22. It is also to be noted that the draft articles of the Corpus Juris, the attempt to provide a criminal code and procedure for the Community gave the following rights to the accused

: -Article 29 Rights of the Accused

23. In any proceedings brought for an offence as set out above (Articles 1 to 8), the accused enjoys the rights of the defence guaranteed by Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights and Article 10 of the UN International Covenant on civil and political rights.

24. A person may not be heard as a witness but must be treated as accused from the point when any step is taken establishing, denouncing or revealing the existence of clear and consistent evidence of guilt and, at the latest, from the first questioning by an authority aware of the existence of such evidence.

25. From the time of his first questioning, the accused has the right to know the content of the charges against him, the right to be assisted by a defence lawyer of his choice, and, if necessary, an interpreter.

26. State funded legal representation. Almost all Union states provide that when a citizen is detained for questioning the citizen has, in general, the right to demand a lawyer of his choice be contacted and to refuse to answer questions addressed to him until he has received legal advice. In “best practice” states such as Great Britain, Denmark and the Netherlands state funded legal advice and representation will be forthcoming at this stage if the person detained has no means to pay a lawyer. Without some form of duty solicitor scheme this is unlikely to be logistically feasible. e.g. In the Irish Republic, where there does not appear to be a duty solicitors scheme, a lawyer may sometimes be available and will operate under a post facto legal aid authorisation though this is not a rule.

27. Interpretation and translation. There is general agreement by “best practice” countries that there must be a right to be assisted from the outset by the services of a competent interpreter. In other countries it is commonplace for incompetent, ill-prepared or poorly skilled interpreters to be provided. It is paramount for the accused in a foreign jurisdiction to have direct and full knowledge of the charges to enable him to mount an effective defence. Furthermore, it is not sufficient for an accused to have verbal interpretation only of the indictment. If there is any risk of the accused being put at a disadvantage he must be provided with a written translation of the indictment in a language which he understands and all statements should be tape recorded in both languages for verification in case of doubt.

European Convention of Human Rights.

28. Signed in 1950, and having come into force in 1953, the European Convention for the protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR) is our regional human rights treaty and all current members of the Community have ratified it. The standards of the European Convention are currently the benchmark for judicial standards within the Union.

29. One of the main problems in considering the Convention is that adjudged by “best practice” there are also basic shortcomings in the standards set by articles 5 and 6 of the convention even after taking due account of the decisions of the court.

30. State funded legal representation Article 6 limits the scope of the right to a lawyer, in general, to the trial and preparation for it. There is a right to (6b) “adequate time and facilities for the preparation of the defence” and to (6d) “obtain witnesses and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses during the legal process” (though not necessarily at trial).

31. All citizens also have a right to Legal Aid if they cannot afford a lawyer and are facing serious criminal offences. Under Article 6(3) of the Convention everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following rights ‘to be given it (legal assistance) free when the interests of justice require....’

32. Other sections of the article and decisions by the European Court of Human Rights lay down the standards required. Legal Aid must be “ practical and effective” and not merely “theoretical or illusory” and where the Legal Aid lawyer proves incompetent or for any other reason incapable of carrying out an adequate defence, the authorities should intervene. (Article v Italy).

33. Interpretation and translation. Article 6 (3) provides that anyone charged with a criminal offence has the right, inter alia, “to be informed properly in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him ” and “To have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court.”

34. A decision of the European Court of Human Rights (Kamasinski v Austria) related specifically to the provision of court interpretation services. It emphasises that all written documents, including statements of evidence, necessary to the defendant in putting his case adequately before the court should be translated. It also states that the provision of an interpreter alone is not enough. Those providing the service are responsible for the standard and competence of the interpreter. It is now ten years since that decision was delivered. The standards that it demands are ignored throughout the Union save in the “best practice” countries. We have yet to be consulted in a case in France or Spain where the stipulations as to translation of documents have been observed.

Mediterranean

35. We are particularly concerned that in countries bordering the Mediterranean (Greece, Italy, Portugal and Spain) the provision of competent state financed lawyers and appropriate interpretation services to citizens in serious trouble with the law would appear to be the exception rather than the rule.

36. State funded legal representation. The main continuously funded project of the trust has been a closely interlinked data bank and Europeanisation project designed to locate competent criminal lawyers with languages throughout the European Union. By March 1998, a correspondent and representative network of 600 lawyers had been achieved with some presence in every country of the Union. Much general information has been gained on Legal Aid systems from the specially designed questionnaire employed. In Northern European countries such as U.K and Germany those who have a dedicated Legal Aid practice are in the majority (70% and 67% respectively). In the Mediterranean countries this is unknown for experienced lawyers. In these states Legal Aid rates of pay are so low, if available, that only inexperienced lawyers will conduct cases.

37. Interpretation and translation Our own survey Communication within the Legal Process, a report on interpreting and translation in the courts of Europe, sets out the findings of an 18-month survey across 5 representative countries of the European Union. The survey was required to establish how communication is handled by the courts and investigating authorities when one or more parties are not native speakers. The guiding principle was the degree of access to justice without discrimination against non-native citizens. The general results were more disturbing than anticipated. Pay for interpreters working in the highly specialised arena of the courtroom is, in general so low that only the very dedicated or the untrained will present themselves for work. In Mediterranean countries appropriate training courses for legal interpreters are non-existent.

The Need for an effective charter

38. The European Legal Space is a creature of the successive treaties Rome, Maastricht and Amsterdam that have created the present parameters of the European Union. As such it is subject to the built in limitations of those treaties, the principles of sovereignty and subsidiarity as expounded through the treaties and the various European Councils.

39. We would argue that fundamental freedoms and human rights are not subject to these constraints and indeed the measures required to ensure that the citizen has adequate protection against abuse cannot be formulated within them. The abusers of fundamental rights are, in general, public servants of the sovereign national state utilising powers entrusted to them. It is surely for this reason that the appropriate international instruments of human rights and fundamental freedoms, once ratified, carry supranational authority and have embodied within their systems international tribunals to adjudicate on what is essentially state misconduct against individuals.

40. One of the essential questions for the Community is whether the local current standards and enforcement system in the fields of fundamental rights are adequate not only for the immediate present but for the foreseeable future. In other words does the European Convention of Human Rights and the machinery provided by the European Court of Human Rights provide effective protection to the citizen in general “best practice” terms within the Union? We have already illustrated in some detail the variable geometry of national standards in the fundamental rights to legal representation and interpretation and it is clear that the European Convention of Human Rights does not represent an adequate standard for the Union.

41. Further, the question of equality before the law for citizens within the Union cannot essentially be tackled without some sort of declaration coupled with an enforcement procedure and this too is argues for the need for an effective Charter.

42. By 2010, we are likely to increase the membership of the Union by 12 nation states mainly from Central and Eastern Europe. The trusts casework experience of a number of these nations demonstrates virtual non recognition of fundamental rights to justice in most of these nations court systems. They are all members of the European Council and subject to the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights. We cannot foresee improvement within a generation unless the citizens of these states have an unfettered right to make direct appeal to a new effective system under the Charter.

Some essential Characteristics of an effective Charter

43. We have already remarked that the trust is essentially a practitioners organisation and would not presume to give evidence outside its sphere of competence. It is not for us to give advice on the clauses or indeed the wording of the proposed charter. Our concern is with the practical effectiveness of the Charter and its enforcement mechanism in ensuring that the citizens fundamental rights are protected

The Charter as a development in international law .

44. We consider it important that the Charter be considered as the latest in a line of international instruments giving ever more detailed protection to the citizen involved in the determination of criminal accusations against him from investigation to completion of the trial process. We illustrate this by way of the provisions in international instruments for the protection of the citizen in the process of arrest and detention. A similar exercise, with the same result, could be performed for the trial process

45. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights came into force in 1948. One of the foundation documents of the United Nations, it is considered generally applicable to the conduct of all nation states. It contains articles on arrest, detention and fair trial. Article 9 states “No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention.”

46. The International Covenant On Civil and Political Rights Adopted by UN general assembly 1966 and came into force 1976. This covenant is a formal legal agreement which recognises in more detail the fundamental rights and freedoms set out in the Universal Declaration of Human rights. For example the provisions on arrest and detention. Article 9.1 No one shall be deprived of his liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedures as are established by law. Article 9.2 Anyone who is arrested shall be informed, at the time of arrest, of the reasons for his arrest and shall be promptly informed of any charges against him. Article 9.3 Anyone arrested or detained on a criminal charge shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release. It shall not be the general rule that persons awaiting trial shall be detained in custody, but release may be subject to guarantees to appear for trial, at any other stage of the judicial proceedings, and, should occasion arise, for execution of the judgement. Article 9.4 Anyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that that court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of his detention and order his release if the detention is not lawful.

47. The Principles for the Protection of all Persons Under Any Form of Detection or Imprisonment. This U.N resolution has already been referred to (paragraph 12) These principles go into far more detail on protection than the ICCPR. e.g. Principle 12 gives detailed requirements for recording the circumstances of arrest , consequent detention and the duty to communicate these records in writing to the arrested citizen and his legal representative.

48. Similar protective codes covering the same ground have been adopted on a national level within the Union. The Criminal Evidence Act in England and Wales has its equivalent in other “Best Practice” countries.

The relationship between Charter and Convention

49. We would assert that possible conflict between rights to apply to Luxembourg (Charter) and Strasbourg (Convention) are more apparent than real. It is not generally realised that coterminous Jurisdictions already exist in states of the European Union and the aggrieved accused has the choice between pursuing his remedies in Strasbourg or in Geneva under the provisions of the ICCPR before the UN commission for Human Rights.

50. The citizen is on election and confined to pursuing his remedies in only one of the fora. We would assume that such rules would also apply to the Charter.

Enforcing Rights under the Charter

51. Without effective mechanisms for adjudicating citizens grievances and supplying appropriate remedies the charter will become a mere declaration of moral principle. The European Court of Human Rights has now been in existence for 45 years and provides useful guidance to those considering the characteristics required by the machinery of court adjudication and enforcement of rights granted under the Charter. Problems that have not been solved by the ECHR that require attention include the following:

52. Initiating proceedings. In “Best Practice” countries abuse of fundamental freedoms are almost invariably resolved in domestic courts and within their appellate structures. However outside this group such problems cannot be safely left to the domestic structures. E.g. We have had several cases in France where persons who at worst might have been involved as minor soft drug couriers were held incommunicado from their spouses and nearest family for several months (in one case 15 months) despite appeals and contrary to the conventions on family life. In candidate nations such as Bulgaria abuse of basic rights to fair trial are commonplace for native and foreigner alike and the appellate system does not assist.

53. Further, the obligation to exhaust all domestic remedies before cases can be considered by the European Court of Human Rights, whilst administratively convenient, has often caused intolerable delay to the victimised and added unnecessary months and years of imprisonment. For example, the recent case of Venables and Thompson v The United Kingdom was adjudicated upon eight years after the original incident and some seven years after the original trial

54. It is for these reasons that citizen must be allowed direct access to the court (which we assume to be the European Court of Justice) provided he has shown a suitable prima facie case and he is short of an effective remedy. There will be a need for a filter to prevent frivolous or vexatious cases clogging up the court procedure. One solution to give effective remedies at national level might be to create a special court to consider complaints by aggrieved citizens under the Charter but this is dependent on the willingness of the nation state concerned to incorporate the Charter as part of national law. Since the European Court of Justice has to cope with these problems anyway it is again worth building on experience.

Powers of the court

55. Injunctive relief. A suitable fast track procedure must be available for appropriate cases of urgency. Decisions made by the ECHR on such topics as trial delay and provisional liberty do not provide effective relief for the individual concerned.

56. Declaratory powers. In cases which may require changes of law enforcement or trial procedure, whether in a particular state, a number of states or throughout the Union, a mechanism should be formulated for the monitoring of such changes with penalties for non compliance; presumably via an appropriate European institution. This is of course an automatic consequence of decisions by the European Court of Justice.

The aftermath of the decision in Kamasinski v Austria (Paragraph. 33) may be considered typical of the state of affairs under the European Convention. As a result of the case, which should have promoted rapid and effective changes in legal interpretation and translation procedures and practice throughout Europe, the effect was limited. Austria took steps to comply with the ruling. The Netherlands took steps to investigate whether changes in their practice were required. Certain northern European countries were already complying with the standards. The great majority of Council members have not complied.

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW

57. We have already stated that the Charter requires a declaration that all sojourners must be treated as equal before the law in national legal systems. Such a declaration will have the effect of the outlawing of discriminatory practices. Some examples of current discriminatory practices brought to our attention are:-

- Refusal of provisional liberty on the grounds of “lack of community ties” where the citizen is arrested outside his own country.

- Inadequate interpretation or translation facilities handicapping those who are not familiar with the native language.
- Trials in absentia of citizens from other Union countries.

CONCLUSIONS

The need for a Charter

1. For the past 45 Years. There has been a consensus that Europe needs a “charter” of fundamental rights together with adjudication and enforcement mechanisms. The European Convention of Human Rights and its mechanisms is the current response to this demand. What we attempt to demonstrate in our evidence is that in relation to the administration of Justice it is wholly inadequate.

2. We have considered at some length (paragraphs 28-37) the current standards set by the European Convention of Human Rights to two vital fundamental rights: that of effective legal advice and representation for the indigent and the provision of interpretation and translation services to the accused and court. It is clear that the standards set by the ECHR in these fields are obsolescent. Crucially, (Paragraph 17) there is as yet no general standard that the majority of the states of the Union, including the United Kingdom, consider adequate for their own citizens within their own geographical boundaries: it is to the Charter that one must look for the creation of such a standard. The Union has a pressing need for a modern and effective Charter.

3. Further, (Paragraph 41) the question of equality before the law for citizens within the Union cannot essentially be tackled without some sort of declaration coupled with an enforcement procedure and this too argues for the need for an effective Charter.

4. We believe that subsidiarity and sovereignty have no role to play in the scope and application of fundamental individual rights. Indeed they are restricting factors. “Subsidiarity” is for example perhaps the rationale behind the requirement that applicants to the European Court of Human Rights must have exhausted all local remedies as a precondition for their application: it weakens the effectiveness of the court (Paragraph 53). “Sovereignty” is the classic defence of governments throughout the ages against any outside interference with governmental abuse of the fundamental rights of their own natives.

The status of the Charter

5. Unless the Charter has substantive legal effect many citizens will not enjoy the fundamental freedoms to the standard they expect in their native lands when they travel to other parts of the Union.

6. We consider that the Charter requires a separate Treaty of equivalent status to the ECHR and ICCPR. We have discussed (Paragraphs 38,39) the limitations imposed by the fundamental Treaties of the Union not least the principles of sovereignty and subsidiarity as expounded through the Treaties and the various European Councils. Again, we would argue that fundamental freedoms and human rights are not subject to these constraints and indeed the measures required to ensure that the citizen has adequate protection against abuse cannot be formulated within them.

7. We have discussed the shortcomings of current mechanisms of enforcement under ECHR and the Court of Human Rights Justice (Paragraphs 52-56.). The “Charter court” must be of necessity the Court of Justice. We consider the arguments for individual direct access to the courts to be compelling (paragraphs 52-54). We would hope that the incorporation of Charter provisions within National legal systems would follow the precedent set by the pattern of incorporation of the European Convention of Human Rights and thereby take some of the burden off the Court of Justice. Indeed we have made a suggestion that special National courts might be considered (Paragraph 54). We see no real conflict or concern with coterminous jurisdiction with the European Court of Human Rights at Strasbourg (Paragraph 49,50).

The scope of the Charter

8.The Charter should impose obligations on all national governments and European institutions. .The fundamental freedoms with regard to due process should apply to all sojourners (citizens, immigrants and visitors alike). We should emphasise here that whilst one recognises there will be sections of the Charter that only apply to rights of citizens (freedom of movement, residence and rights to work) the rights to Fair Trial cannot be so confined. We are unaware of anywhere in the civilised world where a two tier system of criminal justice is countenanced (Paragraph 14.)

The content of the Charter.

9.The trust is a practitioners organisation utilising international treaty law in the specialist sector of the administration of criminal justice. Our observations should be considered as directly applicable to our sphere of competence, though they may have more general implications for the content of the new Charter and its enforcement machinery.

10.However, with regard to “Due Process” problems and on examination of the Cologne Councils catalogue of derivative sources, we would argue that it is from the “rights derived from the constitutional traditions of the (Best Practice) member states” that the provisions of the Treaty we consider desirable can be evolved.

11.Having particular regard to the stasis in development of standards under the ECHR and the enormous practical difficulties of modernisation through protocol we would particularly encourage the concept of the charter as a living document with sufficient flexibility to change with the times.

12.A possible model for this approach in the field of due process would be the incorporation of a code of principles and conduct similar in kind to the U.N 1988 resolution on principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detection or imprisonment. Some States already have such codes in whole or in part, including the United kingdom.

13. Advancing standards in the development of state funded legal representation and professional standards in legal interpretation and translation as well as such technological developments as mechanical recording of law enforcement interviewing and evidence by close circuit television could then be incorporated as they arise.

Stephen Jakobi, January 2000.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 21 January 2000CHARTE 4110/00*CONTRIB 8*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find enclosed the report "Property rights within european law" by the European Landowners Organisation (ELO)¹.

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English language.

European

ELO 3/99

Landowners

Organisation

PROPERTY RIGHTS WITHIN EUROPEAN LAW

1. INTRODUCTION

The development of property rights is a cornerstone of our cultural, political, economic and social system. Securing property rights and ensuring they work smoothly is a necessity which reflects the general interest. The Union has a role to play in this.

- 1.1 While property rights constitute an essential pillar of the common market, article 222 of the Treaty of Rome strangely leaves each member state the care to regulate it; "This Treaty shall in no way prejudice the rules in member states governing the system of property ownership."

The contents of article 222 of the EEC Treaty result from the will of member states to continue to decide alone the nationalisation of their private companies and the privatisation of their public companies. This legal vacuum within the Treaty of Rome has forced the court in Luxembourg to develop a jurisprudence in matters relating to the protection of property rights which is inspired in part from the judgements of the European Court of Human rights, in Strasbourg because article 222 does in no way contradict the development of a European property right.

- 1.2. The European Court of Justice in Luxembourg has only very progressively been brought to state that, since it had been entrusted with upholding the law, it had to scrutinise the fundamental rights recognised and guaranteed by the constitutions of the member states.

Thanks to this jurisprudence, the Court of Justice has taken several important steps with regard to the protection of property rights, thereby underlining the ambiguity of the Treaty.

Thus the Hauer Ruling, made in 1979, specifies that restrictions based on the general interest should not go further than needed, and should not touch the substance of property rights. In 1989 the Court went even further in the Wachauf case, which stated that when the infringement of property rights is too important, financial compensation must be paid.

In so doing, the European Court in Luxembourg offered what can be called a "minimum standard of protection".

- 1.3. The European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg has approached the issue of property rights from a somewhat different angle. Whereas the Court in Luxembourg continues to interpret property rights as a fundamental principle of the organisation of the common market, the Strasbourg Court sees it as a fundamental right for the individual.
- 1.4. Finally, the Amsterdam Treaty offers the prospect of new developments. The EU in this Treaty commits itself to take into account the European Convention of Human Rights and, consequently, property rights.

However, article 164 of the Treaty of Rome specifies that the Court of Justice (in Luxembourg) shall ensure that, in the interpretation and application of this Treaty, the law is observed. The Court should thus be brought to ensure the implementation of the principles of the European Convention. It is not impossible that in the future we will see a competition between the two Courts with regard to the implementation of the Convention.

2. CURRENT SITUATION

A. DISTORTIONS IN COMPETITION

- 2.1 Articles 222 and 164 of the Treaty of Rome, completed by article 6-1 of the EU Treaty. (F and F1 of the Amsterdam Treaty) provide some necessary guarantees in relation to human rights, and thus to the recognition of property rights. Their lack of coherence underlines the extent to which property rights are not managed as a simple clear and uniform concept in European law.

European law is economic in nature, and thus is essentially preoccupied with the regulation of market practices, forgetting that owners of means of production – whatever these are – lie behind the market. European law can thus be compared to a cathedral builder who, faced with the magnitude of his achievements, and out of breath, is not able to install at its summit the keystone; as long as this is not done, the whole construction is in danger.

- 2.2 Some will state rightly that according to the Treaty of Rome property rights are, through subsidiarity, to be dealt with by the member state. The experience to date demonstrates that even if this initial concept is coherent, this situation generates not only a failure to take into account property rights but moreover is the source of distortions in competition such as defined by articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty.

While the intention is to build the Union, freedom has been left to each member state through article 222 of the Treaty to build its own system on bases which are sometimes very different. At the same time, owners and economic actors have to implement the competition rules outlined in articles 85 and 86.

B. SUBSIDIARITY

- 2.3 The Maastricht Treaty setting up subsidiarity leaves the door open to widely different methods of implementation of community regulations by the member states.
- 2.4 The main criticism made with regard to the protection of property as currently defined is that the various impacts which European directives have on property rights are not examined in sufficient depth, and fail to consider the situation as whole. These various impacts on property may be acceptable taken separately, but accumulated constraints often create an unbearable load. Everyone knows that, in Lilliput, Gulliver was not held down by a thick rope but by many very thin ropes. Does the same not apply to the landowner who, because of the many rural and environmental regulations he needs to respect, finds himself trapped in a system which deprives him of his freedom? The strength of this comparison does not rest only in the image of the very thin ropes, but equally in the fact that Gulliver could be trapped because he was deeply asleep. Democratic freedom needs the participation of everyone in order not to fall asleep.

These "ropes" notably arise from the limitations deriving from the CAP (e.g. production quotas) from the EC's initiatives on environmental protection based on articles 130R and S of the Treaty, and very soon perhaps from the Community's initiatives on environmental liability, etc.

3. EXAMPLES

3.1 CAP Measures

The nature of CAP is market intervention with the allocation of rights, duties and subsidies to producers, not the property owners. The quota systems imposed have had significant impact. An example can be found in the application in the UK of the Sheep Annual Premium and Suckler Cow Premium Quota Regulations (No. 3567/92 and 3886/92). By allocating premium rights to producers with the option of trading them away from the holding, the owners' asset, as represented in the value of the land, is diminished. A challenge was made to certain articles of this regulation at the European Court of Justice (case C-38/94). The outcome was not satisfactory from the owners' view. The arguments were mainly on the legal meaning of articles that were intended to compensate owners for loss but in practice failed to do so. The point remains, that despite protestation to the contrary, the European Union does impose regulation that has a direct and negative impact on owners' rights in property. In this particular case, where there is no alternative enterprise choice to sheep farming in the hills, the transfer away from the land of quota rights by a tenant leaves the owner with a reduced asset value – his land – usually in favour of another owner of land.

Through subsidiarity, a margin of manoeuvre is given to member states to implement European regulation. This leads to situations in which European citizens in the same situation are treated unequally, depending on their geographical location. Thus, as we have just mentioned, British landowners receive no compensation for the loss and value of the land when the tenant farmer sells sheep premium rights away from the holding. On the other hand, in the Netherlands, when dairy quota are sold the tenant and the landowner share the proceeds of the sale.

In the same vein, member states have taken measures to implement European regulations on ceasing dairy production (Regulations 1336/86 and 2321/86). For instance, France have adopted implementation decrees regarding grants to producers who undertake to abandon definitively dairy production, and this without any consultation of the landowner or any compensation for the loss of value of the holding. However, as in the United Kingdom where, for topographic reasons only sheep can graze on the hills, some regions in France can only produce milk or meat. In the case of dairy production, taking away what has in practice become a right to produce, amounts to removing the only possible agricultural production on certain soils and consequently the income and profits which can be derived from them. The unavoidable consequence of this is the loss of value of the holding, which is borne by the landowner alone, regardless of the fact that he will no longer be able to rent his land or farm it directly.

3.2 Environmental Liability (Draft White Paper)

The aspect of this proposed European legislation that gives us most concern is the further EU erosion of private property rights by adding layers of negative regulation to existing Member State laws. All the independent evidence, both legal and economic, has demonstrated that there is no case for EU harmonisation in terms of further legislation.

We are concerned particularly about the proposal to give NGOs the powers (and taxpayer funds) to bring cases against owners and Member State regulating authorities. In all the member states, provision exists to sue others for actions of negligence and nuisance. The problems related to the unowned environment are dealt with by existing state regulatory authorities. Extending such powers to unelected organisations is an unjustifiable attack on the interests of property owners. It is against the public interest and contrary to the Western democratic systems.

Landowners in particular are concerned by this draft directive because of the responsibilities that may be imposed on them in the future while they will not necessarily have polluted the land themselves.

Two explicit examples can be used to illustrate this:

- Inputs spread on agricultural land. Landowners who do not farm the land (notably in France and Belgium) are refused by law (national law) the possibility to accept or refuse the spreading of inputs considered as potentially dangerous on their land, because the law states that this is a normal management act undertaken by the farmer. It is quite likely that a few years hence, acting in implementation of the environmental liability directive and certainly other regulations, the criteria determining dangerous levels of certain inputs will have been modified in line with changing scientific knowledge. It is landowners who will be held responsible for pollutions (on land and outputs) and who in any case will have to bear the consequences, in the shape of lost revenues because agricultural production will no longer be allowed on the land, an obligation to decontaminate the land and the loss of value of the asset or even its negative value.
- GMOs (genetically modified organisms): dangers of contamination exist there too: contamination of the soils, cross pollinisation to other crops, land being declared unfit for agricultural production, etc.

3.3. Habitats Directive – Natura 2000 (Directive 92/43/EEC)

This Directive which imposes land-use designation on private sites throughout the European Union causes much concern to landowners. There has been a failure by the Commission to consult adequately with landowners throughout the process. This is also true of many member states (one exception being Sweden). The recent activity of NGOs submitting additional "shadow lists" to the Commission is adding to the perception that the Commission are involved in a process of European State nationalisation of the use of private land.

The whole process has been badly managed by the Commission. They have failed to understand that they cannot simply draw lines on maps throughout Europe to define protected areas, and demand prescriptive land management practices without thought to the impact on private interests, and the expertise and resources needed to fulfil the objectives of the designation.

Our criticism is that private property rights have been, and continue to be ignored.

Subsidiarity also means that a great degree of freedom is left to member states to implement the Natura 2000 network. Disparities and ultimately distortions of competition can be observed. Sweden for instance has a legislation providing compensation for landowners who will accept to bring their holding within the Natura 2000 network and will consequently have to accept constraints to reach the stated objectives. However, in other member states, large areas have been designated sometimes without even consulting the main parties concerned by this classification, and with no plan to compensate them. Although costs may have been evaluated, funding mechanisms have still not been set up.

This has very important consequences for landowners as they are the only ones who will have to bear these constraints in the general interest. For instance French tribunals have refused to compensate fish farmers whose production has been eaten by cormorants, a species protected by the Birds directive, and who have caused damages estimated at the time to more than 6 million French francs. This protection, which derives directly from the implementation of the Birds directive, does not take into account the legitimate interests of individuals. Another example is the implementation of the same directives in the Flemish region of Belgium, which completely bans the shooting of water-fowl on some of its territory, whereas other member states do not forbid it (is the Birds directive limited only to the Flemish region?). Individuals have seen the income from their mostly marshy land vanish, and can no longer afford its maintenance and management with a view to accommodating waterfowl. No compensation has been planned to make good the loss of income as well as the loss of value of the holding, as the Flemish authorities justify their action by the obligation they have to transpose the Birds directive into national legislation.

Must subsidiarity degenerate into a series of measures resulting in unequal treatment of European citizens? The losses then take place in a complete legal vacuum, where European regulations are adopted without the slightest care for the fundamental rights of citizens, and without any control.

The consequence of this is that many owners of marshy land in the Flemish region, who were interested in shooting, have no longer provided any irrigation, and the wetlands have reverted to scrub, with a much lower biodiversity value.

3.4 Nitrates Directive

There are many aspects about this Directive that give rise to concern to landowners – not the least the weakness of the public health case that underpins it. But the point that we make, in the context of this paper, is its effect on the owner's choice of land-use activity.

The implementation of the Directive has meant that for owners within Nitrates Vulnerable Zones, they are denied the freedom of enterprise choice. In many cases, this has resulted in reduced income or increased cost without compensation. In the UK, before the implementation of this directive, owners in Nitrates Sensitive Areas were compensated for losses due to change in land-use practice, and it was on a voluntary basis (but very well supported). The EU Directive has effectively removed entirely an appropriate voluntary provision with an expropriation of property rights without compensation.

Another example is that of the implementation of this Directive in the Flemish region. Some zones have been classified as vulnerable, with an obligation to implement the "zero fertilizer" rule, or to only keep two heads of livestock per hectare. In such conditions, agricultural holdings are no longer profitable, and from 2003 will disappear. Once again, this sort of regulation takes no account of the legitimate interest of the parties, and no compensation is planned for losses in income and in asset value. The Flemish region had taken measures with regard to compensation in its decrees on farmyard manure in 1995 and 1999. These measures are currently being contested by the Commission, which among other reasons refuses to endorse a payment of compensation for loss in asset value because it alleges that there has been no such loss.

However, the refusal to grant such compensation creates distortions in competition and discriminates between landowners who have to implement such measures and the others who do not have to, as can be seen in other EU countries.

The only motivation for the decree on farmyard manure taken by the Flemish region is to reach the objectives defined in the Directive. If it didn't do this, it would be put in the docks by the Commission (which is anyway what has happened) and could be condemned by the European Court of Justice. National regulation is adopted only because member states are obliged to transpose European Directives to reach their objectives by all useful means.

On the one hand European institutions shelter behind the principle of subsidiarity to avoid having to take the burden of implementing regulations, and argue that it is up to member states to take responsibility for the laws and decrees they adopt. "The Commission notes that changes concerning the relative value of land in wetlands, natural zones and other regions in Flanders are due to the legislation adopted by the Belgium authorities with a view to fulfilling their obligations in the framework of the Nitrates Directive" (In: invitation to submit observations concerning subsidy C12/99-199/c-129/02;1 – page 8).

How can the affected owners get recognition of their fundamental rights as recognised by article F of the Amsterdam Treaty? There is a complete legal vacuum here which ignores the fundamental rights of European citizens and is contrary to the principle of an EU based on law. In this specific case, article 11 of the Belgian Constitution is blocked by the ban set by the Commission to give fair and prior compensation because, according to the Commission, this indemnity constitutes a distortion in competition.

4. GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF ARTICLE 164 OF THE TREATY OF ROME

Article 164 of the Treaty of Rome was used by the Court in Luxembourg to derive general principles which, once again, underline the lack of coherent treatment of this subject.

Developments in the jurisprudence of the Court of justice in Luxembourg on the protection of property rights were made possible by the interpretation given by the Court to article 164 of the Treaty. This article specifies that "The Court of justice shall ensure that in the interpretation and application of this Treaty the law is observed". Progressively however, the Court has been brought to declare that the respect of the law meant the respect of the fundamental rights recognised and guaranteed by the constitutions of the Member State.

In the Nold Ruling of 14 May 1974 (Rec.1974,481) the Court recognises property rights as a fundamental right, protected by Community law. The Court refers to the international instruments which member states have adopted or simply cooperate with and state that the Court "was under the obligation to draw its inspiration from the common constitutional traditions of the member states. Finally the ruling contains a new statement according to which the Court could not, therefore, admit measures incompatible with the fundamental rights recognised and guaranteed by the constitutions" of the member states.

The Hauer ruling of 13 December 1979 (REC.1979,3727) constitutes a decisive step in the evolution of the Court's jurisprudence with regard to the protection of property rights. The case concerned a German landowner, Mrs Liselotte Hauer, who wanted to plant vineyards on her land and whose request to do so was refused, notably because of Regulation 1162/76 EEC forbidding the planting of new vineyards during a certain period. For the first time, the Court quoted Article 1 of the First supplemental protocol of the Convention for the protection of human rights and interpreted as if it were a part of European Union legislation.

The Court used the principle of proportionality as a basic principle for the protection of property. The ruling stated that restrictions based on the general interest should go no further than needed, and should not touch the substance of property rights. The Hauer ruling is remarkable because of the new principles it sets down, but unfortunately can be criticised for the way in which it implements these principles in practice.

The Court makes a distinction between what constitutes a taking and what constitutes regulation of usage. In this specific case the Court decided that the restriction did not constitute a taking as the owner could still use her land in other ways.

But how many uses are there? Does not a ban on planting vineyard on sloping land constitute a huge loss? What other uses are there for this land? At the very least the Court should have done what it decided later in the Wachauf case (ruling of 13 July 1989.REC.1989.2633). The Court considered in this ruling that a substantial limitation to the uses of a good had to be compensated financially. Following these developments in the jurisprudence of the Court of Justice, it is today recognised that there is a minimum protection of property rights within the European Union.

5. ARTICLE 1 OF THE SUPPLEMENTAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION FOR THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL LIBERTIES

Article 1 states that any physical or moral person has a right to property protection. Nobody may have his property taken except for public interest purposes and pursuant to generally accepted international principles of law. It also states that these provisions do not limit the right of the state to put forward any legislation they consider necessary to regulate property use in the general interest or to ensure the payment of taxes or other contributions or fines. The European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg has produced an abundant jurisprudence concerning the protection of property rights and the interpretation of article 1 of the first supplemental protocol which however doesn't give enough protection. One example of this is the famous Sporrong et Lönnroth Ruling of 23 September 1982 against the Swedish State. Land belonging to the couple Sporrong Lönnroth had been frozen for 23 years by a threat of expropriation. In its ruling, the Court considered that, in the absence of a formal expropriation, it had to look beyond appearances and analyse the reality of the case (ruling paragraph 63) in order to determine whether a fair balance was maintained between the requirements of the general interest of the community and the imperatives of the protection of the fundamental rights of the individual (ruling paragraph 69.2) and this even though the delivery and renewal of the expropriation permits respected Swedish law. (Ruling paras 67.3 and 68).

In other terms, the authorities cannot abuse the right they have to "freeze" the normal use of property during a period exceeding the necessary delay to conduct a feasibility study for the work envisaged. Upon the expiry of this period, the public authority must either proceed with the expropriations and give to those who have been expropriated the "fair indemnity" planned by the law or give up the project, or maintain the project and indemnify the landowner for the losses incurred by the freeze being extended beyond a reasonable period. Unfortunately one must remember that most citizens are unable to afford the luxury of such an appeal: the required budgets mean that justice becomes a class justice.

If European law was clear on these matters, a citizen would only need to appeal to its national jurisdiction.

6. THE EU'S CALLING TO PROTECT FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The transformation of the EEC into a European Union, as well as the signing of the Amsterdam Treaty have deeply altered the initial concept that the EEC had no interest in fundamental rights to the extent that, today, it seems to be one of the requirements of the Union to respect them.

If this requirement were only skin-deep, and if, in reality, the protection of fundamental rights were viewed as a constraint imposed on the Union, there is then a risk that the Union will contribute to restrict these rights rather than develop them.

The Union does not have the option to select between different fundamental rights as, by their very essence, the international community has recognised their indivisibility. 8

The Treaty on European Union (Article 6.1) specifies that : «The Union is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law».

Beyond a simple reminder of fundamental rights, the vocation to protect them also implies securing their development. This means, by implication, that the European legislator will no longer be able to leave property rights to the subsidiarity of Member States.

There is a need to become aware that the general assertion of the principle of respect of fundamental rights has a much greater scope than the recognition of certain rights which are precisely defined within the body of the treaty itself.

This reminder of fundamental rights contributes to assimilating the text of the Treaty to a real Constitution. A Constitution is increasingly defined today as a text which not only organises the relationship between public bodies but more importantly proclaims the rights and liberties of individuals, with a guaranteed legal sanction.

7. PERSPECTIVES AND SUGGESTIONS

To get out of this dead-end, the objective must be the explicit recognition by Community law of the fundamental role played by property rights also in the organisation of the single market. Article 222 must be strengthened and the Treaty must include, on the one hand the protection of property rights and, on the other hand the associated right to a full compensation in case of expropriation or in case of an abusive limitation of the use of the asset.

In this process, two avenues are worth exploring.

A. Coherence

It is vital that the national legislation which define the use of property rights and especially those that restrict its use, are coherent.

This does not mean that legislation must be harmonised but that the underlying concept of compensation be applied as an integrated element in the protection of property rights throughout the Union.

Because of the single market, the distortions between national legislation on matters such as expropriation, protection of the environment, agricultural policy, national and regional development, etc. must be avoided in order to ensure an "equal treatment".

B. Motivation and evaluation of the cost of restrictive measures

Another avenue which could be explored is the setting up of an obligation to motivate measures restricting property rights. This obligation should bear not only on the usefulness of the proposed measure, but equally on its cost. It would entail, prior to certain regulations, to request an impact assessment study and to calculate notably the costs and reductions in value that this or that measure would impose on owners. This obligation to motivate and to calculate the impact on landholdings has been in force in the United States for more than ten years

An increased protection of the environment must go hand in hand with a strengthening of the protection of property in order to ensure a positive co-operation of the owner in the interest of public interest. The protection of property rights in the European Union must evolve and go beyond the existing framework of the jurisprudence of the Court in Luxembourg. The objective to reach – based on article 1 of the first supplemental protocol of the Convention for the protection of human rights – is a modification of article 222 of the Treaty of Rome with the objective including property rights among the fundamental rights of community law. Failing that change to the Treaty, an appropriate use of existing Community instruments could result in a noticeable improvement of the protection of property at European level. This would constitute a step forward in the search for an integration of property rights on the one hand and economic, social, and environmental policies, on the other hand.

Even though all the attacks on property rights originate, through subsidiarity, in member state legislation, they are still due each time to Community regulations. It is the legal vacuum of article 222 and the principle of subsidiarity which have harmful consequences for property rights.

The wide variety in the rulings of the Court of Justice and the lack of coherent jurisprudence clearly demonstrate that these problems derive from the Treaty, while the Court of Human Rights is more coherent.

For the ELO, the new Intergovernmental Conference and the drafting of a charter on fundamental rights are an occasion to fill once and for all this legal vacuum.

As fundamental rights are indivisible, it will no longer be possible to avoid this debate.

ELO POLICY GROUP
05 October 1999
A0842434

EUROPEAN LANDOWNERS ORGANISATION - ORGANISATION EUROPEENE DE LA PROPRIETE RURALE
Avenue Pasteur, 23
B-1300 Wavre
Tél: (0)10 232 900 Fax: (0)10 232 909
E-mail : elo@skynet.be

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 27 January 2000 (28.01)
(OR. f)*CHARTE 4113/00*CONTRIB 9*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find attached the draft Opinion of the Committee of the Regions.

COM-Inst.Aff./008

Brussels, 25 November 1999

DRAFT OPINION of the Committee of the Regions
on the
European Charter of Fundamental Rights

Rapporteurs: Mr Bore (UK, PSE) and Mrs du Granrut (F, EPP)

N.B.: This document will be discussed at the next plenary session on 16 and 17 February 2000. The Bureau's standing orders regarding the tabling of amendments (Rule 8.4) specify that amendments must reach the general secretariat not later than three working days before the opening of the plenary session, which in this case means by 5 p.m. (Brussels time) on 11 February (fax: + 32 2 282 23 26). They must be submitted in writing and bear the names of the members sponsoring the amendment.

DOCUMENT SUBMITTED FOR TRANSLATION: 22 November 1999

The Committee of the Regions,

HAVING REGARD TO the decision of the Bureau of 15 September 1999 to draw up, in accordance with the fifth paragraph of Article 265 of the Treaty establishing the European Community, an opinion on the subject, and to instruct the Commission for Institutional Affairs to prepare the Committee's work on the subject;

HAVING REGARD TO the draft opinion adopted by the Commission for Institutional Affairs on 27 October 1999 (rapporteurs: Mr Bore (UK, PSE) and Mrs du Granrut (F, PPE));

WHEREAS the European Council feels there is a need, at the present stage in the development of the Union, to establish a European Charter of Fundamental Rights (Annex IV of the Presidency Conclusions of the Cologne European Council on 3 and 4 June 1999), adopted the following opinion at its ... plenary session of ... (meeting of ...):

1. General comments

1.1. The Committee of the Regions has always stressed the need to strengthen citizenship and participatory democracy in the European Union, and the importance of formulating the rights of European citizens to attain this objective; it takes the view that, as the representative of regional and local authorities - the bodies which are closest to the citizens - and as the guarantor of the subsidiarity principle, it should make its contribution to drawing up the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the citizens of the European Union.

1.2. Basic rights constitute the bedrock of a society based on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental liberties and the rule of law, as enshrined in the constitutional traditions which are common to the Member States.

The European Union's capacity to help build a society which corresponds to these aspirations largely depends on citizens claiming these rights - i.e. accepting them and above all exercising them.

1.3. The Committee of the Regions recognises the fast-changing character of the European Union and the growing challenges which it faces at the beginning of the 21st century. The last four decades have seen the gradual development of the European Union. Developing in several phases, an increasing number of European countries have pooled their resources and achieved together a very significant degree of economic growth, social stability and political harmony, without managing to generate the sense of commonality among the citizens of Europe needed to realise the full potential of a social and political Europe which guarantees fundamental rights.

The last fifteen years have seen an enormous acceleration of economic integration with the development of the single European market and a common European economic area. It is due to be further accelerated by the creation in 1999 and putting into circulation in 2002 of the single currency, the Euro.

1.4. A number of steps have been taken towards greater social cohesion and increased political cooperation. These have found expression in the establishment and development of new European institutions such as a directly elected Parliament and the Committee of the Regions and in the introduction of European-wide social and civil guarantees.

At the Council of Europe's initiative, a European Convention on Human Rights was drawn up, allowing for cases to be brought, and there is a European Social Charter which can be used for reference, but without the right to resort to legal action in the event of non-compliance.

It had been envisaged that the European Union as such would be a signatory of the European Convention on Human Rights. This is now excluded by Opinion 2/94 of the European Court of Justice, dated 28 March 1996, which states that this would involve the Community in a distinct international institutional system, that it would introduce all the provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights into the Community legal system, and finally that at the present stage of Community law the European Union does not have the powers to accede to the Convention.

1.5. Up to now, fundamental rights with respect to acts of sovereignty of the Community institutions have been safeguarded in the first place by the European Court of Justice. At an early stage, the Court of Justice established the binding force of fundamental rights as unwritten principles of law at EU level too. The Treaty bases for safeguarding fundamental rights in the EU were expanded and strengthened by the Maastricht and Amsterdam Treaties. The Treaty of Amsterdam, signed on 2 October 1997 and inaugurated on 1 May 1999, represents an important stage in the consolidation of the fundamental rights (cf. Article 6(2) of the consolidated Treaties). However, these wider issues have lagged behind the developments in the economic area.

Moreover, while the Treaty reaffirms the commitment of the Union to fundamental rights, it includes gaps and inconsistencies with regard to the guarantee of these rights or of those linked to the objectives set out.

Acknowledging the existence of these gaps and inconsistencies provides an opportunity to correct them and arrive at a clear, unequivocal text on the basic rights of European citizens and the ways to guarantee them.

1.6. The 1990s have seen signs of greater citizen uncertainty about these developments towards European integration. These have been reflected most recently in the very low turnout for the elections to the European Parliament in June 1999. A quickening in the pace of economic and financial integration, combined with a lessening of confidence by citizens in European institutions, represents a dangerous scenario for the future of the European Union. It requires swift action to bring the social, political and cultural needs of citizens into correspondence with the changing economic realities. This makes the call for a Charter of Fundamental Rights for European citizens all the more important and urgent. However, to address the issue of a lack of public confidence, this Charter needs to be a simple, straightforward, easily understood document, free from the bureaucratic and legalistic jargon that often mars formal constitutional documents.

At a time when the Treaties of Maastricht and Amsterdam have granted new powers to the European Community, giving rise to wider responsibilities in terms of fundamental rights for the Community, and when the Community has chosen not to subscribe to the European Convention on Human Rights, it seems urgent for the Community to take up a clear position on the basic rights which it wishes to see guaranteed to citizens of the Union, following from the scope of its action.

The Committee of the Regions is of the view that the incorporation of these rights into European Union Treaties would give a clear indication of Member States' commitment to building a Union based on the values of liberty, equality and solidarity.

The Committee points out that historically declarations of citizens' rights are preambles to Constitutions and have their raison d'être in them, as the basis of the powers needed for the exercise of those rights.

The Committee stresses the constitutional nature of the Charter because it feels that the process of drawing up a charter of rights cannot and must not be separated from the institutional reform to be undertaken by the next Intergovernmental Conference

2. The content of the Charter

The Charter of Fundamental Rights for citizens of the European Union must cover three fields: individual rights, economic, social and cultural rights, and civil and political rights.

The first field should cover the basic rights covered by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and more specifically by the European Convention on Human Rights.

2.1. Rights linked to the person

- Right to life, right not to be subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment. Right not to be subjected to slavery, servitude or forced labour, right to freedom of movement.
- Right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, freedom of expression and information.
- Right to a proper civil or penal trial.
- Right to privacy regarding private life, personal data, correspondence and home life.
- Right to housing, right to property and to respect for property.

2.2. Economic, social and cultural rights

- Right to work, to freely negotiated working conditions, to a fair wage, to a reasonable length of notice of termination of employment, to appropriate vocational guidance, training and re-training.
- Right to freedom of movement and establishment for workers and to equality of treatment with workers of the country concerned.
- Right to equality of opportunity and treatment, without discrimination based on race, sex, colour, ethnic, national or social origin, culture, language, religion, political beliefs, family situation, sexual orientation, age or disability.
- Right to set up trade union organisations and right to collective bargaining, information, consultation, and participation for decisions affecting workers' interests.
- Right to social security, social and medical assistance, and the benefit of social services.
- Right to education, right to freedom to choose an occupation and right to continuing vocational training.
- Rights linked to economic and entrepreneurial activity: right to property, right of competition, right to conclude contracts, etc.

2.3. Civil and political rights

- Right to vote in local and European Parliament elections for non-nationals from other EU countries in the Member State where they are resident.
- Right to set up European political parties, right of petition, association and demonstration.
- Right to check on legality of administrative action.
- Right of minorities to protection for their religion, language and culture.

2.4. Clearly, these rights cover a very broad canvas. The crucial task is to make them meaningful and practical, so that they give people a clear sense of the rights they enjoy across the European Union as a whole.

It is not enough to define rights. The principle of their justiciability must be established and appeal procedures set up for those who wish to claim them before national courts or before the Court of Justice of the European Communities.

2.5. As well as detailing these rights, the Charter should contain, as appropriate, complementary clauses expanding on particular aspects. This opinion from the Committee of the Regions wishes to highlight a number of areas where this is felt to be necessary.

2.5.1. In an increasingly multi-cultural, multi-racial, multi-ethnic European Union equal opportunities is a "horizontal theme" which cuts across a number of these rights. Thus, the Bill of Rights should guarantee the right to equality of opportunity and treatment without any distinction of race, ethnic, national or social origin, language, religion, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, age or disability.

2.5.2. In the light of the conclusions of the Tampere European Council on 15 and 16 October 1999 and its resolutions on the integration of third country nationals, the Committee of the Regions believes that the body responsible for drawing up the Charter of Fundamental Rights should examine the issue of whether long-term residents should be granted a set of rights that resemble as closely as possible those of EU citizens.

2.5.3. The right to a fair, public hearing needs to be reinforced by the creation of common legal standards and a common sense of justice throughout the European Union. Given the huge and growing degree of travel within the European Union for work, leisure and tourism, a set of common standards to ensure a common level of justice and fairness should be applicable across all EU Member States. We give two examples: a guarantee that effective legal advice and where necessary, language interpretation services are available for EU citizens arrested outside their home Member State; the establishment of a common system of European bail so that people are not arrested and held on remand in cells in another country for lengthy periods.

2.5.4. Finally, with regard to the rights of private individuals, the new charter of rights needs to recognise the contemporary reality of patterns of divorce, separation and remarriage within modern European society. The new charter should make clear the rights of mothers and fathers to have fair and equitable access to their children in the event of divorce and/or separation; and indeed the rights of children to be able to see both of their parents if they so wish on a regular basis. There should be common rules governing access for parents and children across the European Union.

2.6. Beside these four specific areas where the introduction of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into European law will give clear civil and social rights to residents of the Union and help to match the growing common European economic space with a complementary social, civic and political space, the Committee of the Regions wishes to stress three issues related to European citizenship.

2.6.1. The Charter will enable each national of an EU Member State to identify his specific European citizenship as involving new rights and expressing membership of the new entity known as the European Union.

European citizenship is a major challenge for the European Union; it is not an alternative to national citizenship; it is at once complementary, unique and resolutely political.

For the Committee of the Regions the Charter of Fundamental Rights is the foundation of European citizenship.

2.6.2. The Committee of the Regions takes the view that the fundamental rights have a constitutional nature, enabling individuals who enjoy them to appeal to the relevant courts, where appropriate national courts and the Court of Justice of the European Communities, every time such a right is threatened.

In the case of the European Union, the Committee of the Regions takes the view that since the fundamental rights have a constitutional value of their own, and create a homogeneous, coherent Community legal order, they justify the application of a "constituent text".

2.6.3. The fundamental rights therefore have an essential political dimension, because they link the democratic basis of political society with its limitation by the recognition of citizens' rights.

The Committee of the Regions is convinced that this right of participation in public life, exercised first and foremost by electing local authorities, is the first and indispensable link in a chain of political responsibilities in which the citizen must participate and feel involved.

Once the citizen feels a part of the chain of power emanating from him and extending to the summit of the European Union, he will accept the constraints of the "res-publica" and the decisions of those whom he has entrusted with it.

The fundamental rights thus lay the basis for participatory democracy, which respects the citizen's power and that of the various levels of authority to which he delegates his power.

3. The future process

3.1. European Union leaders have agreed to the proposal for the drawing up of a Charter of Fundamental Rights. The preparation of the Charter is the responsibility of a working group made up of representatives of the governments of the Member States, a person appointed by the Commission President, MEPs and national parliamentarians. The Committee of the Regions is to be consulted in this procedure and has been invited to speak to the forum, but it believes that it should be more fully involved and be given observer status.

In compliance with the subsidiarity principle, the forum advocated by the European Council for drawing up the charter should be wide enough to allow every level concerned, that is Europe, the Member States and local and regional authorities, to obtain a hearing for their views on the content of the European Charter of Fundamental Rights and in particular enable the public to express views and have access to information prior to decisions being taken by Europe and the Member States.

3.2. The proposal to develop a Charter of Fundamental Rights is an important step forward by the European Union. The COR intends to participate fully in this process and to take forward the ideas contained within this opinion into that wider forum. The COR representatives will highlight the main themes in this opinion during the forum's deliberations. At the same time they will stress the importance for the final document not only to be incorporated within the EU Treaties, but also to be produced as a stand-alone document highlighting the key elements that form Europe's bill of political, social and civil rights.

4. Conclusion

The European Union is very much at a watershed in its development. It is vitally important that urgent steps are taken to involve the public in decision-making so as to boost public confidence in both European institutions and the European Union as a whole. Making clear, in very practical and straightforward terms, the key economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights which the Union guarantees to all of its members is the urgent task. The development of a Charter which gives expression to a citizens' and people's Europe, which will complement the common economic space which is currently being developed, is the way forward. This should be the clear goal and objective of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. That is the task which the Committee of the Regions and its representatives will argue for in the months ahead.

4.2. The Committee of the Regions comes out firmly in favour of a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the citizens of the European Union, which will give the Union homogeneous, coherent Community law with constitutional force.

4.3. On the basis of this new participatory citizenship, it will then be a matter of considering the need to set up democratically - going beyond the Community acquis - a supra-national constituent power with the aim of uniting Europeans around a great common project, respecting national identities and regional diversities and capable of creating a Community of shared destiny.

4.4. The European Union, governed by law and based on adherence to common values which are legally guaranteed, is henceforth indispensable, and must be enshrined in the next Treaty on Union.

Brussels, ...

The President
of the Committee of the Regions

The Acting Secretary-General
of the
Committee of the Regions

Manfred Dammeyer

Vincenzo Falcone

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 28 January 2000CHARTE 4114/00*CONTRIB 10*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find enclosed the opinion from the Political Affairs Committee of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English language.

Parliamentary Assembly
Assemblée parlementaire

Council of Europe / Conseil de l'Europe
F-67075 Strasbourg Cedex
Tel : +33 (0)3 88 41 20 00
Fax : +33 (0)3 88 41 27 76
E-mail : pace@coe.int
<http://stars.coe.fr>

Doc. 8615

17 January 2000

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Opinion ¹

Political Affairs Committee

Rapporteur: Mr Clerfayt, Belgium, Liberal, Democratic and Reformers' Group

I. INTRODUCTION

1. We should be careful not to regard the drafting of a Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union as a purely legal matter. Political and legal aspects are inextricably linked. It could even be said that many view the charter as the culmination, or at least a very important stage, of a long political process leading to a strengthened European Union.

2. The early stages of European integration were dominated by the quarrel between the federalists (also known as the constitutionalists), who wanted to build Europe in one go, on the basis of a single text, and the functionalists, who preferred to advance at a more gradual pace. The realism of the latter group prevailed and, from the creation of the Common Market to the present day, Europe has developed through a multitude of summits, political declarations and treaties.

3. Human rights occupy a modest and at times uncertain position in this rich but inevitably vague kaleidoscope of texts, although over the years the concept has assumed greater importance through the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities (ECJ), so-called “human rights clauses” in co-operation agreements with third countries and a number of new provisions contained in the Maastricht and Amsterdam treaties. We are entitled to wonder whether we are now witnessing the resurgence of the constitutionalists, who view the codification of fundamental rights as an invaluable opportunity to bring greater coherence to the diverse mass of texts and equip the Union with a fundamental text that may act as an embryonic constitution.

¹ See Doc. 8611

4. Before discussing the merits and drawbacks of this initiative, we should stress, however, that other arguments appear to be combining in favour of the idea to draw up a charter. Since the start of European Union's enlargement process, the Union appears to have adopted a new stance, taking a more severe attitude² with regard to the human rights situation in applicant states.

II. WHAT EXACTLY IS MEANT BY A CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS?

5. We shall not dwell on the background to the decisions that led the European Union to set up a body with the specific task of drawing up a charter. A detailed description of this is given in various Assembly documents, in particular the report by the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights. However, we should examine some of the texts and declarations that have been produced in connection with the process if we are to gain a better understanding of the instigators' intentions, the stated objectives and, in some cases, the contradictions that are evident in these texts.

6. It might be expected that the charter's supporters should have converging medium-term aims. However, as far as content, method and form are concerned, these aims appear unfocused. As things stand, work on the charter is characterised by the profusion of priorities that have been set or are envisaged. The special body therefore has an extremely tough task ahead of it.

7. In a resolution adopted in early 1996 – in other words, before the intergovernmental conference that was to prepare the amendment to the Treaty on European Union – the European Parliament stressed the importance of the section on human rights and listed a number of rights which should feature in the amended treaty. These included both “traditional” rights and other rights regarded as more innovative, such as protection against abuse, sexual harassment and anti-Semitic violence. The cultural and linguistic rights of minorities were also mentioned. In the same text, alongside the amendment of treaties, the Parliament urged the European Union to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).

8. The rest is history: the European Parliament's requests came to nothing, because in the meantime the ECJ delivered its famous opinion 2/94³ of 28 March 1996. Hence the matter was not dealt with in an amendment to the Amsterdam Treaty, the European Union was unable to accede to the ECHR and the question was simply put on the back burner until, on the initiative of the German government, it resurfaced, firstly in Cologne in June and then at the Tampere summit in October 1999.

9. Careful reading of the conclusions of the European Council meeting in Tampere reveals a wide range of proposals aimed at paving the way for an “area of freedom, security and justice”. The text attempts to reconcile the imperatives of internal order within the Union and its requirements with regard to external relations. The draft charter has a role to play in this impressive search for coherence and is described as being closely linked to the three areas mentioned above, although no indication of its content is given. However, the individual sections of the Tampere conclusions

² Article 7 of the Amsterdam Treaty (Article F.1 of the Treaty on European Union) provides that the Council may take measures against a member state failing to respect human rights by suspending the rights deriving from the application of the treaty, including voting rights within the Council. This article may be regarded as a “shield” against any abuses by future members.

³ For the wording, see Doc. 8611, paragraph 15.

contain frequent references to matters such as asylum, immigration, access to justice, family law and extradition.

10. At a press conference a few days before the adoption of the Tampere conclusions, the two co-rapporteurs of the European Parliament, MM Duff and Voggenhuber, reiterated the latter's views that the text should not be an empty declaration with no obligations but should be innovative and legally binding. Mr Voggenhuber added that there were an increasing number of "empty rights" within the Union because texts had not been translated into tangible rights. He felt that the future charter should also contain provisions on refugees, bioethics and data protection.

11. The management and labour and NGO representatives, in particular the representatives of the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC), Amnesty International and the International Federation of Human Rights Leagues (FIDH), appeared to be unanimous in favouring the inclusion of social rights in the charter. The ETUC felt that the charter should be an integral part of the treaties forming the European Union and should include not only provisions taken from existing international legal instruments, but also new provisions dealing with "transnational trade union rights". In a preliminary communication to the European Council, Amnesty International and the FIDH stated that a charter would be pointless unless it offered better protection than the ECHR. They warned the Council that if such a project were to be embarked upon, discrimination in the treatment of non-EU citizens should be avoided. While certain "political" rights (for example, concerning elections) could be made available to European Union citizens only, "civil" rights should be guaranteed for everyone.

12. The various viewpoints summarised above⁴ clearly illustrate that at present, a consensus on the content of the charter would appear to be a long way off. Although the idea itself is praiseworthy, its boundaries are vague and there is therefore a danger that it might become a forum for a variety of far-fetched ambitions and interest groups. Are we to infer from this that the project cannot meet our expectations because it conveys a fragmentary notion of the purpose of the Union? We shall return to this point.

III. THE EUROPEAN UNION'S COMMITMENT TO HUMAN RIGHTS – A FEW POTENTIAL PROBLEMS

13. The statement made in paragraph 5 of Mr Magnusson's report that the Communities have always shown an interest in human rights is not entirely correct. It is a well-known fact that the texts instituting the Communities did not contain a single reference to human rights, with the exception of freedom of movement. Not until the 1986 Single European Act was the subject mentioned explicitly.

14. It should not be forgotten that originally, the ECSC first of all and then the EEC were primarily economic concepts. Initially, therefore, the body of Community law was built up around principles of economic liberalism and not equality and non-discrimination. In contrast, it was always difficult to incorporate concepts relating to social rights, for example, into an economics-oriented legal system.

15. We should applaud the efforts made in recent years within the Union to move away from and indeed transcend the by and large economic philosophy of the initial years. The institution of a "European citizenship", the inclusion into the Maastricht Treaty of strengthened social objectives and rights (even though they were limited in scope and have not been accepted by all member states) and the multiplication of “joint positions” with regard to the protection of human rights in non-member countries are all new and encouraging factors towards this end.

⁴ The main aspects of the report by the Expert Group on Fundamental Rights are described in detail in Doc. 8611 and have therefore not been reproduced here.

16. Nonetheless, some of the principles and rights proclaimed continue to cause problems. The concept of “citizenship” established by the Maastricht Treaty is limited to the right to vote in the elections for the European Parliament and the right to participate in municipal elections in the host country. Does this restricted concept correspond to the leading role which the European Union should be playing in promoting political rights throughout the continent? The same is true for the Schengen agreements and the right of asylum. The emergence of Community solidarity and policy has had the indirect effect of making asylum seekers’ rights more restricted than they were before. The Schengen area which is aimed as a response to a security deficit and which could spread to encompass the whole of the European Union is increasing the number of control measures and making it more difficult for all categories of non-EU travellers to obtain visas. Asylum seekers’ rights have become more limited because:

- asylum requests submitted by foreigners having transited a state in which there is no risk of persecution in principle are rejected⁵;
- asylum requests between European Union member states are not accepted⁶.

17. An analysis of Community texts shows two things:

- it is very difficult to identify what may be termed “fundamental” rights,
- the noble declarations of principle of the European Union institutions are often at variance with a restrictive application of these principles, which can on occasion lead to effects which are contrary to the original intentions.

Accordingly, it is necessary to rework and amalgamate these texts.

18. European integration has always been a difficult and controversial process. In this field, there are likely to be further reserved reactions from certain European Union member states, if only in the name of the subsidiarity principle. The problems of competition and duplication of effort between the draft “charter” and the ECHR have been sufficiently developed by the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights. I share Mr Magnusson’s view that the division of responsibilities between the two Courts does not need to be an obstacle and could be overcome by adjustments of a legal or practical nature.

19. The question we are faced with is more a political one. Is it not so that the initiative taken by the European Union to provide itself with a Charter of Fundamental Rights is rather an expression of the will of certain member states to establish a new political entity, which is more introspective in its self-satisfaction and self-sufficiency, and therefore indifferent to what takes place outside its borders? Is there not a danger that the Union could develop into a club of well-off democracies, considering itself to be the élite, disregarding the rest of Europe and behaving in a way which could lead to a rift in Europe, a new split, a new “wall”? This would be politically disastrous.

⁵ Council resolution by the ministers responsible for immigration (30 November 1992)

⁶ Protocol to the Treaty of Amsterdam

20. The European Union cannot wish to break itself off from this broader Europe represented by the Council of Europe. It can even less jeopardise the work of promoting democracy and human rights undertaken over the last 50 years by the Council of Europe, by setting up, alongside and outside the framework of the ECHR, something similar but competing. It should in contrast consolidate this work, by being part of it by acceding to the ECHR and, therefore, accepting that on the legal level it should be subject to the control mechanisms provided for in the ECHR with regard to its acts and decisions in the field of fundamental rights. If it does not, it risks negating the achievements of the last 50 years which should be maintained in the interests of the rest of Europe which is not yet (for some time to come) or which will never be in the European Union.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

21. On the basis that developments in the European Union are moving towards an extension and consolidation of fundamental rights, already proclaimed in fragmentary documents or those still being worked on, we are faced with the fundamental question of how best this objective can be achieved.

22. In essence, the answer is perhaps to be found in the ECJ's opinion 2/94. In speaking against EU accession to the ECHR, given the current state of the Community legal system, the Court expressed the view that "... such a modification ... would be of constitutional significance...". We note here the last two words which imply a revision of the treaties and denote the dividing line between the responsibilities of judges and politics.

23. Today, a constitution is no longer, as before, a set of rules governing the relationships between political institutions, but increasingly a catalogue of individual rights and freedoms. The proposal to amend the treaties to incorporate fundamental rights therefore comes down to likening all the treaties to a constitution. This notion could and should mark the starting point for any attempt to merge the various texts into a single one, in other words into a constitution of the European Union.

24. We know that in the European Parliament there are those who defend the idea of putting the Union onto a constitutional footing. This will doubtless be a long process but an essential one if the Union is to be thoroughly reformed. For some of them, the drafting of a Charter is an integral part of this constitutional process. Even though I share their fervour for the further development of the Union, our views are different with regard to the method and timing.

25. I would especially like them to be on their guard against the temptations of the isolationism of a European Union which is too self-focused and, consequently, unaware of the worthwhile achievements made and being made outside it in the field of the protection of fundamental rights, in other words the ECHR. Rather, the European Union should become part of it in order to reinforce it. It should therefore accede to the ECHR and overcome the legal obstacles which have been put forward hitherto. This is essential for a coherent political vision of the future of Europe.

26. The European Union, which has now become a world power in all sectors, and which will soon be enlarged, can no longer govern itself by a multitude of treaties; rather it deserves a single constituent text incorporating the principles of democracy, the rule of law and human rights. The European Union should provide itself with an internal legal system which corresponds to its world role and its requirements in its relations with non-member countries. This new strategy should reduce the trend towards "fortress Europe" which is hostile to foreigners; it should include a new approach to combat the evils of racism, xenophobia and ethnic violence; it should also incorporate the results of a reflection on new information technologies and communications and their impact on society. It should be comprehensive, contemporary and effective.

27. Pending this, an intermediary formula should be found to enable the European Union to accede to a series of the Council of Europe's fundamental treaties, not only the ECHR, but also other legal instruments, such as the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, the Bioethics Convention, the Data Protection Convention and, obviously, the European Social Charter.

28. The ECHR has today become, above and beyond its standard-setting role, a reference of political culture and civilisation. Its acceptance is also a precondition for accession to the European Union. It is not normal, under such conditions, for the European Union not yet to be part of it. I am convinced that the European Union's accession to these instruments would enable its sensitivities and viewpoints to have an influence on their developing case-law and, conversely, this case-law could serve as a basis for the future revision of the European Union constituent texts.

* * *

Reporting committee: Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights

Committee for opinion: Political Affairs Committee

Reference to committee: Doc. 8568 and Reference No. 2440 of 4 November 1999

Opinion approved by the committee on 11 January 2000

Secretaries to the committee: Mr Perin, Mr Sich, Ms Ruotanen, Ms Hügel-Maffucci

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 28 January 2000CHARTE 4115/00*CONTRIB 11*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find enclosed the texts adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe on 25 January 2000:

- recommendation 1439 (2000)
- resolution 1210 (2000) and
- directive no 561 (2000).¹

¹ These texts have been submitted in French and English language.

Parliamentary Assembly
Assemblée parlementaire

Council of Europe / Conseil de l'Europe
F-67075 Strasbourg Cedex

Tel : +33 (0)3 88 41 20 00

Fax : +33 (0)3 88 41 27 76

E-mail : pace@coe.int

<http://stars.coe.fr>

Provisional edition

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Recommendation 1439 (2000)¹

1. The Assembly, having regard to its Resolution 1210 (2000) on the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights, in which it invites the European Union:

i. to incorporate the rights guaranteed in the European Convention on Human Rights and its protocols in the Charter of Fundamental Rights and to do its utmost to safeguard the coherence of the protection of human rights in Europe and to avoid diverging interpretations of those rights;

ii. to pronounce itself in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights of the Council of Europe and make the necessary amendments to the Community treaties;

iii. to make sure that when referring to social rights the revised European Social Charter of the Council of Europe will be taken into account, recommends that the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe pronounce itself in favour of the accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and prepare the appropriate amendments to be made to this treaty.

¹ Assembly debate on 25 January 2000 (3rd Sitting). See Doc. 8611, report of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights (rapporteur: Mr Magnusson), Doc. 8615, opinion of the Political Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Clerfayt) and Doc. 8627, opinion of the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Evin). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2000 (3rd Sitting).

Parliamentary Assembly
Assemblée parlementaire

Council of Europe / Conseil de l'Europe

F-67075 Strasbourg Cedex

Tel : +33 (0)3 88 41 20 00

Fax : +33 (0)3 88 41 27 76

E-mail : pace@coe.int

<http://stars.coe.fr>

Provisional edition

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Resolution 1210 (2000)¹

1. The Assembly considers it necessary to make a number of observations following the decision by the EU European Council in Cologne on 3 and 4 June 1999 to draw up a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, to be submitted to the European Council in December 2000.
2. At this stage, without knowing the Charter's content, the Assembly wishes to bring a number of matters to the attention of those responsible for drafting this instrument, that is to say the "body" established to that end in Tampere, and may have occasion to make observations on the substance of the Charter in due course.
3. The European institutions, first the Communities and then the European Union, have for some time past shown an interest in human rights, in particular the European Convention on Human Rights, and have mentioned those rights as the foundation of democracy in their successive treaties. The European Parliament and the Commission have on a number of occasions come out in favour of the Union's accession to the Convention. The Parliamentary Assembly has itself welcomed this proposal. However, it has not yet been translated into action, following an opinion by the Court of Justice in Luxembourg on whether accession to the Convention was compatible with the

¹ Assembly debate on 25 January 2000 (3rd Sitting). See Doc. 8611, report of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights (rapporteur: Mr Magnusson), Doc. 8615, opinion of the Political Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Clerfayt) and Doc. 8627, opinion of the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Evin). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2000 (3rd Sitting).

Community treaties, in which the Court found that, as Community law stood at the time, the Community had no competence to accede.

4. At a time when it is reinforcing its powers, the Union wishes to make the importance of human rights more visible to its citizens, as stated in the decision taken in Cologne, and to bring these currently scattered rights together in a single text. The Assembly welcomes this initiative as a sign of a resolve to strengthen further the cause of human rights in Europe.

5. The Assembly nonetheless considers that, in adopting a Charter of Fundamental Rights, the achievements of the European Convention on Human Rights and the body of its case-law established over almost fifty years, which has had far-reaching effects on the law of the member states of the Council of Europe and therefore of the European Union, cannot be disregarded. It further draws attention to the risks of having two sets of fundamental rights which would weaken the European Court of Human Rights.

6. In this connection, the Assembly recalls the communication of 19 November 1990 issued by the Commission of the European Communities on accession to the European Convention on Human Rights, in which it stated that accession did not rule out the option of a set of fundamental rights specific to the Community. The opposite inference can therefore be made, ie that adoption of a Charter does not rule out accession to the Convention on Human Rights.

7. The European Union and the Council of Europe undeniably guarantee a number of rights which are not contained in the European Convention on Human Rights, particularly economic and social rights, and the Charter should therefore include these rights, adding to them others now accepted as fundamental rights. The Assembly draws attention to the other instruments for the protection of human rights on which the Charter could draw, in particular the revised European Social Charter, which guarantees economic and social rights and is an instrument to which the Assembly has invited the Union to accede. It recalls that, following the Treaty of Amsterdam, a reference to the Social Charter of the Council of Europe was included in the Treaty on the European Union.

8. The Assembly refers to the European Union report, prepared in February 1999 by an expert group chaired by Professor Simitis, which recommends that Articles 2 to 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights be incorporated into Community law, together with the rights secured in the protocols to the Convention. The inclusion of rights guaranteed by the Convention would be a means of avoiding having two different sets of rights in Europe, thus creating two categories of citizens enjoying different rights.

9. The Assembly believes that there can be no discrimination in the application of fundamental rights and that everyone coming under the jurisdiction of a Council of Europe member state must enjoy the protection of such rights, as provided for in Articles 1 and 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

10. In conclusion, in the light of the above, the Assembly invites the European Union:
- i. to incorporate the rights guaranteed in the European Convention on Human Rights and its protocols in the Charter of Fundamental Rights and to do its utmost to safeguard the coherence of the protection of human rights in Europe and to avoid diverging interpretations of those rights;
 - ii. to pronounce itself in favour of accession to the European Convention on Human Rights of the Council of Europe and make the necessary amendments to the Community treaties;
 - iii. to make sure that when referring to social rights the revised European Social Charter of the Council of Europe will be taken into account.

Parliamentary Assembly
Assemblée parlementaire

Council of Europe / Conseil de l'Europe

F-67075 Strasbourg Cedex

Tel : +33 (0)3 88 41 20 00

Fax : +33 (0)3 88 41 27 76

E-mail : pace@coe.int

<http://stars.coe.fr>

Provisional edition

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Order No. 561 (2000)¹

The Assembly, having regard to its Resolution 1210 (2000) and Recommendation 1439 (2000), instructs its Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, and its Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee for an opinion, to carefully follow and monitor the outcome of the drafting work on the Charter of Fundamental Rights, and to report back to it on this subject in due course.

¹ Assembly debate on 25 January 2000 (3rd Sitting). See Doc. 8611, report of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights (rapporteur: Mr Magnusson), Doc. 8615, opinion of the Political Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Clerfayt) and Doc. 8627, opinion of the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mr Evin). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 January 2000 (3rd Sitting).

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 28 January 2000CHARTE 4116/00*CONTRIB 12*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find enclosed the opinion from the Social and Family Affairs Committee of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English language.

Parliamentary Assembly
Assemblée parlementaire

Council of Europe / Conseil de l'Europe
F-67075 Strasbourg Cedex
Tel : +33 (0)3 88 41 20 00
Fax : +33 (0)3 88 41 27 76
E-mail : pace@coe.int
<http://stars.coe.fr>

Doc. 8627

24 January 2000

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Opinion¹

Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee

Rapporteur: Mr Claude Evin, France, Socialist Group

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The report presented by the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights provides a comprehensive picture of a question which is crucial to Europe's institutional equilibrium and warrants close attention. It nevertheless raises questions which the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee feels can be clearly and conclusively answered without an extensive examination.
2. The Social, Health and Family, Affairs Committee substantially agrees with the views expressed in the report, which welcomes the Union's initiative and determination to make human rights more visible to European citizens.
3. On the other hand, the Social, Health and Family, Affairs Committee considers that the debate ought not to centre on the sole question of the European Community's accession to the European Convention on Human Rights. The real question raised by the preparation of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights concerns the shortcomings of the existing international legal instruments for the protection of human rights - the Council of Europe conventions included - particularly in that they do not adequately secure social rights.

¹ Doc. 8611 - report, draft resolution, draft recommendation and draft order adopted by the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights on 10 January 2000.

4. In this respect, the committee fully endorses paragraph 7 of the draft resolution and takes the view that the inclusion in the future Charter of enforceable social rights would represent a considerable advance in citizens' protection in Europe.

5. Indeed, on the strength of the Council's long standing experience and recent work² the Committee considers it indispensable that the rights, social rights included, should be enforceable before courts and covered by a right of individual petition before a supranational judicial authority.

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

6. Since their inception the Council of Europe as a whole and its Parliamentary Assembly in particular have been the nerve centre for furtherance of human rights in Europe. The Council of Europe has never yet abdicated its time-honoured mission of strengthening the institutions that uphold democracy and fundamental freedoms in Europe. It can therefore rightfully pride itself on its achievements in this regard at a time when the Europe of the 15 contemplates following in its footsteps.

7. The substance of the debate in hand is that the Assembly should consider and define its position on these three crucial questions:

- whether or not the Parliamentary Assembly is in favour of the European Union's drawing up a Charter of Fundamental Rights;
- whether or not the Parliamentary Assembly is in favour of the future Charter constituting not a plain policy statement by the Union but an integral part of the Treaties in the fullest sense, in order that the set of rights which it embodies may not only come within the remit of the European Commission, which would accordingly issue the appropriate instructions for their effective realisation by the Member States, but may also be enforceable, signifying that their infringement by the Member States would be liable to sanctions before the Court of Justice of the European Communities;
- regarding content, whether or not the Parliamentary Assembly is in favour of the future Charter enshrining a complete and coherent body of civil and political rights and social rights, as secured in particular by the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Social Charter.

8. Any impulsive liberal-mindedness would unhesitatingly prompt affirmative replies, whereas in fact none of the answers to these questions is straightforward. The advancement of human rights in Europe, social rights included, cannot be entirely realised at the present time through the mere existence of a European Convention on Human Rights and a European Social Charter.

9. It is salutary that the European Union displays firm social ambitions. Consequently, one is bound to welcome the process initiated and to support any genuine effort by the Community institutions with the intention of effectively strengthening human rights not only within the Union and for the full benefit of the citizens of the Europe of the 15 but also – a valuable opportunity – outside the Union in its relations with its non-member partners.

² Recommendation 1415 (1999) on an additional protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights concerning fundamental social rights (Doc. 8357)

10. Contrary to the previous evasiveness and hesitancy of the Union, which has not always put into practice the policy statements adopted, the present approach is more ambitious and anticipates a second Intergovernmental Conference (IGC) and a revision of the Treaties.

11. National MPs as well as MEPs have had frequent occasion to deplore the inadequacy of the human rights safeguards afforded by the Community instruments. There is no complete single text listing the civil, political and social rights which protect the citizens of the Union. The European Parliament has repeatedly advocated including in the body of the Treaty a catalogue of fundamental rights (see in particular its resolution adopting a Declaration on fundamental rights and freedoms of 12 April 1989, its resolution on the Constitution of the European Union of 10 February 1994, and its resolution on the IGC of 13 March 1996). There is of course a Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers dating from 1989 and now signed by all fifteen Member States albeit only with declaratory status. Yet the Amsterdam Treaty had to be awaited before definite progress occurred in objectifying the Union's social goals (references made to the European Social Charter; inclusion of Agreement on social policy forming Protocol No 14 to the Treaty establishing the European Community (Chapter 1, Title 11, new Rules 136 to 145), etc.).

12. It now proves truly indispensable to clarify the role of our respective organisations in Europe: Council of Europe and European Union. The two organisations are admittedly dissimilar in their legal foundation as well as in their procedures and their functions. The Council of Europe conventions - over 170 to date - and especially the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Social Charter are extremely fertile texts. However, the functions which have devolved on each organisation since they came into being are plainly tied to their institutional structure; the Union, because it holds supranational powers and does not strictly depend on intergovernmental co-operation, possesses a coercive authority that bears no comparison.

13. The Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee held a joint meeting in Brussels on 23 November 1999 with the European Parliament Committee on Employment and Social Affairs. Members discussed the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights, particularly the social dimension of the project.

14. The discussions held on that occasion raised the following points:

- human rights protection signifies a very different approach for the Council of Europe and the European Union; the Council of Europe acts as a pioneer in the human rights field, whereas the Community has a far lower profile on that score;
- the two organisations have legal instruments of a vastly different nature;
- the content of the Council of Europe texts, chiefly the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Social Charter, can enhance the Union's approach;
- the machinery for supervising enforcement of rights is very go-ahead in the Council of Europe as citizens can apply directly to the European Court of Human Rights;
- a legal instrument like the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights should be given great prominence, and so it is imperative to include this catalogue of rights in a new Treaty;
- the Charter should answer the purpose of enhancing the Union's social dimension and should therefore include a complete set of social rights;

- the Charter would be rendered virtually ineffective were it not binding on the Union institutions and Member States; the adoption of the Charter necessarily entails radical reform of the judicial control machinery, in order that every citizen may have direct access to the Court of Justice.

15. To advance reflection in the matter, the two committees decided to set up a joint working group whose task will be to ensure that the social rights as defined in the European Social Charter and the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers are included in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

16. As to the substance of the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights, it will quite conceivably be the subject of lengthy discussion in the Charter drafting body and the various institutions of the Union. It is equally certain that the principal Council of Europe legal instruments (European Convention on Human Rights, European Social Charter and revised Charter, European Code of Social Security and revised Code, etc.), by virtue of their substance, effective application and quality, can provide legal models and references and inform the Union's reflection. They are moreover evolutive instruments that move with the times and adjust to Europe's new political, economic and social challenges.

17. It is indispensable that the future Charter embody a complete range of social rights, relating to protection not only of workers but also of the family, women and children, freedom to form and join trade unions, collective bargaining, social security, health, housing, child welfare, etc.

18. In any event a widening of the gulf between the two Europes must be avoided. The aforementioned body should therefore be instructed to apply itself to drawing up a list of identical rights to those which the States have already undertaken to uphold as parties to the European Convention on Human Rights or the European Social Charter.

19. The legal scope of the future Charter of Fundamental Rights also remains to be considered. Given the present position of Community law and practice, it is only possible to point out the inadequacies of the supervisory machinery.

20. Nonetheless, the Charter's proposed integration with the Treaties means that it will be endowed with a dual supervisory system for verifying the due application of these rights at national level: on the one hand the European Commission's authority to issue Directives could allow a purposive Community policy to be framed; on the other hand, respect for the rights would be supervised under the Community judicial system.

21. This requires a clear commitment by the Community institutions, the European Commission in particular, to ensure that the States make the rights genuinely applicable and do not settle for vague token declarations.

22. Ultimately the future will reveal the reality of the Union's political intention to make a radical reform of its institutions and judicial machinery, as it remains to be seen whether the Union will allow its citizens the possibility of bringing direct individual petitions before the Court of Justice of the Communities when their rights are violated.

23. There is no point in drafting a Charter of Fundamental Rights unless it establishes civil, political, economic and social rights that are credible and concrete, as well as guaranteeing their reality and applicability for all persons. It is not a matter of securing their proclamation and promotion alone; effective safeguards must be introduced.

24. The Rapporteurs of the European Parliament Committee on Constitutional Affairs, MM A. Duff and J. Voggenhuber, have stated their support for conferring binding force on the Charter of Fundamental Rights and ensuring that citizens have direct access to the Court of Justice of the European Communities³.

25. Lastly, the current debate surrounding the Union's Charter of Fundamental Rights should not leave out of account the need to continue the effort to promote and improve the existing Council of Europe conventions and their supervisory machinery.

26. The Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee recalls in this connection that in April 1999 it presented the Parliamentary Assembly with a report on an additional protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights concerning fundamental social rights, in which it recalled that if democracy was to be firmly rooted in Europe, greater effectiveness and greater enforceability of social rights must be guaranteed. It therefore requested that consideration be given to the possibility of incorporating into the European Convention on Human Rights certain rights set forth in the revised European Social Charter.

27. The studies made by the Committee for some years and just recently show that is vital that there should exist at European level a body of social rights which are enforceable and which carry a right of individual petition to a supranational judicial authority.

28. In any case, also having regard to the technicality of the questions at issue, it is plainly imperative that a clear position be stated by the Council of Europe, which has observer status in the EU Charter drafting body. It will also need to impress upon the Union and the Union Member States its matchless experience built up over more than 50 years in the furtherance and protection of human rights in their entirety.

³ See working document EP 232.397 of 7 December 1999

Proposed amendments

29. The Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee wishes to put forward the following amendments to the draft resolution and the draft order:

Amendment No 1:

«In the draft resolution, replace paragraph 10. iii with the following text:

"to incorporate into the Charter of Fundamental Rights the whole range of social rights protecting workers, the family, women and children, taking into account the rights secured in the revised European Social Charter."»

Amendment No 2:

«In the draft order, add after "Human Rights":

", and its Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee for an opinion,"».

*
* *

Reporting committee: Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights (Doc. 8611)

Committee for opinion: Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee

Reference to committee: Doc. 8542, decision of the Bureau on 13.12.99, modifying Reference No. 2440, 24.9.99

Opinion approved by the committee on 24 January 2000

Secretaries to the committee: Mrs Meunier and Mrs Clamer

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 3 February 2000 (08.02)CHARTE 4119/00*CONTRIB 15*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Delegations will find herewith a Resolution adopted by the Synod of the Protestant Church in Germany (EKD) at its meeting in Leipzig on 11 November 1999. ¹

¹ This text was submitted in English, French and German.

I. RESOLUTION of the Synod of the Protestant Church in Germany at its meeting in Leipzig the 11th November 1999

on the

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

At the European Council meeting in Cologne on 3rd and 4th June 1999, the Council took the decision to draw up a draft Charter of fundamental rights. At the Tampere European Council on 15th and 16th October 1999 the body to do this was appointed: Members of the European Parliament, the national Parliaments, representatives of the Head of State or Government of Member States and representatives of the other European Institutions. This body has the task of finding a draft by the Council meeting in Paris in December 2000.

The Synod welcomes the fact that the Charter is being drawn up, a commitment on the part of the European Union to human rights and fundamental freedoms, in this transparent manner, whereby the results of the debate will be made accessible to the public for discussion.

The Synod asks the Council of the Protestant Church in Germany to involve itself unreservedly in compiling the contents of the Charter and to bring the ideas of the Protestant Church in Germany as to its composition to the attention of the German Bundestag, the German Government, and also raise it in dialogues between the other European sister churches and the European Parliament and other European authorities.

These should be the salient considerations:

- A Charter of fundamental rights offers the chance to reveal the very foundations of European polity as an order of peace of a unique kind and to set them out clearly for our citizens, to emphasise the validity for the European Union of rights to freedom as they are laid down in the European Convention on Human Rights of the Council of Europe, to secure basic social rights as being an inseparable part of fundamental rights.
- Religious liberty constitutes a basic tenet of the fundamental rights catalogue. Here, there is the need to guarantee both the right of religious bodies to self-govern their own affairs and the freedom of worship.

- The rights being formulated should not be limited to EU citizens only. Therefore all considerations on these rights must be start with the question as to their validity for persons who are nationals of third countries or asylum-seekers and do not have the citizenship of an EU Member State.
- The fundamental rights to be defined in the Charter must not only be applicable within the EU but constitute a leading principle in its external relations of the European Union. Thus, Community policies in the area of trade and development-co-operation must contribute to respect of human rights, for example by including human rights clauses.
- Efficient safeguard of fundamental rights presupposes in principle potential recourse to judicial protection. This should be the parameter by which the compatibility of actions taken by European authorities and institutions should be measured in relation to its basic principles. Even if the Charter is not initially legally binding, there should be an underlying aim while drawing it up to make it ultimately a binding part of the European treaties.
- The process of determining and revising fundamental rights on the European level should continue in the long-term to be an open one. This is essential in view of the challenging changes the EU faces with globalisation, new technologies, for example in the field of biotechnology and telecommunication and especially with the enlargement to countries in Central and Eastern Europe as well as in the Mediterranean area in the next decade.

Leipzig, 11th November 1999

The President of the Synod of the Protestant Church in Germany

Copyright © Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland
Herrenhäuser Straße 12, 30419 Hannover
Telefon: 0511 - 2796 - 0
Telefax: 0511 - 2796 - 777
E-Mail: presse@ekd.de

For further information please contact
EKD – Brussels Office
Bd. Charlemagne, 28
1000 Bruxelles
Tel : 02 / 230.16.39
Fax : 02 / 280.01.08
E-mail : ekd.brussel@village.uunet.be

Editors' note to CHARTE 4120/00 ADD 1,
Declaration of the Association of Women of Southern Europe (AFEM) (dated 29/01/00):

The INIT FR version was dated 3 February 2000.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 28 February 2000CHARTE 4120/00 ADD 1*CONTRIB 16*ADDENDUM TO COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the English version of the declaration of the Association of Women of Southern Europe (AFEM).^{1 2}

¹ This text has been submitted only in English language.

² AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris. Tél: 33-1-72 12 03. Fax: 33-1-72 15 03
E-mail: assafem@aol.com

AFEM
ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES DE L' EUROPE MÉRIDIONALE
ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN OF SOUTHERN EUROPE
Declaration on the Charter of Fundamental Rights
Adopted by the Board at its meeting in Paris on the 29th of January 2000

The Association of Women of Southern Europe (AFEM) welcomes the European Union's decision to provide itself with a Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Being an essential element of a Community based on the rule of law and an indispensable means to promote a constant and balanced economic and social development, this Charter constitutes an opportunity to revive the more and more declining interest of the citizens in the EU.

However, as the Permanent Forum of the Civil Society also underlines, the following should be ensured:

- in respect of the procedure, a large consultation with the civil society;
- in respect of the content, an advance, in particular on economic and social rights;
- in respect of effectiveness, the binding force of the Charter, by integrating it in the Treaty.

The AFEM underlines the necessity that the Charter, after proclaiming the fundamental principle of equality and prohibiting any discrimination, should guarantee substantive equality of women and men and prohibit any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of sex in all areas, by a rule of direct effect.

The AFEM considers it indispensable that the following should be expressly provided:

- "Democracy" means parity democracy.
- The "right to dignity" implies the interdiction of the traffic in the human body or part thereof, with or without the consent of the person concerned, since it is impossible to know whether this consent is freely given.
- The "right to protection against violence" implies the absolute interdiction of violence within the family as well as of sexual mutilations.
- The practical conditions for implementing the rights recognised to migrants should guarantee that women will effectively benefit therefrom, subject to the same conditions as men.
- For the granting of asylum, the fact that one is unable to dispose of oneself or that one's liberty or physical integrity is threatened should be considered as persecution, whether the authorities of the country of origin are the authors of such persecution or threats or they tolerate them or are unable to oppose them.
- Effective judicial protection of the aforementioned rights will not be achieved, unless NGOs have standing to have recourse and/or support the recourse of a victim before the competent national and European authorities.

Marcelle Devaud - Honorary President, Micheline Galabert Augé, President, Annita Garibaldi, Vice-President, Maria Angeles Ruiz Tagle Morales - Vice-President, Maria Alzira Lemos, authorised by Maria Regina Tavares da Silva - Secretary General unable to attend, Valérie Vection, Treasurer, Sophia Spiliotopoulos, replacing until the next elections Rena Lampsas, Vice-President, deceased.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 8 February 2000 (11.02)
(OR. f)

CHARTE 4124/00

CONTRIB 19

COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find enclosed a Resolution of the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC), adopted by its Executive Committee on 16/17 September 1999.¹

¹ This text was submitted in French, English and German.

ETUC Position:

"The incorporation of fundamental civic, social and trade union rights into the European Union Treaties" (adopted by the Executive Committee on 16-17 September 1999)

As a firm promoter of EU Fundamental Rights, ETUC welcomes the decision of the Cologne European Council in June 1999 to initiate a procedure to draw up a concrete proposal on EU Fundamental Rights in the context of the next revision of the Treaty.

ETUC agrees with the Cologne Summit Conclusions that the "protection of fundamental rights is a founding principle of the Union and an indispensable prerequisite for her legitimacy", and, likewise, that there exists a clear need "to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens".

Although the Amsterdam Treaty did bring about some progress (e.g. TEU Art 6 & 7/human rights and TEC Art 13/non-discrimination), important shortcomings still exist.

The social implications of the realisation of EMU and the introduction of the EURO, the realisation of IM and the massive industrial restructuring, underpins the importance of securing fundamental rights at European level too.

A recent political initiative (intervention mechanism) and a ECJ pending ECJ case (C-67/96 on collective agreements) clearly shows clearly the potential pressure upon, and the threat to, vested trade union rights in the wake of the European integration process which will exist as long as fundamental trade union rights are not explicitly recognised at European level.

ETUC considers fundamental rights as an indispensable part, in combination with the development of the social socle, in the building of the Social Union and safeguarding and developing the European social model. Their incorporation will also be important in view of enlargement. The respect of fundamental rights is necessary for a Citizens' Europe to become a reality.

It should also be clear that the global trading partners will expect the European Union and its Member States themselves to secure the respect for fundamental rights when promoting these issues in the global trade agreements (as in the WTO).

4. The Cologne Summit did not conclude on "how the Charter should be integrated into the treaties". A solemn political declaration in the form of a "Charter", however, will not be sufficient to meet the stated objectives. A real "protection of fundamental rights" implies the legally binding incorporation of these rights in the treaties.

Therefore, in the ETUC 9th Congress resolutions, it is stated that: Above all, bringing the Union closer to its citizens requires political, civil, social and trade union rights - including cross-border sympathy action, including strikes – to be fully recognised by the Union and enshrined in the Treaty.

As regards specific trade union rights, ETUC calls for the full recognition of such rights in the EU Treaty beginning with the ILO Conventions on Freedom of Association, Collective Bargaining, Right to strike, Child Labour and Forced Labour.

Consequently, the ETUC 9th Congress decided to campaign for full recognition of these rights to be enshrined in the Treaty on the occasion of its next revision.

5. The fundamental political, civil, social and trade union rights to be incorporated into the Treaty should include the rights already laid down in existing international instruments and of EU specific cross border / transnational rights.

First, consequently, the rights included in the following instruments should consequently establish the core to be recognised by, and in, the EU:

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

European Convention on Human Rights

ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work

Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers

Revised European Social Charter

UN Convention on the Rights of the Child

These rights should be guaranteed throughout the territory of the European Union.

It goes without saying that these rights constitute a minimum, and a non-regression principle should be applied to existing rights in the EU or its Member States.

Secondly, the EU specific cross-border and transnational related rights as well should also be included, especially transnational trade union rights, freedom of movement and the European citizenship political rights.

