 4 May 2012.
- On 22 May 2013 the European Parliament adopted its opinion calling on the European Council not to examine the proposed amendment. At the same time it gave its consent not to convene a Convention, as this was not justified by the extent of the proposed amendments.
- On 25 June 2013<sup>2</sup>, the Council recommended to the European Council to adopt the draft Decision on the examination by a conference of representatives of the governments of the Member States of the amendment to the Treaties proposed by the Czech government.

3. Against this background, the Czech government requested by the letter set out in document 8383/14 the discontinuation of the procedure. This request was examined by the ANTICI Group on 8 April 2014 and it was agreed to suggest to withdraw the recommendation to amend the Treaties.
  4. Following the request of the Czech Republic, the Council is invited to withdraw its recommendation of 25 June 2013 for a European Council Decision on the examination by a conference of representatives of the Governments of the Member States of the amendment to the Treaties proposed by the Czech Government in the form of a Protocol on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to the Czech Republic, thus bringing an end to the procedure which has become devoid of purpose.