6. As underlined by the ETUC 9th Congress, equal treatment must be extended to all people who are legally resident in the EU, whether or not they are EU citizens. This will be particularly important as regards fundamental rights in the EU.

The proposed approach is obvious as regards scope and content, obvious both from a political as well as from a practical point of view and should be time-saving. As underlined by the latest Commission expert report (Simitis report), "it is time to act". The issue has already been the subject of lengthy and in-depth political and legal analysis and debate over at least the last decade at least. The process establishing the 1989 Community Charter or the Commission "Comité des Sages" (Pintasilgo) report, the EP resolution on trade union rights as well as the Amsterdam Colloquium organised by ETUC in the Amsterdam IGC process are just examples of a number of initiatives taken.

There exists no need, therefore, to reopen an analytical debate on the basics, but, on the contrary, to take decisions to pursue and to complete a process which has been progressed upon in the Amsterdam Treaty.

The EU Member States have already all signed and ratified the mentioned international instruments and rights, (or as regards the Council of Europe revised Social Charter, are in the process of ratification). Beyond the inclusion of the European Human Rights Convention, the European treaties now also includes a reference to the Community Charter and the Council of Europe Social Charter.

The principal difference to the present situation, when incorporating these rights of the international instruments in the EU Treaty, will therefore be, that the Member States becomes obliged, in a binding manner vis à vis the European Union, to respect and adhere to these international instruments (and the compliance procedures of these institutions).

Whether the obligation vis -à-vis the European Union will become legally or politically binding depends on the method of incorporation into the EU Treaty.

8. For ETUC, the aim should be to anchor the recognition and respect for the EU fundamental rights visibly and efficiently in the Treaty. Enshrining the rights in the context of the Citizenship Chapter should therefore be considered.

A Charter based alone on a solemn political declaration would fall short of the needs and objectives set out by the Cologne Summit; ETUC (in line with its 9th Congress decisions) is in favour of incorporating in the Treaty in a binding manner a "EU Bill of Rights" based upon already existing core rights of international instruments combined with EU specific cross border and transnational rights. ETUC is actively preparing a proposal based on these principles with the objective of being introduced into the drafting process to be initiated at the Tampere European Council in October 1999.

However, should the EU Member States at present not be prepared to take this logical step in view of the achieved EU integration to integrate fully such a EU Bill of Rights, ETUC considers that the Tampere process, as a first step as a minimum in order to stay credible, should result in the incorporation in the Treaty of:

A binding Treaty obligation for the Member States (and the Union) to adhere to (the above mentioned) international instruments combined with a sanction procedure (political and/or legal)
and

b) Selected individual and collective universal core rights directly enshrined in the Treaty and with priority to EU-specific cross-border and transnational trade union and workers' rights:
national and transnational trade union rights of association, collective bargaining and trade union action, including the right to cross-border sympathy action and strike national and transnational rights for workers to information, consultation and participation the right of equal treatment and equal opportunities for men and women prohibition of all forms of discrimination, racism and xenophobia ban on child labour
the right of occupational health and safety protection the right to a minimum income including social protection in case of unemployment freedom of movement within the EU, including for third country nationals who are legally resident in the EU.

At a later stage, ETUC will submit a specific text on the above mentioned rights to be incorporated into the Treaty.

One outstanding issue to be clarified during the Tampere drafting process will be whether or not the European Union itself should accede to the European Convention on Human Rights and its additional Protocols (Council of Europe)."

9. ETUC believes that the development of the proposal for EU Fundamental Rights must be carried out by way of a transparent and participative procedure, involving, as decided at the Cologne Summit, the European Parliament and other EU institutions as well as national parliaments. ETUC however stresses the importance of fully involving civil society and the trade unions in the process. ETUC is looking forward to being invited to participate actively in the drafting procedure.

In view of the preparatory analysis and political clarification already undertaken, it is crucial and also realistic to conclude the Tampere drafting procedure on time to allow the EU Fundamental Rights proposal to be integrated into the next IGC procedure as planned

In July 1998, ETUC and the Platform of European Social NGO's launched jointly July 1998 a joint campaign for a Bill of Rights. The Cologne Summit decision to draw up a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU can be considered a first positive step and outcome. . Consequently, ETUC consequently therefore will therefore be intensifying its campaigning, both at European level vis-à-vis the European institutions and - carried by its affiliates - at national level, with the objective of rallying support for a real incorporation of fundamental rights in the Treaty.

Strong cooperation between the European trade union movement and civil society will be important. ETUC will therefore continue the joint campaign activities with the Platform of European Social NGO's, and it calls upon the affiliates to do the same at national level, as is customary according to the traditions. ETUC also calls upon especially the European Parliament to continue to play an active role as a promoter of fundamental rights and hence as a Citizens' Europe.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 9 Februar 2000CHARTE 4126/00*CONTRIB 21*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte anliegend die Erklärung von Halle zur Europäischen Grundrechtscharta, vom 2.12.1999, vorgelegt vom Rat der Gemeinden und Regionen Europas - Deutsche Sektion. ¹

¹ Dieser Text ist uns nur in deutscher Sprache zugegangen.

ERKLÄRUNG VON HALLE

zur

Europäischen Grundrechtscharta

Die in der Delegiertenversammlung 1999 in Halle (Saale) versammelten Kommunalpolitiker/Kommunalpolitikerinnen aus den Mitgliedskommunen der Deutschen Sektion des RGRE

B e g r ü ß e n den Beschluss der Staats- und Regierungschefs der Mitgliedstaaten der Europäischen Union vom Juni 1999 (Kölner Gipfel), eine Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union zu erarbeiten.

B e t r a c h t e n die Erarbeitung einer EU-Grundrechtscharta als wichtigen und notwendigen Schritt, um mit der ökonomischen und der politischen Einheit auch die konstitutionelle Einheit der Europäischen Union herbeizuführen.

W e i s e n darauf hin, dass mit einer EU-Grundrechtscharta die Chance besteht, die EU als eine Wertegemeinschaft, also auf gemeinsame Werte, Rechtsordnungen und Traditionen aufbauende Gemeinschaft, sichtbar zu machen.

E r a c h t e n eine gemeinsame Grundrechtscharta als ein wichtiges Element, um die Union den europäischen Bürgern näher zu bringen, indem sie Klarheit und Transparenz über die ihnen zustehenden Rechte schafft und damit zunehmend das Bewusstsein einer gemeinschaftlichen Identität vermittelt.

U n t e r s t r e i c h e n die Signalwirkung einer Grundrechtscharta für den Annäherungsprozess der Beitrittsländer Mittel- und Osteuropas an die Europäische Union als politische und Wertegemeinschaft

E r w a r t e n, dass sich die Erarbeitung der EU-Grundrechtscharta unter Einbeziehung aller gesellschaftlichen Gruppen in einem breitangelegten öffentlichen Dialog vollzieht, auch durch Beteiligung der RGRE/CCRE bei der angestrebten Anhörung.

B e t o n e n in dieser Hinsicht, dass die europäischen Kommunen und Regionen als die dem Bürger nächste Ebene im Verwaltungsaufbau der Europäischen Union ein wichtiger Impulsgeber sind und daher in diesem Dialog (über ihre repräsentativen Vereinigungen) beteiligt werden müssen.

B e g r ü ß e n die Absicht, den "Ausschuss der regionalen und lokalen Gebietskörperschaften" (AdR; Art. 263 ff EG-V) als Organ in die institutionelle Debatte miteinzubeziehen.

U n t e r s t ü t z e n die vom Präsidenten des Ausschusses der Regionen gegenüber der finnischen Ratspräsidentenschaft geäußerte Erwartung, bei den Arbeiten für eine europäische Grundrechtscharta die Verankerung des Prinzips der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung im EG-Vertrag vorzusehen.

F o r d e r n die Berücksichtigung folgender aus kommunaler Sicht wichtigen Elemente in einer europäischen Grundrechtscharta:

Kommunale Selbstverwaltungsgarantie

Das Recht der Bürger, über die Angelegenheiten der örtlichen Gemeinschaft - ihre Angelegenheiten - selbständig zu entscheiden, gehört in allen Mitgliedsländern der Europäischen Union zum gesicherten Verfassungsbestand (Art. 6 EU-Vertrag). Darüber hinaus haben alle Mitgliedsländer der Europäischen Union die Europäische „Charta der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung“ (des Europarates) unterzeichnet und bis auf Frankreich und Belgien auch ratifiziert und in innerstaatliches Recht umgesetzt.

Eine künftige Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union muss daher das Recht auf bürgerschaftliche Selbstverwaltung als wichtigen Bestandteil der „nationalen Identität ihrer Mitgliedstaaten“ (Art. 6 Abs. 3 EU-Vertrag) gegenüber der Union und ihren Organen anerkennen und schützen.

Subsidiarität

Die Beachtung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips ist eine der wesentlichen Voraussetzungen für Bürgernähe in der Europäischen Union und damit letztendlich auch für die breite Akzeptanz des europäischen Integrationsprozesses in der europäischen Öffentlichkeit.

Das Subsidiaritätsprinzip ist mit dem Maastrichter Vertrag zu einem konstitutiven Element der europäischen (Verfassung-) Ordnung geworden (Art. 5 EG-Vertrag). Es trägt dazu bei, dass die Vielfalt und die Unterschiedlichkeit der Traditionen und Strukturen in Europa Bestand haben. Wegen dieser, für die Gestalt Europas identitätsbildenden Funktionen, gehört das Subsidiaritätsprinzip in eine EU-Grundrechtscharta.

Gleichzeitig muss das Subsidiaritätsprinzip konkretisiert und damit vervollständigt werden, indem die Kommunen und Regionen ausdrücklich in seine Anwendung durch die Organe der Union einbezogen werden.

Klagerecht bei Verletzungen der kommunalen Selbstverwaltungsgarantie und des Subsidiaritätsgrundsatzes

Ein wirksamer Schutz der kommunalen Selbstverwaltungsrechte und des Subsidiaritätsprinzips gegen ungerechtfertigte Eingriffe durch die Organe der Europäischen Gemeinschaft ist nur dann gewährleistet, wenn die Möglichkeit besteht, vermutete Verstöße gerichtlich feststellen zu lassen.

Das bürgerschaftliche Grundrecht auf kommunale Selbstverwaltung sowie das Subsidiaritätsprinzip bedürfen daher der Verfestigung durch die Gewährung eines Klagerechts vor dem Europäischen Gerichtshof bei Verstößen gegen die Grundsätze der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung und der Subsidiarität.

Dieses Klagerecht soll sich nicht auf die inneren Entscheidungen und Strukturen der Mitgliedstaaten und ihren Verwaltungsaufbau erstrecken, muss aber deren Schutz vor Eingriffen durch die EU und deren Organe garantieren (Abwehrrecht)

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 9 February 2000CHARTE 4127/00*CONTRIB 22*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a submission from Euronet ¹ on the Recognition of the Rights of the Child in the Charter of Fundamental Rights. ²

¹ Euronet, the European Children's Network, Place de Luxembourg 1, 1050 Bruxelles, Belgium. Tel: +32-2-512 4500, fax: +32-2-512 6673.
E-mail: savechildbru@skynet.be

² The text has only been submitted in English language.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Recognition of the Rights of the Child in the Charter of Fundamental Rights

Submission from Euronet – The European Children's Network, to the drafting group for an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

Euronet – the European Children's Network, is a network of children's rights organisations including transnational networks such as BICE (International Catholic Children's Bureau) and International Save the Children Alliance, and national members in all 15 EU member states.

Euronet welcomes the initiative of the Council of Ministers to elaborate a charter of fundamental rights. Euronet recommends that children's rights must be included in the charter of fundamental rights and that the charter should be legally binding. Children make up 20% of the EU population yet their rights as established in international law are currently almost invisible in EU legislation, programmes and political decisions. Additionally the Charter should not simply codify existing rights but advance human rights.

Reasons to mention children's rights explicitly in the Charter:

- To ensure that in areas where the EU legislates, children's interests are taken into account and that legislation is not inadvertently discriminating against children.
- To ensure that the EU itself is also implementing existing international commitments such as the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

The 1989 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child is the fullest contemporary international expression of the fundamental rights of all people under the age of 18 –ie children. It has almost universal ratification with only two countries (USA and Somalia) not having ratified. The Convention states clearly that the best interests of the child should be a primary consideration in all legislation and policy (Article 3). The Convention has been ratified by all EU member states. However, whilst member states have a legal obligation to promote the best interests of the child and protect children's fundamental rights, the EU is under no such obligation although there are many areas in which the EU currently passes legislation which have a direct or indirect bearing on children's lives. Examples include labour legislation, consumer legislation, information and media legislation, health and the environment. Integration of the Convention on the Rights of the Child would ensure that the EU would be obliged to use the Convention as a "child proofing" tool when passing legislation.

Children's current legal status in the EU Treaty is unclear as children's legal status as European citizens is unclear. The EU Treaty primarily focuses on the "citizen as worker", which excludes children. In EU law children are seen too often as only "victims" or "dependents" or "barriers to work" which is in direct contradiction with their status in the Convention on the Rights of the Child. At the moment the principle of "the best interests of the child" is only included in EU legislation on ad hoc basis. In some cases the EU has legislated to promote the highest standards of safety for children, for example in the Toy Safety Directive 1988. In other cases commercial considerations come before the best interests of the child with the potential to infringe children's rights, for instance the Distance Selling Directive and toy and TV advertising policies of the EU. Inclusion of a reference to children's rights in the Charter would help ensure that this process was systematic and no longer ad hoc. At present, many cases on children's rights in the EU have had to be established by taking cases to the Court of Justice. This is inefficient and costly – integration of children's rights into EU legislative processes would have made such cases unnecessary and ensure a more systematic protection and promotion of children's rights.

The current Amsterdam Treaty contains legal bases which give the Commission a limited competence to promote children's rights:

- Article K - which contains an explicit reference to "offences against children", creates an intergovernmental competence to tackle a whole range of cross border and transnational issues affecting children. However, this Article is outside the Community application of the Treaty and fails to cover many other areas of concern for children.
- Article 13 – Non Discrimination, in particular the non discrimination on the basis of age
- Article 137 – Social Exclusion, which can be used to address the problem of children facing social exclusion (20% of EU children are living in poverty, Eurostat figures)
- Article 141 – refers to equal treatment for men and women in matters of employment, which can indirectly benefit children
- Article 143 – Demography, which could be used to collect age disaggregated statistics, including improved information on the situation of Union citizens under the age of 18.

Children need their own special set of rights in the Charter of fundamental rights because:

- Existing international standards ie the Convention on the Rights of the Child recognise the need for children to have their own set of rights.
- Children have not always been accepted as holders of rights and animals were often given rights before children.
- Children are a special category of people who have specific needs different from adults and who do not have the ability to protect themselves.

Concerning subsidiarity, Euronet recognises the fact that the principal competence for policy and legislation on children's issues is the responsibility of the member states' governments. However, many issues affecting children are neither uniquely national or transnational, for example, legal consequences for children when their parents separate and choose to live in different countries of the EU and the standardisation of products and services (TV, internet, media).

Conclusions

It is recommended that:

- The Charter of Fundamental Rights contains a full reference to the protection and promotion of children's rights in the EU, best expressed by an explicit reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.
- The Charter of Fundamental Rights should be legally binding.
- A new Article should be inserted in the EU Treaties so that the Community can contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights and needs of children.

Recognition of the rights of the child in the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Submission from Euronet – The European Children's Network, to the drafting group for an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Introduction

Euronet welcomes the initiative of the Council of Ministers to elaborate a charter of fundamental rights. In this submission Euronet demonstrates why it is necessary to have a comprehensive reference to children's rights in the charter. Euronet recommends that in order to promote and protect children's rights and interests and to foster their development and protect them from unforeseen negative effects of growing European integration, a reference in the Charter of Rights would need to be accompanied by a comprehensive legal basis in the Treaty on European Union.

Euronet also recommends that the Charter of Fundamental Rights is legally binding and that it goes beyond already existing international and European legal instruments.

What is Euronet ?

Euronet – the European Children's Network, is a network of children's rights agencies including BICE (International Catholic Children's Bureau), International Save the Children Alliance, and national members in all 15 EU member states. Together these agencies shared a concern about the general invisibility of children in EU policy, legislation and programmes. Euronet began as a network to press for recognition of children's rights in the EU Treaty in 1995. Euronet members worked together to strengthen the rights of the child by, amongst other things, trying to include a reference in the Amsterdam Treaty to the norms of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, ratified by all member states of the EU. Following this, Euronet has gone on to develop a comprehensive EU Children's policy in "A Children's policy for 21st Century Europe: First Steps".¹

Euronet believes that children have a right to live without experiencing prejudice, exclusion and discrimination and have a right to be heard within the European institutions, including the European Parliament, Commission, Council of Ministers and Council of Europe.

¹ "A children's policy for 21st century Europe: First steps," Ruxton S, Euronet, Brussels, 1999

Children in the EU

Children in the EU make up 20% of the population but their rights as established in international law are currently almost invisible. This leads to children's invisibility in the legislation, policies, programmes and political decision making of the Union. Yet the future economic, social, political and cultural development of Europe is dependent on these 90 million children. As the ageing of Europe continues, children will become an even more precious and important resource. Neglecting their proper care and protection will have increasingly serious consequences. Furthermore, the EU institutions have frequently stated that it is important to "get closer to citizens" yet the interests of children are rarely included in EU legislation and Europe is still a long way from a "Citizens Europe" which includes children.

*"We are children and young people of the European Union meeting in Belfast at the end of May 1998. We demand that the European Union listen carefully to the voices of its 90 million children and young people under the age of 18 years of age. We as Europe's young citizens are eager to contribute actively to the development and progress of Europe...In our Europe every child will be respected and listened to and every child will have the right to participate in the democratic process."*²

At the beginning of the 21st Century, Europe is at a crossroads, as it enters monetary union, enlarges eastwards and faces demographic challenges. Children will be more affected by decisions with long term implications being taken now than any other population group.

Why do children's rights need to be included in the Charter ?

"Our efforts to discover children's needs in Europe are met with difficulties for two reasons. Firstly because in the EU citizens are seen as employers, employees and consumers only and secondly because children are seen as children of working parents only."³

The fundamental human rights of children⁴, as expressed in the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) are not yet integrated into any of the core legal texts of the EU and therefore are not integrated into EU policy and legislation. As a result children's needs are currently largely ignored. Indeed, at present, legislation is inadvertently affecting children in a negative way. Other groups such as consumers, women, animals, disabled people are at least mentioned in the existing EU Treaty.

² Active voices – children's choices – Belfast Euronet symposium, 28/29 May 1998

³ Children as Citizens of Europe – From Rhetoric to Reality, speech at Euronet Conference Belfast – 28/5/98.

⁴ Up to now the European Commission has preferred to use the term 'fundamental rights' in preference to human rights in discussing its work in this area.

This means that EU legislation, policy and programming is to a certain extent sensitive to their fundamental rights and interests. However in the area of children's policy this is currently not the case. EU member states, by comparison have made greater progress to integrate the principles of the Convention into their national laws since ratification and although Euronet believes that many member states still need to make improvements before their legislation fully reflects the principles of the best interests of the child, substantial progress has been made in this area (see for example "A children's policy for 21st Century Europe: First steps" p20 – 21⁵).

The briefing argues why children should be explicitly mentioned in the Charter in order to:-

- a) Ensure that the EU itself is also implementing existing international commitments such as the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which all EU member states have ratified.
- b) Ensure that in areas where the EU legislates, children's interests are taken into account and that legislation is not inadvertently discriminating against children

The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child

*"The increasing importance attached to the concept of children's rights and the major role attributed by the international Community to the Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989, serve to underline the desirability of a greater EU sensibility in this area... The Commission (should) ensure that all legislation it drafts is fully compatible with the requirements of the Convention."*⁶

The 1989 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child is the fullest contemporary international expression of the fundamental rights of all people under the age of 18 – ie children. More than any other human rights instrument it incorporates the whole spectrum of human rights, civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. The Convention states clearly that the best interests of the child should be a primary consideration in all legislation, and policy.

*"In all actions concerning children, whether undertaken by public or private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities or legal bodies, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration,"*⁷

⁵ Op cit

⁶ Leading by Example – A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000 – Cassese, Lalumière, Leuprecht, Robinson. Published by Academy of European Law, European University Institute, p 102.

⁷ Article 3 – Convention on the Rights of the Child.

The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child is the most widely ratified human rights instrument ever, having been ratified by all states in the world (except the USA and Somalia). All EU member states, EEA states and states about to accede to the EU have ratified the Convention. However, at the moment the EU itself is under no obligation to respect the principles of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.⁸

This means that whilst the member states have a legal obligation to promote the best interests of the child and protect children's fundamental rights, the EU and is under no such obligation. This is inconsistent and means for example that member states are regularly assessing and reviewing how their actions and legislation affects the human rights of children, whilst the EU does not do so. Without systematic reference to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a yardstick by which to judge the extent to which actions and policies promote children's rights, there is no means by which to be sure that children's rights are being upheld and promoted.

As the EU moves towards further integration, more and more issues concerning children are becoming transnational ones. It is important that the EU should be bound by international standards that member states have already signed up to.

There are many areas in which the EU currently passes legislation which have a direct or indirect bearing on children's lives, these include, labour legislation (Young People at Work Directive, Parental Leave Directive), consumer legislation (see above), information and media legislation and policy, health and the environment. Integration of the principles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child would act as a "child proofing" tool and ensure that the EU was under the same obligations as its member states.

The Convention on the Rights of the Child enshrines children's right to participate in decisions which affect them.⁹ It is important that children are also given the possibility to participate actively in the development of the European ideal and concept.

Are Children's Rights dealt with by existing provisions in the Treaty covering human rights ?

Many commentators argue that the EU's overall legislative competence and approach to human rights is weak and that there is a human rights deficit.

⁸ For a further discussion see "Towards an EU Human Rights Agenda for Children" – International Save the Children Alliance Europe Group, 1998, Brussels, Rädta Barnen.

⁹ Article 12, Convention on the Rights of the Child.

“The Treaty did not and still does not even after the measures introduced by Amsterdam, list human rights among its objectives....the Community lacks any significant constitutional competence to deal with all but a very circumscribed range of human rights matters.”¹⁰

Similarly the report by the Comité de Sages concluded “As regards the Treaties of the European Union, what we have at present is not a genuine framework of social and civil rights but rather a set of ad hoc, piecemeal measures to accompany economic integration and to allow minimum social policies to be pursued.”¹¹

Euronet agrees with these assessments. Not only are existing human rights provisions in the EU Treaty weak, but those that are in the Treaty do not specifically mention children's human rights. This has very practical consequences, meaning that where human rights clauses are inserted into trade agreements or cooperation agreements, no specific attention is paid to children's rights.

Why do we need a separate expression of children's rights ?

If human rights cover all human beings, why do children need their own special set of rights ?

- Existing international standards ie the Convention on the Rights of the Child recognise the need for children to have their own set of rights, reflecting their particular needs and status.¹²
- Children have not always been accepted as holders of rights and animals were often given rights before children.
- Children are a special category of people who have specific needs and who do not have the ability to protect themselves. Adults rights are often different from children's rights and vice versa. Talking about human rights in general but not identifying specific rights for children renders children invisible and vulnerable.

¹⁰ See “Leading by example – A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000”, Cassese, Lalumière, Leuprecht, Robinson, Academy of European Law, European University Institute, Florence, 1998, para 60

¹¹ “For a Europe of civic and social rights” – Report by the Comité de Sages, European Commission, Brussels, 1996.

¹² See “The Child and the European Convention on Human Rights, Kilkelly, Ursula, Ashgate, UK, 1999.

What about subsidiarity – Surely the protection of children's rights rests at the member state level ?

The principal competence for policy and legislation on children's issues is the responsibility of member state's Governments. However there is also a clear European dimension to the question of children's policy. Many issues affecting children are neither uniquely national nor transnational. For example, the legal consequences for children when their parents choose to live in different parts of the EU following family breakdown, the greater cross border dissemination of child pornography, and child trafficking. Similarly as standardisation and harmonisation of products and regulation of TV, internet and media takes place at EU level, in many cases the best interests of the child are overlooked.

Euronet is not arguing for the competence for children's policy to move to the European level but rather, where the EU passes legislation, policy and programmes, children's rights must be taken into account. The Charter should provide a clear, simple legal basis which enables European legislators to ensure that the best interests of the child is taken into account in all European policy, law and programming. Children are affected differently from adults by European legislation and it is important that all EU policy and legislative proposals takes their needs into consideration.

Would incorporation of the ECHR into the EU Treaty help children?

Legal opinion varies as to whether incorporation of the ECHR into the EU Treaty is possible and desirable. Leaving this wider debate aside, incorporation would bring limited value for children.

Children are not specifically mentioned in the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR), although it has been frequently used to protect children's rights in such areas as respect for family life, the right to education, protection against discrimination and the protection of physical integrity. However there are significant limitations on the ECHR as an instrument for the promotion and protection of children's rights including its focus on relations between the state and individuals, its silence on many important areas of children's lives.¹³

The ECHR "is....in many ways blind to children. It does make limited reference to children for example – in respect of the public nature of court proceedings in respect of juveniles and liberty and security of the person. But it fails entirely to address the concept of human rights for children within a framework appropriate to childhood in the way developed by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.”¹⁴

¹³ See "Areas and Rights covered by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which are not covered by the European Convention on Human Rights" Pascale Boucard – Steering Committee for Human Rights, Council of Europe, Strasbourg, 1995.

Children's rights as EU Citizens – a promise unfulfilled

“The advice I have received...is that the reference to all persons who have citizenship of a member state covers everybody, including children”¹⁵

Despite this positive statement, the rights of children as EU citizens are unclear. The focus in the Treaty on the “citizen as worker” has meant that children's legal status as European citizens is unclear. This has led for example to the failure to incorporate the best interests of the child into EU legislation. It also means that only a limited number of action programmes, and temporary budgetlines have children as a principal target group.

Article 17 (2) of the Treaty of Amsterdam states “Citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights conferred by this Treaty and shall be subject to the duties imposed thereby.” However, citizenship of the Union only confers the rights which are covered by the Treaty, most of which exclude children. This is because the Treaty primarily regulates issues of an economic nature, therefore focusing on groups such as workers or people providing services. As a result rights are currently related to the fact that you are an economic entity. In EU law children are seen too often as only “victims” or “dependents” or “barriers to work” in direct contradiction with their status in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and in member states' laws.

The consequences of a lack of specific recognition for children's rights

One of the strongest illustrations of why it is necessary to have a reference to children in the Charter is the current ad hoc nature of inclusion of the principle of “the best interests of the child” (fundamental to the protection of children's rights in international law) in EU legislation. This is evident for example in the field of harmonisation and standardisation legislation as illustrated below.

a) Negative effects on children from EU Directives

The protection of children's human rights should be a priority for all policies. Because of children's particular vulnerability and needs, adults have a particular responsibility to safeguard them.

¹⁴ “European Convention on Human Rights – Implications for Children”1997, UK – Gerison Lansdown.

¹⁵ Statement from the then Irish Foreign Minister Gay Mitchell, representing the Irish Presidency of the EU, during revision of Amsterdam Treaty.

On the positive side there have been a number of cases where the EU has legislated to promote the highest standards of safety for children. These have included the Toy Safety Directive 1988, and other directives aimed at establishing standards for producers so that children cannot undo fastenings on potentially dangerous products, such as bottles of medicines. Beyond these specific cases, children have to some extent been covered by more general consumer protection initiatives.

However despite this, many problems remain. Too often commercial considerations come before the best interests of the child with the potential to infringe children's rights.

Examples of this:-

- Distance Selling: There is no reference to the protection of children in EU Directives on misleading advertising and on distance selling, despite evidence from consumer groups that children are often unable to distinguish between covert advertising and information and are therefore at specific risk.
- Toy Advertising: In a recent case toy manufacturers called on the European Commission to take action against the Greek Government. The Greek Government had banned TV advertising of toys because of a concern to promote the best interests of the child and ensure that no advertising was transmitted between certain hours. However the Commission claims that the Greek Government's action breaches single market rules, placing commercial interests above those of Europe's youngest citizens.
- TV Advertising: In a similar case in 1995 a UK TV station transmitted advertisements to children in Sweden, although these are prohibited for children under 12 in Sweden. Because the single Market creates a free market for movement of goods and services, this action is perfectly lawful, even though it may not be in the best interests of children.
- Chemicals and Toys: Although many member states took action to ban the use of PVC (polyvinylchlorides) in babies' toys, the European Commission took many months to introduce an EU wide ban on the use of PVC in toys. This was despite evidence from consumer and environmental groups that such toys contain harmful levels of chemicals and may damage children's rights to the highest attainable health standards.

All these examples demonstrate that the need for better protection of children's rights within the policy and decision making processes of the EU. Inclusion of a reference to children's rights in the Charter would help ensure that this process was systematic and no longer ad hoc.

b) Unnecessary Court of Justice Cases

The lack of recognition of the human rights of children in the EU Treaties, and in particular the principle of promoting the best interests of the child has meant that children's rights in the EU have developed in a piecemeal way. In some cases children's rights in the EU have had to be established by taking cases to the Court of Justice. This is inefficient and costly - it would be far more efficient to ensure that the principles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child were incorporated into the Treaty on European Union. Whilst both the judgements below did in fact rule in favour of the rights of the child, a further demonstration of the problems resulting from the lack of systematic protection of those rights, this was only achieved by taking the case to the European Court of Justice. Integration of the fundamental rights of the child into EU legislative processes would have made such cases unnecessary and ensure a more systematic protection and promotion of children's rights.

In the first case, the Commission v Belgium (42/87) established that children in one member state but living in another continue to be entitled to all forms of state education in the host country even if the working parent has retired or died in that state. The second case of Moritz v the Netherlands Ministry of Education (390/87) established that this was the case even if the child moves back to the state of origin.

c) Economic, Trade and Poverty issues

Children are also affected by EU economic and trade policies, EU Trade agreements, Economic and Monetary Union, and the single market all can impact on children, it is important that children's interests (which can be different from adults' interests) are not overlooked in these debates.¹⁶

EU economic policy for example which requires specific regions within Europe to undertake adjustment to a new economic environment can damage the development of entire generations of children in those regions. Children in such regions make up significant numbers of the 20% of EU's children suffering from social exclusion.

d) Asylum and Immigration policy

The EU is now legislating in a number of crucial areas of asylum and immigration policy as it moves from the third pillar to the first pillar. Children have very particular needs, especially child asylum seekers who are separated from their parents.

¹⁶ See "Children, Economics and the EU – Towards Child Friendly Policies" – Save the Children, 2000.

Do existing legal bases offer sufficient protection for children's rights ?

“The action taken by the EU in relation to the protection of children is still very limited, because of a lack of explicit legal bases and a failure to recognise that this action is of prime importance to the very future of the Union.”¹⁷

The current legal bases in the Amsterdam Treaty gives the Commission only a very limited competence to protect children's rights. In particular it creates a limited intergovernmental competence to tackle a whole range of cross border and transnational issues affecting children's rights.¹⁸

On the positive side, for the first time in the history of the EU, children are explicitly mentioned in the Amsterdam Treaty in Article K which contains an explicit reference to “offences against children”. Article K allows for increased cooperation between member states' police and judicial authorities in tackling crimes against children which cross national borders. Increasingly as borders disappear, children are at risk from organised crime and member states have had limited powers to deal with this in a coordinated fashion. However, Article K is outside the Community application of the Treaty, and any action has to be agreed on a case by case basis and has limited European dimension. Furthermore Article K is limited to offences against children and fails to cover many other areas of concern for children and does not provide for children's interests to be taken into account systematically in the drafting of EU legislation.

Therefore a major failing of the Treaty of Amsterdam is that it does not incorporate the respect for the fundamental principles of children's rights. It gives only a very limited competence to work at European level on a whole range of cross border and transnational problems affecting the fulfillment of children's rights. Below we analyse the limitations of other legal bases in promoting children's rights.

¹⁷ Quote from MEP in “Towards a Children's Policy for 21st Century Europe: First Steps” op cit.

¹⁸ For a more detailed analysis see Euronet - “The New Treaty on European Union – What is in it for children?”, Sutton, Diana, Brussels 1997 and Euronet “Towards a Children's Policy for 21st Century Europe”, op cit.

EU Treaty Articles relevant to children:

Article 13 - Non Discrimination:

In theory the inclusion of a non-discrimination clause on grounds of age should offer protection to children's rights, especially the right not to be discriminated against (Article 3 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child). However the reference to non discrimination on grounds of age in Article 13 has the following limitations:-

- Although age discrimination can occur at the lower end of the age range, the Commission has not yet interpreted "non discrimination on grounds of age" to include children.
- Secondly this clause does not have "direct effect", this means that it cannot be used by an individual in a court of law and cannot be used in the European Court of Justice.
- Thirdly, all measures proposed under this clause require the unanimous agreement of all EU member states' Governments.
- Fourthly, Article 13 has limited value for children because it only deals with measures aimed at combating discrimination and as we have seen children are affected by numerous other issues at a European level, and no measures can be taken under this clause to address these wider issues.
- Finally there is no spending power attached by Member States to this clause and therefore the impact of any measures taken under it will be very limited. It could not therefore be used as a legal basis for a European programme in the area of children's rights and children's policy.

Article 137 - Social Exclusion

The inclusion of Article 137 gives the Community a legal basis to combat social exclusion. This is welcome given that recent Eurostat figures demonstrate that 20% of the European Union's children are living in poverty. This new legal basis will be used for the adoption of an action programme on social exclusion, which can be used to address the problem of children facing social exclusion. It is recommended that Member States work with a broad definition of social exclusion. This clause can be agreed by qualified majority voting, thus eliminating potential problems with one or two member states blocking progress.

Article 141:

Although not directly relevant to children's rights issues this clause could be beneficial to children, since it makes reference to equal treatment for men and women in matters of employment and occupation, which could for example have a bearing on issues such as parental leave and child care.

Article 143 - Demography

This clause could be used to ensure that the European Union collects age disaggregated statistics, including improved information at the lower end of the age range, ie on the situation of Union citizens under the age of 18. Such an approach would enable the Union to have an accurate statistical assessment of the different ages of all its citizens and would assist the Union and Member States' in planning policy and services. It is important that information about the situation of children is included in such a report for a number of reasons. First children's needs are different from adults, second children will have to be responsible for supporting both financially and otherwise the Union's ageing population and finally children's services and interests must not be prejudiced as the Union and Member States focus their attention on the needs of Europe's ageing population.

The need for a legally binding charter of fundamental rights

Euronet recommends that the charter of fundamental rights is legally binding. Although a specific reference to children's rights in a non legally binding Bill of Rights would have the advantage of giving children and children's rights political visibility and as such may assist focusing the Commission and Member states attention more on the issue of European Children's policy, it would not have any legal significance and will therefore not assist in child proofing of legislation, its significance would therefore be only symbolic.

Moreover, Euronet recommends that the charter is not simply a declaration of existing rights but rather advances the promotion of children's rights and human rights. Euronet believes that a charter that is not legally binding would not address the problems of EU legislation inadvertently affecting children in a negative way which are raised in this submission.

Conclusions

It is recommended that the drafting of a Charter of Fundamental Rights should contain a full reference to the need for protection and promotion of children's rights in the EU. This is best expressed through a clear and explicit reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Such a reference should be used to ensure that the child dimension is taken into account in all relevant EU policy, programmes and budgets. Member states should also ensure that existing legal bases are used to the greatest extent possible to promote children's rights.

Bibliography: -

Leading by Example – A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000 – Cassese, Lalumière, Leuprecht, Robinson. Published by Academy of European Law, European University Institute, Florence 1998.

The Child and the European Convention on Human Rights, Kilkelly Ursula, Ashgate, UK, 1999.

The Rights of the Child – A European Perspective, Council of Europe Publishing, Strasbourg, France, 1996.

“For a Europe of civic and social rights” – Report by the Comité des Sages (1996) – European Commission

“Towards an EU Human Rights Agenda for Children” – International Save the Children Alliance Europe Group, Brussels, Belgium 1998.

Euronet – The European Children's Network “A children's policy for 21st Century Europe: First Steps.” Ruxton, S. Brussels, Belgium. 1999

Euronet – “The New Treaty on European Union – What is in it for Children ?”, Sutton, Diana, Brussels 1997.

“Areas and Rights covered by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which are not covered by the European Convention on Human Rights” Pascale Boucard (1995) – Steering Committee for Human Rights, Council of Europe, Strasbourg

European Convention on Human Rights – Implications for Children – 9.7.1997 – Gerison Lansdown

Comparative Study on the Political and Legal Status of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child in Europe – Rätts Barnen, Stockholm.

January 2000

Editors' note to CHARTE 4128/00 ADD 1,
Contribution of the Secretariat of the Commission of the Bishops' Conferences of the European Community (COMECE) (dated 8/02/00):

The INIT FR version was dated 11 February.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 7 March 2000CHARTE 4128/00 ADD 1ⁿ*CONTRIB 23*ADDENDUM TO COVER NOTE*Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the English version of the contribution of the Secretariat of the Commission of the Bishops' conferences of the European Community (COMECE).^{1 2}

¹ This text has been submitted only in English language.

² COMECE, 42 rue Stévin, B-1000 Bruxelles. Tel: 0032-2-230 73 16. Fax: 0032-2-230 33 34.

Commission des Episcopats de la Communauté Européenne
 Commission of the Bishops' Conferences of the European Community
 Kommission der Bischofskonferenzen der Europäischen Gemeinschaft

42, rue Stévin
 B – 1000 Brussels
 Tel. + 32 (0)2 230 73 16
 Fax + 32 (0)2 230 33 34
 E-mail: comece@glo.be

Contribution by the COMMISSION of the BISHOPS' CONFERENCES of the EUROPEAN COMMUNITY
- COMECE -
to the Draft
CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

Document of the COMECE Secretariat

8 February 2000

I.	Text	p. 2
II.	Explanatory memorandum	p. 6

Translation from the ORIGINAL FRENCH version

I. Text

Preamble

ON BEHALF OF THE PEOPLES OF EUROPE,

CONSIDERING the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly of 10 December 1948,

CONSIDERING the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, adopted by the Council of Europe on 4 November 1950,

CONSIDERING the European Community Charter of Fundamental Rights of Workers, adopted by the European Community on 9 December 1989,

CONSIDERING the revised European Social Charter, adopted by the Council of Europe on 3 May 1996,

CONSIDERING the respect for fundamental rights resulting from constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as one of the general principles of Community law,

RECALLING that all human beings are equal in dignity and under the law,

CONFIRMING that recognition of the inherent dignity of all members of the human family and the protection of their inalienable rights is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

REAFFIRMING that the European Union is founded on the principle of freedom, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, the rule of law and justice,

RESOLVED to continue the process of creating an ever closer union among the peoples of Europe, in which decisions are taken as closely as possible to the citizen, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity,

DESIRING to further enhance the democratic and efficient functioning of the institutions to enable them to better carry out the tasks entrusted to them in the respect of human dignity and fundamental rights, the High Contracting Parties have agreed as follows.

Right to life

Human life has an absolute value.

Every human being has the right to respect for his/her life from its beginning until its natural end.

Every human being has the right to be born of a man and a woman.

These rights must be specially safeguarded in medical and biotechnological applications, as well as in the context of research.

Family rights

The family is the natural and fundamental element of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

The right of men and women of marriageable age to marry and to raise a family shall be recognised, if they meet the conditions required by domestic laws, insofar as such conditions do not affect the fundamental principles established in this Charter.

No marriage shall be entered into without the free and full consent of the intending spouses.

The choice of one of the two spouses to stay home to take care of the children shall be protected.

Equal rights and judicious sharing of responsibilities between the spouses as to marriage shall be laid down in national law, during marriage and upon its dissolution. In the event of dissolution of the family, the law shall make the necessary provisions to ensure proper protection of the children, solely in their interest and for their wellbeing.

The law recognises that children born outside of wedlock have the same rights as those born in wedlock.

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes the freedom to change one's religion or belief, as well as the freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest one's religion or belief through worship, teaching, practice and observance.

Freedom of religion also includes the right for the Churches and religious associations or communities in the Member States to lay down all practical or legal acts relating to religion.

Right to education

Everyone has the right to education, which shall be based on the principles of freedom, dignity and solidarity. In the exercise of any function it may assume in the field of education, the Union shall respect the right of parents to provide for such education in line with their religious and philosophical convictions.

The right to religious education, provided for in accordance with the rules laid down in national law, is recognised to parents and to pupils.

Right to political asylum

All persons who, owing to well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, are outside the country of their nationality and are unable or, owing to such fear, are unwilling to avail themselves of the protection of their country, have the right to request asylum in a State of the European Union.

No refugee shall be sent to a place where he/she is at risk of once again being persecuted.

Right to fair and proper access to health care

Everyone has a right to fair access to proper quality health care.

Right to protection against any form of discrimination on the grounds of health or genetic characteristics

Everyone has a right to protection against any form of discrimination on the grounds of health or genetic attributes.

Right of disabled people

Whatever the origin or nature of their disability, all disabled persons have the right to benefit from additional measures to promote their occupational and social integration, mobility and living conditions.

Right to rest and leisure

Everyone has a right to rest and leisure, including reasonable limitation of working time and periodic holidays with pay. This right includes the respect of Sunday, a day of rest common to all Member States and, as such, an expression of their identity and a part of their common cultural heritage.

Right to social protection and to satisfy basic material needs

Every worker in the European Union has a right to proper social protection and, irrespective of his/her status or the size of the enterprise for which he/she works, is entitled to an adequate level of social security benefits.

All persons legally resident on the territory of the Union who are excluded from the labour market either because they have not been able to enter it or because they have not been able to rejoin it, and who have no means of subsistence are entitled to adequate benefits and resources in line with their personal or family situation.

Pregnant women without the means of subsistence necessary for their personal or family situation are entitled to receive benefits and resources permitting them to take responsibility for their condition.

Protection of the elderly

Every worker in the European Union is entitled, when he/she retires, to benefit from sufficient resources to ensure that he/she has a decent standard of living.

Any person legally resident in the territory of the Union who has reached retirement age but has been excluded from entitlement to a pension and who has no other means of subsistence, is entitled to benefit from adequate resources and from welfare and medical assistance in line with their specific needs.

Rights of children in the labour market

In accordance with Article 1 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, "child" means any human being under the age of 18, except where the age of majority is earlier under the legislation applying to him/her.

All young workers have a right to suitable initial vocational training, as well as to protection that takes into account their specific situation in the labour market.

The European Union shall respect the age of 18 as the minimum working age. However, derogations may be provided for young employees carrying out light work that is unlikely to affect their health, moral upbringing or education.

Children who are still subject to compulsory education shall never be employed in work that deprives them of the full benefit of such education.

Young workers have the right to fair pay. Their hours and days of work shall be limited in order to avoid harming the development of their health and personality.

National law shall ensure special protection against any physical or moral dangers to which children might be exposed, especially those resulting directly or indirectly from their work.

II. Explanatory memorandum

General comments

The Commission of the Bishops' Conferences of the European Community (COMECE) welcomes the decision adopted at the Cologne European Council in June 1999 to draw up a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Protecting the fundamental rights of people in a way that is legally enforceable against the European Union and its organs is an important initiative to which COMECE attaches great value.

Since it is anxious to participate in a joint drafting of this Charter, the General Secretariat of the Commission of the Bishops' Conferences of the European Community (COMECE) is submitting a number of specific draft texts, together with a Memorandum to explain their scope.

The rights enshrined in the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, as well as the acknowledged rights and freedoms of European Union citizens in the treaties of Maastricht and Amsterdam have now been adopted throughout the European Union. They have not been included in the draft submitted by COMECE, except where they sometimes appeared to need supplementing. Nonetheless, all of the rights and freedoms to which the European Union Member States have subscribed in the above treaties will, of course, need to be included in the Charter, either by referring to the said treaties or by fully integrating the text of the rights enshrined in the respective treaties.

Obviously a rational solution would be for the European Union to become a signatory of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. And it would be desirable for the forthcoming Intergovernmental Conference to adopt this decision.

The rights included in COMECE's proposal have been drawn up in the desire to give them binding legal force. Some of these rights relate to matters that already form part of the European Union's remit. Others are the remit of the Member State national authorities but, should the European Union's action encroach directly or indirectly upon their remit, it would be appropriate to ensure that these fundamental rights are respected.

In drawing up the draft articles, COMECE largely based its proposals on internationally agreed texts, i.e. the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the 1950 European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the 1961 European Social Charter, the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Preamble

The preamble states that this Charter has been adopted on behalf of the peoples of Europe. This reference confirms the authors' desire to ensure that the initiative remains close to citizens.

In the preamble, reference is also made to the main international texts on fundamental rights to which the Member States have adhered, as well as to the European Union's major objectives.

Finally, the preamble underscores that these fundamental rights are rooted in a concern for the respect of human dignity.

Right to life

It should be self-evident that this is the most important of all the fundamental rights. However, as a result of scientific advances, developments could result in certain abuses that undermine human dignity. For instance, current cloning techniques have shown that it is becoming possible to reproduce life without any merging of gametes, i.e. without an egg having been fertilised by a sperm.

Taking into account developments in scientific research, it is becoming an urgent matter to lay down absolute respect for human life and dignity.

Family rights

There have been changes in this sphere also, but in this case they involve questions of social lifestyle. Although the family has been the fundamental unit of society since the dawn of humanity, one must now take into consideration the fact that, alongside the family founded on marriage, there are other forms of union: single-parent families and cohabitation. In these cases, too, children have the right to protection.

Furthermore, these developments should not penalise the traditional family, which still deserves the protection of the State and society. Therefore no tax system adopted within the Union should discourage a spouse from remaining in the family home to raise the children. In the same spirit, even though new forms of conjugal living are becoming established, the principal characteristics of marriage should be reserved solely for this traditional institution.

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

This right is very effectively enshrined in Article 9 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Nevertheless it warrants being supplemented in order to take into account the fact that the right enshrined in this article is generally considered from the angle of an individual right, even though it is externalised collectively and in public. In fact, freedom of thought, conscience and religion would be incomplete if it failed to take into consideration the collective dimension. By this, we mean that churches, religious associations and communities must be allowed to perform acts that are the concrete expression of this freedom, and these acts must be afforded legal recognition. Without this extra dimension, such freedom would to a large degree be meaningless.

Reference should be made in this regard to Joint Declaration no. 11, appended to the Treaty of Amsterdam.

Right to education

This right often gives rise to much debate within EU Member States.

Without wishing to undermine the principle of subsidiarity it is, however, desirable to clarify its scope and content in view of the comment on the previous article.

Right to political asylum

The protection of refugees is a highly topical issue in the European Union. At the Tampere European Council, the Member States that had signed the 1951 Geneva Convention reasserted their desire to allow individual protection for refugees. It is important to guarantee this right at Union level, since the Treaty of Amsterdam entrusted the Union with new powers to create an area of freedom, security and justice.

Right of fair and proper access to health care

Along with medical advances, sophisticated but also increasingly costly treatments are becoming widespread. In view of the increase in the European Union's ageing population and growing problems in balancing social security budgets, it is becoming urgent to provide fair measures of health care access for all.

Right to protection against any form of discrimination on the grounds of health or genetic attributes

There has been a plethora of scientific advances, which have been particularly spectacular in the field of genetics. However, such developments could lead to abuses for people who might be discovered to be prone to certain illnesses (with regard to employment contracts or the payment of insurance premiums, for example). In striving to combat a host of different forms of discrimination, we should not overlook the sort of discrimination based on health or genetic characteristics.

Right of handicapped people

In its concern to combat all forms of discrimination, the Treaty of Amsterdam has also included disability as an unacceptable criterion of discrimination. However, this provision is not enough in itself: positive measures must also be provided to assist disabled people.

Right to rest and leisure

The right to rest and leisure is one of the twentieth century's greatest achievements. This important social right is enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in particular.

Although the right to rest must take into account a number of criteria and be adapted to suit local requirements, it is nevertheless important to establish a common day for the convenience of families, the organisation of leisure, and cultural requirements. This day should obviously be Sunday, for centuries a day of rest common to all European countries. The choice of Sunday as a day of rest therefore forms part of Europe's cultural heritage.

Right to social protection and to the satisfaction of basic material needs

One of the European Union's greatest concerns is to combat social exclusion. The right to social protection and to the satisfaction of basic material needs (in terms of food, clothing, accommodation and urgent medical care) must be included in any Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Every worker in the European Union must be able to benefit from this right, as well as any person who is unable or no longer able to work (spouses remaining at home or unemployed people) and any person legally resident in the territory (for example, anyone who has been given the right of asylum).

This right should include pregnant women who lack the necessary means of subsistence, who must be provided with the assistance required to allow them to cope with and take responsibility for their condition.

Protection of the elderly

In the same concern as that expressed above, any persons in the European Union who find themselves in a situation where they are at a severe disadvantage must be allowed to benefit from protection that provides them with a decent standard of living. This of course also applies to elderly people, whether they are workers in the Union or people legally resident there, examples of which have been given in the previous article.

Rights of children in the labour market

The concern to ensure the wellbeing of all people in the European Union who deserve protection should not neglect young people, a group that is sometimes at a disadvantage in the labour market.

For the definition of "child", reference should be made to article one of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the United Nations Organisation in 1989. This Convention and the European Social Charter of 1961 were the main sources of inspiration for this article.

Brussels, 8 February 2000

Editors' note to CHARTE 4129/00 ADD 1,
Common statement by the International Federation of Human Rights (FIDH) (dated 14/02/00):

The INIT FR version was dated 16 February.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 7 June 2000CHARTE 4129/00*ADD 1*CONTRIB 24*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the English version of the common statement by the International Federation of Human Rights (FIDH) . ^{1 2}

¹ This text has been submitted in English and French languages.

² FIDH: 91, rue de l'Enseignement, 1000 Brussels, Belgium. Tel: +32-2-209 62 89.
Fax: +32-2-209 63 80. E-mail: fidh.bruxelles@linkline.be

EUROPEAN JUSTICE AND PEACE COMMISSIONS
INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS (FIDH)
EUROPEAN MIGRANTS' FORUM
INTERNATIONAL CATHOLIC MIGRATION COMMISSION (ICMC)
KAIROS EUROPE
PAX CHRISTI INTERNATIONAL
PRESENCE DES COMMUNAUTÉS D'ORIGINE AFRICAINE
QUAKER COUNCIL FOR EUROPEAN AFFAIRS

The European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights and Third Country Nationals

The European Council of Cologne (June 1999) resolved to draft a Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union (EU). The Extraordinary European Council in Tampere (October 1999) agreed on the composition and method of work of the Body to elaborate the draft EU Charter.

The debate has now entered a new phase: it is now time to go ahead on discussions on the drafting procedure and to address the content of the future Charter.

Taking into consideration the discussions so far on the Charter and the ambiguity surrounding the scope of the Charter (who it will apply to), our organisations call for the full and express recognition of the fundamental rights of Third Country Nationals within the territory of the European Union.

Consequently, the following three basic principles need to be remembered:

The universality of human rights

Human rights, by definition, benefit every human being for the simple reason that he/she is a human being. The universality of human rights has already been established through the body of existing international and regional Human Rights instruments, to which the EU member states are signatories. For example:

- Article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that:
«Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.»
- Article 1 of the European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR) provides that:
«The High Contracting Parties shall secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the rights and freedoms defined in Section 1 of this Convention.»
- Article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights reads:
«Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognised in the present Covenant, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.»
- Article 2 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights states, in paragraph 2, that:
«The State Parties to the present Covenant undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in the present Covenant will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.»

2. Non-discrimination

As the European Court of Human Rights has repeatedly stressed, distinctions between citizens and non-citizens of the EU can only be established on the condition that they are objectively justified and proportionate to the goal of setting up specific legal arrangements between the EU member states, after establishing its own citizenship. Hence, the principle of non-discrimination, an essential reference in the field of fundamental rights, implies that the rights restricted to EU citizens should be narrowly defined and that such a difference in treatment should be firmly justified and proportionate to the objective to be achieved.

In this regard, our organisations invite the body drafting the Charter to examine the best wording possible for the specific non-discrimination clause which will be included in the Charter. The proposed Protocol to the ECHR (Protocol 12) on non-discrimination will probably be adopted during the year 2000. This could form a good reference point for this purpose.

The basic principle must be that the rights enshrined in the Charter will be universal. Differences in application of the Charter's rights should result from an objective difference in the circumstances of those entitled to the rights. It is not necessary to create a priori categories of beneficiaries.

As for civil and political rights, international law at present allows the rights to vote and eligibility to stand for election in European and municipal elections to be conferred solely on EU citizens. The international treaties binding Member states (Article 25 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Article 21 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights) provide for the possibility of such a restriction. We urge however the drafters of the Charter to extend this right to people residing legally in the territory of the EU, provided they comply with specific conditions (e.g. 5 years of legal residence), as requested by the European Parliament in April 1999¹. The fact that Third Country Nationals live in the territory of the EU is today a permanent characteristic of European societies. The Council of Europe's Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at local level (1992) could serve as a reference in this field.

If a form of diplomatic protection (Article 20 of EEC) could be reserved to the EU citizens, the right to petition before the European Parliament and the right to introduce a complaint to the European Ombudsman should continue to be available to all people residing in the territory of Member states. The right to address the European institutions in any of the 12 official languages and to receive a response in that language (Article 21 EEC) should equally be extended to all people under the jurisdiction of the EU Member states.

¹ Resolution on the strategy document on the Position of the European Union regards migration and asylum adopted 13 April 1999, para.23.

The right to move and reside freely (Article 18 EEC) within the EU is, for the time being, restricted to Member states nationals. Our organisations believe that this right should benefit all people residing legally within the EU, in conformity with the general prohibition of discrimination on the basis of nationality.

In addition, the extension of this right to third country nationals could be considered in the future to be a requirement resulting from the right to move freely within States, enshrined in various international human rights instruments. These instruments do not include any reference to nationality as a pre-condition (Article 2 of Protocol 4 to ECHR, Article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights²). In line with the progress of European integration, it is logical and fair that the right to move and reside freely within the EU should equally benefit all people residing legally in Member states. This would conform to the aim to create an internal market without borders.

Eventually, in relation to this right, the future Charter should include an explicit reference to the right of asylum-seekers, stateless people and people entitled to benefit from family reunification to enter the territory of Member states.

Other rights which would only benefit Third Country Nationals could be enshrined in the Charter. For example, the prohibition of collective expulsions of foreigners (as foreseen in Article 4 of Protocol 4 to ECHR).

The signatory organisations of this paper consider that economic and social fundamental rights should have the same scope of application to the persons as the civil and political rights. Therefore, the right to medical and social assistance (including the right to adequate housing and sufficient food), the right of children to education and the right to gender equality should benefit to all people under the jurisdiction of EU Member states. This should be regardless of their nationality and the legality of their residence in the EU.

Some social rights are linked to the exercise of a job (for example, the right to vocational training), others depend on the legality of residence (for instance, the right to work, the right to social welfare – this is different from the fundamental right to medical and social assistance). Therefore, those residing illegally in the territory of the Union will not benefit from these rights. A specific clause excluding these people from the benefit of such rights is neither necessary nor desirable.

² « Everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence.»

3. Harmonisation of the instruments of protection

Our organisations are convinced that the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and the ratification by the EU (or in default by the EC) of the European Convention on Human Rights and the Revised European Social Charter are complementary. It is only by combining these processes that contradictory jurisprudence will be avoided since in the medium term, the Charter might become a binding instrument and be invoked before the Community courts. This is also the only way to ensure coherence among the mechanisms of protection of fundamental rights in Europe.

Such an accession would require a revision of the EEC Treaty. Therefore, we call for the inclusion of the Charter of Fundamental Rights as well as the accession to the relevant instruments of the Council of Europe (in particular ECHR and the Revised ESC) on the agenda of the forth-coming Inter-Governmental Conference.

Our organisations call upon the Body elaborating the Charter of Fundamental Rights to make sure that all its thematic working groups duly take into account the situation of Third Country Nationals residing within the EU, and consistently keep in mind the universal nature of fundamental rights.

Brussels, 14 February 2000

This paper is signed by the following organisations:

European Justice and Peace Commissions – tel: ++32 2 738 08 01

International Federation of Human Rights - FIDH – tel: ++32 2 209 62 89

European Migrants' Forum – tel: ++32 2 230 28 60

ICMC – tel: ++32 2 230 94 35

KAIROS Europe – tel: ++32 2 479 96 55

Pax Christi International – tel: ++32 2 502 5550

Présence des Communautés d'origine africaine – tel: ++32 477 48 22 62

Quaker Council for European Affairs – tel: ++32 2 230 49 35

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPEENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 16 février 2000CHARTE 4130/00*CONTRIB 25*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint une contribution de la Fédération Européenne des Retraités et Personnes Agées (FERPA).^{1 2}

¹ Ce texte a été soumis seulement en langue française.

² FERPA: boulevard du Roi Albert II n° 5, 1210 Bruxelles, Belgique. Tel: +32-2-224 04 42.
Fax: +32-2-224 04 54. E-mail: jmontiel@etuc.org

Bruxelles, le 11 février 2000

Madame, Monsieur,

Lors de son Congrès de mai 1999, la FERPA a arrêté un catalogue énumérant les Droits Fondamentaux.

Cette liste a été élaborée après un examen des propositions faites notamment dans le rapport Staedelin au Comité Economique et Social, du Comité des Sages, du projet de Traité élaboré par Herman et présenté au Parlement Européen.

La FERPA, Fédération Européenne des Retraités et Personnes Agées compte dans ses rangs, des syndicalistes qui ont participé activement à la construction de l'Europe dès 1950 et à la création de la Confédération Européenne des Syndicats en 1973. Elle organise actuellement tous les syndicats des pensionnés et des personnes âgées des confédérations nationales affiliées à la CES. La FERPA regroupe quelques dix millions de membres dans les 15 Etats membres.

La FERPA lutte pour une Union Européenne de paix, démocratique, sociale et de solidarité entre générations. La FERPA se bat pour l'inclusion sociale des femmes et des hommes âgés. Elle veut davantage de justice, grâce à une répartition plus juste des richesses qui réduit les inégalités choquantes, élimine la pauvreté, garantit un minimum de pension et un minimum vital de ressources, de soins de santé et une habitation décente pour tous.

La FERPA est à la disposition de "l'Enceinte" devenue "Convention".

Projet de catalogue au niveau de l'Union des droits civiques, politiques, économiques et sociaux des citoyens européens

(à inscrire dans le traité)

Droits humains fondamentaux, civiques et politiques

1. Droit à la vie

Toute personne a droit à la vie. Nul ne peut être condamné à la mort, ni être soumis à la torture.

2. Droit à la dignité humaine

Droit fondamental à des ressources et prestations suffisantes pour vivre une vie humaine digne.

3. Egalité devant la loi

- Toute personne est égale devant la loi.
- Est interdite toute discrimination fondée sur le sexe, la race ou l'origine ethnique, l'appartenance à une minorité nationale, la religion ou les convictions, un handicap, l'âge ou l'orientation sexuelle, la fortune, la naissance.
- Egalité entre hommes et femmes (dans tous les domaines).
- Est interdite toute forme de racisme et de xénophobie.

4. Liberté de pensée, d'opinion et d'information

La liberté de pensée, de conscience et de religion est garantie, de même que la liberté d'expression et le droit de communiquer des informations ou des idées.

5. Vie privée

Toute personne a droit au respect de la vie privée.

6. Protection de la famille

Toute personne a droit de fonder une famille. La famille, la paternité et la maternité de même que l'enfant sont protégés .

7. Droit de circuler librement

Les citoyens européens ont le droit de circuler librement sur le territoire de l'Union et d'y choisir leur résidence.

8. Liberté de réunion et d'association

Toute personne a le droit d'organiser et de participer à des réunions et manifestations pacifiques et le droit à la liberté d'association. Un statut d'association européenne sera institué.

9. Droit de propriété

Le droit à la propriété est garanti.

10. Droit à l'éducation

Toute personne a droit à une éducation et une formation permanente tout au long de la vie et de choisir son propre cheminement et ce sur l'ensemble du territoire de l'Union.

11. La santé publique et la protection des consommateurs

La santé publique de l'ensemble de la population et la protection des consommateurs sont des objectifs impératifs à défendre d'une manière permanente.

12. Droit d'accès aux informations

Toute personne a un droit d'accès et de rectification pour les documents administratifs et les autres données qui la concernent.

13. Le Droit à la justice

Toute personne résidant dans un Etat membre a le droit d'ester en justice auprès de la Cour de justice de l'Union. L'accès à la justice est effective.

Droits économiques

14. Droit d'association

Les employeurs et les travailleurs ont le droit de s'associer pour défendre et promouvoir les droits, les intérêts et les causes qui les concernent directement et indirectement.

15. Le droit de négociation

Entre eux le droit est garanti au niveau européen, ainsi que celui de conclure des conventions collectives au niveau interprofessionnel et sectoriel. Le droit à des actions collectives, ainsi que le droit de grève est garanti.

16. Le droit d'information, de consultation et de participation

Les travailleurs ont le droit d'être informés régulièrement de la situation économique et financière de leur entreprise, d'être consultés sur les décisions susceptibles d'affecter leur intérêt et de participer à la prise de décision qui les concernent.

17. Liberté professionnelle et conditions de travail

- L'Union reconnaît le droit au travail. L'Union et les Etats membres prennent les mesures pour rendre ce droit effectif.
- Toute personne a le droit de choisir librement sa profession, ainsi que son lieu de travail et d'exercer librement sa profession.
- Nul ne peut être contraint d'effectuer un travail déterminé.
- Tout travailleur a droit à des conditions de travail équitables, à une rémunération juste et décente et à la protection contre tout licenciement arbitraire.
- Le droit à la santé dans le milieu du travail doit être garanti.

Droits sociaux

18. Tout travailleur a droit à une protection sociale adéquate et doit bénéficier, quel que soit son statut et quelle que soit la taille de l'entreprise dans laquelle il travaille de prestations de sécurité sociale d'un niveau suffisant (par rapport à son salaire, sa rémunération).

Les travailleurs indépendants ont droit à un système de sécurité sociale équivalent.

19. Tout travailleur doit bénéficier, au moment de la retraite, de ressources lui assurant un niveau de vie décent en rapport avec celui acquis avant sa retraite. Un minimum de pension doit être fixé et régulièrement adapté.

20. Le droit à un revenu minimal est garanti à toute personne qui ne bénéficie d'aucune autre ressource de revenu. Il doit être suffisant pour vivre décemment.

21. Toute personne a droit à l'accès à des soins de santé.

22. Toute personne handicapée doit bénéficier de mesures visant à favoriser son intégration professionnelle et sociale.

23. Toute personne qui n'est pas en mesure de se loger convenablement a droit à l'aide des pouvoirs publics compétents pour être logée.
24. L'Union est garante de la solidarité et de la cohésion sociale. L'accès des citoyens à des services d'intérêt général est garanti.
25. L'Union doit veiller à un environnement sain et le garantir pour les générations futures.

Georges DEBUNNE

Président de la Fédération Européenne des Retraités et Personnes Agées

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 18 February 2000CHARTE 4132/00*CONTRIB 27*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a letter to the members of the Convention by the European Women's Lobby.^{1 2}

¹ European Women's Lobby: 18 rue Hydraulique, B-1210 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-217 9020.

Fax: +32-2-219 8451. E-mail: ewl@womenlobby.org

² The text has been submitted in English and French language.

LOBBY EUROPEEN DES FEMMES EUROPEAN WOMEN'S LOBBY

To the attention of the Members of the Convention responsible for drawing up a draft charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union.

14th February 2000

Dear Member of the Convention,

I am writing to you on behalf of the European Women's Lobby (EWL), the largest coalition of women's non-governmental organisations in Europe with over 2700 member associations in the 15 Member States.

Having followed closely the work of the Convention, I note that the gender dimension has not been integrated in any part of the Convention's work. I regret very much this situation and would therefore like to make the following comments and recommendations:

Composition of the Convention

The EWL objects that only nine of the 62 persons involved in the elaboration of the Charter are women. The majority of the national governments and Parliaments have completely failed to nominate women as participants in the Convention. Of the eight women representing national institutions, four are alternate members, and as such, lack the right to speak and vote as long as the titular member is present. As for the European Parliament, its decision to nominate twice as many men as women clearly shows that its standpoint on gender balance in decision making is not always carried out in reality.¹

The EWL deeply regrets the present situation: not only because it is distressing to see that women's position is still undervalued within the EU institutions, national parliaments and governments, but also because the lack of women in the Convention will certainly affect the outcome of its work. The EWL fears that women's interest may be overlooked in the elaboration process and demands that this situation be corrected as soon as possible.

¹ The information of the composition of the Convention is based on facts presented on the web-site designed to keep the public up to date with the Convention's work; <http://db.consillium.eu.int/DF/intro.asp?lang=en>.

List of rights

The EWL calls for the integration in the Charter of a provision stating clearly the unconditional and fundamental principle of equality between women and men. In order to do so, the provision should not only prohibit discrimination on the grounds of sex, but also make the promotion of equality between men and women mandatory. Promoting equality between women and men is one of the tasks as well as a goal of the European Union. As such, it seems reasonable that the Charter's provision in question reflects this. Merely prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of sex is not sufficient.

Furthermore, I would like to draw your attention to the need for this provision to be dedicated solely to the fight against discrimination on the grounds of sex. The discrimination suffered by women is different from the discrimination against vulnerable groups of society such as disabled people, ethnic minorities or homosexuals. Women make up over 50 percent of the population in the EU. Many women suffer from multiple discrimination. It is clear that the discrimination suffered by women is more complex, far-reaching and more persistent than any other type of discrimination.

The EWL urges also the Convention to adopt a gender perspective while elaborating the entire draft Charter. The principle of mainstreaming applies to all EU activities and consequently needs to be respected also by the Convention throughout its work on the EU Charter on Fundamental Rights.

Lastly, I wish to reiterate the demand, put forward by the Platform of European Social NGOs, for a regular exchange of views between the civil society and the Convention. As a member of the Platform of Social NGOs, the EWL fully supports this demand.

I urge you to consider in a positive way our demands and would be very happy to meet with you to discuss these matters further.

Yours sincerely,

Denise FUCHS
President of the European Women's Lobby

Copy to: Members of the European Parliament

New .eu Domain

Changed Web and E-Mail Addresses

The introduction of the .eu domain also required the web and e-mail addresses of the European institutions to be adapted. Below please find a list of addresses found in the document at hand which have been changed after the document was created. The list shows the old and new address, a reference to the page where the address was found and the type of address: http: and https: for web addresses, mailto: for e-mail addresses etc.

Page: 1 Old: mailto:fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int
Type: mailto New: mailto:fundamental.rights@consilium.europa.eu

Addendum: 1

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 21 February 2000 (23.02)
(OR. fr)*CHARTE 4133/00*CONTRIB 28*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Attached hereto is a working document on Fundamental Social Rights in Europe produced by the European Parliament's Directorate General for Research. ¹

¹ Text supplied in French, German and English.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT

Directorate General for Research

WORKING DOCUMENT

FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS IN EUROPE

SOCIAL AFFAIRS SERIES

SOCI 104 EN

This document is available in the following languages:

DE (original)
EN, FR

The opinions expressed in this document are the sole responsibility of the author and do not necessarily represent the official position of the European Parliament.

Reproduction and translation for non-commercial purposes are authorized, provided the source is acknowledged and the publisher is given prior notice and sent a copy.

Publisher: European Parliament
L-2929 Luxembourg

Author: Mark Eric BUTT, Julia KÜBERT and Christiane Anne SCHULTZ

Editor: Lothar BAUER
Division for Social, Legal and Cultural Affairs
Directorate-General for Research
Tel. (352) 4300 22575
Fax: (352) 4300 27720
E-mail: lbauer@europarl.eu.int

Manuscript completed in November 1999.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT

Directorate General for Research

WORKING DOCUMENT

FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS IN EUROPE

SOCIAL AFFAIRS SERIES

SOCI 104 EN

1-2000

Contents

Part I: Introduction	5
1. Aim and contents of the study	5
2. Concept and definition of 'fundamental social rights'	6
3. General comments on the protection of fundamental rights at constitutional level	6
3.1. Functions of fundamental rights	6
3.2. Social rights as fundamental rights?	7
Part II: The recognition of fundamental social rights at European level	9
1. The European Social Charter	9
2. The Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers	10
Part III: Fundamental social rights in the constitutions of the Member States	13
1. Preliminary remarks	13
2. The constitutions of the Member States	13
2.1. Belgium	13
2.2. Denmark	13
2.3. Germany	14
2.4. Greece	15
2.5. Spain	16
2.6. France	17
2.7. Ireland	18
2.8. Italy	19
2.9. Luxembourg	21
2.10. Netherlands	22
2.11. Austria	23
2.12. Portugal	23
2.13. Finland	25
2.14. Sweden	26
2.15. United Kingdom	27
3. Overview of existing rights	28
3.1. Table	28
3.2. The three models	30
3.2.1. The liberal model	30
3.2.2. The southern European model	30
3.2.3. The moderate model	31

Part IV: The constitutions of the Central and Eastern European candidate countries	33
1. Preliminary remarks	33
2. Czech Republic	33
3. Estonia	34
4. Hungary	34
5. Poland	34
6. Slovenia	35
7. Summary	35
Part V: The European Parliament's position in the past	37
Part VI: Summary	39
Bibliography	41

Part I: Introduction

1. Aim and contents of the study

At its meeting in Cologne in early June 1999 the European Council decided to set up a body composed of representatives of the Heads of State or Government, the President of the Commission and Members of the European Parliament and national parliaments to draft a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Once the Council, the Commission and Parliament have solemnly proclaimed the Charter, it will be decided if it is to be integrated into the EU Treaty. Europe may thus be on the eve of a new era that begins with its own bill of rights and perhaps leads to the creation of a European constitution².

This working document is intended as a contribution to the debate on the creation of a bill of rights and on its contents. It considers the fundamental social rights that already exist at European level and especially those included in the constitutions of the Member States of the European Union. The constitutions of some candidate countries are also examined.

European Communities activity in the economic sphere and growing Member States' cooperation within the EU in internal affairs and law are such that almost all aspects of EU citizens' lives are now affected by EU legal acts. Thus there appears to be a need for the individual to identify his fundamental rights, by which these acts are gauged, not only in the constitution of his own country but also in EU primary law³. The present system, whereby the European Court of Justice develops general principles of Community law and references are made to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR)⁴, the European Social Charter (ESC) adopted by the Council of Europe in 1961 and the Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights adopted in 1989⁵, does not ensure sufficient transparency⁶ and is unlikely to increase public confidence in the EU.

The low turnout for the elections to the European Parliament in 1999 is a clear sign of poor public identification with Europe. A bill of rights is also important in the context of eastward enlargement, common foreign and security policy and development cooperation. The EU will seem more credible when demanding that other countries respect human rights and obey the rule of law if it itself clearly bases its activities on these principles.

It remains to be seen how far social rights will form part of an EU bill of rights since, unlike the classical liberal civil rights and liberties recognised in all constitutions, social rights are not regarded as fundamental rights in all Member States.

² See Pernice, Vertragsrevision oder europäische Verfassungsgebung, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, 7 July 1999, p.7; Rengeling, Eine Charta der Grundrechte, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, 21 July 1999, p.13.

³ Report of the Expert Group on Fundamental Rights, 'Affirming Fundamental Rights in the European Union – Time to Act', European Commission, p.13.

⁴ This reference is to be found in Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union, but not in the EC Treaty.

⁵ Article 136 of the EC Treaty and the fourth recital of the preamble to the Treaty on European Union.

⁶ Report of the Expert Group on Fundamental Rights, op. cit. p.10.

2. Concept and definition of 'fundamental social rights'

Fundamental social rights in this context mean rights to which the individual citizen is entitled, which he can exercise only in his relationship with other human beings as a member of a group and which can be made effective only if the State acts to safeguard the individual's environment⁷. Social rights are a necessary complement to civil rights and liberties, since the latter cannot be enjoyed without a minimum of social security. In contrast to civil rights and liberties, this means that it is not freedom from the State that is achieved, but freedom with the State's help. These are, then, fundamental rights in the form of entitlements.

Although this would appear at first glance to indicate that they can be distinguished from the classical civil rights and liberties and the general principle of equality, there is considerable overlap. This study considers only those fundamental rights not included among the 'classical fundamental rights'. It does not therefore have anything to say on the right of freedom of occupation in the sense of freedom of occupational choice and the prohibition of forced labour or on the right to form associations and engage in collective bargaining or the right to strike. Nor will the study discuss in any depth fundamental rights which primarily concern equality and are generally recognised, such as the right to equal pay for men and women⁸.

Fundamental social rights in Europe should also be generally distinguished from European social policy, which cannot be considered in this context. It forms the basis of social rights, which are not, however, fundamental rights in the constitutional sense.

2. General comments on the protection of fundamental rights at constitutional level

The theories adopted by the various legal systems of the Member States as regards the protection of fundamental rights are reviewed in the following.

3.1. Functions of fundamental rights

Fundamental rights may take the form of litigable or 'individual' rights, i.e. the individual may refer directly to such rights in courts of law. In principle, this may be true both of rights of self-defence, i.e. rights concerning freedom from the State, such as the inviolability of the home and freedom of opinion, and of rights to equal treatment as well as entitlements that justify a claim to State action.

Fundamental rights may also take the form of guarantees of establishment, which require the State to ensure the existence of a given legal institution (e.g. private ownership, universities). They may further be included in provisions defining objectives of the State that require all its authorities to observe them in any action they take and so have an impact on legislation and administrative action.

⁷ H.-J. Wipfelder, Die verfassungsrechtliche Kodifizierung sozialer Grundrechte, Zeitschrift für Rechtspolitik 1986, p.140.

⁸ This right is also recognised as a general principle of Community law; see European Court of Justice, Case 149/77 – Defrenne, ECR 1978, p.1379.

Fundamental rights may also be policy clauses in the sense that they instruct the legislator to ensure that a right is made effective by means of ordinary laws. The individual can enforce the entitlements arising from this ordinary legislation – i.e. not from constitutional law – by applying to the ordinary courts or to special administrative or social courts provided the right takes the form of an individual right.

A further distinction needs to be made between a situation where a fundamental right is effective only vis-à-vis the State or third parties as well ('third-party effect'), i.e. where the individual may refer to his fundamental right only in a legal dispute with the State, and a situation in which it can also have a bearing in civil legal disputes, as in labour law. A distinction must then be made between direct and indirect third-party effect, depending on whether the fundamental right has a legal effect directly or simply indirectly in the form of, say, an interpretation of civil law or even an employment contract that upholds fundamental rights.

3.2. Social rights as fundamental rights?

All the Member States have social rights at the level of ordinary law. They are to be found in particular in labour law in the relationship between employees and employers, where they include, for example, rules on protection against dismissal, minimum wages, leave and safe working conditions. The social security systems are also governed by ordinary legislation that guarantees various social benefits in emergencies or where certain situations arise. The question is, however, whether social rights should be raised to the level of constitutional law.

Those who advocate that as many fundamental rights as possible be explicitly enshrined in the constitution claim this to be the only way to ensure that such rights are not eroded by ordinary legislation or the administration of justice, since constitutions are not as a rule as easy to amend as ordinary legislation and normally remain largely unchanged even after a change of government.

Critics, on the other hand, maintain that the inclusion of fundamental social rights in the constitution would result in the definition of a certain standard of living, which changing economic and financial circumstances might make it impossible to sustain, and in the inclusion of provisions inappropriate to future situations since they are based on current social conditions⁹.

Nor, according to the opponents of the inclusion of fundamental social rights in constitutions, should such rights be placed on a par with fundamental and inalienable human rights (such as the right to life, freedom and physical integrity), because most fundamental social rights cannot be guaranteed and do not have the same value. In a market economy, for example, the state is de facto unable to guarantee many rights, one such being the right to work because it cannot offer enough jobs. In contrast, it is able to guarantee rights to freedom, self-defence and equality, because all this usually entails is restraint on its part or the passing of legislation to bring about equality.

⁹ Such as full-time employment by a single employer, which will not necessarily be the rule in the future; see Boggetti, Social Rights, a Necessary Component of the Constitution? The Lesson of the Italian Case, in: Bieber/Widmer (eds), L'espace constitutionnel européen, Der europäische Verfassungsraum, The European Constitutional Area, Zürich 1995, pp.85 ff.

Where the EU is specifically concerned, another factor that must be considered in the debate is that the EU is not a State and has only the powers transferred to it by the Member States. As things now stand, therefore, it is able to protect its citizens' fundamental rights only where EU law applies, i.e. where the EU or one of the Communities acts or where national bodies take action within the scope of the Treaties. Otherwise, the protection of fundamental rights is left to the Member States unless they transfer this task in its entirety to Europe and a European court. With opinions differing widely in some respects, this is unlikely and given the present structure of the Union, or Communities, hardly possible¹⁰. Nor is there at present any genuine level of constitutional law by which EU action must be gauged. The establishment of a common bill of rights should logically be followed by the creation of an EU constitution and constitutional court.

The constitutional lawyer Udo Di Fabio, who has just been appointed as a judge to the German Federal Constitutional Court, has proposed in the context of the debate on the charter of fundamental rights that the monitoring of such rights should not be entrusted to a European Court of Justice that is already overextended. Instead, a separate Union court should be set up for issues relating to fundamental rights on the model of the European Court of Human Rights, which does not form part of the European Union. A court of this kind would have no other task but to monitor, when requested by Union citizens, the exercise of Community power, taking European fundamental rights as its yardstick¹¹.

Finally, it is important to realise that there is a rather tense relationship between the principles of democracy and the division of power on the one hand and the protection of fundamental rights on the other. If too many constraints are placed on the legislature by the constitution and especially the constitutional court, decisions will ultimately no longer be taken by the democratically legitimised parliament but by judges who have not been elected by the people¹². The executive too needs some room for manoeuvre if it is to be able to act effectively and must not be totally restricted by the constitution and constitutional court.

¹⁰ This is also rejected by the Committee of Wise Men (Cassese/Lalumière/Leuprecht/Robinson) in the agenda Leading by example: A human rights agenda for the European Union for the year 2000, p.9.

¹¹ Udo Di Fabio, Für eine Grundrechtsdebatte ist es Zeit, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, 17 November 1999, p.11.

¹² In the United Kingdom no real level of constitutional law by which acts of parliament must be gauged is therefore recognised; see Part III, section 2.15, below.

Part II: The recognition of fundamental social rights at European level

1. The European Social Charter

The European Social Charter (ESC) can be seen as the 'social counterpart' of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). Like the ECHR, it emerged from the Council of Europe and since 1961 has been signed by 22 countries, though with reservations and derogations in some cases¹³.

The ESC requires the signatory states to take legal and administrative measures in the areas of working life and social security. Although it does not provide for any real sanctions for infringing the rules, it does obligate the signatory states to send a report every two years to the Committee of Experts, which then identifies infringements and submits proposals for changes. As a result, the ESC has had a major influence on the legislation of the signatory states, this being especially true of the first twenty years of its existence. In the 1970s, for example, the United Kingdom and Denmark amended their merchant shipping acts because they contravened the prohibition of forced labour referred to in Article 1(1) of the ESC.

The EU itself is not a party to the ESC. In the preamble to the 1987 Single European Act (SEA) the Member States of the Community nevertheless referred to the 'fundamental rights recognised in ... the European Social Charter, notably freedom, equality and social justice'¹⁴. This declaration is now also to be found in the preamble to the Treaty on European Union (fourth recital). The European Court of Justice has also referred to the ESC on several occasions in its judgements and uses it as a source of legal findings when establishing general principles of Community law¹⁵.

Articles 1 to 19 of the European Social Charter list the following fundamental rights:

- ❑ the right to work;
- ❑ the right to just, safe and healthy working conditions;
- ❑ the right to fair remuneration;
- ❑ the right to organise;
- ❑ the right to bargain collectively;
- ❑ the right of children and young persons to protection;
- ❑ the right of employed women to protection;
- ❑ the right to vocational guidance and training;
- ❑ the right to protection of health;

¹³ The signatory states, with date of entry into force: Austria (28.11.1969), Belgium (15.11.1990), Cyprus (6.4.1968), Denmark (2.4.1965), Federal Republic of Germany (26.2.1965), Finland (29.5.1991), France (8.4.1973), Greece (6.4.1984), Ireland (26.2.1965), Iceland (14.2.1976), Italy (21.11.1965), Luxembourg (9.11.1991), Malta (3.11.1988), Netherlands (22.5.1980), Norway (26.2.1965), Poland (25.7.1997), Portugal (30.10.1991), Slovakia (22.6.1998), Spain (5.6.1980), Sweden (26.2.1965), Turkey (24.12.1989), United Kingdom (26.2.1965).

¹⁴ See Irmgard Wetter, Die Grundrechtscharta des Europäischen Gerichtshofes, Frankfurt am Main 1998, pp.61 f.

¹⁵ See, for example, Rutili, Case 36/75 (1975), ECR 1219; Hoechst, Case 227/88 (1989), ECR 2859; Gravier, Case 293/83 (1985), ECR 593; it is worth noting that the ESC has even been taken as the basis for judgments concerning countries that have not ratified it; see, for example, Defrenne, Case 149/77 (1978), ECR 1365. The European Court of Justice therefore clearly considers some of the fundamental rights set out in the ESC to be general principles of Community law.

- ❑ the right to social security;
- ❑ the right to social and medical assistance and to benefit from social welfare services;
- ❑ the right of disabled persons to vocational training and integration;
- ❑ the right of the family to protection;
- ❑ the right of mothers and children to protection;
- ❑ and rights relating to the freedom of movement, combined with the right to protection and assistance.

A question that has yet to be answered is whether the EU, or EC, should itself accede to the ESC (and to the ECHR). Parliament has always favoured this, but the Court of Justice takes the view that the EC lacks a legal basis for such action¹⁶. The two charters might, however, be incorporated into Community law without formal accession¹⁷. A particular problem with accession is that, as the two charters would rank higher than EU law, it would have to be possible for the case law of the European Court of Justice to be reviewed by the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg. These issues cannot, however, be considered in any greater depth here¹⁸.

2. The Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers

The Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers of 9 December 1989 was signed at the time by all the EC Member States except the United Kingdom. It is neither a binding legal act of the EU, nor is it a treaty among the signatory states that is binding in international law. It is merely a solemn declaration by the Heads of State or Government of the Member States. It should nonetheless be used as an aid to the interpretation of the provisions of the EC Treaty, since it reflects views and traditions common to the Member States and represents a declaration of basic principles which the EU and its Member States intend to respect¹⁹. Together with the action programme for implementing the Community Charter, which has also been approved by the Heads of State or Government, it is therefore used by the Commission as a basis for justifying many of the directives it proposes²⁰.

Title I of the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers details rights in the following areas:

- ❑ freedom of movement;
- ❑ employment and remuneration;
- ❑ improvement of living and working conditions;
- ❑ social protection;
- ❑ freedom of association and collective bargaining;
- ❑ vocational training;
- ❑ equal treatment of men and women;
- ❑ information, consultation and participation of workers;

¹⁶ See European Court of Justice 2/94, 28.3.1996.

¹⁷ See de Witte, 'Protection of Fundamental Social Rights in the EU – The Choice of the Appropriate Legal Instrument', in: Betten/McDevitt, The Protection of Fundamental Social Rights in the European Union, pp.66 ff.

¹⁸ For recent developments concerning the ESC and future prospects see: The Social Charter of the 21st Century, Council of Europe 1997.

¹⁹ E. Lundberg, The Protection of Social Rights in Europe, in: Drzewicki/Krausse/Rosas, op. cit., p.183.

²⁰ It should be remembered, however, that binding acts cannot be based solely on the Charter; it may only be cited together with provisions of the EC Treaty.

- health protection and safety at the workplace;
- protection of children and adolescents;
- elderly persons;
- disabled persons.

Title II of the Community Charter makes it clear that the Member States are generally responsible for guaranteeing fundamental social rights in accordance with national practices. The EU takes action only inasmuch as Articles 29 and 30 of the Charter require the Commission to draw up an annual report on the application of the Charter and to forward it to the Council, Parliament and the Economic and Social Committee. As a consequence, it has already been stated in the literature that the ESC of the Council of Europe (see 1 above) affords better protection of fundamental social rights than the EU Member States' Community Charter²¹. Now that the Treaty of Amsterdam has helped fundamental social rights to find their place in the preamble to the EU Treaty, the Court of Justice might take greater account of them – as the 'driving force of integration' – in its case law on fundamental rights and so make them an important element of the system of fundamental rights²².

²¹ E. Lundberg, loc. cit., with a reference, inter alia, to B. Hepple, The Implementation of the Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights, The Modern Law Review, Vol. 53, p.645, and P. Watson, The Community Social Charter, Common Market Law Review, Vol. 28, p.49.

²² See Bergmann, in: Bergmann/Lenz (eds): Der Amsterdamer Vertrag, Kommentar, Cologne 1998, pp.35 f.

Part III: Fundamental social rights in the constitutions of the Member States

1. Preliminary remarks

Comparing systems of fundamental rights is difficult because some similar concepts are apparently defined differently and an accurate comparison always requires an examination of the environment of the constitution as a whole, the dogmatics of constitutional jurisprudence and the judgments of the constitutional court, where it exists. In this context no more than an overview can therefore be given of the various approaches adopted in the Member States' constitutions.

2. The constitutions of the Member States

2.1. Belgium

Compared to other recent constitutions, the Belgian constitution of 1994 refers to only a few fundamental social rights²³. Despite this restraint, Belgium has extensive social legislation and is therefore a genuine welfare state, even though the latter has not been defined in any detail in the constitution²⁴.

The most important social rights are based on Articles 23 and 24. Article 23 gives everyone the right to a decent life. This right is defined in paragraphs 1 to 5 and comprises both the right to work and the right to fair remuneration, social security, health protection, social, medical and legal assistance, adequate housing, a healthy environment and cultural and social self-fulfilment. According to paragraph 1, the state is responsible for guaranteeing these economic, social and cultural rights in that it is required to pass laws which enable the individual to lead a decent life. Although there is no instrument for enforcing social rights at constitutional level²⁵, the legislature would be contravening the constitution if it failed to make appropriate arrangements or restricted fundamental rights contrary to the constitution.

Article 24 of the Belgian constitution gives everyone the right to free and neutral training, free education and a moral or religious upbringing.

It is noticeable that these rights are not reserved for Belgians, but may be exercised by anyone²⁶. This is confirmed by Article 191 of the Belgian constitution, according to which any foreigner in principle enjoys the same protection of his person and his assets as any Belgian national.

2.2. Denmark

The Danish constitution of 5 June 1953 contains two provisions that provide for fundamental social rights within the meaning of this study, namely sections 75 and 76.

²³ Isabel Álvarez Véllez/Fuencisla Alcón Yustas, Las Constituciones de los 15 estados de la Unión Europea, p.145.

²⁴ ibid., p.145.

²⁵ Aristovoulos Manassis, in: Julia Iliopoulos-Strangas (ed.), Grundrechtsschutz im europäischen Raum - Der Beitritt der Europäischen Gemeinschaft zur Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention, p.33.

²⁶ ibid., p.33.

Section 75(1) refers to a right to work in that it states that 'to further public welfare, the aim shall be to ensure that every citizen capable of work is able to work under conditions that secure his existence.' The wording itself makes it clear that this is not an individual right but a policy clause.

Section 75(2), on the other hand, is worded as an individual right: 'Anyone who is unable to support himself or his dependants and for whose welfare no one else is responsible shall be entitled to public assistance provided, however, that he enter into the obligations for which the law provides.' Whether this is indeed an individual right or a policy clause, however, is disputed in legal theory²⁷.

According to section 76, all children of school age are entitled to free elementary education. This is likely to be an individual right since it is so worded and the state has no difficulty in making it effective.

Fundamental social rights do not, then, feature very strongly in the constitution. One of the reasons for this is that the constitution was originally drawn up in 1849 and has largely remained liberal in nature. The Scandinavian countries also have a legal tradition of judicial restraint, the courts being wary of declaring acts of the legislature unconstitutional in their desire to respect the will of the democratically elected parliament²⁸. The Scandinavian welfare states are able to manage without a detailed list in their constitutions mainly because social rights frequently emerge from agreements between trade unions and employers and from consensus in politics and society.

In Denmark the social rights of the citizen therefore enjoy effective protection primarily under ordinary laws, and the ordinary courts are in principle there for decisions by the administration to be contested²⁹.

2.3. Germany

Unlike the Weimar constitution of 1919, the German Basic Law of 1949 does not generally refer to fundamental social rights. The only reference to an individual right is to be found in Article 6(4) of the Basic Law, under which every mother is entitled to protection and care. The main reason for this restraint is that the authors of the constitution wanted to avoid the need for such rights to be constantly adjusted to changing economic and social conditions³⁰.

Articles 20(1) and 28 describe the Federal Republic as a democratic and social federal state. All acts of the public authorities must comply with the welfare state principle. Although fundamental social rights, unlike the classical fundamental rights, are not specifically referred to in the German constitution, or Basic Law, they are nonetheless covered by the welfare state

²⁷ See Rosas, The Implementation of Economic and Social Rights: Nordic Legal Systems, in: Matscher (ed.), Die Durchsetzung wirtschaftlicher und sozialer Grundrechte – eine rechtsvergleichende Bestandsaufnahme, p.231, with further references.

²⁸ Katrougalos, The Implementation of Social Rights in Europe, Columbia Journal of European Law 1996, p.277; ibid., p.295.

²⁹ Rosas, op. cit., p.233.

³⁰ Luis María Díez-Picazo/Marie-Claire Ponthoreau, The Constitutional Protection of Social Rights: Some Comparative Remarks, p.18.

principle³¹. This principle is thus the overriding concept for the various social rights, and although this has the disadvantage that these rights are not specified, the shift in emphasis to ordinary laws has the advantage that the latter can be adjusted to requirements more quickly.

There are some references to fundamental social rights in the constitutions of the Länder. However, they are virtually unenforceable since the Federal Government has assumed almost total responsibility for social matters.

In 1994 Article 20a was inserted into the constitution to protect the environment. It is worded as a provision defining a state objective and therefore transfers to all three organs of state the responsibility for protecting the natural foundations of life for future generations. The need for this provision was due less to deficient protection than to a need for clarification, since such protection could be deduced from the fundamental rights even before Article 20a was inserted into the Basic Law. Just as a right to a minimum social subsistence level ensues from the first sentence of Article 2(2) in conjunction with Article 1(1) of the Basic Law, a right to a 'minimum ecological subsistence level' can, by analogy, be deduced³². A decent life is possible, after all, only in a decent environment. A fundamental environmental right was nonetheless eschewed since it proves extremely difficult to specify what is to be protected and it would be impossible to make a right of this kind litigable³³. Nor, then, can an enforceable entitlement of the individual to a fundamental right be inferred from this; it is more in the nature of an objective value decision by the constitution that commits the public authorities³⁴.

2.4. Greece

The part of the Greek constitution of 9 June 1975 as amended on 12 March 1986 that concerns fundamental rights (Part II, Articles 4-25) is very long and defines individual and social fundamental rights in detail.

The nine paragraphs of Article 16, for example, require the state to develop and promote art and science, research and teaching (paragraph 1), stipulate that education is a basic task of the state (paragraph 2), thus giving all Greeks the right to free education at all stages in state educational establishments (paragraph 4, first sentence) and the universities the right to financial assistance (paragraph 5, second sentence). Paragraph 4 also provides for assistance for students who distinguish themselves but need help or special protection. Under paragraph 9 the state has overall responsibility for sport and is required to subsidise all confederations of sports clubs.

Article 21(2) states that large families, persons disabled in war or peace, war victims, orphans and widows of persons killed in the war and persons suffering from incurable diseases are entitled to special state care. Paragraph 3 requires the state to ensure the health of its citizens and to take special measures to protect young people, the elderly, the disabled and persons unable to pay for care. Under paragraph 4 the provision of housing for persons with no or inadequate accommodation is a matter of particular concern for the state.

³¹ Kittner, in: Kommentar zum GG für die BR Deutschland, Vol. I, Articles 1-37, lit. 64.

³² Scholz, in: Maunz/Dürig, Article 20a GG I, lit. 28.

³³ ibid., Article 20a GG I, lit. 12.

³⁴ ibid., Article 20a GG I, lit. 33.

Article 22(1) recognises a right to work and places it under the protection of the state, which is required to ensure full employment and to provide the working rural and urban population with moral and physical support. Paragraph 4 also requires the state to ensure the social insurance of the working population, further details to be set out in a law.

Despite these detailed provisions, fundamental social rights in Greece cannot be enforced by law, and the state cannot be required by a court of law to take action³⁵. Social reality in Greece is also different. This is especially true of the right to free education, there being insufficient university places on many courses in Greece.

2.5. Spain

The Spanish constitution of 1978, like Portugal's, occupies a prominent position among European constitutions. This is primarily due to the fact that in these young constitutions an attempt has been made to take account of today's social problems rather than to exclude them. After 40 years of dictatorship the aim was to bring an end to lawlessness and allot to the individual as comprehensive a list of rights as possible³⁶.

The preamble refers to a desire to ensure democratic co-existence on the basis, inter alia, of a fair economic and social system. The Spanish constitution was guided by the German Basic Law³⁷ and emphasises in Article 1 that Spain is a social and democratic state based on the rule of law, the order in which the adjectives appear in this phrase revealing the importance of social rights in Spain³⁸. The institutions for which the constitution provides and the ordinary administration of justice must conform to this welfare state clause³⁹. However, the Spanish constitution differs significantly from Germany's in that it includes an unusually long list of social rights.

Fundamental rights in the Spanish constitution are divided into three groups⁴⁰. The first group (Articles 14 to 29) comprises the classical fundamental rights, including the right to education (Article 27). The second group (Articles 30 to 38) is primarily concerned with citizens' rights and obligations, including the right to work (Article 35), while the third group (Articles 39 to 52) is largely devoted to the protection of rights arising from the economic and social policies.

The principles governing the last group mainly concern the social sphere of interest here:

- Under Article 39 the state affords the family legal and social protection.
- Article 40 requires the public authorities to improve the conditions for the fairer distribution of incomes and conditions relating to continuing education and training and protection at the workplace and to guarantee leave and limited working hours.
- Article 41 guarantees a public system for the social security of the public that provides them with adequate help in emergencies and especially when they are unemployed.

³⁵ P. Spyropoulos, Constitutional Law in Hellas, p.139.

³⁶ José Vida Soria in Matscher, op. cit., p. 290, Manassis, op. cit., p.47.

³⁷ Díez-Picazo/Ponthoreau, op. cit., p.20.

³⁸ Vida Soria, op. cit., p.292.

³⁹ Díez-Picazo/Ponthoreau, op. cit., p.20.

⁴⁰ ibid., p.21.

- Article 43 recognises a right to health protection, paragraph 2 requiring the public authorities to organise this protection and paragraph 3 requiring them to promote health education⁴¹.
- Article 44 guarantees the individual access to culture, paragraph 2 also requiring the public authorities to promote culture.
- Article 45 entitles everyone to the enjoyment of nature and also requires the state to use its influence to ensure the preservation and restoration of the environment (paragraph 2).
- Article 47 grants all Spaniards the right to housing, the necessary conditions to be promoted by the public authorities.
- Article 48 requires the public authorities to create the conditions for the involvement of young people in social development.
- Article 49 is devoted to the integration and protection of disabled people.
- Article 50 guarantees adequate provision for old age and support for the elderly with respect to health, housing, culture and leisure.

The protection of these rights is governed by Article 53. Under Article 53(1) and (2) the rights of the first two groups can be claimed before the ordinary courts, and all legislation must respect the essential substance of these rights. As regards enforceability, rights are graded in such a way that those in the first group – which include the right to education – may be claimed, pursuant to Article 53(1) in conjunction with Article 161(b) in conjunction with Article 53(2), before the constitutional court after all other legal means have been exhausted. These are, then, individual and also litigable fundamental rights.

The particularly topical right to work is, pursuant to Article 53(1), binding on the public authorities and may be claimed before the ordinary courts. The opposite conclusion to be drawn from Article 53(3), however, shows that only the rights it lists enjoy protection to be obtained by appealing to the constitutional court. As the right to work cannot be claimed before the constitutional court, it is not a litigable fundamental right.

Similarly, the rights to health, a healthy environment and adequate housing are worded as individual rights. Under Article 53(2), however, they are principles which are binding on the three organs of state and so take the form of a provision defining a state objective without providing the foundations for an individual right⁴².

2.6. France

The French constitution of 1958 was drawn up in 'great haste because of the Algerian crisis'⁴³. It contains no more than a minimum of fundamental rights⁴⁴ and no social rights at all. It pivots on the preamble, in which reference is made to the 1946 constitution and the 1789 Declaration of Human and Civil Rights to the extent that they refer to human rights and the principles of national sovereignty⁴⁵. The 1946 constitution was influenced by the experience of totalitarianism and is geared primarily to the protection of workers, the structure of the economy and the social order.

⁴¹ The same applies to physical education, sport and the suitable use of leisure time pursuant to Article 43(3).

⁴² Díez-Picazo/Ponthoreau, p.22.

⁴³ Marco Itin, Grundrechte in Frankreich, p.6.

The reference in the 1958 preamble results in the rights arising from the 1946 preamble also being enshrined in the constitution. It also means that the 1789 Human Rights Declaration has constitutional force⁴⁶. It remains to be seen what form these rights take and whether an individual right arises from them. The 'classical' rights referred to in the 1789 Human Rights Declaration, which are 'inalienable and sacred', are recognised as forming the basis of French public law⁴⁷ and are also actionable.

The situation is different where the social rights arising from the 1946 preamble are concerned. Thus although everyone has not only a duty to work but also a right to employment under paragraph 5 of the preamble, this is, despite the wording, an instruction to the legislator to find solutions to unemployment rather than an individual right⁴⁸. The tenth section requires the nation to lay the necessary foundations for the individual and his family to develop, the wording itself revealing that it is for the state to decide how this is to be achieved. The same is true of the eleventh section, which requires children, mothers and older workers to be assisted in the areas of health, physical security, rest and leisure. Anyone incapable of working is entitled to adequate resources, the question of adequacy again leaving considerable scope for interpretation. The right to education and training in the thirteenth section is similarly so worded as to oblige the state to make the necessary provisions, to which the individual has an undisputed fundamental right⁴⁹, although its form is determined by the state.

Social rights are thus not recognised in the constitution in the same way as the classical fundamental rights, which are protected by the 1789 declaration. They have a complementary effect and require the legislature to create appropriate laws, but are not themselves litigable⁵⁰.

2.7. Ireland

Ireland adopted its first constitution in 1922, but as it was based on a treaty between Ireland and Britain, it was not widely recognised. A new constitution intended to put Ireland's actual independence to the test was therefore introduced in 1937⁵¹.

⁴⁴ They concern the principles of equality and religious freedom (Article 2(1)), the freedom to form political parties and groupings (Article 4) and the freedom of movement (Article 66).

⁴⁵ Marco Itin, op. cit., p. 12. Owing to the broad interpretation of the term 'human rights', the problem of the scale of reference along these lines hardly arises, since the 1789 Human Rights Declaration and the 1946 preamble contain few statements that concern neither human rights nor the principles of national sovereignty.

⁴⁶ ibid., p. 17; Díez-Picazo/Ponthoreau, op. cit., p.14.

⁴⁷ Itin, op. cit., p.14.

⁴⁸ Díez-Picazo/Ponthoreau, op. cit., p.16.

⁴⁹ Itin, op. cit., p. 112. The right to secular and free education is undisputed and even an obligation.

⁵⁰ Díez-Picazo/Ponthoreau, op. cit., p.16. This is confirmed by Article 34 of the constitution, according to which the law defines the principles for labour law, trade union law and social safeguards.

⁵¹ Byrne/McCutcheon, The Irish Legal System, p.8.

The Irish constitution clearly reflects the deep religious convictions of the Irish people. This finds expression primarily in the preamble, but also in the fundamental rights. Thus the family is recognised in Article 41 as a moral institution of society, and in the second sentence of paragraph 1 the state guarantees to protect it. Paragraph 2 in particular requires the state to support mothers so that they need not go out to work and are able to devote themselves to their families and so contribute to the public welfare. This is a particularly clear illustration of the highly traditional attitude of the Irish state on the woman's role.

Article 42, which concerns education, again makes it clear how far the Irish constitution is devoted to religious values. Under Article 42(1) the family is responsible for bringing up children, and, according to paragraph 3, the state cannot force parents to send their children to school if this is incompatible with their conscience. The second sentence, however, requires the state to ensure that every child receives a minimum of moral, spiritual and social education. It also emerges from paragraph 4 that the state is obliged to provide free primary education.

Under the heading 'Directive Principles of Social Policy' Article 45(2)(i) states that the policy is to be directed in particular towards ensuring that citizens have the right to earn a living through their occupations. In paragraph 4 the state also pledges itself to protect and support financially the weaker sections of the community. It will also endeavour to ensure that workers are not exploited and no one is forced by economic necessity to undertake activities unsuited to their gender, age or strength.

The wording clearly reveals that the authors of the constitution preferred policy clauses to specific fundamental rights.

Other fundamental social rights arise from Article 40(III), although they are not explicitly enumerated⁵², the words 'in particular' showing that Article 40(III) covers other rights as well as those referred to⁵³. It is generally acknowledged that these rights include the right to work and the right to health protection⁵⁴. However, the right to work does not go so far as to oblige the state to provide the citizen with a job. It comprises rather his right freely to decide how to use his labour and the freedom to choose and pursue a given occupation⁵⁵. The fundamental rights referred to are also effective as they stand, without further action on the part of the legislature⁵⁶. However, it is also true to say that the rights which are not explicitly referred to are not absolute, but must be taken into account by the public authorities insofar as they are able⁵⁷.

2.8. Italy

The Italian constitution of 27 December 1947 as amended in 1993 refers to a number of fundamental social rights, some of which are also individual rights. In Article 4 of the section

⁵² Duncan S.J. Grehan, in: Eberhard Grabitz (ed.), Grundrechte in Europa und USA, p.294.

⁵³ Article 40(3), first sentence: 'The State guarantees in its laws to respect, and, as far as practicable, by its laws to defend and vindicate the personal rights of the citizen.'

Article 40(3), second sentence: 'The State shall, in particular, by its laws protect as best it may from unjust attack and, in the case of injustice done, vindicate the life, person, good name, and property rights of every citizen.'

⁵⁴ Grehan in: Grabitz, op. cit., pp.295 f.

⁵⁵ ibid., p.295.

⁵⁶ James Casey, Constitutional Law in Ireland, p.309.

⁵⁷ ibid., pp.316, 329; see also footnote 40: 'as far as practicable'.

headed 'Basic principles' the Republic recognises the right of all citizens to work and promotes such conditions as will make this right effective.

Article 31 requires the state to facilitate, by means of economic and other provisions, the formation of the family and the fulfilment of the tasks connected therewith, with particular consideration for large families, and to protect mothers, children and young people by promoting and encouraging institutions necessary for this purpose.

Article 32 requires the Republic to provide health safeguards as a basic right of the individual and in the interests of the community and to grant free medical assistance to the indigent.

Article 34 stipulates that at least eight years of elementary education are to be compulsory and free and gives capable and deserving pupils the right to attain the highest grades of learning even if they lack financial resources. The Republic is required to give effect to this privilege by means of scholarships, contributions to the families of pupils and other provisions, to be awarded by competitive examination.

The right to work – arising from Article 4 – is complemented by Article 36, which stipulates that everyone is entitled to remuneration which is in proportion to the quantity and quality of his work and is sufficient to provide him and his family with a free and dignified existence. Article 36 also provides for any employed person to have a weekly day of rest and annual paid leave.

Besides the principle of equal remuneration for women, Article 37 rules that conditions of work must make it possible for women to fulfil their essential family duties and provide for the adequate protection of mothers and children.

Article 38 guarantees a right to social security by granting a right to private and social assistance to anyone unable to work who does not have the resources necessary for life and to all workers a right to adequate insurance for their requirements in the event of accident, illness or disability, in old age and when unemployed. The State is required to designate or set up institutions to perform these tasks. The same is true of the right to education and vocational training for citizens completely or partly unable to work.

In the opinion of the Italian Constitutional Court, however, this list is not complete. In its judgements it has recognised other fundamental social rights, which it gleans from the constitution, especially a right to adequate housing⁵⁸ and a right to a healthy environment. The Court arrives at the latter right from a broad interpretation of the right to health (Article 32) and the protection of the environment (Article 9). The Constitutional Court has added various facets to the right to health, including a right to sexual identity as part of the right to mental and physical integrity⁵⁹.

The Court generally plays an important role in the protection of fundamental rights in Italy, since it has recognised some of the fundamental rights referred to above as individual rights. In Italian constitutional law a distinction is made between 'unconditional' and 'conditional' fundamental rights. Unconditional fundamental rights are those for which provision is made in the constitution and which are effective in themselves, without requiring legislation. Conditional rights, on the other hand, require some kind of 'infrastructure' to become effective⁶⁰.

⁵⁸ Sciarra, From Strasbourg to Amsterdam, p. 12, with a reference to Decision 404/1988; de Vergiottini, in: Matscher, op. cit., p.330, with a reference to Decisions 49/1987, 217/1988, 404/1988 and 252/1985.

⁵⁹ de Vergiottini, op. cit., p.330.

The right to health, for example, is an unconditional, enforceable right inasmuch as it entails a right to mental and physical integrity, but a conditional right inasmuch as it represents a right to benefit from the health system⁶¹. The right to housing is similarly not recognised as an unconditional right⁶².

In various cases the Constitutional Court and Supreme Court of Appeal have accepted that unconditional fundamental rights are effective in themselves in relation both to the State and to third parties⁶³. They include the right to paid leave (Article 36), the right to fair remuneration (Article 36) and the right to social security (Article 38). It would thus seem that the distinction between conditional and unconditional fundamental rights has not been consistently maintained, since the right to social security also calls for action on the part of the legislature to create the necessary institutions.

A peculiarity in Italy is that the citizen has no means of appealing directly to the Constitutional Court. The individual may, on the other hand, appeal directly to the ordinary courts for the recognition of unconditional fundamental rights.

*Bognetti*⁶⁴ is highly critical of fundamental social rights being made individual rights, especially by the Constitutional Court. He points out that this has done the Italian State enormous damage since it has taken it to the brink of financial ruin. He claims that this is because the provisions of the constitution were used by trade unions and Marxist parties in the 1970s and 1980s to mobilise public opinion against the government by accusing it of not doing enough to achieve the social objectives of the constitution. The subsequent increase in government expenditure led to inflation and heavy public indebtedness, which the constitution seeks to prevent (Articles 47 and 81) and which harmed the country's economic situation⁶⁵.

2.9. Luxembourg

The Luxembourg constitution dates back to 1868 and was last amended in 1998. Like its predecessor, which was adopted in 1841, it is very closely aligned with the Belgian constitution and with the constitutional law of other neighbouring countries. In the interpretation of its constitution Luxembourg has again always been guided by its neighbours' constitutional doctrine, partly because the absence of a law faculty of their own has forced Luxembourg lawyers to acquire their knowledge abroad⁶⁶.

The constitution refers to very few fundamental social rights. Under the heading 'Luxembourgers and their rights' Article 11 states that the law guarantees the right to work and ensures that every citizen may exercise this right. The aim of this constitutional provision, which was amended in

⁶⁰ de Vergiottini, op. cit., p.237; Díez-Picazo/Ponthoreau, The Constitutional Protection, p.11.

⁶¹ ibid., p.11.

⁶² de Vergiottini, op. cit., p.332.

⁶³ ibid., p.327.

⁶⁴ Giovanni Bognetti, Professor at the University of Milan, op. cit., pp.90 ff.

⁶⁵ ibid., pp.92 f.

⁶⁶ Manassis, op. cit., p.35; Danny Pieters in: Grabitz (ed), op. cit., p.447.

1948, was to provide a constitutional guarantee for rights hitherto protected only by ordinary laws⁶⁷. This was intended to prompt the legislature to give wider form to social rights and to adapt them to the economic environment⁶⁸.

Article 11 also provides for workers' social security, health protection and recreation. Article 23 requires the state to ensure that every Luxembourger receives free and compulsory primary education. It also states that medical and social assistance are regulated by law. However, it is generally recognised that these rights are not fundamental rights of the individual, but rather legislative programmes for whose organisation the state is responsible⁶⁹.

In addition, fundamental rights of a social nature can be deduced from the third paragraph of Article 11, which guarantees the natural rights of the individual and of the family⁷⁰. However, this is a very vague legal basis since it can be seen as a principle under which the ensuing rights must be viewed and may also represent an authorising basis for the practical creation of further rights⁷¹. So far, however, no advantage has been taken of the latter.

2.10. The Netherlands

Until the early 1980s the Netherlands had one of the oldest constitutions in Europe. It was only in 1983 that the 1815 constitution was completely revised and brought up to date⁷².

To establish the welfare state constitutionally, the Netherlands constitution has defined social rights as a mandate for the state⁷³. Article 19(1) calls on the state to provide sufficient employment. The authors of the Netherlands constitution opted against wording that granted an individual right, since they were aware that the state does not allocate jobs on its own and can therefore improve the labour market situation only by taking certain measures⁷⁴. Article 20(1) also makes it the state's responsibility to secure the individual's means of subsistence and to distribute wealth. This again is an instruction to the state to take appropriate measures.

As Article 20(2) requires the adoption of legislation on social security, the legal basis for the citizen is ordinary law.

Article 20(3) grants needy Dutch nationals a right to public assistance, but as this is to be governed by a law, the constitution again fails to grant the citizen a fundamental right in this respect.

Article 21 specifies that it is for the state to protect and improve the environment.

Article 22 requires the state and the other public authorities to take steps to promote public health, the creation of sufficient housing and social and cultural development, including leisure activities.

⁶⁷ Álvarez Vélez/Alcón Yustas, op. cit., p.441.

⁶⁸ Pieters, op. cit., p.467.

⁶⁹ ibid., pp.467, 469.

⁷⁰ ibid., p.463.

⁷¹ ibid., pp.463 f.

⁷² Manassis, op. cit., p.37.

⁷³ Álvarez Vélez/Alcón Yustas, op. cit., p.463.

⁷⁴ van der Pot, Handboek van het Nederlandse Staatsrecht, p.293.

Article 23 makes education the government's responsibility and stipulates that it is free, though supervised by the authorities. Under Article 23(4) it is the municipalities' responsibility to ensure that school education is provided.

The Netherlands constitution does not, then, grant citizens any individual rights and has instead opted to instruct or require the state to take action.

It should also be noted that the constitution does not refer to any means for its own protection or for the enforcement of rights and that Article 120 even goes so far as explicitly to prohibit reviews of the constitutionality of acts of parliament.

2.11. Austria

The Austrian constitution does not refer to any fundamental social rights, only to 'classical' liberal fundamental rights, such as the right to work (Article 6 of the Basic State Law) and the right freely to choose and practise an occupation (Article 18).

However, a debate on whether fundamental social rights should be enshrined in the constitution has been in progress since the 1980s. Building on the deliberations of a working party of experts, a political fundamental rights commission has listed in two drafts the various rights that are conceivable and defined the form in which each of these rights should be made effective in the constitution⁷⁵. The following fundamental social rights (within the meaning of the study) were referred to in this context:

The right to work (including aspects of vocational guidance, government employment policy and protection against dismissal), the right to appropriate remuneration (guarantees of a minimum wage and equal pay for men and women), the right to fair conditions of employment (working hours, appropriate rest periods, employee participation), the right to the protection of children, young people and mothers (including the prohibition of child labour, the exclusion of women from certain occupations), the right to housing (including government promotion of housing construction), the right to education (including free education), the right to social security (above all, a guarantee of the social insurance system and public assistance).

According to Article 1(4) of the second draft, there should also be an individual right to free placement and vocational guidance.

According to the draft that followed the fundamental rights reform inquiry, the institution of social insurance for illness, accidents, disability, old age and unemployment should be enshrined in the constitution, and it should also be possible for the Constitutional Court to review the right to equal participation in the social insurance system. After all, even the chairman of the commission of inquiry believed this concern to enshrine fundamental social rights in the constitution sought nothing other than an improved guarantee of the continued existence of the welfare state, the substance of which, he claimed, was already set out in numerous conventions and agreements between the two sides of industry⁷⁶.

⁷⁵ Okresek, in: Matscher, op. cit., p.195.

⁷⁶ Quoted in Okresek, op. cit., p.196.

However, no fundamental social rights have yet been enshrined in the constitution. Despite this, Austria ranks among the Member States with the most extensive social security.

2.12. Portugal

The Portuguese constitution, which dates back to 1976, was last revised extensively in 1997. It describes fundamental rights in even greater detail than the Spanish constitution. Like the latter, the Portuguese constitution was intended to safeguard democracy as far as possible after the period of dictatorship, and economic and social rights as well as fundamental civil rights and liberties are therefore guaranteed⁷⁷.

Article 2 of the constitution defines Portugal as a democratic state based on the rule of law and having economic, social and cultural democracy as its goal. Accordingly, the constitution distinguishes between economic, social and cultural rights. The first category includes the right to work, which is covered by Article 58. Article 59 guarantees not only regular and paid leave but also an entitlement to unemployment benefit and fair remuneration.

The social rights comprise the right to social security (Article 63), the right to health protection (Article 64), the right to appropriate housing that meets adequate standards of hygiene (Article 65), the right to a healthy environment (Article 66) and the right of the family (Article 67), parents (Article 68), children (Article 69), young people (Article 70), the disabled (Article 71) and the elderly (Article 72) to protection.

The cultural rights include not only the right to education and culture (Article 73) and to school and university education (Articles 74 and 76) but also the right to participate in cultural life (Article 78) and to physical training and sport (Article 79).

This list shows how the Portuguese constitution has endeavoured to cover as much of the sphere of concern to the citizen as possible. The rights are all worded as individual rights, creating the impression that they are also enforceable. However, the second section of the various rights regularly instructs the State on how rights are to be made effective. The right of the citizen is thus always accompanied by a specific duty of the State⁷⁸.

The right to work, for example, is complemented by the State's duty to use certain economic and social policy plans⁷⁹.

The entitlement to social security is defined by the State's obligation to develop a social insurance system that covers the citizen in the event of illness, old age, disability, the death of a spouse and of parents and in all other cases in which an individual becomes incapable of working.

The State has a duty to implement an appropriate housing policy and to ensure medical care throughout the country.

⁷⁷ José Vida Soria, in: Matscher, op. cit., p.304; Manassis, op. cit., p.44.

⁷⁸ Vida Soria, op. cit., p.308.

⁷⁹ They include the implementation of a policy of full employment, equality of opportunity in the choice of occupation or employment and the cultural, professional and vocational training of workers.

These rights are protected by Articles 17 and 18. Article 17 explains the application of the system of rights, freedoms and guarantees to the rights referred to in Section II and to fundamental rights of a similar nature. Article 18 stipulates that the provisions of the constitution concerning rights, freedoms and guarantees are directly applicable and are binding on public and private bodies.

Like Spain's constitution, Portugal's faces the problem of 'eternal effectiveness' as regards the protection of social and economic fundamental rights⁸⁰. However, the preferential treatment of fundamental rights under Article 17 applies only to the rights referred to in Section II. On the other hand, as the fundamental social rights described above are covered by Section III, they are not protected⁸¹. The possibility of analogous application referred to in Article 17 is not exploited in practice, evidently owing to a fear of too broad an interpretation of analogous rights.

The Portuguese constitution does not provide for the possibility of a complaint to the Constitutional Court in the event of an infringement of fundamental rights. This is most certainly true of social rights⁸². Pursuant to Article 283, however, the Constitutional Court may rule that there has been failure to comply with the constitution by omission on the part of the necessary legislative acts.

2.13. Finland

Section 15 of the Finnish constitution of 17 July 1919 as amended on 1 August 1995 not only recognises the right to freedom of occupation and calls for the 'protection of labour' but also stipulates that the public authorities are to promote employment and to strive to secure the right to work for everyone. It also requires the legislature to enshrine the right to vocational training in appropriate laws.

These are not litigable fundamental rights, as is evident from the wording. However, the literature also includes the opposite view that there is a legal right to work, although this should not be understood as a right to the 'immediate' allocation of a job⁸³.

At the level of ordinary law Finland had something like an individual right under a 1987 Employment Act for people under 20 years of age and the long-term unemployed⁸⁴. This has since been so amended, however, that only people under 25 have an individual right to further training if they are unemployed and cannot find a training place.

Section 15a of the Finnish constitution states that anyone unable to obtain the security needed for a decent life has a right to essential assistance and care. Paragraph 2 defines this as a right to the provision of the basic needs for life at times of unemployment, illness, incapacity, advanced age, confinement or loss of the provider.

⁸⁰ Vida Soria, op. cit., p.308.

⁸¹ ibid., p.308; the preferentially protected rights, however, include the right to protection against dismissal and to participation in the employer's decision-making.

⁸² Vida Soria, op. cit., p.310.

⁸³ See C. Tomuschat, 'The Right to Work', in: Rosas & Helgesen (eds): Human Rights in a Changing East-West Perspective, 1990, pp.181 ff.

⁸⁴ See Rosas, op. cit., p.230.

Paragraph 3 requires the public authorities to secure for everyone, 'in the manner stipulated in greater detail by Act of Parliament, ... adequate social welfare and health services Public authorities shall also support the abilities of families and others charged with the care of children to provide for their welfare and individual growth.' Paragraph 4 specifies that it is the task of the public authorities to promote the right to housing and to support the individual in any attempt to find accommodation by his own efforts. The wording of the first sentence of paragraph 3 indicates that there is an individual right to the social benefits referred to in accordance with the legal provisions. Otherwise, these are policy clauses.

At the level of ordinary law there is a clear tendency to make social benefits individual public rights that can be enforced before the administrative courts, examples being the right to social assistance, accommodation for children under the age of 3, support for and the provision of housing for children and their families in emergencies and certain kinds of assistance for seriously disabled people⁸⁵.

Outside the part of the constitution concerning fundamental rights (Part II) fundamental social rights are to be found in Part XIII, which concerns education. Section 78, for example, requires the State to promote research and higher education in technology, agriculture and commerce and the other applied sciences and the pursuit of the fine arts. If these subjects are not taught at the universities, the State is to maintain special colleges and support private institutions established for these purposes (second sentence). This provision can be seen as an institutional guarantee.

Under section 79 institutions of higher general education and higher elementary education are to be maintained or, if necessary, assisted at the State's expense. In the view of Parliament's Constitution Committee it cannot be inferred from the words 'if necessary, assisted' that any institution facing financial crisis is entitled to individual assistance⁸⁶.

Pursuant to section 13, everyone has the right to free primary education, and the second sentence of section 80 reiterates that primary school education is free for everyone. Section 81 requires the state to maintain the teaching establishments for the technical occupations, for agriculture and ancillary trades, for commerce and seafaring and for the fine arts or to support them with government resources if the need arises. This provision is intended to safeguard vocational training.

The fundamental rights that can be deduced from this part of the constitution are again not individual rights but institutional guarantees and policy clauses. Nonetheless, they are very important for constitutional reality in Finland, since the State does indeed guarantee many social benefits in the sphere of education in accordance with these provisions. Thus higher education is not only free but also includes meals, health care and, in some cases, free transport to school and accommodation. This depends on the local authorities, which are responsible and meet the cost jointly with central government. Vocational school pupils enjoy the same advantages. University attendance is also free; scholarships and loans are available to meet the cost of living⁸⁷.

2.14. Sweden

⁸⁵ Rosas, op. cit., p.234.

⁸⁶ Pentti Arajärvi: The Right to Education in Finland, in: Drzewicki/Krause/Rosas (eds), op. cit., p.282.

⁸⁷ ibid., pp.282 f.

In the constitution of the Kingdom of Sweden of 1 January 1975 as amended on 1 January 1980 Article 2(2) of Chapter 1 – headed 'Basic Principles' – states that the personal, economic and cultural welfare of the individual is the fundamental aim of public activity. According to the second sentence of this paragraph, it is, in particular, incumbent upon the public administration to secure the right to work, housing and education and to promote social care and security and a good living environment.

It is noticeable that reference is made to these fundamental social rights not in Chapter 2 (Fundamental Rights and Freedoms) but among the basic principles of the constitution. This reflects the fact that the Kingdom of Sweden sees itself as a welfare state. The fundamental social rights referred to can therefore be seen as provisions defining the state's objectives, by which any public activity is to be guided. It is also clear from this, however, that these fundamental rights are not litigable⁸⁸.

As in the other Scandinavian countries, the many social rights of the citizen are defined in ordinary legislation and, where they are individual rights, they are enforceable before administrative courts⁸⁹. The administration of justice in social matters has not been left to the ordinary courts in Sweden because there has traditionally been some scepticism about the judiciary, with its largely conservative background. It has been feared that their judgments would erode social rights⁹⁰.

Sweden considers it particularly important that social assistance from the State does not lead to the stigmatisation of individuals. In principle, everyone is therefore entitled to a wide range of State benefits regardless of his financial background⁹¹. This reveals the image of a State which not only guarantees a minimum of security for the citizen and gives everyone the same rights but also seeks to achieve real social equality.

2.15. United Kingdom

To understand how fundamental rights are protected in the United Kingdom's legal system, it must first be remembered that Britain has no written constitution in the form of a comprehensive document and that there is no list of fundamental rights. Instead, various texts, such as the Magna Carta of 1215, the Petition of Rights of 1627, the Act of Habeas Corpus of 1679 and the Bill of Rights of 1689 form a kind of 'constitution'.

In principle, however, there is no formal distinction between constitutional law and ordinary law, owing to the fact that it is not the people but parliament that is the sovereign power. Its laws cannot therefore be unconstitutional and must be applied by the courts. Nor is there a system of constitutional courts to enable acts of the public authorities to be examined for their constitutionality⁹². Instead, it is for the judges in ordinary courts of law to interpret the acts of parliament and to develop law in the form of common law. The individual's fundamental rights

⁸⁸ Rosas, op. cit., p.229, with a reference to the official commentary by Petren & Ragnehalm, Sveriges grundlagar och tillhörande författningar med förklaringar, Stockholm 1980, p. 20; Katrougalos, op. cit., pp.294 f.

⁸⁹ Rosas, op. cit., p.233.

⁹⁰ Katrougalos, op. cit., p.295.

⁹¹ ibid., pp.293 f.

⁹² Ridley: 'The British Constitution and Constitutional Reform in Britain', in: Bieber/Widmer (eds), L'Espace constitutionnel européen – Der europäische Verfassungsraum – The European constitutional area, Zürich 1995, pp.30 ff.

must therefore be deduced from ordinary acts of parliament and from common law. This is made particularly difficult by the fact that parliament does not as a general rule formulate any positive rights along the lines of 'Everyone shall have the right to ...', but that the various spheres are covered by detailed rules from which the protection of fundamental rights can be deduced. In simple terms, this means that the individual has any right as long as it is not explicitly restricted⁹³.

This concept results in civil rights and liberties playing a major role, whereas fundamental social rights in the sense of participatory rights have not yet, by and large, been recognised in British jurisprudence. Fundamental rights are here equated with freedom from the State. Gaining freedom and security as fundamental rights with the help of the State is inconceivable for most British lawyers⁹⁴.

British lawyers point out in particular that extending fundamental rights to include fundamental social rights would mean sacrificing individual freedoms and that there is no point in putting rights that are not for the most part directly enforceable but represent policy clauses on a par with traditional civil rights and liberties. This would simply dilute the idea of fundamental rights⁹⁵.

A right to work, for example, is recognised only insofar as the individual has a right to practise his chosen occupation without being unjustifiably excluded from it⁹⁶.

A constitutional right to social security does not exist in the United Kingdom. Despite this, there are, of course, various social benefits comparable with those in other Member States and a national health service to which everyone has free access⁹⁷.

There is also an individual right to enjoy these social benefits in accordance with the provisions of law. This is not, however, a constitutional right. Disputes with the administration can be referred to 'administrative tribunals'. Appeals may then be lodged with the 'social security commissioners'⁹⁸. In contrast, the ordinary courts and common law play virtually no part in the protection of social rights, since the courts have generally refused to develop social rights⁹⁹.

3. Overview of existing rights

3.1. Table

⁹³ Dicey, Introduction, p.197.

⁹⁴ Trautwein, Der Schutz der bürgerlichen Freiheiten und der sogenannten sozialen Grundrechte in England, pp.189 ff.

⁹⁵ ibid., pp.191 f.

⁹⁶ ibid., p.195, with a reference to Nagler v Feilden (1966), 1 All E.R. 689, 693; Quinn v Letham (1901), A.C. 495, 534.

⁹⁷ The national health insurance scheme is governed by the National Health Reorganisation Act 1973, the provision of housing by the public authorities by the Housing Act 1957, social assistance by the National Security Act 1975; see Kingston/Imrie: 'Vereinigtes Königreich von Großbritannien und Nordirland', in: Grabitz (ed): Grundrechte in Europa und USA, Kehl, Strasbourg, Arlington, 1986.

⁹⁸ Harris in: Matscher, op. cit., p.218.

⁹⁹ ibid., pp.218, 201; for the situation in Scotland, which differs in some respects, see Kingston/Imrie, op. cit., pp.833 ff.

FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS IN EUROPE

The following table is an overview of the contents of the Member States' constitutions. It shows what fundamental social rights are enshrined in the constitutions. It is impossible, however, to forge a link between the existence of fundamental social rights and the existence and level of social benefits and institutions in the Member States concerned¹⁰⁰. This is clear primarily from Austria and the United Kingdom, their columns being empty whereas they do, of course, have social rights.

The symbol ■ in the table means that the right concerned is referred to in the constitution. The symbol □ means that, though not explicitly enshrined in the constitution, it is recognised.

¹⁰⁰ See Arbeitskreis 'Europäisches Sozialrecht', Soziale Rechte in der EG, Berlin 1990, p.24.

FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS IN EUROPE

	B	DK	D	GR	E	F	IRL	I	L	NL	A	P	FIN	S	UK
Right to work -fair/safe working conditions -fair wages -paid leave	■ ■ ■	■		■	■ ■ ■	■	□	■ ■ ■ ■	■	■		■ ■ ■ ■	■	■
Right to education and training -free elementary education -free secondary school education -free university education -vocational training	■ ■	■		■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■	■	■ ■	■	■			■ ■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■	■
Right to housing	■			■	■			□		■		■ ■	■	■
Right to health -free for the indigent	■			■	■			■ ■	■	■		■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■
Right to social security -public welfare -special protection for mothers -special protection for families/parents -special protection for the disabled -special protection for children/young people. -special protection for the elderly	■	■	□ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■	■	■		■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■	■
Right to culture	■				■					■
Right to a healthy environment	■		■		■			□		■		■		■

3.2. The three models

The table shows that social rights are enshrined in the constitutions of almost all the Member States. They are all welfare states that have set themselves the goal of eliminating excessive social differences. A comparison of the Member States does, however, reveal different approaches to incorporating social rights in the constitution. In the final analysis, a constitution always reflects a country's traditions and economic and political experience. Fundamental rights can be divided into various 'generations'. The first generation comprises the classical civil rights and liberties. Social rights did not emerge at constitutional level until the late 19th or early 20th century and were consolidated after the Second World War. The third generation consists of the fundamental rights that concern culture and the environment. Here again, it is clear that developments in society always have an influence on the constitution. Unlike the civil rights and liberties, which are directly applicable, what the second- and third-generation rights have in common is that the reference to them in the constitution is not enough on its own for them to be effective: this depends on the goodwill of the legislature¹⁰¹. As regards incorporation in constitutions, a rough distinction can be made between three systems: a liberal model, a southern European model and a moderate model, although they overlap to some extent.

3.2.1. The liberal model

It must first be remembered the United Kingdom and Austria occupy a special position among the Member States in that both have forgone the inclusion of social rights in their constitutions. For one thing, there is no constitution in the United Kingdom in the conventional sense of the term, and for another, the liberal attitude to the economy and politics is difficult to reconcile with the adoption of specific social rights¹⁰². Although the United Kingdom paved the way in social legislation with the introduction of the poor laws¹⁰³, the judiciary has always been very restrained in granting entitlements¹⁰⁴. Like the USA, the United Kingdom prefers market-oriented solutions that emerge regardless of any influence the state may bring to bear. From the wide-ranging social safeguards in Austria and the United Kingdom, however, it is clear that fundamental social rights do not need to be enshrined in the constitution for the public to be assured of basic social services.

3.2.2. The southern European model

The 'southern European model' is characterised by the fact that extensive fundamental social rights have been included in the constitution. The authors of such constitutions endeavoured to cover every sphere of life and to provide as comprehensive protection as possible for the citizen in their constitutions. The countries concerned include Italy, Greece, Spain and Portugal. The words 'Everyone shall have the right to ...' are frequently to be found in their constitutions, creating the impression that they are individual fundamental rights. Despite the choice of words, ¹⁰¹ Iliopoulos-Strangas, op. cit., p.19.

¹⁰¹ ibid., p.279.

¹⁰² ibid., p.279.

¹⁰³ The poor laws were met with fierce criticism since they were seen as granting state assistance not as a right but as charity. At the beginning of this century the foundation stone was laid for today's social legislation. The system was expanded after the Second World War, when it began to be guided by the principles of universality, equality and justice. These principles were primarily intended to prevent the exclusion of poorer sections of the population, who depend on the solidarity of the rest of society.

such rights are rarely enforceable. In some cases the constitutions do not even provide for complaints to be lodged with a constitutional court. The individual right is ultimately treated as an instruction to the State to initiate measures that enable the citizen to exercise the right concerned.

3.2.3. The moderate model

The constitutions of the other countries combine liberal tendencies with the definition of rights, whether as individual rights, as objectives of the State or as policy clauses.

The authors of these constitutions were aware, however, that the opportunities for exercising influence in a market economy are limited and, in particular, that it is difficult to make the fundamental right to work effective. Nevertheless, almost all countries have included it in their constitutions, at least as a policy clause, in order to obligate governments to stimulate the labour market.

An exception is the German Basic Law, which protects social rights through the welfare state clause which the public authorities are required to respect in any action they take. It is also worth mentioning that in Scandinavia, unlike the other countries, there has always been a cross-party consensus on the need for social safeguards in a market economy system.

Part IV: The constitutions of the Central and Eastern European candidate countries

1. Preliminary remarks

Given the impending enlargement of the EU, the position of the first countries to accede should be considered in the debate on a bill of rights. The constitutions of the Central and Eastern European countries are therefore considered in the following.

All the former Communist countries of Central and Eastern Europe have adopted new democratic constitutions in recent years, often guided by western models. The market economy is accepted everywhere as the basic system for the economy, and in some cases the principle of the 'social market economy' on the German model is explicitly enshrined in the constitution, as in Article 20 of the Polish constitution and in the preamble to the Hungarian constitution. The role of the State in the redistribution of wealth is no longer explicitly mentioned. Fundamental social rights played an important role in the socialist theory of constitutional law and were regarded as the main element of individual rights and freedoms¹⁰⁵. Despite some criticism¹⁰⁶, they have been retained or reinstated in the new constitutions, albeit in varying degrees of detail.

2. Czech Republic

In the Czech Republic's constitutional system fundamental rights are to be found not in the constitution of 16 December 1992 itself, but in a separate declaration of fundamental rights and freedoms. Pursuant to Article 3 of the constitution, this forms part of the constitutional order. Its Chapter 4 contains an extensive list of fundamental social rights within the meaning of this study.

Pursuant to Article 26(3), everyone has the right to earn his living by work, and the state is required to provide an adequate level of material security for those citizens who are unable, through no fault of their own, to exercise this right. Pursuant to the fourth sentence of Article 6(3), further details will be set out in laws. This wording is also to be found in Articles 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34 and 35. Fundamental social rights are thus to be accurately defined in ordinary legislation.

Article 28 gives employees the right to fair remuneration and satisfactory working conditions. Article 29(1) gives women, adolescents and persons with health problems the right to increased protection of their health at work and to special working conditions. According to Article 29(2), adolescents and persons with health problems also have the right to special protection in labour relations and to assistance in vocational training. Otherwise, Article 31 gives everyone the right to health protection: citizens have the right, on the basis of public insurance, to free medical care and to medical aids under conditions provided for by law. Under Article 30(1) citizens have a right to material security in old age, during periods of work incapacity and in the event of the loss of their provider. Article 30(2) refers to the right to assistance in the event of material need to the extent necessary to ensure a basic standard of living.

¹⁰⁴ Kedzia, Social Rights in the (Draft) Constitutions of Central and Eastern Europe, in: Drzewicki, Krause, Rosas, pp.203 f.

¹⁰⁵ Katrougalos, op. cit., p.300.

Under Article 32(1) parents, families, children and young people enjoy the particular protection of the law. Article 32(2) guarantees pregnant women special care, protection in labour relations and suitable working conditions.

Article 33 concerns the right to education, defining it as a right to free school and university education. Under conditions defined by law citizens have a right to assistance from the state during their studies.

Article 34(2) grants the right of access to the nation's cultural wealth under the conditions set by law, while Article 35(1) gives everyone the right to a favourable environment and Article 35(2) the right to timely and complete information on the state of the environment and natural resources.

The Czech constitution thus includes one of the most detailed lists of fundamental social rights in Europe, most of them being formulated as individual rights.

3. Estonia

The Estonian constitution of 28 June 1992 is less detailed in its definition of fundamental social rights than the Czech constitution. Article 27 refers to special protection for the family, parents and children. Under Article 28 everyone has a right to health protection and to state assistance in old age, when unable to work, in the event of the loss of the provider and in emergencies. Article 29(3) requires the state to provide for vocational training and to assist job-seekers. On the other hand, there is no right to work. The right to education is guaranteed by Article 37. It includes the right to instruction in Estonian and to free education in state schools.

4. Hungary

The Hungarian constitution of 20 August 1949 as amended in 1997 is generally very precise and contains only three brief provisions that refer to fundamental social rights, Articles 16, 17 and 18. They require the Republic of Hungary to pay particular attention to the economic security, education and upbringing of young people and to protect their interests (Article 16), to provide for extensive social measures for the needy (Article 17) and to safeguard the right of each individual to a healthy environment (Article 18).

5. Poland

The new Polish Basic Law was adopted by the National Assembly on 2 April 1997 and confirmed in a referendum held in October 1997. The very first chapter concerning the republic sets out the obligation to abide by the principle of social justice (Article 2), to ensure equal access of the people to cultural assets (Article 6(1)) and to assist Poles living abroad so that they may retain their links with their national cultural heritage.

Part IV of Chapter 2 contains a list of economic, social and cultural rights. Where work is concerned, Article 65(4) merely requires a minimum wage or the manner in which it is determined to be specified by law. Paragraph 5 requires the state to pursue a policy geared to full employment by implementing programmes that combat unemployment, by creating jobs in the public sector and by intervening in the economy. Thus, although it includes a right to work for the individual, it sets out broad lines of labour market policy in the context of fundamental rights. A right to healthy and safe working conditions is required by Article 66(1), and Article 66(2) covers the right to a minimum amount of leave in accordance with more detailed provisions to be set out in a law.

Article 67 refers to the right of citizens to social security in the event of invalidity and in old age. According to Article 68(1), everyone has the right to health protection. Article 68(3) requires the State to take particular care of children, pregnant women, disabled persons and the elderly.

Article 70 grants the right to education. Education in state schools is free, according to Article 70(2). Detailed provisions on the protection of families and children are included in Articles 71 and 72. Particularly worth noting in this context is that Article 72 gives everyone the right to require the organs of state to protect children against violence, brutality, exploitation and acts that endanger their morals.

Article 74 requires the state to ensure the ecological security of the present and future generations with the policy it pursues. As in the Czech constitution, Article 74(3) defines a right to information on the quality of the environment and its protection. Article 74(4) requires the state to support activities undertaken by the public to protect the environment.

The state is also required to pursue a policy that takes account of the public's housing requirements and to protect the rights of tenants by law (Article 75).

The Polish Basic Law thus contains numerous policy clauses that require the state to pass laws and take practical measures.

6. Slovenia

Article 2 of the Slovenian constitution of 23 December 1991 includes a clause on the welfare state, which is explained in greater detail in Articles 50 et seqq.

The right to social security under the law exists for all citizens in accordance with Article 50, the right to health protection in accordance with Article 51. Security and vocational training for disabled persons are guaranteed by Article 52. Article 56 provides for the special protection and care of children and Article 57 for free education and for the state to ensure appropriate education for all citizens. Article 66 requires the state to provide for employment, while Article 72 gives everyone the right to a healthy environment pursuant to more detailed provisions of laws. Article 78 instructs the State to create the necessary conditions for everyone to be adequately housed.

The Slovenian constitution thus details few fundamental social rights.

7. Summary

To some extent, it can be inferred from the wording of fundamental rights, the general nature of their protection and the granting of the right of access to the courts in these countries that fundamental social rights are protected by the same means as other rights, i.e. they may be claimed before the courts¹⁰⁷. However, as it is usually left to ordinary legislation to determine in more precise terms what form fundamental social rights are to take, the enjoyment of rights largely depends, of course, on the economic situation and on the political will of the country's leaders.

As in the EU countries, the constitutions of the candidate countries in no way reflect social reality but, at best, the strength of the political will to guarantee the citizen's fundamental social rights. Although the Commission stated in its 1998 reports on progress towards accession by the various candidate countries¹⁰⁸ that economic, social and cultural rights are respected, it calls for improvements in the health sector, health protection and safety at the workplace and in the social dialogue in almost all the countries.

¹⁰⁷ Kedzie, op. cit., p.207.

¹⁰⁸ Commission of the European Communities, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by the Czech Republic in 1998; idem, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by Estonia in 1998; idem, Regular report from the Commission towards accession by Hungary in 1998; idem, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by Poland; idem, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by Slovenia in 1998; published under <http://europa.eu.int.comm/dg1a/enlarge/report>. Similar reports have been drawn up exist on all the other candidate countries.

Part V: The European Parliament's position in the past

The European Parliament (EP) first adopted a resolution on respect for the fundamental rights of citizens in the Member States in the development of Community law¹⁰⁹ on 4 April 1973. This was followed by a resolution on the precedence of Community law and the protection of fundamental laws, which was adopted on 15 June 1976¹¹⁰. The EP submitted a draft European constitution on 14 February 1984.

The most important EP document is the Declaration of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms of 12 April 1989¹¹¹. This contains a comprehensive list of fundamental rights that includes fundamental social rights and state objectives as well as the classical fundamental rights:

- 'Article 7: The family shall enjoy legal, economic and social protection.'
- 'Article 13(1): Everyone shall have the right to just working conditions.'
- 'Article 13(2): The necessary measures shall be taken with a view to guaranteeing health and safety in the workplace and a level of remuneration which makes it policy to lead a decent life.'
- 'Article 14(3): Workers shall have the right to be informed regularly of the economic and financial situation of their undertaking and to be consulted on decisions likely to affect their interests.'
- 'Article 15(1): Everyone shall have the right to benefit from all measures enabling them to enjoy the best possible state of health.'
- 'Article 15(2): Workers, self-employed persons and their dependants shall have the right to social security or an equivalent system.'
- 'Article 15(3): Anyone lacking sufficient resources shall have the right to social and medical assistance.'
- 'Article 15(4): Those who, through no fault of their own, are unable to house themselves adequately, shall have the right to assistance in this respect from the appropriate public authorities.'
- 'Article 16(1): Everyone shall have the right to education and vocational training appropriate to their abilities.'
- 'Article 24: The following shall form an integral part of Community policy: the preservation, protection and improvement of the quality of the environment; the protection of consumers and users against the risks of damage to their health and safety and against unfair commercial transactions. The Community institutions shall be required to adopt all the measures necessary for the attainment of these objectives.'

Even before the intergovernmental conferences that led to the Treaty of Maastricht, Parliament had called for the list of fundamental rights it had adopted to be included in the Treaties, but with as little success as it had before the intergovernmental conferences in 1996, which led to the Treaty of Amsterdam¹¹².

¹⁰⁹ OJ C 26, 1973, pp.7 f.

¹¹⁰ Reproduced in EuGRZ 1976, pp.246 f.

¹¹¹ OJ C 120, 16.5.1989, pp. 51 ff.

¹¹² See 'Martin report' of 20 November 1990 (EP Doc A3-270/90) and the resolution of 13 March 1996, reproduced in EuGRZ 1996, p.167.

The 1998 Declaration is nonetheless tremendously important, since it was adopted by the European Parliament, the only institution at European level to have direct democratic legitimation. It represents an expression of the 'popular will' of the European peoples. The EU's own bill of rights will not therefore come into being without the explicit approval of the European Parliament, whatever its status in law may be.

Part VI: Summary

In early June 1999 the European Council meeting in Cologne decided to set up a body to draft a charter of fundamental rights for the European Union. As decisions by the EU now affect almost all areas of the lives of the Union's citizens, it is time to develop a bill of rights as a yardstick for the institution's actions. Only then can it be ensured that the citizen is aware of his fundamental rights, since the present system of references to the ECHR, ESC and Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights of Workers does not ensure sufficient transparency.

Fundamental social rights in this context are the rights to which the individual is entitled as a member of a group and which can be made effective only if the State takes action to safeguard the individual's environment. They do not give effect to freedom from the State but to freedom with the State's assistance. Particular reference should be made in this context to the right to work, the right to education and training, the right to housing, the right to health, the right to social security, the right to culture and the right to a healthy environment.

They are to be found in various forms in constitutions. On the one hand, they may take the form of individual rights. This means that the individual may appeal directly to courts for such rights to be respected. Many constitutions also refer to fundamental social rights in the form of policy clauses and provisions defining the State's objectives. The legislature and all public authorities are then required to make the rights concerned effective.

Whether or not social rights should be enshrined in constitutions is a contentious issue. On the one hand, it ensures that such rights cannot be eroded by legislation and case law. On the other hand, a certain standard of living is then specified in the constitution, and it may not be possible to ensure it is respected in the future because of economic and social changes.

Another problem arising in connection with the creation of a bill of rights for the EU is that the EU is not a State and derives its competence from the Member States. It can therefore protect fundamental rights only to the extent that EU law is applied.

At European level there are two charters setting out fundamental social rights. The Community itself is not a party to the European Social Charter, and the Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights of Workers is no more than a solemn declaration by the Heads of State or Government of the Member States. It is primarily through the case law of the European Court of Justice, however, that the two charters influence Community law.

In the Member States' constitutions various courses have been charted in enshrining fundamental social rights. Owing to the liberal basic attitude in Austria and the United Kingdom, for example, there are no constitutional social rights in these countries. The German Basic Law does not specify any fundamental social rights apart from the right of mothers to special protection. Germany nonetheless sees itself as a welfare state and, by defining state objectives, requires the public authorities to base all their actions on the welfare state principle. The Benelux countries, France and the Scandinavian countries have fundamental social rights in the form of individual rights, policy clauses or provisions defining the state's objectives, but tend to be restrained when it comes to detail, leaving this to ordinary legislation.

The southern European countries all have extensive bills of rights, which also include detailed fundamental social rights, formulating them primarily as individual rights. Despite the wording, however, they are not as a rule enforceable rights but instructions to the legislature to make them effective.

Three of the candidate countries, Estonia, Hungary and Slovenia, tend to adopt a moderate approach in the wording of fundamental social rights, while the Czech Republic and Poland follow the southern European model.

It is impossible, however, to forge a link between the existence of fundamental social rights in a constitution and social reality in the country concerned.

The European Parliament has always advocated the creation of a Community bill of rights. The most important document is the Declaration of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms of 1989, which also includes a number of fundamental social rights. The particular value of this declaration is its democratic legitimation.

In a resolution on the establishment of the Charter of Fundamental Rights the European Parliament 'draws attention to the need for an open and innovative approach to shaping the Charter, the nature of the rights to be featured in it, and the part it will play and the status it will command in the constitutional development of the Union'¹¹³.

¹¹³ Resolution B5-0110/99 of 16 September 1999, not yet published in the Official Journal.

Bibliography:

Álvarez Vélez, I., and Alcón Yustas, F., Las Constituciones de los Quince Estados de la Unión Europea, Madrid, 1996.

Bergmann, J., and Lenz, C. (Hrsg.), Der Amsterdamer Vertrag vom 2. Oktober 1997 - Eine Kommentierung der Neuerungen des EU- und EG-Vertrages, Cologne, 1998.

Betten, L., and MacDevitt, D. (eds), The Protection of Fundamental Social Rights in the European Union, The Hague/London/Boston, 1996.

Bieber, R., and Widmer, P. (eds), L'espace constitutionnel européen, Der europäische Verfassungsraum, The European Constitutional Area, Zürich, 1995.

Byrne, R., and McCutcheon, J.P., The Irish Legal System, Dublin, 1989.

Casey, J., Constitutional Law in Ireland, London, 1992.

Cassese, A., Lalumière, C., Leuprecht, P., and Robinson, M., Leading by Example: A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000, Florence 1998 (papers of the European University Institute).

Commission of the European Communities, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by the Czech Republic in 1998; idem, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by Estonia in 1998; idem, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by Hungary in 1998; idem, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by Poland in 1998; idem, Regular report from the Commission on progress towards accession by Slovenia in 1998; published under URL: <http://europa.eu.int.comm/dg1a/enlarge/report>.

Commission of the European Communities, Report of the Expert Group on Fundamental Rights, Affirming Fundamental Rights in the European Union - Time to Act, Directorate-General for Employment, Industrial Relations and Social Affairs, February 1999.

Di Fabio, U., Für eine Grundrechtsdebatte ist es Zeit, in: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung of 17 November 1999, p.11.

Diez-Picazo, L.-M., and Ponthoreau, M.-C., The Constitutional Protection of Social Rights - Some Comparative Remarks, European University Institute, Florence, 1991.

Drzewicki, K., Krause, K., and Rosas, A., Social Rights as Human Rights, A European Challenge (Institute for Human Rights, Abo Akademi University), Abo, 1994.

Grabitz, E. (ed.), Grundrechte in Europa und USA, Vol. I., Strukturen nationaler Systeme, Kehl/Strasbourg/Arlington, 1986.

Hepple, B., The Implementation of the Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights, in: The Modern Law Review, Vol. 53, 1990, p.645.

Hilf, M., and Pache, E., Der Vertrag von Amsterdam, in: Neue Juristische Wochenschrift, 1998, pp.705 ff.

Iliopoulos-Strangas, J., (ed.), Grundrechtsschutz im europäischen Raum - Der Beitritt der Europäischen Gemeinschaft zur Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention, Baden-Baden, 1993.

Itin, M., Grundrechte in Frankreich, Zürich, 1992.

Katrougalos, G.S., The Implementation of Social Rights in Europe, in: Columbia Journal of European Law, 1996, pp.277 ff.

Kommentar zum Grundgesetz für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland (Reihe Alternativkommentare), Vol. I, Articles 1-37, Neuwied, 1989.

Matscher, F., (ed.): 'Die Durchsetzung wirtschaftlicher und sozialer Grundrechte: Eine rechtsvergleichende Bestandsaufnahme, The Implementation of Economic and Social Rights, La mise en oeuvre des droits économiques et sociaux', Kehl/Strasbourg/Arlington 1991 (Reihe: Schriften des Österreichischen Instituts für Menschenrechte, Vol. 3).

Maunz, T., and Dürig, G. (eds):, Grundgesetz Kommentar, Vol. III: Articles 20-69, Munich, at June, 1998.

Pernice, I., 'Vertragsrevision oder europäische Verfassungsgebung?', in: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, 21 July 1999, No 154, p.7.

van der Pot, C.W., Handboek van het Nederlandse Staatsrecht, Zwolle, 1983.

Rengeling, H.-W., 'Eine Charta der Grundrechte' in: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, 21 July 1999, p.13.

Rengeling, H.-W., Grundrechtsschutz in der Europäischen Gemeinschaft, Munich, 1993.

Rosas, A., and Helgesen (eds), Human Rights in a Changing East-West Perspective, 1990.

Sciarra, S., From Strasbourg to Amsterdam: Prospects for the Convergence of European Social Rights Policy, San Domenico/Florence 1998 (Working Paper Law No 98/9 of the European University Institute).

Spyropoulos, P., Constitutional Law in Hellas, The Hague/London/Boston, 1995.

Trautwein, W., Der Schutz der bürgerlichen Freiheiten und der sogenannten sozialen Grundrechte in England – Ein Beitrag zur Grundrechtsproblematik im englischen Recht, Saarbrücken, 1977.

Watson, P., 'The Community Social Charter', in: Common Market Law Review, Vol. 28, 1991, p.49.

Wetter, I., Die Grundrechtscharta des Europäischen Gerichtshofs – Die Konkretisierung der gemeinschaftlichen Grundrechte durch die Rechtsprechung des EuGH zu den allgemeinen Rechtsgrundsätzen, Frankfurt am Main, 1998.

Wipfelder, H.-J., 'Die verfassungsrechtliche Kodifizierung sozialer Grundrechte', in: Zeitschrift für Rechtspolitik 1986, p.140.

Zuleeg, M., 'Der Schutz sozialer Grundrechte in der Rechtsordnung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft', in: EuGRZ 1992, pp.329 ff.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 29 February 2000CHARTE 4143/00*CONTRIB 33*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution from the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages (EBLUL).^{1 2}

¹ EBLUL: E-mail: eblul@eblul.org

² The text has been submitted only in English language.

Brussels 25.2.2000

Call for Linguistic Rights in New Fundamental Rights Charter

The European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages (EBLUL) welcomes the decision of the European Union to draft and approve the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. The Charter will be a further step in the process of European integration. It is highly significant because it signals a move away from mostly economic matters which have been at the centre of European attention in recent years towards a more comprehensive understanding of European citizenship, incorporating the notion of fundamental rights.

Cultural and linguistic diversity in Europe lies at the heart of fundamental rights for its citizens as the integration process advances. An essential part of this diversity are the regional and minority languages traditionally spoken by linguistic communities within the EU member states.

The importance of preserving and promoting these languages has been considered highly important by some relevant European institutions. The European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages can be considered to be Council of Europe's convention setting out basic minimum standards. There are several other relevant documents, including the Council of Europe's own Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities. The OSCE mentions minority languages in several documents, including their Document of the Copenhagen Meeting of the Conference on the Human Dimension, adopted in June 1990, containing 11 paragraphs relating to linguistic minorities. Furthermore, the activities of the High Commissioner, the Foundation of Inter-Ethnic Relations adopted in 1996, the Hague recommendations regarding the education rights of National Minorities and in 1998 the Oslo Recommendations regarding the linguistic rights of national minorities, must be considered. These latter two documents give a comprehensive overview of the rights needed for protection and promotion of languages.

EBLUL stresses the need for clauses specifically related to linguistic rights of communities speaking regional and minority languages to be included in the Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union. The Charter should provide at least a minimum standard of protection of regional and minority languages which will become a fundamental basis in this field for the European Union itself and for its current and future member states.

EBLUL will remain at the disposal of the Body elaborating the draft EU charter of Fundamental Rights and other EU institutions as well as member states' governments and parliaments for any further consultations in this matter.

The European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages will also evaluate the possibility of producing more detailed proposals on this matter.

Bojan Brezigar
President
European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages
eblul@eblul.org

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 29. Februar 2000CHARTE 4144/00*CONTRIB 34*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Sie erhalten nachstehend einen Diskussions-Vorschlag der EU-Vertretung der Bundesarbeitsgemeinschaft der Freien Wohlfahrtspflege (BAGFW).^{1 2}

¹ BAGFW: rue de Pascale 4-6, B-1040 Brüssel. Tel: +32-2-230 4500. Fax: +32-2-230 5704.

² E-mail: euvertretung@pophost.eunet.be

Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

EU-Vertretung BAGFW-Bonn

rue De Pascale 4-6
B-1040 Brüssel

T +32 2 230 45 00
F +32 2 230 57 04

e-mail:
euvertretung@pophost.eunet.be

Diskussions-Vorschlag
der Bundesarbeitsgemeinschaft der Freien Wohlfahrtspflege (BAGFW) zum Entwurf einer EU- Grundrechtscharta

Artikel

Recht auf Bürgerdialog und Grundsicherung

- (1) Jeder Mensch in der Europäischen Union hat ein Recht auf gesellschaftliche Partizipation (Bürgerdialog) und auf Schutz vor Armut und Ausgrenzung (Grundsicherung).
- (2) Der Bürgerdialog wird nach den Prinzipien der Solidarität und Subsidiarität auf lokaler, regionaler, nationaler und europäischer Ebene insbesondere durch die Zusammenarbeit mit den Sozialpartnern, Nichtregierungsorganisationen und Wohlfahrtsverbänden als Akteuren der Bürgergesellschaft gewährleistet
- (3) Die Grundsicherung beinhaltet das Recht auf ein sozio-kulturelles Existenzminimum in allen sozialrechtlichen Regelungen. Dazu gehört das Recht auf Inanspruchnahme sozialer Dienste, die unter Mitwirkung von Freiwilligen von den Sozialpartnern und von Wohlfahrtsverbänden als dem Gemeinwohl verpflichtete Akteure des Sozialschutzes und als Träger gemeinnütziger Einrichtungen und Dienste angeboten werden.

Begründung :

Die Bürger müssen mehr Vertrauen in den europäischen Einigungsprozess gewinnen. Die weltweit zu beobachtende, sich weiter öffnende Kluft zwischen Arm und Reich sowie die damit einhergehende Beschäftigungskrise erfordert neue Wege der Bekämpfung von Armut und Ausgrenzung. Nur so kann den Ängsten vor der Globalisierung im allgemeinen und vor der Erweiterung der EU im besonderen Rechnung getragen werden. Das europäische Sozialmodell muss weiter entwickelt werden. Die nach dem gegenwärtigen Stand bereits Ende 2000 von der EU zu beschließende Grundrechtscharta muss deshalb auch soziale Rechte beinhalten.

Für das neu einzuführende Recht auf Bürgerdialog muss die Zusammenarbeit mit den Sozialpartnern, Nichtregierungsorganisationen und Wohlfahrtsverbänden als Akteuren der Bürgergesellschaft gewährleistet werden, und zwar auf lokaler, auf regionaler, auf nationaler und auf europäischer Ebene. Nur durch ausreichende Gewährleistung gesellschaftlicher Partizipation kann das Demokratieprinzip nachhaltig gesichert werden. Dabei müssen die Prinzipien der Subsidiarität und der Solidarität beachtet werden.

Es muss ein Recht auf ein sozio-kulturelles Existenzminimum in allen sozialrechtlichen Regelungen eingeführt werden. Entsprechend Art. 14 der Europäischen Sozialcharta muss das auch ein Recht auf Inanspruchnahme sozialer Dienste beinhalten. Die Zusammenarbeit mit den Sozialpartnern und mit Wohlfahrtsverbänden als Träger sozialer Einrichtungen und Dienste (vgl. Maastrichter Erklärung Nr. 23 zur «Zusammenarbeit mit den Wohlfahrtsverbänden»), die den Beitrag der freiwilligen Dienste zur Entwicklung der sozialen Solidarität nutzen (vgl. Amsterdamer Erklärung Nr. 38 zu «freiwilligen Diensten»), entspricht in besonderer Weise den in Art. 136 des EG-Vertrages (Amsterdamer Fassung) verankerten Zielen der europäischen Sozialpolitik.

Bonn, den 16. Februar 2000

Soscha Gräfin zu Eulenburg BAGFW-Präsidentin

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 8 March 2000 (10.03)
(OR. fr)*CHARTE 4153/00*CONTRIB 40*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union

Please find enclosed the opinion of the Committee of the Regions, adopted by the Committee on 16 February 2000.

COM-Inst.Aff./008

Brussels, 28 February 2000

OPINION

of the Committee of the Regions

of 16 February 2000

on the "Process of drawing up a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union"

The Committee of the Regions,

HAVING REGARD TO the decision of the Bureau of 15 September 1999 to draw up, in accordance with the fifth paragraph of Article 265 of the Treaty establishing the European Community, an opinion on the subject, and to instruct the Commission for Institutional Affairs to prepare the Committee's work on the subject;

HAVING REGARD TO the draft opinion adopted by the Commission for Institutional Affairs on 27 October 1999 (rapporteurs: Mr BORE (UK, PSE) and Mrs du GRANRUT (F, PPE));

WHEREAS the European Council feels there is a need, at the present stage in the development of the Union, to establish a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (Annex IV of the Presidency Conclusions of the Cologne European Council on 3 and 4 June 1999) ;

WHEREAS the Convention to draft a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union was set up on 17 December 1999, adopted the following opinion at its 32nd plenary session of 16 and 17 February 2000 (meeting of 16 February 2000):

*
* * *

1. General comments

1.1 The Committee of the Regions has always stressed the need to strengthen citizenship and participatory democracy in the European Union, and the importance of formulating the rights of European citizens to attain this objective; it takes the view that, as the representative of regional and local authorities - the bodies which are closest to the citizens - and as the guarantor of the subsidiarity principle, it should make its contribution to drawing up the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the citizens of the European Union.

1.2 Basic rights constitute the bedrock of a society based on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental liberties and the rule of law, as enshrined in the constitutional traditions which are common to the Member States.

The European Union's capacity to help build a society which corresponds to these aspirations largely depends on citizens claiming these rights - i.e. accepting them and above all exercising them.

1.3 The Committee of the Regions recognises the fast-changing character of the European Union and the growing challenges which it faces at the beginning of the 21st century. The last four decades have seen the gradual development of the European Union. Developing in several phases, an increasing number of European countries have pooled their resources and achieved together a very significant degree of economic growth, social stability and political harmony, without managing to generate the sense of commonality among the citizens of Europe needed to realise the full potential of a social and political Europe which guarantees fundamental rights.

The last fifteen years have seen an enormous acceleration of economic integration with the development of the single European market and a common European economic area. It is due to be further accelerated by the creation in 1999 and putting into circulation in 2002 of the single currency, the Euro.

1.4 A number of steps have been taken towards greater social cohesion and increased political cooperation. These have found expression in the establishment and development of new European institutions such as a directly elected Parliament and the Committee of the Regions and in the introduction of European-wide social and civil guarantees.

At the Council of Europe's initiative, a European Convention on Human Rights was drawn up, allowing for cases to be brought, and there is a European Social Charter which can be used for reference, but without the right to resort to legal action in the event of non-compliance.

It had been envisaged that the European Union as such would be a signatory of the European Convention on Human Rights. This is now excluded by Opinion 2/94 of the European Court of Justice, dated 28 March 1996, which states that this would involve the Community in a distinct international institutional system, that it would introduce all the provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights into the Community legal system, and finally that at the present stage of Community law the European Union does not have the powers to accede to the Convention.

1.5 Up to now, fundamental rights with respect to acts of sovereignty of the Community institutions have been safeguarded in the first place by the European Court of Justice. At an early stage, the Court of Justice established the binding force of fundamental rights as unwritten principles of law at EU level too. The Treaty bases for safeguarding fundamental rights in the EU were expanded and strengthened by the Maastricht and Amsterdam Treaties. The Treaty of Amsterdam, signed on 2 October 1997 and inaugurated on 1 May 1999, represents an important stage in the consolidation of the fundamental rights (cf. Article 6(2) of the consolidated Treaties). However, these wider issues have lagged behind the developments in the economic area.

Moreover, while the Treaty reaffirms the commitment of the Union to fundamental rights, it includes gaps and inconsistencies with regard to the guarantee of these rights or of those linked to the objectives set out.

Acknowledging the existence of these gaps and inconsistencies provides an opportunity to correct them and arrive at a clear, unequivocal text on the basic rights of European citizens and the ways to guarantee them.

1.6 The 1990s have seen signs of greater citizen uncertainty about these developments towards European integration. These have been reflected most recently in the very low turnout for the elections to the European Parliament in June 1999. A quickening in the pace of economic and financial integration, combined with a lessening of confidence by citizens in European institutions, represents a dangerous scenario for the future of the European Union. It requires swift action to bring the social, political and cultural needs of citizens into correspondence with the changing economic realities. This makes the call for a Charter of Fundamental Rights for European citizens all the more important and urgent. However, to address the issue of a lack of public confidence, this Charter needs to be a simple, straightforward, easily understood document, free from the bureaucratic and legalistic jargon that often mars formal constitutional documents.

At a time when the Treaties of Maastricht and Amsterdam have granted new powers to the European Community, giving rise to wider responsibilities in terms of fundamental rights for the Community, and when the Community has chosen not to subscribe to the European Convention on Human Rights, it seems urgent for the Community to take up a clear position on the basic rights which it wishes to see guaranteed to citizens of the Union, following from the scope of its action.

The Committee of the Regions is of the view that the incorporation of these rights into European Union Treaties would give a clear indication of Member States' commitment to building a Union based on the values of liberty, equality and solidarity.

The Committee points out that historically declarations of citizens' rights are preambles to Constitutions and have their raison d'être in them, as the basis of the powers needed for the exercise of those rights.

The Committee stresses the constitutional value of the Charter because it feels that the process of drawing up a charter of rights cannot and must not be separated from the institutional reform to be undertaken by the next Intergovernmental Conference.

2. The content of the Charter

The Charter of Fundamental Rights for citizens of the European Union must cover three fields: individual rights, economic, social and cultural rights, and civil and political rights.

The first field should cover the basic rights covered by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and more specifically by the European Convention on Human Rights.

2.1 Rights linked to the person

- Right to life, right not to be subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment.
- Right not to be subjected to slavery, servitude or forced labour, right to freedom of movement.
- Right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, freedom of expression and information.
- Right to a proper civil or penal trial.
- Right to privacy regarding private life, personal data, correspondence and home life.
- Right to housing, right to property and to respect for property.
- Right to health protection.

2.2 Economic, social and cultural rights

- Right to work, to freely negotiated working conditions, to a fair wage, to a reasonable length of notice of termination of employment, to appropriate vocational guidance, training and re-training.
- Right to freedom of movement and establishment for workers and to equality of treatment with workers of the country concerned.
- Right to equality of opportunity and treatment, without discrimination based on race, sex, colour, ethnic, national or social origin, culture, language, religion, political beliefs, family situation, sexual orientation, age or disability.
- Right to set up trade union organisations and right to collective bargaining, information, consultation, and participation for decisions affecting workers' interests.
- Right to social security, social and medical assistance, and the benefit of social services.
- Right to education, right to freedom to choose an occupation and right to continuing vocational training.
- Rights linked to economic and entrepreneurial activity: right to property, right of competition, right to conclude contracts, etc.

2.3 Civil and political rights

- Right to vote in local and European Parliament elections for non-nationals from other EU countries in the Member State where they are resident.
- Right to set up European political parties, right of petition, association and demonstration.
- Right to local democratically constituted decision-making bodies.
- Right to check on legality of administrative action.
- Right of minorities to protection for their religion, language and culture.
- Right to equal opportunities of women and men in all decision-making fields.

2.4 Clearly, these rights cover a very broad canvas. The crucial task is to make them meaningful and practical, so that they give people a clear sense of the rights they enjoy across the European Union as a whole.

It is not enough to define rights. The principle of their justifiability must be established and appropriate access to national courts and the European Court of Justice defined or clarified, to ensure that rights can be exercised in practice.

2.5 As well as detailing these rights, the Charter should contain, as appropriate, complementary clauses expanding on particular aspects. This opinion from the Committee of the Regions wishes to highlight a number of areas where this is felt to be necessary.

2.5.1 In an increasingly multi-cultural, multi-racial, multi-ethnic European Union equal opportunities is a "horizontal theme" which cuts across a number of these rights. Thus, the Bill of Rights should guarantee the right to equality of opportunity and treatment without any distinction of race, ethnic, national or social origin, language, religion, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, age or disability.

2.5.2 In the light of the conclusions of the Tampere European Council on 15 and 16 October 1999 and its resolutions on the integration of third country nationals, the Committee of the Regions believes that the body responsible for drawing up the Charter of Fundamental Rights should examine the issue of whether long-term residents should be granted a set of rights that resemble as closely as possible those of EU citizens.

2.5.3 The right to a fair, public hearing needs to be reinforced by the creation of common legal standards and a common sense of justice throughout the European Union. Given the huge and growing degree of travel within the European Union for work, leisure and tourism, a set of common standards to ensure a common level of justice and fairness should be applicable across all EU Member States. We give two examples: a guarantee that effective legal advice and where necessary, language interpretation services are available for EU citizens arrested outside their home Member State; the establishment of a common system of European bail so that people are not arrested and held on remand in cells in another country for lengthy periods.

2.5.4 Finally, with regard to the rights of private individuals, the new charter of rights needs to recognise the contemporary reality of patterns of divorce, separation and remarriage within modern European society. The new charter should make clear the rights of mothers and fathers to have fair and equitable access to their children in the event of divorce and/or separation; and indeed the rights of children to be able to see both of their parents if they so wish on a regular basis.

2.5.5 The Charter of Fundamental Rights must also address questions related to new areas such as the knowledge society, environmental changes or biotechnology.

2.6 Beside these four specific areas where the introduction of the Charter of Fundamental Rights into European law will give clear civil and social rights to residents of the Union and help to match the growing common European economic space with a complementary social, civic and political space, the Committee of the Regions wishes to stress three issues related to European citizenship.

2.6.1 The Charter will enable each national of an EU Member State to identify his specific European citizenship as involving new rights and expressing membership of the new entity known as the European Union.

European citizenship is a major challenge for the European Union; it is not an alternative to national citizenship; it is at once complementary, unique and resolutely political.

For the Committee of the Regions the Charter of Fundamental Rights is the foundation of European citizenship.

2.6.2 The Committee of the Regions takes the view that the fundamental rights have a constitutional value, enabling individuals who enjoy them to appeal to the relevant courts, where appropriate national courts, the Council of Europe's Court of Human Rights and the Court of Justice of the European Communities, every time such a right is threatened.

The Committee of the Regions considers that fundamental rights need to be effectively guaranteed within the European Union, within a framework that ensure that citizens will have recourse to appropriate legal remedies.

2.6.3 The Charter of Fundamental Rights should therefore reiterate in some form the principles of local self-government as set out in Article 3 of the Council of Europe's Charter of Local Self-Government.

2.6.4 The fundamental rights therefore have an essential political dimension, because they link the democratic basis of political society with its limitation by the recognition of citizens' rights.

The Committee of the Regions is convinced that this right of participation in public life, exercised first and foremost by electing local authorities, is the first and indispensable link in a chain of political responsibilities in which the citizen must participate and feel involved.

Once the citizen feels a part of the chain of power emanating from him and extending to the summit of the European Union, he will accept the constraints of the "res-publica" and the decisions of those whom he has entrusted with it.

The fundamental rights thus lay the basis for participatory democracy, which respects the citizen's power and that of the various levels of authority to which he delegates his power.

2.6.5 As regards social and economic rights, the principle of subsidiarity needs also to be taken into account, given the different social, economic and legal structures within the Member States.

3. The future process

3.1 European Union leaders have agreed to the proposal for the drawing up of a Charter of Fundamental Rights. The preparation of the Charter is the responsibility of a working group made up of representatives of the governments of the Member States, a person appointed by the Commission President, MEPs and national parliamentarians. The Committee of the Regions is to be consulted in this procedure and has been invited to speak to the Convention, but it believes that it should be more fully involved and be given observer status.

In compliance with the subsidiarity principle, the Convention advocated by the European Council for drawing up the charter should be wide enough to allow every level concerned, that is Europe, the Member States and local and regional authorities, to obtain a hearing for their views on the content of the European Charter of Fundamental Rights and in particular enable the public to express views and have access to information prior to decisions being taken by Europe and the Member States.

3.2 The proposal to develop a Charter of Fundamental Rights is an important step forward by the European Union. The COR intends to participate fully in this process and to take forward the ideas contained within this opinion into that wider forum. The COR representatives will highlight the main themes in this opinion during the forum's deliberations. The COR does not rule out drawing up a further position which could supplement and clarify the opinion in the light of the work of the Convention responsible for drawing up the draft Charter of Fundamental Rights to be submitted to the European Council in Nice in December 2000. At the same time they will stress the importance for the final document not only to be incorporated within the EU Treaties, but also to be produced as a stand-alone document highlighting the key elements that form Europe's bill of political, social and civil rights.

4. Conclusion

4.1 The European Union is very much at a watershed in its development. It is vitally important that urgent steps are taken to involve the public in decision-making so as to boost public confidence in both European institutions and the European Union as a whole. Making clear, in very practical and straightforward terms, the key economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights which the Union guarantees to all of its members is the urgent task. The development of a Charter which gives expression to a citizens' and people's Europe, which will complement the common economic space which is currently being developed, is the way forward. This should be the clear goal and objective of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. That is the task which the Committee of the Regions and its representatives will argue for in the months ahead.

4.2 The Committee of the Regions comes out firmly in favour of a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the citizens of the European Union, which will give the Union homogeneous, coherent Community law with constitutional value within which these rights may be effectively exercised.

4.3 Thus the European Union, governed by law and based on adherence to common values which are legally guaranteed, will be enshrined in that form in the next Treaty on European Union.

Brussels, 16 February 2000

The President
of the Committee of the Regions

The Acting Secretary-General
of the Committee of the Regions

Jozef Chabert

Vincenzo Falcone

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPEENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 14 mars 2000CHARTE 4155/00*CONTRIB 41*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution intitulée "Convention européenne de protection contre la violence et le harcèlement raciste" soumise par M. Joël Zylberberg, psychoanalyste, expert devant les tribunaux Belges. ^{1 2}

¹ M. Joël Zylberberg, Avenue de l'Uruguay, 20, B-1000 Bruxelles. Tél: +32-2-660 85 84.

² Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

TRAVAUX CONÇUS ET DIRIGES PAR
JOËL ZYLBERBERG,
PSYCHANALYSTE, EXPERT DEVANT LES TRIBUNAUX BELGES.

CONVENTION EUROPEENNE

DE PROTECTION CONTRE LA VIOLENCE ET

LE HARCELEMENT RACISTE

Joël Zylberberg
Avenue de l'Uruguay, 20
1000 Bruxelles
Tél. : 00332 - 660.85.84

TABLE DES MATIERES GENERALE

PREMIERE PARTIE : ETUDE DE LA NATURE DU RACISME

« RACISME : LORSQUE L'ENFER C'EST LES AUTRES, LE MIROIR SE MEUT EN MOUROI ... »

	Pages
1. INTRODUCTION	9
2. ETUDE DE LA NATURE REELLE DU RACISME	11
3. ANALYSE CRITIQUE DU RACISME, DE LA NATURE DE SES PROPOS A SA LOGIQUE INTERNE	21
4. CONCLUSIONS PROVISOIRES :
A) ANALYSE CRITIQUE DES MECANISMES D'EVOLUTION DE L'IDEE RACISTE
B) PASSAGE DU NIVEAU INDIVIDUEL AU NIVEAU GROUPAL	25
5. INTRODUCTION AU PROJET DE CONVENTION	30
6. EXPOSE DES MOTIFS PRESIDANT A LA REDACTION DE LA CONVENTION EUROPEENNE EN MATIERE DE VIOLENCES ET DE HARCELEMENT RACISTE	35

DEUXIEME PARTIE : PROJET DE CONVENTION EUROPEENNE

PREAMBULE	43
PARTIE I : DISPOSITIONS GENERALES
Section 1 : définitions et notions.....	45
Section 2 : énoncé des principes.....	45
Section 3 : description de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste et de ses composantes	47

Section 4 : les circonstances aggravant la peine de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste.....	50
Section 5 : l'imprescriptibilité de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste.....	53
PARTIE II : DISPOSITIONS PENALES
Section 1 : La répression de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste
A. Commise à l'égard des personnes ou des corps constitués.....	53
B. Commise à l'égard des propriétés.....	57
C. Les organisations, groupements et associations racistes.....	58
Section 2 : La répression de l'abstention coupable face à la violence raciste.....	60
PARTIE III : DISPOSITIONS CIVILES	61
PARTIE IV : EFFETS DE LA CONVENTION	62
PARTIE V : PROCEDURE	64
PARTIE VI : DISPOSITIONS FINALES	65
DEVELOPPEMENTS	66-78

1. INTRODUCTION

Si le politique ou le législateur est appelé à prendre position au sujet du racisme il est primordial qu'il prenne le temps d'étudier, une bonne fois pour toute, la nature de ce qu'il prétend traiter avant de s'exprimer !

C'est trop souvent par méconnaissance, qu'il recourt à des arguments paralogiques permettant au racisme de se développer tout en étant apparemment combattu.

Il serait sain que nos dirigeants prennent le temps de s'interroger sur l'existence même du racisme au sein de la société en tant que révélateur de leur méconnaissance des mécanismes qui le sous-tendent.

Car, au-delà des discours creux, personne ne semble disposé à établir le constat paradoxal suivant, comme point de départ de l'absolue priorité à devoir le combattre sous un autre angle : LE RACISME CROIT PAISIBLEMENT GRACE A LA DEMOCRATIE. Les rares esprits brillants de ladite démocratie qui ont vaguement perçu le phénomène, en ont conclu, par une erreur de raisonnement supplémentaire, qu'il fallait incriminer à la publicité que l'on faisait indirectement au racisme en le traitant, la cause de ce paradoxe. Cet « argument » les conduisit, tout naturellement, à la super conclusion que seul le SILENCE pouvait combattre le racisme.

En extrapolant à peine, dans la voie de ce discours, le seul remède contre le racisme serait feindre de l'ignorer ! N'oublions jamais qu'il est autant à craindre du silence des pantoufles que du bruit des bottes !

Il n'est que trop significatif qu'il faille pousser le raisonnement adopté par nombre de démocraties, presque jusqu'à la caricature, pour qu'il révèle l'exacte nature de ce qu'il renferme. La démonstration qui précède illustre combien, laissé en l'état, il donne bonne conscience à ceux qui l'adoptent, puisqu'il ne crache son paradoxe que si on le presse au-delà de sa logique apparente.

Or la seule conclusion logique, à laquelle ce paradoxe devrait amener tout esprit en alerte, est que si le racisme croît lorsqu'on le combat c'est parce que le remède n'est pas adapté au mal.

Cette bavure découle de l'ignorance de la nature EXACTE du mal. Il est donc vital pour notre société de reprendre l'étude du phénomène à la base et d'en dégager, à partir de ces nouvelles données, des moyens adaptés et par conséquent efficaces à combattre ce fléau. CE N'EST QU'A CE PRIX QUE L'ON CONSTATERA QUE LE SEUL MILIEU OU LE RACISME NE PEUT CROITRE C'EST LA DEMOCRATIE JUSTEMENT ! Il serait temps que le racisme sache que le glas sonnera pour lui le jour où la démocratie sortira de sa position frileuse et somnolente à son égard. Le paradoxe naît de ce que les moyens ne sont pas adaptés à la nature du phénomène et non du combat en lui-même.

* *

*

2. ETUDE DE LA NATURE REELLE DU RACISME

LE RACISME EST L'EXPRESSION D'UN TROUBLE PSYCHIQUE !

En tant que tel, le racisme n'est que la partie apparente d'un iceberg, alors ne faisons pas comme l'idiot qui, lorsqu'un doigt pointe vers la lune, regarde le doigt !

En fait, le racisme est l'expression, l'extériorisation, non d'une opinion mais de l'arrêt du développement mental de l'individu qui en est porteur, au stade de l'enfant confronté à la découverte de l'autre et par conséquent à la prise de conscience de lui-même. LE RACISTE EST MENTALEMENT UN ENFANT DANS UN CORPS D'ADULTE.

Pour bien mesurer la portée de cet éclairage il nous faut faire référence à l'évolution du petit d'homme en général ce qui permettra de mieux cerner en quoi le racisme est la conséquence d'une évolution individuelle pathologique.

Qu'il nous soit fait crédit par le lecteur, jusqu'à ce qu'il atteigne la fin de ce paragraphe, que le développement qui va suivre s'inscrit dans la substantifique moelle de notre explication et n'est, en aucune façon, une digression de « psy. » en manque d'interprétation sauvage à propos de tout et n'importe quoi. L'effort consenti par le lecteur à ce stade de notre développement le positionnera sur un plan tel, qu'au terme de cet article, il n'aura plus le regard fixé sur le doigt mais bien vers la lune !

Dans l'histoire de tout être humain, la prise de conscience de son identité n'est pas un acquis depuis la naissance, mais est le fruit d'un long processus maturatif que l'on peut, pour les besoins de la démonstration, scinder en quatre étapes :

PREMIERE ETAPE :

Avant sa naissance tout un chacun préexiste pour ceux qui vont le concevoir et est le fruit d'un désir. Ses géniteurs le créent en lui ayant attribué une place pour qu'il puisse advenir. Pendant la grossesse on l'imagine, on lui parle, on lui aménage son espace, on lui attribue un nom... En fait, depuis l'idée de la conception jusqu'à la naissance, ce qui préside à l'histoire de tout être, qui aura ou non la chance d'exister à ses propres yeux un jour, est le résultat plus ou moins heureux de la séquence synthétisée ci-dessus. Le bon déroulement de cet enchaînement fait de la naissance l'aboutissement d'une première étape de l'évolution de l'être et non son début.

Le bébé naissant dans un tel contexte est comparable à la pièce maîtresse manquante d'un puzzle dont les contours sont parfaitement définis par les pièces qui l'entourent et qui n'a plus qu'à prendre place à l'endroit qui l'attend, complétant ainsi le tout conçu pour lui et lui donnant sens. Un tel bébé, désiré, attendu et reconnu trouvera dans son entourage la sécurité nécessaire pour poursuivre son évolution vers notre deuxième étape.

DEUXIEME ETAPE :

Elle s'étend en gros sur les huit à dix premiers mois de la vie. Elle devient visible à partir d'un zoom arrière effectué au départ de la première où elle apparaît comme l'englobant. La future notion de conscience de soi s'inscrit dans une continuité ou dans un chaos, selon que cette étape prolonge harmonieusement ou non la précédente.

Elle comprend cette période où le bébé et l'entourage interagissent avec plus ou moins de bonheur pour répondre le plus adéquatement possible à un compromis entre la place que le bébé prend, tant par sa présence physique que par l'éveil de sa personnalité, et la place que l'entourage, de par la personnalité des gens qui le composent, est prêt à lui consentir en fonction de l'image qu'il avait de lui avant sa naissance.

En d'autres termes, la poursuite du développement normal d'un petit d'homme dépend de la délicate résultante entre lui et :

- 1° la place que les membres de son entourage lui donnaient à l'intérieur d'eux-mêmes avant sa naissance
- 2° La place que les membres de son entourage lui donnent depuis sa naissance.
- 3° Sa présence physique réelle
- 4° Ses traits de caractère innés.

En résumé, à cette étape, l'enfant reçoit ou non une place effective dans le monde aux yeux des autres alors qu'il ne sait pas qui il est.

Il existe pour les autres alors qu'il n'a pas conscience d'exister à ses propres yeux !

Cette étape peut être comparée à l'existence, pour l'enfant, d'une continuation, sur le plan psychique, de la vie intra-utérine, où il baignait dans un milieu qui subvenait à tous ses besoins.

Du point de vue de l'enfant, à ce stade, le degré de différenciation entre lui et les autres est quasi nul. Vue sous l'angle qui nous intéresse, la fin de cette période se signale par un changement d'attitude qu'adoptera l'enfant vis-à-vis des personnes ne faisant pas partie de son entourage direct, ce qui témoignera d'un cap dans l'acquisition d'un nouveau degré de différenciation.

TROISIEME ETAPE :

L'enfant adopte une attitude de retrait, voire de peur, lorsqu'il est mis en présence d'êtres qui ne lui sont pas familiers, alors qu'avant, il ne manifestait aucune différence de comportement, quelle que fût la nature de celui en présence duquel on le mettait.

Or, on constate que les manifestations de peur sont d'autant plus intenses que l'enfant n'a pas pu développer des liens positifs puissants avec les membres de son entourage proche.

En d'autres termes, la place que l'enfant va donner à l'existence de l'autre, alors qu'il ne sait toujours pas lui-même qui il est, est d'autant plus facile à intégrer qu'il aura évolué dans un milieu où il possédait une place aux yeux des siens.

Réciproquement, il va rejeter l'existence de l'autre à l'image du rejet dont il fut victime !

La compréhension de cette étape est capitale pour la suite de nos propos car elle lie la manière dont un bébé réagit vis-à-vis d'un autre à la manière dont on a agi vis-à-vis de lui antérieurement.

La précocité de cette loi (nous parlons des premiers mois de la vie !) devrait retenir toute l'attention du lecteur car, comme il le pressent, du moins l'espérons-nous, elle contribue grandement à définir ce qui plus tard ne donnera lieu, pour certains, qu'à une expression parmi d'autres d'une opinion « démocratiquement » respectable et qui s'appellera LE RACISME ! !

Il manque encore toutefois quelques chaînons à notre démonstration pour que son analyse soit limpide.

Que traduit l'apparition de ce comportement chez l'enfant ?

- Primo, que le bébé a atteint un degré de maturité suffisant lui permettant d'accéder à un niveau de discrimination où il prend conscience qu'il existe une différence entre les individus (ce qui n'était pas perçu auparavant !).

Ceci conduit à la création de deux classes d'individus : d'une part ceux qui lui sont proches et donc ses familiers auxquels il sourit et qui le font rire et d'autre part, ceux qui lui sont éloignés et donc étrangers et qui lui font peur et pleurer.

- Secundo, que c'est par la présence des autres (compris comme le reste du monde moins son entourage), que le bébé va acquérir la notion complémentaire des siens. La prise de conscience de l'identité des siens n'est possible, en tant que forme consciente, que parce que le degré de sa maturité lui fait d'abord apparaître le reste des individus comme le fond.

La forme ne se détache et donc n'existe que grâce au fond : avant lui tout est uniforme ! Rien ne se détache de rien, tout est interchangeable (lui, les autres, le monde, le dedans, le dehors). Puisque rien n'a de statut propre, rien n'existe ! En conséquence, et alors que le bébé n'a toujours pas conscience de son identité propre, c'est par la pertinente information que lui apporte, sans le vouloir, l'étranger à son entourage, qu'il va pouvoir ressentir un lien d'appartenance liant les individus distincts de son milieu.

En d'autres termes la conscience de l'existence des autres étrangers est la manifestation PREMIERE, NECESSAIRE à ce que la conscience de l'existence des autres proches puisse advenir !

- Tertio, que le risque est que cette expérience princeps se vivant dans un premier temps sur fond d'anxiété et de peur, il n'assimile la conscience de l'autre à une expérience négative.

Le racisme part du tertio !! ...

Ici, deux cas de figure se présentent :

- a) soit le bébé a grandi dans un milieu favorable où il a eu sa place et l'expérience évolue positivement car le milieu, par son action, joue un rôle apaisant ; alors, le phénomène ne réactive pas la trace chez l'enfant d'un vécu semblable, rapporté à lui, et où il n'eut pas de place en tant qu'autre.
- b) Soit le milieu est défavorable et l'expérience réactive la souffrance liée à l'histoire propre du bébé. La peur s'enracinera alors et il aura tendance à percevoir l'existence de l'autre comme cause de cette peur.

La réaction « normale », de son point de vue, sera l'agressivité dirigée contre l'autre pour le détruire afin de supprimer, croit-il, la peur.

L'autre, de par son existence, devient un reproche vivant qui empêche de « vivre ».

Toute l'énergie de l'individu est mise au service de cette cause de survie et aucun moyen ne semble déplacé pour atteindre sa fin.

L'existence de l'autre devient son obsession et légitime tous ses actes dont la place de la parole à ce stade (huit à dix mois) est assez absente (bonjour la future démocratie !).

Il se sent victime de l'existence de l'autre et devient bourreau par défense ! ? ! ...

QUATRIEME ETAPE :

C'est celle de la prise de conscience de soi qui s'étend plus ou moins du huitième au vingt-quatrième mois.

A ce stade, le niveau de conscience de départ auquel se trouve le petit d'homme sera avantageusement illustré par l'expérience suivante : si vous mettez un enfant de cet âge devant un miroir il ne se reconnaîtra pas. Plus encore, il aura tendance à aller voir derrière le miroir et il imitera les gestes que sa propre image lui renvoie, de la même manière que mis face à un autre enfant du même âge, il imitera ses gestes. De cette expérience nous pouvons tirer l'enseignement suivant :

1°/ l'enfant n'a pas une conscience innée de lui puisqu'il vit son image comme si il s'agissait d'un autre enfant .

2°/ L'enfant qui a conscience de lui-même a acquis cette notion.

3°/ L'acquisition de la conscience de soi se fait par et grâce à l'existence d'un autre. En effet, c'est grâce à la perception globale du corps d'un enfant du même âge que lui, que le bébé va acquérir la conscience de l'entité du sien.

C'est donc à nouveau la présence mais cette fois-ci d'un pair, qui sera la condition nécessaire à l'évolution de la prise de conscience propre qu'aura l'enfant de lui-même. Dans cette évolution vers la prise de conscience de soi il y a d'abord confusion : le bébé se prend pour l'autre !

Quand l'autre se fait mal et pleure, le bébé qui n'a rien se met à pleurer. Quand il frappe sur l'autre, il dit que c'est lui qui est battu.

La source de l'identité propre d'un être est l'autre et ce n'est que dans un deuxième temps que l'enfant va pouvoir acquérir la conscience de lui-même à la première personne.

En bref, lors d'une évolution normale, pour qu'un individu puisse un jour se prendre pour lui-même, il faut qu'il se soit pris au départ pour un autre !

Il est également à noter que, à cette étape, l'enfant ne dit pas JE quand il parle de lui-même, mais il dit « IL » ! (ou il s'appelle par son prénom).

Cet indice linguistique supplémentaire prouve que la notion de conscience de soi n'est pas innée et que, même dans l'acquisition du langage, l'enfant adopte le point de vue de l'autre pour parler de lui !

Après cette synthèse de l'évolution normale chez tout individu, de la notion d'entourage familial et de la notion de prise de conscience de soi, nous allons enfin pouvoir analyser correctement la nature même du phénomène raciste.

Quels sont les ingrédients du propos raciste et leurs articulations ?

- 1°/ La peur de ce qui N'EST PAS FAMILIER rapport à un entourage connu et prétendument sécurisant. Sur le plan adulte, la notion de famille proche, existant vers plus ou moins huit mois, est devenue la notion de NATION et la seule identité possible est L'IDENTITE NATIONALE.
- 2°/ L'insécurité, engendrée par la présence d'étrangers n'ayant pas la même origine, est définie comme la CAUSE DE L'INSECURITE.
- 3°/ L'accroissement du sentiment de l'identité nationale est présenté comme le REMEDE à la peur et à l'insécurité.
- 4°/ Identifié comme la cause de la peur et de l'insécurité, l'étranger est donc bien un agresseur qui, n'étant pas chez lui sur la terre du raciste, est PAR NATURE hors la loi ! Toute réaction pour l'en chasser est donc assimilée à de la légitime défense, le raciste étant victime de l'agression que perpétue l'étranger par sa seule présence.
- 5°/ La résistance de l'étranger à rentrer chez lui justifie le recours à la violence devenue légitime. C'est dans un ultime effort de « respect » de l'étranger que le raciste le convie gentiment à disparaître de sa vue, faute de quoi la résistance que manifesterait l'étranger à reconnaître sa nature d'agresseur obligerait le raciste, bien malgré lui, à recourir à la violence légitime, institutionnalisée comme seul moyen de survie et étant décrite comme l'étape « malheureusement » nécessaire à pouvoir enfin vivre en paix entre gens de bien.

* *

* *

3. ANALYSE CRITIQUE DU RACISME, DE LA NATURE DE SES PROPOS A SA LOGIQUE INTERNE.

Le lecteur objectif qui nous aura suivi jusqu'à ce point ne pourrait qu'être frappé par la révélation de ce que la nature des propos racistes est identique en tous points à la nature des notions définissant l'évolution normale de tout être face à son environnement et face à la prise de conscience de lui-même (peur, insécurité...). Or, si l'évolution normale de ces étapes conduit un individu à vivre en harmonie avec les autres et avec lui-même, la reprise de ces mêmes notions par les racistes, avec comme but final l'élimination de « l'étranger », prouve que LE RACISME EST L'EXPRESSION D'UN CONFLIT INFANTIL NON RESOLU.

Qu'il n'est que la traduction, par des êtres psychologiquement immatures, d'une pathologie relationnelle dont l'origine se situe dans l'échec de l'évolution de la conscience de soi, ainsi que de celle de son rapport à l'entourage proche. C'est en effet L'ABSENCE d'un entourage proche et chaleureux, n'ayant offert aucune place à l'enfant qu'il fut, qui précipitera, par un DOUBLE RETOURNEMENT (1°/ de la famille sur le monde extérieur et 2°/ de son désespoir en agressivité), le futur raciste dans sa haine du non familial. Sa peur légitime, lors de ses premières expériences de contact avec l'étranger à sa famille, n'est pas adoucie par son milieu proche. Il va donc attribuer comme cause à sa peur la présence de l'autre.

Alors que cette peur n'est que l'indice d'une évolution normale et, comme nous l'avons décrit plus haut, ne devrait être que passagère, elle devient permanente par la carence du rôle tampon que devraient jouer ses parents proches à cet période cruciale.

La peur et l'insécurité exprimées par les racistes proviennent de cette période de leur évolution et N'A RIEN A VOIR AVEC L'EXISTENCE PRESENTE D'ETRANGERS POUR EUX. Si ce n'est que cette présence réactive le traumatisme infantile, ce qui les pousse doublement à souhaiter leur disparition !

C'est par un renversement que, adulte, le raciste idéalise la nation comme sa famille proche (cf. point 1 des propos), alors qu'enfant c'est justement sa famille proche, son entourage familial qui était carenciel par rapport à ce qu'il en attendait. Il faut bien comprendre qu'il est souvent psychiquement intolérable pour un être d'attribuer à des figures aussi fondamentales de son existence que sont son père ou sa mère la cause de son désespoir.

Voici pourquoi le premier renversement s'opère vers l'extérieur. L'intolérable, dû en réalité à l'absence d'une identité familiale sécurisante, ne vient plus de l'intérieur mais de l'extérieur à son monde ! Comme il a rejeté dehors le négatif, l'intérieur devient MAGIQUEMENT positif !

La dynamique du point deux des propos racistes (insécurité) est directement issue du même processus, et se doit d'idéaliser à ce titre l'identité nationale (assimilée au pôle positif interne) comme le creuset sécurisant, garant de l'apaisement de la peur citoyenne légitime face à l'étranger (assimilé au pôle négatif externe).

N'oublions pas que ce premier renversement va masquer à tout jamais la réalité et précipiter l'individu dans un monde de mensonges par rapport à lui-même, ouvrant la voie à la pathologie.

La source de l'intolérable se voyant à présent localisée à l'extérieur, le deuxième renversement va s'opérer et aura pour résultat de muer le désespoir interne en agressivité externe. Cette agressivité est dirigée vers celui dont la présence involontaire a révélé inconsciemment cette carence affective du milieu proche et qui peut, à présent, être consciemment identifié comme la source intolérable ! « C'est sa faute si tout ça est arrivé »... Voilà le point quatre des propos racistes qui montre le bout de nez : « l'étranger est la cause de la peur et de l'insécurité et est donc bien un agresseur » ! ?

Il devient « LOGIQUE », à partir de cette perception tronquée de la réalité, que c'est par sa nature que l'étranger est responsable du préjudice qu'il inflige au raciste. Que cette manière de ne pas comprendre qu'il l'agresse est irritante en soi ! Que tout ceci arme la légitime violence comme droit à la défense de sa survie ! ?...

Or, « l'étranger » d'aujourd'hui dans l'histoire du raciste ne comprend pas plus que celui d'hier, dans l'histoire de l'enfant qu'il fût, le rôle qu'on lui attribue. Sa présence, dans les deux cas, est involontaire et n'a, du chef de l'étranger, aucune intention destructrice à l'égard de quiconque.

Vécu à l'échelle de son drame personnel, tout ceci n'est que la résultante d'un double renversement, qu'adulte, il projettera sur la scène du monde, inconscient de sa méprise !

Le raciste va donc se mettre « légitimement » à battre l'étranger (point 5).

Tel l'enfant de plus ou moins huit à dix-huit mois qui dit être battu lorsqu'il bat, le raciste aura le vécu d'être la victime luttant pour sa survie face à l'agresseur étranger.

Or, justement, en voulant détruire l'autre, le raciste signe la pathologie de son évolution : rappelons-nous que le décours d'une évolution normale de la conscience de soi passe inmanquablement par un stade où l'autre est le référent qu'introjecte le petit enfant comme source à son identité. La négation de l'existence de l'autre conduit au fantasme d'auto-engendrement, qui plus tard chez le raciste, prendra la forme de sa xénophobie, ne lui réservant le droit de se reproduire qu'avec des individus appartenant au même « groupe ».

L'aboutissement de la logique interne du raciste lui impose de se perdre une deuxième fois, car, à l'image du traumatisme de son enfance où il refusa à l'autre d'être le support de son identité, ce qui l'empêcha d'acquérir une identité mature, il définit l'étranger comme destructeur et ne peut par conséquent pas voir en lui la source qui pourrait enfin le faire exister.

En refusant le miroir de lui-même qu'est tout être humain, le raciste meut son existence, ainsi que celle de sa civilisation, en mouvoir dont il rendra responsables ceux-là même qui étaient sa planche de salut !

* *
*

4 CONCLUSIONS PROVISOIRES :

A) ANALYSE CRITIQUE DES MECANISMES D'EVOLUTION DE L'IDEE RACISTE.

B) PASSAGE DU NIVEAU INDIVIDUEL AU NIVEAU GROUPEL.

Ce long développement fut rendu nécessaire parce que l'attitude de certains démocrates face au racisme nous semblait indigne. A présent, un peu mieux informés des racines profondes du racisme, nous espérons qu'ils auront quelques réserves à soutenir que le racisme est à considérer comme une opinion politique parmi d'autres qui, bien que ne recevant pas leur aval quant au fond, devrait jouir du droit à l'expression.

Nous espérons qu'au terme de notre analyse ces mêmes démocrates prendront conscience que le racisme est l'expression d'une pathologie relationnelle reflétant une immaturité psychologique et dont sont le siège des individus infantiles. Le racisme est la traduction d'une tentative inconsciente de solutionner un problème identitaire propre à l'individu.

IL N'Y A PAS DE PROJET SOCIAL DANS LE RACISME.

S'il regroupe des gens, ces derniers souffrent tous de la même pathologie c'est ce qui les unit ! Enfants enfermés dans des corps d'adultes, privés de maturité, ils adulent un chef qui pense à leur place. Cette configuration donnera au racisme la forme d'une PIEVRE : une « tête pensante » et des tentacules.

C'est dans cette structure que réside le vrai danger car si les adeptes du racisme pensent comme des enfants ils frappent comme des adultes !

Cet aspect illustre que le racisme ne peut recruter que chez des êtres immatures, décérébrés, qui forment corps autour de ce chef.

Or, si le racisme recrute c'est parce que la nature de son discours est pervers ! Il utilise les mots, la communication, non pour éveiller l'esprit des citoyens permettant que chacun d'entre eux devienne une tête pensante, capable de condamner tout propos portant atteinte à la dignité humaine, mais comme une pompe à vide destinée à faire disparaître en eux tout reste d'humanité.

A ce premier stade, le discours manipulateur du « chef » opère une illusion criminelle : il provoque le sentiment d'exister chez certains citoyens, au moment même où il les prive de leur droit à l'existence propre ! Il atteint son but suprême lorsqu'il a réussi à transformer les citoyens qui l'écoutent en morts-vivants.

Le racisme est un discours de mort qui a rendez-vous avec la mort, dont la survie dépend de cette unique tête pensante à laquelle ils adhèrent pour ne pas mourir une deuxième fois. Le paradoxe du racisme c'est que ses adhérents vont vouer fidélité et abnégation à celui-là même qui les a mis à mort. Le racisme est d'abord l'assassinat mental de ses adhérents.

Comme on le constate, la pieuvre du racisme n'a pas visage humain et ne respecte même pas la dignité de ceux qui « y adhèrent », puisqu'elle les prive de leur cerveau.

Or, l'idéal de la démocratie est la multiplication des têtes pensantes.

Il est capital que les citoyens prennent conscience de ce que le racisme est au sein de la démocratie comme une poudrière munie d'un système de mise à feu à retardement.

Prétendre qu'en parler c'est lui faire de la publicité, c'est mal en définir la nature. Il faut savoir que le racisme est comme la moisissure. Comme elle, mise à la lumière, elle se dessèche et ne peut se développer. Ce n'est que dans l'obscurité des esprits qui sommeillent qu'elle prend corps, alors que les projecteurs de l'information ne peuvent contribuer qu'à l'éveil des consciences.

L'histoire a prouvé que lorsque le racisme tente de s'ancrer ce n'était ni le fait de se boucher les oreilles ni celui de se cacher les yeux qui n'avait désamorcé ou empêché son explosion.

Le ferment du racisme est l'ignorance, la bêtise, les préjugés, la violence.

Démonter les mécanismes simplistes sur lesquels le racisme prend appui, ses raisonnements tronqués, ses manipulations, ses généralisations fallacieuses, ne peut que l'affaiblir en renforçant l'esprit critique des citoyens les rendant attentifs et actifs dans la lutte contre ce virus de la démocratie.

Ce changement d'attitude n'est envisageable que par une participation active des médias et des politiques qui, bien loin de se contenter du silence au pire ou d'une répercussion passive de l'information au mieux, adopteront une position critique et engagée mettant en évidence les mécanismes qui se prétendent invisibles et qui soutiennent l'architecture du racisme.

De plus, ne pas parler de l'existence d'une réalité qui ronge les entrailles de la démocratie c'est se rendre complice actif de son évolution par le consensus du silence en infantilisant les citoyens par une attitude paternaliste ou l'on décide de ce qu'il est bon ou non de leur divulguer.

Or, justement, c'est cette attitude de déresponsabilisation des citoyens qui contribue à en faire des citoyens irresponsables et vulnérables parce que faibles face à un discours de propagande visant à les faire agir comme un seul homme en les privant de tout esprit critique.

Le racisme ne peut que se briser s'il se heurte à des citoyens adultes et réfléchis dont on ne pourra noyauter la solidarité autour d'une idée simpliste et globalisante jetant l'anathème sur d'autres humains.

Le racisme est, rappelons-le, une pieuvre qui n'autorise qu'une tête pensante transformant le reste des citoyens en autant de tentacules décérébrées destinées à lui obéir aveuglément. Combien de citoyens conscients et informés sainement seraient candidats à ce destin ?

Ne pas parler du racisme c'est entretenir l'analphabétisme civique des citoyens.

N'oublions jamais que si l' Histoire se répète ce n'est pas parce qu'elle est un mauvais professeur mais parce qu'il n'y a pas d'élèves dans sa classe. Combattre le racisme en en parlant c'est permettre de remplir la classe de l'Histoire et donc contribuer à ce qu'elle ne se répète plus.

Or, les démocraties agissent trop souvent inconsciemment envers le racisme, comme le ferait un adulte vis-à-vis d'un enfant, ne lui prêtant pas plus d'intérêt ! Il faudrait pourtant à tout prix combattre le germe de l'idée raciste pour ne pas avoir à combattre ses conséquences.

Que les démocraties prennent garde à ce que laissant le racisme affirmer que l'enfer c'est les autres il ne les transforme en brasier !

* *
*
*

1. 5. INTRODUCTION AU PROJET DE CONVENTION

L'éclairage que nous avons apporté dans les pages précédentes ouvrent les portes à une toute nouvelle approche du racisme.

Peut être qu'à ce stade, certains lecteurs seraient encore habités par quelques scrupules à ôter au raciste le droit de recourir à quelques principes appliqués en démocratie tel l'exercice de «la liberté d'expression». ?!

A ceux là nous aimerions proposer la réflexion suivante : peut-on indéfiniment prétendre que le droit, démocratiquement acquis, d'exprimer une opinion puisse servir de cadre de référence à l'expression de contre-vérités consciemment sélectionnées et « savamment » articulées ? !

A) IL FAUT RESERVER L'EXERCICE DES LIBERTES DEMOCRATIQUES AUX SEULS DEMOCRATES

L'argumentation selon laquelle tout raciste en raison du fait qu'il vit en démocratie aurait droit à en revendiquer les privilèges doit être réfutée parce qu'elle est construite sur un sophisme.

La structure de ce sophisme est la suivante :

La démocratie permet la liberté d'opinion, le raciste vit en démocratie, donc le raciste a le droit à la liberté d'expression.

Le défaut de cette argumentation ressort si on affirme une fois pour toute que :

1°/ Si le raciste vit en démocratie il n'est pas démocrate

puisque l'opinion, dont il revendique le droit à l'expression, s'attaque à l'origine même de l'espèce dont il est issu et que

2°/ Par son attitude il se met lui-même hors de la démocratie.

On ne peut, par conséquent, concevoir logiquement que cette dernière lui accorde ses privilèges ou qu'il se permette de les revendiquer.

La position du raciste est léonine en ce qu' il avance en utilisant la démocratie comme masque exigeant les droits qu'elle offre sans en respecter les devoirs.

Tendant à considérer l'individu raciste comme un "super-citoyen", cette argumentation est de ce fait particulièrement dangereuse. Cette constatation peut être faite si on garde à l'esprit que la liberté d'expression n'a jamais été absolue, puisque tout système démocratique prévoit toujours d'en limiter l'exercice¹ et que le principe de limitation fait en quelque sorte intrinsèquement partie de cette liberté.

¹ A titre d'exemple de limite à l'exercice de la liberté d'expression, on peut citer les crimes de lèse-majesté ou les injures à magistrats.

On peut dès lors affirmer que prétendre ne pas pouvoir porter atteinte au droit que les individus racistes auraient à exercer leur liberté d'expression c'est vouloir ignorer que dans certains contextes des limites sont déjà posées. Les individus racistes auraient de ce fait l'exorbitant privilège d'une non-limitation absolue, sorte de "super-loi" pour "super-citoyens".

B) Par contre il faut utiliser les moyens de la démocratie pour condamner les individus racistes

Nous ne pouvons donner raison à ceux qui prétendent que le raciste, parce qu'il se met en dehors de la démocratie, ne peut bénéficier des mêmes garanties démocratiques pour se défendre.

Nous sommes dans un état de droit. Ce qui différencie l'état de droit de la barbarie qu'est le racisme c'est qu'il prévoit pour chacun le droit aux mêmes moyens pour se défendre.

Notre état se doit de condamner les individus racistes en utilisant les moyens que la démocratie donne à tout individu, dût-il avoir été irrespectueux de ses principes fondateurs.

Le jury populaire est l'une de ces garanties, éminemment démocratique, qui doit être maintenue au bénéfice de tout citoyen pour lequel ce procédé a été prévu.

L'établissement d'un jury a certes été prévu pour garantir l'exercice d'une liberté, mais n'a certainement jamais eu pour objectif de conférer une immunité absolue à celui qui en bénéficie. "Vue sous un autre angle que celui de la seule garantie, l'institution d'un jury pourrait être approchée sous l'angle d'un mécanisme auto-régulateur de l'exercice de la liberté d'expression.

Pour mieux illustrer notre propos faisons la comparaison entre les mécanismes d'auto-régulation que sont un jury populaire et une assemblée parlementaire lorsqu'elle décide de lever une immunité parlementaire.

Dans les deux cas, l'assemblée parlementaire comme le jury populaire sont une sorte de verrou de protection de l'espace de liberté.

Le dépassement de certaines limites qui encadrent l'exercice de la liberté ainsi protégée pourra donner lieu à la levée du verrou de protection pour permettre la sanction.

De la même manière, pourrait-on considérer que le jury initialement conçu comme mécanisme protecteur de la liberté d'expression puisse décider en fonction du caractère raciste d'une publication de lever le verrou de sa protection pour exercer une répression.

Pour justifier du renvoi des délits de presse à caractère raciste devant des tribunaux correctionnels, certains ont prétendu que l'atteinte portée à la dignité humaine par le propos raciste était telle qu'elle effaçait tout débat sur la liberté d'expression.

En réalité, comme nous venons déjà de le constater, l'atteinte à la dignité n'efface pas le débat sur la liberté mais articule la loi dans un autre esprit qui veut que ce qui protège le journaliste démocrate puisse également servir à condamner l'auteur de propos raciste.

On peut également souligner qu'à la notion de garantie telle qu'elle est rattachée à la liberté d'expression il doit également être ajoutée celle de responsabilité de la part du journaliste lorsqu'il décide de publier une information.

Si cette responsabilité n'est pas assumée en fonction de la nature de ce qu'il diffuse, la loi devra intervenir pour le sanctionner.

Avoir le droit ou le privilège de s'exprimer n'équivaut pas à donner la permission de dire n'importe quoi.

* *
*
*

6. EXPOSE DES MOTIFS PRESIDANT A LA REDACTION DE LA CONVENTION EUROPEENNE EN MATIERE DE VIOLENCES ET DE HARCELEMENT RACISTE

De nombreuses législations ont déjà vu le jour en matière de racisme, mais force est de constater que chacune d'entre elles traduit la même difficulté à cerner ce qu'elles tentent de combattre : racisme ou discrimination ?

Trop nombreux sont ceux qui se perdent dans l'idée que le racisme est une forme de discrimination, ce qui amène les différents projets de lois à dresser de véritables catalogues d'actes jugés discriminatoires sans nécessairement couvrir toutes les hypothèses et possibilités que les esprits pervertis par des idées racistes auront tôt fait de développer.

Exposer la différence entre ces concepts de racisme et de discrimination permet d'éviter l'écueil ci-dessus mentionné, mais surtout permet de briser le cercle vicieux que la confusion de ces deux notions engendre et qui a pour gravissime conséquence, qu'involontairement le législateur participe au renforcement de l'idéologie raciste en la consacrant même dans ces textes de loi !

Pour distinguer racisme et discrimination, partons de cette première constatation : le concept de discrimination peut donner lieu à des autorisations de la loi (discriminations positives) et n'est donc pas ipso facto punissable.

Le racisme lui, ne souffre d'aucune exception légale et ne trouve à s'exprimer qu'au mépris du principe de base qui assure la cohérence de l'espèce humaine à savoir l'unicité de la race rapportée au genre humain.

L'incohérence du propos raciste trouve son origine dans le fait que celui qui l'exprime énonce un jugement de valeurs sous la forme d'une hiérarchie.

Cependant, comme tout jugement suppose nécessairement qu'un point de comparaison serve de référence à ce que l'on évalue et QU'AU SEIN DU GENRE

HUMAIN AUCUNE AUTRE RACE QUE LA RACE HUMAINE N'EXISTE, cela

implique que celui qui exprime une pensée raciste ne peut que se situer en dehors de la seule race à laquelle lui comme nous tous appartenons.

Ce raisonnement démontre ce que la logique ne peut admettre, à savoir qu'un individu puisse prétendre se placer en dehors de ce qui le définit lui-même en tant qu'être humain.

EN INFERIORISANT CERTAINS GROUPES DE PERSONNES sous le couvert de leur race, L'AUTEUR DE TEL PROPOS RACISTE S'ATTAQUE EN REALITE NON SEULEMENT A LUI-MEME, PUISQU'IL ATTAQUE LA SEULE RACE QUE SON ESPECE COMPOSE, MAIS IL VISE EGALEMENT TOUTES LES AUTRES PERSONNES QUI EN FONT PARTIE, A SAVOIR L'HUMANITE TOUTE ENTIERE.

Le racisme EST l' injure suprême à la démocratie et à l'humanité toute entière.

Trop souvent pourtant, a t'on voulu considérer que seuls ceux contre qui des actes racistes étaient dirigés étaient concernés, sans se rendre compte en fait qu'en tant qu'hommes ce n'était pas eux mais nous tous qui étions visés.

Croire au droit à la liberté d'expression de ceux qui se placent en dehors de ce dont ils font en réalité partie c'est nécessairement se placer comme eux en dehors du seul groupe dont nous faisons tous partie et par de là participer à l'incohérence de leur système.

La position du raciste peut être comparée à celle d'une personne atteinte d'une maladie auto-immune. Dans ce cas, l'organisme ne reconnaît plus toutes ses parties constituantes comme un tout lui appartenant, mais se met à en combattre certaines, comme si elles lui étaient étrangères, ce qui le conduit à la limite à sa propre destruction.

Partant de cette idée de vie et de survie de notre société, il est essentiel de définir le principe de base de l'espèce humaine et des sociétés qu'elles composent :

"LA RACE EN TANT QUE CONCEPT RAPPORTE A L'ESPECE HUMAINE EST COMPRISE COMME UNE ENTITE INDIVISIBLE."

Ce postulat fait partie de notre propre définition en tant qu'être humain. Le nier revient donc à se nier en tant qu'homme.

L'individu ou le groupe d'individus qui conçoit la race humaine autrement que dans son acception d'unicité ne commet en réalité aucune discrimination puisque celle-ci exigerait pour avoir lieu que plusieurs races existent au sein du genre humain.

C'est de cette confusion entre les concepts de discrimination et de racisme qu'est née l'impossibilité des textes de loi de prohiber le premier sans involontairement consacrer le second.

En effet, l'affirmation dans un texte de loi, de ce qu'une discrimination pourrait exister si le critère de la race est avancé, serait la prohibition de la discrimination en tant que telle, ce qui consacrerait implicitement mais certainement l'existence d'au moins deux races, sans quoi l'existence de la discrimination que l'on dénoncerait n'est pas fondée...

Prétendre se placer dans le chef de celui qui discrimine pour énumérer les critères qu'il invoque et qu'on ne peut accepter ne nous fait pas sortir de cette incohérence.

C'est en cela que ce texte de convention est novateur, constructif et dynamisant.

Il part de la définition du concept de race rapporté à l'humain et énonce un principe qui est de nos jours scientifiquement reconnu et prouvé :

L'UNICITE ET L'INDIVISIBILITE DE LA RACE HUMAINE.

Par sa simple énonciation ce principe exclu nécessairement ce qu'il n'est pas.

Il permet au législateur de ne pas tomber dans le piège de l'énumération de ce qui ne peut être admis, pour laisser la seule place à ce qui l'est.

En conséquence, la définition du principe d'unicité ainsi formulé lui donne :

une portée universelle : ce qui permet de définir ceux qui n'y adhèrent pas de criminel envers l'humanité toute entière; une efficacité maximale : car tout défenseur d'une autre acception se trouvera confronté, face aux tribunaux, aux renversement de la charge de la preuve qu'il sera incapable de fournir s'assurant par voie de conséquence la condamnation.

Les dispositions civiles, reprises à la page 18 (Partie III) de la convention, complètent l'esprit de cette dernière en la mettant d'application dans la vie courante. Elles sensibilisent et responsabilisent chaque citoyen en plaçant à l'avant plan, lors de toute transaction, le facteur humain.

Ceci aura pour effet de créer une cohérence dans la société entre l'aspect fondateur de cette convention (aspect théorique) et sa mise en application. Chaque citoyen serait à la fois un partenaire actif et une sorte de courroie de transmission.

Il est historiquement avéré qu'aucun régime raciste une fois établi n'est démocratique. Il en va donc de la survie de la démocratie de tuer dans l'oeuf tout mouvement dont l'objectif, même masqué, comporte une atteinte à son intégrité. Dans cette veine le racisme est la priorité des priorités.

La future Charte Européenne des Droits Fondamentaux offrirait un siège idéal au principe de l'unicité de la race humaine et de son corollaire le droit de tout être humain au respect de son intégrité psychique.

Pour être efficace, il est impératif que cette charte soit de nature contraignante.

Le projet de convention devrait, quant à lui, figurer parmi les instruments de droit pénal européen destinés à sanctionner toute violation de ce principe.

* *
*

PROJET :

CONVENTION EUROPEENNE

DE PROTECTION CONTRE LA VIOLENCE ET

LE HARCELEMENT RACISTE

TABLE DES MATIERES

CONVENTION

Pages

PREAMBULE	34
PARTIE I : DISPOSITIONS GENERALES
Section 1 : définitions et notions.....	36
Section 2 : énoncé des principes.....	36
Section 3 : description de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste et de ses composantes	38
Section 4 : les circonstances aggravant la peine de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste.....	41
Section 5 : l'imprescriptibilité de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste.....	44
PARTIE II : DISPOSITIONS PENALES
Section 1 : La répression de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste
A. Commise à l'égard des personnes ou des corps constitués.....	44
B. Commise à l'égard des propriétés.....	47
C. Les organisations, groupements et associations racistes...	49
Section 2 : La répression de l'abstention coupable face à la violence raciste.....	50
PARTIE III : DISPOSITIONS CIVILES	51
PARTIE IV : EFFETS DE LA CONVENTION	52
PARTIE V : PROCEDURE	54
PARTIE VI : DISPOSITIONS FINALES	54
DEVELOPPEMENTS	55-66

Préambule

Considérant que les états membres de l'Union européenne ont confirmé dans le préambule de l'Acte Unique Européen leur détermination à promouvoir ensemble la démocratie en se fondant sur les droits fondamentaux reconnus dans leur Constitution, dans la Convention de Sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales, dans la Charte Sociale Européenne ainsi que dans le traité d'Amsterdam qui prévoit en son article 6 (ex article F) que «l'Union est fondée sur les principes de la liberté, de la démocratie, du respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, ainsi que de l'Etat de droit, principes qui sont communs aux Etats membres.»

Considérant que l'article 29 (ex article K.1) du traité d'Amsterdam prévoit que l'Union Européenne a pour objectif d'offrir aux citoyens un niveau élevé de protection dans un espace de liberté, de sécurité et de justice et qu'elle peut à cette fin élaborer une action commune aux états membres dans le domaine de la coopération policière et judiciaire en matière pénale, en prévenant le racisme et en luttant contre ce phénomène.

A cette fin, déterminés à faire respecter le principe de l'unicité de la race humaine en reconnaissant que toute doctrine de supériorité est scientifiquement fautive, universellement reconnue injustifiable en théorie comme en pratique, moralement condamnable, socialement dangereuse, et nécessairement fondée sur une acception de l'espèce humaine reconnue illégale par la présente Convention.

Convaincus que défendre, diffuser, prôner et faire la propagande de telles doctrines par le biais d'action, de diffamation ou d'injure constitue des abus de la liberté d'expression. Que de tels abus mettent en péril la dignité humaine et la société démocratique.

Affirmons que l'interdiction de la diffusion et de la propagande de telles doctrines est une des restrictions de la liberté d'expression qui "constituent des mesures nécessaires, dans une société démocratique, à la sécurité nationale, à l'intégrité territoriale et à la sûreté publique, à la défense de l'ordre et à la prévention du crime, à la protection de la santé ou de la morale, à la protection de la réputation ou des droits d'autrui..."²

Convaincus que l'existence de groupements ou d'associations dont l'objet est la défense, la diffusion et la propagande de telles doctrines est un danger pour la survie et la stabilité de toute démocratie et résolu à dissoudre tout groupement ou association qui aurait diffusé, prôné ou fait la propagande de telles doctrines et à condamner toute personne en raison de son appartenance à de tels groupements ou associations.

Sont convenus de ce qui suit :

² Convention de Sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales; Article 10§2.

PARTIE I : DISPOSITIONS GENERALES

Section 1 : définitions et notions

Article 1

La présente Convention réprime la violence raciste. Par violence raciste il y a lieu d'entendre : "toute menace de violence ou toute violence dans le cadre de laquelle les victimes sont "choisies", non en tant qu'individus, mais en tant que représentants de «communautés minoritaires [ou non] imaginées"³.

Article 2

La violence raciste doit être considérée comme un acte de cruauté mentale constitutif de violences psychiques. La cruauté mentale réside dans la menace de violence que renferme tout acte raciste et la contrainte morale qu'elle exerce sur la victime et les membres du «groupe» que la victime est sensée représenter.

Section 2 : énoncé des principes

Article 1

Les états parties reconnaissent l'unicité comme concept fondateur de toute référence à l'espèce humaine, que cette référence soit faite sur le plan individuel ou non.

Ils reconnaissent l'universalité de ce principe et déclarent que toute violation de ce principe est un crime qui sera réprimé par la présente convention sous la dénomination de « crime de harcèlement raciste ».

Article 2

³ Rob Witte, "Combattre la violence raciste et xénophobe en Europe" in Conseil de l'Europe, 1997;p. 13. "La nature et les causes de la violence raciste et xénophobe en Europe".

La seule acception légale du concept et du terme de race est celle qui se fonde sur le principe d'unicité énoncé à l'article 1§1, les définit en terme d'entité indivisible.

L'expression de toute autre acception, en ce qu'elle ne pourrait pas ne pas nier qu'elle soutient que la réalité de tout groupe ou individu humain serait concevable dans son essence même en d'autres termes que ceux qui sont communs à l'ensemble de l'espèce, viole le principe d'unicité énoncé à l'article 1 §1.

Article 3

La seule acceptation et utilisation légale du concept et du terme de groupe rapporté à l'être humain est celle qui par respect du principe d'unicité énoncé à l'article 1§1, le définit par un ensemble de caractéristiques communes qui ne lui sont propres qu'à lui à l'exclusion de tout autre, et dans lesquelles il se reconnaît lui-même.

L'expression ou l'utilisation de toute autre acception du concept ou du terme de groupe rapporté à l'être humain viole le principe d'unicité susmentionné au même titre que l'article 2 § 2.

Article 4

La Convention déclare criminels les organisations, institutions et les individus qui commettent le crime de harcèlement raciste.

La Convention tient pour pénalement responsable sur le plan international les personnes qui favorisent ou encouragent indirectement la perpétration du crime de harcèlement raciste ou y coopèrent directement.

Est notamment considéré comme favorisant ou encourageant indirectement la perpétration du crime de harcèlement raciste le fait pour une autorité publique d'inscrire ou de maintenir l'inscription sur une liste électorale d'un parti qui défend, prône ou diffuse des idées ou des théories racistes de manière manifeste ou répétée.

Article 5

L'obéissance hiérarchique ne justifie pas celui qui, agissant par ordre de ses supérieurs pour des objets du ressort de ceux-ci, exécute un ordre qui viole la présente convention.

Les peines prévues par la présente convention sont appliquées tant aux supérieurs qui ont donné l'ordre qu'à ceux qui les ont exécutés.

Section 3 : description de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste et de ses composantes

Article 1 : Définition de l'infraction

L'infraction de harcèlement raciste est tout acte de violence raciste⁴ commis par action ou omission qui porte atteinte au principe d'unicité fondateur de toute identité humaine, individuelle ou de groupe :

- en provoquant un sentiment d'insécurité, de terreur et d'angoisse ce qui rompt l'équilibre psychique de la victime et des membres du groupe ou de la communauté qu'elle représente ou auquel elle a été associée;

⁴ Cf. Partie I, Section 1 : définitions des notions , article 2, p. 36.

- en rongant et déchirant le tissu social ce qui met en danger l'existence même de toute société humaine ainsi que les principes qui sont communs aux états membres de l'Union.⁵

Article 2 : Comportement matériel de l'infraction

Pour être constaté par le juge, le comportement matériel de l'infraction requiert la réunion des éléments suivants :

- 1 La commission d'un acte de violence raciste au sens de la présente convention⁶ ;
- 2 Accompli dans l'une des conditions de publicité suivantes :
 - dans des réunions ou des lieux publics;
 - en présence de plusieurs individus, dans un lieu non public, mais ouvert à un certain nombre de personnes ayant le droit de s'y assembler ou de le fréquenter;
 - dans un lieu quelconque, en présence de la victime et devant témoins; par des écrits imprimés ou non, des images ou des emblèmes affichés, distribués ou vendus, mis en vente ou exposés aux regards du public;
 - par des écrits non rendus publics, mais adressés ou communiqués à plusieurs personnes.
- 3 Dirigé contre un groupe, contre une communauté ou contre une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée.

⁵ Cf. art. 6 Traité d'Amsterdam précité au préambule.

- 4 A l'occasion duquel il est constaté que l'auteur a fait référence aux caractéristiques phénotypiques de la victime ou/et à son origine nationale ou/et à sa religion ou/et à sa culture ou/et à tout stéréotype généralement utilisé pour caractériser l'identité de certaines personnes.

Formes explicite ou implicite de la référence :

La référence est explicite lorsqu'elle a donné lieu à des propos, des écrits, des images ou des emblèmes à l'occasion de la commission de l'infraction.

La référence est implicite lorsque le comportement incriminé est une discrimination au sens de la présente convention.⁷

Dans ce cas, la preuve du caractère objectivement justifié d'une discrimination, et du rapport raisonnable et proportionnel avec le but poursuivi par son auteur est toujours à charge de celui-ci.⁸

5. De nature à provoquer des sentiments d'insécurité, de terreur et d'angoisse.

Article 3 : Élément moral de l'infraction

Il s'agit d'un acte commis dans l'intention de rejeter, de stigmatiser un groupe, une communauté ou une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée sans tenir compte du danger que cet acte fait encourir à la structure même de la société.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Proposition de loi tendant à lutter contre la discrimination (déposée par M. Lallemand, Mme Merchiers et consorts) in Documents Parlementaires ; Sénat de Belgique – Session ordinaire 1998-1999 ;

Chap. 1er, Art. 2

« il y a lieu d'entendre par discrimination : «les comportements ayant directement ou indirectement pour but ou pour effet, dans les domaines politique, économique, social ou culturel ou dans tout autre domaine de la vie sociale, d'établir une distinction entre les personnes, les groupes de personnes ou les communautés, basée sur ...la naissance...ou une caractéristique physique, dénuée de justification objective et sans rapport raisonnable et proportionnel avec le but poursuivi. ».

⁸ Ibidem.

Article 4 : Preuve de l'intention

Est à charge de l'auteur et doivent être cumulativement rapportées,

- les preuves de ce que :
- la/les caractéristique(s) de la victime à laquelle/auxquelles l'auteur a fait référence lors de l'infraction sont commune(s) au groupe ou à la communauté prétendument défini;
 - la/les caractéristique(s) de la victime à laquelle/auxquelles l'auteur a fait référence lors de l'infraction est/sont propres à ce groupe ou à cette communauté, à l'exclusion de tout autre;
 - la/les caractéristiques à laquelle/auxquelles l'auteur a fait référence fait/ont partie d'un ensemble de caractéristiques dans lequel le groupe se reconnaît.

Section 4 : les circonstances aggravant la peine de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste

LES CIRCONSTANCES RELATIVES A L'AUTEUR DE L'INFRACTION

- 1. La préméditation.
- 2. La récidive.
- 3. La qualité de fonctionnaire, d'officier public, de dépositaire ou d'agent public de l'auteur lorsqu'il commet l'infraction de harcèlement raciste dans l'exercice de ses fonctions.

LES CIRCONSTANCES RELATIVES AUX FAITS

1. L'infraction de harcèlement raciste commise à l'aide de violences physiques ou de menaces de violences physiques.

2 L'infraction de harcèlement raciste qui a pour conséquence des Traumatismes psychiques graves.

Sont considérés comme graves les traumatismes psychiques qui engendrent chez la victime une infirmité permanente.

L'infirmité permanente existe dès que la victime « présente un état confusionnel variable mais permanent, que ses facultés mentales sont gravement et définitivement atteintes, qu'elle est incapable de mener une vie indépendante sur le plan économique ou même personnel et qu'elle vit emmurée dans ses propres carences.»⁹

L'existence d'une infirmité permanente sera constatée par un expert devant les tribunaux¹⁰.

3 L'incitation au harcèlement raciste : par "inciter" au harcèlement raciste il y a lieu d'entendre le fait d'entraîner et de pousser autrui à rejeter, à stigmatiser ou à ressentir de la haine à l'égard d'un groupe ou d'une communauté ou à l'égard d'une ou de plusieurs personnes perçues comme appartenant ou associées à ce groupe ou à cette communauté.

⁹ Cass. crim. 25 mars 1980 (Bull. crim. n°101 p.236).

¹⁰ Cf. Développements annexés à la présente convention : «évaluation de la gravité du PTSD», page 61, note n° 7.

4 Le caractère organisé des actes de harcèlement raciste est considéré comme organisé :

- l'acte de violence raciste accompli par une organisation, un groupement ou une association raciste.
- L'acte, qui sans pouvoir être directement imputé à une organisation, un groupement ou une association raciste, décèle un certain degré d'organisation. Un degré d'organisation est considéré comme suffisant lorsqu'une des deux conditions suivantes est constatée :
 - l'acte a nécessité une certaine structure humaine, technique, administrative ou financière;
 - l'acte démontre une stratégie :
 - soit parce qu'un lien de connexité existe entre plusieurs actes ce qui permet de les considérer comme une "série" d'actes orchestrés et menés à l'encontre d'un même groupe de victimes spécifiques ou de la même victime;
 - soit parce que le lieu de commission de l'infraction démontre à lui seul qu'une stratégie a été adoptée;
 - soit parce que les moyens mis en oeuvre sont significatifs d'une stratégie

5 La commission d'actes de harcèlement raciste dans les lieux de culte ou des lieux symboliques pour le groupe ou la communauté visée.

Section 5 : imprescriptibilité de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste

Article 1

Les infractions prévues par la présente Convention sont imprescriptibles.

Le principe d'imprescriptibilité s'applique aux infractions commises après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente Convention dans l'état contractant et s'applique également aux infractions commises avant cette entrée en vigueur dès lors que le délai de prescription n'est pas encore expiré.

PARTIE II: DISPOSITIONS PENALES

Section 1 : la répression de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste

A. LES INFRACTIONS A L'EGARD DES PERSONNES OU DES CORPS CONSTITUTES

Article 1

Est puni par l'emprisonnement d'une durée de 1 mois à 1 an et d'une amende de 500 à 1000 € ou de l'une de ces deux peines seulement, quiconque aura adressé une injure raciste à un groupe, à une communauté ou à une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée.

En cas de condamnation le tribunal pourra en outre ordonner les peines accessoires suivantes:

- l'inéligibilité du condamné pendant un terme de 5 à 10 ans.
- l'affichage de sa décision en caractères très apparents, dans les lieux qu'il indique, aux frais du condamné;
- la publication intégrale ou partielle de la décision ou l'insertion d'un communiqué, informant le public des motifs et du dispositif de celle-ci, aux frais du condamné.

Lorsque l'injure raciste est aggravée, elle est punissable de 6 mois à 2 ans de prison et le juge pourra en outre prononcer les mêmes peines accessoires que celles prévues à l'alinéa précédent.

Article 2

Est puni par l'emprisonnement d'une durée de 1 mois à 1 an et d'une amende de 500 à 1000 € ou de l'une de ces deux peines seulement, quiconque aura dans une intention raciste commis une discrimination¹¹.

En cas de condamnation le tribunal pourra en outre ordonner les peines accessoires suivantes:

- : - l'inéligibilité du condamné pendant un terme de 5 à 10 ans.
- l'affichage de sa décision en caractères très apparents, dans les lieux qu'il indique, aux frais du condamné;
- la publication intégrale ou partielle de la décision ou l'insertion d'un communiqué, informant le public des motifs et du dispositif de celle-ci, aux frais du condamné.

¹¹ Cf. notes n°5 & 6.

Lorsque l'infraction est aggravée, elle est punissable de 6 mois à 2 ans de prison et le juge pourra en outre prononcer les mêmes peines accessoires que celles prévues à l'alinéa précédent.

Article 3

Est puni par l'emprisonnement d'une durée de 2 à 5 ans et d'une amende de 5000 à 10.000 €, ou de l'une de ces deux peines seulement, quiconque aura calomnié ou diffamé, dans une intention raciste, un groupe, une communauté ou une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée.

En cas de condamnation le tribunal pourra en outre ordonner les peines accessoires suivantes:

- l'inéligibilité du condamné pendant un terme de 5 à 10 ans.
- l'affichage de sa décision en caractères très apparents, dans les lieux qu'il indique, aux frais du condamné;
- la publication intégrale ou partielle de la décision ou l'insertion d'un communiqué, informant le public des motifs et du dispositif de celle-ci, aux frais du condamné.

Lorsque l'infraction de calomnie ou de diffamation raciste est aggravée, elle est punissable de 5 à 10 ans de prison et le juge pourra en outre prononcer les mêmes peines accessoires que celles prévues à l'alinéa précédent.

Article 4

Est puni d'une peine de prison de 5 à 10 ans quiconque aura, dans une intention raciste, fait des blessures ou porté des coups à une personne.

Lorsque l'infraction est aggravée ou que les coups ou les blessures ont causé une maladie ou une incapacité de travail personnelle, le coupable sera puni d'une peine de dix à quinze ans de prison.

Outre l'affichage et la publication de la décision, le juge pourra ordonner l'inéligibilité à perpétuité du condamné.

Article 5

Est puni d'une peine de dix à quinze ans de prison et sera frappé d'inéligibilité à perpétuité quiconque aura, dans une intention raciste, volontairement fait des blessures ou porté des coups sans intention de donner la mort et l'aura donnée.

Le juge pourra en outre ordonner l'affichage et la publication de la décision aux frais du condamné.

Article 6

Est puni par les travaux forcés à perpétuité quiconque aura, dans une intention raciste, causé la mort d'une personne.

Le juge pourra en outre prononcer l'affichage et la publication de la décision aux frais du condamné.

B. LES INFRACTIONS CONTRE LES PROPRIETES

Article 1

Est puni par une peine de prison à perpétuité ceux qui auront, dans une intention raciste, mis le feu à des propriétés appartenant à un groupe, à une communauté ou à une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée, si l'auteur a dû présumer qu'il s'y trouvait une ou plusieurs personnes au moment de l'incendie.

Le juge pourra en outre prononcer l'affichage et la publication de la décision aux frais du condamné.

Article 2

Est puni par une peine de prison de quinze à vingt ans et sera frappé d'inéligibilité à perpétuité ceux qui auront, dans une intention raciste mis le feu à des propriétés immobilières appartenant à un groupe, à une communauté ou à une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée.

Le juge pourra en outre prononcer l'affichage et la publication de la décision aux frais du condamné.

Article 3

Est puni par une peine de prison de dix à quinze ans et sera frappé d'inéligibilité à perpétuité ceux qui auront, dans une intention raciste mis le feu à des propriétés mobilières appartenant à un groupe, à une communauté ou à une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée.

Le juge pourra en outre prononcer l'affichage et la publication de la décision aux frais du condamné.

Article 4

Seront punis des peines portées par les articles précédents et d'après les distinctions qui y sont établies, ceux qui auront, dans une intention raciste, détruit ou tenté de détruire, par l'effet d'une explosion, des propriétés appartenant à un groupe, à une communauté ou à une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée.

Article 5

Quiconque aura, dans une intention raciste et en dehors des cas visés aux articles précédents, détruit en tout ou en partie, mutilé ou dégradé, par quelque moyen que ce soit, des propriétés appartenant à un groupe, à une communauté ou à une personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée, sera puni d'une peine de 5 à 10 ans de prison.

Le juge pourra en outre prononcer l'inéligibilité du condamné pour un terme de 5 à 10 ans ainsi que l'affichage et la publication de la décision aux frais du condamné.

C. LES ORGANISATIONS, GROUPEMENTS ET ASSOCIATIONS RACISTESArticle 1

Sera dissout, toute organisation, groupement ou association qui soit défendrait, prônerait ou diffuserait des idées ou des théories racistes, soit inciterait autrui à rejeter, à stigmatiser ou à ressentir de la haine à l'égard d'un groupe, d'une communauté ou de toute personne perçue comme leur appartenant ou leur étant associée.

Article 2

L'organisation, le groupement ou l'association raciste sera condamné à la confiscation spéciale :

- des choses formant l'objet de l'infraction et de celles qui ont servi ou devaient servir à la commettre.
- Des choses produites par l'infraction.
- Des avantages patrimoniaux tirés directement de l'infraction ainsi que des biens et valeurs qui leur ont été substitués et des revenus de ces avantages investis.

Article 3

Seront punis de la réclusion et de l'inéligibilité de 5 à 10 ans, ceux qui font partie ou qui ont prêté leur concours à des organisations, groupements ou associations qui ont défendu, prôné ou diffusé des idées ou des doctrines racistes de manière manifeste ou répétée.

Article 4

Les états parties dont l'autorité publique admet ou maintient l'inscription d'un parti sur une liste électorale alors qu'il défend, prône ou diffuse des idées ou des théories racistes de manière manifeste ou répétée pourront voir leur responsabilité internationale engagée et seront passibles d'une astreinte de 100.000 à 500.000 € par jour et jusqu'à la suppression définitive de l'inscription incriminée.

En cas de condamnation le tribunal pourra en outre ordonner les peines accessoires suivantes :- l'inéligibilité du condamné pendant un terme de 5 à 10 ans.

- l'affichage de sa décision en caractères très apparents, dans les lieux qu'il indique, aux frais du condamné;
- la publication intégrale ou partielle de la décision ou l'insertion d'un communiqué, informant le public des motifs et du dispositif de celle-ci, aux frais du condamné.

Section 2 : la répression de l'abstention coupable face à la violence raciste

Article 1

Le fait pour quiconque ayant connaissance d'un crime de harcèlement raciste dont il est encore possible de prévenir ou de limiter les effets ou dont les auteurs sont susceptibles de commettre de nouveaux crimes qui pourraient être empêchés, de ne pas en informer les autorités judiciaires ou administratives est puni d'une amende de 1000 à 5000 €.

Sont exceptés des dispositions qui précèdent, sauf en ce qui concerne les crimes commis sur les mineurs :

- 1) les parents en ligne directe et leurs conjoints, ainsi que les frères et sœurs et leurs conjoints, de l'auteur ou du complice du crime;
- 2) Le conjoint de l'auteur ou du complice du crime, ou la personne qui vit notoirement en situation maritale avec lui.¹²

¹² Article qui s'inspire du Code pénal français; Art 434-1, Chap. IV.

Article 2

Est puni par l'emprisonnement d'une durée de 1 mois à 6 mois et d'une amende de 2000 à 5000 € ou de l'une de ces deux peines seulement, quiconque, pouvant empêcher par son action immédiate, un fait qualifié de crime de harcèlement ou de crime d'incitation au harcèlement raciste, s'abstient volontairement de le faire ».

PARTIE III : DISPOSITIONS CIVILESArticle 1

Sans préjudice des sanctions prévues par la présente convention, toute infraction de harcèlement raciste donne lieu à une réparation sous forme de dommages et intérêts.

Article 2

Sont nulles les clauses d'un contrat contraires aux dispositions de la présente convention et celles qui prévoient qu'un ou plusieurs contractants renoncent par avance aux droits garantis par la présente convention.

Article 3

La référence au principe d'unicité tel qu'il est formulé à l'article 1er , Partie I, Section 2 de la présente convention est une des conditions de validité substantielle de tout contrat.

Sont nuls les contrats qui ne remplissent pas cette condition.

Article 4

Dès l'entrée en vigueur de la présente Convention, les états parties veilleront à ce que tous les manuels d'enseignement soient épurés de toute expression qui pourrait à la lumière du présent texte être jugée raciste. La constatation d'un manquement à une telle obligation pourra donner lieu à des astreintes pour le cas où il ne serait pas mis fin.

PARTIE IV : EFFETS DE LA CONVENTION

Article 1

Les états parties reconnaissent à la présente convention un effet direct dans leur ordre juridique interne et poursuivront tout comportement qui par application des articles 2 §2 et 3§2 ¹³de la présente convention porterait atteinte au principe d'unicité énoncé à l'article 1 §1 ¹⁴.

Article 2

Tout manquement à l'obligation de poursuivre engagera la responsabilité pénale internationale de l'état défaillant. La constatation d'un tel manquement pourra donner lieu à des astreintes pour le cas où il n'y serait pas mis fin.

Sont considérés comme des manquements à l'obligation de poursuivre le fait pour des autorités judiciaires de ne pas engager de poursuites pour des faits que la présente convention qualifie de crime de harcèlement raciste dans un délai de 1an à dater du jour où ces faits ont été portés à leur connaissance ou pouvaient leurs être connus.

¹³ Cf. Partie I, Section 2, p.36.

¹⁴ Ibidem.

Article 3

Les états partie à la présente convention s'engagent à poursuivre les auteurs du crime de harcèlement raciste, qu'ils résident ou non sur le territoire de l'état dans lequel ces actes ont été perpétrés, et qu'il s'agisse de ressortissants de cet état ou d'un autre état ou de personnes apatrides.

Article 4

Les états parties enregistreront tout les incidents dont le caractère raciste est allégué par la victime en se référant au modèle d'enregistrement européen prévu à cet effet.

Article 5

Sont considérés comme des manquements à l'obligation d'enregistrement :

- le fait pour des autorités administratives ou judiciaires de ne pas procéder à l'enregistrement d'incidents dont les victimes allèguent le caractère raciste;
- le fait pour des autorités administratives ou judiciaires de procéder à l'enregistrement d'un incident dont la victime allègue le caractère raciste sans tenir compte des normes et des critères prévus par le modèle européen d'enregistrement des incidents racistes.

Article 6

Chaque état partie s'engage à établir un système général de suivi des affaires concernant des actes de violence raciste et transmettra un rapport annuel à l'Observatoire européen contre le racisme pour l'informer sur l'évolution des incidents racistes enregistrés sur son territoire et sur les suites qui leurs ont été données.

PARTIE V : PROCÉDURE

Article 1

Les états parties assureront à toute personne soumise à leur juridiction une protection et une voie de recours effective, devant les tribunaux nationaux et autres organismes d'état compétents, contre tout acte de violence raciste ainsi que le droit de demander à ces tribunaux satisfaction ou réparation juste et adéquate pour tout dommage dont elle pourrait être victime par suite d'un tel acte.¹⁵

Article 2

L'action devant les juridictions internes peut être déclenchée par :

- la constitution de partie civile des victimes de l'infraction;
- lorsqu'un préjudice est porté aux fins statutaires qu'ils se sont données pour mission de poursuivre, toute association et tout établissement d'utilité publique jouissant de la personnalité juridique.
- Le ministère public.

¹⁵ Article s'inspirant de l'article 6 de la Convention de New York de 1966.

PARTIE VI : DISPOSITIONS FINALES

Article 1

La présente Convention ne peut faire l'objet d'aucune réserve et est ouverte à la signature de tous les Etats membres de l'union.

Article 2

La présente convention est d'application sur tous les territoires de pays de l'Union.

DEVELOPPEMENTS & COMMENTAIRES DES ARTICLES

A. Généralités

L'une des nombreuses questions qui s'est posée lors de la rédaction de ce projet de convention était de savoir s'il y avait eu lieu de prévoir une convention de droit pénal européen ou de droit pénal international.

Sachant qu'une convention de droit pénal avec effet direct dans les états contractants était de toute façon « une première » il fallait dans les deux cas de figure envisager de profondes réformes.

Un argument qui penchait en faveur d'une convention de portée internationale était que le principe d'unicité de la race humaine concerne l'humanité toute entière et qu'il était dès lors assez cohérent et souhaitable d'essayer d'obtenir une adhésion à cette convention qui soit « la plus universelle possible », soit de la part du plus grand nombre d'états possible. Cependant, lorsque nous avons évalué la possibilité d'une convention de droit pénal international, nous avons parmi d'autres relevé les difficultés suivantes :

- un plus grand nombre de pays étant à consulter sur le plan international, une prise de position commune qui se concrétiserait par l'adoption d'une convention serait assez difficile à obtenir.
- D'un point de vue technique, le seul organe international actuellement compétent
- Pour connaître des plaintes émanant tant des états que des particuliers est le Tribunal Pénal International (TPI). Or, le TPI est uniquement compétent pour les crimes que ses statuts énumèrent. Le crime de harcèlement raciste n'y figurant pas, la seule solution serait de prévoir une extension de ses compétences par une modification de ses statuts (ce qui est possible selon le texte mais sans doute difficile à obtenir vu le nombre de pays qui devraient le voter).

Ce qui nous a finalement incités à choisir l'insertion de cette convention sur le plan européen plutôt qu'international ce sont les arguments suivants :

- une position commune des pays de l'union serait peut être moins ardue à obtenir car des déclarations émanant des pays de l'union qui affirment le souhait d'adopter des actions communes en matière de justice et plus particulièrement de lutte contre le racisme ont déjà été consacrées par les textes (cf. traité d'Amsterdam);
- un véritable espace de justice et de sécurité européen est en train de voir le jour et dispose déjà de nombreux outils juridiques tels que les conventions d'entraide judiciaire, de coopération et d'extradition ainsi que de nombreuses organisations telles qu'Europol, etc...

Quelles seraient les principales réformes juridiques à envisager pour insérer cette convention sur le harcèlement raciste dans les instruments de droit pénal européen ?

Il faudrait entre autre :

- élargir le champ matériel d'application de l'article 31 point e (ex-article K.3) du traité de l'union européenne aux infractions de racisme;
- insérer dans la future «charte européenne des droits de l'homme »¹⁶ (en espérant qu'elle soit de nature contraignante) le principe d'unicité de la race humaine qui confère à chaque individu le droit à la protection de son identité (intégrité) psychique contre toute violation de ce principe

¹⁶ Projet en cours de réalisation d'une sorte de «constitution européenne » (concrétisation aux environs de 2001).

L'adoption d'une constitution européenne rendrait la cour européenne de Luxembourg compétente pour sanctionner les états de l'union qui ne respecteraient pas les droits que cette constitution consacre.

B. Commentaires article par article

Partie I – Section 2

Article 4 § 3

Le mot «notamment» est présent pour indiquer qu'il a lieu de donner au comportement précisé par ce paragraphe une portée seulement exemplative.

Article 5

Pour rappel : les agents publics doivent respecter les deux obligations suivantes : - le devoir d'obéissance hiérarchique;
- le respect de la légalité.

Lorsque l'ordre hiérarchique est manifestement illégal, une jurisprudence constante et unanime considère que le devoir d'obéissance s'efface et qu'il ne justifie plus l'exécution de l'ordre par l'agent.

Le présent article prévoit quant à lui, que le respect de la légalité, à savoir le respect de la présente convention, doit toujours primer sur le devoir d'obéissance.

Cet article introduit l'idée selon laquelle la résistance à un ordre manifestement illégal n'est pas seulement un droit dont les fonctionnaires peuvent se prévaloir mais une obligation pour l'agent subordonné.¹⁷

¹⁷ «L'émergence d'un droit de résistance à un ordre illégal » dans « Ordre illégal et obéissance hiérarchique dans le droit disciplinaire de la fonction publique ; J.T. 1998, p. 267.

Partie I – Section 3

Article 1

Est visé par le présent article tant l'action que l'omission.

Une discrimination commise dans une intention de harcèlement raciste peut prendre la forme d'une omission. Ainsi le refus de fourniture d'un produit ou d'un service par une personne normalement tenue à cette prestation en raison d'une obligation légale ou morale.

Il faut souligner l'aspect multidimensionnel de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste. Cette infraction porte atteinte au principe d'unicité de la race humaine or ce principe est le fondement de toute identité :

- humaine (1ère dimension) ;
- individuelle (2ème dimension) et
- de groupe (3ème dimension).

Un acte raciste porte donc triplement atteinte au principe d'unicité susmentionné :

- quant à l'atteinte à l'identité individuelle de la victime, la constatation de l'infraction nécessite la preuve que l'intention de l'auteur raciste est de rejeter et de stigmatiser la victime¹⁸;
- quant à l'atteinte à l'identité de groupe et à l'identité humaine : elle porte atteinte au tissu de la société ce qui met en danger son existence.

¹⁸ Cf. dans le texte de la convention « la preuve de l'intention », article 4, page 41.

Cette mise en danger de la société a lieu par la seule commission de l'acte raciste; vu sous cet angle l'infraction de harcèlement raciste est ce que l'on appelle une infraction de mise en danger¹⁹, c'est-à-dire une infraction formelle. L'insouciance sociale de l'auteur suffit comme intention morale.

Article 2

Point 4 : forme explicite ou implicite de la référence

Lorsque l'auteur commet l'infraction et exprime de manière explicite son rejet à l'égard d'un groupe, d'une communauté ou d'une personne (injures lors de l'infraction etc. ...) il ne devrait y avoir aucune difficulté pour le juge (il y a alors référence «explicite» selon le texte de la convention.

Beaucoup plus difficiles sont les cas de harcèlement raciste « silencieux » (référence «implicite»). Il nous a semblé que dans ces cas de figure il fallait tenter de procéder par étape. La première étape consiste à prouver que l'auteur a commis une discrimination non objective et non proportionnelle. Une fois cette discrimination établie, il restera à prouver que l'intention poursuivie par l'auteur était une intention de harcèlement raciste. Dans ce cas, c'est la discrimination à elle seule qui constitue le corps matériel de l'infraction à savoir : l'acte de violence raciste.

Point 5

«de nature à provoquer des sentiments d'insécurité, de terreur et d'angoisse.» Ce point restera de l'appréciation subjective des juges.

¹⁹ « La mise en danger est le comportement actif ou passif, qui engendre un risque concret de lésion pour une valeur sociale pénalement protégée. L'élément psychologique de l'incrimination consisterait dans cette insouciance sociale qui témoigne d'une absence de considération pour autrui et pour les normes qui assurent la protection d'autrui . » in Revue internationale de droit pénal, 1969 ; n°0270, page 84 .

Cependant, le catalogue des comportements incriminés par la présente convention permettra aux juges de se référer à des «comportements racistes types» : injures, diffamation, ...

Article 3

A noter que cet élément moral précise « ...sans tenir compte du danger que cet acte fait encourir à la structure même de la société.». Ainsi il y a lieu de considérer que l'élément moral de l'infraction de harcèlement raciste est non seulement l'intention de stigmatiser ou de rejeter mais également « l'insensibilité ou l'insouciance sociale ainsi que l'état d'immaturation qui se manifeste par une absence de considération pour l'intégrité, les droits et les biens d'autrui.»²⁰

Article 4

Cet article établit un renversement de la charge de la preuve à l'égard de l'auteur de l'infraction.

II. Partie I – Section 4

Circonstances relatives aux faits – point 1

Lorsque l'acte de violence raciste qui rappelons-le est un acte de violence et de menace psychique, est accompagné de violences ou de menaces physiques, il y a aggravation de la peine.

En effet, il est important de souligner que ce qui est réellement novateur dans ce projet de convention c'est de prendre en considération la cruauté mentale que représente la violence raciste.

²⁰ Revue Internationale de droit pénal, 1969, p. 74 .

Dès lors, toute menace ou tout acte de violence physique ne viendrait que se « surajouter » à la violence psychique subie par la victime de harcèlement raciste ce qui justifie l'aggravation de la peine déjà encourue par l'auteur de cette infraction.

Circonstances relatives aux faits– point 2. traumatismes psychiques graves

Il faut souligner que l'infraction de harcèlement raciste est conçue comme étant une infraction de mise en danger. Le simple fait de porter atteinte au principe d'unicité de la race humaine met en danger les intérêts protégés et est réprimé.

Il s'agit d'une infraction qui existe dès sa commission indépendamment de toute lésion causée. Le «indépendamment de toute lésion causée» ne signifie nullement qu'aucune lésion ne soit concrètement provoquée.

Il est malheureusement scientifiquement établi qu'un lien de causalité existe entre la violence raciste subie et des troubles psychiques ou le PTSD (« Posttraumatic Stress Disorder) que présente la victime après l'agression.²¹

Ce que la convention prévoit c'est l'aggravation de la peine lorsque le PTSD de la victime est grave. L'évaluation de la gravité du PTSD est rendue possible par l'utilisation d'échelles qui permettent de mesurer certains symptômes provoqués par de la violence raciste tel que l'angoisse²².

²¹ «Gender Issues in the Assessment of Posttraumatic Stress Disorder » par J. Wolfe et R. Kimerling in «Posttraumatic Stress Disorder – a comprehensive Text » édité par P.A. Saigh & J. D. Bremner ; Chapter 7, page 192.

«Gender and Posttraumatic Stress Disorder» par G. Saxe et J. Wolfe édité dans la même revue ; Chapter 8, page 160.

²² National Center for PTSD, Dudley D. Blake & Weathers : Caps-DX Scale.

Une lésion pourra être reconnue comme «grave» au sens de la présente convention lorsqu'un certain degré d'intensité, de fréquence et de permanence du symptôme sera constaté.

Il y aura alors une circonstance qui aggravera la peine déjà encourue par l'auteur. Afin de garantir une application homogène de cette convention dans tous les pays de l'union, il importe qu'au cours du processus d'adoption de la présente convention les états parties précisent l'échelle qu'ils s'engageront à utiliser.

Partie II – Section 1

Remarques générales :

1. Le taux des peines encourues est uniquement indiqué à titre exemplatif. En effet, il y aura lieu de vérifier que les peines prévues par la présente convention respectent le principe de proportionnalité des peines.²³ Une gradation dans la sévérité de ces peines est représentative de la gravité de l'atteinte subie par la victime : c'est ainsi que si l'injure (art. 1) et la discrimination avec intention de harcèlement raciste (art. 2) sont punies des mêmes peines de prison et d'amende, l'infraction de calomnie et de diffamation (art. 3) est quant à elle beaucoup plus sévèrement punie puisqu'elle présuppose qu'une intention de l'auteur était d'atteindre la victime en donnant à son acte une publicité plus grande.

2. Il a été souhaité qu'une sévérité particulière caractérise les peines encourues par les organisations, associations et groupements racistes ainsi que pour toute personne qui en fait partie ou qui lui a prêté son concours.²⁴ La raison de cette sévérité est le danger que ces organisations, associations et groupements représentent pour nos démocraties et le rôle malheureusement déterminant qu'ils ont dans la montée de violence raciste qui se constate ces dernières années dans de nombreux pays.

²³ J. Biancarelli, « Les principes généraux du droit communautaire applicables en matière pénale », Rev. Sc. Crim. 1987, p. 131-166, p. 150.

²⁴ « Les organisations, groupements et associations racistes », p. 49

Par les termes «organisations, associations et groupements » sont également visés les partis politiques.

La convention distingue trois types de responsabilités :

- la responsabilité pénale des organisations, associations et groupements (responsabilité pénale des personnes morales) qu'elle sanctionne par des peines de confiscation et de dissolution;
- la responsabilité pénale des personnes qui en faisaient partie ou qui leurs ont prêté leurs concours et qu'elle sanctionne des peines de réclusion et d'inéligibilité;
- la responsabilité pénale internationale de l'état dont l'autorité publique admet ou maintient l'inscription sur une liste électorale d'un parti qui défend, prône ou diffuse des idées ou des théories racistes de manière manifeste ou répétée. Quant à cette dernière catégorie de responsabilité, les situations pratiques peuvent être les suivantes :
 - * le parti politique est déjà inscrit sur une liste électorale lorsqu'il se met au cours de sa campagne électorale à prôner, diffuser ou inciter autrui à avoir des idées ou des théories racistes. Dans ce cas, par application de l'article 1er²⁵, les autorités judiciaires doivent introduire une action en dissolution dudit parti et par application de l'article 4 de la même section les autorités publiques ne peuvent maintenir l'inscription électorale de ce parti sous peine d'engager la responsabilité internationale de l'état.

²⁵ Voir Partie II, Section 1, Point C, page 49.

- * Le parti politique fait déjà l'objet d'une action en dissolution lorsqu'il demande son inscription sur une liste électorale. Dans ce cas par application de l'article 4 de la même section il ne pourra être inscrit par l'autorité publique sans que celle-ci ne voit sa responsabilité engagée.

Partie II – Section 2

Inspirés par le code pénal français, l'article 1 et 2 de cette section distingue :

- la non information des autorités judiciaires (article 1) :

il s'agit d'une obligation d'informer les autorités judiciaires de ce qu'un crime de harcèlement raciste a été commis ou de ce qu'il est en préparation.

Le code pénal français prévoit que certaines catégories de personnes soient exemptées de cette obligation en raison de leur parentèle avec l'auteur de l'infraction. Il nous a semblé que cette exemption pouvait être maintenue.

Il est à noter que les catégories de personnes qui bénéficient de l'exemption du devoir d'information sont restrictivement énumérées ce qui implique que les personnes légalement tenues au secret professionnel (et qui ne figurent pas en tant que telles dans cette énumération) ne pourront invoquer ce secret pour échapper à l'application de la convention.

Une remarque doit cependant être faite quant à l'exception prévue pour les «crimes commis sur des mineurs» : il y aura lieu en effet d'harmoniser l'âge de la minorité en matière pénale au sein des quinze états de l'union.

- La non opposition à un crime de harcèlement raciste (article 2) :
il s'agit d'une obligation de s'opposer à la commission de l'infraction. Ce qui nécessite que l'infraction ne soit pas seulement au stade de la préparation (dans ce cas il y aurait application de l'article 1er) mais bien au stade de sa commission. La manière dont on s'oppose à la commission d'une infraction de harcèlement raciste n'est volontairement pas déterminée dans la présente convention.

Des critères permettront aux juges de constater qu'une opposition a bien eu lieu. Ainsi, cette opposition devra être immédiate et efficace. Elle sera également adaptée aux circonstances et aux moyens dont dispose la personne sur laquelle pèse cette obligation.

Partie III : Dispositions civiles

Article 1

La réparation civile donne lieu au paiement de dommages et intérêts. Il est à noter que lorsque la victime présente un traumatisme psychique grave l'évaluation psychométrique de ce dommage permettra un dédommagement plus juste.

Article 3 et Article 4

Ces dispositions poursuivent un but éducatif. De nombreux états ont déjà pris des mesures pour informer et éduquer les jeunes à l'école (l'article 4 s'inspire d'une mesure prise par les autorités hollandaises). Par l'insertion de l'article 3 nous souhaitons étendre cet aspect éducatif à toute personne contractante.

Partie IV : Effets de la convention

Article 3

Cet article établit une compétence universelle qui permet à tout état partie à la convention et sur le territoire duquel l'infraction de harcèlement raciste a été commise d'engager les poursuites.

Articles 4 et 5

Il a été relevé que le caractère raciste allégué par la victime était souvent mis de côté voire ignoré par les autorités chargées de prendre leur déposition.

Ces articles ont pour but d'imposer l'utilisation d'une grille (modèle de questions) aux autorités chargées d'enregistrer les plaintes pour violence raciste.

Le but est d'éviter toute subjectivité dans le types de questions posées aux victimes Lorsqu'elles déposent et de s'assurer que leur perception des faits sera fidèlement reproduite et prise en considération.

Partie V: Dispositions finales

Article 1

Face aux nombreuses réserves qu'ont pu exprimer certains états parties à la Convention internationale sur l'élimination de toutes les formes de discrimination raciale de 1966, beaucoup de l'efficacité de ce texte (qui n'était pas à effet direct) a été perdue. Dès lors, c'est pour conserver l'unité, la cohérence et l'efficacité de cette convention sur le harcèlement raciste, qu'il ne sera pas permis aux états contractants d'émettre des réserves.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 13 March 2000CHARTE 4157/00*CONTRIB 42*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution of the Association of Women of Southern Europe (AFEM) on the proposed Charter provisions.^{1 2}

¹ AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris.

² This text has been submitted in English only.

AFEM
ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES DE L' EUROPE MÉRIDIONALE
ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN OF SOUTHERN EUROPE

PROPOSED CHARTER PROVISIONS

I. INTRODUCTORY NOTE

1.- Following their Declaration on the Charter (CONTRIB 16), the Association of Women of Southern Europe (AFEM) has the honour to propose, as a minimum, some provisions which follow, in principle, the outline of the Praesidium's Proposal.

On this occasion, the AFEM asks the Convention to kindly note that the expressions used in the provisions should be sex neutral or should refer to both sexes (see, e.g., infra the proposed formulation of Articles 1, 2, 17, 21, 23, 24). This should apply also to provisions which are taken from the EC Treaty (e.g., Article 141(2): "in respect of his/her employment, from his/her employer"), the ECHR (e.g., Article 2: "his/her life") or any other instrument.

2.- The AFEM underlines the need to take into consideration the EU acquis, the international one (treaties ratified by all Member States), as well as the constitutional acquis common to the Member States, as minimum standards, and to ensure an advance in relation to these.

3.- The EU will thus prove its dedication to the universal principles proclaimed by Article 6(1) EU Treaty¹ and its determination to ensure that neither this provision nor those of Articles 7² and 49³ of this Treaty become a dead letter. It will thus confirm that it really wants to be a Community based on the rule of law and will strengthen its credibility both with its citizens and the international community.

4.- The AFEM recalls the solemn declarations of the EU according to which:

- "economic success cannot be ensured unless human rights are observed and guaranteed";
- the EU "insists" on the "equivalence", the "interdependence" and "inter-relatedness" of all human rights, including economic, social and cultural rights whose judicial protection it wishes to promote⁴.

5.- It is common knowledge that general non-discrimination clauses do not suffice to eradicate direct and indirect discrimination on the ground of sex, in particular against women, and to establish substantive equality between women and men. The acknowledgement of this fact has led:

¹ Article 6(1) EU Treaty: "The Union is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law, principles which are common to the Member States."

² Sanctions against Member States which violate the principles proclaimed by Article 6(1) EU Treaty.

³ The respect of these principles constitutes a fundamental condition of admission to the EU.

⁴ Annual Report of the EU on human rights (1999), paras. 5.1, 5.2, Statement by Mr. J.Fischer on behalf of the EU to the Commission of Human Rights annexed to this Report.

a) at international level:

- * to the adoption of special instruments guaranteeing fundamental rights of women⁵;
- * then, to the inclusion of specific provisions prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of sex in the CovenantCPR and the CovenantESCR;
- * further, as even this has proved insufficient⁶, to the adoption of the Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women;

b) at Community level:

- to the enshrinement of equality between women and men as a general principle and a specific fundamental right (well-established ECJ case law);
- to the proclamation of equality between women and men as a fundamental mission and objective of the Community which it undertakes to promote in all areas of its jurisdiction (Articles 2, 3(2), 137 EC Treaty);
- to the development of an acquis deriving from legislation and case law in respect of equality between women and men and of the prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination based on sex, including any kind of unfavourable treatment on the ground of pregnancy or maternity;
- to the development of an acquis deriving from legislation and case law and concerning judicial protection against direct and indirect sex discrimination;

c) at national level, to explicit and specific constitutional guarantees of equality between women and men.

6.- However, in spite of all that, substantive equality between women and men has not been achieved as yet. In order to remedy this situation:

- * the Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women [Art.(1)] provides for positive action in favour of women and the Commission which monitors the application of this Convention insists on the necessity of such action;
- * the organs which monitor the application of the two International Covenants insist on the necessity of positive action in favour of women;
- an increasing number of national constitutions guarantee substantive equality between women and men and legitimise positive action⁷, thus forming a “constitutional tradition common to the Member States”;
- Article 141(4) EC Treaty provides for positive action “with a view to ensuring full equality in practice between men and women in working life” and Declaration No 28 annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam specifies that such action “should, in the first instance, aim at improving the situation of women”;

⁵ Conventions on the political rights of women, on the nationality of married women etc.

⁶ See Preamble of the Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women.

⁷ German [Article 3(2)], Austrian [Article 7(2)], Portugese [Article 9(h)], Finnish [Article 6(4)], Swedish, French [Articles 3, 4], Greek [draft] Constitutions.

- specific Community action programmes for promoting substantive equality between women and men are being adopted and implemented;
- the EU proclaims officially and solemnly “the need to emphasise women's rights”, including those of the “girl child”⁸;
- the UN General Assembly has adopted an optional Protocol to the Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women, which provides for individual complaints; the EU underlines that it “has supported this initiative” and “is now working for the early entry into force of this new instrument”⁹.

7.- It is thus obvious that if the Charter is limited to a general non-discrimination clause, without explicitly enshrining substantive sex equality, it will constitute a regression in respect of equality between women and men which certainly nobody wishes. Discrimination on the grounds of sex is of a particular, structural, nature and affects mainly women. Women are not a minority, but more than half of the European population and often suffer multiple discrimination. They have the right to enjoy effectively all fundamental rights and freedoms and to be full citizens, in all areas.

8.- The family, as a “natural and fundamental unit of society”, as well as children are protected by numerous Community and international instruments and by national Constitutions, while the EU solemnly declares the “there is an urgent need to strengthen children’s rights”¹⁰.

Abbreviations

CCR: International Convention on Children’s Rights

CEDAW: International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women

CJEC: Court of Justice of the European Communities

CCPR: International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

CESCR: International Covenant on Economic Social and Cultural Rights

ECHR: European Convention on Human Rights

ECtHR: European Court on Human Rights

EP Decl.: European Parliament Declaration on Fundamental Rights and Freedoms

Proposal: Articles proposed by the Praesidium (CONVENT 5 and 8)

Social Charter: European Social Charter (revised)

Article preceding proposed Article 1

The Union and the Community as well as Member States secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the effective enjoyment of the rights and freedoms defined in the following Articles, which may be relied upon as against their organs and institutions as well as against individuals, in all areas of Union and Community jurisdiction. (Art. 1 ECHR, Horizontal Questions (BODY 3), para, 8).

⁸ EU Report on Human Rights, op.cit. paras. 5.12, 5.13, Statement of J.Fischer, op.cit.

⁹ EU Report on Human Rights, op.cit., para. 5.12.

¹⁰ Statement of J.Fischer, op.cit., EU Report on Human Rights, op.cit., para. 5.13.

Comments: We consider that, since there is a kind of dualism between the EU and the EC and since there are doubts as to whether the EU possesses a legal personality, it would be preferable that reference should be made to both. Besides, it is obvious that, without vertical and horizontal direct effect, the provisions of the Charter will be a dead letter.

Article 1. Dignity of the human person

Everyone has the right to the respect and protection of his/her dignity. The human body or any part thereof is not for trade, regardless of whether the person concerned has consented. (Art. 1 Poposal; Art. 1 EP Decl.)

Comments: We consider that the exemption of the human body from trade, so that nobody may derive profit or any other benefit therefrom, is a way of implementing respect and protection of human dignity rather than a corollary of the right to life. Consequently, this provision should not be limited to the area of medicine and biology, but should have a more general scope which should also include the prohibition of trafficking in persons, in particular in women and children, for the purpose of forced labour or sexual exploitation, so that the well-known and constantly increasing problems of trafficking in women and children throughout Europe are dealt with. It is indispensable to specify that the consent of the person concerned is irrelevant, since it is obvious and confirmed by common experience that it is impossible to know whether this consent has been freely given. Moreover, extensive research on the matter has proved that, in the great majority of cases, women engaging in prostitution, at least at the outset, do not act with their free consent.

For the rest, we agree with para. 3 of Article 1 of the Praesidium's Proposal. As concerns para. 2 of Article 1 of this Proposal, see infra, Comments under Article 2.

Article 2. Right to life

Everyone has the right to the protection of his/her life and of his/her physical, psychological and genetic integrity. Torture or inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment, such as sexual mutilations, as well as any other kind of physical or moral violence, including violence within the family, are in particular prohibited.

(Art. 1, 2 Proposal; Art. 2, 3 ECHR; Art. 6, 7 CCPR; Art. 2 EP Decl.)

Comments: The prohibition of torture may be included in Article 2 or in Article 1 as in the Praesidium's Proposal. What is important is the reference to "sexual mutilations" which, as it is well-known, take place even on European territory, as well as the prohibition of "any other kind of physical or moral violence". For the rest, we agree with para 2 of Article 2 of the Praedisium's Proposal, in its alternative wording.

Article 4. Right to an effective judicial remedy and to a fair trial

1. Everyone, without distinction of any kind, is entitled to real and effective judicial protection of the rights and freedoms recognised by the present Charter as well as of any other right conferred by Community or Union law, against any public authority and any individual. This right comprises in particular the right to effective access to justice and to legal aid in case of insufficient resources, the right to effective judicial control as regards respect of one's rights and freedoms, the right to fair trial, the right that a real and effective sanction against violations be inflicted by the competent court, and the right to execution of any final judgment.

(Art. 4, 5 Proposal; CJEC case law; Directive 97/80; Art. 6 ECHR; Art. 2, 14 CCPR; Art. 19 EP Decl.)

Comments: We consider that it is necessary to enhance the formulation of Article 4 of the Praesidium's Proposal, in view of CJEC case law in conjunction with ECtHR case law. The CJEC has ruled up to now on certain expressions of the principle of real and effective judicial protection, a principle it has established by drawing inspiration from Articles 6 and 13 of the ECHR and from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States. It has in particular developed the right of access to court, the right to effective judicial control as regards respect of substantive rights derived from Community law, as well as rights relating to the kind of evidence and the burden of proof and the right to a real and effective sanction¹¹. CJEC case law seems more advanced in certain respects than ECtHR case law, but the former is complemented in certain other respects (e.g., in matters of legal aid and execution of judgments) by the latter as well as by Articles 2 and 14 CCPR.

We agree with the transposition of ECHR Article 6 to Article 5 of the Praesidium's Proposal, but we consider that this is not sufficient and that it is necessary, in any event, to have a more explicit provision relating to the content of the right to judicial protection and corresponding to the successive stages of this protection. This is why we propose the second sentence of para. 1.

2. Trade unions and NGOs have the right to lodge any complaint or judicial proceedings or to support those lodged by a person who alleges a violation of the rights mentioned in the 1st paragraph of the present Article, with any competent national or European judicial or other authority.

Comments: The usefulness of the above provision is obvious. In all areas, the support of trade unions and NGOs encourages victims of violations of rights and freedoms and protects them from prejudicial consequences of their complaints.

Article 9. Right to found a family and right of the family to protection

1. Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family, according to their national law. Marriage should be entered into with the free consent of each intending spouse.

2. Spouses shall enjoy equality of rights and responsibilities before national and European authorities as well as between them and in their relations with their children, during marriage and in the event of its dissolution. In all cases, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration.

3. The family as well as all its members as such have the right to protection, without any distinction, in all areas of Union and Community jurisdiction, as well as the right to claim this protection from any competent national and European authority. Large and single parent families have the right to special protection.

(Art. 9 Proposal; Art. 12 ECHR and Art. 5 Protocol No 7 ECHR; Art. 16 Social Charter; Art. 23 CCPR; Art. 10 CESC; Art. 3, 18, 20, 21 CCR; Art. 7 EP Decl.)

Comments: This Article should come after Article 8 of the Praesidium's Proposal. The more general protection of children should be the object of a special provision. See infra Art. 21.

¹¹ See in particular certain leading cases: Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651; Case 222/86 UNECTEF/Heylens [1987] ECR 4112; Case 14/83 and Case. 79/83 von Colson and Harz [1984] ECR 1891 and 1921; Case C-177/88 Dekker [1990] ECR I-3941; Case C-97/91, Oleificio Borelli [1992] ECR I-6330; Case 199/82, San Giorgio [1983] ECR 3595; Case 109/88, Danfoss [1989] ECR 3220.

Article 17. Rights of aliens

1. Everyone who is persecuted has the right of asylum in the Union; it is in particular considered that there is persecution[,] when a woman or a man is unable to freely dispose of him/herself or his/her freedom or fundamental rights or physical or psychological or genetic integrity are threatened, whether the authorities of the country of origin are the authors of such persecution or threats or they tolerate them or are unable to oppose them.

2. The conditions for the implementation in practice of the rights conferred on migrants shall secure that women benefit therefrom under the same conditions as men.

3. Collective expulsions of aliens are prohibited.

(Art. 17 Proposal; Art. 63 EC Treaty; Art. 4 Protocol No 4 and Art. 1 Protocol No 7 ECHR)

Article 20. Right to substantive and effective equality between women and men

1. In all areas of Union and Community jurisdiction, women and men have equal rights, including the equal right to work freely chosen or accepted, the right to the same working conditions, the right to fair and equal pay for work of equal value, the equal right to social security and assistance for themselves and their family. Any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of sex is prohibited in any area. Positive measures are advisable, in order to improve, in the first instance, the position of women, until substantive and effective equality between men and women is achieved.

2. For the purposes of the principle of equal pay between men and women for work of equal value, “pay” means.....(the rest of the text of Article 141(2) EC Treaty should be inserted here).

(Art. 19(2) Proposal; Art. 141 EC Treaty; Declaration No 28 annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam; Art. 4(1) CEDAW; Directives 76/207, 75/117, 79/7, 86/613, 96/97; Art. 4, 20 Social Charter; Art. 3 CCPR; Art. 3, 7 CESC; ILO Convention No 100).

Comments: For the reasons mentioned in the Introductory Note (Nos 5-7), we consider that the above provision should constitute a separate Article, which should come after the Articles containing the general non-discrimination clauses and should guarantee real and effective equality between men and women in all areas of Union and Community jurisdiction. This is necessary in order that the relevant Community acquis be taken into consideration, consolidated and developed. Such a provision is also required by virtue of the Member States' international obligations, in particular those obligations undertaken through the ratification of the Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women (CEDAW).

Furthermore, the inclusion of sex as a ground of discrimination among the other grounds mentioned in Article 13 EC Treaty is not advisable, since discrimination on the ground of sex is of a particular, structural, nature and sex differs fundamentally from the other grounds of discrimination which concern mainly minorities. This is why positive measures are necessary “in order to improve, in the first instance, the position of women”, according to Declaration No 28 annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam, and which will be temporary, until substantive and effective equality between women and men is achieved, according to Article 4(1) of the CEDAW. Consequently, the general non-discrimination clause should not include “sex”.

Paragraph 2 is necessary in order to consolidate the Community acquis in respect of the concepts of “pay” and “work of equal value”.

Article 21. Rights of children

Every child, without any distinction in his/her respect or in respect of his/her parents, has the right to a legal existence, to the protection of his/her interests and to the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms defined in Articles.....of the present Charter. (CCR; Art. 7, 17 Social Charter; Art. 24 CCPR; Art. 10 CESCR)

Article 22 Right to the protection of pregnancy and maternity

Every woman, without any distinction, has the right to the protection of pregnancy and maternity, including the right to sufficient maternity leave, at least of the duration provided by Community law and remunerated through social security benefits and to the maintenance, during this leave, of her rights relating to her employment, as well as to be guaranteed protection against working conditions which may harm her and/or her child, before or after confinement, and against ailments which have their origin in pregnancy, confinement or breast-feeding. (Art. 152(1) EC Treaty; Directive 92/85; Art. 8 Social Charter; Art. 10 CESCR)

Article 23 Rights of parents

Every mother and father has the right to the protection of his/her parental and family function, including the right to leaves, at least of the duration provided by Community law and remunerated through social security benefits, in order to raise and take care of her/his children, and to the maintenance, during this leave, of the rights relating to her/his employment. Any discrimination against them is prohibited. (Directive 96/34; ILO Convention No 156; Art.27 Social Charter)

Article 24. Right to an adequate and decent standard of living

Everyone has the right to an adequate and decent standard of living for him/herself and his/her family and to protection against social exclusion. (Art. 11 CESCR; Art. 30, 31 Social Charter; Art. 15 EP Decl.)

Article 25. Protection of the elderly, incurables, handicapped and indigent

Every person who is elderly, incurable, handicapped or indigent has the right to special protection.

Article 26.

The Union and the Community as well as the Member States ensure that the provisions of the present Charter are brought to the knowledge of the persons whose rights they guarantee, by all appropriate and effective means. These persons have the right to be informed thereof. (Cf. Art. 7 Directive 75/117; Art. 6 Directive 76/207)

Article X. RIGHTS OF CITIZENS OF THE EU

Every citizen of the Union, without any distinction, has the rights provided by the law of the Union and national law in respect of access to candidacy for elections and exercise of the corresponding functions, as well as to posts of the organs and institutions of the Union, the Community and the Member States; positive measures are advisable, in order to favour equal access of women and men thereto. (Art. 19, 190 EC Treaty; Art. 25 CCPR; Art. 17 EP Decl.)

Article Z. LEVEL OF PROTECTION

No provision of this Charter may be interpreted as placing restrictions on the protection afforded by the provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights and the other international instruments relating to human rights and freedoms, ratified by the Member States, as well as by the provisions of the Constitutions and legislation of Member States relating to such rights and freedoms.

Comments: Article Z of the Praesidium's Proposal is reinforced in view of what has been stated supra, in the Introductory Note. The EU cannot ignore the international obligations of its Member States without losing its credibility both with its citizens and the international community, the more so as it considers itself and must be a Community based on the rule of law and wishes to play a leading role in the respect and promotion of human rights around the world. The Charter has no raison d' être unless it is built on the international acquis and the constitutional acquis of its Member States and develops them. It is to the universal values and principles that Article 6(1) EC Treaty refers. Article Z, as proposed, is also in line with the Community and international principle according to which Community and international provisions contain minimum standards which may be surpassed by national law and may in no case serve as an excuse for lowering the existing national level of protection (see also Art. 137(5) EC Treaty).

Note: The new Articles proposed by the Praesidium (CONVENT 8) have just come to our knowledge, after the proposed provisions had been drafted. We welcome the inclusion of a specific provision on equality between men and women, since this constitutes an advance in relation to the Draft List of fundamental rights (BODY 4). However, for the reasons indicated in our Introductory Note (Nos 5-7) and in our Comments under Article 20 supra, we consider that it is necessary to include in the Charter an even more specific and explicit provision, applying to all areas of Union and Community jurisdiction, which will consolidate and develop the Community acquis and will take into consideration the international obligations of the Member States, such as the provision we propose (Article 20).

We have further noted with great interest that the Convention intends to give particular attention to the content of the Article concerning the principle of democracy. We have no doubt that it will be proclaimed in this Article that real democracy is parity democracy.

In thanking the Convention for their attention and congratulating them on their efforts to promote and guarantee fundamental rights, the AFEM wishes them successful completion of their task.

AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris.

Tel: 33-1-45 72 12 03. Fax: 33-1-45 75 15 03 E-mail: assafem@aol.com

Editors' note to CHARTE 4157/00 ADD 1,
Contribution de l'Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM):

The French version differs slightly from the English (paragraph on gender-neutral language at §1 excluded) and so is included.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 17 mars 2000CHARTE 4157/00 ADD 1*CONTRIB 42*ADDENDUM AU NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint la version française d'une contribution de Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM).^{1 2}

¹ AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris.

² Ce document existe en langues anglaise et française.

AFEM
ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES DE L'EUROPE MÉRIDIONALE

PROPOSITION DE DISPOSITIONS DE LA CHARTE

I. NOTE INTRODUCTIVE

- 1.- Suite à sa Déclaration sur la Charte (CONTRIB 16), l'Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM) a l'honneur de proposer quelques dispositions, qui suivent, en principe, le schéma de la Proposition du Présidium.
- 2.- L'AFEM souligne le besoin de prendre en compte l'acquis communautaire et international (traités ratifiés par tous les États membres), ainsi que l'acquis constitutionnel commun aux États membres, comme standards minima, et de marquer une avancée par rapport à ceux-ci.
- 3.- Ainsi, l'UE fera preuve de son attachement aux *principes universels proclamés par l'article 6§1er Traité UE*¹ et de sa détermination d'assurer que ni cette disposition ni celles des articles 7² et 49³ de ce Traité ne deviendront lettre morte. Elle confirmera ainsi qu'elle se veut vraiment une Communauté de droit et renforcera sa crédibilité tant envers ses citoyens qu'envers la communauté internationale.
- 4.- L'AFEM rappelle les déclarations solennelles de l'UE selon lesquelles:
 - “le succès économique ne peut être assuré que si les droits humains sont observés et garantis”;
 - l'UE “insiste” sur “l'équivalence”, “l'interdépendance” et “l'unicité” de tous les droits, y compris les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels dont elle souhaite promouvoir la justiciabilité;⁴
- 5.- Il est bien connu que les clauses générales de non discrimination ne suffisent pas pour éliminer les discriminations directes et indirectes en raison du sexe, et surtout celles contre les femmes, et à établir une égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes. La constatation de ce fait a conduit:

¹ Article 6§1er Traité UE: “L'Union est fondée sur les principes de la liberté, de la démocratie, du respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, ainsi que de l'État de droit, principes qui sont communs aux États membres.”

² Sanctions contre les États membres qui violent les principes de l'article 6§1er Traité UE.

³ Le respect de ces principes constitue une condition primordiale de l'adhésion à l'UE.

⁴ Rapport annuel de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme (1999), points 5.1, 5.2, et Déclaration de M. J.Fischer au nom de l'UE à la Commission des Droits de l'Homme annexée à ce Rapport.

a) au niveau international:

- à l'adoption d'instruments spéciaux garantissant des droits fondamentaux des femmes⁵;
- puis à l'insertion dans le Pacte DCP et le Pacte DESC de clauses spécifiques interdisant les discriminations en raison du sexe;
- ensuite, comme même cela s'est avéré insuffisant⁶, à l'adoption de la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations à l'égard des femmes;

b) au niveau communautaire:

- à la consécration de l'égalité entre femmes et hommes comme principe général et droit fondamental spécifiques (jurisprudence constante de la CJCE);
- à la proclamation de l'égalité entre femmes et hommes comme mission et objectif fondamentaux de la Communauté et à l'engagement de celle-ci à la promouvoir dans tous les domaines de sa compétence (articles 2, 3§2, 137 Traité CE);
- au développement de l'acquis législatif et jurisprudentiel en matière d'égalité entre femmes et hommes et d'interdiction des discriminations, directes ou indirectes, fondées sur le sexe, y compris toute espèce de traitement défavorable en raison de la grossesse ou de la maternité;
- au développement de l'acquis législatif et jurisprudentiel en matière de protection juridictionnelle contre les discriminations, directes ou indirectes, en raison du sexe;

c) au niveau national, à des garanties constitutionnelles expresses et spécifiques de l'égalité entre femmes et hommes.

6.- Cependant, en dépit de tout cela, l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes n'est pas encore atteinte. Pour remédier à cette situation:

- la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations à l'égard des femmes (article 4§1er) prévoit des actions positives en faveur des femmes et la Commission qui contrôle l'application de la Convention insiste sur la nécessité de ces actions;
- les organes qui contrôlent l'application des deux Pactes internationaux insistent sur la nécessité d'actions positives en faveur des femmes;
- un nombre croissant de Constitutions nationales garantit l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes et légitimise les actions positives⁷, en formant ainsi une "tradition constitutionnelle commune aux États membres";
- l'article 141§4 Traité CE prévoit des actions positives "pour assurer concrètement une pleine égalité entre hommes et femmes dans la vie professionnelle" et la Déclaration No 28 annexée au Traité d'Amsterdam précise que ces actions doivent "avant tout améliorer la situation des femmes";

⁵ Conventions sur les droits politiques des femmes, sur la nationalité des femmes mariées etc.

⁶ V. préambule de la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations à l'égard des femmes.

⁷ Constitutions allemande [article 3§2], autrichienne [article 7§2], portugaise [article 9(h)], finlandaise [article 6§4], suédoise, française [articles 3 et 4], hellénique (projet).

- des programmes d'action communautaire spécifiques, pour promouvoir l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes, sont adoptés et mis en oeuvre;
- l'UE déclare officiellement et solennellement qu'une "priorité spéciale doit être accordée aux droits des femmes", y compris ceux *des petites filles*⁸;
- l'Assemblée Générale de l'ONU vient d'adopter un Protocole facultatif à la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations à l'égard des femmes qui rend possibles les recours individuels; l'UE souligne qu'elle a appuyé cette initiative et qu'elle oeuvre en vue de l'entrée en vigueur à bref délai de ce nouvel instrument⁹.

7.- Il est ainsi évident que, si la Charte se limite à une clause générale de non discrimination sans consacrer explicitement l'égalité effective des sexes, elle marquera une régression en matière d'égalité entre femmes et hommes, que certes personne ne souhaite. Les discriminations en raison du sexe sont de nature particulière, structurelle, et affectent surtout les femmes. Celles-ci ne sont pas une minorité, mais plus que la moitié de la population européenne et souffrent souvent de discriminations multiples. Elles ont le droit de jouir effectivement de tous les droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'être des citoyennes à part entière, dans tous les domaines.

8.- La famille, en tant qu' "élément naturel et fondamental de la société", ainsi que les enfants sont protégés par de nombreux instruments communautaires et internationaux et par les Constitutions nationales, tandis que l'UE déclare solennellement qu'il est "urgent de renforcer les droits des enfants"¹⁰.

II. PROPOSITION DE DISPOSITIONS

Abréviations

CDE: Convention internationale sur les droits des enfants

CEDH: Convention européenne des droits de l'homme

CEDF: Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations à l'égard des femmes

Charte sociale: Charte sociale européenne (révisée)

CJCE: Cour de Justice des Communautés européennes.

CourEDH: Cour européenne des droits de l'homme

Décl. PE: Déclaration des droits et libertés fondamentaux du Parlement Européen (1989).

PacteDCP: Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques

PacteDESC: Pacte international relatif aux droits économiques, sociaux et culturels

Proposition: Proposition d'articles établie par le Présidium (CONVENT 5 et 8)

Article précédant l'Article 1 de la Proposition

L'Union et la Communauté européennes ainsi que les États-membres garantissent à toute les personnes relevant de leur juridiction la jouissance effective des droits et libertés définis aux articles suivants, dont elles pourront se prévaloir à l'encontre de leurs organes et institutions, comme à l'encontre des particuliers, dans tous les domaines de compétence de l'Union et de la Communauté. (Art. 1 CEDH; Questions horizontales (BODY 3), point 8).

⁸ Rapport de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme, points 5.12, 5.13, Déclaration J.Fischer, op.cit.

⁹ Rapport de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme, op. cit., point 5.12.

¹⁰ Rapport de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme, op. cit., point 5.12.

Commentaire: Nous croyons que, puisqu'il existe une sorte de dualisme entre l'UE et la CE et qu'il subsiste des doutes quant à la personnalité morale de l'UE, il serait préférable de se référer à toutes les deux. Par ailleurs, il est évident que sans effet direct, vertical et horizontal, les dispositions de la Charte resteront lettre morte.

Article 1. Dignité de la personne humaine

Toute personne a droit au respect et à la protection de sa dignité. Le corps humain ou quelconque partie de celui-ci est hors commerce, que ce soit sans ou avec le consentement de la personne concernée. (Art. 1 Proposition; art. 1 décl.PE.)

Commentaire: Nous considérons que la mise du corps humain ou de quelconque partie de celui-ci hors commerce, afin que personne n'en puisse tirer profit, est une forme de respect et de protection de la dignité de la personne humaine, plutôt qu'un corollaire du droit à la vie. Par conséquent, cette disposition ne doit pas être limitée au domaine de la médecine et de la biologie, mais avoir une portée plus générale qui inclut aussi l'interdiction de la traite des êtres humains, notamment des femmes et des enfants, aux fins d'exploitation de leur travail ou d'exploitation sexuelle, afin que puissent être envisagés les problèmes bien connus et constamment croissants de traite de femmes et d'enfants à travers l'Europe. Il est indispensable de préciser que le consentement de la personne concernée est sans incidence, puisqu'il est évident et confirmé par l'expérience commune qu'il est impossible de savoir si celui-ci est donné librement. Des recherches multiples en la matière ont d'ailleurs démontré que dans la grande majorité des cas, la prostituée, au moins au commencement, n'agit pas après une décision prise librement.

Pour le reste, nous sommes d'accord avec le paragraphe 3 de l'article 1 de la Proposition. En ce qui concerne le paragraphe 2 de l'article 1 de cette Proposition, voy. ci-dessous, Commentaire sous l'article 2.

Article 2. Droit à la vie

Toute personne a droit au respect et à la protection de sa vie et de son intégrité physique, psychique et génétique. Sont notamment interdits la torture et les peines ou traitements inhumains et dégradants, telles les mutilations sexuelles, ainsi que toute autre forme de violence physique ou morale, y compris celle exercée au sein de la famille.

(Art. 1, 2 Proposition; art. 2, 3 CEDH; art. 6, 7 Pacte DCP; art. 2 décl.PE).

Commentaire: L'interdiction de la torture peut être insérée dans l'article 2, ou bien dans l'article 1 comme dans la Proposition. Ce qui importe est la mention des "mutilations sexuelles" qui, comme il est bien connu, ont lieu même sur le territoire européen, ainsi que l'interdiction de "toute autre forme de violence physique ou morale". Pour le reste, nous sommes d'accord avec le paragraphe 2 de l'article 2 de la Proposition, dans sa formule alternative.

Article 4. Droit à un recours effectif et à un procès équitable

1. Toute personne, sans distinction aucune, a droit à la protection juridictionnelle effective et efficace des droits et libertés reconnus dans la présente Charte et de tout autre droit conféré par le droit communautaire ou de l'Union Européenne, envers toute autorité publique et tout particulier. Ce droit comprend notamment les droits à l'accès effectif à la justice et à l'aide juridique en cas de ressources insuffisantes, au contrôle juridictionnel effectif sur le respect de ses droits et libertés, à un procès équitable, à une sanction effective et efficace contre les violations prononcée par le tribunal compétent et à l'exécution de tout jugement définitif. (Art. 4, 5 Proposition; jurispr. CJCE; Directive 97/80; art. 6 CEDH; art. 2, 14 Pacte DCP; art. 19 décl.PE).

Commentaire: Il est nécessaire que la formulation de l'article 4 de la Proposition soit enrichie, compte tenu de la jurisprudence de la CJCE en combinaison avec celle de la CourEDH.

La CJCE s'est prononcée jusqu'à aujourd'hui sur quelques expressions du principe de protection juridictionnelle effective et efficace, principe qu'elle a consacré en s'inspirant des articles 6 et 13 CEDH et des traditions constitutionnelles communes aux États membres; elle a notamment consacré le droit à l'accès au juge, le droit au contrôle juridictionnel effectif sur le respect des droits communautaires substantiels, ainsi que des droits relatifs aux moyens et à la charge de la preuve et le droit à une sanction effective et efficace¹¹. Sa jurisprudence semble être plus avancée à quelques égards que celle de la CourEDH, mais elle est complétée à d'autres égards (p.ex. en matières d'aide juridique et d'exécution des jugements) par celle de la CourEDH et par les articles 2 et 14 du PacteDCP.

Nous sommes d'accord sur la transposition de l'article 6 de la CEDH dans l'article 5 de la Proposition, mais nous croyons que ni cela ne suffit et qu'il est nécessaire, en tout cas, d'avoir une disposition plus explicite sur le contenu du droit à la protection juridictionnelle qui corresponde aux étapes successives de cette protection. C'est pourquoi nous proposons le second alinéa du 1er paragraphe de l'article 4 ci-dessus.

2. Les organisations syndicales et les ONG ont le droit de porter plainte ou de former un recours juridictionnel ou de soutenir ceux d'une victime de violation des droits mentionnés au 1er paragraphe du présent article auprès de toute instance compétente nationale ou européenne.

Commentaire: L'utilité d'une telle disposition est évidente. Dans tous les domaines, le soutien des organisations syndicales et des ONG encourage la victime de violations des droits et libertés et la protège contre les conséquences préjudiciables de sa plainte ou de son recours juridictionnel.

Article 9. Droit de fonder une famille et droit de la famille à la protection

1. A partir de l'âge nubile, l'homme et la femme ont le droit de se marier et de fonder une famille selon le droit national. Le mariage doit être librement consenti par chacun des futurs époux.

2. Les époux jouissent de l'égalité de droits et d'obligations dans leurs rapports avec les autorités nationales et européennes, ainsi qu'entre eux et dans leurs relations avec leurs enfants, durant leur mariage et lors de sa dissolution. Dans tous les cas l'intérêt de l'enfant sera la considération primordiale.

3. La famille, ainsi que ses membres en tant que tels, ont droit à la protection, sans distinction aucune, dans tous les domaines de compétence de l'Union et de la Communauté européenne, ainsi que le droit de revendiquer cette protection auprès des instances compétentes nationales et européennes. Les familles nombreuses ou monoparentales ont droit à une protection spéciale.

(Art. 9 Proposition; art. 12 CEDH et art. 5 Protocole No 7 CEDH; art. 16 Charte sociale; art. 23 PacteDCP; art. 10 Pacte DESC; art. 3, 18, 20, 21 CDE; art. 7 décl. PE).

Commentaire: Cet article suit l'article 8 de la Proposition. La protection plus générale des enfants doit faire l'objet d'une disposition spéciale. V. ci-dessous art. 21

¹¹ Voy. notamment quelques arrêts de principe: CJCE 15.5.1986, aff. 222/84, Johnston, Rec. p. 1651; CJCE 15.10.1987, aff. 222/86, UNECTEF/Heylens, Rec. p. 4112; CJCE 10.4.1984, aff. 14/83 et aff. 79/83 von Colson et Harz, Rec. pp. 1891 et 1921; CJCE 8.11.1990, aff. C-177/88, Dekker, Rec. p. I-3941; CJCE 3.12.1992, aff. C-97/91, Oleificio Borelli, Rec. p. I-6330; CJCE 9.11.1983, $\nu\pi\acute{o}\theta$. 199/82, San Giorgio, Rec. p. 3595; CJCE 17.10.1989, aff. 109/88, Danfoss, Rec. p. 3220.

Article 17. Droits des étrangers

1. Toute personne persécutée a le droit d'asile; est notamment considérée comme persécution, pour les femmes comme pour les hommes, le fait de ne pouvoir disposer librement de soi-même ou d'être menacé(e) dans sa liberté ou ses droits fondamentaux ou dans son intégrité physique, psychique ou génétique, que les pouvoirs publics du pays d'origine soient les auteurs de ces persécutions ou menaces, qu'ils les tolèrent, ou qu'ils soient dans l'incapacité de s'y opposer.
2. Les conditions pratiques de mise en oeuvre des droits reconnus aux migrants doivent garantir que les femmes en bénéficieront effectivement dans les mêmes conditions que les hommes.
3. Les expulsions collectives d'étrangers sont interdites.

(Art. 17 Proposition, art. 63 CE; art. 4 protocole No 4 et art. 1 Protocole No 7 CEDH)

Article 20. Droit à l'égalité substantielle et effective entre femmes et hommes

1. Dans tous les domaines de compétence de l'Union et de la Communauté européennes, femmes et hommes ont des droits égaux, y compris les droits au travail librement choisi ou accepté, aux mêmes conditions d'emploi, à une rémunération équitable et égale pour un travail de valeur égale, à la sécurité et à l'assistance sociale pour eux/elles-mêmes et leur famille. Toute discrimination, directe ou indirecte, en raison du sexe est interdite dans quelque domaine que ce soit. Des mesures positives sont indiquées, avant tout pour améliorer la situation des femmes, jusqu'à ce que l'égalité substantielle et effective entre femmes et hommes soit atteinte.
2. Aux fins d'application du principe de l'égalité des rémunérations entre femmes et hommes pour un travail de valeur égale, on entend par rémunération.....(continuer en insérant tout le reste du texte du paragraphe 2 de l'article 141 Traité CE).

(Art. 19§2 Proposition, art. 141 Traité CE; Déclaration No 28 annexée au Traité d'Amsterdam; art. 4§1 CEDF; Directives 76/207, 75/117, 79/7, 86/613, 96/97; art. 4, 20 Charte Sociale; art. 3 PacteDCP; art. 3, 7 PacteDESC; Convention OIT No 100).

Commentaire: Pour les raisons indiquées dans la Note introductive (Nos 5-7) nous considérons que la disposition ci-dessus doit constituer un article distinct, qui suive les articles contenant des clauses générales de non discrimination, et qui garantisse l'égalité effective et substantielle entre les hommes et les femmes dans tous les domaines de compétence de l'Union et de la Communauté. Cela est nécessaire afin que soit pris en compte, consolidé et développé l'acquis communautaire en la matière. Une telle disposition est aussi requise par les engagements internationaux des États membres, et notamment ceux entrepris par la ratification de la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations à l'égard des femmes.

Par ailleurs, l'insertion du sexe comme un motif de discrimination parmi les autres motifs mentionnés dans l'article 13 du Traité CE n'est pas indiquée, puisque la discrimination fondée sur le sexe est de nature particulière, structurelle, et que le sexe diffère fondamentalement des autres motifs de discrimination, qui se réfèrent surtout à des minorités. C'est pour cela que sont nécessaires des mesures positives, "avant tout pour améliorer la situation des femmes", selon la Déclaration No 28 annexée au Traité d'Amsterdam, et temporaires, jusqu'à ce que l'égalité substantielle et effective entre femmes et hommes soit atteinte, selon l'article 4§1 de la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations à l'égard des femmes. Par conséquent, la clause générale de non discrimination ne doit pas inclure le sexe.

Le paragraphe 2 est nécessaire pour consolider l'acquis communautaire en ce qui concerne les notions de "rémunération" et de "travail de valeur égale".

Article 21. Droits des enfants

Tout enfant, sans distinction aucune, à son égard ou à l'égard de ses parents, a droit à une existence légale, à la protection de son intérêt et à la jouissance des droits et libertés reconnus par les articles.....de la présente Charte.

(CDE; art. 7, 17 Charte Sociale; art. 24 PacteDCP; art. 10 PacteDESC)

Article 22. Droit à la protection de la grossesse et de la maternité

Toute femme, sans distinction aucune, a droit à la protection de la grossesse et de la maternité, y compris le droit à un congé de maternité suffisant, au moins de la durée prévue par le droit communautaire, et rémunéré par des prestations de sécurité sociale, et au maintien pendant ce congé des droits liés à son emploi, ainsi qu'à la garantie de protection contre les conditions d'emploi qui peuvent nuire à elle-même et/ou à son enfant, avant et après l'accouchement, et contre les affections qui ont leur origine dans la grossesse, l'accouchement ou l'allaitement.

(art. 152§1 Traité CE; Directive 92/85/CEE; art. 8 Charte Sociale, art. 10 PacteDESC)

Article 23. Droits des parents

Toute mère et tout père a droit à la protection de sa fonction parentale et familiale, y compris le droit à des congés, au moins de la durée prévue par le droit communautaire, et rémunérés par des prestations de sécurité sociale, pour élever et soigner ses enfants. Toute discrimination à leur égard est interdite.

(Directive 96/34/CE; Convention OIT No 156; art.27 Charte Sociale)

Article 24. Droit à un niveau de vie suffisant et décent

Toute personne a droit à un niveau de vie suffisant et décent pour elle-même et sa famille et à la protection contre l'exclusion sociale.

(Art. 11 PacteDESC, art. 30, 31 Charte Sociale, art. 15 décl.PE)

Article 25. Protection des personnes âgées, incurables, handicapées ou indigentes

Toute personne âgée, incurable, handicapée ou indigente a droit à une protection spéciale.

Article 26

L'Union et la Communauté européennes, ainsi que les États membres veillent à ce que les dispositions de la présente Charte soient portées à la connaissance des personnes dont elles garantissent les droits, par tout moyen approprié et efficace. Ces personnes ont le droit d'en être informées.

(Cf. article 7 Directive 75/117/CEE, article 6 Directive 76/207/CEE)

DROITS DES CITOYENS DE L'UNION

Article X. Tous les citoyens de l'Union européenne, sans distinction, ont les droits prévus par le droit de l'Union et le droit national en matière d'accès aux mandats électoraux et aux fonctions électives, ainsi qu'aux postes des institutions et organes de l'Union, de la Communauté et des États membres. Des mesures positives sont indiquées pour favoriser l'égal accès des femmes et des hommes à ces mandats, fonctions et postes.

(Art. 19, 190 Traité CE, art. 25 PacteDCP, art. 17 décl.PE,)

Article Z. NIVEAU DE PROTECTION

Aucune disposition de la présente Charte ne peut être interprétée comme restreignant la protection offerte par les dispositions de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et des autres instruments internationaux relatifs aux droits et libertés de la personne humaine, ratifiés par les États membres, ainsi que par les dispositions des Constitutions et des législations des États membres relatives à ces droits et libertés.

Commentaire: L'article Z de la Proposition de la Convention est renforcé en considération de ce qui est exposé dans la Note introductive ci-dessus. L'UE ne peut ignorer les obligations internationales de ses États membres sans perdre sa crédibilité tant envers ses citoyens qu'envers la communauté internationale, d'autant plus qu'elle se veut et doit être une Communauté de droit et qu'elle veut et doit jouer un rôle moteur pour le respect et la promotion des droits humains dans le monde. La Charte n'a de raison d'être que si elle est construite sur l'acquis international et l'acquis constitutionnel des États membres et développe ceux-ci. C'est aux valeurs et principes universels que se réfère l'article 6§1er du Traité UE. L'article Z, en sa teneur proposée, est aussi en ligne avec le principe communautaire et international selon lequel les dispositions communautaires et internationales contiennent des standards minima qui peuvent être dépassés par le droit national et ne peuvent en aucun cas servir d'excuse pour l'abaissement du niveau national de protection en vigueur. Voy. aussi article 137§5 du Traité CE.

Note: Nous venons de prendre connaissance, après la rédaction des dispositions ci-dessus, des nouvelles Propositions d'articles du Présidium (CONVENT 8). Nous nous félicitons que l'insertion d'une disposition spécifique sur l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes y soit incluse, ce qui constitue un progrès par rapport au Projet de liste de droits fondamentaux (BODY 4). Cependant, pour les raisons indiquées dans la Note introductive ci-dessus (Nos 5-7) et notre Commentaire sous l'article 20 ci-dessus, nous considérons qu'il est nécessaire d'inclure dans la Charte une disposition encore plus spécifique et expresse, applicable dans tous les domaines de compétence de l'Union et de la Communauté, qui consolide et développe l'acquis communautaire et tienne compte des engagements internationaux des États membres, comme celle que nous proposons (article 20).

Par ailleurs, nous avons noté avec grand intérêt que la Convention se propose d'accorder une réflexion particulière au contenu de l'article sur le principe de la démocratie. Nous ne doutons pas que dans cet article sera explicitement proclamé qu'il n'est de démocratie véritable que paritaire.

En remerciant la Convention de son attention et en la félicitant de ses efforts pour promouvoir et garantir les droits fondamentaux, l'AFEM lui souhaite un bon aboutissement de ses travaux.

AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris.
Tel: 33-1-45 72 12 03. Fax: 33-1-45 75 15 03
E-mail: assafem@aol.com

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 14. März 2000CHARTE 4159/00*CONTRIB 43*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte anliegend einen Beitrag der Konrad-Adenauer-Stiftung zur EU-Grundrechtscharta.¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

Dr. Burkard Steppacher	FuB
------------------------	-----

EU-Grundrechtscharta

Ziele – Methoden – Bewertung

Gliederung:

Zusammenfassung

1. Zielsetzung
 2. Bisherige Rechtslage
 3. Zu den Inhalten einer Grundrechtscharta
 4. Zusammensetzung des Gremiums und Arbeitsmethode
 5. Transparenz und Öffentlichkeit
 6. Zeitplan
 7. Bewertung des Vorhabens
-

Zusammenfassung

Zur Ausarbeitung einer „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ trat erstmals im Dezember 1999 in Brüssel ein 62köpfiges Gremium („Konvent“) zusammen, in dem Beauftragte der Staats- und Regierungschefs der EU sowie Mitglieder der nationalen Parlamente, der Europäischen Kommission und des Europäischen Parlaments vertreten sind. Auftrag des Gremiums ist es, einen Entwurf auszuarbeiten, der im Dezember 2000 (unter französischer EU-Präsi-dentschaft) feierlich proklamiert und gegebenenfalls in die EU-Verträge aufgenom-men werden soll.

Entscheidend für den Erfolg des Projektes wird es sein, a) eine inhaltlich glaubwürdige, das heißt nicht überzogene Grundrechtscharta zu erarbeiten, und dabei b) die Bürger in den Entstehungsprozeß stark einzubeziehen.

1. Zielsetzung

Krisen können Wendepunkte sein. In einer solchen Situation befand sich 1999 die Europäische Union. In der Folge der monatelangen Glaubwürdigkeitskrise der EU, die im Rücktritt der Santer-Kommission gipfelte, beschloß der Europäische Rat bei seiner Tagung in Köln am 3./4. Juni 1999, „daß es im gegenwärtigen Entwicklungsstand der Union“ erforderlich ist, eine Charta der Grundrechte zu erstellen.

Absicht dieses ambitionierten Projektes ist es, die Legitimität der Europäischen Union zu stärken. Der Rückgriff auf die bereits 1950 vom Europarat aufgelegte „Europäische Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten (EMRK)“ genügt aus EU-Sicht offenkundig nicht mehr.

So wie die Mitgliedstaaten der EU in ihren Verfassungen eigenständige Grundrechtskataloge enthalten – und dies vom Ansatz her ja auch nicht mit der Mitgliedschaft im Europarat und dem Vorhandensein der EMRK kollidiert, so schlagen die Staats- und Regierungschefs der EU die Ausarbeitung einer speziellen Grundrechtscharta vor. Ziel ist es, die überragende Bedeutung der Grundrechte in der EU auch in einem Dokument der EU eigens herauszustellen.

Konkret sollen die auf der Ebene der Union im Primär- und Sekundärrecht geltenden Grundrechte sowie die wesentlichen Elemente der ständigen Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs (EuGH) in einer Charta zusammengefaßt und dadurch „für die Unionsbürger sichtbarer“ gemacht werden.

2. Bisherige Rechtslage

Schon im Vertrag von Maastricht (1992: Art. F Abs. 2 EUV) verpflichtete sich die EU auf die Achtung der Grundrechte gemäß der Europäischen Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten (EMRK) von 1950 und entsprechend der gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten.

In Amsterdam wurde dies 1997 konkretisiert, indem der neue Art. 6 EUV(ex-Art. F) festhält: „Die Union beruht auf den Grundsätzen der Freiheit, der Demokratie, der Achtung der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten sowie der Rechtsstaatlichkeit; diese Grundsätze sind allen Mitgliedstaaten gemeinsam“.

Daß dies bereits heute schon auch die Mitgliedstaaten der EU verpflichtet, zeigen die Sanktionsmöglichkeiten des Art. 7 EUV, der in Amsterdam neu in das Unionsrecht aufgenommen wurde: „Auf Vorschlag eines Drittels der Mitgliedstaaten oder der Kommission und nach Zustimmung des Europäischen Parlaments kann der Rat, der in der Zusammensetzung der Staats- und Regierungschefs tagt, einstimmig feststellen, daß eine schwerwiegende und anhaltende Verletzung von in Artikel 6 Absatz 1 genannten Grundsätzen durch einen Mitgliedstaat vorliegt“. ¹ Wird unter diesen vertraglich klaren Voraussetzungen eine derartige Feststellung getroffen, so kann der Rat mit qualifizierter Mehrheit beschließen, bestimmte Rechte auszusetzen, die sich aus der Anwendung des Vertrags auf den betroffenen Mitgliedstaat herleiten, einschließlich des Stimmrechts im Rat (vgl. Art. 7 Abs. 2 EUV). Dabei muß der Rat allerdings die möglichen Auswirkungen einer solchen Aussetzung auf die Rechte und Pflichten natürlicher und juristischer Personen berücksichtigen.

Die Formulierungen des Art. 6 EUV gewährleisten allerdings keinen Individualschutz. Hier ist die bereits erwähnte Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs von Bedeutung. In einer Vielzahl von EuGH-Urteilen wurde die Verpflichtung der EU zur Achtung der Grundrechte bestätigt und ausgeformt.

¹ Interessanterweise haben sich die Staats- und Regierungschefs der EU auch bei der prophylaktischen Androhung von Sanktionen (Erklärung der portugiesischen Ratspräsidentschaft vom 31.01.2000) im Falle einer mißliebigen österreichischen Regierungskoalition auf diese beiden EUV-Artikel berufen, was nicht nur in Österreich, sondern auch bei EU-Rechtsexperten heftig umstritten ist. Schon ein erster Blick zeigt aber, daß hier weder die materiellen, noch die formellen Voraussetzungen des Vorgehens korrekt waren.

3. Zu den Inhalten einer Grundrechtscharta

Wie umfassend und detailliert der Inhalt einer solchen „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ sein soll, ist umstritten. Zum Teil wird sogar die Notwendigkeit einer eigenständigen Kodifikation der Grundrechte überhaupt angezweifelt und auf das Vorhandensein der EMRK verwiesen, welche nach dieser Position ausreicht, um Grundrechtsschutz zu gewähren.

Nach Auffassung des Europäischen Rates allerdings soll die geplante „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ die Freiheits- und Gleichheitsrechte sowie die Verfahrensgrundrechte umfassen, wie sie in der EMRK und entsprechend der gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten bestehen. Darüber hinausgehend sollen in ihr die Grundrechte enthalten sein, die nur den Unionsbürgern zustehen (z.B. Niederlassungsrecht). In Köln haben die Staats- und Regierungschefs zudem beschlossen, daß bei der Ausarbeitung der Charta auch wirtschaftliche und soziale Rechte „zu berücksichtigen“ sind, wie sie in der Europäischen Sozialcharta und in der Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer (vgl. Art. 136 EGV) enthalten sind.

Gerade die zuletzt genannten Punkte sind aber politisch sehr umstritten.

Letztlich steht das Projekt einer „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ vor der Frage, inwieweit als Ergebnis lediglich ein Minimalkonsens (status quo, oder eventuell ein status quo minus) vereinbart werden kann, ob eine sinnvolle Aktualisierung der heute verstreut vorhandenen Grundrechte in Frage kommt (z.B. Datenschutz, Recht auf Zugang zu Informationen etc.) oder ob – was problematisch wäre – im Rahmen von Kompromissen als Ergebnis die Summe aller potentiell Wünschbaren ins Haus stehen könnte.

4. Zusammensetzung des Gremiums und Arbeitsmethode

Bevor an die konkrete Arbeit gegangen werden konnte, mußte geklärt werden, „wer, was, zu welchem Ziel, in welcher Frist und mit welcher Methode“ in Angriff nehmen sollte. Anfänglich war heftig umstritten, ob das Gremium eher eine Art konventioneller Regierungskonferenz sein sollte und in welchem Umfang Mitglieder der nationalen Volksvertretungen und des Europäischen Parlaments im Gremium repräsentiert würden.

Der Europäische Rat legte schließlich fest, zur Ausarbeitung eines solchen Entwurfs einer „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ eine Ad-hoc-Instanz einzuberufen, die sich aus Vertretern unterschiedlicher Institutionen zusammensetzt. Die Zusammensetzung dieses Gremiums, dessen Grundzüge bereits in Köln skizziert wurden, wurde auf der Tagung des Europäischen Rates am 15. und 16. Oktober 1999 in Tampere präzisiert.

Mitglieder des Gremiums

Das Gremium umfaßt 62 Mitglieder, die in vier Gruppen eingeteilt werden können:

- fünfzehn Beauftragte der Staats- und Regierungschefs der Mitgliedstaaten,*
- ein Beauftragter der Kommission,*
- sechzehn Mitglieder des Europäischen Parlaments,*
- dreißig Mitglieder der nationalen Parlamente.*

Die Mitglieder des Gremiums können sich im Verhinderungsfalle durch Stellvertreter vertreten lassen. (vgl. die Mitgliederliste im Anhang)

Von deutscher Seite sind Mitglieder des Gremiums Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog (Beauftragter der Bundesregierung); Prof. Dr. Jürgen Meyer, MdB (SPD) (Deutscher Bundestag); Peter Altmaier, MdB (CDU) (Stellvertreter); Jürgen Gnauck (Thüringen) (Bundesrat); Wolf Weber (Niedersachsen) (Bundesrat, Stellvertreter); Deutsche EP-Abgeordnete im Gremium sind: Ingo Friedrich (CSU/EVP), Hans-Peter Martin (SPD/SPE), Martin Schulz (SPD/SPE), Sylvia-Yvonne Kaufmann (PDS/KVEL/NGL) sowie Peter Michael Mombaur (CDU/EVP, Stellvertreter).

Die Beobachter

Es gibt vier Beobachter, und zwar zwei Vertreter des Gerichtshofs der Europäischen Gemeinschaften, die von diesem benannt werden, und zwei Vertreter des Europarates, darunter einer des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte.

Zu hörende Einrichtungen der Europäischen Union

- Wirtschafts- und Sozialausschuß*
- Ausschuß der Regionen*
- Europäischer Bürgerbeauftragter*

Darüber hinaus können sonstige Gremien, gesellschaftliche Gruppen oder Sachverständige gehört werden (noch offen).

Der Europäische Rat hat in Tampere ferner vorgesehen, daß ein angemessener Gedankenaustausch des Gremiums oder seines Vorsitzenden mit den Beitrittsländern stattfinden soll.

Geklärt ist mittlerweile auch die Frage des Vorsitzes. Der Vorsitz rotiert nicht halbjährlich zwischen Vertretern aus den Staaten, die jeweils die EU-Ratspräsidenschaft innehaben, vielmehr hat sich der insbesondere vom Europäischen Parlament nachdrücklich vertretene Gedanke durchgesetzt, einen Vorsitzenden für die gesamte Wirkungsdauer aus der Mitte des Gremiums zu wählen, wodurch die Unabhängigkeit des Gremiums gegenüber dem Rat unterstrichen wird.

Bei der konstituierenden Sitzung des Gremiums am 17. Dezember 1999 wurde der ehemalige deutsche Bundespräsident Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog zum Vorsitzenden gewählt.

Als drei gleichberechtigte Stellvertreter wurden aus den drei großen Delegationen bestimmt:

- Gunnar Janson (Finnland) für die nationalen Parlamentsabgeordneten,
- Iñigo Mendez de Vigo (EVP, Spanien) für das Europäische Parlament sowie
- Pedro Bacelar de Vasconcellos (Portugal) als Beauftragter der EU-Präsidenschaft.

Der Vorsitzende und die Stellvertreter haben anschließend ein Arbeitsprogramm für das weitere Vorgehen entworfen, worüber bei der folgenden Plenarsitzung am 1./2. Februar 2000 beraten wurde. Zu klären waren Arbeitsmethode und Vorgehensweise einschließlich eines Zeitplans (s. unten). Entsprechend der Vorgaben des Europäischen Rates von Tampere kann das Gremium Ad-hoc-Arbeitsgruppen einsetzen, die allen Mitgliedern des Gremiums offenstehen.

Koordiniert werden diese Arbeiten durch einen Redaktionsausschuß, der sich aus dem Vorsitzenden, den drei stellvertretenden Vorsitzenden sowie dem Vertreter der Kommission zusammensetzt und der vom Generalsekretariat des Rates unterstützt wird.

5. Transparenz und Öffentlichkeit

Anders als bei Regierungskonferenzen oder Ausschuarbeiten wird die Ausarbeitung der Charta völlig transparent sein: Grundsätzlich sollen die Sitzungen des Gremiums und die in diesen Sitzungen vorgelegten Dokumente der Öffentlichkeit zugänglich sein.

Damit sich die interessierte europäische Öffentlichkeit ein aktuelles Bild von den Arbeiten an der Grundrechtscharta machen kann, wurde zur Umsetzung des Transparenzgrundsatzes eine eigene Internet-Website eingerichtet. Die Website, die in allen elf Amtssprachen angeboten wird, soll die Öffentlichkeit über den Zeitplan und den Inhalt der Beratungen des Gremiums informieren, ihr alle im Verlauf der Erörterungen des Gremiums vorgelegten Dokumente zugänglich machen sowie alle von außerhalb vorgelegten Beiträge, die dem Gremium unterbreitet werden, aufnehmen und einordnen. Die Adresse lautet < <http://db.consilium.eu.int/df/> > .

Ebenso wurde für externe Nutzer eine spezielle E-mail-Adresse zur Verfügung gestellt, über die eine Kontaktaufnahme mit dem Gremium möglich ist:

< fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int >. Auf der Website befinden sich spezielle Angaben über die Form von Dokumenten und zur Dokumentensuche.

6. Zeitplan

Nach den Plenarsitzungen vom 17.12.1999 und 1./2.2.2000 wird das Gremium am 21./22.3. und 5./6.6.2000 erneut in Brüssel gesamthaft zusammentreten. Ab Ende Februar finden zum Teil in ein- bis zweiwöchigen Abständen im Parlaments- und im Ratsgebäude Arbeitstreffen statt.

Auf der Grundlage des Arbeitsplans und unter Berücksichtigung der Formulierungsvorschläge der Mitglieder soll der Redaktionsausschuß noch vor der Sommerpause 2000 einen ersten Entwurf der Charta erstellen, die dann bis Oktober überarbeitet und dem Europäischen Rat übergeben werden kann (vgl. den Zeitplan im Anhang).

In welcher Form das Gremium selbst letztlich über den Entwurf befinden wird (z.B. die Frage einer qualifizierten Abstimmungs Mehrheit bei der Schlußabstimmung), ist gegenwärtig noch nicht entschieden.

7. Bewertung des Vorhabens

Im derzeitigen Anfangsstadium der Arbeiten kann noch wenig über die inhaltlichen Ergebnisse gesprochen werden. Allerdings lassen die heute bekannten und in mancher Hinsicht recht detailverliebten Vorschläge für die Grundrechtscharta befürchten, daß die Charta inhaltlich überfrachtet werden könnte. Schon der Auftrag des Kölner Gipfels war zu weit gefaßt. Es kann nicht jeder Wunsch und jede Forderung zu einem EU-Grundrecht werden.

Noch nicht abschließend geklärt ist die Frage, ob der auszuarbeitende Entwurf tatsächlich ein justitierbarer Rechtstext werden soll oder ob er – wegen der zu befürchtenden Aufblähung – eine letztlich unverbindliche politische Erklärung wird. Wenn das Ziel, die Grundrechte in der Union zusammenzufassen und dadurch „für die Unionsbürger sichtbarer“ zumachen, aber ernst gemeint ist, dürfen sich die Arbeiten nicht darauf beschränken, eine Art „Werbefroschüre für Europa“ zu produzieren.

Das weitere Vorgehen ist noch offen: In den Schlußfolgerungen des Europäischen Rates von Köln wird der Entwurf als Grundlage für eine „feierlich zu proklamierende“ interinstitutionelle Erklärung zwischen Rat, Parlament und Kommission eingestuft, wobei „im Anschluß daran geprüft“ wird, „ob und gegebenenfalls auf welche Weise“ der Text in die Verträge aufgenommen werden kann. Wenn beabsichtigt ist, die Charta als Rechtstext in die Verträge (bzw. konkret in den EU-Vertrag) aufzunehmen, müssen aber die Arbeiten im Gremium entsprechend gestaltet und daraufhin konzentriert werden. Die Entscheidung darüber kann nicht bis Herbst aufbewahrt werden.

Die Zusammensetzung des Gremiums ist ein innovativer Schritt. Anders als bei früheren Reformkonferenzen sind hier die zentralen Akteure in der EU und ihren Mitgliedstaaten vertreten, so daß das Gremium einen recht hohen Grad an Repräsentativität besitzt. Insofern besteht die Chance, daß mögliche Ergebnisse nicht schon im Vorhinein in Frage gestellt und zerredet werden. Es wird zu prüfen sein, inwieweit diese Zusammensetzung modellhaft für künftige Reformkonferenzen sein kann.

Positiv ist der Ansatz, die Öffentlichkeit umfassend über die Tätigkeiten zu informieren und den Bürgern und gesellschaftlichen Gruppen über das Internet die Möglichkeit der Einbindung in die Arbeiten zu geben. Von entscheidender Wichtigkeit für den Erfolg des Projektes wird es aber sein, ob und wie die Politiker das Thema in der Öffentlichkeit vermitteln.

Problematisch ist nicht zuletzt der Zeitdruck, unter dem das Vorhaben steht. Es stellt sich die Frage, ob die Qualität des ambitionierten Vorhabens dadurch nicht leiden könnte. Allerdings bietet der knappe Zeitrahmen auch die Chance, sich auf das Wesentliche zu beschränken.

Das Vorhaben der Ausarbeitung einer „Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union“ steht in engem Zusammenhang mit der ebenfalls in diesem Jahr aus-zuarbeitenden institutionellen Reform des EU-Rechts. Zu bedauern ist, daß keine personelle und inhaltliche Verknüpfung beider Projekte vorgenommen wurde. Beide Vorhaben sind ein Beitrag zur Reform der bereits bestehenden, aber fragmentierten Verfassung der Europäischen Union.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 14 mars 2000CHARTE 4161/00*CONTRIB 45*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution du Conseil Central des Communautés Philosophiques non Confessionnelles de Belgique (CCL-CVR) ^{1 2}

¹ CCL - CVR: Campus de la Plaine, ULB CP 236 Avenue A. Fraiteur, 1050 Bruxelles.
Tél: +32-2627 6811. Fax: +32-2-627 6801.

² Ce texte a été soumis uniquement en langue française.

Contribution du CCL-CVR à la Charte des droits fondamentaux

Vocation humaniste de l'Europe

En Europe ont convergé les apports de divers courants de sensibilité et de pensée. L'humanisme est fait de toutes les valeurs qui ont germé dans ces différentes cultures. De nombreux courants ont contribué d'une manière ou d'une autre à la formation de l'humanisme moderne : certes, ils ont également recelé des tendances anti-humanistes et ont pu entrer parfois en contradiction les uns avec les autres.

On peut retenir les principales valeurs constitutives de l'humanisme, dont l'Europe a été le creuset. Tout d'abord, au-delà de toutes distinctions ou situations, la dignité égale de toute personne humaine, d'où découlent la liberté et la justice comme exigences indivisibles et universelles. Cette valeur inconditionnelle, irréductible, doit être affirmée comme présumé incontournable. Il s'agit là d'un sentiment commun, d'une conviction, qui se sont progressivement imposés au cours de l'histoire, et qui marquent chaque homme, quelles que soient les motivations diverses dont on les étaye.

La reconnaissance de l'égalité de dignité de toute personne humaine, femme ou homme, induit un type de société qui permet et favorise la dimension foncièrement relationnelle de la liberté humaine. Même régulée par des lois, d'ailleurs en constant remaniement, cette société doit s'ouvrir à la possibilité de transgressions responsables car celles-ci sont le ferment indispensable d'autonomie personnelle et de progrès des institutions.

La conscience de la fragilité de tout système suscite des structures ouvertes aptes à l'écoute, au dialogue, au changement. D'où le refus de tout "intégrisme" et la capacité d'intégrer du nouveau. Cette mémoire, qui confère à l'Europe une chance et une responsabilité spécifiques, doit cependant nous rappeler aussi les dérives particulièrement graves dont elle porte le poids.

Le brassage des cultures qui a fait l'identité européenne et sa richesse impose aux gouvernants et aux citoyens de l'Europe un devoir d'ouverture et d'acceptation de la diversité. Enfin, les valeurs de tolérance et d'humanisme qui constituent le patrimoine commun et le ciment de l'Europe moderne, au-delà des différences nationales, régionales ou traditionnelles implique dans le chef de toute autorité publique une rigoureuse impartialité à l'égard de toutes les conceptions philosophiques ou religieuses et la garantie de l'indépendance de la sphère privée des citoyens en matière d'option confessionnelle ou non confessionnelle.

Les valeurs communes européennes exigent de toutes les institutions publiques, celles de l'Union et celles des Etats, un rigoureux devoir d'impartialité et la garantie de la dignité des personnes et des droits humains.

Par leur adhésion aux différents traités et à l'Union, les Etats membres garantissent en leur nom et au nom des institutions européennes l'égalité de tous devant la loi sans distinction de sexe, d'origine, de culture, de conviction ou de choix de vie.

Relations de l'Union européenne avec les Églises

Sous "l'Ancien Régime", les Églises (le plus fréquemment seule l'Église de la religion dominante) intervenaient dans les affaires de la Cité.

Actuellement les Églises se considèrent toujours comme porte-parole de valeurs, de normes et de règles de vie que tous les citoyens sont censés partager. On constate que des fidèles, de plus en plus nombreux et même ceux d'entre eux qui recourent à des cérémonies religieuses, ne suivent plus les mots d'ordre de leur Église et souvent contestent ceux-ci en de nombreuses matières.

Les Églises ne sont plus représentatives de l'ensemble de leurs fidèles et certainement pas de l'ensemble des citoyens dont un nombre de plus en plus important n'adhère plus à aucune Église. Il faut remarquer que plusieurs d'entre elles sont organisées de manière non démocratique.

Le cas de l'Église catholique est particulier car elle a la possibilité d'intervenir par le biais de l'État du Saint Siège, État lequel n'a pas adhéré et n'est pas en condition d'adhérer à la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme.

Une charte des droits fondamentaux doit affirmer la laïcité des institutions européennes et le principe d'impartialité qui implique qu'aucune conception religieuse ou philosophique particulière ne peut bénéficier d'un traitement privilégié (ce qui implique notamment le retrait du statut d'observateur et des privilèges diplomatiques accordés à un Etat sans peuple, tel le Vatican.)

Aucune scorie de l'histoire ne peut plus justifier l'ingérence d'une autorité religieuse, quelle qu'elle soit, dans les affaires publiques de l'Union ou des Etats membres.

Une charte des droits fondamentaux doit relever qu'au même titre que tout autre groupe de pression ou tout mouvement associatif les Eglises peuvent être entendues par les autorités publiques de l'Union ou des Etats membres, mais que ces consultations éventuelles ne peuvent être institutionnalisées, ni donner l'apparence d'une confessionnalisation de l'Europe ou d'un Etat membre, en contradiction avec l'idéal démocratique.

Une charte des droits fondamentaux doit faire référence à la liberté religieuse garantie, notamment par la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'Homme et par les Constitutions nationales des États membres de l'Union. La charte doit préciser que cette liberté essentielle instituée au bénéfice des personnes de toutes convictions, confessionnelles et non confessionnelles ne confère aucun privilège aux institutions religieuses, entièrement soumises à la loi commune. La charte doit aussi rappeler qu'aucune prescription religieuse ne peut avoir d'effet contraignant sous l'angle de la loi civile et que la force publique ne peut en aucune hypothèse y prêter main forte.

Neutralité des pouvoirs publics

L'acceptation du pluralisme induit une ouverture, une pratique de la tolérance à l'égard de la personne d'autrui et une stricte neutralité des pouvoirs publics des États et de l'Union à l'égard de toutes les convictions religieuses et philosophiques.

Pour autant que les fondements de la démocratie soient respectés, le principe de la séparation des Églises et de l'État implique:

- 1° la non-ingérence de toute organisation religieuse ou philosophique non confessionnelle dans les affaires des États et de l'Union.
- 2° la non-ingérence des États et de l'Union dans les affaires de toute organisation religieuse ou philosophique non confessionnelle. Un État se garde d'intervenir dans leur organisation interne, dans la définition de leurs positions éthiques ou encore dans la nomination de leurs représentants;
- 3° la garantie par les États et l'Union de la sphère d'autonomie de chaque individu quant à ses conceptions philosophiques ou religieuses;
- 4° dans le cas où les États et l'Union financent les organisations religieuses ou philosophiques non confessionnelles, ce financement doit répondre aux critères d'équité, de transparence et de démocratie interne de l'organisation subsidiée.
- 5° l'abandon par les États et l'Union de toutes les pratiques de participation à des cérémonies religieuses officielles ou encore l'attribution de places privilégiées aux représentants d'un seul culte qui tendent à présenter de facto le culte majoritaire comme religion d'État.

Dispositions établissant les relations entre les personnes morales de droit public et les organisations ou communautés religieuses ou philosophiques non confessionnelles.

Article 1er

Les prescriptions religieuses ne peuvent faire obstacle à la pleine jouissance et au plein exercice des droits civils et politiques. Elles ne peuvent davantage dispenser du respect de ces droits. Aucune prescription religieuse ne peut être retenue comme cause de justification, cause d'excuse ou de circonstance atténuante d'une infraction pénale.

Article 2

Les personnes morales de droit public ne peuvent, directement ou indirectement, organiser de cérémonies officielles qui font référence, notamment par des circonstances de temps ou de lieu, à une conception philosophique confessionnelle ou non confessionnelle.

Article 3

Les protocoles des pouvoirs publics donnent, de plein droit, la préséance aux corps constitués et aux autorités civiles. S'il y a lieu, ils attribuent aux représentants des organisations et communautés philosophiques ou religieuses un même rang protocolaire. Le titre de doyen du corps diplomatique est reconnu au diplomate, chef de corps accrédité, le plus ancien dans la fonction.

Article 4

Aucun bien meuble ou immeuble affecté à un service public ne peut contenir ou être orné de signe ou d'objet quelconque caractéristique d'une conception religieuse ou philosophique. Cette disposition ne concerne pas les signes ou objets exposés dans les musées ou expositions ou intégrés à des monuments et sites classés.

Respect de la personne et de la dignité humaine

La charte de droits fondamentaux devrait, sur ces questions, demeurer très générale.

La référence au respect de la personne et de la dignité humaine, s'appliquant aux questions éthiques, est très largement dépendante de l'état des connaissances scientifiques, à un moment déterminé, sur la question envisagée.

C'est la raison pour laquelle la Convention dite de biomédecine du Conseil de l'Europe prévoit une révision à intervalles réguliers. Même si une part de l'objectif de l'établissement d'une charte des droits fondamentaux peut être de rassurer des citoyens, il ne serait pas raisonnable d'inclure dans celle-ci des matières aussi sujettes à évolution que les tests génétiques, les pratiques de clonage ou de recherche sur embryons, pour ne citer que celles là.

Il convient de faire observer que les interdictions de recherches sont en contradiction avec la "liberté de recherche scientifique" qu'une charte européenne se doit de proclamer comme faisant partie de la grande tradition et du fonds commun de l'héritage européen.

La formule alternative de l'article 2 §2 telle qu'elle est proposée par le Présidium dans le document du 15 février 2000 paraît donc inappropriée alors que la formulation première, très générale, garde toute son importance: "nul ne peut être soumis à la torture, ni à des peines ou traitements inhumains ou dégradants".

D'autre part, la charte devrait prévoir d'assurer la dignité de la personne dans les conditions de travail.

Liberté d'expression

Toute personne a droit à la liberté d'expression. Ce droit ne peut être limité par des considérations d'ordre politique ou religieux.

Non discrimination

En complément des dispositions de l'article 13 (ex 6 A) du Traité de l'Union, il y aurait lieu d'ajouter dans la charte à l'article 19 § 1 de la proposition du Présidium:

La non discrimination entre les sexes comporte l'égalité entre les hommes et les femmes à l'accès aux charges publiques et privées et à la protection sociale.

Droit à l'éducation

Toute personne a droit à l'éducation.

1- Ce droit ne comporte pas l'obligation des pouvoirs publics de subventionner un enseignement autre qu'un enseignement ouvert à tous, en dehors de toute référence politique et religieuse. Les Pouvoirs publics ne peuvent imposer un enseignement religieux.

2- Les parents ont le droit d'assurer l'éducation religieuse ou philosophique de leurs enfants conformément à leurs convictions, dans un système éducatif visant à former des citoyens responsables, capables de contribuer au développement d'une société démocratique, solidaire, pluraliste et ouverte aux autres cultures.

Justificatif

La liberté de choix des parents ne peut avoir pour conséquence le renforcement de tendances anti-démocratiques ou intolérantes.

Commentaires

- 1- Pour éviter toute confusion ou reconnaître d'emblée qu'un enseignement de caractère confessionnel peut évidemment s'inscrire avec ses références philosophiques ou religieuses dans les objectifs visés ici, il suffit qu'il reconnaisse que d'autres valeurs, d'autres références sont aussi légitimes dans une société que celles qu'il a lui-même retenues.
- 2- Dans un tel système éducatif, les élèves y sont formés à reconnaître la pluralité des valeurs qui constituent l'humanisme. En ce sens, il fournit aux jeunes les éléments d'information qui contribuent au développement libre et graduel de leur personnalité et qui leur permette de comprendre les options différentes ou divergentes qui constituent l'opinion.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 15 March 2000 (16.03)
(OR. fr)*CHARTE 4162/00*CONTRIB 46*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union

Please find attached a contribution from the Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe.¹

¹ Text supplied in French, German and English.

PROJECT FOR THE CHART OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

CONTRIBUTION OF THE FEDERATION OF CATHOLIC FAMILY ASSOCIATIONS IN EUROPE

Paris March 7th 2000

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe groups numerous national family associations originating in divers European countries. It represents 5,5 million European families, or about 25 million persons.

Strengthened by this mandate and conscious of the importance of the future European Chart of Fundamental Rights, we intend to submit the fruit of our experience to your reflection.

EXPOSURE OF MOTIVES

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe supports the reflection being currently devoted by the European Union to the elaboration of a Chart of Fundamental Rights conform to the conclusions formulated by the presidency at the European Councils of Cologne and Tampere. However, it is not the object of the FCFAE to take a stand on the constraining character of this Chart or on the rapport of jurisdictions between the European Court of Justice and the European Court on Human Rights.

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe,

- Rejoicing that fundamental rights have benefited from constant attention on behalf of the European Court of Justice as well as the Council of Ministers,
- Concerned the European fundamental rights remain faithful to their philosophical and religious foundation, notably by a just understanding of the dignity of the human person and his life environment,
- Considering the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaimed by the United Nations' General Assembly of 10 December 1948, in particular Article 1 (All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.)
- Considering the European Convention of the Protection of the Human Rights and Fundamental Liberties, adopted by the Council of Europe on the 4 November 1950, and in particular its Articles 8 and 12,

- Considering the revised European Social Chart, adopted by the Council of Europe on the 3 May 1996, and in particular its Articles 16, 17 and 19,
- Considering the principle of subsidiarity of citizens, families, cities, regions, nations and States, which implies the respect of the national and the regional laws of the member countries and the candidate countries,
- Considering that there are fundamental duties which correspond to fundamental rights
- Reminding all that the family, the community of the life of a man and a woman, founded upon the stable public engagement of marriage and open to life, structures society and assures its cohesion, and that it is the only social cell capable of transmitting life, all the while offering to the child an adapted educative milieu, and that the family consequently merits having its' legal recognition, protection and promotion reinforced within the fundamental rights .
- Considering that child's rights, and notably as they are guaranteed on the international level by the United Nations Convention on Child's Rights of 1989, are an integral part of fundamental rights, and in particular in its preamble and its Articles 5 and 18,
- Reiterating that the first right of a child is that of a "protected childhood" within the heart of a stable family and that law must favor this protection and stability,
- Concerned that the contribution of families to the economic activity of the European Union, and that their importance as a factor of growth as investors, educators and consumers be justly appreciated,
- Desirous that particular attention be accorded to the educative tasks accomplished within the heart of the family, and that the family's irreplaceable value on the human, social, cultural, as well as economic levels, be taken into account,

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe insists that the following rights be guaranteed within the framework of the Chart of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

RESOLUTION

The first human right is the right to life. The respect of human life extends to all ages of life, whatever may be the state of health of the person.

The right to contract a marriage, as the union of a man and a woman, and the right to found a family must be recognized, if the future spouses have reached the required age and unite the conditions demanded in this case by national laws, to the extent that these laws do not conflict with the fundamental principles established in the present chart. The marriage can only be contracted with the free and full consent of the future spouses.

The family is the natural and fundamental element of society. It has the right to specific economic, juridical and social protection, notably by the means of social and family benefits, by fiscal measures, by the encouragement to build lodgings adapted to the needs of families, by help given to young households, and by all and any other appropriate measures.

Every child has the right to be raised by its natural or adoptive parents. The European Union will respect the right of parents to assure the education of their children conform to their religious and philosophical convictions.

Migrant families have the right to the same social protection as that accorded to other families.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 15 March 2000

CHARTE 4163/00

CONTRIB 47

COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a Memorandum of the Dutch Standing Committee of experts on international immigration, refugee and criminal law, written as evidence for the inquiry of the European Communities Committee Sub-Committee E (Law and Institutions) of the House of Lords of the United Kingdom. ^{1 2}

¹ Dutch Standing Committee of experts on international immigration, refugee and criminal law: P.O. Box 201, 3500 AE Utrecht, the Netherlands. Tel: + 31-30 297 4328.

Fax: +31-30 296 0050. E-mail: cie.meijers@forum.imo.nl

² This text has been submitted in English only.

MEMORANDUM ON THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS
BY
THE STANDING COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS
ON INTERNATIONAL IMMIGRATION, REFUGEE AND CRIMINAL LAW

for the European Communities Committee Sub-Committee E (Law and Institutions) of the House of Lords

February 2000

P.O.Box 201
3500 AE Utrecht
the Netherlands

tel: +31 30 297 4328
fax: +31 30 296 0050
email: cie.meijers@forum.imo.nl

MEMORANDUM ON THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS
BY
THE STANDING COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS
ON INTERNATIONAL IMMIGRATION, REFUGEE AND CRIMINAL LAW

1. Introduction

The Standing Committee of Experts on International Immigration, Refugee and Criminal Law is pleased to give evidence to Sub-Committee E of the House of Lords on the important subject of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. We welcome inquiries in national parliaments in advance of decision-making which can contribute to proper deliberation in a public forum on a controversial initiative to adopt a Charter by the end of the current IGC. We would bring to the Sub-Committee's attention the fact that a similar initiative was undertaken by the Dutch members of the 'Convention' preparing the EU Charter. Several members of our Committee have actively participated in the hearing organized in The Hague, in order to assist the Dutch representatives in the process of assessing the Charter's potential implications.¹

In our opinion, the proposed EU Charter raises difficult legal questions as to how precisely it must be positioned within the legal order of the European Union, its precise scope, what its relationship will be with other international systems of human rights protection, in particular that of the European Convention on Human Rights, and how the substantive rights it confers can be enforced and applied in practice.

One of the main avowed purposes of this EU Charter is the political drive to appear to do something concrete for the citizen in the EU, something he or she can directly relate to. The question is of course whether a non-binding declaration of existing fundamental rights without a specific means of redress will indeed fulfil the function of doing something that the citizen can as such directly relate to in the context of the EU. Another purpose must be, in the light of recent fraud and corruption scandals at the level of the EU, to address concerns about the lack of accountability of EU institutions as actors in the political and administrative decision-making process. The idea presumably is in this context that by providing a visible focus of the fundamental rights context within which these institutions operate the citizen will recover confidence in the EU integration process as a whole. Finally there is the related wish to codify in the context of the text of the EU Treaties themselves a list of the applicable fundamental rights provisions in the application of Community and or Union law. This would address concerns about the current structural lack of transparency of the system of fundamental rights protection which essentially relies upon the role of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg in "discovering", interpreting and applying these norms. It is of course impossible for the citizen to understand at present how precisely the provisions at national level, in the European Convention on Human Rights and the Court's case-law interact nor what the practical consequences of such interaction might be.

¹ Public hearing of 21 February 2000, written report not yet available.

Memorandum on the EU Charter

But do we really need another charter at the international level in order to fulfil these functions? Is the risk not that an additional “Charter of Human Rights” at the European level will not only threaten to undermine the position of the European Convention on Human Rights but would also considerably add to the fragmentation of human rights protection at the international level?

We have in particular been asked for our views on the need for and the status, scope and content of the EU Charter and we address each of these issues in turn.

2. The Need for an EU Human Rights Charter

The epicenter of human rights protection in Europe is without doubt the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) and the supervisory system it sets in place. The ECHR was drafted on the presumption that all implementation and applicability of the law is the responsibility of a single (clearly identified) state². The question arose decades ago with regard to the European Community, that since the Community is itself not a party to the ECHR, does that imply that, by transferring power to the Communities, it was possible for the Member States to de facto deprive their citizens from the very protection previously enjoyed by virtue both of the terms of the ECHR itself (as well as by virtue of their national constitutions)? The answer by now is well known and national constitutional courts, the Court of Justice and the supervisory organs in Strasbourg all ultimately adopted a tandem approach accepting the pivotal (and exclusive) role of the Court of Justice in ensuring the protection of human rights within the scope of Community law as a specific instance of a "general principle" of Community law.

The Court of Justice, in the absence of any express provision in the Treaties themselves, "incorporated" in a certain sense the provisions of the ECHR as well as principles gleaned from the constitutional traditions of the Member States into the Community legal order. The Court thereby successfully fought off the threat posed by rebellious constitutional courts in various Member States as well as the risk that the Strasbourg organs would assume human rights jurisdiction over matters falling within the scope of Community law. Measures incompatible with fundamental human rights were deemed to be unacceptable and judicial protection of those rights took root in the Community legal order. Respect for human rights became a condition of the lawfulness of Community acts and is supervised by the Court of Justice itself. In addition, national acts or measures in so far as they have effects falling within the scope of Community will also be scrutinized for their compatibility with the human rights norms developed by the Court of Justice.

As is well known the European Commission on Human Rights responded to the Court of Justice's established line of case law by asserting that it had no jurisdiction in actions brought by private individuals directly or indirectly against the European Communities. One of the major factors in prompting this reply by the European Commission on Human Rights was the protection provided by the Court of Justice in the Community legal system.³

² See Article 25 of the original version of the Convention: "The Commission may receive petitions...claiming to be a violation by one of the High Contracting Parties..." (cf. Article 34 of the Convention as amended by Protocol No. 11).

³ See the decisions of 10 July 1978, CFDT v. European Communities, No. 8030/77, DR 13, p. 231; of 19 January 1989, Dufay v. European Communities, No. 13539/88 and of 9 February 1990, M and Co v. Federal Republic of Germany, No. 13258/87, DR 64, p. 138.

Memorandum on the EU Charter

Over the years however much criticism has been voiced as to the approach of the Court of Justice in this regard. The criticism ranged from worry as to the possibility that the two courts in question (Strasbourg and Luxembourg) could give divergent interpretations of the same provision of the ECHR despite the so-called “incorporation” of the ECHR into the Community legal order⁴ to the more aggressive accusation that the Court of Justice did not take human rights seriously.⁵ The complexity and unclear nature of the institutional system for the individuals affected (Strasbourg incorporated in Luxembourg and applied by the Luxembourg judges but only within the scope of application of Community law) was also emphasized.⁶

In these circumstances the possibility of the Community simply acceding as such to the ECHR has featured prominently over the years in institutional debates about the reform of the EC. Indeed, it has long been assumed that accession by the EC to the ECHR would be the best way forward, both symbolically but also in terms of ensuring control by an external judge.⁷ The accession option became however much more unlikely since the Court of Justice's opinion to the effect that the Community did not currently possess the legal capacity to accede, largely on institutional-technical grounds.⁸ What seems to have sotte voce been a key consideration was the fact that upon accession the Strasbourg Court would have had the last word on human rights matters and that this might prove incompatible with the Court of Justice's perception of the entire system of EU judicial remedies.

In our view the key problem in the current approach to human rights protection at the EU level is the lack of structural visibility of fundamental rights in the legal order of the European Union. It can reasonably be argued that fundamental rights can only fulfil their function if both legislators and citizens are aware of their existence. When drafting legislation, decision makers should be guided by an authoritative set of basic rights and fundamental freedoms which form the foundations of their society; individuals should be conscious of their ability to enforce these rights. It is consequently crucial to express and present fundamental rights in a way that permits the individual to know and access them: fundamental rights must be visible. It is in this regard in particular that the current regulation of human rights in the EU legal order falls short. Fundamental rights are not elaborated in the text of the EU Treaties as such, with a few almost haphazard exceptions (right of access to information, right of non-discrimination and right to equal pay). This makes it extremely difficult for both the Community legislator and the individual to know in a structured fashion what rights are entitled to protection in the Community legal order and by what means they are to be enforced.

⁴ See, for example, R. Lawson, “Confusion and Conflict? Diverging Interpretations of the European Convention on Human Rights in Strasbourg and Luxembourg” in R. Lawson and M. de Blois (eds.) The Dynamics of the Protection of Human Rights in Europe. Essays in Honour of H.G.Schermers, Vol. III, (Dordrecht, 1994), p. 219-252.

⁵ See, J. Coppel and A. O’Neill, “The European Court of Justice: Taking Rights Seriously?” 29 CML Rev. (1992), p. 669-692.

⁶ See, A. Clapham, “A human rights policy for the European Community” in Yearbook of European Law, vol. 10 (1990), p. 309-366.

⁷ See, for example, the President of the Court of Justice himself, Rodriguez Iglesias, in: The protection of fundamental rights in the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Community, Columbia Journal of European Law, 1 (1995) p. 169.

⁸ See, Opinion 2/94 of 28 march 1996, ECR 1996, pp. I-1759. See for further comments N. Burrows, Question of Community Accession to the European Convention Determined, E.L. Rev. 22 (1997), pp. 58-63; G. Gaja, ECJ-Opinion 2/94: Accession by the EC to the ECHR, CMLR 33 (1996), pp. 973-989; T. Jaag, Beitritt der EG zur EMRK?, Aktuelle Juristische Praxis 5 (1996), pp. 980-984; S. O’Leary, Accession by the European Community to the European Convention on Human Rights - The Opinion of the EJC, EHRLR (1996), pp. 362-377; H.G. Schermers, Toetreding van de EG tot het EVRM: Het Hof van Justitie adviseert, NJCM-Bulletin 21 (1996), pp. 874-883; C. Vedder, Anmerkung zum Gutachten 2/94, EMRK, des EuGH, EuR 31 (1996), pp. 309-319; P. Wachsmann, L’avis 2/94 de la Cour de justice relatif à l’adhésion de la Communauté européenne à la Convention de sauvegarde des droits de l’homme et des libertés fondamentales, RTD eur. 32 (1996), pp. 467-491.

Memorandum on the EU Charter

This structural invisibility was only rectified to a limited extent in the Treaty of Amsterdam. That Treaty essentially affirmed the practice of the Court by providing that the Union “shall respect fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention [on Human Rights] ... and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as general principles of Community law”. This approach displays once more the uncertain status of fundamental rights in the Community legal order: they are to be qualified as “general principles” of Community law, on a par with other judicially developed general principles such as the principle of proportionality and the principle of legitimate expectations but with no clear hierarchy in the Community legal system. Moreover it is clear from the wording used that the provisions of the ECHR are not binding as such but rather a source of inspiration for the Court alongside the national constitutional traditions in working out what are the applicable standards at the Community level.

At the last IGC, the Dutch Addendum to the Dublin Draft Treaty involved the reinforcement of the role of the Court of Justice in the protection of human rights within the European Union. It entailed the amendment of the EU Treaty so that the EU would be bound by the terms of the ECHR as such and not merely as discretionary elements of the “general principles” of Community law (the current situation). This would have involved some alteration of what the late Federico Mancini famously termed the ECJ’s “genetic code”⁹. Instead the Amsterdam treaty in its final form rather more weakly provided that its terms must be “guaranteed” as “general principles of law” which represented essentially the status quo. Experience has shown that this does not mean that the provisions of the ECHR are binding as such and without further ado in the Union legal system but rather that due account is taken of the provisions and the interpretation given by the Strasbourg supervisory organs without interfering with the discretion of the ECJ in the final instance.

The fact that this discretion may indeed involve the ECJ explicitly departing from the interpretation of the Strasbourg Court on a provision of the ECHR has recently been explicitly confirmed by the ECJ itself. In the Emesa case the applicant, who was litigating before the ECJ, sought leave to submit observations in response to the Opinion of the Advocate General. In this connection the applicant relied on well-established case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, according to which the right to adversarial proceedings entails that the parties to a criminal or civil trial must have the opportunity to have knowledge of and comment on all evidence adduced or observations filed, including the submissions of the Advocate General before the highest national jurisdictions.¹⁰ The ECJ, however, rejected this argument, concluding that the “case-law of the European Court of Human Rights does not appear to be transposable to the Opinion of the Court’s Advocates General”.¹¹

Of course, one may share the ECJ’s analysis or disagree – but the point is that the ECJ’s ruling cannot be reviewed by the organ specifically charged with the interpretation and application of the ECHR: the European Court of Human Rights.

⁹ F. Mancini and D. Keeling, “Language, Culture and Politics in the Life of the European Court of Justice”, Columbia Journal of European Law 1 (1995), p. 397.

¹⁰ See, inter alia, the judgments of: 20 February 1996 in Vermeulen v Belgium (Reports of Judgments and Decisions, 1996, p. 224); 20 February 1996 in Lobo Machado v Portugal, Reports 1996, p. 195); 25 June 1997 in Van Orshoven v Belgium, Reports 1997, p. 1040); 27 March 1998 in J.J. and K.D.B. v Netherlands, Reports 1998, pp. 604 and 621); and most recently 8 February 2000, Voisine v France (n.y.r.), paragraph 30.

¹¹ Case C-17/98, Emesa Sugar (Free Zone) NV v. Aruba, judgement of 4 February 2000.

Memorandum on the EU Charter

At any rate it seems safe to say that the ECJ is not applying the terms of the ECHR as interpreted by the Strasbourg Court, but rather that it enjoys considerable discretion with regard to its formulation of the general principles within the Community legal order.¹² This reinforces in our view the need to reinforce the structural visibility of the substantive rights applicable in the EC/EU context. In this sense one can speak of a “need” to formulate and adopt an EU Charter.

At the same time the status quo has changed in Strasbourg too since Matthews v. United Kingdom. This case arose from the fact that Gibraltar was excluded from participating in the direct elections to the European Parliament. The United Kingdom was of the opinion that it was not liable for this exclusion under the terms of the ECHR since Community law was at the origin of this exclusion. The Court disagreed and concluded that the United Kingdom had indeed violated article 3 of the First Protocol to the Convention and was responsible for the violations of the Convention even where the power in question had been transferred to an international organization. It ruled that:

“The Convention does not exclude the transfer of competences to international organizations provided that Convention rights continue to be “secured”. Member States’ responsibility therefore continues even after such a transfer.

In the present case, the alleged violation of the Convention flows from an annex to the 1976 Act, entered into by the United Kingdom, together with the extension to the European Parliament’s competencies brought about by the Maastricht Treaty. [...] The United Kingdom, together with all the other parties to the Maastricht Treaty, is responsible ratione materiae under Article 1 of the Convention and, in particular, under Article 3 of Protocol No. 1, for the consequences of that Treaty.

The suggestion that the United Kingdom may not have effective control over the state of affairs complained of cannot affect the position, as the United Kingdom’s responsibility derives from its having entered into treaty commitments subsequent to the applicability of Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to Gibraltar”.¹³

This seems to be quite a clear signal from the Court in Strasbourg that it is entering a new phase in its relationship with international organizations in general and the European Union in particular. In other words, the “need” for an EU Charter within the context of the EU has been shown if individual (or collective) Member State liability for breach of the Convention is to be avoided within the scope of EU law.

3. The Status of an EU Human Rights Charter

It is difficult to comment in the abstract on the status of a Charter the legal context of which has not been decided upon. It would however seem logical and desirable to incorporate any such Charter into the EU treaty as such, either in the preliminary general provisions as a separate, albeit rather detailed article or else to use the instrument of a protocol to the treaty as the more specific working out of a general provision included within the introductory provisions to the EU treaty. Such protocol would in principle have the same legal status as the substantive provisions of the treaties themselves. In our view it is essential that the proposed charter of fundamental rights is inserted into the EU treaty as such and thus would cover in principle the full spectrum of activity by the EU as well as all the bodies and institutions operating in that context. It would not be acceptable to anno 2000 draw up a Charter, which would only apply, to activities by institutions operating within the more limited concept of the EC treaties.

¹² See also CFI, 20 April 1999, joined cases T-305/94 a.o., Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij a.o. v Commission, n.y.r., par. 419-420: “That case-law is [...] based on the existence of a general principle of Community law [...]. The fact that the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights [...] has evolved [...] therefore has no direct impact on the merits of the solutions adopted in those cases”.

¹³ ECHR, judgement of 18 February 1999 (n.y.r.), paragraphs 32-34.

Memorandum on the EU Charter

It is suggested that this is in line with the existing provisions of the Amsterdam treaty. The EU has acknowledged in diverse ways that it has an important role to play in promoting respect for human rights of those resident within the Union and of ensuring those rights are fully respected. The Amsterdam Treaty proclaims that “the Union is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law” while making it obvious that the Member States remain the principal guardians of human rights within their own territories¹⁴. Moreover, the Union attempts to staunchly defend human rights in its external affairs by inter alia insisting that those States seeking admission to the Union and those seeking cooperation agreements or aid or benefit from trade preferences undertake to respect human rights.¹⁵ If that undertaking is breached then the agreement in question can be suspended. Moreover since the Amsterdam Treaty any Member State violating human rights in a “serious and persistent” way can lose its rights under the Treaty.

Given the existing status quo of enforcement of fundamental rights by the Courts in Luxembourg with particular reference to the provisions of the ECHR, it is suggested that the legal status of the Charter must be a legally binding one and one which is subject to enforcement by judicial means. It is submitted that the most obvious way to ensure enforcement of the Charter in the EU legal order is by the Court of Justice itself. The main difference with the existing status quo would be that the legal status of the Charter and its incorporation of all the substantive rights into the EU legal order would entail that the rights and freedoms are clearly regulated and no longer have the status of “general principles” of EU law. Moreover the ECJ would be bound to apply the provisions of the ECHR as specifically incorporated into the Charter as such and would no longer enjoy its current discretion in that regard (as to the precise contents of the general principles and where precisely it seeks inspiration in so doing). The further development of the EU Charter as a “living instrument” would obviously be a matter for the Court of Justice although it may be considered desirable to further consider to what extent the Court of Justice will be bound in the future by the ongoing judgements of the Strasbourg Court on the interpretation of relevant provisions of the ECHR (in origin).

It is further submitted that as a matter of course the current system of judicial remedies will fully apply to the provisions of a binding Charter and that individuals and privileged complainants should be able to invoke violation of its terms as a ground for annulment of legal measures or other measures. One point which in our view requires separate consideration in this context is the question of amending the locus standi of individuals (and groups) so that they may more easily challenge EU measures where they submit that their fundamental rights as contained in the EU Charter have been violated. In this context it is considered desirable that individuals are rather easily given locus standi where it can be shown that their rights and interests have been affected by EU action or inaction as broadly defined. At the same time it is submitted that great caution should be taken in revamping the preliminary reference mechanism in a manner, which could make it more difficult for individuals to have questions of human rights violations, brought indirectly before the ECJ. Access to justice is indispensable in the area of fundamental rights.

¹⁴ See further, P. Alston (ed.), The EU and Human Rights, (Oxford, 1999).

¹⁵ See, in general, E. Riedel and M. Will, “Human Rights Clauses in External Agreements of the EC”, ibid.

Memorandum on the EU Charter4. The Scope of the EU Charter§ 4.1 The 'Passive Scope' of the Charter: Protection against the EU

The EU Charter should protect individuals against arbitrary interferences by the EU. Traditionally, the ECJ's jurisdiction – and thus the Court's protection of fundamental rights – is confined to activities in the first pillar (the three Communities). However, an effective protection of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter requires activities within the second and third pillars to fall with the 'passive scope' of the Charter too. The same is true for the conduct of more or less independent entities, such as Europol. We are witnessing a genuine proliferation of new forms of inter-governmental cooperation. To the extent that these new bodies are capable of interfering with individual rights, the rule of law requires judicial review of their activities. The Charter should reflect this: it should contain a provision stipulating that it offers protection against acts and omissions of the EC/EU institutions and organs, as well as entities which have been established on the basis of the EU Treaty. The other side of the coin is that the ECJ should be competent to review these acts and omissions. This competence has already been recognized in some cases (such as Europol), but certainly not on a systematic basis.

On the other hand, the EU Charter is not – and should not be – directed against the national authorities. Their conduct is subject to their constitutions and laws, as well as the ECHR. To subject them to the EU Charter too, would create confusion. Still one has to face the fact that complications are likely to occur where domestic authorities implement Community law or derogate from it. In these circumstances the ECJ has consistently held that the domestic authorities are equally bound by the general principles of Community law, including fundamental rights.¹⁶ As it is unlikely that the adoption of the EU Charter will entail a loss of ECJ competence, one may anticipate that the EU Charter will bind the domestic authorities where they implement Community law or derogate from it. This means that the domestic courts may be confronted with two distinct standards: the EU Charter, as interpreted by the ECJ, and the ECHR, as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights. This underlines the importance of avoiding diverging interpretations at all costs.

§ 4.2 The 'Active Scope' of the Charter: Holders of Guaranteed Rights

One of the basic tenets of international human rights law is that civil rights, such as the prohibition of torture, apply to anyone within the jurisdiction of the State concerned. This is clearly reflected in Article 1 ECHR ("The High Contracting Parties shall secure to everyone within their jurisdiction..."). Nationality and residence status are irrelevant in this connection. The same should apply to the EU Charter: anyone within the Union's jurisdiction should be entitled to rely on the 'classic' rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter. In this connection it should be recalled that rights extend to both natural and legal persons.

Traditionally, however, certain political and social rights have been reserved to specific groups of individuals (nationals of the State, European citizens). Mention may be made of the right to vote, the right to diplomatic and consular protection, access to the Community civil service, free movement of workers. At first sight it seems acceptable to extend the guarantee of these rights in the EU Charter only to nationals of the Member States. Any preferential treatment, however, must always be based on objective and reasonable grounds. And in the case of difference of treatment based exclusively on the ground of nationality, the European Court of Human Rights insists that "very weighty reasons" must be put forward to justify this under the Convention.¹⁷

¹⁶ See for instance ECJ, case 5/88, Wachauf [1989] ECR 2639, § 19; case C-260/89, ERT [1991] ECR I-2964, § 42.

¹⁷ See in this connection the important judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Gaygusuz v Austria of 16 September 1996, (Reports 1996, p. 1129), paragraph 42

Memorandum on the EU Charter

Besides, as Community law evolves, more rights are being granted to third country nationals. This pleads against restricting rights to Union citizens alone, at least as far as social rights are concerned. Rather, it is the scope ratione personae that determines the applicability of the EU Charter. If a third country national falls outwith the scope of EU law, he/she will be unable to invoke the rights of the EU Charter. Conversely, if he/she falls within the scope of EU law, it seems in line with the fundamental nature of human rights to accord social rights to him/her as well.

5. The Content of the EU Charter

§ 5.1 The rights and freedoms of the ECHR

It is common ground that the EU Charter should not take a step backwards in relation to the existing acquis. Article 6 TEU requires the Union to respect the rights and freedoms of the ECHR as general principles of Community law. Thus, from a legal point of view, the ECHR already constitutes a minimum standard and the Charter could not fall short of the ECHR as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights. It may be added that each Charter provision that offers less protection than its corresponding ECHR provision would damage the credibility of both the EU human rights policy and the Convention.

Against this background some critical remarks may be leveled against the draft list of fundamental rights which was proposed on 11 February 2000 by the presidency of the 'Convention' preparing the Charter (CHARTE 4123/1/00/REV 1). The draft articles differ from the Convention provisions. To give three examples:

- The right to a fair trial (Article 5) does not specify that judgment shall be pronounced publicly, as required by Article 6. Is this a deliberate omission, or just an accident?
- To incorporate a general limitation clause (as was previously suggested by the presidency) will obviously do away with the detailed and sophisticated case-law of the Strasbourg authorities under the Articles 8 to 11, par. 2. Indeed, the right to respect for private life (Article 8 of the Draft) does not contain a specific limitation clause. What does this mean for the applicability of the Strasbourg jurisprudence? For instance, the Court tends to subject limitations of the freedom of the press (Article 10 ECHR) to careful scrutiny, whereas it leaves a wider margin of appreciation to State authorities restricting the right to respect for family life in the case of expulsion (Article 8 ECHR). Would this distinction still apply under a general limitation clause?
- What is the relationship between the right to respect for family life (Article 8 of the draft) and the protection of the family envisaged in Article 9 of the same draft?

These examples illustrate how delicate the question of phrasing the Charter is. From the perspective of legal certainty, and assuming that the Strasbourg level of human rights protection must not be undermined, we therefore recommend that the substantive rights and freedoms of the Convention and its protocols are integrally transferred to the Charter. This is all the more necessary if the accession of the EU to the Convention is not guaranteed.

Memorandum on the EU Charter§ 5.2 Additional rights and freedoms guaranteed in other instruments

This is not to say that the body preparing the EU Charter should limit itself to copying the substantive provisions of the ECHR. There are at least two reasons to move beyond a mere reproduction of the ECHR:

- In practice most attention tends to be directed towards the ECHR, but other instruments contain important additions. To the remaining States parties to these treaties it is unacceptable for the EU Member States to transfer powers to the EU, if the latter is not bound to these additional rights.
- The discussions on the Charter should provide for an opportunity to develop rights and freedoms, which are geared to the powers and functions of the EU.

An obvious source of inspiration may be found in the treaties on which the Member States have collaborated. To mention some of the most important ones: the European Social Charter, the Genocide Convention (1948), the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (1965), the two UN Covenants of 1966, the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (1979), the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) and several ILO Conventions.

It must be realized, however, that not all Member States have ratified all these instruments, whereas some have made reservations to specific provisions. In addition, the constitutional traditions of the Member States have always been regarded as a source for Community rights as well.

It is hard to predict which synthesis will be acceptable for the body preparing the EU Charter. Yet, already at this stage one can foresee that certain internationally recognized rights will not make it to the Charter. This will create the risk of a contrario types of reasoning: the absence of a specific norm might be taken to mean that it does not bind the EU. A similarly undesirable situation may occur if international human rights law continues to develop – which it is likely to do – and new instruments are adopted. Obviously the EU Charter will not reflect these changes. Should it then have to be amended?

The disadvantages of a 'static' Charter might be taken away by the introduction of the following provision, which is borrowed from the ECJ's case-law:¹⁸

The European Union will also respect the fundamental rights and freedoms which have been laid down in international treaties for the protection of human rights on which the Member States have collaborated or of which they are signatories.

§ 5.3 Economic and Social Rights

It is hard to defend the view that the Charter should limit itself to civil and political rights. A watertight division between 'classical' and social rights has never existed, and the development of positive obligations under the ECHR has blurred the distinction even further. In recent EU-documents the indivisibility is acknowledged and emphasized.¹⁹

In this connection it is suggested that social rights are not necessarily mere policy guidelines or instructions addressed to the authorities. Especially in the case of basic needs (such as medical care in case of emergency or basic social welfare), individual entitlements exist. The best way forward is to examine each separate right and determine which elements lend themselves to judicial review.

¹⁸ See ECJ, case 4/73, Nold, [1974] ECR 507, § 13.

¹⁹ See, e.g., the EU Annual Report on Human Rights 1998-1999, adopted by the Council in October 1999, p. 33.

Memorandum on the EU Charter

§ 5.4 'New' rights

The Court of Justice has recently developed quite stringent case-law with regard to the respect of fundamental rights by the EC institutions themselves, in particular with regard to the securing of the principle of good administration within the EU institutions and the fact that everyone is entitled to a fair legal process. In so doing it has relied very explicitly on the provisions of the ECHR and applied them directly. Moreover, it appears that the Court is, within the limits of its current jurisdiction, contributing to the securing of the EU citizens' right of participation in an "effective political democracy". In other words the Court has in a number of test cases already made a significant contribution to a citizens' right to obtain information about the decision-making processes from a number of EU institutions and bodies (the Council, the Commission and "comitology" committees).²⁰ In an effective political democracy, the idea of an informed citizenry, the free expression of opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature and the possibility to complain about one's government and administration must indeed be secured as fundamental rights. The Court is responsible for the development and application of these ideas in the context of the EU. It provides an excellent example of the ECJ going further than the minimum provisions in this regard provided in the ECHR and could provide an example of the kinds of rights that could be included in an EU Charter as a "new" generation of rights applicable in the specific context of the EU.

6. Conclusions

The inclusion of an EU Charter in the circumstances outlined above could provide a clarification of the current system of protection and reinforce the aim of structural visibility of such rights within the evolving EU legal order. It is however imperative in our view that clear provisions be included as to the enforceability of the substantive rights in question and the remedies available to different categories of complainants in different circumstances. At the same time it must be acknowledged that in the long term interests of visibility as well as in the interests of (truly) external control (accountability of EU institutions to an external supervisory body) the most rational and transparent solution remains accession by the EU as such to the ECHR system.

Professor Deirdre Curtin, University of Utrecht
 Dr. Rick Lawson, University of Leiden
 Professor André Nollkaemper, University of Amsterdam

Standing Committee of Experts on International Immigration, Refugee and Criminal Law, Utrecht, the Netherlands, 22 February 2000

²⁰ See further, D. Curtin, "Citizens' Fundamental Right of Access to EU Information: An Evolving Digital Passepartout?" 37 CML Rev. (2000), pp. 1-35.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 16. März 2000CHARTE 4164/00*CONTRIB 48*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte anliegend Vorschläge der Initiative "Netzwerk Dreigliederung".^{1 2}

¹ Initiative "Netzwerk Dreigliederung": Büro Strawe, Haußmannstr. 44a, D-70188 Stuttgart.
Tel: +33-0711-2368950. Fax: +33-0711-2360218. E-mail: BueroStrawe@t-online.de

² Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

INITIATIVE „NETZWERK DREIGLIEDERUNG“
 ✉ Büro Strawe, Haußmannstr. 44a, D-70188 Stuttgart
 ☎ 0711-2368950, Fax: 0711-2360218, eMail: BueroStrawe@t-online.de

Gerald Häfner, Dr. Christoph Strawe, Dr. Robert Zuegg

Vorschläge zum Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union im Rahmen der Anhörungen von Repräsentanten der Zivilgesellschaft durch den Konvent¹

Vorbemerkung: Die Vorschläge folgen der im Dokument CHARTE 4141/00 CONVENT 10 vom 28.02.00 vorgeschlagenen Gliederung in Abschnitte, durch welche sich die in CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2 vorgeschlagene Reihenfolge und Zählung der Rechte teilweise ändert.²

Vorschläge zum 1. Abschnitt: Die fundamentalen Rechte des Menschen

Kommentar: Wir schlagen eine eigene Fassung vor, obwohl wir uns der teilweisen Überschneidung mit den bereits vorliegenden Vorschlägen bewusst sind. Wir möchten jedoch durch Anregungen dazu beitragen, dass bei diesem so delikaten und zugleich so entscheidend wichtigen Teil der Charta die einzelnen Formulierungen nuanciert genug sind und zugleich in einem inneren Zusammenhang, nicht als bloße additive Aufreihung, erscheinen.

-
- 1 Unter Verwendung der Texte des Grundgesetzes für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland, der UNO–Menschenrechtsdeklaration, der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention, der schweizerischen Bundesverfassung, von Vorschlägen der Initiative Schweiz im Gespräch, der Aktion mündige Schule Schleswig–Holstein und des Kuratoriums für einen demokratisch verfassten Bund deutscher Länder.
- 2 Zwar zeigt sich bei dieser Systematik die Schwierigkeit, eine Ausgewogenheit zwischen den Abschnitten herzustellen. Dies ist auch in unserem Vorschlag sichtbar. Wir denken jedoch, dass diese Schwierigkeit eher dadurch zu lösen ist, dass noch weitere Abschnitte eingefügt werden und die Gliederung dadurch feinmaschiger wird, als durch Rücknahme des Gedankens der abschnittswisen Gliederung. Entsprechend dem im Dokument CHARTE 4141/00 vom 28.2. durch den Vorsitzenden des Konvents gemachten Vorschlag beginnt auch bei uns die Numerierung der Artikel in jedem Abschnitt mit einem Artikel 1. Der Übergang zur abschnittswisen Darstellung und die dadurch notwendige neue Numerierung erschwert allerdings die Übersichtlichkeit bei Vorschlägen, die sich auf vorliegende Entwürfe beziehen. Daher haben wir, um eine leichtere Übersicht zu ermöglichen, jeweils auch ausdrücklich vermerkt, wo wir keinerlei Veränderungsbedarf gegenüber bereits vorliegenden Entwürfen sehen.

Artikel 1 [Menschenwürde; staatliche Grundrechtsbindung]

- (1) Die Würde des Menschen ist unantastbar. Die menschliche Individualität zu achten, zu schützen und in ihrer Selbst- und Mitverantwortung zu fördern, ist höchste Verpflichtung aller staatlichen Gewalt.

Wir schlagen vor, Absatz (2) und evtl., falls man diese Frage im Abschnitt 1 regeln will, auch (3) aus CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1 in Art. 2 zu plazieren, da sie bereits eine Spezialisierung des generellen Postulats der Menschenwürde darstellen.

- (2) Die Europäische Union (EU) und ihre Mitgliedstaaten verpflichten sich darum zur Wahrung und Verwirklichung der unverletzlichen und unveräußerlichen Menschenrechte als Grundlage jeder menschenwürdigen Gemeinschaft, des Friedens und der Gerechtigkeit in der Welt.
- (3) Diese Grundrechtscharta bindet alle rechtssetzende, rechtsanwendende und rechtsprechende Gewalt in der EU und deren Mitgliedstaaten. Sie umfasst individuell einklagbare Ansprüche des einzelnen sowie wegleitende Ordnungsprinzipien einer freiheitlichen, demokratischen und sozialen Gesellschaft.

Begründung: Wir halten es für notwendig, gleich am Anfang zu betonen, dass die Grundrechte dieser Charta einklagbare Rechte sind.

Artikel 2 [Recht auf Leben]

(1) und (2) wie in CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1 CONVENT 5, S. 2 formuliert (wobei allerdings u.E. „psychische Unversehrtheit“ schwer definierbar sein dürfte).

Das Verbot der Folter (in der oben zitierten Aufzeichnung des Präsidiums im Artikel 1 platziert) sollte u.E. in Artikel 2, Absatz (3) mit der Feststellung über die Abschaffung der Todesstrafe zusammengezogen werden.

Artikel 3 [Freiheit der Person; Handlungs- und Vertragsfreiheit]

- (1) Jeder hat das Recht auf die freie Entfaltung seiner Persönlichkeit, soweit er nicht die Rechte anderer verletzt und nicht gegen die grundrechtliche Ordnung der Europäischen Union bzw. der Mitgliedstaaten verstößt.
- (2) Jeder Mensch hat im Rahmen allgemeiner Handlungsfreiheit der Person das Recht, seine Beziehung zu anderen durch vertragliche Vereinbarung zu regeln und zu gestalten.

Begründung: Die Anschauung des Menschen als eines mündigen, d.h. zum verantwortungsvollen Handeln aus eigener Einsicht fähigen Wesens, ist der innerste Kern des modernen Rechtsbewusstseins. Die sich daraus ergebende Handlungsfreiheit der Person sollte explizit formuliert sein.

Vorschläge zum 2. Abschnitt: Freiheitsrechte

Artikel 3 bis 7 aus Dokument CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1 CONVENT 5 haben wir hier nicht berücksichtigt, da sie nach der Systematik der Abschnitte jetzt in den Abschnitt 6 (Justizielle Rechte) fallen.

Artikel 1 [Gedanken-, Gewissens- und Religionsfreiheit]

Wir schlagen eine Modifikation des entsprechenden Artikels 10 aus CHARTE 4137/00 vor. Die Änderungsvorschläge sind fett gesetzt:

- (1) Jede Person hat das Recht auf Gedanken-, Gewissens- und Religionsfreiheit; dieses Recht umfasst die Freiheit, seine Religion, seine weltanschauliche und ethische Überzeugung frei zu bestimmen (statt: die Religion oder Weltanschauung zu wechseln), und diese (statt: und die Freiheit, die Religion oder Weltanschauung) einzeln oder gemeinsam mit anderen öffentlich oder privat durch Gottesdienst, Unterricht, (streichen: oder Praktizieren von) Bräuche und Riten oder auf andere Weise zu bekennen und zu praktizieren.

Begründung: Mündigkeit bedeutet, sich seine eigene Auffassung der Welt bilden, d.h. diese frei bestimmen zu dürfen. Das ist mehr als das Recht, die Religion oder Weltanschauung zu wechseln. Auch sollte die ethische Überzeugung ausdrücklich in den Artikel einbezogen werden. Das Praktizieren der eigenen Weltanschauung und Lebensorientierung muss möglichst umfassend geschützt werden. Daher sollte jeder Anschein vermieden werden, dass der von diesem Artikel gewährte Rechtsschutz sich auf das Praktizieren von Bräuchen und Riten reduziert. Die übrigen Änderungsvorschläge sind sprachliche Vereinfachungen.

- (2) Niemand darf gegen sein Gewissen zum Kriegsdienst mit der Waffe gezwungen werden.

Begründung: Dies ergibt sich zwar eigentlich als logische Konsequenz aus der Gewissensfreiheit, sollte aber u.E. ausdrücklich formuliert werden.

Artikel 2 [Meinungs-, Informations-, Medienfreiheit; Kunst und Wissenschaft]

- (1) Jeder Mensch hat das Recht, seine Meinung frei zu bilden und mit allen Verständigungsmitteln ungehindert zu äußern und zu verbreiten sowie das Recht auf uneingeschränkten Zugang zu allen öffentlichen Informationen.

Hier wäre u.U. als Absatz einzufügen das im Entwurf des Präsidiums (CHARTE 4137/00) als eigener Artikel 14 (Recht auf Zugang zu Information) formulierte Zugangsrecht zu Dokumenten der EU-Organe.

Begründung: Wir halten es für problematisch, das Informationsrecht an dieser Stelle auf den Zugang zu EU-Dokumenten zu beschränken.

- (2) Die freie Berichterstattung durch die Medien ist gewährleistet. Sie findet ihre Schranke allein an der unantastbaren Würde der Person anderer sowie am Anspruch der Kinder und Jugendlichen auf besonderen Schutz der Unversehrtheit ihrer Person und Entwicklung. Das Redaktionsgeheimnis ist unverletzlich. Eine Zensur findet nicht statt.
- (3) Die Freiheit der Kunst und des Unterrichts sowie der wissenschaftlichen Forschung und Lehre sind gewährleistet.

Begründung: Wir halten es für sinnvoll, den Artikel differenzierter auszugestalten als bisher in der Aufzeichnung des Präsidiums (CHARTE 4137/00) unter 11 (Freiheit der Meinungsäußerung) vorgesehen. Nur diese Ausgestaltung gibt auch die Möglichkeit, das Problem des Schutzes der Persönlichkeitsrechte und des Jugendschutzes in einer durch Medien geprägten Gesellschaft aufzugreifen, ohne dabei den Grundsatz „Im Zweifel für die Freiheit“ in Frage zu stellen.

Artikel 3 [Versammlungs-, Vereinigungs- und Koalitionsfreiheit]

Wir halten eine ausführlichere Formulierung als die in Artikel 13 CHARTE 4137/00 vorgesehene für erwägenswert. Eine Möglichkeit wäre die folgende:

- (1) Jeder Mensch hat das Recht, sich ohne Erlaubnis friedlich und ohne Waffen zu versammeln.
- (2) Jeder Mensch hat das Recht, sich mit anderen zu Vereinen, Gesellschaften oder anderen selbstverwalteten Körperschaften zusammenzuschließen.
- (3) Das Recht, zur Wahrung und Förderung der Arbeits- und Wirtschaftsbedingungen Vereinigungen zu bilden, ist allgemein gewährleistet.
- (4) Niemand darf gezwungen werden, einer Vereinigung anzugehören.

Artikel 4 [Bewegungsfreiheit]

Wie in der Grundrechtsliste des Präsidiums (CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 1) bereits vorgesehen. Wir haben keinen eigenen Formulierungsvorschlag.

Artikel 5 [Unverletzlichkeit der Privatsphäre, Datenschutz]

- (1) Jeder Mensch hat Anspruch auf Schutz seines privaten Lebensbereichs. Die Vertraulichkeit nichtöffentlicher Mitteilungen in Wort, Schrift, Bild oder Zeichen ist unverletzlich.
- (2) Jeder Mensch hat ein Recht an seinen persönlichen Daten, auf Einsicht in alle ihn betreffenden Akten und Datenbestände sowie auf deren Schutz.

Begründung: Wir hielten es für zweckmäßig, die Gesichtspunkte von Art. 8 (CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1) und 15 (CHARTE 4137/00) zusammenzuziehen.

Artikel 6 [Asylrecht]

Vgl. Art. 19 in CHARTE 4137/00. Dieser Artikel sollte das Asylrecht in Europa menschenrechtskonform regeln und festhalten, dass Flüchtlinge nicht in einen Staat abgeschoben oder ausgeliefert werden dürfen, in dem sie verfolgt werden. Ferner, dass niemand in einen Staat abgeschoben werden darf, in dem ihm Folter oder eine andere Art grausamer und unmenschlicher Behandlung oder Bestrafung drohen.

Artikel 7 [Recht auf Familiengründung, Rechte und Schutz von Kindern und Jugendlichen]

- (1) Jeder hat das Recht, eine Familie zu gründen.

(Wie in CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1 in Art. 9 Familienleben.)

- (2) Kinder und Jugendliche haben Anspruch auf umfassende Erziehung und Ausbildung, welche sich an den Bedingungen und Möglichkeiten der Entwicklung ihrer Individualität orientiert.
- (3) Pflege und Erziehung der Kinder sind das natürliche Recht der Eltern und die primär ihnen obliegende Pflicht. Die staatliche Gemeinschaft gewährleistet, dass auch außereheliche oder ohne elterliche Betreuung lebende Kinder im Schutz einer Lebensgemeinschaft aufwachsen können. Sie schützt und fördert jede Lebensgemeinschaft, in der Kinder und Jugendliche aufwachsen, bei ihrer selbstverantwortlichen Aufgabenerfüllung.
- (4) Kinder und Jugendliche haben darüber hinaus Anspruch auf besonderen Schutz der Unversehrtheit ihrer Person und ihrer Entwicklung.

Begründung: Wir halten es für notwendig, die Rechte der Kinder und Jugendlichen zu stärken. Daher schlagen wir vor, diesem Thema breiteren Raum zu geben.

Es ist noch zu fragen, ob die Artikel 7 und 8 nicht in einen eigenen Abschnitt kommen sollten, da sie ihrem Gehalt nach nicht nur Freiheitsrechte sind, sondern z.B. auch die Chancengerechtigkeit beinhalten.

Artikel 8 [Recht auf Bildung]

- (1) Jeder Mensch in Europa hat das Recht auf Bildung. Für Kinder und Jugendliche darf der Besuch von Bildungseinrichtungen nicht von den wirtschaftlichen Verhältnissen der Eltern abhängig sein.
- (2) Die Freiheit der elterlichen Erziehungsverantwortung ist gewährleistet; sie umfasst namentlich das Recht der Eltern, für ihre Kinder die Art der Bildungseinrichtung frei zu wählen.
- (3) Der Staat garantiert den gleichen Zugang und die freie Wahl der Schule durch die Ermöglichung und gleichberechtigte Förderung von öffentlichen Schulen in staatlicher und freier Trägerschaft.

- (4) Die von den Eltern gewählten Schulen in staatlicher oder freier Trägerschaft nehmen gleichberechtigt ihren öffentlichen Bildungsauftrag wahr. Das Recht zur Gründung sowie autonomen Gestaltung und Verwaltung von Schulen in freier Trägerschaft, einschließlich der eigenständigen Ausbildung der Lehrkräfte, ist gewährleistet.
- (5) Angehörige nationaler oder ethnischer Minderheiten haben das Recht, ihre Muttersprache zu lernen und eigene Schulen zu gründen und zu unterhalten.
- (6) Das Schulwesen untersteht der Rechtsaufsicht der einzelnen europäischen Staaten.

Begründung: Das sich integrierende Europa sollte ein modernes freiheitliches Bildungswesen anstreben. Dem sollte die Formulierung des Rechts auf Bildung entsprechen. Sie sollte keinesfalls hinter den Artikel 26 [Recht auf Bildung] der Allgemeinen Erklärung der Menschenrechte und hinter die Entschließung des Europäischen Parlaments über die Freiheit der Erziehung (14. März 1984) zurückfallen. Daher schlagen wir vor, die Formulierung des Art. 12 aus CHARTE 4137/00 zu erweitern. Der dort enthaltene Absatz (4) ist sinngemäß Bestandteil unseres Art. 2 dieses Abschnitts und würde sich deshalb hier erübrigen.

Artikel 9 [Eigentum]

- (1) Eigentum wird gewährleistet. Sein Gebrauch und seine Formen sollen zugleich der Erhaltung und Entwicklung der natürlichen und sozialen Lebensbedingungen dienen.
- (2) Eine Enteignung ist nur im öffentlichen Interesse zulässig. Sie darf nur durch Gesetz oder auf Grund eines Gesetzes erfolgen, das Art und Ausmaß der Entschädigung regelt. Die Entschädigung ist unter gerechter Abwägung der Interessen der Allgemeinheit und der Beteiligten zu bestimmen.

Begründung: Wir halten es für ein modernes Eigentumsrecht für notwendig, zugleich mit der klaren Garantie des individuellen Eigentums die Sozialbindung des Eigentums deutlich zu formulieren. (Vgl. Art. 16 in CHARTE 4137/00.)

3. Abschnitt Gleichheitsrechte

Artikel 1 [Gleichheit]

Wie in CHARTE 4137/00, Art. 18.

Artikel 2 [Nichtdiskriminierung]

Wie in CHARTE 4137/00, Art. 19.

Vorschläge zum 4. Abschnitt: Wirtschaftliche und soziale Rechte, Sozialziele, Umweltschutz und Nachhaltigkeit

Wir schlagen zunächst vor - in Übereinstimmung mit der in CHARTE 4112/2/00 formulierten Intention -, Sozialrechte und Sozialziele zu unterscheiden. Außerdem schlagen wir eine Formulierung zum Umweltschutz und zum Prinzip der Nachhaltigkeit vor. Der letzte Gedanke könnte natürlich auch systematisch in einem eigenen Abschnitt behandelt werden.

Artikel 1 [Berufs- und Konsumfreiheit; vertragliche Gestaltungsfreiheit und Selbständigkeit der Wirtschaft]

- (1) Die freie Wahl, Zugänglichkeit und Ausübung des Berufs sind gewährleistet; ebenso die Selbstbestimmung des Verbrauchers und die Vertragsfreiheit zwischen den Wirtschaftsteilnehmern. Die gesetzlichen Bestimmungen zum Schutz der Menschen und der Natur bleiben vorbehalten.
- (2) Die Wirtschaft regelt und verwaltet ihre Angelegenheiten auf der Grundlage der staatlichen Rahmengesetzgebung selbständig; sie kann dazu vertragsberechtigte Organe bilden, an denen alle Wirtschaftsteilnehmer, Unternehmer, Mitarbeiter und Konsumenten, verantwortungsvoll beteiligt sind.

Kommentar: Es handelt sich um einen Formulierungsversuch für den in CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2, D S. 6 vorgesehenen Artikel 6 Recht auf Arbeit und Berufsfreiheit. Hier halten wir es für sachgemäß, den Zusammenhang von Berufs- bzw. Gewerbefreiheit mit der Konsumfreiheit und der Freiheit der Vertragsgestaltung zwischen den Wirtschaftsteilnehmern zu betonen - im Rahmen der Schutzgesetzgebung für Mensch und Natur. Die Frage der Arbeitsförderung sollte u.E. in den Artikel über die Sozialziele verschoben werden (s. weiter unten).

Artikel 2 [Recht auf Hilfe in Notlagen]

- (1) Wer in Not gerät, hat Anspruch auf Hilfe und Betreuung und auf die Mittel, die für ein menschenwürdiges Dasein unerlässlich sind.

Kommentar: Wir waren der Meinung, dass eine solche knappe Formulierung den möglichen Konsens in Europa hinsichtlich eines einklagbaren Anspruchs auf Solidarität - bei Offenhaltung der einzelnen Verwirklichungsformen - am besten zum Ausdruck bringt. Es wäre allerdings auch denkbar, diesen Artikel als Absatz 4 in den Artikel 2 zu platzieren. Damit wäre bereits in der Beschreibung der Fundamentalrechte die Bandbreite zwischen Freiheits- und Sozialaspekt der Menschenrechte aufgewiesen.

Artikel 3 [Gewährleistung sozialer Sicherheit]

- (1) Es ist Ziel der Gesellschaft als Ganzer sowie ihrer einzelnen Mitglieder, dass jeder Mensch innerhalb und außerhalb der Europäischen Union an der allgemeinen Entwicklung der Lebensbedingungen in angemessener Weise teilnehmen kann.
- (2) Die Europäische Union und ihre Mitgliedstaaten setzen sich im Rahmen ihrer Zuständigkeit dafür ein, dass arbeitsfähige Menschen Aufgaben unter angemessenen Arbeitsbedingungen finden oder entsprechende Verhältnisse selbst schaffen können.
- (3) Für Menschen, die keine Möglichkeit dazu haben und deshalb arbeitslos sind oder deren Arbeitsfähigkeit infolge von Krankheit, Unfall oder Invalidität nicht gegeben ist oder die aufgrund ihrer Jugend, ihrer Pflicht zur Erziehung oder Sorge für andere, ihres Alters oder aus anderen gesellschaftlichen Gründen von der Arbeit freigestellt sind, stellen die EU bzw. ihre Mitgliedstaaten den notwendigen Lebensunterhalt rechtlich sicher; dieser bemisst sich anhand gesellschaftlicher Vergleichbarkeit. Ebenso schaffen sie Rahmenbedingungen für eine menschenwürdige medizinische Betreuung und Versorgung.
- (4) Im Mittelpunkt der rechtlichen Gewährleistungspflicht der sozialen Sicherheit stehen unabhängig verwaltete sozialpartnerschaftliche Lösungen oder solche gesellschaftlicher Solidarität. Private Initiative und Verantwortung können ergänzend in die Sicherstellung einbezogen werden. Private Vorsorgeformen befreien dagegen nicht von zumutbaren Beiträgen an allgemeine soziale Sicherheitseinrichtungen.
- (5) In Ergänzung zu diesen Formen sozialer Sicherheit kann der Staat auch materielle Beiträge leisten; diese bedürfen einer gesetzlichen Grundlage und richten sich nach den verfügbaren Mitteln.
- (6) Wissenschaftsfreiheit, Methodenpluralismus, Therapiefreiheit und die Selbstbestimmung des Patienten einschließlich freier Wahl von Arzt und Krankenhaus sind generell wie auch innerhalb solidarischer Finanzierungsformen zu gewährleisten.

Begründung: Es ist u.E. wichtig, die Sozialziele so zu formulieren, dass keine bloßen Prinzipien verkündet werden, sondern Leitlinien staatlichen Handelns formuliert werden, die realisierbar sind, zugleich aber den Grundsatz der Subsidiarität beachten, d.h. den Staat als Gewährleistungsinstanz sozialer Sicherheit - dies auch durch Förderung selbstverwalteter Solidarlösungen -, nicht aber als sozialbürokratisch-allzuständiges Gebilde zu fassen. Aus dem Solidarproblem der Finanzierung darf also kein Vormundschaftsproblem erwachsen. In diesem Sinne halten wir es für richtig, diesen Artikel nicht durch zuviele Einzelbestimmungen zu befrachten. Ungeachtet dessen könnten hier aber weitere in CHARTE 4112/2/00 aufgelistete Sozialrechte Aufnahme finden, soweit ihre ausdrückliche Nennung für nötig erachtet wird.

Artikel 4 [Umweltschutz, Grundsatz der Nachhaltigkeit; Achtung des Lebens]

- (1) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten gewährleisten den Schutz des Menschen und seiner natürlichen Umwelt vor schädlichen Einwirkungen. Die Kosten der Vermeidung solcher Einwirkungen trägt der Verursacher.

- (2) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten sind dem Grundsatz der Nachhaltigkeit verpflichtet. Sie regeln die Verfügbarkeit über die nicht vermehrbaren Güter, wie Boden, Wasser, Luft und Rohstoffe derart, dass ihr Charakter als Lebensgrundlage für die künftigen Generationen gewahrt bleibt und ein ausgewogenes Verhältnis zwischen der Beanspruchung der Natur und der Pflege ihrer Artenvielfalt und Erneuerungsfähigkeit entsteht.
- (3) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten sind der Achtung des Lebens verpflichtet. Sie gewährleisten insbesondere den Schutz der Tiere als Mitgeschöpfe des Menschen.

Begründung: Es handelt sich um den Versuch, Punkt 19. des Entwurfs einer Grundrechtsliste durch den Präsidenten (CHARTE 4112/2/00) umzusetzen, d.h. die Inhalte Umwelt- und Lebensschutz in einem eigenen Artikel zu formulieren und mit dem zukunftsweisenden Gedanken der Nachhaltigkeit zu verbinden.

Vorschläge zum 5. Abschnitt: Politische Rechte

Artikel 1 [Recht auf Mitwirkung im staatlich-politischen Leben; Initiativ- und Abstimmungsrecht, Wahlrecht]

- (1) Alle volljährigen Bürgerinnen und Bürger der Union haben das Recht, an der Gestaltung des staatlich-politischen Lebens ihres Landes und der Europäischen Union auf allen Ebenen teilzunehmen.
- (2) Dies geschieht durch die Ausübung des Initiativ- und Abstimmungsrechtes sowie die Teilnahme an allgemeinen, freien, gleichen und geheimen Wahlen.
- (3) Die Chancengleichheit der bei Abstimmungen oder Wahlen konkurrierenden Inhalte oder Bewerber ist zu gewährleisten.

Begründung: Wir halten es für wichtig, die demokratischen Beteiligungsrechte in Europa zu stärken und zu betonen, dass alle Staatsgewalt von den Bürgerinnen und Bürgern der Union ausgeht.

Artikel 2 [Zulassung zu öffentlichen Ämtern, Recht zur Gründung von Parteien, Petitionsrecht]

- (4) Alle Bürgerinnen und Bürger in der Union haben unter gleichen Bedingungen das Recht auf Zulassung zu öffentlichen Ämtern in ihrem Lande und in der Europäischen Union.
- (5) Das Recht zur Gründung von Parteien und sonstigen politischen Vereinigungen ist gewährleistet.
- (6) Jeder Mensch hat das Recht, sich einzeln oder in Gemeinschaft mit anderen schriftlich mit Petitionen oder Beschwerden an die zuständigen Stellen und an die Volksvertretungen zu wenden; es dürfen ihm daraus keine Nachteile erwachsen.

Begründung: Es ist sicher eine Ermessensfrage, ob man - wie in CHARTE 4141/00, Art. 1 - das Petitionsrecht unter die justiziellen Rechte einreihet. Unser Gesichtspunkt ist, dass das moderne Petitionsrecht kein bloßes Beschwerderecht (geschweige denn bloßes Bittrecht) ist, sondern das Vorschlags- und Initiativrecht einschließen muss, was seine Einordnung unter die politischen Rechte begründen könnte.

Artikel 3

Hier können spezielle weitere Rechte der Unionsbürgerinnen und -bürger, wie in CHARTE 4112/2/00 aufgelistet, ihren Platz finden.

6. Abschnitt: Justizielle Rechte

Zu diesem Abschnitt haben wir keine eigenen Vorschläge, sondern beziehen uns auf die CHARTE 4141/00 bereits vorgeschlagenen Formulierungen.

Vorschlag auf Aufnahme eines eigenen Abschnitts 7:

Grundrechtsgarantie

Kommentar: Wir schlagen vor, den Grundrechtsgarantien einen eigenen Abschnitt zu widmen. Die auch vom Präsidium des Konvents beabsichtigte Wesensgehaltsgarantie (vgl. in CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1 den Artikel Y. Einschränkungen) würde damit stärker betont. Zudem würde nationaler Rechtsprechung - z.B. dem Urteil des deutschen Bundesverfassungsgerichts zum Maastricht-Vertrag - deutlicher Rechnung getragen.

Artikel 1 [Einschränkung von Grundrechten; Wesensgehalts- und Rechtswegegarantie]

- (1) Jeder Mensch ist in Ausübung seiner Rechte und Freiheiten nur den Beschränkungen unterworfen, die das Gesetz ausschließlich zu dem Zwecke vorsieht, um die Anerkennung und Achtung der Rechte und Freiheiten anderer zu gewährleisten bzw. ein überwiegendes öffentliches Interesse zur Geltung zu bringen. Der Grundsatz der Verhältnismäßigkeit muss bei jedem Eingriff in Grundrechte gewahrt werden. In keinem Falle darf ein Grundrecht in seinem Wesensgehalt angetastet werden.
- (2) Soweit ein Grundrecht durch Gesetz oder auf Grund eines Gesetzes eingeschränkt werden kann, muss das Gesetz allgemein und nicht nur für den Einzelfall gelten. Außerdem muss das Gesetz das Grundrecht unter Angabe des Artikels nennen.
- (3) Die Grundrechte gelten auch für juristische Personen innerhalb der Europäischen Union, soweit sie ihrem Wesen nach auf diese anwendbar sind.

Artikel 2 [Verwirklichung der Grundrechte]

- (1) Die Grundrechte müssen in der gesamten Rechtsordnung zur Geltung kommen.
- (2) Wer Grundrechte ausübt, muss die Grundrechte anderer achten.
- (3) Wer öffentliche Aufgaben wahrnimmt, ist zur aktiven Verwirklichung der Grundrechte verpflichtet.

Begründung: Dieser Artikel würde zusammen mit dem einleitenden Menschenwürdeartikel u.E. eine wichtige Klammer der Charta bilden.

Artikel 3 [Niveau des Grundrechtsschutzes]

- (1) Weitergehende Grundrechtsgarantien der einzelnen Mitgliedstaaten sowie der Europäischen Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten (EMRK) werden in ihrem Bestand durch diese Grundrechtscharta nicht berührt.

Begründung: Vgl. hierzu S. 11 in CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1. Die Intention der dort vorgeschlagenen Formulierung wird aufgegriffen und zugleich generalisiert (Gedanke der Irreversibilität des einmal erreichten Grundrechtsniveaus).

Vorschlag für einen zusätzlichen Abschnitt 8 der Charta: Prinzipien und Aufgaben der Europäischen Union, die sich aus den Grundrechten ergeben Begründung: Wir halten es für dringend erforderlich, die Prinzipien und Aufgaben zu entwickeln, die sich aus den Grundrechten notwendig für das Staatsverständnis und das Staatshandeln in der Union ergeben.

Insbesondere halten wir es für erforderlich, dass zentrale Prinzip der Subsidiarität in einem eigenen Artikel zu behandeln. Dies auch deshalb, weil die Charta nicht nur Ausdruck des europäischen Rechtsbewusstseins ist, sondern u.a. auch zu seiner Schärfung beitragen könnte. Ein so zentraler Gedanke wie der der Subsidiarität sollte daher rechtlich sauber gefasst werden.

Artikel 1 [Prinzipien der Europäischen Union, Widerstandsrecht]

- (1) Die Europäische Union ist eine Gemeinschaft souveräner Staaten, die dem Frieden, demokratischen, rechtsstaatlichen, sozialen und föderativen Prinzipien und dem Grundsatz der Subsidiarität verpflichtet ist. Ihre vornehmste Aufgabe sieht sie in der Schaffung der rechtlichen und tatsächlichen Bedingungen dafür, dass die in dieser Charta proklamierten Grundrechte von jedem Menschen innerhalb der Union auch faktisch wahrgenommen werden können.

- (2) Alle Staatsgewalt in der Europäischen Union geht von den Bürgerinnen und Bürgern aus. Sie wird in Wahlen, in Abstimmungen und durch besondere Organe der Gesetzgebung, der vollziehenden Gewalt und der Rechtsprechung ausgeübt.
- (3) Die Gesetzgebung ist an die verfassungsmäßige Ordnung, die vollziehende Gewalt und die unabhängige Rechtsprechung sind an Gesetz und Recht gebunden.
- (4) Gegen jeden, der es unternimmt, die freiheitliche, demokratische und soziale Grundrechtsordnung zu beseitigen, haben alle Menschen innerhalb der Union das Recht zum Widerstand, wenn andere Abhilfe nicht möglich ist.

Artikel 2 [Subsidiarität]

- (1) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten fördern das Ergreifen gesellschaftlicher Aufgaben aus freier Initiative und Verantwortung in allen Bereichen, welche der Gesetzgeber nicht aus zwingenden Gründen staatlichem Handeln vorbehält. Staatliche Aufgaben sind auf der jeweils untersten möglichen Stufe wahrzunehmen und zu regeln.
- (2) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten schaffen fördernde Rahmenbedingungen, damit die Kultur sich in ihrer Vielfalt frei und selbstverwaltet entfalten kann; sie wahren den Grundsatz der staatlichen Neutralität gegenüber den verschiedenen kulturellen Bestrebungen.
- (3) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten sichern den Grundsatz der vertraglichen Selbstgestaltung des Wirtschaftslebens; sie schaffen geeignete Rahmenbedingungen für eine leistungsfähige, strukturell und regional ausgewogene, sozialverantwortliche Wirtschaft. Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten werden selbst nicht wirtschaftlich tätig; Ausnahmen regelt das Gesetz.

Begründung: s. oben.

Artikel 3 [Erfüllung öffentlicher Aufgaben]

- (1) Die staatlichen Organe der EU und ihrer Mitgliedstaaten erfüllen ihre Aufgaben in Verwirklichung der Grundrechte und Sozialziele bürgerfreundlich, sachgemäß und wirtschaftlich.
- (2) Die EU, ihre Mitgliedstaaten, sowie die nichtstaatlichen Organisationen, welche öffentliche Aufgaben erfüllen, schöpfen alle geeigneten Möglichkeiten und Formen der Zusammenarbeit aus, insbesondere die regionale und sozialpartnerschaftliche. Sie stärken dabei die Selbstverantwortungs- und Selbstverwaltungskräfte der betroffenen Menschen.
- (3) Aufgaben sind regelmäßig daraufhin zu überprüfen, ob sie notwendig sind und die Art ihrer Erfüllung zweckmäßig ist. Durchführungsqualität und Wirtschaftlichkeit sind laufend zu evaluieren und wo nötig zu verbessern.

- (4) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten sorgen in ihrem Zuständigkeitsbereich für eine umfassende, aufeinander abgestimmte Aufgaben- und Finanzplanung; sie geben Rechenschaft über deren Umsetzung und erstellen eine Sozialbilanz.

Begründung: Dem Staatshandeln in Europa einen verbindlichen Rahmen in dieser Art zu setzen, wird unter anderem auch die Akzeptanz der Charta bei den Bürgerinnen und Bürgern Europas verbessern.

Vorschläge zu Übergangs- und Schlussbestimmungen

Übergangs- und Schlussbestimmungen

- (1) Die EU und ihre Mitgliedstaaten unterstellen die Grundrechtscharta einem Referendum ihrer Bürgerinnen und Bürger.

Begründung: Absatz 1 begründen wir mit der großen Bedeutung der Charta für die europäische Entwicklung. Um der Glaubwürdigkeit der Festschreibung der demokratischen Rechte in der Charta willen, sollte diese selbst nicht ohne einen demokratischen Willensakt der Bürgerinnen und Bürger der Union in Kraft gesetzt werden.

- (2) Die EU erklärt ihre Absicht, bis spätestens im Jahre 2005 der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention beizutreten.

Mit dieser Formulierung folgen wir der Forderung der parlamentarischen Versammlung des Europarats, die EU möge offiziell der EMRK beitreten.

Stuttgart, den 12. März 2000

Gerald Häfner

Dr. Christoph Strawe

Dr. Robert Zuegg

Editors' note to CHARTE 4165/00,
Contribution submitted by the Europeans
Landowner's Organisation (ELO) (dated 15/03/00):

The revised version REV 1 does not contain the annex included in the initial version.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 16 March 2000CHARTE 4165/00*CONTRIB 49*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution of Europeans Landowner's Organisation (ELO) concerning the article 16 of the draft EU Charter on Fundamental Rights.^{1 2}

¹ ELO: Avenue Pasteur 23, B 1300 Wavre. Tel: +32-10-23 2902. Fax: +32-10-23 2909.

E-mail: elo@skynet.net

² This text has been submitted in English only.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Article 16 : Right to Ownership

The European Landowners' Organisation (ELO) proposes that the text of the article on the Right on Ownership should be:

Everyone is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one may be deprived of his possessions or restricted in their use, except where deemed necessary in the public interest and in the cases and subject to the conditions provided for by law and subject to full and prior compensation.

Explanatory Memorandum

The European Landowners' Organisation (ELO) supports the objectives, agreed at the Cologne Summit in 1999, of establishing a Charter of Fundamental Rights, and of making the overriding importance and relevance of those rights more visible to the Union's citizens.

In particular, the ELO very much welcomes that the Presidium has proposed the inclusion in the draft Charter, an article on the right to ownership. This memorandum explains why the right to ownership is so important for all Europe's citizens, and proposes some amendments to the current text of the draft Charter in relation to this right (article 16). These amendments would reinforce the positive work so far undertaken by the Convention to include this right to ownership.

The ELO speaks for 30 million land based rural business owners who provide employment, a living countryside, food and other products, amenities and environmental land management across the European Union. The ELO is well placed to speak on this subject, because its members are engaged, day to day, in the active management of property which serves as a base in satisfying needs and demands of modern society.

The need for a secure framework of ownership rights

Human rights are the cornerstone of democracy. Amongst these basic rights must be a right for the protection of ownership.

History shows with emphasis, however, that when ownership rights are not properly protected, both economic development and the environment are endangered. An efficient protection of ownership rights becomes even more important as the EU prepares for the entrance of a number of candidate countries which have in the past suffered from a lack of protected ownership rights.

In addition, the "new economy" (high-technology revolution) requires protection of intellectual property, so that the entrepreneurial climate will inspire investment, employment and incomes in Europe.

A social market economy, essential to a mature democracy, and for optimal management of the world's resources and the environment, cannot work without secure ownership rights. Ownership rights are a prerequisite for long term investment, not only in intellectual property but also in agriculture, forestry and manufacturing. A secure framework of ownership rights is vital for the long-term stewardship of our environment. Not only is a long-term perspective needed, but so often environmental conservation involves the positive management and individual commitment that can be provided only by someone with the ownership of the property.

Moreover, there is across Europe a social aspiration to ownership, seen as a symbol of permanence, prosperity and security.

Of course, with rights come responsibilities. Ownership must cede if it is necessary to satisfy an overriding public interest. But this can be done with the maintained respect for the owners' legitimate interests and without distorting the functioning of the market economy, provided that the owner is granted full compensation for his loss.

A framework of rights, particularly ownership rights, makes it possible for society to enter into secure, productive and transparent relationships with individuals and businesses. These relationships require, but also enable, those individuals and businesses successfully to meet the demands of the public for improving standards.

The ELO submits that the EU Charter is a unique opportunity – not to be missed – to redefine this relationship between public authorities, acting on the basis of EU legislation and policy (itself directed by the Charter) and individuals and businesses, to reflect a more enlightened balance between constructive partnership on the one hand, and regulation on the other.

Individuals and businesses are the providers of investment, innovation, stewardship and improving standards, in the countryside and elsewhere. Wherever possible, public authorities and their agencies should work in partnership with rural and other businesses to engage their voluntary co-operation and commitment. Compulsion should be only the last resort. Regulation, restriction and at its extreme, expropriation, can prevent actions, but cannot inspire positive initiative. So there should be a greater emphasis on partnership and a lesser dependence on regulation and constraint.

The text of the Charter on ownership rights should reflect this positive and forward-looking approach. ELO is pleased to note that the proposals made by the Presidium (Convent 9) are a good step in this direction. The submissions of ELO should be seen as a devoted effort, based on vast experience, to improve even further the article 16.

Specific amendments to the draft article on the right to ownership

ELO submits that the words “or restricted in their use” should be added after “possessions”.

The legislative and administrative practices of Member States and, in particular, EU legislation, have highlighted that many modern day-to-day problems that hamper the efficiency in managing assets stem from restrictions of use, which may have the same economic consequence as expropriation. It should be noted that such restrictions, if not compensated, may not only cause problems for the owner but will ultimately have negative effects on society as a whole as they will most certainly lead to distortions in the market economy and an inefficient allocation of resources.

ELO submits that the words “where deemed necessary” should be added after “except”.

These words oblige the authority acting on behalf of the “public interest” to demonstrate that action to deprive a person of his possessions, or to restrict him in their use, is the only way to meet that overriding public interest. In fact there is a growing urge already reflected in at least one national constitution to qualify the requirement “public interest” by prescribing that it should be “a significant public interest”. ELO submits also this wording for possible consideration by the Convention.

ELO submits that “fair” should be replaced by “full”.

Several constitutions of European countries (Holland, Finland, Denmark) provide for full compensation. There is no reason why an individual should support the burden of a limitation of his property use (that can sometime reach the situation of quasi-expropriation), when that burden is applied in the general interest.

It cannot be regarded correct that the state, when depriving a citizen of his possessions, may compensate him with a lower value than his fellow citizens would pay him if that property was traded in the open market.

ELO further supports the requirement that compensation should be prior to a taking or a restriction. Even if not all constitutions do not already have such wording, it would send wrong signals to the citizens if the Charter did not reflect the higher standard prescribed in some constitutions. An alternative wording could be to prescribe that full compensation be guaranteed.

A mechanism for citizens to invoke the right

This submission does not go into detail on the issue of the legal status of the Charter. However, ELO believes that it will be essential for a direct and effective mechanism to be created to enable citizens and businesses to invoke the Charter, and to seek a practical remedy where they believe their right to ownership may be infringed.

Conclusion

At a time when there is an increasing demand for the Union’s Institutions to build a “Europe of citizens”, and in the context of the enlargement to countries where people suffered negative economic and social consequences of the nationalisation of their properties, the EU Charter must meet key tests to be successful.

First: in order to direct the institutions of the EU to uphold fundamental rights when they make EU policy and legislation, the Charter must set out these rights clearly, and in a way that could eventually enable its incorporation into the EU’s Treaty base. The Charter can then fill a gap that currently exists, in that basic human rights are already incorporated into national legislation, but not into the policy and law making functions of the EU itself.

Second, the Charter must respond to the legitimate demands of individuals and groups within society to enjoy a protection of basic human rights, including ownership rights, which they will find acceptable and in terms they can understand. Commitments in the Charter to uphold the rights in such a manner will be welcomed by the public.

Third; the Charter must demonstrate that the EU is forward looking, and capable of responding to new challenges. Since Europe's citizens will benefit from less bureaucratic institutions and from an innovative market economy, regulation and control should play a diminishing role. Incentives to positive action will become more and more important. And so will an improved protection of ownership both for material and intellectual property, enabling citizens to take a long term approach to investment and economic development, and reassuring them that they will not be deprived of the fruits of their work. The Charter must fully embrace this forward-looking approach, in particular in a clear and effective text on ownership rights.

The Charter must succeed in defining the rules for ownership rights in a way which not only protects the citizen but which also promotes the best use of resources, both human and natural.

ELO is pleased to be able to submit this paper and would welcome the opportunity to develop our reasoning further or provide any clarification needed.

15th March 2000

Annex

The UN-Declaration on Human Rights

- Art. 17: Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.
No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.
- Art. 29 Everyone has duties to the community in which alone the free and full development of his personality is possible.
In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.
These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

Article 1 of the Protocol to the Convention:

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law. The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties.

The European Parliament Declaration of fundamental rights and freedoms (Doc. A2-3/89, J.O. No. C 120/51)

- Article 9: The right of ownership shall be guaranteed. No one shall be deprived of their possessions except where deemed necessary in the public interest and in the cases and subject to the conditions provided for by law and subject to fair compensation.
- Article 25 1. This declaration shall afford protection for every citizen in the field of application of Community law.
2. Where certain rights are set aside for Community citizens, it may be decided to extend all or part of the benefit of these rights to other persons.
3. A Community citizen within the meaning of this declaration shall be any person possessing the nationality of one of the Member States.
- Article 26: The rights and freedoms set out in this Declaration may be restricted within reasonable limits necessary in a democratic society only by a law which must at all events respect the substance of such rights and freedoms.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 16 March 2000CHARTE 4166/00*CONTRIB 50*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages (EBLUL).¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

Call for Linguistic Rights in European Fundamental Rights Charter

The European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages (EBLUL) welcomes the decision of the European Union to draft and approve the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. The Charter will be a further step in the process of European integration. It is highly significant because it signals a move away from mostly economic matters which have been at the centre of European attention in recent years towards a more comprehensive understanding of European citizenship, incorporating the notion of fundamental rights.

Cultural and linguistic diversity in Europe lies at the heart of fundamental rights for its citizens as the integration process advances. An essential part of this diversity are the regional and minority languages traditionally spoken by linguistic communities within the EU member states.

The importance of preserving and promoting these languages has been considered highly important by some relevant European institutions. The European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages can be considered to be Council of Europe's convention setting out basic minimum standards. Another relevant document of the Council of Europe is the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities.

The OSCE mentions minority languages on several occasions, including the Document of the Copenhagen Meeting of the Conference on the Human Dimension, adopted in June 1990, containing 11 paragraphs relating to linguistic minorities. Furthermore, the following should also be considered: the activities of the High Commissioner for National Minorities; the Foundation of Inter-Ethnic Relations in 1996; the Hague Recommendations Regarding the Education Rights of National Minorities as adopted in 1996 and the Oslo Recommendations Regarding the Linguistic Rights of National Minorities as adopted in 1998. These latter two documents give a comprehensive overview of the rights needed for protection and promotion of languages.

EBLUL stresses the need for clauses specifically related to linguistic rights of communities speaking regional and minority languages to be included in the Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union. The Charter should provide at least a minimum standard of protection of regional and minority languages which will become a fundamental basis in this field for the European Union itself and for its current and future member states.

Brussels 25.2.2000

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 16 March 2000CHARTE 4167/00*CONTRIB 51*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution of European Round Table of Charitable Social Welfare Associations (ETWelfare).^{1 2}

¹ ETWelfare: rue De Pascale 4-6, B-1040 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-230 4500. Fax: +32-2-230 5704.

² This text has been submitted in English only.

ETWelfare

Proposal from ETWelfare
(European Round Table of Charitable Social Welfare Associations) concerning the draft of an EU Charter of Basic Rights

Article ...
The Right to Civil Dialogue and Basic Protection

- (1) Every person in the European Union has a right to social participation (civil dialogue) and to protection against poverty and exclusion (basic protection).
- (2) Civil dialogue adheres to the principles of solidarity and subsidiarity, and will be conducted at the local, regional, national and European levels, in particular by means of co-operation with the social partners, non-governmental organisations and charitable social welfare associations as actors of civil society.
- (3) Basic protection includes the right to a socio-cultural subsistence, to be anchored in all social policy regulations. Part of this is the right to benefit from social welfare services, that are offered by the social partners and the charitable associations, with the involvement of volunteers, as actors of social protection and institutions responsible for voluntary establishments and services.

Reasons:

The citizens need to have more confidence in the process of European unification. The rift between rich and poor and the inherent employment crisis are evident at a global level, and require new ways of fighting against poverty and exclusion. This is the only way to encounter the fears of globalisation in general and of enlarging the EU in particular. It is imperative to further develop the European social model. The current state of play seems to indicate that the EU may adopt a Charter of Basic Rights by the end of 2000, and for the reasons given above it must include social rights.

The newly to be created right to civil dialogue requires the guarantee that there will be co-operation with the social partners, non-governmental organisations and charitable social welfare associations as actors of civil society, at the local, regional, national and European levels. Only a sufficient degree of social participation can give durability to the principle of democracy. And in doing so, it must respect the principles of subsidiarity and solidarity.

All social policy regulations need to include the right to a socio-cultural subsistence level. Pursuant to Article 14 of the European Social Charter this must include the right to benefit from social welfare services. Co-operation with the social partners and the charitable associations responsible for social establishments and services (see Maastricht Declaration N° 23 on "Co-operation with Charitable Associations"), and that use the input from voluntary services to develop social solidarity (see Amsterdam Declaration N° 38 on "Voluntary Services") corresponds specifically to the objectives of European social policy as stipulated in Article 136 of the EU Treaty (Amsterdam version).

Managing Directors:

Bernd-Otto Kuper (Germany)

Bundesarbeitsgemeinschaft der Freien Wohlfahrtspflege (BAGFW)

Leif Rönnerberg (Finland)

Finnish Federation for Social Welfare

Manuel D. Cunha da Silva (Portugal)

Instituições Particulares de Solidariedade Social (UIPSS)

Nicole Alix (France)

Union Nationale Interfédérale des Oeuvres et Organismes Privés Sanitaires et Sociaux (UNIOPSS)

Brussels, 3 March 2000

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 16 mars 2000CHARTE 4168/00*CONTRIB 52*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution du Groupement Européen des Fédérations intervenant dans l'immobilier (GEFI) ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française seulement.

CHARTE EUROPÉENNE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX

PROJET DU GEFI

Groupement Européen des Fédérations intervenant dans l'Immobilier

Transmis le jeudi 16 mars pour diffusion sur le site internet :
Consilium.eu.int

INTRODUCTION

- 1 Dans l'Europe qui se constitue, au sein de l'ensemble communautaire, la propriété est un droit fondateur, acquis pour les uns depuis quelques siècles, retrouvé pour les autres depuis quelques années. Et pour chacun, le droit de disposer d'une propriété demeure une motivation dans son activité professionnelle et dans sa vie personnelle.

Pour autant, demander à voir ce droit reconnu dans un texte, constitué de principes directeurs de l'action des institutions communautaires, ne relève pas de la redondance. C'est d'ailleurs ce que traduit globalement le plan d'action de Vienne, qui avait demandé le 3 décembre 1998 que trois notions, pourtant ancrées dans l'esprit collectif européen, soient protégées : la liberté, la sécurité et la justice.

- 2 Dans sa sagesse, le Conseil européen de Cologne a confirmé, en faisant suite au Traité d'Amsterdam (articles 6 et 7 du Traité sur l'UE), qu'il n'existait pas d'évidence en matière de Droits de l'Homme. Il a jugé qu'à ce stade du développement de l'Union européenne, la subsidiarité était compatible avec l'affirmation solennelle d'un état de droit demeuré jusque là implicite et insuffisamment cohérent.

Ce souci de visibilité des droits fondamentaux, qui devrait notamment se fonder sur l'acquis précieux de la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme et de la Cour de Strasbourg, ainsi que sur les traditions constitutionnelles communes des Etats membres, consacre, quelle que soit la valeur juridique du texte à venir, un basculement de l'ère des agents économiques à celle des citoyens européens, d'une communauté d'intérêts à un état de droit.

Cette configuration nouvelle laisse la liberté d'inventer un modèle cohérent, qui concilie nos destins nationaux et notre communauté de destin européen. A l'évidence, ce défi ne se limite pas à la reconnaissance de droits établis. Il suppose également de les concilier avec de nouvelles exigences et de trouver par là un nouveau sens, une vocation renouvelée de ces droits fondateurs.

- 3 La propriété illustre cette nouvelle donne. Etroitement liée à l'ensemble des libertés qui sont le fondement, l'objet même de la Communauté Européenne et qui se déclinent en liberté d'entreprendre, liberté de la concurrence, ou liberté de la circulation, elle a vu son rôle évoluer au cours des dernières années.

Certes, elle demeure plus que jamais une motivation, un ressort essentiel pour l'activité humaine. Elle encourage et permet de mener un projet personnel, d'imaginer son futur, celui de sa famille. Elle constitue, en ce sens, un moteur économique et un facteur d'harmonie sociale unique, qu'il est indispensable de préserver et plus encore de développer.

Parallèlement, elle participe d'autres objectifs, celui de la solidarité notamment, face à l'accroissement, depuis le début de la décennie 80, du nombre des sans-abri et à l'insuffisance des moyens engagés en faveur des personnes âgées, des handicapés et des sous-populations aux besoins spécifiques. Elle est de plus en plus intégrée dans les politiques de protection de l'environnement et de développement durable. La propriété, qui induit le partage, assure par là un des fondements essentiels de la citoyenneté moderne.

C'est cette double faculté de la propriété qui explique le renouvellement de son rôle économique et social dans l'ensemble des Etats membres de la Communauté Européenne, au cours des années 80.

- 4 La fondation au niveau de l'Union Européenne d'un droit de propriété moderne et pérenne doit donc tenir compte de la conservation pleine et entière de ce droit d'intérêt général, dans des conditions qui permettent de répondre aux exigences du temps présent, ainsi qu'à celles de notre avenir commun.

Cela revient à s'interroger sur les limites aux atteintes qui lui sont portées, de sorte que l'exception n'annihile pas le principe et que les restrictions d'usage ne privent pas de facto le propriétaire de son droit.

Au préalable, un état des lieux s'impose, qui montrera toute l'utilité d'une clarification communautaire.

A l'image de nombreux autres droits fondamentaux, en effet, l'espace européen de la propriété immobilière n'existe pas (II), mais il se construit progressivement (III).

Absence d'espace européen de la propriété et convergences nationales croissantes

- 5 Pourquoi un espace européen de la propriété immobilière ? parce que c'est un droit fondamental, inscrit de surcroît dans un espace économiquement intégré, qui se veut socialement cohérent. L'égalité de traitement doit permettre en tous domaines une fluidité des capitaux et des investissements dans l'immobilier, une mobilité transnationale du travail, une égalité de traitement pour les revenus les plus modestes voulant accéder au logement ou à la propriété.

A cet égard, le filtre des politiques nationales permet de discerner quelques conceptions concrètes de la propriété, souvent ancrées dans une histoire récente, celle des 50 dernières années, et dans des environnements nationaux différents (2.A). Cela ne remet pas pour autant en cause des valeurs communes, qui s'accompagnent de réelles convergences (2.B).

2.A. Des choix stratégiques et des réglementations différenciées

- 6 Si tous les pays membres de l'Union s'interrogent sur la meilleure politique du logement possible pour répondre notamment aux nouvelles formes d'exclusion, les voies et moyens adoptés divergent.

Les choix stratégiques fondamentaux pourtant partagés après-guerre n'ont pas donné lieu à mise en œuvre dans des conditions comparables. Dans la mesure où ils ne furent jamais remis en cause, si ce n'est au Royaume-Uni, du moins dans leurs grands principes, les évolutions qui en ont résultées ont le plus souvent divergé.

2.A.1 Les choix stratégiques de l'après-guerre

7 Al'issue de la Seconde guerre mondiale, deux types de réponses ont été apportés au problème de l'insuffisance de logements :

| soit, l'Etat a investi directement dans le secteur et construit des logements dont il était propriétaire, à charge pour lui de les louer ou de les vendre ;

| soit, il a adopté des mesures d'incitation des agents économiques à investir dans le secteur du logement, des ménages pour leur fonction de consommateurs de service du logement et de tous les autres, pour leur fonction d'épargne et de gestion de leur patrimoine.

Le choix entre ces deux options s'est, en général opéré, suivant des considérations pragmatiques d'efficacité des interventions et de rapidité d'obtention des résultats. C'est le poids relatif de six facteurs principaux, qui permet d'expliquer les différences entre les politiques du logement retenues. Leur énumération rapide permet de comprendre l'actualité et la pertinence de cette grille de lecture pour toute politique du logement, à quelque niveau que ce soit :

- la philosophie économique et sociale des dirigeants ;
- le degré de légitimité des interventions de l'Etat dans le secteur du logement ;
- le degré d'acuité de la crise du logement ;
- le niveau d'organisation des institutions sur lesquelles l'Etat peut s'appuyer pour intervenir ;
- la situation générale de l'économie ;
- le degré de motivation préalable des agents économiques.

8 Dans tous les pays, les gouvernements ont mis en œuvre des politiques d'incitation à l'accession à la propriété, essentiellement dans « le neuf », par l'octroi de primes, de subventions, de bonification d'intérêts, d'avantages fiscaux ou de prêts à taux réduits.

| Là où la légitimité de l'intervention étatique était ancienne, la solution de l'Etat investisseur fut immédiatement retenue, démarche des pays scandinaves et du Royaume-Uni.

| Là où elle apparaissait plus faible ou plus récente, il s'est agi de permettre aux ménages les plus modestes d'accéder à des logements décentes, sans effort trop lourd. Cette politique restreinte du logement (plafonnement des ressources) s'est traduite par la construction de logements sociaux en France, en Belgique, au Luxembourg et, de façon temporaire, en RFA.

| Les Pays-Bas avaient adopté une position plus nuancée, orientée vers le logement social, qui se traduisait dans les faits par un libre accès à ce parc.

| L'Espagne, la Grèce et le Portugal, dans leur contexte politique particulier et compte tenu de leur isolement international, ne purent commencer à mettre en oeuvre une véritable politique du logement que beaucoup plus tard.

9 Dans le secteur locatif, la situation était plus diversifiée encore :

| dans les pays scandinaves et au Royaume-Uni, la puissance publique ont joué un rôle déterminant soit en aidant les acteurs privés, soit en se substituant à eux.

| dans les autres pays européens, la situation plus ambiguë a conduit les gouvernements à tergiverser : ils ont refusé d'intervenir dans le secteur locatif au-delà de la distribution de quelques aides à la construction, tout en comptant sur les acteurs privés, au point de leur aménager des conditions législatives exceptionnelles. Ce fut l'échec, en France et en Allemagne notamment, qui a conduit l'Etat à intervenir massivement au travers d'organismes d'utilité publique.

2.A.2 Les politiques ultérieures et l'émergence de groupes de pays

10 L'amélioration générale de la conjoncture à partir de la fin de la décennie 50 va faciliter la résorption des tensions sur le marché de l'immobilier. Pourtant une ligne de fracture va très rapidement se faire jour :

| Dans les pays où les gouvernements sont intervenus rapidement, l'accroissement de l'offre de logements et l'élévation des revenus réels ont permis de lever rapidement le contrôle des loyers : la RFA est en 1963, le premier pays à le faire. Dans ces pays, les pouvoirs publics ont pu également s'appuyer sur les investissements privés. En RFA, par exemple, l'Etat s'est retiré, dès la fin des années cinquante, du système des logements subventionnés et a favorisé le secteur locatif par l'octroi d'aides de caractère essentiellement fiscal.

| Dans les pays où l'action de l'Etat fut plus tardive et moins massive, la levée des contrôles des loyers n'est intervenue que beaucoup plus tard : le cas extrême est celui des pays de l'Europe du Sud. Toutefois, dans ces pays, l'Etat cherche à réduire ses interventions financières en utilisant la progression des revenus réels. Il multiplia les catégories de logements. Chaque catégorie devait correspondre à un groupe particulier de population selon ses revenus. C'est sans doute la France qui est allée le plus loin possible dans cette voie : en 1968, on ne comptait pas moins de 6 catégories de logements ouverts aux organismes locatifs sociaux.

11 A l'inverse de l'effet recherché, les pays peu interventionniste ont vu se réduire l'offre de logements de bonne qualité sur le marché locatif privé, ce qui a contribué à une baisse générale de l'investissement dans le logement et de l'entretien du parc. L'Etat a dû, au fil des années, répondre à ces carences, en renforçant son intervention, notamment en compensant le recul du parc locatif privé par le développement du parc locatif public.

Les pays les plus rapides (RFA, Pays-Bas, Danemark, pays nordiques) ont en revanche créé une spirale vertueuse : après avoir résorbé les déséquilibres quantitatifs, ils ont pu transférer au secteur privé la responsabilité de l'accroissement de l'offre nouvelle de logements, sans jamais abandonner complètement le secteur privé au marché, de sorte qu'il remplisse une vraie fonction sociale.

12 Le déclenchement de la crise de 1974 va contribuer à figer les situations nationales en imposant progressivement une « orthodoxie budgétaire » peu favorable au secteur social en particulier, aux dépenses publiques en général. Cette nouvelle option va se traduire par l'incitation à l'accession à la propriété privée.

- 13 Les années suivantes vont confirmer une segmentation des pays en trois groupes principaux :
- | L'Europe du Nord (Danemark, Pays-Bas, RFA) se caractérise par une volonté des pouvoirs publics de faire jouer à la propriété privé un rôle social qui contribue à son développement, notamment sous la forme de conventionnements.
 - | L'Europe du Sud (Espagne, Grèce, Italie, Portugal) place le secteur locatif privé sous contrôle, ce qui conduit à la disparition d'une offre locative, conditionne le choix de l'accession assistée, aboutit le plus souvent au délabrement du patrimoine immobilier.
 - | L'Europe de l'Ouest (Belgique, France, Grande-Bretagne, Irlande) choisit le désengagement général de l'immobilier en assurant la promotion à l'accession Cela a induit des risques de rupture sociale, notamment par le développement d'une ségrégation spatiale, ce contre quoi les pouvoirs publics s'efforcent aujourd'hui de lutter.

2.B. Des convergences croissantes

- 14 Les politiques nationales ne résument pas à elles seules la façon par laquelle on peut caractériser le statut de la propriété dans les pays membres de l'Union Européenne. Elles traduisent un état de fait, dont il convient de tenir compte, mais elles ne délimitent en aucune façon un cadre indépassable.

En revanche la base constitutionnelle reconnue à la propriété dans chacun des pays est révélatrice de l'importance fondamentale de ce droit, ainsi que d'une vraie cohérence des pays membres de l'Union sur ce point.

Au-delà même de cette unanimité de principe quasi absolue, les orientations récentes des politiques nationales semblent indiquer des évolutions convergentes.

2.B.1 Les Constitutions, unanimes mais nuancées

- 15 Presque tous les pays d'Europe, héritiers du droit romain, ont inscrit la propriété privée dans leur Constitution comme droit fondamental et inviolable, sous réserve de restrictions inspirées par des motivations d'intérêt public. Seul le Royaume-Uni a conservé un droit issu du système féodal, régi par la « common law ». A noter une autre singularité, l'Autriche : sa Constitution ne traite que des règles d'organisation des pouvoirs publics.

De conception la plus souvent récente, les textes originels ou issus de révisions constitutionnelles adoptent pour la plupart d'entre eux une formulation pragmatique. Mais certains choisissent une affirmation plus solennelle de ce droit.

- 16 C'est le cas en particulier de l'Irlande et de la France. Dans son article 43, la Constitution irlandaise dispose « L'Etat reconnaît que l'homme, en vertu de son être raisonnable, a le droit normal, antérieur à la loi positive, à la propriété privée des marchandises externes ». Le texte français, issu de la Déclaration des Droits de l'Homme et du citoyen du 26 août 1789 (art.17), est le suivant : « La propriété étant un droit inviolable et sacré, nul ne peut en être privé, si ce n'est lorsque la nécessité publique, légalement constatée, l'exige évidemment, et sous la condition d'une juste et préalable indemnité ».
- 17 Les autres textes constitutionnels vont d'emblée à la nécessité de l'équilibre à instaurer entre propriété privée et intérêt public. A cet égard, l'exigence des constituants est plus ou moins grande, eu égard au respect de la propriété privée. Quatre groupes de pays peuvent être distingués :
- | les pays dont les constituants exigent une pleine compensation (Danemark, Finlande, Grèce, Pays-Bas) ;
 - | les pays dont les Constitutions garantissent une juste et parfois préalable indemnisation (Belgique, France, Luxembourg, Portugal) ;
 - | les autres pays évoquent le principe d'équité ou de caractère approprié dans le dédommagement (Allemagne ; Espagne)
 - | la dernière catégorie, la moins représentée, est illustrée par les pays ne caractérisant pas précisément la nature de la compensation (Italie, Suède)

2.B.2 Les orientations récentes, convergentes

- 18 Outre ce voisinage de principe entre les Etats européens, les préoccupations communes qui se sont exprimées durant les années 90 révèlent désormais une problématique partagée, relative aux orientations politiques en matière de logement et de propriété immobilière.
- 19 Ces convergences sont plus particulièrement visibles pour les actions en faveur du secteur locatif privé.

Ce secteur représente actuellement de l'ordre de 21% du parc de logements des Etats membres (contre 18% pour le parc locatif social et 56% pour les propriétaires et accédants) et enregistre des signes de regain encourageants.

L'exemple de l'Allemagne, qui par des aides fiscales en faveur des propriétaires bailleurs a permis de conserver un puissant secteur locatif privé, de qualité et de confort, et le contre-exemple d'une baisse sensible de l'offre liée à la réglementation des loyers, accompagnée du développement de l'insalubrité (exemple : le Portugal), ont conduit les Etats européens à reconsidérer le rôle de la propriété privée.

Les actions entreprises depuis une dizaine d'années dans la plupart des Etats en faveur du secteur locatif privé commencent à progressivement produire des effets. Les réglementations des loyers ont été presque partout assouplies, des incitations fiscales accompagnent le plus souvent les orientations des politiques publiques, des actions de réhabilitation du parc existant sont engagées, des systèmes de conventionnement se développent.

- 20 Cette première partie de l'analyse, si elle montre la diversité européenne, constat qui ressort de l'évidence, met également en exergue des traits communs fondamentaux et, de plus en plus, des évolutions convergentes. Une déclaration des Droits ne saurait ainsi ignorer que les différences nationales temporaires ne font indubitablement pas obstacle à une mise en cohérence, d'autant qu'elle est initiée par les gouvernements. Un tel texte a, en outre, pour vocation, d'encourager ces évolutions, dans le sens du respect le plus grand des droits dont il est question.

Cette tâche est facilitée par le fait que le travail européen et communautaire a déjà été entamé.

Logique de cohérence européenne et prise en compte de nouveaux enjeux

- 21 L'Europe, par la voix des Cours de Strasbourg et de Bruxelles, a apporté les premiers éléments de cohérence de ces politiques nationales et établi certains principes de hiérarchisation des droits (3.A).

Mais ces évolutions demeurent encore trop souvent ancrées dans une vision traditionnelle du droit de propriété et de ses relations avec les puissances publiques. Non seulement la Charte peut aisément établir un cadre juridique sur la base de l'existant. Mais elle peut, plus encore, préparer certaines évolutions probables et souhaitables (3.B).

3.A. Un fondement juridique européen aujourd'hui bien établi

3.A.1 L'article 1^{er} du protocole additionnel à la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales

- 22 L'article 1^{er} du Protocole n°1 est ainsi rédigé :

« Toute personne physique ou morale a droit au respect de ses biens. Nul ne peut être privé de sa propriété que pour cause d'utilité publique et dans les conditions prévues par la loi et les principes généraux du droit international.

Les dispositions précédentes ne portent pas atteinte au droit que possèdent les Etats de mettre en vigueur les lois qu'ils jugent nécessaires pour réglementer l'usage des biens conformément à l'intérêt général ou pour assurer le paiement des impôts ou d'autres contributions ou des amendes. »

Selon la jurisprudence de la Cour de Strasbourg, cet article contient trois normes distinctes (arrêt James et autres C. Royaume-Uni, du 21 février 1986) : la première, qui s'exprime dans la première phrase du premier alinéa et revêt un caractère général, énonce le principe du respect de la propriété ; la deuxième, figurant dans la seconde phrase du même alinéa, vise la privation de propriété et la soumet à certaines conditions ; quant à la troisième, consignée dans le second alinéa, elle reconnaît aux

Etats contractants le pouvoir, entre autres, de réglementer l'usage des biens conformément à l'intérêt général.

- 23 Sur cette base, la Cour de Strasbourg a produit une jurisprudence très abondante relative au droit de propriété, qui vise en général à concilier sa protection nécessaire avec l'existence de droits concurrents et reconnus par là inférieurs dans l'ordre juridique communautaire.

Quelques arrêts permettront à titre d'exemple d'évaluer la portée de cette jurisprudence qui ne s'en tient pas à une garantie formelle du droit de propriété.

∂ Ainsi, dans un arrêt Sporrong et Lönnroth . Suède du 23 septembre 1982, la Cour a jugé que l'absence d'expropriation formelle conduisant néanmoins au gel d'un terrain pendant 23 ans ne respectait pas un juste équilibre entre des exigences d'intérêt général et les impératifs de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme.

- Plus récemment, la Cour a jugé qu'une loi établissant une présomption irréfragable selon laquelle les propriétaires riverains, parce qu'ils tirent profit de la construction d'une route nationale, ne peuvent être indemnisés que pour une partie des biens expropriés, s'avère d'une « rigidité excessive » et fait supporter aux propriétaires une « charge spéciale et excessive », qui emporte violation de l'article 1 du Protocole 1 (Papachelas C. Grèce, 25 mars 1999).

÷ Des réglementations d'usage ont également été condamnées par la Cour à l'occasion de 2 arrêts très récents.

| Ainsi, l'obligation faite aux petits propriétaires français par la loi « Verdeille » de faire apport du droit de chasse sur leurs fonds à une ACCA poursuit bien un but d'intérêt général – éviter une pratique anarchique de la chasse et favoriser une gestion rationnelle du patrimoine cynégétique-, mais constitue une violation du droit de propriété en ce qu'elle fait peser une « charge démesurée » sur les propriétaires, qui ne disposent en pratique d'aucun moyen d'échapper à cet apport forcé (Chassagnou et autres c. France, 29 avril 1999).

| Est aussi une réglementation de l'usage des biens la législation qui, par la prolongation de baux locatifs et la suspension puis l'échelonnement de l'exécution forcée des décisions judiciaires ordonnant aux locataires de libérer les lieux, place un propriétaire dans l'impossibilité d'obtenir l'exécution d'une décision d'expulsion (Immobiliare SAFFI C. Italie, 28 juillet 1999). Une telle législation, qui tend à faire face à des besoins urgents en matière de logement et à éviter des tensions sociales, poursuit bien un but légitime. Bien que reconnaissant au législateur une ample marge d'appréciation en matière de réglementation de l'usage des biens, la Cour juge ici que l'application de la législation italienne à la requérante a placé celle-ci pendant environ 11 ans dans l'incertitude quant au moment où il lui serait possible de récupérer son appartement et lui a fait subir une « charge spéciale et excessive » constitutive d'une violation de l'article 1 du Protocole 1.

- 24 La lecture de ces quelques exemples jurisprudentiels montre le souci des juges de Strasbourg de porter son regard au-delà des limitations d'usage dès lors qu'elles emportent l'impossibilité effective de jouir de son bien.

Mais la justice européenne est un luxe auquel peu de concitoyens européens peuvent accéder, ce qui légitime la protection au sein de l'Union de ces droits, ainsi qu'un renforcement de l'intervention des juges de Luxembourg.

3.A.2 Un dispositif de mieux en mieux relayé au sein de l'Union Européenne

- 25 La base juridique de l'intervention de l'Union en matière de droits fondamentaux, à l'origine très étroite, s'est au cours des dernières années notablement étendue.

C'est en effet l'article 6 (F), deuxième alinéa, du traité de l'Union Européenne, qui fait obligation à l'Union de respecter les droits fondamentaux tels qu'ils sont garantis par la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des libertés fondamentales .

Pour le respect de ces droits, certaines dispositions peuvent être prises contre certains Etats membres qui se rendent coupables de violations à leur égard. Ces dispositions sont applicables en vertu de l'article 236 (309, paragraphe 2) du Traité de l'Union.

Par ailleurs, les articles 11 § 1 (J.1 § 2), 5^{ème} tiret, et 30 (K.2) § 1 du traité de l'Union, ainsi que l'article 177 (130 U) § 1 et 2 du traité CE, mentionnent la protection des droits fondamentaux et les droits de l'homme.

Enfin, le préambule de l'Acte unique se réfère à la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme.

- 26 Hors des procédures contentieuses, le Parlement Européen a pris depuis 1977 des initiatives visant à une meilleure protection des libertés fondamentales des citoyens européens. En 1993, la Commission des libertés publiques et des affaires intérieures, mise en place après le traité de Maastricht, a établi le premier rapport annuel sur le respect des droits de l'homme dans la Communauté, suivi d'une résolution sur le même sujet. C'est par ailleurs, sur son initiative, qu'a été envisagée l'adhésion de l'Union à la Convention européenne des Droits de l'Homme, idée rejetée par la Cour de Justice dans un avis du 28 mars 1996.

- 27 La Cour de Luxembourg a pris le relais des textes et des initiatives parlementaires. Elle a été amenée à fonder sa jurisprudence sur les droits fondamentaux reconnus et garantis par les Constitutions des Etats membres, ainsi que sur le texte de la Convention Européenne pour assurer le respect des droits fondamentaux dans l'Union Européenne. C'est ainsi qu'elle a pu établir dès 1974 que les droits fondamentaux, tel que le droit de propriété, faisaient partie des principes généraux du droit, équivalents, dans la hiérarchie des normes communautaires, au droit communautaire primaire.

- 28 Par ailleurs, sa jurisprudence est allée en se précisant, dans le sens de garanties mieux affirmées du droit de propriété. Mais elle demeure encore, à certains égards, imprécise.

Dans l'arrêt Nold du 14 mai 1974, la Cour reconnaît le droit de propriété en tant que droit fondamental, protégé par l'ordre juridique communautaire. Elle fait référence aux instruments internationaux auxquels les Etats membres ont adhéré ou simplement coopéré et énoncent que la Cour «est tenue de s'inspirer des traditions constitutionnelles communes aux Etats membres ». A cet effet, il est précisé qu'il ne saurait être admis « des mesures incompatibles avec les droits fondamentaux reconnus et garantis par les Constitutions » des Etats membres.

L'arrêt « Hauer », rendu le 13 décembre 1979, constitue une étape décisive vers une protection plus effective de la propriété. Il précise, en effet, que les restrictions justifiées par l'intérêt général ne sauraient aller au-delà de la mesure nécessaire, ni porter atteinte à la substance même du droit de propriété. Le principe de proportionnalité ainsi affirmé se fonde pour la première fois sur l'article 1^{er} du Premier Protocole additionnel à la Convention européenne et l'interprète comme s'il s'agissait d'une disposition de droit communautaire.

Cette avancée notable de la jurisprudence connaît néanmoins une limite, qui tient à la distinction faite entre privation et règlement de l'usage de la propriété: le même arrêt Hauer précise qu'il n'existe pas de privation si le propriétaire peut continuer à disposer de sa propriété et en user de toutes autres manières, sous réserve qu'elles ne soient pas prohibées.

La limite ainsi établie entre la substance d'un droit et les restrictions qui peuvent y être apportées est plus que ténue, en tout cas mal définie. Dans la mesure où cette substance n'est pas établie et où les atteintes portées sont conformes au droit existant, tous les abus de droit restent possibles.

Cela renvoie notamment à la distinction artificielle faite dans un certain nombre de droits nationaux entre la perte totale de la propriété, qui est indemnisée, et la perte d'éléments qui, même s'ils peuvent apparaître comme fondamentaux (par exemple une inconstructibilité totale) ne le sont pas. De nombreuses atteintes remettant en cause le sens et la portée du droit de propriété peuvent ainsi échapper à une réparation.

A cet égard, la Cour a pris, dans l'affaire Wachauf du 13 juillet 1983, une position qui va dans le sens de l'indemnisation du préjudice subi. Elle a, en effet, estimé qu'une importante limitation au droit de propriété, devait être compensée financièrement. L'influence de la jurisprudence de la Cour européenne des droits de l'Homme apparaît ici avec la force de l'évidence. Ainsi, la Cour fait-elle du bilan coût-avantage un élément fondamental que toute Charte moderne du droit de propriété paraît devoir aujourd'hui appliquer.

Cette évolution jurisprudentielle apparaît finalement aussi encourageante qu'elle est inachevée. Dans la situation actuelle, le droit de propriété, même reconnu, ne jouit pas de garanties stables face aux droits concurrents. En réalité, il n'existe pas encore.

3.B. Une actualisation indispensable

- 29 Le futur article de la Charte relatif au droit de propriété doit, compte tenu des dispositions constitutionnelles de certains des Etats membres de l'Union et de la jurisprudence de la Cour Européenne des Droits de l'Homme aller au-delà des dispositions de l'article 1 du Protocole 1 de la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales.

- 30 Il convient tout d'abord d'affirmer le rôle que joue la propriété immobilière dans l'équilibre social et le développement économique des pays membres de l'Union. C'est précisément ce rôle et la conscience qu'en ont les propriétaires eux-mêmes et les Etats, qui fondent les droits relatifs à sa protection.

L'exercice de ce droit ne pose problème que dès lors que des droits concurrents viennent limiter son libre exercice. A cet égard, plusieurs éléments doivent être mentionnés dans le texte futur :

- 31 Il doit être rappelé, comme le fait l'article 1 du Protocole 1 de la Convention, que « nul ne peut être privé de sa propriété que pour une cause d'utilité publique ».
- 32 Ce droit de la puissance publique doit être encadré par l'existence de normes législatives et constitutionnelles. Il peut en effet être envisagée qu'une loi ne soit pas nécessairement confrontée à ces normes suprêmes de la hiérarchie des normes. Il est donc nécessaire que la conformité de la loi à la Constitution soit examinée d'office.

La compensation liée à ces opérations doit se conformer à des garanties de fond et de procédure.

- 33 Sur le fond, il est indispensable de ne plus distinguer les restrictions à l'usage de la propriété de privations pures et simples, dans la mesure où, comme on l'a vu, l'un aboutit de fait souvent à l'autre. C'est la raison pour laquelle, la compensation prévue doit être pleine et entière et non pas seulement équitable. Cette dernière notion revêt, en effet, un caractère relatif qui laisse à l'arbitraire une place trop grande.
- 34 Cette compensation doit être également préalable pour éviter, autant que faire ce peut, que l'empiètement sur l'exercice du droit de propriété ne se transforme en privation .
- 35 Enfin, le propriétaire ne peut appréhender complètement un préjudice que s'il dispose de toute l'information utile à la formation de son appréciation. Aussi, convient-il d'ajouter l'exigence d'une procédure loyale et contradictoire.

Conclusion

La meilleure protection des droits des locataires et la réalisation effective du droit au logement passe, comme le démontrent les politiques nationales dans les pays du nord de l'Europe, ainsi qu'en Allemagne, par une protection effective des droits des propriétaires.

C'est là une condition de la confiance dans les rapports entre propriétaires et puissance publique et une étape indispensable vers certaines formes de partenariat.

C'est dans ce cadre, qui intègre un principe de solidarité indispensable, et renouvelle donc le rôle de la propriété immobilière dans la Cité que des garanties nouvelles doivent être ajoutées à celles que les institutions européennes ont déjà reconnues.

La base de cette reconnaissance ne saurait donc se limiter durablement à ce qui n'est qu'une référence de base, la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales.

L'Union Européenne sera ainsi en mesure de répondre à sa vocation d'espace politique cohérent, faisant application d'un cadre juridique uniformément respecté et inspirant durablement les pratiques étatiques.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 17 March 2000CHARTE 4169/00*CONTRIB 53*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Children's Network (Euronet). ^{1 2}

¹ Euronet: c/o Place du Luxembourg 1, B-1050 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-512 7851/4500.
Fax: +32-2-512 6673. E-mail: savechildbru@skynet.be

² This text has been submitted in English only.

To: The Convention to draft the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights
Mr Roman Herzog, Chair of the Convention
c/o European Council of Ministers
175 Rue de la Loi
1048 Bruxelles

Re: Note from the Praesidium CHARTE 4123/1/00 REV 1, Convent 5

Brussels, 27 February 2000

Dear Mr Herzog,

Rights of the Child

I am writing to follow up your note with draft articles for the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union of 15 February 2000. Euronet, the European Children's Network was particularly interested in your comments on Article 9 Family life and in particular the commentary on the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

We welcome the fact that the Convention drafting the Charter is giving consideration to adding the phrase "in accordance with the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child 20 November 1989" to paragraph 3. This is in line with recommendations by Euronet in its submission to the Convention drafting the EU Charter of fundamental rights. In particular we would like to answer the question posed by the Convention, as to whether reference should be made to an instrument external to Union which may develop independently. We recommend that a reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, as the most comprehensive contemporary expression of children's rights, with almost universal ratification, is the most straightforward way to integrate the rights of the child. Although the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child can be amended, Article 50 (3) states clearly that when an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding only on those states parties which have accepted it. Other states parties are bound by the provisions of the present Convention (and any earlier amendments which they have accepted.) Therefore it is not possible to envisage a situation where the Union would be bound to a changing and developing legal instrument, as amendments only bind states which agree to them. In addition the phrase "in accordance with the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child” does not amount to ratification by the EU and simply means that the EU has to respect the principles of the present Convention. In the event that the Convention decides that a reference to international legal instruments is not possible, then we would urge that reference is made to the principle of the best interests of the child and the other four key principles (Articles 2, 3, 6 and 12) in the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

We would also like to point out that the current reference proposed in the draft Charter in Article 9 should be wider than “The Union shall ensure protection of children.” The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child contains a number of other important rights not only protection rights. Our submission also raises a number of other issues and not only child protection. Children should not merely be seen as objects of rights but as bearer of rights. We would therefore urge that a reference is included to the Union ensuring protection and promotion of the rights of the child.

We would be pleased to discuss these comments further with you.

Yours sincerely,

Mieke Schuurman
Euronet Co-ordinator

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 20 March 2000CHARTE 4171/00*CONTRIB 54*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution of European Liaison Committee on Services of General Interest (CELSIG).^{1 2}

¹ CELSIG: 1-2 Avenue des Arts, boîte 9, B-1210 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-221 0429.
Fax: +32-2-217 6612. E-mail: celsig@worldnet.fr

² This text has been submitted in English and French languages.

Comité européen de liaison
sur les Services d'intérêt général
European Liaison Committee on Services of General Interest
Europäisches Verbindungskomitee
"Dienstleistungen von allgemeinem Interesse"

Secrétariat / Secretariat / Sekretariat : Pierre Bauby et Jean-Claude Boual, RESEAUX SERVICES
 PUBLICS
 66 rue de Rome
 F - 75008 PARIS
 FRANCE
 Tel (33-1) 40 42 50 24 ou/or/oder (33-6) 07 34 12 23
 Fax (33-1) 40 42 13 78 ou/or/oder (33-1) 70 81 69 64
 E-mail : celsig@worldnet.fr

EEF/ACFCI, 1-2 Avenue des Arts, Boîte 9
 B - 1210 BRUXELLES
 BELGIQUE
 (32-2) 221 04 29
 (32-2) 217 66 12

2 March 2000

CELSIG Propositions in view of the elaboration of the Charter of Fundamental Rights and the Intergovernmental Conference

Services of general interest constitute a significant element of the Union's common values. This opinion has been underlined by the Commission itself in its communication of September 1996:

“European societies are committed to the general interest services they have created which meet basic needs. These services play an important role as social cement over and above simple practical considerations. They also have a symbolic value, reflecting a sense of community that people can identify with. They form part of the cultural identity of everyday life in all European countries.”

Today, following the establishment of the common market over the whole European territory and the introduction of the common currency, we may add that these services, equally constitute a factor of economic cohesion in the European Union. Further, the Treaty of Amsterdam (article 16) recognises their role in the strengthening of social and territorial cohesion. The services of general interest play, in addition, an essential role in the guarantee to all, of the application of individual's fundamental rights.

These orientations should be consolidated during the elaboration of the Charter of fundamental rights in the European Union and during the Intergovernmental Conference.

That is why the European Liaison Committee on Services of General Interest proposes the following:

1/ Charter of fundamental rights

Democratic values and the respect of Human Rights are the basis of the European civilisation. The Charter of fundamental rights must allow the exercise of these values by all European citizens and residents. The proper functioning of the European democracy depends on this aspect.

The Charter of fundamental rights, based on the European Social Charter (Council of Europe), must guarantee the integrity, the freedom, the equality, the dignity, the well being and personal advancement of the person. Services of general interest are a factor that guarantees the exercise of these fundamental rights, of having access to goods and essential services such as food, security, employment, housing, culture, education and training, health treatment, transport, energy, information and communication (postal services, telecommunications, Internet, media), access to financial and bank services, consumer protection, good quality environment for today and for generations to come.

...

We therefore propose that the following appear in the Charter:

"Article X – Services of general interest

1. Every individual has a right to access to services of general interest
2. Services of general interest guarantee the exercise of fundamental rights".

“Article Y – Right to an effective appeal action

Any individual, physical or moral, whose rights and liberties have been violated, has a right to an effective appeal action before a judge designated by the law, including before the Court of Justice of the European Communities."

The Charter of fundamental rights should be integrated into the treaty of the European Union, in order to have constraining legal significance.

2/ Intergovernmental Conference

On these bases, the article 16 (formerly article 7D) of the Treaty must be supplemented:

- "a) Services of general interest are components of the common values of the Union; they participate in ensuring the exercise of the fundamental rights of the individual as defined in the present Treaty; they contribute to the promotion of social and territorial cohesion in the Union.
- "b) The European Union and its Member States guarantee the access of everyone to services of general interest.

- "c) Without prejudice to articles 73, 86 and 87, the Community and its Member States, each within their respective powers and within the sphere of implementation of the present Treaty, guarantee that such services operate on the basis of principles and conditions which enable them to fulfil their missions. Such measures are established in full respect of, inter alia, the principles of equality of treatment, quality, continuity of these services, as well as of the principles of transparency and evaluation concerning their definition, their application and their operation".

3/ Charter of the services of general interest

A Charter of the services of general interest at the Community level should be elaborated with all stakeholders (institutions, elected representatives, enterprises, employees and unionists, consumer organisations, civic NGOs, etc). Such a Charter should permit the taking into account of the principle of subsidiarity and it should in particular include:

- the creation of democratic evaluation bodies at each relevant level (local, national, European);
- the establishment of regulations at the respective levels;
- the consideration of the creation of services of general interest at the Community level, in certain sectors of European interest.

Further, CELSIG suggests that an encompassing directive, democratically elaborated, provides the possibility for the general interest coherence to the sector related directives and for the provision of a legal basis to these propositions.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPEENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 22 mars 2000CHARTE 4172/00*CONTRIB 55*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint une déclaration de l'Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM), délibérée en Assemblée Générale réunie à Strasbourg le 17 mars 2000. ^{1 2}

¹ Ce texte a été soumis seulement en langue française.

² AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris. Tél.: 33-1-45 72 1203.
Fax: 33-1-45 72 1503. E-mail: assafem@aol.com

AFEM
ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES DE L'EUROPE MERIDIONALE

Déclaration de l'AFEM sur la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux
Délibérée en Assemblée Générale réunie à Strasbourg le 17 mars 2000

L'Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM) se félicite que l'Union européenne ait décidé de se doter d'une Charte des Droits Fondamentaux.

L'AFEM note avec intérêt l'avancement des travaux de la Convention, et notamment la proposition du Praesidium d'inclure une disposition spécifique sur l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes.

Elle estime toutefois qu'il faut aller plus loin et insérer parmi les premiers articles de la Charte un article spécifique qui consacre le droit fondamental à l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes dans tous les domaines en tant qu'élément constitutif de l'ordre public en Europe. Ainsi il sera impossible de déroger à ce droit, dont le bénéfice sera automatiquement acquis à toute personne présente sur le territoire de l'Union.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 22 March 2000CHARTE 4173/00*CONTRIB 56*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by Amnesty International on the right of asylum and the protection of refugees under the European Union Charter of fundamental rights. ^{1 2}

¹ Amnesty International: rue du Commerce 70-72, B-1040 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-502 1499.

Fax: +32-2-502 5686. E-mail: Amnesty-EU@aieu.be

² This text has been submitted in English only.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

EUROPEAN UNION ASSOCIATION

Rue du Commerce 70-72

B - 1040 BRUSSELS

TEL.: +32-2-502.14.99

FAX.: +32-2-502.56.86

E-Mail: Amnesty-EU@aieu.be

Convention for the EU Charter of fundamental rights Convention Secretariat
c/o Council Legal Secretariat
175 rue de la Loi
B-1048 Brussels

Brussels, 20 March 2000

Dear Sirs,

In light of the discussions that the Convention Working Group is expected hold in the near future on the draft article 17 of the European Union Charter of fundamental rights, which relates to the “right of asylum and expulsion”, please find enclosed some comments by Amnesty International on the right of asylum and the protection of refugees.

Amnesty International acknowledges the transparency in the working methods of the Convention as well as its expressed interest in receiving the views of civil society.

Although our organisation will present at a later stage a comprehensive position on the subject, we would like to recall that the adoption of a Charter of fundamental rights must not result in diminishing the current level of protection that human rights enjoy in member states under the European Convention on Human Rights and other relevant international human rights instruments and that the Charter of fundamental rights should take account of the developments in international law, both of treaty and of customary legal nature, and therefore serve to crystallise fundamental rights that have not been object of written formulation so far.

Amnesty International is an independent worldwide movement working for the release of all prisoners of conscience, fair and prompt trials for political prisoners and an end to torture, extrajudicial executions, "disappearances" and the death penalty. It is funded by donations from its members and supporters throughout the world. It has formal relations with the United Nations, Unesco, the Council of Europe, the Organization of African Unity and the Organization of American States.

Amnesty International also recalls that under international human rights law, the fundamental rights of individuals cannot be object of discrimination on account of national origin. The Charter of fundamental rights must therefore ensure that the rights of all individuals present in the territory of the European Union are recognised

I hope that you will find these comments useful in the development of your work.

Thank you very much for your attention.

Sincerely yours,

María-Teresa Gil-Bazo
Executive Officer

Brussels, 20 March 2000

Comments by Amnesty International on the right of asylum and the protection of refugees under the European Union Charter of fundamental rights

(in light of the discussions on draft article 17 on the “right of asylum and expulsion”)

- 1.- Amnesty International welcomes the inclusion of a provision on the right of asylum in the EU Charter of fundamental rights. Indeed, this reflects the development of international law and gives substance to the undertaking made by member states under article 3 of the Dublin Convention to examine the application for asylum of any individual, in accordance with their international obligations.
- 2.- Amnesty International would like to see an express reference to the UN Refugee Convention but also to other relevant international obligations for member states, such as the European Convention on Human Rights, in line with article 63 of the Treaty on the European Community.
- 3.- Amnesty International notes that the current draft provision excludes nationals of member states from the right of asylum. Such limitation constitutes a clear violation of the UN Refugee Convention and other international human rights treaties.

Amnesty International recalls that under international law, discrimination in the enjoyment of fundamental rights on the grounds of national origin is forbidden (article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 3 of the UN Refugee Convention, article 3 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights) and therefore calls for the express recognition of the right of asylum to all individuals. Such recognition would be in line with conclusion 13 of the Tampere Summit, whereby the Heads of State and Government reaffirmed “the importance the Union and Member States attach to absolute respect of the right to seek asylum”. Evenmore, the obligation of states to respect the right to seek asylum is a norm of customary international law and as such, no derogation from it is permitted (article 53 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties).

- 4.- Amnesty International would like to see an express provision on the absolute norm of non-refoulement, as included in article 33 para. 1 of the UN Refugee Convention and in other international treaties, of universal and regional application, such as article 3 of the UN Convention against torture and article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which prohibit the forced return of individuals to the territories where their lives or freedom are at risk.
- 5.- Amnesty International would like to see an express provision on the guarantees that assist individuals in expulsion, extradition, or any other form of forced removal that they may be subjected to. Such provision would be in line with article 13 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (to which all member states are parties) and with the case-law of international monitoring bodies, such as the European Court of Human Rights, the UN Human Rights Committee or the UN Committee against Torture.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 22 March 2000CHARTE 4174/00*CONTRIB 57*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter an open letter by the European Federation of National Organisations Working with the Homeless (FEANTSA) to the members of the Convention.^{1 2}

¹ FEANTSA: 1 rue Defacqz, B-1000 Brussels. Tel.+32-2-538 6669. Fax: +32-2-539 4174.

E-mail: office@feantsa.org

² This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

Brussels, 21 February 2000

Open letter to the members of the Convention responsible for drafting the proposed European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights

Dear Madam / Sir,

I am writing to you on behalf of FEANTSA - the European Federation of National Organisations Working with the Homeless. FEANTSA brings together some 60 not-for-profit organisations in the social or community sector that provide a wide range of services to homeless people in all the EU member states, and in a number of the accession countries.

We have been very interested to hear about the work being carried out by the Convention with responsibility for drafting the proposed European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights. We are convinced that the proposed EU Charter should also enshrine those rights which are most important to the most disadvantaged members of our societies - including the right to housing.

Decent housing and living conditions are among the most basic needs of each individual. Gaining secure access to adequate accommodation is often a pre-condition for exercising many of the fundamental rights which form the foundations of all decent societies, and should be enjoyed by everyone. These include the right of access to education, the right to work, the right to social protection, the right to healthcare services, the right to personal privacy and family life, as well as access to basic services such as water and electricity.

The European Observatory on Homelessness (which has conducted research on homelessness in the Member States on behalf of FEANTSA since 1991) has compiled an overview of the situation in the fifteen EU member states. Approximately three million people have no fixed home of their own, while a further 15 million people live in sub-standard or overcrowded accommodation. On this basis, we can estimate that across the European Union, one person in 20 is denied access to decent housing.

Since 1948, the Universal Declaration on Human Rights has proclaimed that: "everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services" (Article 25.1). More than 100 states are committed to taking appropriate steps to ensure the realisation of the right to housing, under article 11.1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (1966).

At the level of the Council of Europe, the European Social Charter was adopted in 1961, and the revised European Social Charter (RESC) was opened for signature in 1996. The right to housing is enshrined in Article 31 of the RESC, which sets out a series of three objectives:

"With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to housing, the Parties undertake to take measures designed:

- 1. to promote access to housing of an adequate standard;*
- 2. to prevent and reduce homelessness with a view to its gradual elimination;*
- 3. to make the price of housing accessible to those without adequate resources".*

The Revised European Social Charter officially entered into force on 1 July 1999. But the current situation is that only five countries have completed the ratification process: France, Italy, Sweden, Romania and Slovenia. Most of the EU countries have signed but not yet ratified the RESC: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Luxembourg, Portugal and the United Kingdom. FEANTSA strongly advocates that every European country should sign and ratify the Revised European Social Charter. This will provide us with a common foundation, upon which we can develop and implement effective policy solutions at all levels, in order to tackle social exclusion and homelessness.

In relation to the proposed European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights, we must ask the following question: Will the proposed Charter represent a step forward in terms of protecting the fundamental rights of the most disadvantaged members of our societies?

We welcome the fact that the Convention is willing to consider all the main dimensions of fundamental human rights, including civil, political, legal, social and economic rights. However, we are extremely concerned that the right to housing was not included in the draft list of fundamental rights which was presented at the most recent meeting of the Convention.

As civilised and democratic societies, we have a collective responsibility to ensure that all citizens and residents are able to gain access to adequate accommodation. The prevention and elimination of homelessness can only be achieved through the recognition and realisation of the right to housing. This conviction is enshrined in the revised European Social Charter, and is also reflected in numerous texts of national constitutions and laws that have been enacted in the member states of the European Union.

We fear that the adoption of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights which excludes the right to housing would send out a negative signal to the citizens of Europe and to the national governments of the member states and of the accession countries. It would suggest that the right to housing is somehow less important than other fundamental human rights. It would imply that our societies are willing to tolerate that thousands of people become homeless every year. It could undermine the efforts of those of us who are working to protect the fundamental rights of the most disadvantaged members of our societies.

We respectfully appeal to you to ensure that the full range of social rights - including the right to housing - are included in the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Yours sincerely,

John Evans
President of FEANTSA

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 22. März 2000CHARTE 4175/00*CONTRIB 58*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend einen Beitrag des Zentralverband der Deutschen Haus-, Wohnungs- und Grundeigentümer e.V. ("Hans und Grund Deutschland").^{1 2}

¹ Hans und Grund Deutschland: Cecilienallee 45, 40474 D-Düsseldorf. Tel: +49-211-4 78 17 0.
Fax: +49-211-4 78 17 23.

² Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

Herrn
Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog
Vorsitzender des Konvents zur Erarbeitung einer europäischen Grundrechtscharta
Rue de la Loi / Wetstraat 175
B-1048 Brüssel

8. März 2000

Sehr geehrter Herr Vorsitzender, sehr geehrte Mitglieder des Konvents,

in Erfüllung des Auftrages des Europäischen Rates vom 3. und 4. Juni 1999 erarbeitet der Konvent derzeit eine europäische Grundrechtscharta, um die auf der Ebene der Union geltenden Grundrechte zusammenzufassen und dadurch „die überragende Bedeutung der Grundrechte und ihre Tragweite für die Unionsbürger sichtbar zu verankern“.

Haus & Grund Deutschland begrüßt diese Entwicklung. Sie darf jedoch nicht dazu führen, dass der Grundrechtsschutz in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland geschwächt wird. Denn anders als im bislang geltenden Völkerrecht bietet das Grundgesetz einen starken Eigentumsschutz.

Der europäische Grundrechtskatalog darf lediglich die Europäischen Gremien binden, so wie dies im bisher vorliegenden Entwurf der Präambel oder des Artikel 1 vorgesehen ist. Gleichzeitig muss ein umfassender Schutz des Eigentums vorgesehen sein, da über die Rechtsetzung der Europäischen Union zwangsläufig Eingriffe in das nationale Recht zu erwarten sind.

Der in Art. 16 des Entwurfs der Grundrechtscharta festgelegte Eigentumsschutz bleibt jedoch hinter dem in der Bundesrepublik zurück. So bedarf es insbesondere der Ergänzung, dass Art. 16 einen unmittelbar durchsetzbaren Anspruch und eine Bestandsgarantie des Eigentums bewirkt.

Der Schutz des Eigentums auf nationaler Ebene muss auch weiterhin der Eigentumsordnung der Mitgliedstaaten überlassen bleiben, so wie es Art. 222 EGV bereits jetzt festhält: Dieser Vertrag (d.i. EG-Vertrag) lässt die Eigentumsordnung in den verschiedenen Mitgliedstaaten unberührt. Dies steht auch im Einklang mit dem häufig zitierten Subsidiaritätsprinzip, so wie es in Art. 3 b EGV niedergelegt wurde, da alles, was durch die Mitgliedsstaaten geregelt werden kann, auch weiterhin von ihnen geregelt werden sollte. Dies trifft auch auf die Eigentumsordnung zu.

Weitere Ausführungen entnehmen Sie bitte unserer in der Anlage beigefügten Stellungnahme.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Dr. Friedrich-Adolf Jahn

Stellungnahme

In Erfüllung des Auftrages des Europäischen Rates vom 3. und 4. Juni 1999 erarbeitet der Konvent derzeit eine europäische Grundrechtscharta, um die auf der Ebene der Union geltenden Grundrechte zusammenzufassen und dadurch „die überragende Bedeutung der Grundrechte und ihre Tragweite für die Unionsbürger sichtbar zu verankern“.

Haus & Grund Deutschland begrüßt diese Entwicklung. Sie darf jedoch nicht dazu führen, dass der Grundrechtsschutz in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland geschwächt wird. Anders als im bislang geltenden Völkerrecht bietet das Grundgesetz einen starken Eigentumsschutz. Dieser starke Schutz des Eigentums ist vor dem Hintergrund der deutschen Geschichte zu erklären. Vor diesem Hintergrund muss auch die Betonung des Föderalismus und die explizite Bindung der drei Gewalten an Recht und Gesetz sowie die Rechtswegegarantie gesehen werden

Zu den Grundrechten zählen im deutschen Grundgesetz bspw. die persönlichen Freiheitsrechte, der Gleichheitsgrundsatz sowie nicht zuletzt die Eigentumsgarantie, die als elementares Grundrecht - als „Wertentscheidung von besonderer Bedeutung“ - vor anderen Verfassungsrechten besonders betont wird. Art. 14 GG konstatiert: „Das Eigentum und das Erbrecht werden gewährleistet.“ Dieses Recht gilt für alle natürlichen und juristischen Personen, jedoch nicht für den Staat. Gleichzeitig wird in Satz 2 normiert, „Inhalt und Schranken werden durch die Gesetze bestimmt.“ Dies verbietet jedoch kein Recht des Gesetzgebers, den Eigentumsbegriff frei zu definieren und dadurch in seiner Substanz auszuhöhlen; die Begriffsdefinition muss sich vielmehr an dem durch die Rechtsordnung vorgegebenen Eigentumsbegriff orientieren. Durch Art. 14 Abs. 1 S. 1 GG werden zum einen die konkreten Vermögensrechte (Rechtstellungsgarantie) und zum anderen die Wirtschafts- und Gesellschaftsordnung (Institutsgarantie) geschützt. Demnach wäre es nicht mit der Verfassung zu vereinbaren, weite Bereiche der Gesellschaftsordnung ohne Privateigentum zu organisieren. Damit spricht sich die Verfassung jedoch noch nicht für eine bestimmte Wirtschaftsverfassung aus, weder für eine soziale, noch für eine anders geartete Marktwirtschaft. Sie gibt lediglich einen festen verfassungsrechtlichen Rahmen vor. Wenn nämlich Bestand und Wert des Eigentums in der Hand des Eigentümers gesichert wird, kann die Wirtschaftsordnung nicht ohne Markt existieren.

Unter Eigentum wird i.S.d. Art. 14 GG jedes vermögenswerte Recht verstanden. Daher fallen unter den Eigentumsschutz z.B. das Grundeigentum sowie alle daraus abgeleiteten Rechte, aber auch Anliegerrechte, d.h. bspw. das Recht des Zutritts zum öffentlichen Straßennetz. Nicht geschützt sind Gewinnchancen, Interessen, wirtschaftliche Möglichkeiten u.ä. Es wird zudem das Recht am Eigentum und nicht ein Recht auf Eigentum geschützt. Das Recht auf Eigentum kann durch Art. 14 GG nicht geschützt werden, da dieses Rechts sich gegen das Eigentum eines Dritten richten würde. Die Garantie des Instituts Privateigentum allein ist ein schwacher Schutz. Erst durch Art. 1 Abs. 3 GG wird die „Institutsgarantie“ zu unmittelbar geltendem Recht. Art. 1 Abs. 3 GG stellt fest: „Die Grundrechte (sie umschließen die Eigentumsgarantie des Art. 14 GG, d.V.) binden die drei staatlichen Gewalten als unmittelbar geltendes Recht.“ Damit wird das Recht am Eigentum zum durchsetzbaren Anspruch.

Das Eigentumsrecht gilt nicht unbegrenzt, es unterliegt der Sozialbindung. Es ist zu beachten: Inhalt und Schranken des Eigentums werden durch Gesetze bestimmt (Art. 14 Abs. 1 Satz 2 GG). Zudem konstatiert Art 14 Abs. 2 GG: Eigentum verpflichtet. Sein Gebrauch soll zugleich dem Wohl der Allgemeinheit dienen. Damit ist zwar ein „Einfallstor“ für Eingriffe in das Privateigentum geschaffen, auch und insbesondere im Bau- und Wohnraummietrecht, aber die Eigentumsrechte dürfen unter dem Hinweis auf die Sozialpflichtigkeit nicht soweit eingeschränkt werden, dass das Recht nur noch eine „leere Hülse“ ist.

Zwar lässt der Eigentumsschutz eine Enteignung zu, sie „ist jedoch nur zum Wohle der Allgemeinheit zulässig. Sie darf nur durch Gesetz oder auf Grund eines Gesetzes erfolgen, das Art und Ausmaß der Entschädigung regelt.“ (Art. 14 Abs. 3 GG). Damit dürfen Enteignungen nicht willkürlich, sondern nur auf der Grundlage eines Gesetzes vorgenommen werden. Zudem sind sie nur zulässig, wenn das Wohl der Allgemeinheit, nicht bereits wenn das öffentliche Interesse sie erfordert. Folglich sind Enteignungen grundsätzlich möglich, müssen jedoch an strenge Voraussetzungen geknüpft werden. Zwingend erforderlich ist dann eine Entschädigung (Junktivsklausel). Eine Entschädigung kann jedoch keine rechtswidrige Enteignung rechtfertigen, das wäre eine Enteignung, die zum Wohle der Allgemeinheit eben nicht notwendig ist.

Bei einer Verletzung des Eigentumsrechts steht dem Betroffenen der ordentliche Rechtsweg offen, nach Ausschöpfung dieser Möglichkeit bleibt der Weg zum Bundesverfassungsgericht. Doch die konkrete Fassung des Eigentumsrechts, die Ausdehnung bzw. Einschränkung bleibt der Rechtsprechung überlassen.

Im Vertrag über die Europäische Gemeinschaft (EG-Vertrag) wird in Art. 222 EGV festgehalten: „Dieser Vertrag (EG-Vertrag, d.V.) lässt die Eigentumsordnung in den verschiedenen Mitgliedstaaten unberührt.“ Dieser Artikel ist eine sog. negative Kompetenzbestimmung. In diesem Sinne stellt er lediglich fest, dass die Mitgliedstaaten über die Gestaltung ihrer Eigentumsordnung selbst entscheiden.

Damit verfügt die EU über keinerlei Zuständigkeiten im Bereich der Eigentumsordnung. Auf diese Weise sind zunächst die geltenden Eigentumsordnungen der Mitgliedstaaten vor Eingriffen der Gemeinschaft geschützt, die Mitgliedstaaten verfügen weiterhin über das Recht, ihre Eigentumsordnung entsprechend ihren politischen Vorstellungen zu gestalten. Gleichzeitig verhindert die Formulierung des Art. 222 EG-Vertrag - zumindest grundsätzlich - einen Eingriff der Gemeinschaft durch Sekundärrecht in die Eigentumsordnungen der Mitgliedsländer.¹

Diese Vorschrift erscheint auch im Zusammenhang mit dem häufig zitierten Subsidiaritätsprinzip, wie es in Art. 3 b EGV niedergelegt wurde, sinnvoll, da alles, was durch die Mitgliedstaaten geregelt werden kann, auch weiterhin von ihnen geregelt werden sollte. Und dies trifft auch auf die Eigentumsordnung zu.

¹ Diese neutrale Haltung der Europäischen Verträge gegenüber den Eigentumsordnungen der Mitgliedsländer wird allerdings durch eine Reihe sekundärrechtlicher Vorschriften gebrochen, mit deren Hilfe die Gemeinschaft im Zuge der Erfüllung von Aufgaben in die Verfügungsgewalt der Eigentümer einschränkend oder steuernd eingreift, so z.B. im Zuge des Wettbewerbspolitik der Gemeinschaft. Doch dies ist weitgehend vergleichbar mit Eingriffen in das Eigentumsrecht durch deutsche Gesetze.

Daher ist es unseres Erachtens sinnvoll, den Schutz des Eigentums auf nationaler Ebene auch weiterhin der Eigentumsordnung der Mitgliedstaaten zu überlassen, so wie es Art. 222 EGV bereits jetzt festhält: Dieser Vertrag (d.i. EG-Vertrag) lässt die Eigentumsordnung in den verschiedenen Mitgliedstaaten unberührt.

Der europäische Grundrechtskatalog darf lediglich die Europäischen Gremien binden, so wie dies im bisher vorliegenden Entwurf der Präambel oder des Artikel 1 vorgesehen ist. Gleichzeitig muss ein umfassender Schutz des Eigentums vorgesehen sein, da über die Rechtsetzung der Europäischen Union zwangsläufig Eingriffe in das nationale Recht zu erwarten sind. Die Ausführungen des Eigentumsschutzes in Art. 16 des Entwurfes der Grundrechtscharta enthält jedoch einen Grundrechtsschutz, der hinter dem nach der vorstehend erläuterten verfassungsrechtlichen Regelung in der Bundesrepublik zurückbleibt. So bedarf es insbesondere der Ergänzung, dass Art. 16 in erster Linie einen unmittelbar durchsetzbaren Anspruch und eine Bestandsgarantie des Eigentums bewirkt.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 27 March 2000CHARTE 4190/00*CONTRIB 73*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by three European owners organisations; European Association of Real-estate Owners (GEFI), the European Confederation of Forest owners (CEPF) and the European Landowners' Organisation (ELO).¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

To the Convention's members

Right to ownership

The three main European owners organisations, representing dozens of millions of European family owners, share the same position in favour of a better recognition and protection of the Fundamental Rights and Freedoms within the European Union.

It is with a great satisfaction that the GEFI (Groupement européen des Fédérations intervenant dans l'Immobilier – European Association of Real-estate Owners), the CEPF (Confédération européenne des Propriétaires Forestiers – European Confederation of Forest owners) and the ELO (European Landowners' Organisation) have noted the Praesidium's intention to formally include the right of ownership in the Charter.

Through the attached paper, GEFI, CEPF and ELO encourage the Praesidium and the Convention to ensure a balanced protection and recognition of property which guarantees its economic, environmental and social permanence.

GEFI, CEPF and ELO will give all needed support to the Praesidium and the Convention on the issue of ownership rights.

21st March 2000

(Signed)

M. Gildas de Kerhalic

M. Joseph Crochet

M. Johan Nordenfalk

GEFI

CEPF

ELO

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Article 16 : Right to Ownership

The GEFI (Groupement européen des Fédérations intervenant dans l'Immobilier – European Association of Real-estate Owners), the CEPF (European Confederation of Forest Owners) and the European Landowners' Organisation (ELO) propose that the text of the article on the Right on Ownership should be:

Everyone is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one may be deprived of his possessions or restricted in their use, except where deemed necessary in the public interest and in the cases and subject to the conditions provided for by law and subject to full and prior compensation.

Explanatory Memorandum

The GEFI (Groupement européen des Fédérations intervenant dans l'Immobilier – European Association of Real-estate Owners), the CEPF (European Confederation of Forest Owners) and the ELO (European Landowners' Organisation) support the objectives, agreed at the Cologne Summit in 1999, of establishing a Charter of Fundamental Rights, and of making the overriding importance and relevance of those rights more visible to the Union's citizens.

In particular, the GEFI, the CEPF and the ELO very much welcome that the Presidium has proposed the inclusion in the draft Charter, an article on the right to ownership. This memorandum explains why the right to ownership is so important for all Europe's citizens, and proposes some amendments to the current text of the draft Charter in relation to this right (article 16). These amendments would reinforce the positive work so far undertaken by the Convention to include this right to ownership.

The GEFI, the CEPF and the ELO speak for dozens of millions of land based business owners who provide employment, a living countryside, food and other products, amenities and environmental land management across the European Union. The GEFI, the CEPF and the ELO are well placed to speak on this subject, because their members are engaged, day to day, in the active management of property which serves as a base in satisfying needs and demands of modern society.

The need for a secure framework of ownership rights

Human rights are the cornerstone of democracy. Amongst these basic rights must be a right for the protection of ownership.

History shows with emphasis, however, that when ownership rights are not properly protected, both economic development and the environment are endangered. An efficient protection of ownership rights becomes even more important as the EU prepares for the entrance of a number of candidate countries which have in the past suffered from a lack of protected ownership rights.

In addition, the “new economy” (high-technology revolution) requires protection of intellectual property, so that the entrepreneurial climate will inspire investment, employment and incomes in Europe.

A social market economy, essential to a mature democracy, and for optimal management of the world's resources and the environment, cannot work without secure ownership rights. Ownership rights are a prerequisite for long term investment, not only in intellectual property but also in agriculture, forestry and manufacturing. A secure framework of ownership rights is vital for the long-term stewardship of our environment. Not only is a long-term perspective needed, but so often environmental conservation involves the positive management and individual commitment that can be provided only by someone with the ownership of the property.

Moreover, there is across Europe a social aspiration to ownership, seen as a symbol of permanence, prosperity and security.

Of course, with rights come responsibilities. Ownership must cede if it is necessary to satisfy an overriding public interest. But this can be done with the maintained respect for the owners' legitimate interests and without distorting the functioning of the market economy, provided that the owner is granted full compensation for his loss.

A framework of rights, particularly ownership rights, makes it possible for society to enter into secure, productive and transparent relationships with individuals and businesses. These relationships require, but also enable, those individuals and businesses successfully to meet the demands of the public for improving standards.

The GEFI, the CEPF and the ELO submit that the EU Charter is a unique opportunity – not to be missed – to redefine this relationship between public authorities, acting on the basis of EU legislation and policy (itself directed by the Charter) and individuals and businesses, to reflect a more enlightened balance between constructive partnership on the one hand, and regulation on the other.

Individuals and businesses are the providers of investment, innovation, stewardship and improving standards, in the countryside and elsewhere. Wherever possible, public authorities and their agencies should work in partnership with rural and other businesses to engage their voluntary co-operation and commitment. Compulsion should be only the last resort. Regulation, restriction and at its extreme, expropriation, can prevent actions, but cannot inspire positive initiative. So there should be a greater emphasis on partnership and a lesser dependence on regulation and constraint.

The text of the Charter on ownership rights should reflect this positive and forward-looking approach. GEFI, CEPF and ELO are pleased to note that the proposals made by the Presidium (Convent 9) are a good step in this direction. The submissions of GEFI, CEPF and ELO should be seen as a devoted effort, based on vast experience, to improve even further the article 16.

Specific amendments to the draft article on the right to ownership

GEFI, CEPF and ELO submit that the words “or restricted in their use” should be added after “possessions”.

The legislative and administrative practices of Member States and, in particular, EU legislation, have highlighted that many modern day-to-day problems that hamper the efficiency in managing assets stem from restrictions of use, which may have the same economic consequence as expropriation. It should be noted that such restrictions, if not compensated, may not only cause problems for the owner but will ultimately have negative effects on society as a whole as they will most certainly lead to distortions in the market economy and an inefficient allocation of resources.

GEFI, CEPF and ELO submit that the words “where deemed necessary” should be added after “except”.

These words oblige the authority acting on behalf of the “public interest” to demonstrate that action to deprive a person of his possessions, or to restrict him in their use, is the only way to meet that overriding public interest. In fact there is a growing urge already reflected in at least one national constitution to qualify the requirement “public interest” by prescribing that it should be “a significant public interest”. GEFI, CEPF and ELO submit also this wording for possible consideration by the Convention.

GEFI, CEPF and ELO submit that “fair” should be replaced by “full”.

Several constitutions of European countries (Holland, Finland, Denmark) provide for full compensation. There is no reason why an individual should support the burden of a limitation of his property use (that can sometime reach the situation of quasi-expropriation), when that burden is applied in the general interest.

It cannot be regarded correct that the state, when depriving a citizen of his possessions, may compensate him with a lower value than his fellow citizens would pay him if that property was traded in the open market.

GEFI, CEPF and ELO further support the requirement that compensation should be prior to a taking or a restriction. Even if not all constitutions do not already have such wording, it would send wrong signals to the citizens if the Charter did not reflect the higher standard prescribed in some constitutions. An alternative wording could be to prescribe that full compensation be guaranteed.

A mechanism for citizens to invoke the right

This submission does not go into detail on the issue of the legal status of the Charter. However, GEFI, CEPF and ELO believe that it will be essential for a direct and effective mechanism to be created to enable citizens and businesses to invoke the Charter, and to seek a practical remedy where they believe their right to ownership may be infringed.

Conclusion

At a time when there is an increasing demand for the Union’s Institutions to build a “Europe of citizens”, and in the context of the enlargement to countries where people suffered negative economic and social consequences of the nationalisation of their properties, the EU Charter must meet key tests to be successful.

First: in order to direct the institutions of the EU to uphold fundamental rights when they make EU policy and legislation, the Charter must set out these rights clearly, and in a way that could eventually enable its incorporation into the EU's Treaty base. The Charter can then fill a gap that currently exists, in that basic human rights are already incorporated into national legislation, but not into the policy and law making functions of the EU itself.

Second, the Charter must respond to the legitimate demands of individuals and groups within society to enjoy a protection of basic human rights, including ownership rights, which they will find acceptable and in terms they can understand. Commitments in the Charter to uphold the rights in such a manner will be welcomed by the public.

Third; the Charter must demonstrate that the EU is forward looking, and capable of responding to new challenges. Since Europe's citizens will benefit from less bureaucratic institutions and from an innovative market economy, regulation and control should play a diminishing role. Incentives to positive action will become more and more important. And so will an improved protection of ownership both for material and intellectual property, enabling citizens to take a long term approach to investment and economic development, and reassuring them that they will not be deprived of the fruits of their work. The Charter must fully embrace this forward-looking approach, in particular in a clear and effective text on ownership rights.

The Charter must succeed in defining the rules for ownership rights in a way which not only protects the citizen but which also promotes the best use of resources, both human and natural.

GEFI, CEPF and ELO are pleased to be able to submit this paper and would welcome the opportunity to develop our reasoning further or provide any clarification needed.

21st March 2000

GEFI

11, Quai Anatole France

F – 75007 Paris

Tél: +33 (0)144 11 32 47 Fax: +33 – (0)1 45 56 03 17

e-mail: scazenave.unpi@wanadoo.fr

CEPF

Rue des Fripiers, 17

Galerie du Centre – Bloc II

B – 1000 Bruxelles

Tél: +32 – (0)2 219 02 31 Fax: +32 – (0)2 219 21 91

e-mail: cepf@compuserve.com

ELO

Avenue Pasteur, 23

B – 1300 Wavre

Tél: +32 – (0)10 23 29 02 Fax: +32 – (0)10 23 29 09

e-mail: elo@skynet.be

Editors' note to CHARTE 4194/1/00 REV 1,
Contribution submitted by the Platform of European Social NGOs and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC):

The initial version mentions that this contribution was submitted by “the platform of European social NGOs (CES ETUC)”.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 28 April 2000CHARTE 4194/1/00 REV 1*CONTRIB 75*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the Platform of European Social NGOs and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC).¹

¹ This text has been submitted in 11 languages.

Platform of European Social NGOs

CES ETUC

Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social

- FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS:
- THE HEART OF EUROPE

Campaign paper

for the incorporation of fundamental rights in the European Union
and European Community Treaties

Foreword

Introduction

- 1. General Principles
- 2. Explicit fundamental rights
- 3. Binding political objectives
- 4. Rights in the Union's external policies

Fundamental Rights: The Heart of Europe

The European Trade Union Confederation and the Platform of European Social NGOs have prepared this campaign document to animate a debate amongst our members. We are launching a concerted campaign throughout the fifteen countries of the Union in order to involve our constituencies and seek their opinions so that we may make informed representations to the EU Convention which is drafting the European Charter of Fundamental Human Rights.

The social implications of the realisation of Economic and Monetary Union and the introduction of the EURO underpin the importance of securing fundamental rights at European level. We consider fundamental rights as an indispensable part in the building of the Social Union and safeguarding and developing the European social model. Their incorporation will also be important in view of enlargement. The respect of fundamental rights is necessary for a Citizens' Europe to become a reality.

It is time for action. A Charter, which guarantees civil, social, economic, political and cultural rights will counter the apathy and scepticism which appears so prevalent. It is time to put ideals back into Europe.

Some people argue that a new Charter is unnecessary, as the European Convention on Human rights and the European Social Charter already exist. But these documents are neither broad enough, or sufficiently legally enforceable, to guarantee the full range of civil, political, social and economic rights. An EU Charter of Fundamental Human Rights would, for the first time, give all who are living in the EU a common framework of enforceable and wide-ranging rights.

This campaign document does not intend to be a definitive text. It is meant to inform and inspire debate. Over the coming months we will hold conferences, seminars and meetings in all the EU Member States to discuss what rights should be in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and how these rights should be made enforceable in law.

The prosperity of Europe has been built on our ability to balance our need to be economically competitive with that of ensuring we live in a society based on solidarity with access to basic social rights for all. This balance is being threatened by some of the effects of globalisation and must be redressed by ensuring that the whole range of civil, political, social, economic and cultural rights are guaranteed for all. It is time to put fundamental rights at the heart of Europe.

INTRODUCTION

The June 1999 EU Summit decided that a Charter of fundamental rights for Europe should be drawn up. Support for the European integration project had been put at risk by the social effects of introducing the Single Currency and by finalising the Single Market. Citizens had lost trust in Europe. It was now important to reassert the social dimension of the European integration by underlining the importance of protecting fundamental rights at the European level.

At stake and at issue was going to be the nature of the Charter to be prepared. Would it be a simple proclamation or would it be a legally binding set of rights, which could be seen to protect and advance human rights in the Union? There were differences of opinion among EU Leaders, with the result that, the Summit left the delicate issue of the status of the Charter to be decided at a later stage. In October of that same year, meeting in the Finnish town of Tampere, the EU Council decided to set up a Convention, composed of national and European parliamentarians, as well as representatives of governments, to draw up the Charter of Rights.

The Convention will be meeting at regular intervals throughout the Year 2000 and will consult with a wide spectrum of civil society organisations before drawing up and agreeing the Charter by October 2000. It is then to be endorsed by the European Parliament and Commission in time for the December 2000 EU Summit taking place in Nice, France.

In recent years, significant advances have been made to recognise the importance of fundamental rights within the Union. The Amsterdam Treaty, states «the Union is founded on principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law, principles which are common to the Member States».¹ It also stipulates that «the Union shall respect fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on 4 November 1950 and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as principles of Community law».² In addition, Article 46 of the Treaty of the European Union (TEU), which deals with the jurisdiction of the European Community Court of Justice, gives competence to rule on the actions of the Institutions of the European Union in relation to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Council of Europe, 1950).

The Amsterdam Treaty makes it a binding obligation for the Union to respect the European Convention of Human Rights,³ and also for the Member States to respect the principle of “liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law”, on which the Union is founded.⁴

¹ Art 6.1 TEU

² Art 6.2 TEU

³ Art 6.2 TEU

⁴ Art 6.1 TEU

The Amsterdam Treaty prescribes a political rather than a judicial means of enforcement in the event of a Member State being in serious breach of the founding principles of the Union.⁵ Article 7 of the TEU gives the Council the possibility to suspend certain rights of a Member State, for example, suspension of the right to vote in Council. The European Court of Justice has competence to judge on matters relating to the respect of human rights only in relation to the activities of the Union or its Institutions.

The Maastricht and Amsterdam Treaties made progress in the protection of fundamental rights within the European Union. Amongst the most significant provisions were:

- Article 13 of the European Community Treaty (TEC) relating to non-discrimination against individuals or groups on grounds of gender, race or ethnic origin, religion or beliefs, disability, age or sexual orientation.
- The incorporation into the Treaties of references to the 1989 Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights of Workers and the European Social Charter (Turin, 1961). (Article 136 of the TEC).
- The recognition of European Citizenship and the provision of rights – such as freedom of movement, the right to vote in local and European elections and the right to petition. (Articles 17-22 of the TEC).
- Article 137 of the TEC, which gives the Union competence to put in place programmes to fight poverty and promote social inclusion.

In spite of this progress, the process of European integration, with its clear implications for human rights, requires that real and effective protection of fundamental rights are afforded to the citizens and workers of Europe and that these rights should be set out explicitly in one coherent text.

Fundamental rights are an indispensable part both in strengthening the Social dimension of the European Union and in safeguarding and developing the European social model. The incorporation of the Charter in the Treaties is of paramount importance in view of the forthcoming enlargement of the Union.

The European Union is asserting itself as one of the key players in the global scene. Council, Parliament and Commission make frequent calls on the need to advance human rights as agreed through Declarations, Covenants and Conventions drawn up by the United Nations and its institutions. The EU Council has stated that Europe must become a clarion voice for human rights. This respect of fundamental rights must become an integral and coherent part of the commitments and demands of the European Union and its Member States in their trade and foreign relations.

⁵ Art 6.1 TEU

Human rights are indivisible. The full set of rights: civil, political, economic, social, cultural and trade union, should be incorporated in the Treaty in a binding manner. An EU Charter of fundamental rights which limits itself to being a solemn political declaration, would fall short of what is needed now in terms of the objectives of a European construction, the enlargement of the Union and our global role. More importantly, it would not reinstate our fellow Europeans' faith that alongside the economic and monetary union, we intend to give equal importance to the social dimension of European integration that should focus on the individual.

Respect of fundamental rights is essential for the realisation of a Citizens' Europe.

A CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS FOR EUROPE

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

The incorporation of rights into the Treaty must remain consistent with and subject to the fundamental rights as defined in:

- the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UN 1948) and relevant Covenants (ICCPR & ICESCR, 1966);
- the European Convention on Human Rights (Council of Europe, 1950)
- the Revised European Social Charter (Council of Europe, 1996)
- the Community Charter of Workers' Fundamental Social Rights (European Union, 1989)
- the ILO Conventions referred to in the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (1998)
- the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women (UN, 1979)
- the Convention on the Rights of the Child (UN, 1989)
- the Convention on the Status of Refugees (UN, 1951) and its Protocol (UN, 1967)

The general principles common to all Member States reflect the obligations undertaken by them in these instruments and formally commit them to a series of obligations. The Member States and the Union should therefore assume joint responsibility for the enforcement of the rights appearing in these Instruments.

The rights to be included in the Treaty shall be guaranteed throughout the territory of the European Union. They should be regarded as a minimum level of protection and consequently are a minimum guarantee. They must not be used to undermine rights which already exist at European Union or Member State level and which may derive from either legislation or collective agreements. The Charter must not set rights which constitute a retreat from those already agreed through the UN and its Institutions or through the Council of Europe. They shall not lie below international standards.

The rights to be included in the Treaty shall, in principle, be available to all citizens of a Member State as well as third country nationals lawfully residing in a Member State of the Union. The rights which are to be afforded to other individuals who are on the territory of the Union are dealt with in a separate section of this document.

In order to emphasise the indivisibility of human rights, and in a spirit of pan-European political cohesion, the European Union shall also make the commitment to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights (including its Protocols), and to the Revised European Social Charter.

Legal implications: enforcement and jurisdiction

All rights to be included in the EU and EC Treaties should be subject to enforcement either on an individual or collective basis according to the following principles:

The legal system within each Member State will be competent with respect to the enforcement of fundamental rights which are not protected by any specific EU provision. This however does not exclude the use of the political sanction mechanism in relation to serious breaches of human rights.

The European Court of Justice will have competence, in accordance with existing procedures, with respect to the enforcement of EU provisions on a Union level and with respect to the implementation of both Union and Community law on a national level.

The European Court of Justice will have competence in relation to cross-border rights such as the freedom of movement and trans-national trade union rights.

In its case law, the European Court of Justice shall take into consideration all applicable practice and case law, established by other competent international bodies of the UN, ILO and the Council of Europe, so as to avoid the European Court of Justice deciding rulings, the effect of which would be to reduce the level of protection offered.

Any recourse for the interpretation and/or enforcement of these rights brought before the competent bodies established by international human rights instruments, other than the EU ones, cannot be re-addressed in the first instance or in appeal before the European Court of Justice.

The EU may adopt measures designed to promote the implementation by Member States of the binding political objectives or programmatic rights, listed in this document.

The Council, after due consultation with the other European Institutions, social partners and European NGOs, must adopt a five-year plan on the implementation of programmatic rights. Such a plan shall fix the calendar of deadlines and the procedures and mechanisms of enforcement. The draft plan should be submitted to the Council by the Commission within the year following the ratification of the Treaty. The Commission will submit regular progress reports and a follow-up plan will be prepared to be adopted at the end of the first five years.

2. EXPLICIT FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

2.1 Civil and political rights

The civil and political rights enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (UN) and the European Convention on Human Rights (Council of Europe) must be guaranteed throughout the European Union.

The following civil and political rights shall be available to all citizens of the European Union and to third country nationals who are legally resident in one of the Member States of the Union:

- No one shall be sentenced to death.
- No one shall be submitted to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment.
- Freedom of thought, opinion and religion, freedom of expression and communication of information and ideas as well as the right to property.
- Freedom of association, of representation and of action at the local, national and European level.
- The right to life and to the protection of privacy.
- Everyone is equal before the law and must enjoy effectively and without any discrimination, all rights listed in the Treaty.
- Everyone shall have the right to equal treatment and opportunities without discrimination on grounds of sex, social, racial or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age, or sexual orientation.

Rights linked to citizenship

The Treaties define a citizen of the Union as every person who holds the nationality of a Member State and that citizenship of the Union shall complement and not replace national citizenship (Art. 17, TEC).

The following rights must be guaranteed:

- Every citizen shall have the right to move, to reside freely and to work throughout the territory of the Union. These rights also apply to third country nationals lawfully residing in one of the member States of the Union.
- European citizenship also includes effective direct and indirect participation through the representative European Institutions (European Parliament, Economic and Social Committee, Committee of the Regions). After a specified period of legal residence, third country nationals must gain the right to vote in local and European elections.
- The right of citizenship requires a transparency of decision-making procedures and freedom of information.
- Everyone has the right of access to and correction of the administrative documents and other data, which are related to them. (Exceptions to this rule must be defined by law)
- The right to petition the European Parliament.
- The individual and collective right to challenge, with the possibility of recourse to the courts, the actions and shortcomings of the European Institutions.

The Treaty recognises the importance of the social dialogue with employers' and workers' organisations both within and across sectors of activity and this dialogue can also be extended to cross-border agreements. The right to European Collective Agreements must now be established.

The right to consultation of European NGOs must be recognised and result in the establishment of a structured civil dialogue.

Rights of third country nationals legally residing in the European Union

Third country nationals legally residing in the EU must have equality of treatment with EU citizens as regards civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including freedom of movement.

The Union and the Member States shall take co-ordinated measures to combat all forms of discrimination and ensure the promotion of equality of treatment.

Rights of third country nationals who are within the territory of the Union without being legally resident

The Union shall oversee the respect of the right to asylum as specified by the 1951 Geneva Convention and its 1967 Protocol. The Member States must take co-ordinated measures to give full effect to this right.

Every person on the territory of the Union shall be guaranteed the following rights without discrimination based on gender, race, social or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation:

- The right to life and to the protection of privacy. No one shall be sentenced to death. No one shall be submitted to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment.
- The right to medical, legal and social assistance (food and shelter).
- The right of access for school-age children to education on the basis of equality of treatment with nationals of the State in which they reside.
- The right to equality before the law, to transparency and to understand decisions that concern them, and access to a system of appeal.
- The right to form associations and to take part in actions which concern them.

2.2. Social and economic rights

The following social and economic rights must be guaranteed:

- Everyone shall have the right to equal treatment and opportunity in all fields of life and work; regardless of gender, race, social or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation.
- Everyone is entitled to social, legal and economic protection.

- The right of all individuals, regardless of status, to a decent minimum income, enabling them and their family to live in dignity, to ensure their health and well-being.
- The right to social protection in case of unemployment.
- The right to social and medical assistance.
- Everyone has the right to privacy, and the protection of personal data.
- All children shall have the rights laid down in the Convention on the Rights of the Child.
- All children have the right to protection of their integrity and personal development, as well as to safety, education and health. The Union and the Member States shall take all necessary and effective measures to ban any form of child labour, which could endanger their health, safety or morality and to respect the guarantee the two ILO Conventions relating to child labour (ILO 138 and ILO 182).

Rights pertaining to work:

- Workers shall have the national and trans-national right of freedom of association, collective bargaining and trade union action, including the right to cross-border solidarity action and to strike;
- Everyone shall have the right to earn a living through their work, to choose their occupation freely, to just and satisfactory working conditions, and to protection against unemployment;
- Everyone has the right to equal pay for equal work without discrimination;
- Workers shall have the right to efficient occupational health and safety protection at work;
- Workers shall have the right to information, consultation and participation at work at all levels and at national as well as cross-border levels.

Policies, programmes and measures need to be implemented in order to ensure access to all of these direct social rights.

3. BINDING POLITICAL OBJECTIVES (PROGRAMMATIC RIGHTS)

Programmatic rights are those rights which depend on the implementation of political programmes. Such rights require appropriate policies, programmes and measures to ensure their promotion, access, enforcement and effectiveness.

The following programmatic rights shall be guaranteed:

- The right to work and to full employment must be ensured by joint actions of the European Union and of its Member States;
- The right to protection against arbitrary dismissal;
- The right to education and to life-long learning;
- The right to choose one's educational system is assured throughout the territory of the Union;
- The right to equivalence of diplomas;
- The right to effective social protection, and appropriate health care;
- The right to decent housing;
- The right of people with disabilities to programmes and measures to promote their occupational and social integration;
- The right of elderly persons to live a decent life; the entitlement to a decent income, care allowance, and social protection;
- The right of every worker at the time of retirement to resources necessary for a decent standard of living;
- The right to a minimum pension to be set and regularly reviewed;
- The right for people and families to protection against poverty and social exclusion;
- The right for everyone, as a member of society, to economic, social and cultural rights essential to dignity and the freedom to develop their personality;
- Consumers' rights (fairness in credit, financial services, general interest services, healthy and environmentally-sound products); the right to public health;
- Citizens' rights to be informed and consulted at the relevant level of authority (European, national and local) for instance on matters concerning public health, area planning and management, the environment and quality of life;
- Right of access to services of general interest without discrimination.

The Council, after due consultation with the other European Institutions, social partners and European NGOs, must adopt a five-year plan on the implementation of programmatic social rights. Such a plan shall fix the calendar of deadlines and the procedures and mechanisms of enforcement. The draft plan should be submitted to the Council by the Commission within the year following the ratification of the Treaty. The Commission will submit regular progress reports and a follow up plan will be prepared to be adopted at the end of the first five years.

4. RIGHTS IN THE UNION'S EXTERNAL POLICIES

The Treaties stipulate that one of the objectives of the Union's and Community's external policies is "the development and strengthening of democracy and the rule of law, as well as the respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms."⁶ The external policies of the Union, following the example of those of the Community defined in Articles 177 and 178 (TEC), must therefore promote fundamental rights, as enshrined in the instruments of the United Nations and other competent organisations.

To this end, the agreements between the Union and third countries shall include a clause requiring the respect of fundamental rights as described in particular in the Universal Declaration on Human Rights and the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Social Rights. This clause shall also be binding in international relations and in negotiations within the multilateral institutions involving the European Union or the European Community.

The Union shall draw on the social guarantees enshrined in the Generalised Preference System in order to promote the abolition in third countries of forced labour and of the worst forms of child labour. Within this framework, the Union shall also promote the Core ILO Conventions governing the right of association, to collective bargaining, child labour, slave and bonded labour, freedom from discrimination and equal pay.

The Union shall ensure that Member States and applicant countries ratify and enforce the Instruments of the Council of Europe pertaining to fundamental rights (European Convention of Human Rights and Revised European Social Charter) as well as the international standards specified in the General Principles of the present document. The Union shall support the emergence and the reinforcement of civil society in these applicant countries.

* * *

⁶ Art 11 TEU & Arts 177 and 178 TEC

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 31 March 2000CHARTE 4197/00*CONTRIB 78*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union
Declaration of the European Health Forum Gastein 1999
(EHFG) submitted by the International Forum

Please find hereafter a Declaration of the European Health Forum Gastein (dated 06/09/10/99) submitted by the International Forum Gastein.^{1 2}

¹ International Forum Gastein: Tauernplatz 1, 5630 Bad Hofgastein, Austria.

Tel: +43- 6432 711070. Fax: +43- 6432 711071. E-mail: info@ehfg.org

² This text has been submitted in English, French, German and Spanish languages.

European Health Forum Gastein 1999

Creating a better Future for Health in Europe

Health and Social Security

6 to 9 October 1999

Gastein Health Declaration

International Forum Gastein
Tauernplatz 1
5630 Bad Hofgastein
Austria

Phone: +43 6432 711070
Fax: +43 6432 711071
Email: info@ehfg.org
Homepage: <http://www.ehfg.org>

Preamble

From October 6 to 9, 1999 politicians, scientists, industry and business representatives, health experts, non-governmental organisations and representatives of affected groups gathered in Bad Hofgastein to discuss problems of health and social security with the aim of “Creating a Better Future for Health in Europe”.

Renowned personalities from over 30 countries highlighted this event with their participation and contribution. Just to name a few:

Hajdu Gabor, Romanian Minister for Health, Caspar Einem, Austrian Minister for Science, Erwin Jordan, German Secretary of State for Health, Fernand Sauer, Executive Director of the European Agency for the Evaluation of Medicinal Products (EMA), Marlene Haffner, US Food and Drug Administration (FDA), Prof. Rolf Krebs, Vice-President of the International Federation of Pharmaceuticals Manufacturers Associations, Ulrich Bode, President of the Austrian Association of Pharmaceutical Industries, Prof. Spencer Hagar, London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, Prof. Albert R. Bakker International Medical Informatics Association, Mary McPhail, European Public Health Alliance, Albert van der Zeijden, International Alliance of Patients’ Organisations.

In the numerous contributions made by the various speakers on different perspectives of health and social security in Europe, particular attention was given to the following issues: solidarity for health, the connection of the health industry’s needs with those of social security systems, the WHO concept of “Health for All” as a challenge for the health economy, and the role of non-governmental organisations in the areas of health and social security.

The most important results of the six Forums and an additional workshop that worked on the following topics are presented below:

1. “Improving the Quality of Care”
Main recommendation: access to good health quality for all (in care, treatment, and services) within reasonable time.
2. “Improving Equity in Health and Health Care”
Main recommendation: The existing gap in access, scope, and quality of health must be studied and gradually abolished, whereas certain groups of persons (e.g. migrants and refugees), the adjustment of the membership candidates, and certain areas (e.g. employment possibilities, alcohol, and drugs) require particular attention.
3. “The Role of Public Health and Health Promotion in a Changing Europe”
Main recommendation: The proposed EU-declaration of the rights of citizens must include references to health and public health measures. Further, public health research must be integrated more efficiently into existing structures, both within the EU and in the member states.

4. “Information Technology: Health and Technological Developments”
Main recommendation: A system for certification of HC Telematic products at the European level should be set up, to ensure that these products are medically cost beneficial, technically interoperable and reliable as well as beneficial to the patient (directly or indirectly). The certification is to be carried out by independent neutral bodies.
5. “Rare Disorders and Orphan Drugs: Research without Return on Investment”
Main recommendation: All efforts (public and private) on an European level must aim at combining funds, research programmes, and information initiatives, as well as at reducing relevant taxes and promoting investment in this area for the benefit of those affected.
6. “The Impact of Biotechnology on Health Systems and Health Services”
Main recommendation: Basic biotechnological research will lead to the development of new drugs, vaccinations, diagnostic methods, and medical procedures. In order to derive practical benefits from these achievements for those affected, it is necessary to establish an open dialog and a functioning communication between researchers in biotechnology, other experts, and the general public.
7. Workshop: “European Economic Integration and Health Systems in an Enlarged Europe”
Main Recommendation: Health should be given a higher priority in the accession process and more support should be given to their health reform . Candidate Countries should be more ‘actively’ integrated in the European health arena.

In detail, the participants of the six Forums developed the following scenarios and recommendations, which were adopted and further elaborated upon by the authors of the present declaration.

Günther Leiner,
President of the European Health Forum Gastein

Forum I: Improving the Quality of Care

1. Situation

- 1.1 The quality concept must be defined on different levels and with different targets: politicians, professionals, managers, economists, patients, consumers, etc. must co-operate.

The quality concept is about

- Defining / developing criteria (ideals)
- Implementing / improving good quality
- Measuring / comparing outcomes (effectiveness)

1.2 Consensus on main principles

- It is useful to talk about „quality“ in terms of improvement referring to the needs and interests of healthcare users.
- Patients / consumers are the real stake-holders and remain the ultimate point of reference for quality criteria.
- Criteria should not primarily be provider-induced.
- Integral quality-improvement should be based on experience, information exchange and the education of professionals as well as that of patients / consumers.
- Patients / consumers should be called upon to set criteria, put to contribution and participate in the evaluation of the outcome.

2. Recommendations

2.1 Recommendations on national level

- Access for all to good quality of care, treatment and, services within reasonable time. Quality should be based on equity.
- Participation of patients / consumers in decision-making on the quality of care and the healthcare system in general.
- Empowerment of individual users in decision-making on their own treatment (integrated approach).
- Support of patient / consumer organisations in providing advice, education, information, etc. to users and providers.
- Training of all professionals in awareness of good quality as a goal, not as a threat. Stress on the importance of effective interaction with patients and awareness-building of their real needs.

2.2 EU-targets in quality of care

- EU has the role – within the limits of subsidiarity – of promoting good quality of care
- Why?
 - Four freedoms
 - Promoting equity
 - Identification of best practise

- Obstacles
 - Legal limitations
 - Cultural and economic differences
 - Institutional resistance
 - Unequal starting points
 - Confusion between different levels
- Targets for the EU
 - Encourage the member states to implement national recommendations.
 - Gather and exchange information; networking.
 - Standardise methodology in data collection, measuring and processing, etc., for quality improvement
 - Set indicative standards and objectives for good practise

2.3 Agenda for EU-action

- Develop quality standards and quality targets
 - Promote the establishment of databases on quality outcome, using existing expertise in member states; standard information
 - Use this information to develop indicative standard objectives and targets for good practise
 - Disseminate the information to member states and relevant organisations
- Support patient and consumer groups in getting involved in quality improvement
 - Support existing organisations and bring them together on the European level
 - Provide them with information on quality and benchmarking
 - Promote patient advocacy by training and consultancy
 - Promote the involvement of patients and consumers in meetings on health care
- Support training of health professionals on quality issues
 - Define minimum standards for training and working conditions
 - Provide national authorities and professional organisations with information concerning training in quality awareness
- Promote research on quality improvement
 - Improve existing methodology on defining quality indicators and quality evaluation
 - Promote inventories and the analysis of “patient needs”, related to consumer-induced quality criteria
 - Analyse the effect of cross-cultural differences on the application of quality standards

Forum II: Improving Equity in Health and Health Care

1. Situation

Behind the issue of improving the equity of access to health care lies a vast range of diverging interests. Different financial capacities and competencies in national health care systems as well as the presence of social security systems of extremely varying capacity can be found. Moreover, political and economic interests from various areas collide, each with an impact on the actual health policy situation in a region, a country, or within the EU. Enhancing the social value of “health” by targeted and co-ordinated efforts from the various levels may constitute a remedy. The forum’s objective was to demonstrate how this can be achieved and for whom it would require a change of views.

The majority of the participants stressed the large gap between the access, scope, and quality of national health care systems in EU member countries as compared to those existing in the candidate countries. The identification of regional problem zones in health care as well as a regional or national definition of poverty limits would enable a better targeting of EU interventions and of national or regional efforts. The participants believe that health gaps can be filled by increasingly identifying interfaces of interest with other socio-political areas of action. As a result, both supranational aid, particularly in the area of research, and national policy action could ensure that in future the people affected no longer fall through the social net. By presenting regional examples, various participants pointed to the fact that some parts of the EU are still too slow in combating the link between structural poverty, poor health, and more difficult access to diagnosis and treatment. On an abstract level, health care systems are often seen as distribution systems for funds, and important references to other areas with a direct or indirect impact on the quality of life and health care are not sufficiently understood.

2. Recommendations

2.1 General recommendations

- The creation of employment and the establishment of dignified living conditions constitute political and social priorities. This eminent social responsibility is considered the duty of the Community and of national and regional decision-makers.
- The existing gap in access, scope, and quality of health care must be studied and gradually abolished.
- A social understanding of disease must be established and developed, and the value of moral principles in health matters must be enhanced.
- Disease is not merely a personal state of emergency but is also determined by social factors – particularly among the unemployed and the disabled.

2.2 Recommendations on a national level

- There is need to establish more and better information on the social determinants of disease and to develop health perspectives, particularly for the poor and the elderly.
- Research on the causes of disease and dissemination of knowledge must increasingly replace the mere treatment of symptoms in the health sector.
- Interfaces with other social areas of responsibility must be defined and health gaps must be filled.

2.3 EU objectives in connection with “Equity in Health and Health Care”

- Approximation of the candidate countries to EU standards is to be achieved through increasing efforts to enhance the value of health and social policy in those countries.
- The creation of employment opportunities is of utmost significance.

2.4 Objectives for EU campaigns

- EU standards must be established in the areas of health insurance and old-age pension provision as well as in the area of other social benefits – in particular for migrants and refugees.
- Health regions with comparable health-related situations must be defined.

- Social tasks with an impact on the health situation must be identified on an EU level as well as on a national and regional level. A “Think European, Act Local” approach is necessary.
- There is need to develop information on issues with a high social impact like alcohol, nicotine, and drugs. This information must then be disseminated in a manner which encourages people to act.

FORUM III: The Role of Public Health and Health Promotion in a Changing Europe

1. Situation

- 1.1 The health status of European Union citizens today is better than it has ever been before. However, there is still room and need for improvement, especially considering the big differences between and within member states. These differences are even more striking, when one looks at Europe as a whole.
- 1.2 Public Health, which has been defined as the “organised attempt by society to prevent illness, lengthen life and to promote health on the basis of scientific evidence”, has a key role in meeting this challenge.
- 1.3 Health promotion is an important delivery mechanism for public health activities. It should not be regarded as a cost, but rather as an investment for society, making society more conducive for health and leading to health gain. This will also enable society to support excluded groups and elderly people and to help them to engage in economic activities which would again lead to further economic gain.

2. Recommendations at EU and member state level

- 2.1. There is a need to generate public pressure and to mobilise concerns so that public health issues receive higher priority in Europe – both in the EU and within individual countries. In order to be effective, public health actions must promote change at all levels.
- 2.2. At Community level, the proposed EU-declaration of the rights of the citizens must include references to health.
- 2.3. Health inequalities as a major crosscutting theme could become a major topic of the next European Health Forum Gastein.
- 2.4. Health impact assessments can be an important tool in order to understand the health consequences of certain policy measures. Policies on nutrition are an important example illustrating how a better understanding of policies and actions can influence dietary habits and the quality of foods.

- 2.5. Stronger structural linkages between public health action and public health research – be it in the Member States, be it in the EU – have to be established. Research has a key role in determining and addressing public health priorities.
- 2.6. General objectives and priorities of public health policy should not be subordinated to single-issue concerns and health scares. Work on food safety, communicable diseases and health information must be integrated into a coherent health policy logic.
- 2.7. Public health concerns must play an important role in the enlargement process of the EU. The Community's public health policy must address the needs and requirements of applicant countries.
- 2.8. NGOs are of crucial importance in public health, in terms of their advocacy work and their involvement in specific public health activities.
- 2.9. Health promotion is a new tool in addressing health issues and problems at different levels. Further investments in health promotion are needed to develop mechanisms to include the societal context into interventions and evaluation of projects. Health promotion should be seen as a learning activity. While there is a pan-European dimension, it is heavily culturally determined.
- 2.10. New fields of action need to be explored and new instruments need to be developed to reach the socially excluded.

Forum IV: Information Technology: Health and Technological development

1. General conclusions and actual situation

Basically the required technology is available, the emphasis should be now on implementation rather than on experiments and prototypes (although there still is a need to develop products based on the knowledge and experience gained).

To harvest the potential benefits of telematics, adaptation of the processes will be necessary (this will probably lead to adaptation of the organisational structures as well; similar effects have occurred in other industries). This could represent an unique opportunity to put the citizen in the centre of the adapted health systems.

To allow for successful application of telematics accompanying measures will often be necessary with respect to: education, financing, infrastructure.

Internet exists and is growing rapidly, with its regulations based on the market. Some special regulations will be necessary in the domain of security. As a minimum Codes of Conduct must be defined.

The countries, which are candidates for enlargement of the EU, may be in a favourable position to take advantage of this new technology because there will be less opposition from existing structures.

2. Recommendations for action

2.1 At the regional/national level

- The definition of the implementation plans should involve all the various partners (health care professionals, HCEs, patients' organisations, technicians) and not only the latter.
- Both initial and continuous education should be organised for all professions and for the patients. This will also contribute to reducing the risk of social exclusion.
- In the implementation plans, the targets to be achieved have to be clearly formulated. Systematic assessment of the degree in which the targets have been met must be established.
- Regulations and legislation should be adapted to allow for the effective use of telematics in health care in all the necessary areas (e.g. electronic signatures, electronic media, coding systems).

2.2 At the EU level

- European co-operation in developing educational programmes should be stimulated.
- The development of tools for evaluation should be stimulated as well as exchange of assessment results.
- A system for certification of HC telematics products at the European level should be set-up, to ensure that these products are medically cost-beneficial, technically interoperable and reliable, as well as beneficial to the patient (directly or indirectly). The certification to be carried out by independent neutral bodies.
- The development of Codes of Conduct for the use of Internet in Health Care and the definition of info-ethical regulations for the use of telematics in health care should be stimulated.
- Standardisation in health telematics should get a higher priority. In addition, a system should be set up to make specifications of products and solutions widely available (de facto standards).

Forum V: Rare Disorders and Orphan Drugs: Research without Return on Investment

1. Situation

Rare diseases are defined in Europe as those which affect 5 in 10,000 of the population or less or those which need special measures to combat their effects because of the small numbers involved. Although individually a disease may not be rare there are very many different conditions - over 8000 have been identified - so the number of people affected (either directly or indirectly) is large. It has been estimated that in the EU this number may add up to 30 million.

For many patients with rare diseases, hopes for a cure rest on orphan drugs. Orphan drugs are those which, due to the small number of those who need them, are not economically viable to develop under normal commercial consideration and which need special incentives in order for the patients to benefit from their development.

Not all rare diseases need to be treated by orphan drugs. Some will be able to benefit from new uses of existing drugs. Most rare diseases will remain untreatable for the foreseeable future due to a lack of knowledge about their basic biology and the need for much more fundamental research.

In response to the needs of those affected with rare disorders the EU is in the process of introducing two measures, the Rare Diseases Programme and Orphan Medicinal Products Regulations. Rare diseases are also a feature of the 5th Framework Programme.

The Rare Diseases Programme is foreseen for a period of five years. A budget of 6.5m Euro (1.3m/yr) was allocated and three areas of activity were defined, namely the creation of information databases on rare disorders, support for patient groups for those affected and for umbrella bodies and -investigation of clusters of rare diseases.

Orphan medicinal product regulations will give to the European Agency for the Evaluation of Medical Products (EMA) the power to stimulate the development of orphan products and to approve their use by granting market authorisation. Orphan products will benefit from a ten-year period of market exclusivity, during which time no similar product will be licensed for use in respect of the use claimed by the orphan product. The USA has had orphan drug laws for seventeen years and in that time almost 200 new drugs have been authorised. The FDA's Office of Orphan Drugs has a substantial budget to stimulate research and to waive the fees normally charged for granting market approval. The European Parliament has just approved a budget for EMA which does not include any funding for the operation of the orphan medicinal products regulations when they come into force early in the New Year. Without proper budgetary provisions the Agency will be unable to be proactive, nor will it be able to waive fees normally charged to applicants.

2. Recommendations

2.1 Recommendations for the EU

- The original budget for the Rare Disease Programme (30m Euro) should be restored in order for the programme to have a significant impact on opportunities for those at whom it is targeted.
- EMA should be given a dedicated budget to enable it to operate the Orphan Medicinal Products regulations effectively and ensure the speedy release of orphan drugs on the market.
- EU agencies responsible for the rare diseases programme, orphan medicinal products regulations and the Fifth Framework Programme should collaborate with each other and with external agencies such as patient groups, the Engelhorn Foundation and others to ensure the efficient and effective use of resources and best value for money.

- Procedures developed to manage these programmes should stimulate, not stifle innovation, encouraging investment and the creation of new enterprises and new jobs.

2.2 Recommendations for member states

- Tax credits and other fiscal incentives to stimulate R & D of orphan products should be introduced.
- Rules for the prescription and/or reimbursement of orphan products should be such that all those who need them can benefit. Furthermore, products are not to be denied to patients on grounds of cost.
- Medical education programmes should be developed to increase doctors' knowledge of rare disorders.

2.3 Recommendations for others

- Public understanding of the potential benefits of biotechnology and genetic medicine should be encouraged and enhanced through the media and other channels.
- The investment potential afforded by orphan medicinal products from private sector sources should be publicised and promoted.
- Solidarity and the willingness of society to respond to the health care needs of all its members should be emphasised when considering the use of health care resources (and also when working out the economic, social and human costs associated with not treating when potentially treatment would be possible).
- Patient groups should be recognised and supported in their role of reducing the isolation and improving the services and support for those with rare disorders.

Forum VI: The Impact of Biotechnology on Health Systems and Health Services

1. Situation

Biotechnology and research in genetics will have a large impact on medicine through an increased knowledge base. An important milestone will be reached in about 2 -years, when the whole human genome will have been sequenced.

These data together with bio-informatics are opening up the path for genomics, which in many years to come will expand our understanding of how the human body functions at the cellular and molecular level. Genomics are leading to a constant flow of new drugs, diagnostics and vaccines.

At the same time, new medical procedures such as cellular therapies, bio-surgery, organ transplants as well as gene therapy are being developed and are becoming available to patients. Some of these new (not all genetics based) techniques are increasingly posing novel challenges for the health care system and are raising fundamental questions about the nature and value of human life.

2. Recommendations to be enacted both at national and European levels:
 - 2.1 Both basic and problem oriented research need to be increasingly funded. There will be no applied research without continuing basic research. The competent authorities should take note of the fact that government funding for biomedical research is massively on the increase in the USA. Nations ought to have clear ethical and legal guidelines on research. These should be derived from broad societal deliberations. A common European standard is necessary.
 - 2.2 The authorities should encourage industries to develop new drugs, diagnostics, vaccines and medical procedures, including those needed by small groups of patients with rare diseases. These rare diseases represent a major health care problem affecting in total approximately 25-30 million Europeans. Such encouragement needs financial backing. The health care system needs to be flexible enough to allow the rapid introduction of new beneficial materials and procedures. National governments will have to ensure that those who need the innovative products and services can afford them.
 - 2.3 There needs to be a more open dialogue between researchers in biotechnology, the medical profession and the general public. Without a broad understanding of what science and technological innovation can offer, individuals, groups and political decision-makers may have difficulty in making balanced and informed judgements with the risk that worthwhile opportunities will be lost. Professionals need to take the concerns and worries of patients seriously. They should communicate with the patient and the general public, accepting them as equal partners - communication is a two-way process: each side can and should learn from the other. This is also important in Eastern Europe, where open public debates don't have a long tradition.
 - 2.4 Governments are encouraged to address ethical issues raised by the application of new technologies. Society depends on a "contrat social" based on common ethical principles founded on human rights, solidarity and diversity. Many of the ethical issues appear to be novel, and although in some cases there are underlying similarities to issues long discussed (if not resolved), each society, each generation will have to confront them. Again, a good level of understanding and access to information will contribute to resolving differences and balanced use of innovation.
 - 2.5 There is an urgent need for the EU to introduce and enact (or adapt) science-based legislation that will allow Europeans to benefit from products and services generated through biotechnology (as discussed in the workshop, it is not biotechnology but its applications that are being discussed). At the same time the maintenance of a high level of safety is imperative. Without a reliable and rational regulatory framework, the European industrial base is likely to erode in this area. This also applies to the area of patenting, where discoveries may not be patented (nobody is attempting to obtain "Patents on Life"). However inventions need the possibility of being patented in order to maintain the incentive for investment in research and development, while ensuring prompt and effective diffusion of the new knowledge and techniques. To further this aim, patents should be available on useful innovations, but not on genetic material (human or other) in its natural state.

Workshop: European Economic Integration and Health Systems in the Enlarged Europe:

1. Situation

- 1.1 All candidate countries make important efforts in reforming their health systems, albeit different in advances and scope.
- 1.2 But the candidate countries' health systems show important flaws giving raise to doubts about their ability to fully participate in the European social security co-ordination: the gap in health status and health systems, insufficient resources devoted to the health sector, over-capacity and ill maintained health care facilities, low motivation of health professionals and lack of communication to and encouragement of participation of the population. All this could lead to migration pressure (health professionals) and the health status gap is a potential burden on the European Union's economic capacity.
- 1.3 Additionally, the future European Member States face similar problems with respect to the increasing economic integration as the present member states, even though these could in some cases even be considered as opportunity: the possibility of "exporting" health services (Kohll/Dekker) to other Member States represents an important incentive for quality improvement and could attract the necessary capital for updating health care facilities.

2. Recommendations

- 2.1 Health should be given a higher priority in the accession process. Special support should be given to the upgrading of health care facilities in the candidate countries.
- 2.2 Candidate countries should take into account the influences of European law when reforming their health care systems and increasingly voice their concerns and interests in the "European health arena".
- 2.3 Many of the issues discussed at the Gastein Forum are very relevant in the context of enlargement. There is a clear role for the Community in the support of quality issues: development of Europe-wide standards (services, facilities, professionals, dissemination of best practices). The candidate countries should be fully integrated in this process.
- 2.4 Active "integration" of candidate countries should include the exchange of professionals, administrators and researchers. Increased communication and easily accessible information systems are essential.
- 2.5 Increasing involvement of candidate countries in health activities at the European level, especially in those meetings which focus on the internal market and health issues.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 4 April 2000CHARTE 4198/00*CONTRIB 79*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution submitted by European Justice and Peace Commissions, International Federation of Leagues for Human Rights (FIDH), European Migrant's Forum, International Catholic Migration Commission (ICMC), KAIROS Europe, Pax Cristi International, Representatives of Communities of African Origin, and Quaker Council for European Affairs (QCEA).¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

EUROPEAN JUSTICE AND PEACE COMMISSIONS
INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF LEAGUES FOR HUMAN RIGHTS (FIDH)
EUROPEAN MIGRANTS' FORUM
INTERNATIONAL CATHOLIC MIGRATION COMMISSION (ICMC)
KAIROS EUROPE
PAX CHRISTI INTERNATIONAL
REPRESENTATIVES OF COMMUNITIES OF AFRICAN ORIGIN
QUAKER COUNCIL FOR EUROPEAN AFFAIRS

The European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights and Third Country Nationals

The European Council in Cologne (June 1999) decided to draft a Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union (EU). The Extraordinary European Council in Tampere (October 1999) agreed the composition and methodology of the Drafting Body.

The debate has now entered a new phase: realistically, it is too late to alter the adopted drafting procedure, but there is still time to contribute to the content of the future Charter.

With regard to the interventions and debates so far, on the substance of the Charter and the ambiguity surrounding who the Charter will apply to, our organisations would like to call for the complete and express recognition of the Fundamental Rights of Third Country Nationals within the territory of the European Union.

Consequently, the following three basic principles need to be remembered:

1. The universal character of human rights

Human rights, by definition, benefit all humans. The universality of human rights has already been established through the collective protection offered by existing international and regional instruments, to which the member-states of the EU are signatories. For example:

- Article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights laid-out that:
“Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.”
- Article 1 European Convention of Human Rights (ECHR) foresees that:
“The High Contracting Parties shall secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the rights and freedoms defined in Section 1 of this Convention.”
- Article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights reads:
“Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognised in the present Covenant, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.”

- Article 2 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights states, in paragraph 2, that:
“The State Parties to the present Covenant undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in the present Covenant will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.”

2. Non-discrimination

As the European Court of Human Rights has continuously underlined, the distinctions between citizens and non-citizens of the EU can only be established on the condition that they are objectively justified and consistent with the goal of setting up specific legal arrangements, between member-states, relating to citizenship. Hence, the principle of non-discrimination is an essential reference within the field of EU fundamental rights, as it implies that the rights of EU citizens should be narrowly defined and that such a difference in treatment should be in response to a firm justification which is in proportion to the objective concerned.

In this regard, our organisations invite the Drafting Body of the Charter to examine the best formulation possible for the specific non-discrimination clause of the Charter. The proposed Protocol of the ECHR (Protocol 12) on non-discrimination will probably be adopted within 2000. This could form a good reference point for the Charter’s Drafting Body.

The basic principle must be that the rights within the Charter will be universal. Any differences in application of the Charter’s rights should be as a result of a difference in circumstances rather than status. It should not be necessary to create a priori categories of beneficiaries.

As for civil and political rights, international law at present allows the rights to vote and eligibility to stand for election in European and municipal elections to be reserved for EU citizens. Freedom to make such a restriction is in fact provided for in the international agreements, which are binding on the Member-states (Article 25 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Article 21 Universal Declaration on Human Rights). The signatory organisations call for the drafters of the Charter to extend this right to people legally resident in the territory of the EU, in accordance with certain conditions (eg. 5 years of legal residence), as proposed by the European Parliament in April 1999¹. The existence of Third Country Nationals living in the territory of the EU will be a permanent characteristic of European societies. The Council of Europe’s Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at local level (1992) could serve as a good reference in this field.

If a form of diplomatic protection (Article 20 of EEC) is to be reserved for the citizens of the EU, the right to petition before Parliament and the right to introduce a complaint to the European Ombudsman should be available to all residents of the member-states. The right to be addressed in one of the 11 official languages of the European institutions and to receive a response in that language (Article 21 EEC) should elsewhere equally be heard by all the relevant persons in the member-states and the EU.

¹ Resolution on the strategy document on the Position of the European Union regards migration and asylum adopted 13 April 1999, para.23

The rights of freedom of movement and establishment (Article 18 EEC) within the EU is, at present, reserved for member-state nationals. Our organisations believe that this right should be of benefit to all persons legally resident in the EU in order to conform to the general clause on anti-discrimination on the basis of nationality.

In addition, the extension of this right to Third Country Nationals could be considered in the future to be a result of the right to freedom of movement, as consecrated in various international human rights protection instruments. These clauses have no references to nationality as a criteria for application (Article 2 of Protocol 4 ECHR, Article 12 of International Pact on Civil and Political Rights²). In regards to European integration, it is logical and fair that the rights to freedom of movement and establishment within the EU should equally benefit all persons legally resident. This would follow the ethos of those who originally dreamt of an internal market and Union without borders.

Finally, in relation to this right, the future Charter should include an explicit reference to the right of asylum-seekers, persons considered stateless and those who should benefit from family reunification to enter the territory of the EU.

There are other rights that are likely to figure in the Charter, but only benefit Third Country Nationals. For example, the prohibition of collective expulsions of foreigners (as foreseen in Article 4 of Protocol 4 ECHR).

The signatory organisations of this paper consider that fundamental economic and social rights should have the same field of personal application as the civil and political rights. Therefore, the rights to medical and social assistance (including the right to adequate housing and a sufficient standard of living), the right of children to an education and the right to equal treatment on the basis of gender should benefit all persons under the jurisdiction of the member-states of the EU. This should be regardless of their nationality and the permanence of their stay on EU territory.

Certain social rights are bound to the employment status of the individual (for example, the right of association), others are dependent on the permanence of their stay (for instance, the right to work, the right to social security – this is different from the fundamental right to medical and social assistance). Therefore by consequence, those with irregular status residing in the territory of the Union will not benefit from these rights. A specific clause on their exclusion is neither necessary nor desirable.

3. Harmonisation of the protective instruments

Our organisations are convinced of the complementary goals of the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and the potential ratification by the EU (or by default by the EC) of the European Convention on Human Rights and the European Social Charter (revised). It is only by combining these proposals that the overlapping of jurisdictions could be avoided; otherwise, in the medium term, the Charter could become a restrictive instrument in Community law. This is also the only way to assure coherence in the protection of European fundamental rights.

² “Everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence.”

Such an addition would require a revision of the preamble to the Treaty basis of the European Union. Therefore, we call for this debate to be included on the agenda of the forth-coming Inter-Governmental Conference.

In conclusion, our organisations call upon the Drafting Body of the Charter of Fundamental Rights to be watchful that all the thematic working groups, given the task of creating the Charter, duly take into account the situation of Third Country Nationals within the EU, and consistently protect the universal nature of fundamental rights.

Brussels, 14 February 2000-03-23

This paper is signed by the following organisations:

European Justice and Peace Commissions – tel: ++32 2 7380801

FIDH – tel: ++32 2 2096289

European Migrants' Forum – tel: ++32 2 2302860

ICMC – tel: ++32 2 230 9435

KAIROS Europe – tel: ++32 2 4799655

Pax Christi International – tel: ++32 2 502 5550

Representatives of Communities of African Origin – tel: ++32 477482262

Quaker Council for European Affairs – tel: ++32 2 2304935

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 7 avril 2000CHARTE 4213/00*CONTRIB 89*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint une contribution de la Confédération Européenne des Syndicats Indépendants (CESI) .^{1 2}

¹ CESI: Avenue de la Joyeuse Entrée, 1-5, 2e. B-1040 Bruxelles. Tél: +32-2-282 18 70.

Fax: +32-2-282 18 72. E-mail: cesi.bx@skynet.be ² Ce texte a été soumis en langues française et allemande.

Prise de position de la CESI sur la création d'une charte des droits fondamentaux européens

Introduction:

Le Conseil européen de Cologne et les réflexions poursuivies dans le cadre du Conseil de Tampere ont posé les jalons de la création d'une charte des droits fondamentaux européens. Une convention composée de 65 délégués sous la présidence de Roman Herzog devrait proposer un projet pour la fin 2000.

Dans ce contexte, l'on constate une très grande disparité entre le sens, la place et la portée attribués à cette charte par les différents acteurs. Une partie de ceux-ci nient la nécessité de la création d'une Charte communautaire en se référant à un document déjà existant, la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme. D'autres prônent seulement la proclamation de « tables de la loi », c'est-à-dire une déclaration de principe politique sans caractère coercitif. En définitive, l'on encourage la création d'un catalogue des droits fondamentaux plus ou moins étoffé, qui serait intégré dans les traités et aurait valeur de constitution.

La CESI est d'avis qu'une Charte communautaire européenne dotée d'un catalogue de droits fondamentaux, des principes d'État de droit ainsi que d'un arsenal légal nécessaire à l'exécution des droits de défense devrait être élaborée et intégrée plus tard aux traités.

La CESI motive son avis comme suit:

Communauté de valeurs et catalogue de droits fondamentaux

Les États membres garantissent déjà une protection étendue des droits fondamentaux au sein de l'Union européenne et ont également signé la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme. Le simple citoyen de la Communauté jouit ainsi d'un florilège de droits élémentaires et de droits de défense par rapport aux Institutions étatiques. Par ailleurs, les traités communautaires - sans présenter de catalogue des droits fondamentaux - contiennent de nombreuses dispositions séparées qui garantissent les droits fondamentaux ou au moins des droits équivalents (interdiction de toute discrimination, les quatre libertés fondamentales de l'économie de marché, liberté d'association, etc.). Par ailleurs, la Cour de justice des Communautés européennes (CJCE) a élaboré une série de principes relatifs à la philosophie de l'État de droit (droit d'être entendu devant un tribunal, principe de proportionnalité, etc.) et relatifs aux droits fondamentaux proprement dits (par exemple: les libertés, règle d'égalité, liberté de confession, respect de la vie privée et de la vie familiale).

La CESI estime toutefois que, sans préjudice des droits fondamentaux protégeant déjà les personnes morales et juridiques au sein de l'Union européenne, la nécessité d'une charte européenne des droits fondamentaux existe. En se référant à la subsidiarité et aux traditions juridiques des différents États membres, l'on peut interpréter la notion de « nécessité » de telle sorte qu'une Charte communautaire ne soit pas obligatoire. Cependant, l'intégration croissante entraîne inéluctablement la création d'une communauté de valeurs trop souvent citée par le passé qui devrait s'exprimer concrètement, selon la CESI, dans une charte des droits fondamentaux. Il ne s'agit pas seulement de faire la clarté sur la portée des droits fondamentaux, sur la prévisibilité, la sécurité juridique et l'application des droits la plus rapide possible, mais surtout d'identifier les citoyens de l'Union. D'après la CESI, cet argument, que de nombreux critiques taxent de « creux », est pourtant l'un des plus convaincants. Comme l'ont confirmé les dernières élections européennes, l'Union européenne ne joue qu'un rôle secondaire dans la conscience des citoyens, en dépit de son influence considérable et sans cesse plus importante. Force est toutefois de constater qu'une Union qui ne peut pas prendre pied dans la société et qui ne se base pas sur la reconnaissance de ses citoyens et de leurs représentants politiques, ne parviendra qu'avec difficulté à atteindre l'intégration approfondie souhaitée. La CESI estime par conséquent que la création d'une charte de droits fondamentaux européens est absolument nécessaire.

Relations avec la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme

L'objectif des six membres fondateurs de la Communauté européenne, qui sont en même temps les pères fondateurs du Conseil de l'Europe et les États signataires de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, consiste à créer une communauté exclusivement orientée sur des préoccupations d'ordre économique. La protection des droits fondamentaux n'était investie que d'un rôle secondaire, voire inexistant. Au fur et à mesure de l'intégration de la Communauté économique européenne, de la Communauté européenne et enfin de l'Union européenne, les Institutions européennes se sont vu doter de compétences législatives, exécutives et judiciaires plus étendues, alors que l'adhésion à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, et, ce faisant, la soumission à la jurisprudence de la Cour européenne de Justice en matière de droit de l'homme, restait limitée aux États nationaux. Cette évolution a entraîné une situation quelque peu paradoxale où les droits fondamentaux, c'est-à-dire des droits de défense contre les Institutions européennes, ne sont pas dérivés des constitutions nationales ni de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, mais seulement des droits fondamentaux communautaires – incomplets.

C'est la raison pour laquelle l'on a sollicité à maintes reprises l'adhésion de l'Union européenne à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme en tant qu'organisation supranationale. Seul ce geste fort pourrait permettre de construire un système cohérent pour protéger les droits de l'homme. Un protocole supplémentaire devrait permettre de combler le manque d'engagement des organisations supranationales.

La CESI se prononce en faveur de l'adhésion de l'Union européenne à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, mais insiste toutefois pour créer une Charte communautaire. Les spécificités de la supranationalité de l'Union européenne exigent – en plus de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme – la création d'une propre Charte communautaire permettant en particulier d'opposer des droits de défense étendus et spécifiques aux compétences législatives et réglementaires étendues transmises à l'Union européenne

La Charte communautaire et la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme créent une protection des droits fondamentaux cohérente en Europe

La condition déterminante pour la création d'une Charte communautaire européenne est, dans un premier temps, l'éclaircissement de sa position par rapport à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme ratifiée par tous les États membres. La CESI estime qu'il convient à tout prix d'éviter la mise en place de plusieurs catalogues de droits fondamentaux européens indépendants les uns des autres, puisque le danger de la naissance d'une Europe à deux vitesses contredit le principe de l'universalité des droits de l'homme. C'est la raison pour laquelle la CESI sollicite la création d'une relation non équivoque entre la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et la nouvelle charte qui permette une coexistence complémentaire. La CESI se félicite dès lors expressément des propositions avancées par Roman Herzog, selon lesquelles il convient de reprendre des références à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme dans la Charte communautaire. Dans ce contexte, la Charte communautaire devrait jouir de la priorité – en se fondant sur des principes constitutionnels – pour autant qu'elle ne limite pas la portée de la protection conférée par la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme. Ce faisant, l'on tiendrait compte des objectifs à réaliser selon la CESI (la spécificité de la supranationalité de l'Union européenne et la cohérence entre la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et la Charte communautaire).

Applicabilité de la charte des droits fondamentaux

La Charte communautaire devrait être applicable comme « Constitution de l'Union européenne » dans le cas où des Institutions ou des organes européens – dans le cadre des compétences et des tâches leur attribuées conformément au 1^{er}, 2^{ème} ou 3^{ème} pilier – prennent des mesures que les États membres appliquent ou transposent le droit communautaire ou de l'Union. La CESI rejette une restriction du champ d'application sur la prise de mesures des Institutions et organes européens dans le cadre du droit communautaire. D'une part, il s'agit de garantir des droits de défense correspondants à toutes les formes de transposition et à tous les aspects du droit communautaire et de l'Union, d'autre part, la distinction entre le droit communautaire et le droit de l'Union n'est pas pertinente dans ce cas. En effet, le passage aisé du droit communautaire au droit de l'Union ainsi que l'élargissement du droit communautaire et des compétences des organes communautaires dans des domaines réservés jusqu'ici au droit de l'Union, ne peuvent pas motiver de distinction dans la problématique du champ d'application des droits fondamentaux communautaires. Les objectifs de prévisibilité, de sécurité du droit et d'application étendue du droit sont ainsi manqués.

Droits fondamentaux et principes de l'État de droit

La CESI estime qu'une Charte doit définir, outre un catalogue des droits fondamentaux clair et explicitement formulé, des principes généraux de l'État de droit ainsi que l'arsenal juridique permettant d'appliquer les droits de défense. Les principes de l'État de droit jouent un rôle tout aussi important que les droits fondamentaux au sein des États démocratiques et ne doivent pas entrer en vigueur par la seule force du droit prétorien, c'est-à-dire par des décisions de principe de la Cour européenne de Justice. La CESI se félicite dès lors de la division en deux de la Charte en une partie générale, où les droits fondamentaux proprement dits sont énumérés, et une partie spécifique destinée à garantir la « sécurité du droit ».

Portée et essence des droits fondamentaux

Le catalogue des droits fondamentaux devrait contenir à la fois les droits de l'Homme généraux conformément à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et des droits fondamentaux spécifiques à l'Union. La CESI prône par ailleurs de garantir les principes fixés dans la Charte communautaire des droits fondamentaux sociaux. Dans ce cadre, l'on met notamment en exergue les principes de la liberté d'exercer une profession, de l'égalité des chances, du droit à un salaire décent, de la liberté d'association, de la liberté des conventions collectives, de la cogestion des salariés, de l'accès à une formation professionnelle, de la protection sociale adaptée ainsi que de la protection de la santé et de la sécurité sur les lieux de travail. De plus, conformément à la Charte sociale, il convient de reprendre dans le projet de charte fondamentale le droit pour chacun de gagner sa vie grâce à un travail non contraint.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 10 April 2000CHARTE 4215/00*CONTRIB 91*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Forum for Freedom in Education (EFFE), submitted with a view for the hearing on 27 April 2000.^{1 2}

¹ EFFE: Annener Berg 15, G-58454 Witten. Tel: +49-2302-699 442. Fax: +49-2302-699 443

² This text has been submitted in German, French and English. (The commentary has been submitted in German and English only).

Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (Article 16)

1. Everyone shall have the right to education.
2. There shall be freedom of education. Education shall foster the full development of individual gifts and abilities.
3. The right of parents to have their children educated and taught in accordance with their religious, philosophical and educational convictions shall be guaranteed.
4. There shall be the right to found and administer educational establishments. Choice of educational establishment shall be ensured through equitable distribution of public resources to governmental and non-governmental schools.

Proposal

Article 16

Addressing the Right to Education for the

Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Article 16

1. Everyone shall have the right to education.
2. There shall be freedom of education. Education shall foster the full development of individual gifts and abilities.
3. Parents shall have the right to educate their children in accordance with their religious, philosophical and educational convictions.
4. The right to establish educational establishments and to provide instruction shall be guaranteed. Free choice in education shall be ensured through the equitable distribution of public resources for governmental and non-governmental schools.

Commentary

The European Forum for Freedom in Education (EFFE) fully supports the decision to draft a bill of rights for the united European countries in which the significance of human rights is justifiably addressed through the recognition of the right to education as well as the right to freedom in education as fundamental rights.

Regardless of whether or not the right to education is understood and enforced as a fundamental social right, the issue of education must be introduced into a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.¹ The right to education is a human right which can be made effective only if the State acts to safeguard the individual's environment. Thus this does not have merely a protective character.

The goal of such a Charter must be to strengthen the rights of the European citizen. We must take those countries that have realised the human and fundamental rights in an exemplary manner as our point of departure.² Only in this way will Europe be able to become a Europe of its citizens.

The European Forum for Freedom in Education hereby submits the above proposal for Article 16 pertaining to the right to education in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union in accordance with the working principles of the Convention and in reference to the constitutions of the member countries, Articles 149 and 150 of the Treaty of the European Community, Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, taking into consideration the European Parliament's Draft of an European Constitution (1994), the resolution of the European Parliament concerning freedom of education in the European Community (March 14, 1984), Article 10 of the European Social Charter and Article 8 of the European Charter for Regional and Minority Languages of the European Council, as well as Articles 14, 18, 28, 29 and 30 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

¹ This is also the position taken by the German government, which has stated that "the Charter of Fundamental Rights must contain all rights, the denial of which could lead to a constitutional complaint. This applies to the rights named in Articles 1-19....The Charter should...also [include] such fundamental social rights that are justifiably considered to be individual rights....such as the right to education....in as much as this lies within the sovereignty of the Union."; Herta Däubler Gmelin, From Citizen of the Market to Citizen of the Union, FAZ from 10. January 2000, P.11.

² Compare Frank-Rüdiger Jach, Schulverfassung und Bürgergesellschaft in Europa, Berlin 1999.

Until now the fundamental right to freedom in education has been guaranteed by the constitutional traditions of the Member States as well as by the European Human Rights Convention and the approach taken by the European Court of Justice in its jurisdiction. Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 of the EHRC from 20. March, 1952 is thus particularly relevant. It says:

"No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions."

The European Parliament has also recognised the right to education and has stated in Article 16 of the Declaration of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms from 12. April 1989 that:

"Everyone shall have the right to education and vocational training appropriate to their abilities.
There shall be freedom in education.
Parents shall have the right to make provision for such education in accordance with their religious and philosophical convictions."

Although this position is still to be found in Title VIII, Article 14 of the European Parliament's Draft of a European Constitution³, where it is phrased as follows:

"Everyone has the right to education and vocational training appropriate to their abilities.
There shall be freedom in education.
Parents have the right to make provision for such education in accordance with their religious and philosophical convictions, whilst respecting the right of the child to his own development."

in the study entitled Protecting Fundamental Rights in the European Union prepared by the committee of experts on 'Fundamental Rights', the right to education is not mentioned. The fact that this right has been omitted shows that the study is in need of amendment.

In order to ensure that education meets the expectations voiced in the EHRC and inherent in the constitutional traditions of the Member States, an article addressing educational rights and freedoms must contain the following:

³ PE 203.601/endg.2

- Protection of the fundamental social rights of parents and children
- Prohibition of discrimination based on nationality, race, citizenship, sex, philosophical or religious convictions, social class, or economic standing
- Guarantee of educational diversity
- Recognition of academic freedom
- Recognition of the importance of education's role in achieving tolerance and a European consciousness.

§ 1. Everyone shall have the right to education.

The central focus of an article addressing educational rights within a European Charter of Fundamental Rights must be to ensure that no one shall be denied access to education. This follows from the position taken in the Treaty of Amsterdam, where, in the Preamble, the resolve of the Member States to uphold a high standard of knowledge among their citizens through non-discriminatory access to education and continuing education is clearly stated.⁴ Unquestionably, the right to education must include access to compulsory education without cost.

Everyone, regardless of his or her nationality, race, citizenship, sex, philosophical or religious conviction, social class or economic standing, has the right to an education appropriate to his or her individual gifts and abilities and capable of fostering his or her sense of freedom and social responsibility.

§2. There shall be freedom of education. Education shall foster the full development of individual gifts and abilities.

Education must not become subservient to economic policy. Especially in the face of economic globalisation, the right to childhood must be recognised and protected.

The purpose of education to enable children and young people to become mature, socially responsible, tolerant individuals can be recognised as an important part of the cultural inheritance of Western Europe. It implies the right of the child to evolve his or her own sense of identity as is given by the right to an education that fosters the full development of individual gifts and abilities.

In accordance with fundamental human rights and freedoms, the primary obligation in education is to guarantee the right of the child to develop the full spectrum of his or her individual abilities with respect for the child's sense of identity and cultural values; within this framework tolerance towards all cultural, religious, philosophical and ethnic differences is of the utmost importance.

⁴ Preamble, Treaty of the European Community, Paragraph 8

§3. The right of parents to educate their children in accordance with their religious, philosophical and educational convictions shall be guaranteed.

In addition to the fundamental right to education referred to as the right of access to education and the guarantee of the principle of equal access, a European bill of rights must recognise the primacy of the educational responsibility of parents.

Thus the rejection of a state monopoly of education corresponds with the right of parents to decide upon the form of education appropriate for their children, reflected in the right to free choice of educational establishment. Within the European Union, the parental right of educational choice, in addition to the right of choice based on religious conviction or ethnicity, is inherent in the constitutional traditions of the Member States.⁵

§4. There shall be the right to found educational establishments and provide instruction. Choice in education shall be ensured through the equitable distribution of public resources for compulsory education to governmental and non-governmental schools.

The primary responsibility of parents for the education of their children necessitates the recognition of the right to found and administer independent schools as the foundation upon which free choice of educational establishment is possible

The right of choice in education can, however, only then be guaranteed if the choice between governmental and non-governmental schools is placed upon an equitable economic base.

An article addressing education within the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is connected to other fundamental freedoms stated in the Treaty of the European Community. Private education comes under the category of active and passive services and must not be unduly hindered.

Within the jurisdiction of the European Court of Justice it is recognised that Article 2 of the Protocol No. 1 of the EHRC does guarantee the right to found and administer private schools without guaranteeing a corresponding right to have such schools financed. It is, however, important to keep in mind that a majority of the Member States do provide financial support to private schools and that by the adoption of Protocol No. 1, Holland took the position that Article 2 does indeed call for financial support for non-governmental schools.⁶

⁵ Compare Frank-Rüdiger Jach, Schulverfassung und Bürgergesellschaft in Europa, Berlin 1999

⁶ Compare Karl Josef Partsch, Die Rechte und Freiheiten der europäischen Menschenrechtskonventionen, Berlin 1966, P. 240; Claus Eiselstein, Staatliches Bildungsmonopol und Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention, in: Hans-Jörg Birk/Armin Dittmann/Manfred Erhardt, Kulturverwaltungsrecht im Wandel, Stuttgart 1981, P. 178 (184).

The European Forum for Freedom in Education wishes particularly to call to mind the Declaration of the European Parliament concerning Freedom of Education in the European Community from 14. March 1984.⁷ This declaration calls for the protection of freedom in education and teaching and for respect for the parents right to choice in education. Inherent in the stated position is the governmental recognition of freely established schools as well as their right to award the same qualifications as State schools. In this Declaration, the European Parliament also calls for the practical realisation of this right through financial support and takes the position that non-governmental schools should receive the same treatment as governmental schools in the distribution of public resources without discrimination as regards administration, parents, pupils or staff. Notwithstanding this, however, freely established schools may be expected "to make a certain contribution of their own as a token of their own responsibility and as a means of supporting their independent status".

Thus in a number of decisive points stated in the Declaration from 1984, the European Parliament has laid the foundation for a European bill of rights. With regard to the fundamental right to freedom of education, the EP has submitted an exemplary proposal corresponding to the constitutional traditions of the Member States and manifesting the right to education as a fundamental right of all European citizens.

⁷

See Albert Fernandez/Siegfried Jenker, Ed., International Declarations and Conventions on the Right to Education and the Freedom of Education, published by the European Forum for Freedom in Education, Bd. 8

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 7. April 2000CHARTE 4216/00*CONTRIB 92*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend einen Beitrag von Herrn Thomas Clement zu den Bürgerrechten.^{1 2}

¹ Thomas Clement: Im Eichele 19 Auendorf, D-73342 Bad Ditzenbach.

E-mail: thomas.clement@t-online.de

² Dieser Text wurde nur in deutsche Sprache übermittelt.

Thomas Clement

Im Eichele 19 Auendorf 73342 Bad Ditzgenbach email thomas.clement@t-online.de

An den Konvent zur Ausarbeitung der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union Brüssel Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren, Sehr geehrter Herr Vorsitzender Herzog, mit Interesse verfolge ich die Regierungskonferenz 2000 über die Reform der Organe der EU und war überrascht, daß hinsichtlich der Formulierung einheitlicher Grundrechte in der EU ein gesonderter Konvent einberufen wurde. Da ich an den Rat der Europäischen Union (bzw. an dessen Generalsekretär) und an die Kommission einen "Vertrag betreffend die Verfassung der Europäischen Union" als Antwort auf die Aufgaben der Regierungskonferenz 2000 gesendet habe, möchte ich Ihnen die, die Grundrechte betreffenden Ausschnitte (einschließlich von Kurzkomentaren) hieraus auf diesem Wege übermitteln:

Teil V. - Die Bürgerrechte der Europäischen Union

Abschnitt 1 - Unionsbürgerschaft

Artikel 12

- (1) Die Staatsbürger der Unionsstaaten sind Unionsbürger im Sinne dieser Verfassung; davon ausgenommen sind Staatsbürger von Unionsstaaten, die ihren ständigen Wohnsitz in Teilen des Staatsgebiets ihres Heimatstaates haben, die vom Unionsgebiet ausgeschlossen sind.
- (2) 1. Jedem Unionsbürger, der sich in einem Unionsstaat dauernd niedergelassen hat, deren Staatsbürgerrecht er nicht besitzt, ist auf Antrag spätestens sieben Jahre nach seiner dauernden Niederlassung das Staatsbürgerrecht des Unionsstaates und spätestens ein Jahr nach seiner dauernden Niederlassung das Bürgerrecht der Gemeinde zu verleihen.
2. Die Unionsstaaten wenden bei der Ausführung der Bestimmungen dieses Absatzes das Kapitel I. des am 6. Mai 1963 in Straßburg unterzeichneten Übereinkommens über die Verringerung der Mehrstaatigkeit und über die Wehrpflicht von Mehrstaatern an; sie können gegebenenfalls durch Staatsvertrag davon abweichendes festlegen.
3. Unionsbürger können in keinem Unionsstaat dem Ausländerrecht unterworfen werden und gelten nicht als Ausländer.
- (3) Die Union kann einheitliche Vorschriften für die Erwerbung und den Verlust der Staatsbürgerschaft eines Unionsstaates durch Verfassungsgesetz erlassen.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt die Artikel 17 Absatz 1 und 19 Absatz 1 EGV.

Kurzkommentar

Der Artikel präzisiert die Angaben des Artikel 17 Absatz 1 Satz 1 und 2 EGV, die im Verfassungsentwurf zusammengefaßt werden, indem er die Staatsbürger der Unionsstaaten, die in den, gemäß Artikel 2.1 Absatz 2 des Verfassungsentwurfs ausgeschlossenen Teilen des Staatsgebiets wohnhaft sind, von der Unionsbürgerschaft ausschließt. Ansonsten sind alle Staatsbürger der Unionsstaaten automatisch auch Unionsbürger im Sinne des Verfassungsentwurfs. Der durch den Amsterdamer Vertrag angefügte Satz 3 des Artikels 17 Absatz 1 EGV wurde wieder weggelassen, da die nationale Staatsbürgerschaft, auf der die Unionsbürgerschaft in Artikel 12 ausdrücklich ruht, nur durch Verfassungsänderung bzw. Vertragsänderung abgeschafft werden könnte.

Absatz 2 ist eine neue Rechtsnorm, die besagt, daß Unionsbürger, die sich in einem Unionsstaat niedergelassen haben, dessen Staatsangehörigkeit sie nicht besitzen, nach dem Ablauf von sieben Jahren nach ihrer dauernden Niederlassung auf Antrag die Staatsangehörigkeit des betreffenden Unionsstaates erlangen können und somit einen Rechtsanspruch genießen. Die zweite neue Rechtsnorm, die den Artikel 19 Absatz 1 EGV unter vollständiger Neufassung und unter anderen Gesichtspunkten das kommunale Wahlrecht der Unionsbürger sichert; spätestens ein Jahr nach seiner dauernder Niederlassung ist einem Unionsbürger das Gemeindebürgerrecht auf Antrag zu verleihen, auch wenn er nicht oder noch nicht Staatsbürger des, der Gemeinde angehörenden Staates ist. Die Verleihung des Gemeindebürgerrechts ist in einigen Unionsstaaten (wie z.B. Frankreich, welches das passive Wahlrecht in Bezug auf den Maire nicht auf die Unionsbürger erstreckt; diese Bestimmung wurde jedoch Frankreich durch Übergangsbestimmung belassen) weitergehend als das Kommunalwahlrecht für Unionsbürger nach Artikel 19 Absatz 1 EGV (z.B. hat ein Teil der deutschen Bundesländer den Artikel 19 EGV so umgesetzt, daß die Unionsbürger vollberechtigte Gemeindebürger werden).

Der zweite Unterabsatz des Absatzes 2 macht den Unionsstaaten und den Unionsbürgern hinsichtlich der doppelten Staatsangehörigkeit dahingehende Einschränkungen, daß eine doppelte Staatsbürgerschaft (hier sind die nationalen Staatsbürgerschaften, auf denen die Unionsbürgerschaft ruht, gemeint) in Übereinstimmung mit dem Übereinkommen über die Verringerung der Mehrstaatigkeit und über die Wehrpflicht von Mehrstaatern vom 6.5.1963 nicht zulässig ist, daß also ein Unionsbürger, der nach Maßgabe des Absatzes 2 erster Unterabsatz die Staatsbürgerschaft eines Unionsstaates begehrt, mit der Verleihung dieser Staatsbürgerschaft, seine ursprüngliche Staatsbürgerschaft zurückgeben muß.

Der dritte Unterabsatz verbietet es den Unionsstaaten, Unionsbürger aus anderen Unionsstaaten als Ausländer zu behandeln; sie können zwar einem besonderen Recht unterworfen werden, nicht aber dem Ausländerrecht und sie dürfen nicht als Ausländer gelten. So müßte z.B. der § 15 des deutschen Aufenthaltsgesetz/EWG geändert werden.

Absatz 3 bestimmt, daß die Union nach Maßgabe des Artikels 25 Absatz 3 durch ein Verfassungsgesetz gemeinsame Vorschriften über die Staatsbürgerschaften der Unionsstaaten verabschieden kann. Mit der Aufnahme dieses Absatzes 3 wird verhindert, daß Artikel 25 Absatz 3 dritter Spiegelstrich Anwendung findet.

Schlußfolgerungen

Weitreichende Rechtsänderungen. Die Unionsbürger erhalten durch Unionsvertrag einen Anspruch auf die Staatsbürgerschaft des Staates, in dem sie ihren Hauptwohnsitz genommen haben. Das Staatsbürgerschaftsrecht bleibt zwar Angelegenheit der Unionsstaaten, doch schränkt der Verfassungsentwurf diese Zuständigkeit etwas ein.

Abschnitt 2 - Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention

Artikel 13

Die in der, am 4. November 1950 in Rom unterzeichneten Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten und deren Zusatzprotokollen aufgeführten Rechte und Freiheiten binden die Gewalten der Europäischen Union als unmittelbar geltendes Recht.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 6 Absatz 2 EUV; entspricht Artikel 3 des Entwurfs zu einer Satzung der Europäischen (Politischen) Gemeinschaft vom 10. März 1953.

Kurzkomentar

Im Gegensatz zu Artikel 6 Absatz 2 EUV besagt der Artikel 13, ähnlich wie Artikel 1 Absatz 3 des Grundgesetzes für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland vom 23. Mai 1949, daß die durch die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention und deren Zusatzprotokollen festgestellten Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten (Artikel 2 bis 18 MRK, Artikel 1 bis 3 ZP, Artikel 1 bis 4 4.ZP, Artikel 1 und 2 6.ZP, Artikel 1 bis 5 7.ZP) für die Gewalten der Europäischen Union (P Artikel 15 des Verfassungsentwurfs) verbindlich sind. Die genannten Rechte und Freiheiten gelten als unmittelbares Recht in allen Unionsstaaten.

Die Vorbehalte hinsichtlich einiger Grundrechte und Freiheiten, welche die Unionsstaaten gemäß der Konvention eingelegt haben und die gemäß der Konvention abgegebenen Territorialerklärungen finden gemäß der Übergangsbestimmungen zu Artikel 13 weiterhin Anwendung, doch kann der Ministerrat die einzelnen Unionsstaaten auffordern, diese Vorbehalte und Territorialerklärungen zu ändern, zurückzunehmen oder aufzuheben.

Die Europäische Union ist zum Zeitpunkt des Inkrafttretens dieses Verfassungsentwurfs trotz der weitreichenden Bestimmung des Artikels 13 auch weiter nicht Vertragspartei der Menschenrechtskonvention im Sinne des Völkerrechts, doch kann die EU gemäß Artikel 5.3 Vertragspartei der Konvention werden, da ihr durch den Artikel 13 (insbesondere durch die Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 13) eine indirekte Zuständigkeit der Konvention übertragen wird.

Schlußfolgerungen

Im Gegensatz zur Verfassung des Deutschen Reiches von 1871, die durch Verträge zwischen den nachmaligen Bundesstaaten des Deutschen Reiches festgestellt wurde, verzichtet dieser Verfassungsentwurf keinesfalls auf Grundrechte. Grundrechte haben heute eine ganz andere Bedeutung als Grundrechte im Jahr 1871, was man schon daran erkennt, daß es in Europa (und zwar das vom Atlantik bis zum Ural) eine Menschenrechtskonvention gibt, die gleichzeitig einen Gerichtshof zur Überwachung dieser Konvention über alle nationalen Grenzen hinaus einsetzt .

Die in den einzelnen Unionstaaten weitergehenden Grundrechte bleiben aber bestehen, sofern sie nicht einen Punkt berühren, in welchem die EU Europarecht erläßt und somit gemäß Artikel 1.4 Absatz 2 das Unionsrecht Vorrang vor dem nationalen Grundrecht genießt. Interessantes Beispiel in Deutschland ist der Artikel 16a des Grundgesetzes für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland vom 23. Mai 1949 und der Artikel 105 in Verbindung mit Artikel 98 der Verfassung des Freistaates Bayern vom 2. Dezember 1946. Der Artikel der Bayerischen Verfassung geht hinsichtlich des Asylrechts bedeutend über den Artikel des Grundgesetzes hinaus, doch findet der Artikel des Grundgesetzes volle Anwendung, da das Ausländerrecht Sache des Bundes ist; die bayerische Verfassung bleibt hier unberücksichtigt.

Abschnitt 3 - Bürgerrechte

Artikel 14.1

- (1) Jeder Unionsbürger hat das Recht, sich im Unionsgebiet frei zu bewegen, sich dort aufzuhalten und sich dauernd niederzulassen.
- (2) Durch oder aufgrund eines Unionsgesetzes kann die Ausübung dieser Rechte für den Fall außergewöhnlicher Umstände eingeschränkt werden.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 18 EGV.

Kurzkommentar

Der Artikel 14.1 ist die Fortschreibung der Artikel 39 bis 48 EGV (Freizügigkeit der Arbeitskräfte, Niederlassungsrecht). Das Recht der Freizügigkeit und der Niederlassung der Unionsbürger im gesamten Gebiet der Union, das zwar praktisch bereits besteht aber noch nicht als Recht festgestellt ist, wird festgeschrieben. Die Einschränkung dieser Rechte durch die Artikel 39 bis 48 EGV (besonders die Beschränkung auf Arbeitskräfte) oder durch die, gemäß Artikel 18 Absatz 1 EGV erlassenen Durchführungsvorschriften fallen innerhalb einer Frist von zehn Jahren fort, wie die Übergangsbestimmungen zu Artikel 14.1 bestimmen (P Übergangsbestimmungen zu Artikel 14.1). Im Gegensatz zu Artikel 18 Absatz 2 EGV, der den Rat zum Erlaß von Vorschriften zur Erleichterung der Ausübung des Freizügigkeitsrechts ermächtigte, ermächtigt Artikel 14.1 Absatz 2 die Union, Gesetze zu erlassen, welche die Ausübung dieser Rechte für den Fall außergewöhnlicher Umstände einschränken kann. Dadurch erkennt man, daß das Recht der Freizügigkeit und des Niederlassungsrechts nach Absatz 1 allumfassend und nicht eingeschränkt zu verstehen ist. Die Umschreibung "für den Fall außergewöhnlicher Umstände" ist einschränkend oder freizügig auslegbar; ob z.B. eine Einschränkung der Freizügigkeit für Luxemburg aufgrund des bereits sehr hohen Ausländeranteils in Luxemburg ein außergewöhnlicher Umstand ist, wird Auslegungssache sein (Stichwort: Aufrechterhaltung von öffentlicher Ordnung und Sicherheit).

Die Übergangsbestimmungen finden auch nach dem Ablauf der zehnjährigen Übergangsfrist auf Großbritannien sowie Irland gemäß den bestehenden Protokollen zu Großbritannien und Irland Anwendung (P Protokoll über die Anwendung bestimmter Aspekte des Artikels 14 des Vertrags zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft auf das Vereinigte Königreich und Irland vom 2.10.1997 und das Protokoll über die Position des Vereinigten Königreichs und Irlands vom 2.10.1997.).

Schlußfolgerungen

Die größtenteils bereits vorhandene Freizügigkeit und Niederlassungsfreiheit für Staatsbürger der Mitgliedstaaten der Europäischen Union in allen ihren Mitgliedstaaten, teilweise auch mittels des Artikels 308 EGV durchgesetzt, wird endlich rechtlich als "Grundrecht der Unionsbürger" festgeschrieben.

Artikel 14.2

Jeder Unionsbürger hat das Recht, aus Gewissensgründen den Dienst mit einer Waffe zu verweigern.

Rechtsvergleiche

z.B. Artikel 4 Absatz 3 des Grundgesetzes für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland.

Kurzkomentar

Durch die Einführung einer gemeinsamen Verteidigungspolitik gemäß Artikel 7.1 wurde auch das Recht der Wehrdienstverweigerung als allgemeines Grundrecht für die EU übernommen. Da dieses Recht in der MRK fehlt (wie auch im Vertrag über die Gründung der Europäischen Verteidigungsgemeinschaft vom 27. Mai 1952, in Artikel 12 des Militärprotokolls aber angedeutet), wird es hierher übernommen, da in allen Mitgliedstaaten der Europäischen Union das Recht der Wehrdienstverweigerung geltendes Recht ist.

Schlußfolgerungen

Keine wesentliche Rechtsänderung !

Artikel 14.3

Jeder Unionsbürger mit Wohnsitz in einem Unionsstaat, dessen Staatsbürgerrecht er nicht besitzt, kann in dem Unionsstaat, in dem er seinen Wohnsitz hat, das aktive und passive Wahlrecht bei den Wahlen zum Europäischen Parlament ausüben, wobei für ihn dieselben Bedingungen gelten, wie für die Angehörigen des betreffenden Unionsstaates.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 19 Absatz 2 EGV.

Kurzkomentar

Das Wahlrecht für die Wahlen des Europäischen Parlaments in einem Unionsstaat, dessen Staatsbürgerschaft ein Unionsbürger (noch) nicht besitzt, wird durch den Artikel 14.3 uneingeschränkt bestätigt. Artikel 19 Absatz 2 Satz 2 EGV, der den Rat ermächtigte, sowohl die Einzelheiten für die Ausübung dieses Rechts wie auch Ausnahmeregelungen für einige Mitgliedstaaten mit besonderen Problemen (z.B. Luxemburg mit seinem hohen EU-Bürger-Anteil) zu erlassen, entfällt ohne Übergangsfrist.

Das Recht bedarf keiner Durchführungsbestimmungen, da der Artikel alle erforderlichen Bestimmungen enthält. Das Wahlrecht der Unionsbürger gilt für diese unter denselben Bedingungen wie für die eigenen Staatsbürger des betreffenden Mitgliedstaates.

Schlußfolgerungen

Nur für diejenigen Mitgliedstaaten, die eine Ausnahmeregelung gemäß Artikel 19 Absatz 2 Satz 2 EGV im Rat durchgesetzt haben, ist diese Bestimmung eine Rechtsänderung. Für die übrigen Mitgliedstaaten ist die Weglassung der Ausnahmebestimmungen keine Rechtsänderung.

Artikel 14.4

- (1) Jeder Unionsbürger sowie jede natürliche oder juristische Person mit Wohnort oder satzungsmäßigem Sitz in einem Unionsstaat kann allein oder zusammen mit anderen Bürgern oder Personen in Angelegenheiten, die in die Tätigkeitsbereiche der Union fallen und die ihn oder sie unmittelbar betreffen, eine Petition an das Europäische Parlament richten.
- (2) Jeder Unionsbürger kann sich an den Bürgerbeauftragten der Europäischen Union wenden.
- (3) Jeder Unionsbürger kann sich schriftlich in einer der Amtssprachen der Europäischen Union an jedes Organ oder an jede Einrichtung der Europäischen Union wenden, und eine Antwort in derselben Sprache erhalten.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt die Artikel 21 und 194 EGV.

Kurzkomentar

siehe Kommentare zu den Artikeln 21 und 194 EGV.

Schlußfolgerungen

Das Petitionsrecht der Bürger der Union an das Parlament bleibt bestehen, wird jedoch in einem Artikel zusammengefaßt und an die Stelle der Grundrechte verschoben. Keine Rechtsänderung.

Artikel 14.5

- (1) Jeder Unionsbürger sowie jede natürliche oder juristische Person mit Wohnsitz oder satzungsmäßigem Sitz in einem Unionsstaat hat das Recht auf Zugang zu Dokumenten des Europäischen Rates, des Europäischen Parlaments, des Ministerrates der Europäischen Union und der Kommission in allen Amtssprachen der Europäischen Union, vorbehaltlich der Grundsätze und Bedingungen, die nach Absatz 2 festzulegen sind.
- (2) 1. Die allgemeinen Grundsätze und die aufgrund öffentlicher oder privater Interessen geltenden Einschränkungen für die Ausübung dieses Rechts auf Zugang zu Dokumenten werden durch einen verbindlichen Rechtsakt der Union festgelegt.

2. Jedes der genannten Organe legt in seiner Geschäftsordnung Sonderbestimmungen hinsichtlich des Zugangs zu seinen Dokumenten fest.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 255 EGV.

Kurzkommentar

Der Artikel wurde erst durch den Amsterdamer Vertrag vom 2.10.1997 in den EGV eingestellt. Er gibt den Bürgern das Recht auf Einsicht in alle Dokumente der Organe der Europäischen Union unter den Einschränkungen, die durch Rechtsakt der Union bestimmt sind. Jedes einzelne Organ kann zusätzlich zu diesem verbindlichen Rechtsakt noch Sondervorschriften bezüglich des Zugangs zu seinen Dokumenten machen.

In einer Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 14.5 wird ausdrücklich das Fortgelten der nach Maßgabe des Artikels 255 EGV erlassenen Einschränkungen des Rechts auf Zugang zu den Dokumenten der Europäischen Union bestimmt.

Schlußfolgerungen

Das Grundrecht auf Dokumenteneinsicht, das der Bürgernähe dienen soll, kann durch einfachen Rechtsakt der Union, in der Regel in der Form eines Unionsgesetzes (p Artikel 24.1 Absatz 2 des Verfassungsentwurfs), stark eingeschränkt werden. Es wurde trotzdem zu den Bürgerrechten hinzugefügt, um die Übersichtlichkeit dieser Bürgerrechte zu gewährleisten.

Keine Rechtsänderung !

Artikel 14.6

- (1) 1. Jeder Unionsbürger hat das Recht auf den Schutz der ihn betreffenden personenbezogenen Daten, soweit er daran ein schutzwürdiges Interesse hat.

2. Durch Rechtsakt der Union kann über den Schutz natürlicher Personen bei der Verarbeitung personenbezogener Daten und dem freien Verkehr solcher Daten Beschränkungen festgelegt werden.
- (2) Durch Rechtsakt der Union wird eine unabhängige Kontrollinstanz errichtet, die für die Überwachung der Anwendung solcher Unionsgesetze auf die Organe und Einrichtungen der Union verantwortlich ist; der Rechtsakt legt erforderlichenfalls andere einschlägige Bestimmungen fest.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 286 EGV.

Kurzkomentar

Der Artikel wurde erst durch den Amsterdamer Vertrag vom 2.10.1997 in den EGV eingestellt. Er gibt den Bürgern das Recht auf Datenschutz. Der Artikel ist weiter gefaßt als der Artikel 286 EGV, der nur für Daten, die von der Europäischen Union und ihrer Organe verarbeitet werden, gültig war.

Der Artikel 14.6 des Verfassungsentwurfs dagegen gibt jedem Unionsbürger das Recht auf den Schutz der ihn betreffenden personenbezogenen Daten, jedoch unter der Einschränkung, daß dieses Recht durch einfachen Rechtsakt, der in der Regel in der Form eines Unionsgesetzes (p Artikel 24.1

Absatz 2 des Verfassungsentwurfs) zu erlassen ist, stark eingeschränkt werden kann. Solange und soweit ein solcher Rechtsakt der Union nicht erlassen wird, können die Unionsstaaten weiterhin Gesetze zum Datenschutz erlassen. Das Subsidiaritätsprinzip nach Artikel 1.4 wirkt hier auf die EU fast so einschränkend, wie die Fassung des Artikels 286 EGV.

Der Absatz 2 entspricht den Bestimmungen des Artikels 286 Absatz 2 EGV, der zur Durchsetzung der Datenschutzbestimmungen in den Organen und Einrichtungen der Union ein unabhängiges Kontrollorgan ermöglicht.

In einer Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 14.6 wird ausdrücklich das Fortgelten der nach Maßgabe des Artikels 286 EGV erlassenen Einschränkungen des Rechts auf Datenschutz bestimmt.

Schlußfolgerungen

Das Grundrecht auf Datenschutz, das im EGV bisher nur eingeschränkt galt, wird als Bürgerrecht der Unionsbürger voll als europäisches Recht ausgeweitet. Dieser Artikel, insbesondere der Absatz 1 ist eine Rechtsänderung und eine Kompetenzergänzung gegenüber den bisherigen Verträgen, wobei jedoch hier auch das Subsidiaritätsprinzip die Kompetenz der Union wiederum einschränkt.

Artikel 14.7

Diskriminierungen von Unionsbürgern aus Gründen der Staatsangehörigkeit sind verboten.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 12 EGV.

Kurzkomentar

Der Artikel legt das älteste Grundrecht in der EU fest, das Diskriminierungsverbot, das bereits im Jahr 1957 durch den EWGV eingeführt wurde. Da die in Artikel 12 EGV ermöglichten Einschränkungen dieses Verbots nicht ergangen sind, wohl aber einige Urteile des Gerichtshofs das Recht ausgelegt haben, wurde es durch den Verfassungsentwurf als Bürgerrecht nochmals aufgewertet und jegliche Diskriminierung von Unionsbürgern aus Gründen ihrer Staatsangehörigkeit untersagt. Das Recht gilt unmittelbar und kann gemäß diesem Verfassungsentwurf nicht beschränkt werden.

Das in Artikel 12 EGV faktisch für alle Diskriminierungen aus Gründen der Staatsangehörigkeit (also auch für Staatsbürger außerhalb der Unionsbürgerschaft) gültige Recht wird auf die Staatsbürgerschaften innerhalb der Unionsbürgerschaft, also nur für die Unionsbürger im Sinne des Artikels 12 des Verfassungsentwurfs beschränkt.

Schlußfolgerungen

Keine wesentliche Rechtsänderung.

Artikel 14.8

Diskriminierungen aus Gründen des Geschlechts, der Rasse, der ethnischen Herkunft, der Religion oder der Weltanschauung, einer Behinderung, des Alters oder der sexuellen Ausrichtung sind zu bekämpfen. Das Nähere regelt ein besonderes Unionsgesetz.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 13 EGV.

Kurzkomentar

Das durch den Artikel bestimmte allgemeine Diskriminierungsverbot für Unionsbürger und Ausländer ist so formuliert, daß darin kein einklagbares Recht (im Gegensatz zum Diskriminierungsverbot nach Artikel 14.7) entsteht. Er verpflichtet die Union und ihre Staaten dazu, Diskriminierungen aus Gründen des Geschlechts, der Rasse, der ethnischen Herkunft, der Religion, einer körperlichen oder geistigen Behinderung, des Alters oder der sexuellen Ausrichtung zu bekämpfen. Diese Bekämpfung erfolgt in spezifischen Tätigkeitsbereichen der EU durch einfaches Unionsrecht, allgemein aber durch das in Artikel 14.8 genannte besondere Unionsgesetz (Unionsgesetz mit einstimmiger Zustimmung des Rates).

Der Artikel ist jedoch durch den Artikel 14 der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention in Verbindung mit Artikel 13 des Verfassungsentwurfs teilweise überlagert, da dieser unmittelbar geltendes Recht in der EU ist. So ist die EU nur verpflichtet, die Diskriminierung wegen einer Behinderung, des Alters oder der sexuellen Ausrichtung zu bekämpfen, die anderen Diskriminierungsarten sind einklagbare Rechte nach Artikel 13 des Verfassungsentwurfs.

Schlußfolgerungen

Das Diskriminierungsverbot nach Artikel 14.8 des Verfassungsentwurfs, das eher ein Staatsziel als ein Grundrecht ist, kann durch ein besonderes Unionsgesetz (siehe Artikel 25 Absatz 1 des Verfassungsentwurfs) als unmittelbar geltendes Recht ausgebaut werden. Keine wesentliche Rechtsänderung !

Artikel 14.9

- (1) Kein Unionsbürger darf an einen Staat außerhalb der Union ausgeliefert werden.
- (2) Wer in einem Unionsstaat wegen eines Verbrechens angeklagt ist und sich der Strafverfolgung durch Flucht in einen anderen Unionsstaat entzieht und dort aufgegriffen wird, ist an den Unionsstaat, aus dem er geflohen ist, auszuliefern, sobald die Regierung dieses Unionsstaates es verlangt.

Rechtsvergleiche

ersetzt Artikel 31 Buchstabe b); siehe auch Artikel 3 des 4. Zusatzprotokolls zur MRK vom 16. September 1963.

zu Absatz 1 vergleiche die Verfassungen einiger Mitgliedstaaten der Europäischen Union (z.B. Artikel 16 Absatz 2 des Grundgesetzes für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland vom 23. Mai 1949, § 7 der Finnischen Regierungsform vom 17. Juli 1919, Artikel 33 Absatz 1 der Verfassung der Republik Portugal vom 2. April 1976, Kapitel 2 § 7 Absatz 1 der Verfassung der Königreichs Schweden vom 1. Januar 1975).

zu Absatz 2 vergleiche Artikel IV. Abschnitt 2 Absatz 2 der Verfassung der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika vom 17. September 1787.

Kurzkomentar

Der Artikel schafft ein neues Recht, das eng mit dem Ausbau der Unionsstaatsbürgerschaft des Artikels 12 zusammenhängt.

Der Artikel 3 des 4. Zusatzprotokolls zur MRK, der gemäß Artikel 13 des Verfassungsentwurfs unmittelbar geltendes Recht der Europäischen Union ist, besagt, daß kein Staatsbürger durch seinen eigenen Staat aus dessen Staatsgebiet ausgewiesen werden kann. Zwar sind Ausweisung und Auslieferung aufgrund einer strafbaren Handlung zwei verschiedene Rechtssachen, doch besteht ein gewisser Zusammenhang, da eine Auslieferung eine besondere Art der Ausweisung bzw. richtiger gesagt eine Abschiebung aus einem Staatsgebiet und die Verbringung in ein anderes Staatsgebiet darstellt. Die Abschiebung erfolgt jedoch faktisch erst, wenn eine behördlich ausgesprochene Ausweisung durch den Ausgewiesenen nicht erfolgt ist.

Während der Absatz 1 also der Union und ihren Mitgliedstaaten verbietet, einen Unionsbürger, auf welcher Staatsangehörigkeit auch immer diese beruht, im Sinne des Völkerrechts auszuliefern, verpflichtet Absatz 2 die Mitgliedstaaten, eine in einem Unionsstaat straffällig gewordene Person, die sich in ihren Heimatstaat (oder einen anderen Unionsstaat) geflüchtet hat, an den Unionsstaat, in dem die Person straffällig geworden ist (Ort der Straftat) auszuliefern. Somit würden die in den oben aufgeführten Verfassungen der Mitgliedstaaten der EU festgelegten Auslieferungsverbote für eigene Staatsbürger hinsichtlich der Auslieferung an einen Unionsstaat obsolet.

Schlußfolgerungen

Das Auslieferungsverbot für Unionsbürger wurde als Bürgerrecht eingestuft und steht deshalb an dieser Stelle im Verfassungsentwurf. Es enthält einige neue Rechtsbestimmungen, die sich auf den gemäßigten Ausbau der Unionsbürgerschaft positiv auswirken und die Union zu einem einheitlichen Rechtsverfolgungsraum im Sinne der Schaffung eines Raums der Freiheit, der Sicherheit und des Rechts nach dem Dritten Teil, Titel IV. EGV und Titel VI. EUV (nach dem Verfassungsentwurf dann Titel IV. Kapitel 1 und 2 EUVneu) machen sollen.

.....

Artikel 30.7

- (1) Wird in einem Verfahren vor dem Gerichtshof eine grundsätzliche Frage bezüglich der Auslegung oder des Umfangs der Rechte und Freiheiten aus der, am 4. November 1950 in Rom unterzeichneten Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten und den weiteren, diese Konvention ergänzenden und ändernden Zusatzprotokolle aufgeworfen, so ist der Gerichtshof verpflichtet, das Verfahren an den, durch diese Konvention errichteten Europäischen Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte abzugeben. Das Urteil des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte hat die Wirkung eines endgültigen Urteils des Gerichtshofs.
- (2) Entscheidungen des Gerichtshofs über die Auslegung oder den Umfang der Rechte und Freiheiten aus der, am 4. November 1950 in Rom unterzeichneten Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und der weiteren, dieser Konvention ergänzenden und ändernden Zusatzprotokolle können beim Europäischen Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte nach Maßgabe der genannten Konvention angefochten werden.

Rechtsvergleiche

Siehe Artikel 45 des Entwurfs zu einem Vertrag über die Satzung der Europäischen Politischen Gemeinschaft vom 10. März 1953.

Kurzkommentar

Der Artikel beschreibt die Sondervorschriften des Gerichtshofs bei der Auslegung des Artikels 13 des Verfassungsentwurfs.

Der Gerichtshof hat die Zuständigkeit als Wahrer der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten nach den Verfahren der Vorabentscheidung (P Artikel 28.4), gegen einen Unionsstaat (P Artikel 29.1 bis 29.4) und der Nichtigkeitsklage (P Artikel 29.5 und 29.6), da der Artikel 13 des Verfassungsentwurfs die Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten, die im Abschnitt 1. der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention und den weiteren Zusatzprotokollen zu dieser Konvention aufgeführt sind, mit unmittelbarer Rechtswirkung in der Europäischen Union ausstattet (unter Einschränkung nach den Bestimmungen der Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 13).

So kann sowohl ein Gericht eines Unionsstaates wegen Verletzung eines Rechts aus der Menschenrechtskonvention in einem seiner Verfahren den Gerichtshof anrufen wie auch die ausführende Gewalt (sowohl der Ministerrat als auch die Kommission) und jeder Unionsstaat einen anderen Unionsstaat wegen der Verletzung eines solchen Rechts vor dem Gerichtshof verklagen. Natürlichen und juristischen Personen steht ein direktes Klagerecht im Verfahren der Nichtigkeit (P Artikel 29.5 Absatz 2) zu.

Der Gerichtshof wird jedoch durch den Artikel 30.7 verpflichtet, wenn er feststellt, daß in einem Verfahren eine grundsätzliche Frage bezüglich der Auslegung oder dem Umfang eines, in der Konvention niedergelegten Rechts aufgeworfen wird, dieses Verfahren an den Europäischen Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte abzugeben. Wie das weitere Verfahren in einem solchen Fall ist, kann durch den Verfassungsentwurf nicht bestimmt, werden; hier wird wohl eine Absprache zwischen dem Gerichtshof und dem Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte getroffen oder ein Vertrag zwischen der Europäischen Union und dem Europarat geschlossen werden müssen; in jedem anderen Fall müßte ein Unionsstaat, der nicht von dem Verfahren betroffen ist, als Hohe Vertragspartei der Konvention von dem EU-Gerichtshof aufgefordert werden, eine Klage nach Artikel 33 der Konvention ("Staatenbeschwerde") einzulegen. Die Entscheidungen des Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte nach diesem Artikel haben dann dieselbe Wirkung wie ein Urteil des EU-Gerichtshofs.

Nach Absatz 2 bleibt es einer Verfahrenspartei vor dem EU-Gerichtshof nicht versagt, gegen das Urteil des Gerichtshofs beim Europäischen Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte nach Maßgabe der Konvention eine Klage einzulegen. Hier findet die Konvention, insbesondere der Artikel 34 der Konvention ("Individualbeschwerde") Anwendung und das Urteil des EU-Gerichtshofs gilt als Urteil der letzten innerstaatlichen Instanz.

Schlußfolgerungen

Der Artikel ist zum Schutz der ausschließlichen und endgültigen Auslegung der Menschenrechte nach der Konvention durch den Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte eingefügt worden. Der Gerichtshof wird somit ermächtigt, ohne Urteil das Verfahren an den Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte weiterzuleiten.

.....

Teil IX. - Übergangsbestimmungen

.....

Zu Artikel 12 Absatz 2 erster Unterabsatz

Für Frankreich findet der Artikel 12 Absatz 2 erster Unterabsatz nur nach Maßgabe des Artikel 88-3 der Verfassung der Französischen Republik Anwendung, und zwar während der Dauer der Gültigkeit des Artikels 88-3 der Verfassung der Französischen Republik.

Anmerkungen

Die Unionsbürger können nach Artikel 88-3 der französischen Verfassung auch weiterhin (auch als ordentliche Gemeindebürger im Sinne des Artikels 12 Absatz 2 erster Unterabsatz dieses Verfassungsentwurfs) nicht Bürgermeister einer französischen Gemeinde werden. Nur wenn der Unionsbürger auch französischer Staatsbürger wird, findet diese Bestimmung keine Anwendung.

-

Zu Artikel 13

Die gemäß den Artikeln 56 und 57 der am 4. November 1950 unterzeichneten Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten und den entsprechenden Artikeln der Zusatzprotokolle zu dieser Konvention von den Unionsstaaten abgegebenen Erklärungen und Vorbehalte bleiben in Kraft, bis sie durch die Vertragsparteien der Konvention geändert, zurückgenommen oder aufgehoben werden. Solange die Europäische Union nicht Vertragspartei der Konvention ist, kann der Ministerrat die Vertragsparteien verpflichten, die von ihnen abgegebenen Erklärungen und Vorbehalte zu ändern, zurückzunehmen oder aufzuheben oder von einem Unionsstaat nicht ratifizierte Zusatzprotokolle zu ratifizieren.

Anmerkungen

Da in den Verfassungsentwurf keine eigene Grundrechtscharta aufgenommen wurde, dafür aber der Artikel 13 des Verfassungsentwurfs die seit 1953 in Kraft befindliche Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention (MRK) als unmittelbar geltendes Recht erklärt hat (und somit die, seit 1959 einheitlich für alle Mitgliedstaaten des Europarates durch den Europäischen Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte ausgelegten Menschenrechte in allen Teilen der Union Verfassungsrecht sind), wird in der Übergangsbestimmung zum Artikel 13 auf die unterschiedliche Geltung einzelner Bestimmungen der MRK in jedem Unionsstaat Rücksicht genommen. Nur diejenigen Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten gelten einheitlich in der EU, für welche durch die Unionsstaaten keine Vorbehalte gemacht wurden.

Die in dem Verfassungsentwurf als Unionsstaaten vorgesehenen Staaten haben alle Vorbehalte oder wenigstens Erklärungen zur MRK abgegeben, außer Belgien, Zypern, Dänemark, Griechenland, Italien, Lettland, Luxemburg, Polen, Slowenien und Schweden; für die genannten Staaten gelten also alle Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten nach der EMRK, wiederum jedoch nicht alle, in den Protokollen niedergelegten Menschenrechte. Frankreich, Großbritannien und die Niederlande haben sogar Territorialerklärungen abgegeben, die Teile ihres Staatsgebiets (hier insbesondere außereuropäische Gebiete) von der Wirkung der MRK ausnehmen (ganz oder teilweise). Das Protokoll Nr. 4 zur MRK (Verbot von Freiheitsentziehung wegen Schulden, Freizügigkeit, Verbot von Ausweisungen) wurde von Großbritannien nicht ratifiziert. Das Protokoll Nr. 6 (Abschaffung der Todesstrafe) wurde von Belgien, Zypern, Estland, Griechenland, Lettland, Litauen, Polen und Großbritannien zwar nicht ratifiziert, die Todesstrafe wurde jedoch nach nationalem Recht abgeschafft bzw. nicht mehr angewendet (hierzu besteht auch eine Erklärung in der Schlußakte zum Vertrag von Amsterdam vom 2.10.1997). Das Protokoll Nr. 7 (verschiedene Bestimmungen zum Strafverfahren) wurde von Belgien, Zypern, Deutschland, Irland, den Niederlanden, Polen, Portugal, Spanien und Großbritannien noch nicht ratifiziert. Die, die Protokolle ratifizierenden Staaten haben teilweise Vorbehalte oder Erklärungen abgegeben.

Die Vorbehalte und Erklärungen zur MRK und dessen Zusatzprotokollen bleiben in den einzelnen Unionsstaaten gemäß der Übergangsbestimmung zwar erhalten, da eine solche Ungleichheit in der Rechtswirkung einzelner Grundrechte der MRK und seiner Protokolle in den einzelnen Unionsstaaten nicht auf Dauer bestehen kann und soll, wird jedoch der Ministerrat ermächtigt (solange die EU nicht selbst Vertragspartei der MRK ist), einzelne Mitgliedstaaten zu verpflichten, solche Vorbehalte oder Erklärungen zurückzunehmen und Zusatzprotokolle zu ratifizieren. Der Unionsstaat hat dieser Verpflichtung nachzukommen.

Zu Artikel 14.1

1. Die bestehenden Beschränkungen der Freizügigkeit für Unionsbürger innerhalb des Unionsgebiets bleiben für weitere zehn Jahre in Kraft, doch kann die Union durch verbindliche Rechtsakte im Rahmen der Bestimmungen der Artikel 40, 41 und 42 des Vertrags über die Europäische Union sowie der Artikel 40, 42, 44 und 47 des Vertrags zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft Vorschriften erlassen, mit denen die Ausübung dieses Rechts erleichtert wird.

Durch verbindlichen Rechtsakt ist sicherzustellen, daß mit dem Ablauf der zehnjährigen Frist das Recht der Freizügigkeit innerhalb des Unionsgebiets nach Maßgabe des Artikels 14.1 uneingeschränkt wahrgenommen werden kann.

Mit dem Ablauf der zehnjährigen Übergangsfrist werden folgende Bestimmungen des Vertrags über die Europäische Union geändert:

- a) In Artikel 40 Buchstabe a) werden die Worte "Maßnahmen zur Gewährleistung des freien Personenverkehrs nach Artikel 14 des Vertrags zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft in Verbindung mit unmittelbar damit zusammenhängenden flankierenden" gestrichen.
 - b) In Artikel 41 Nr. 1 werden die Worte: ", daß Personen, seien es Bürger der Union oder" ersetzt durch "daß" und nach dem Wort "Länder" entfällt das Komma.
2. Für das Königreich Dänemark findet das Protokoll über die Position Dänemarks im Anhang zum Vertrag über die Europäische Union und zum Vertrag zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft weiterhin Anwendung. 3. Für das Vereinigte Königreich von Großbritannien und Nordirland sowie für Irland findet das "Protokoll über die Anwendung bestimmter Aspekte des Artikels 14 des Vertrags zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft auf das Vereinigte Königreich und auf Irland" auch nach dem Ablauf der in Absatz 1 festgelegten zehnjährigen Frist entsprechende Anwendung.

Anmerkungen

Die Ziffer 1 der Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 14.1 des Verfassungsentwurfs entwickelt den Artikel 18 EGV weiter, indem er die Freizügigkeit für Unionsbürger innerhalb des Unionsgebiets, das im Artikel 18 Absatz 1 EGV mit genereller Einschränkung geschaffen, und deren Beschränkungen in Artikel 14.1 des Verfassungsentwurfs fast vollständig aufgehoben wurden. Da jedoch eine sofortige vollständige Freigabe der Freizügigkeit durch die Mitgliedstaaten wohl nicht gewünscht und auch nicht durchgesetzt werden könnte, hat der Verfassungsentwurf erstmals eine zehnjährige Frist gesetzt, während der die Freizügigkeit mit Blick auf die volle Gültigkeit des Artikels 14.1 geschaffen werden soll. Mit dem Ablauf der Frist fällt jede Beschränkung fort, auch wenn der in Absatz 2 der Ziffer 1 vorgesehene Rechtsakt zur Sicherstellung der Freizügigkeit nicht ergangen wäre. Mit dem Ablauf der Frist kann jeder Unionsbürger sein Freizügigkeitsrecht gerichtlich einklagen und somit auch durchsetzen. Die im Absatz 3 genannten Verfassungsänderungen dienen der Klarstellung der, nach der Frist eintretenden Rechtslage im Bereich der Innenpolitik der EU.

Hinweis: die genannten Artikel 40, 41 und 42 des EUV haben den (nur in Details geänderten) Wortlaut der Artikel 61, 62 und 62 EGV in der geltenden Fassung; die genannten Artikel 40, 42, 44 und 47 EGV wurden teilweise erheblich geändert !

Die Ziffern 2 und 3 bestätigen wiederum das Sonderrecht Dänemarks, Großbritanniens und Irlands hinsichtlich der Freiheit des Personenverkehrs innerhalb der EU, zu dem auch die Freizügigkeit gehört.

-

Zu Artikel 14.5

Die gemäß Artikel 255 des Vertrags zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft in der Fassung des am 2. Oktober 1997 unterzeichneten Vertrags von Amsterdam festgelegten Grundsätze und Bedingungen gelten bis zum Erlaß des Unionsgesetzes gemäß Artikel 14.5 dieser Verfassung entsprechend fort; diese können nur durch einen verbindlichen Rechtsakt der Union geändert, ergänzt oder aufgehoben werden.

Anmerkungen

Um eine neuerliche Beschlußfassung über die Grundsätze betreffend den öffentlichen Zugang zu den Dokumenten der Europäischen Union, die bereits gemäß dem bisherigen Artikel 255 EGV erlassen werden konnten, auszuschließen, wurden die bereits beschlossenen Grundsätze in der Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 14.5 als fortgeltend bezeichnet; die bisherige Beschlußfassung hat somit dieselbe Rechtswirkung wie der in Absatz 2 des Artikels genannte Rechtsakt der Union und kann auch nur durch einen solchen geändert, ergänzt oder aufgehoben werden.

Die Übergangsbestimmung ist eine Sonderbestimmung zur Fortgeltung von bestehendem Recht unter dem Verfassungsentwurf und damit eng mit der zweiten Schlußbestimmung des Verfassungsentwurfs verbunden.

-

Zu Artikel 14.6

Die gemäß Artikel 286 des Vertrags zur Gründung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft in der Fassung des am 2. Oktober 1997 unterzeichneten Vertrags von Amsterdam anwendbaren Rechtsakte gelten bis zum Erlaß des Unionsgesetzes gemäß Artikel 14.6 entsprechend fort; diese können nur durch Unionsgesetz geändert, ergänzt oder aufgehoben werden.

Anmerkungen

Wie die Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 14.5 ist auch die Übergangsbestimmung zu Artikel 14.6 eine Sonderbestimmung zur Fortgeltung bestehenden Rechts, hier das Recht auf Datenschutz, das gemäß dem bisherigen Artikel 286 EGV erlassen werden konnte.

Ich hoffe auf ein gutes Gelingen des Konvents und verbleibe hochachtungsvoll
Thomas Clement

PROYECTO DE CARTA DE LOS DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES DE LA UNIÓN EUROPEAfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruselas, 10 de abril de 2000 (12.04)
(OR. fr)*CHARTE 4217/00*CONTRIB 93*NOTA DE TRANSMISIÓN

Asunto: Proyecto de Carta de los derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea

Se adjunta una contribución de D. Isaac Ibáñez García. ^{1 2}

¹ Sr. Ibáñez García: C/sor Valentina Mirón no. 5, Esc. 2-3D.
10600 PLASENCIA (Caceres). ESPAÑA.

² Este texto se ha presentado en lengua española únicamente.

PROPUESTA RELATIVA AL CONTENIDO DE LA CARTA DE DERECHOS FUNDAMENTALES DE LA UNION EUROPEA

Autor: Isaac Ibáñez García

I.- INTRODUCCION.

En el Consejo Europeo de Colonia (3 y 4 de junio de 1.999) los Jefes de Estado o de Gobierno, se pusieron de acuerdo sobre la idea de que, en el actual estado de evolución de la Unión, era necesario establecer una Carta de los derechos fundamentales con el fin de poner de manifiesto la importancia sobresaliente y el alcance de los mismos ante los ciudadanos de la Unión.

La Carta se adoptaría mediante una declaración solemne y conjunta del Consejo Europeo, el Parlamento Europeo y la Comisión.

En una fase posterior a este proceso se examinaría si la Carta debe incorporarse a los Tratados y, en caso afirmativo, de qué modo ha de hacerse.

El Consejo ha estimado que dicha Carta deberá incluir los derechos de libertad e igualdad y los principios procesales fundamentales. La carta deberá contener asimismo los derechos básicos que corresponden únicamente a los ciudadanos de la Unión.

A mi juicio, en dicha Carta, con finalidad codificadora, deben incluirse asimismo aquellos derechos fundamentales ya reconocidos por los Tratados, como el Derecho de petición.

II.- EL DERECHO DE PETICIÓN EN LA UNION EUROPEA.

En mi opinión el artículo 21 del Tratado CE, en su redacción dada por el Tratado de Ámsterdam, supone un avance sobre su regulación anterior, pero tiene una redacción confusa, que puede llegar a ser interpretada como que el Derecho de petición únicamente puede ejercitarse ante el Parlamento Europeo y no ante el resto de las instituciones u organismos de la Unión. De hecho así ha llegado a interpretarse por alguna.

Restringir el ejercicio de petición al Parlamento Europeo no tiene sentido jurídico, pues las peticiones deben poder dirigirse a todas aquellas instituciones que tienen poder de iniciativa en los ámbitos de actuación de la Comunidad.

Asimismo, el inciso “que le afecte directamente” incluido en el artículo 194 del Tratado CE, supone desconocer el Derecho de petición como un derecho de carácter fundamentalmente político (vid. Derecho de petición y derecho de queja. I. Ibáñez García. Ed. Dykinson. Madrid, 1993). De hecho, la Comisión de peticiones del Parlamento Europeo ha llegado a interpretar este inciso de forma contraria a su interpretación literal, con el fin de no restringir la utilización del propio Derecho.

El artículo 8 D del Tratado CE, en su redacción dada por el Tratado de Maastricht, era del siguiente tenor:

“Todo ciudadano de la Unión tendrá el derecho de petición ante el Parlamento Europeo, de conformidad con lo dispuesto en el artículo 138 D.

Todo ciudadano de la Unión podrá dirigirse al Defensor del Pueblo instituido en virtud de lo dispuesto en el artículo 138 E”.

Al antiguo artículo 8 D del Tratado CE (ahora artículo 21), el Tratado de Amsterdam ha añadido un importante tercer párrafo:

“Todo ciudadano de la Unión podrá dirigirse por escrito a cualquiera de las instituciones u organismos contemplados en el presente artículo o en el artículo 7 en una de las lenguas mencionadas en el artículo 314 y recibir una contestación en esa misma lengua”.

Se amplía así el derecho de petición originariamente reconocido ante el Parlamento Europeo y el Defensor del Pueblo (en este caso, rectius, derecho de queja o reclamación), al resto de las instituciones y organismos de la Unión, es decir, puede ejercitarse tal derecho, además, ante el Consejo, la Comisión, el Tribunal de Justicia, el Tribunal de Cuentas, el Comité Económico y Social y el Comité de las Regiones.

De la Resolución del Parlamento Europeo sobre las deliberaciones de la Comisión de Peticiones durante el año parlamentario 1998-1.999 y del Informe de dicha Comisión sobre sus deliberaciones en citado año parlamentario, pueden destacarse las siguientes apreciaciones:

- Considerando que el derecho de petición impone al Parlamento Europeo la correspondiente obligación de tramitar las peticiones de la forma más efectiva posible, con la asistencia de la Comisión y de los órganos competentes del Parlamento.
- Subraya que el derecho de petición aumenta las posibilidades de los ciudadanos de la Unión en cuanto a la participación e información democráticas...
- Destaca que es el Parlamento en su conjunto quien, debido a su propia función y responsabilidad política, garantiza en una respuesta directa al ciudadano el derecho de petición reconocido en el Tratado de la Unión Europea.
- Las cifras demuestran que los ciudadanos recurren con frecuencia a su derecho de petición, gratuito para ellos y que puede referirse a todos los asuntos comunitarios que incidan en el ámbito de actividades de la Unión Europea.
- Las peticiones tienen una importante función en la detección y tramitación de casos de infracción.
- Las peticiones se pueden transmitir (por la Comisión de Peticiones) a otra comisión o delegación de acuerdo con los procedimientos establecidos, “para información”, “para actuación”, para que se tengan en cuenta en el examen de cualquier propuesta legislativa relacionada, o “para opinión”, único caso en que cabe exigir una respuesta escrita de la comisión de que se trate.

El Informe de 6 de mayo de 1.988 de la Dirección General de Estudios del Parlamento Europeo, concluye:

“El derecho de petición se considera en todos los países europeos como una característica esencial del Estado de Derecho. Con frecuencia, este derecho tiene un efecto preventivo. En los países en los que desempeña un papel más importante, este hecho tiene como consecuencia que el parlamento sea informado más detalladamente de las preocupaciones y de las opiniones de los ciudadanos y que, de este modo, pueda satisfacer de forma más eficaz su misión de órgano de control del ejecutivo. De la función del derecho de petición como instrumento político podrían derivarse consecuencias para un parlamento en forma de la aprobación o la modificación de leyes”.

La Comisión Europea, en su segundo informe sobre la ciudadanía de la Unión, de 27 de mayo de 1.997, considera que las peticiones constituyen una medida extrajudicial de protección de los derechos individuales y colectivos, a disposición de toda persona residente en la Unión; señalando que a través de las peticiones la Comisión ha abierto diversos procedimientos de infracción contra Estados miembros por violación del Derecho comunitario.

De las palabras de BENJAMIN CONSTANT, en su famosa conferencia de 1819 De la liberté de les modernes comparée avec celle des anciens (recogidas por el profesor GARCIA DE ENTERRIA en su obra: Justicia y seguridad jurídica en un mundo de leyes desbocadas. Civitas, 1999) se ve como el derecho de petición es un instrumento al servicio de la libertad:

“Preguntaos primero, señores, lo que en nuestros días un inglés, un francés, un habitante de los Estados Unidos de América entienden por la palabra libertad. Es para cada uno el derecho de no estar sometido más que a leyes, de no poder ser detenido, ni llevado a prisión, ni condenado a muerte ni maltratado de ninguna manera por el efecto de la voluntad arbitraria de uno o varios individuos. Es para cada uno el derecho de decir su opinión, de escoger su trabajo y de ejercerlo; de disponer de su propiedad, incluso de abusar de ella; de ir y venir sin necesidad de obtener un permiso y sin tener que dar cuenta de sus motivos o de sus pasos. Es, para cada uno, el derecho de reunirse con otros individuos, sea para tratar de sus propios intereses, sea para profesar el culto que él y sus asociados prefieran, sea, simplemente, para llenar sus días y sus horas de la manera más conforme a sus inclinaciones, a sus fantasías. En fin, es el derecho para cada uno de influir sobre la administración del gobierno, bien por el nombramiento de todos o de ciertos funcionarios, bien por exposiciones, peticiones, demandas que la autoridad esté más o menos obligada a tomar en consideración”.

III.- C O N C L U S I O N . P R O P U E S T A .

A nuestro juicio, el Derecho de Petición debe ser incorporado a la Carta de derechos fundamentales de la Unión Europea; con una redacción que posibilitara una recta interpretación del Derecho reconocido en el Tratado y que, en su momento –si decide incorporarse el contenido de la Carta a los Tratados- mejorara la redacción de los mismos.

Una posible redacción a incorporar a la Carta sería la siguiente:

“Cualquier ciudadano de la Unión, así como cualquier persona física o jurídica que resida o tenga su domicilio social en un Estado miembro, tendrá derecho a presentar ante las instituciones u organismos contemplados en los Tratados, individualmente o asociado con otros ciudadanos o personas, una petición sobre un asunto propio de los ámbitos de actuación de la Unión Europea. El peticionario tiene derecho a recibir una contestación motivada sobre el fondo del asunto planteado en el más breve plazo posible”.

Asimismo, considero que debería recogerse en la Carta el derecho a presentar quejas ante el Defensor del Pueblo Europeo.

Plasencia, 31 de marzo de 2.000

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 7 April 2000CHARTE 4219/00*CONTRIB 94*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a recommendation and a report by the Council of Europe on Protection of human rights and dignity of the terminally ill and dying, submitted by Mr. Reinhard Rack, member of the German Bundestag. ¹

¹ These texts have been submitted in French and English languages.

Council of Europe / Conseil de l'Europe
F-67075 Strasbourg cedex (France)
Tél: +33 / 3 88 41 20 00
Fax: +33 / 3 88 41 27 76
Email: pace@coe.fr
<http://stars.coe.fr/>

Provisional edition

Protection of the human rights and dignity of the terminally ill and the dying

Recommendation 1418 (1999)¹

1. The vocation of the Council of Europe is to protect the dignity of all human beings and the rights which stem therefrom.
2. Medical progress, which now makes it possible to cure many previously incurable or fatal diseases, the improvement of medical techniques and the development of resuscitation techniques, which make it possible to prolong a person's survival, defer the moment of death. As a result the quality of life of the dying is often ignored, as is their loneliness, their suffering and that of their families and of the care-givers.
3. In 1976, in its Resolution 613, the Assembly declared that it was "convinced that what dying patients most want is to die in peace and dignity, if possible with the comfort and support of their family and friends", and added in its Recommendation 779 that "the prolongation of life should not in itself constitute the exclusive aim of medical practice, which must be concerned equally with the relief of suffering".
4. Since then, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine has formed important principles and paved the way without explicitly referring to the specific requirements of the terminally ill or dying.

¹ Assembly debate on 25 June 1999 (24th Sitting). See Doc. 8421, report of the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee (rapporteur: Mrs Gatterer) and Doc. 8454, opinion of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights (rapporteur: Mr McNamara). Text adopted by the Assembly on 25 June 1999 (24th Sitting).

5. The obligation to respect and to protect the dignity of a terminally ill or dying person derives from the inviolability of human dignity in all stages of life. This respect and protection find their expression in the provision of an appropriate environment, enabling a human being to die in dignity.

6. This task has to be carried out especially for the benefit of the most vulnerable members of society, a fact demonstrated by the many experiences of suffering in the past and the present. Just as a human being begins his or her life in weakness and dependency, he or she needs protection and support when dying.

7. Fundamental rights deriving from the dignity of the terminally ill or dying person are threatened today by a variety of factors:

- i. the insufficient access to palliative care and good pain management;
- ii. the often lacking treatment of physical suffering and psychological, social and spiritual needs;
- iii. the artificial prolongation of the dying process by either using disproportionate medical measures or by continuing treatment without a patient's consent;
- iv. the lack of continuing education and psychological support for health care professionals, working in palliative medicine,
- v. insufficient care and support for relatives and friends of terminally ill or dying patients, which otherwise could elevate human suffering in its various dimensions,
- vi. the fear of patients to loose control of themselves and to become a burden to and totally dependent upon relatives or institutions;
- vii. the lack or inadequacy of a social as well as institutional environment in which someone may take leave of his relatives and friends peacefully;
- viii. the insufficient allocation of funds and resources for the care and support of the terminally ill or dying;
- ix. the social discrimination of the phenomena of weakness, dying and death.

8. The Assembly calls upon member states to provide in domestic law the necessary legal and social protection against these specific dangers and fears which a terminally ill or dying person may be faced with in domestic law, and in particular against:

- i. dying exposed to unbearable symptoms (for example, pain, suffocating, etc.);
- ii. prolongation of the dying process of a terminally ill or dying person against his or her will;

- iii. dying in social isolation and disintegration;
- iv. dying under the fear of being a social burden;
- v. limiting of life-sustaining treatment due to economic reasons;
- vi. insufficient provision of funds and resources for adequate supportive care of the terminally ill or dying.

9. The Assembly therefore recommends that the Committee of Ministers encourage the member states of the Council of Europe to respect and protect the dignity of terminally ill or dying persons in all respects:

a. by recognising and protecting a terminally ill or dying person's right to comprehensive palliative care, while taking the necessary measures

- i. to ensure that palliative care be recognised as a legal entitlement of the individual in all member states;
- ii. to provide equitable access to appropriate palliative care for all terminally ill or dying persons;
- iii. to ensure that relatives and friends be encouraged to accompany the terminally ill or dying and be professionally supported in their endeavours. If family and/or private networks prove to be either insufficient or overstretched, alternative or supplementing forms of professional medical care are to be provided;
- iv. to provide for ambulant hospice teams and networks, to ensure that palliative care be available at home, wherever ambulant care for the terminally ill or dying may be feasible;
- v. to ensure co-operation between all those involved in the care of a terminally ill or dying person;
- vi. to ensure the development and implementation of quality standards for the care of the terminally ill or dying;
- vii. to ensure that a terminally ill or dying person will receive adequate pain relief (unless the patient chooses otherwise) and palliative care, even if this treatment as a side-effect may contribute to the shortening of the individual's life;
- viii. to ensure that health professionals be trained and guided to provide medical, nursing and psychological care for any terminally ill or dying person in co-ordinated teamwork, according to the highest standards possible;
- ix. to set up and further develop centres of research, teaching and training in the fields of palliative medicine and care as well as in interdisciplinary thanatology;

- x. to ensure that specialised palliative care units as well as hospices be established at least in larger hospitals, from which palliative medicine and care are to evolve as an integral part of any medical treatment;
- xi. to ensure that palliative medicine and care be firmly established in public awareness as an important goal of medicine.
- b. by protecting the terminally ill or dying person's right to self-determination, while taking the necessary measures
- i. to give effect to a terminally ill or dying person's right to truthful and comprehensive, yet compassionately delivered information on his or her health condition while respecting an individual's wish not to be informed;
- ii. to enable any terminally ill or dying person to consult doctors other than his or her usual doctor;
- iii. to ensure that no terminally ill or dying person be treated against his or her will while ensuring that the individual neither be influenced nor pressured by another person. Furthermore, safeguards are to ensure that this wish not be formed under economic pressure;
- iv. to ensure that a currently incapacitated terminally ill or dying person's advance directive or living will refusing specific medical treatments be observed. Furthermore, by ensuring that criteria of validity as to the bearing of such advance directives as well as the nomination of proxies and the scope of their authority be defined; and by ensuring that surrogate decisions by proxies based on advance personal statements of will or assumptions of will are only to be taken if the will of the person concerned has not been expressed directly in the situation or if there is no recognisable will. In this context, there must always be a clear connection to statements that were made by the person in question close in time to the decision-making situation, referring specifically to the dying situation, and in an appropriate situation without exertion of pressure or mental disability. To ensure that surrogate decisions that rely on general value judgements present in society should not be admissible and that in case of doubt, the decision must always be for life and the prolongation of life;
- v. to ensure that — notwithstanding the physician's ultimate therapeutic responsibility — expressed wishes of a terminally ill or dying person with regard to particular forms of treatment be taken into account, provided they do not violate human dignity;
- vi. to ensure that in situations where an advance directive or living will does not exist the patient's right to life not be infringed upon. A catalogue of treatments which under no condition may be withheld or withdrawn is to be defined.
- c. by upholding the prohibition against intentionally taking the life of terminally ill or dying persons, while taking the necessary measures
- i. recognising that the right to life, especially with regard to a terminally ill or dying person, is guaranteed by the member states, in accordance with Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights which states that “no one shall be deprived of his life intentionally...”;

- ii. recognising that a terminally ill or dying person's wish to die never constitutes any legal claim to die at the hand of another person;
 - iii. recognising that a terminally ill or dying person's wish to die cannot of itself constitute a legal justification to carry out actions intended to bring about death.
-

Council of Europe / Conseil de l'Europe
F-67075 Strasbourg cedex (France)
Tél:+33/ 3 88 41 20 00
Fax: +33 / 3 88 41 27 76
Email: pace@coe.fr
<http://stars.coe.fr/>

Doc. 8421

21 May 1999

Protection of the human rights and dignity of the terminally ill and the dying

Report

Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee

Rapporteur: Mrs Edeltraud Gatterer, Austria, Group of the European People's Party

Summary

At the approach of death, patients are faced with specific fears, anxieties and dangers, which are most often ignored or underestimated. Their vulnerability, state of weakness and dependency, their suffering and loneliness are painful factors which weigh heavily on them.

Respect and protection of the dignity of a terminally-ill or a dying person implies above all the provision of an appropriate environment, enabling him or her to die in dignity. Priority should therefore be given to the development of palliative care and the treatment of pain, and to the social and psychological support of patients and their families.

Legal and social protection should be strengthened. In this framework, a right to self-determination and a right to comprehensive information, need to be recognised for the terminally-ill and the dying. Patients should never be given treatment against their will.

Lastly, the fundamental right to life as established in Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights needs to be recalled and fully guaranteed, in the special conditions which constitute the terminal phase of life. The report consequently calls on states to uphold the prohibition of intentionally taking the life of terminally-ill or dying persons.

I. Draft recommendation

1. The vocation of the Council of Europe is to protect the dignity of all human beings and the rights which stem therefrom.
2. Medical progress, which now makes it possible to cure many previously incurable or fatal diseases, the improvement of medical techniques and the development of resuscitation techniques, which make it possible to prolong a person's survival, defer the moment of death. As a result the quality of life of the dying is often ignored, as is their loneliness, their suffering and that of their families and of the care-givers.
3. In 1976, in its Resolution 613, the Assembly declared that it was "convinced that what dying patients most want is to die in peace and dignity, if possible with the comfort and support of their family and friends", and added in its Recommendation 779 that "the prolongation of life should not in itself constitute the exclusive aim of medical practice, which must be concerned equally with the relief of suffering".
4. Since then, the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine has formed important principles and paved the way without explicitly referring to the specific requirements of the terminally ill or dying.
5. The obligation to respect and to protect the dignity of a terminally ill or dying person derives from the inviolability of human dignity in all stages of life. This respect and protection find their expression in the provision of an appropriate environment, enabling a human being to die in dignity.
6. This task has to be carried out especially for the benefit of the most vulnerable members of society, a fact demonstrated by the many experiences of suffering in the past and the present. Just as a human being begins his or her life in weakness and dependency, he or she needs protection and support when dying.
7. Fundamental rights deriving from the dignity of the terminally ill or dying person are threatened today by a variety of factors:
 - i the insufficient access to palliative care and good pain management;
 - ii the often lacking treatment of physical suffering and psychological, social and spiritual needs;
 - iii the artificial prolongation of the dying process by either using disproportionate medical measures or by continuing treatment without a patient's consent;
 - iv the lack of continuing education and psychological support for health care professionals, working in palliative medicine,

- vi. insufficient care and support for relatives and friends of terminally ill or dying patients, which otherwise could elevate human suffering in its various dimensions,
- vii. the fear of patients to loose control of themselves and to become a burden to and totally dependent upon relatives or institutions;
- viii. the lack or inadequacy of a social as well as institutional environment in which someone may take leave of his relatives and friends peacefully;
- viii. the insufficient allocation of funds and resources for the care and support of the terminally ill or dying;
- ix. the social discrimination of the phenomena of weakness, dying and death.

8. The Assembly calls upon member states to provide in domestic law the necessary legal and social protection against these specific dangers and fears which a terminally ill or dying person may be faced with in domestic law, and in particular against:

- i. dying exposed to unbearable symptoms (e.g. pain, suffocating, etc);
- ii. prolongation of the dying process of a terminally ill or dying person against his or her will;
- iii. dying in social isolation and disintegration;
- iv. dying under the fear of being a social burden;
- v. limiting of life-sustaining treatment due to economic reasons;
- vi. insufficient provision of funds and resources for adequate supportive care of the terminally ill or dying.

9. The Assembly therefore recommends that the Committee of Ministers encourage the member states of the Council of Europe to respect and protect the dignity of terminally ill or dying persons in all respects:

a) by recognising and protecting a terminally ill or dying person's right to comprehensive palliative care, while taking the necessary measures

- i. to ensure that palliative care be recognised as a legal entitlement of the individual in all member states;
- ii. to provide equitable access to appropriate palliative care for all terminally ill or dying persons;
- iii. to ensure that relatives and friends be encouraged to accompany the terminally ill or dying and be professionally supported in their endeavours. If family and/or private networks prove to be either insufficient or overstretched, alternative or supplementing forms of professional medical care are to be provided;
- iv. to provide for ambulant hospice teams and networks, to ensure that palliative care be available at home, wherever ambulant care for the terminally ill or dying may be feasible;

- v. to ensure co-operation between all those involved in the care of a terminally ill or dying person;
 - vi. to ensure the development and implementation of quality standards for the care of the terminally ill or dying;
 - vii. to ensure that a terminally ill or dying person will receive adequate pain relief (unless the patient chooses otherwise) and palliative care, even if this treatment as a side-effect may contribute to the shortening of the individual's life;
 - viii. to ensure that health professionals be trained and guided to provide medical, nursing and psychological care for any terminally ill or dying person in co-ordinated teamwork, according to the highest standards possible;
 - ix. to set up and further develop centres of research, teaching and training in the fields of palliative medicine and care as well as in interdisciplinary thanatology;
 - x. to ensure that specialised palliative care units as well as hospices be established at least in larger hospitals, from which palliative medicine and care are to evolve as an integral part of any medical treatment;
 - xi. to ensure that palliative medicine and care be firmly established in public awareness as an important goal of medicine.
- b. by protecting the terminally ill or dying person's right to self-determination, while taking the necessary measures
- i. to give effect to a terminally ill or dying person's right to truthful and comprehensive, yet compassionately delivered information on his or her health condition while respecting an individual's wish not to be informed;
 - ii. to enable any terminally ill or dying person to consult doctors other than his or her usual doctor;
 - iii. to ensure that no terminally ill or dying person be treated against his or her will while ensuring that the individual neither be influenced nor pressured by another person. Furthermore, safeguards are to ensure that this wish not be formed under economic pressure;
 - iv. to ensure that a currently incapacitated terminally ill or dying person's advance directive or living will refusing specific medical treatments be observed. Furthermore, by ensuring that criteria of validity as to the bearing of such advance directives as well as the nomination of proxies and the scope of their authority be defined;
 - v. to ensure that - notwithstanding the physician's ultimate therapeutic responsibility - expressed wishes of a terminally ill or dying person with regard to particular forms of treatment be taken into account, provided they do not violate human dignity;
 - vi. to ensure that in situations where an advance directive or living will does not exist the patient's right to life not be infringed upon. A catalogue of treatments which under no condition may be withheld or withdrawn is to be defined.

c. by upholding the prohibition against intentionally taking the life of terminally ill or dying persons, while taking the necessary measures

i. to ensure that the right to life, especially with regard to a terminally ill or dying person, be guaranteed by the member states, in accordance with Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights which states that “no one shall be deprived of his life intentionally...”;

ii. to ensure that a terminally ill or dying person’s wish to die never constitutes any legal claim to die at the hand of another person;

iii. to ensure that a terminally ill or dying person’s wish to die never constitutes any legal justification to carry out actions intended to bring about death.

II. Explanatory memorandum by Mrs Gatterer

INTRODUCTION

1. It is undisputed that dealing with the concerns of the terminally ill or dying is to be guided by the notion of human dignity and the concept of human rights founded therein.
2. The 1997 European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with Regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine protects in accordance with other relevant international documents on human rights the dignity and identity of every human being. It guarantees everybody, without discrimination, respect for their integrity and rights and fundamental freedoms.
3. Dignity is bestowed equally upon all human beings, regardless of age, race, sex, particularities or abilities, of conditions or situations, which secures the equality and universality of human rights. Dignity is a consequence of being human. Thus a condition of being can by no means afford a human being its dignity nor can it ever deprive him or her of it.
4. Dignity is inherent in the existence of a human being. If human beings possessed it due to particularities, abilities or conditions, dignity would neither be equally nor universally bestowed upon all human beings. Thus a human being possesses dignity throughout the course of life. Pain, suffering or weakness do not deprive a human being of his or her dignity.
5. The equality and universality of human dignity and human rights do not originate from a convention. One possesses dignity and its subsequent rights not due to the recognition of other human beings, but due to one's descent from them.
6. An individual's dignity can be respected or violated, yet it can neither be granted nor lost. Respect for human dignity is independent of factual reciprocity. Respect for human dignity is also due where reciprocity is not, not yet or not anymore possible (i.e. towards patients in coma). To believe that human dignity may be divided or limited only to certain stages or conditions of life is a form of disregard for human dignity.
7. The recognition and protection of the dignity of the most vulnerable members of society – who may find it difficult to express themselves on a societal level – have proven to be inadequate. The terminally ill or dying are among these vulnerable members of society. Due to their public marginalisation they are in danger of being exposed to individual, social and societal pressure.
8. The responsibility of affording a terminally ill or dying person with the means and the infrastructure worthy of his or her dignity results from the fundamental understanding that human dignity is imperishable.
9. Among the factors obstructing humane dying and palliative care in our societies, the primary one is the decreasing willingness to confront oneself with death and dying.
10. Most people wish to die in familiar surroundings, yet, in Europe, in the majority of cases, death takes place in hospitals and nursing homes. This is related to lacking or deficient social structures.

11. Although palliative medicine and care have made remarkable progress, its practical application still appears far behind the state of the art. This deficiency results from lack of training and teaching, false apprehensions, prejudices as well as lack of societal awareness.
12. It is evident that there is a tendency to use excessive technical therapy and to apply inappropriately high medical technology even in cases where an agonising process of dying thereby is prolonged in an inhumane way.
13. Especially deficiencies in the structures of public health care providers create problems with regard to care for the terminally ill or dying.
14. Human care for the terminally ill or dying implies the readiness to provide sufficient allocations of funds and resources for the benefit of palliative medicine and care.
15. Illness, suffering and death per se cannot deprive any individual of his or her dignity, yet often, certain circumstances may be regarded as inhumane to the extent that an individual is left alone in his helplessness in those instances where suffering could be avoided.
16. Meeting the needs of a terminally ill or dying person is the purpose of palliative medicine and care. Palliative medicine and care therefore should become an integral part of medicine as such.
17. The World Health Organisation describes palliative care as “the active total care of patients whose disease is not responsive to curative treatment. Control of pain, of other symptoms and of psychological, social and spiritual problems is paramount. The goal of the palliative care is achievement of the best possible quality of life for patients and their families.”
18. Palliative medicine and care thus is an approach of understanding human being holistically in both its psychological and physical dimensions. In addition to pain-treatment in the narrower sense of the word, it therefore comprises psycho-social and spiritual care.
19. An individual’s right to self-determination is rooted in his inviolable and inseparable dignity. This right to self-determination is to be protected against any extraneous influences.
20. The legal systems of the Member States of the Council of Europe penalise the killing of human beings. Now, it is necessary to confirm this fundamental legal good especially with regard to the terminally ill and dying, since there is a grave danger that in particular with regard to this group of people at their last stage of life, justifications may be sought under various pretences (pity, shortage of resources, ambivalent expressions of will) in order to undermine the fundamental prohibition against taking life.

A. TO RECOGNISE AND TO PROTECT A TERMINALLY ILL OR DYING PERSON’S RIGHT TO COMPREHENSIVE PALLIATIVE CARE

21. The Member States are to pay special attention to making it possible to fulfil the wish of the majority of the terminally ill or dying to be able to die in a familiar surrounding. Ambulatory, flexible care services are to be supported. Socio-political programmes operating under given conditions are to enable children to accompany their parents in taking leave of this world as they themselves cared for their children when they entered into it.

22. Apart from the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and the Dignity of the Human Being with Regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine, article 13 of the European Social Charter also foresees equal access to health care services of appropriate quality. To guarantee this principle for the terminally ill or dying is a pressing need.
23. One important political goal of health services is to guarantee palliative medicine and care of appropriate quality. The humanity of a society finds its expression not least in its care of the weak and dying.
24. If a family desires to care for a dying person they often need professional advice and help. There is not only a need for medical and nursing assistance but also for psychological and, if wished, for religious and spiritual support. Familiar relations in the widest sense (family, friends, neighbours ...) as close and trusted contacts, are to be supported by professional services in such a way that they can adequately accompany the last phase of life at home. In this context the necessary measures must be taken to provide for instruction in basic care for this circle of persons.
25. The additional use of voluntary assistants play an important part in accompanying and caring for dying persons. Continuity and normality of life can be maintained through their contribution. Volunteers in the care of dying persons should be trained and supported and take over independent tasks in a team with professionals.
26. In numerous hospitals throughout Europe, relatives and friends or other involved persons are restrained from spending the amount of time they would wish to spend with a terminally ill or dying. Adequate infrastructures are thus to be provided enabling and enhancing the prudent inclusion of the familiar environment of a terminally ill or dying person, whose wishes are thereby to be given prevalence.
27. The goal of palliative medicine and care is to provide a comprehensive improvement in the quality of life of the patient while respecting his or her wishes. A necessary precondition in achieving this goal is the mutually trusting co-operation of all persons involved.
28. The goal of medical intervention is to cure illness and relieve pain, not however to prolong life at all costs. To relieve all suffering of persons who - at least by human standards - must be deemed terminally ill is one of a physician's obligations. The unbearable symptoms and pain of a patient should not be left untreated for fear of a minimal shortening of the life span which might be related to the therapy for the alleviation of pain. This fear is often the cause of inadequate efforts to relieve pain. In these difficult instances physicians are to be granted adequate discretionary powers.
29. Administrative barriers to providing an efficient pain relief treatment are to be removed.
30. All professions confronted with terminally ill or dying persons are to receive qualified instructions in the course of their duties. Forms of education and further training are to be preferred that are interdisciplinary and include - in addition to the medical or nursing fields - relevant aspects from psychology, sociology, anthropology, ethics or theology in order to be able to accept and respect persons in the last phase of life. Therefore, the education of physicians, nurses and other health professionals in all Member States of the European Council concerning palliative medicine and care has to be improved.

31. The degree of recognition of palliative medicine and care varies considerably throughout Europe. If there are still no or only inadequate educational facilities for palliative medicine and care no efforts should be spared in coming abreast with the state of the art. Palliative medicine and care as a discipline should be prominent in the programme of every educational institution for future health professionals. Graduates of these schools and universities should have successfully completed practical and theoretical examinations in the field of palliative medicine and care.

32. Since 1967, when the physician and social worker Cicely Saunders founded the modern hospice in England, there have been exemplary cases of adequate pain relief through the observant control of symptoms and attentive humane care that testify to the fact that it is possible to make the last phase of life worth living and to maintain human dignity: The hospice movement has spread – with varying density -throughout Europe as a grass-root movement. In contrast to the traditional hospital the hospice focuses its attention on the dying person in companionship with his or her closest relations. Supporting the foundation of further hospices is one effective way to provide for the care of the terminally ill or dying in accordance with human dignity.

33. A sufficient number of hospital wards and hospices must be established in order to make possible the education and further education in palliative medicine and care. Palliative medicine and care - as is the case with other fields as well - cannot be learned merely theoretically. Every student of medicine or nursing should be obliged to absolve a clinical practice in a ward dealing mainly with palliative medicine and care. This applies equally to the postgraduate training for physicians, psychologists, psychotherapists as well as social workers. These professions must learn that accompanying the terminally ill or dying can only be accomplished in an interdisciplinary team. As medical progress cannot exclude the care for the terminally ill and dying provisions must be made for research in the field of palliative medicine and care. For this reason as well it is necessary to establish further palliative wards and hospices.

34. Whenever killings of the terminally ill or dying in institutions have shaken the general public – as was the case in Austria, Germany, Denmark, the Netherlands, France and other countries – deficiencies in training and counselling and coaching of the responsible health care staff have regularly shown to be one of the main reasons for these incidents. This demonstrates that professional as well as voluntary health care staff are in need of support to fulfil their task. Support is to be provided in part by the interdisciplinary team (this needs sufficient time and space) and in part by staff counsellors and coaches.

35. Deficiencies in their training as well as the feeling of being overwhelmed by their task may mislead health care staff to contemplate taking the life of a terminally ill or dying person. The wish to die expressed by a terminally ill or dying person should therefore be thoroughly examined. Health care staff as well as the individual's family, friends or other involved persons are primarily obliged to determine whether this wish is the authentic expression of the individual's determination or rather a cry for more intensive therapeutic, social and spiritual attention.

The aims of this training should meet the following standards:

- palliative medicine and care affirm life and regard dying as a normal process,
- neither hastens nor postpones death,
- provides relief from pain and other distressing symptoms,
- integrates the psychological and spiritual aspects of patient care,
- offers a support system to help patients live as actively as possible until death, and
- offers a support system to help the family and other involved persons cope during the patient's illness in their own bereavement.

37. Research on palliative medicine and care is urgently needed. It should address the physical, psychological and socio-economic issues related to caring for people with terminal illnesses. Such research should address pain and other physical symptoms, depression and other mental health conditions, spirituality and existential meaning, communication between physician and patient, family and other involved persons, burdens on care-givers and economic hardships.

38. In the public discourse it is important to stress that palliative medicine and care need to become and stay an integral part of any medical teaching and training. Any medical therapy should comprise palliative components, palliative medicine and care, however, should not be implemented in isolation.

B. TO PROTECT A TERMINALLY ILL OR DYING PERSON'S RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

39. According to article 5 of the Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine any medical intervention is allowed only after the person in question has been fully informed about the projected intervention and has freely agreed to it. This is also the case with the terminally ill and dying.

40. Modern medical diagnosis and therapy can ease much pain and suffering when they are applied carefully and in accordance with the will of the individual in question. The medically possible does not, however, always correspond with the wishes of the terminally ill or dying person. The patient must be given the real - not the only theoretical - opportunity to refuse further therapy. However, in order to be able to participate meaningfully in the decision making, full information - about the illness itself, the assumed prognosis and the sense and objectives, the burdens and the goals of further diagnostic and therapeutic efforts - must be made comprehensible to the patient.

41. It is not unusual that fulfilling the basic rights of each person to all available information about his or her health condition presents difficulties. Most recent studies show that a significant number of physicians hesitate to provide comprehensible information with reference to diagnosis and further treatment. These explanations are often considered to be the most difficult and burdensome professional task because they are concerned not only with empathetically communicating medical information but also with providing help in making life-and-death decisions. Given the patients consent, his or her family or other involved persons should ideally be included in such consultations. In the interest of his or her self-determination, a terminally ill or dying person needs careful attention as the questions and anxieties with which he or she is concerned in this final phase of life.

42. A terminally ill or dying person can make a self-determined decision for or against a further life prolonging treatment only on the basis of truthful and comprehensible information as to his or her condition. Foregoing therapy instead of unwanted prolongation of suffering - when this is in accord with the wish of the patient - must be acceptable and legally guaranteed. The knowledge that a cessation of therapy can be legal and is strictly to be distinguished from "physician-assisted suicide" or "mercy killing" must be conveyed to professionals in the field of health.

43. Any pressure on the terminally ill or dying to forego therapy for economic reasons must be avoided. It has been empirically demonstrated, that the health costs in the last phase of life rise considerably. In view of the scarcity of funds and resources of both the health sector and, within that sector, for palliative medicine and care, there is a grave danger that instead of dignified support of a terminally ill or dying person economic pressure makes itself felt to forego further - and arguably appropriate - curative or palliative therapy.

44. While expressions of the will of a patient to forego certain treatments must be recognised and abided to by the physician, the wish for actively ending life must be denied. The physician must never impinge on the integrity of the body or soul of a patient even upon his or her wish.

45. The wishes of a terminally ill or dying person, the fulfilment of which is contrary to human dignity as well as relevant codes of professional conduct carry no weight. Article 4 of the Convention for the Protection of the Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with Regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine demands the observance of relevant codes of professional conduct (e.g. the World Medical Association Declarations of Madrid - 1987 and Marbella - 1992). Wishes of a terminally ill or dying person that are not in line with these codes of professional conduct are not to be executed. The following passage from the Madrid World Medical Association Declaration of 1987 maintains: "deliberately ending the life of a patient, even at the patient's own request or at the request of close relatives, is unethical. This does not prevent the physician from respecting the desire of a patient to allow the natural process of death to follow its course in the terminal phase of sickness."

46. Wishes such as those for "mercy killing" and "assisted suicide" are those that are illegitimately put to health care professionals. Such wishes are not to be executed, as they are in violation of ethically founded codes of professional conduct. The World Medical Association Marbella Declaration of 1992 maintains: "Physician-assisted suicide, ..., is unethical and must be condemned by the medical profession."

47. In order to preserve the right to self determination of those terminally ill or dying persons who are temporarily or permanently incapacitated, formerly expressed wishes regarding medical care should be taken into serious consideration. This conforms to article 9 of the Convention for the Protection of the Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with Regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine.

48. In the consideration of anticipated wishes and statements it must be distinguished between a refusal of treatment and other wishes regarding for example a specific treatment.

49. Wishes for a specific treatment, however, must be viewed from the standpoint of medical advisability, because a patient cannot expect a physician to initiate a treatment that does not conform to the standards of his or her profession. A patient cannot force a physician to undertake a treatment contrary to the rules of medical science or the ethics of the medical profession. Should a physician on the basis of his or her professional competence be convinced that it is necessary to act contrary to a written wish of a patient, then he or she should make a written explanation to clarify the decision for the patient, the patient's attorney, and his or her family.

50. In cases in which – due to factual incapacitation of the terminally ill or dying person – a surrogate decision becomes necessary this decision is to be taken to the patients welfare. Determination of the patients welfare is to be undertaken in a process of deliberation between those involved in the individual's care. Proxies, family or other involved persons may play an important part in this process. They should, however, remain simply interpreters and refrain from making independent value judgements. Their role in the decision making process must remain a subsidiary one which is overridden as soon as the patient decides him- or herself or as soon as the physician gains the impression that the views of the family are not in the interests of the dying person but are guided by extraneous interests.

51. Criteria of validity as to the bearing of such surrogate or proxy decisions are of particular relevance with reference to permanently incapacitated (e.g. permanently incapacitated persons such as the mentally disabled). For the protection of this particularly vulnerable group it appears essential to determine certain treatments that under no conditions may be withheld or withdrawn.

C. TO UPHOLD THE PROHIBITION AGAINST INTENTIONALLY TAKING LIFE ALSO WITH REGARD TO TERMINALLY ILL OR DYING PERSONS

52. The European Convention for Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms states in article 2 that “everyone’s right to life shall be protected by law. No one shall be deprived of his life intentionally...”.

53. The fundamental right to life and the prohibition of intentionally taking human life are to be upheld also under the special conditions of the terminal phase of an individual’s life. Dying is a phase of life. Thus the right to die in dignity corresponds with the right to a life in dignity. This principle of an unconditional protection of dignity is also reflected in the preamble of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Dignity of the Human Being with regard to the Application of Biology and Medicine: “Convinced of the need to respect the human being both as an individual and as a member of the human species and recognising the importance of ensuring the dignity of the human being”.

54. Guaranteeing the individual’s right to a life in dignity the Member States thereby acknowledge a right to die in dignity. A terminally ill or dying person has the right to self-determination as to the course of the process of dying, he or she, however, has no right to be killed.

55. The legal system prohibits the killing of a human being even if the killing is wished for by the individual. This applies to the elderly, the sick or the disabled and indisputable to the terminally ill or dying as well. Abating the prohibition to take a human being’s life with regard to the terminally ill or dying will bring incalculable consequences for the legal system. Inevitably individual or societal pressure on a terminally ill or dying person would mount, given that he or she is under the impression of being a burden while society offers the option of having oneself killed. Experiences in societies that have a lenient approach towards the prohibition against taking life show that in due consequence human beings are killed without their consent. This development undermines the fundamental protection of life and furthermore threatens to lead to the acceptance of annihilation of life deemed senseless.

Society recognises the practice and especially the ethics of the healing professions that nobody shall participate in the taking of the life of another human being.

57. A terminally ill or dying person’s wish to die constitutes no legal justification to have one’s life taken by another human being. Otherwise this would mean that the legal system would signal permission to kill another human being deliberately and actively.

58. Taking a patient's life is no therapeutic option, especially as it is not directed towards terminating the patients suffering but rather at terminating the patient himself.

59. With no claim to being complete this recommendation strives to promote measures for the protection of terminally ill or dying. The Council of Europe remains truthful towards its intention and ambition of protecting human rights with special awareness of the needs of the most vulnerable and weak members of society. Amongst the weakest members of society are the terminally ill or dying.

Reporting committee: Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee

Budgetary implications: none

Reference to committee: Doc. 7236, Reference No. 1996, 15.03.95

Draft recommendation adopted by the committee on 11 May 1999 with 19 votes in favour, 4 against and 4 abstentions

Members of the committee: Mr Cox (Chairman), Mr Weyts, Mrs Ragnarsdottir, Mr Gross (Vice-Chairs), Mrs Albrink, MM. Alis Font, Arnau, Mrs Belohorska, Mrs Biga-Friganovic, Mrs Björnemalm, Mrs Böhmer, MM. Christodoulides, Chyzh, Dees, Dhaille, Duivesteijn, Evin, Flynn, Mrs Gatterer, MM. Gibula, Gregory, Gusenbauer, Haack, Hancock, Hegyi, Mrs Høegh, Mrs Hornikova, Mrs Jirousova, Mr Kalos, Mrs Kulbaka, Mrs Laternser, Mr Liiv, Mrs Lotz, Mrs Luhtanen, Mr Lupu (Alternate: Mr Popescu), Mrs Markovska, MM. Marmazov, Martelli (Alternate: Mr Evangelisti), Mattéi, Mozgan, Mularoni, Mrs Näslund, MM. Niza, Paegle, Poças Santos, Mrs Poptodorova, Mrs Pozza Tasca, Mrs Pulgar, MM. Raskinis, Regenwetter, Rizzi (Alternate: Mr Polenta), Sharapov, Silay, Sincai (Alternate: Mr Paslaru), Skoularikis, Mrs Stefani, MM. Surján (Alternate: Mr Kelemen), Tahir, Valkeniers, Vella, Mrs Vermot-Mangold, MM. Volodin, Voronin, Wójcik, Yürür

NB: The names of those members present at the meeting are printed in italics.

Secretaries to the committee: Mr Perin, Mrs Meunier and Mrs Clamer

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 11 avril 2000CHARTE 4220/00*CONTRIB 95*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint une contribution du Conseil des communes et régions d'Europe (CCRE), en vue de l'audition du 27 avril 2000.^{1 2}

¹ CCRE: 14 rue de Castiglione. F-75001 Paris. Tél: +33-1-44 50 5959. Fax: +33-1-44 50 5960.
Bruxelles: 22-24 Rue d'Arlon. B-1050 Bruxelles. Tél: +32-2-511 7477. Fax: +32-2-511 0949.

² Texte du message a été transmis en français, en allemand et en anglais. Texte du "Le principe de subsidiarité" a été transmis en français uniquement.

CONSEIL DES COMMUNES ET REGIONS D'EUROPE

SECTION EUROPEENNE DE IULA

22.3.2000/cg

f:\encours\jacque\chartearchives\fr\04220.f0

CHARTRE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX

MESSAGE DU CCRE A L'ATTENTION DE LA CONVENTION

Réuni sous la présidence de Valéry Giscard d'Estaing à Sintra le 21 mars 2000, le Bureau Exécutif du CCRE :

- ◆ RAPPELLE son attachement à l'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux, socle d'une nouvelle Union européenne ;
- ◆ ESTIME indispensable que le statut qui sera accordé à cette Charte permette de renforcer concrètement les garanties dont disposent les citoyens européens dans le domaine de la protection de leurs droits, qu'ils soient politiques, économiques ou sociaux ;
- ◆ APPORTE son soutien aux travaux de réflexion actuellement conduits par la Convention, et notamment l'énumération des droits des citoyens européens ;
- ◆ INVITE la Convention à inclure, parmi ces droits fondamentaux des citoyens, sous une forme ou une autre, les principes essentiels de l'autonomie locale tels qu'ils sont définis par la Charte européenne de l'autonomie locale et à prendre en compte les aspirations au développement de l'autonomie régionale ;
- ◆ SUGGERE que des dispositions précisent les moyens juridiques adaptés permettant de garantir les droits de l'autonomie locale vis-à-vis des actes et décisions de l'Union européenne ;
- ◆ REDIT sa disponibilité à participer ,dans un esprit de partenariat, aux prochaines auditions de la Convention.

Congress of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe
Chamber of Local Authorities

Congrès des pouvoirs locaux et régionaux de l'Europe
Chambre des pouvoirs locaux

Strasbourg, 11 octobre 1999

CONF/ANC (99) 3

Groupe de travail
"Charte européenne de l'autonomie locale"

Conférence internationale

Les Chartes de l'autonomie locale et régionale du Conseil de l'Europe : la subsidiarité en action

Compétences et finances des collectivités locales et des régions

Ancone, Italie, 14-16 octobre 1999

"Le principe de subsidiarité -

Fondement de l'autonomie des administrations locales et régionales dans l'Union européenne"

1. Dr. Heinrich Hoffschulte
1er Vice-Président du Conseil des Communes et Régions d'Europe (CCRE), Président de la Section allemande du CCRE

"Le principe de subsidiarité -

Fondement de l'autonomie des administrations locales et régionales dans l'Union européenne"

A) En introduction: le contexte

1) Elargissement de l'Union européenne et proximité citoyenne

A l'heure actuelle, l'Union européenne compte quinze membres et environ 371 millions d'habitants. Un tel ordre de grandeur n'est a priori pas véritablement conciliable avec cette "proximité citoyenne" réclamée de toute part. Le contraste est d'autant plus frappant qu'il se situe à un moment où une, voire plusieurs étapes d'un nouvel élargissement sont très concrètement envisagées. En admettant que la première décennie du siècle et du millénaire à nos portes pourrait voir - et verra sans doute - adhérer douze à quinze nations, petites et grandes, l'Union européenne comptera prochainement un demi-milliard d'habitants. Les négociations sont engagées avec un premier contingent de candidats à l'adhésion¹, un second groupe² comprend certains pays qui prétendent être tout aussi bien préparés³. Si l'adhésion de Malte⁴ ne soulève aucune contestation, l'Union n'est quant à elle pas prête sur le plan institutionnel⁵. En effet, il est urgent de mettre en chantier un grand nombre de réformes internes afin de garantir le mode de fonctionnement de l'UE, dès lors que la prochaine admission de nouveaux membres "n'est pas simplement une adhésion de plus"⁶, mais que bien plus elle signifie une transformation tant quantitative que qualitative de l'Union⁷.

Or une Union de 500 millions d'habitants, plus encore que l'actuelle Communauté, est guettée par le risque d'impopularité auprès de citoyens la jugeant abstraite, lointaine, opaque. Risque d'autant plus réel que les milieux et les responsables de la politique nationale, et parfois même régionale, ont depuis longtemps pris pour habitude de "se décharger" sur Bruxelles, pour ainsi dire. Nombre de dysfonctionnements nationaux sont imputés à une Union jouant un rôle de "bouc émissaire" facile à accuser et peu enclin à se défendre. De même, rien n'est plus facile que d'expliquer la paralysie des réformes nationales en faisant remarquer qu'il serait impossible - ou à tout le moins peu souhaitable - de faire cavalier seul sur tel ou tel dossier, ne serait-ce que pour des raisons juridiques

¹ Il s'agit de l'Estonie, de la Pologne, de la Hongrie, de la République tchèque, de la Slovénie et de Chypre.

² Lettonie, Lituanie, Slovaquie, Bulgarie, Roumanie.

³ C'est ainsi que la Lettonie a vivement protesté parce qu'elle ne faisait pas partie du premier groupe, exigeant d'être placée sur un pied d'égalité avec l'Estonie, qui a atteint un stade incontestablement très avancé.

⁴ Dès 1990, Malte avait sollicité son adhésion en tant que membre à part entière, mais le gouvernement de gauche dirigé par le Premier ministre Sant, en 1996, avait "différé" cette demande, réactivée par le gouvernement démocrate-chrétien élu en septembre 1998 et dirigé par Fenech Adami, l'objectif déclaré étant l'adhésion d'ici à 2004.

⁵ D'après les règles habituellement appliquées jusqu'ici, Malte devrait avoir la faculté (par exemple comme le Luxembourg) d'être représentée par un membre à la Commission et par six députés au Parlement européen. Mais à un moment où un élargissement aussi important est à l'ordre du jour, l'Union ne souhaitera pas "prolonger" une telle pratique.

⁶ Cf. l'exposé exhaustif des problèmes et des questions en suspens, Wiczorek-Zeul, "Nicht einfach ein 'weiter Beitritt'", in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung du 18 août 1998, p. 11

⁷ La Commission a donc présenté avec "l'Agenda 2000" une base de travail résumant les réformes à mettre en chantier et les ficelant en un ensemble soumis à négociation.

tenant à la nécessité d'unifier les règles européennes. Vu l'imminence d'un élargissement concrètement envisagé, le risque est réel que l'élan intégrateur ne fléchisse, que la cohésion ne pâtisse d'un sentiment d'aliénation et de manque d'identité, voire que l'ensemble un jour ne se désintègre.

Si tous les intéressés ont en filigrane effectivement conscience de cet aspect, rares ont été pendant toutes ces années les tentatives sérieuses de le prendre à la racine. Au contraire, la réforme institutionnelle visée a échoué alors même que Maastricht allait marquer une étape décisive d'un parachèvement de l'union politique par le biais d'une union monétaire décidée et ancrée irrévocablement.

Ce n'est pas ici l'endroit pour examiner les étapes à suivre vers l'union politique. Mais force est de constater que dans "l'Euroland", pour reprendre le terme utilisé occasionnellement pour qualifier l'Europe communautaire, tous les hommes politiques n'ont de cesse d'invoquer à bon marché et en restant dans le flou une "proximité citoyenne" qui s'étendrait même à l'Union européenne, à ses organes et à sa politique concrète, par exemple les nombreuses directives et règlements, aussi judicieux soient-ils.

Dans le cas de l'Allemagne, au surplus, la Loi fondamentale postule expressément le dessaisissement d'une administration exécutive propre au niveau national. Aux termes de l'art. 30 GG (Loi fondamentale), "l'exercice des prérogatives de l'Etat et l'accomplissement des missions de l'Etat relèvent... de la compétence des Länder" dans la mesure où la Loi fondamentale n'admet ou ne prévoit pas expressément d'autres règles. Ce principe s'applique donc également aux missions de l'Union européenne dès lors que leur mise en œuvre incombe aux Etats membres. Rares sont les Etats membres ayant atteint un tel degré de décentralisation ou, plus précisément, rares sont les nations dont à tout le moins l'organisation interne de l'exécutif soit aussi clairement régie par le principe de subsidiarité.

Or les Länder (eux avant tout) font à leur tour largement appel aux villes, aux communes et aux districts. Puisque nous parlons de proximité citoyenne, il existe sous ce rapport une possibilité réelle, par le biais d'agents recrutés au niveau communal et placés sous la responsabilité de la commune, de pratiquer la proximité citoyenne sur le lieu même de la mise en application pratique, et du même coup de rapprocher l'Europe de ses citoyens dans l'exercice de l'autorité et la communication des décisions au jour le jour.

2) Intégration croissante : centralisme ou subsidiarité ?

Ce n'est pas un hasard si le Traité de Maastricht, tout en prévoyant l'achèvement de l'Union économique et monétaire et le lancement d'une monnaie unique, facteur important de l'intégration européenne, notamment d'un point de vue psychologique, s'est accompagné de l'invocation expresse du principe de subsidiarité de la part de l'Union. L'article 3 B de ce Traité⁸ réitère cette référence au principe de subsidiarité du préambule⁹, principe qu'il fait expressément porter sur les relations entre l'Union et les Etats membres. Sans doute l'objectif politique défini par cet article est-il très diversement apprécié¹⁰. Ainsi, il est souvent considéré en France comme une clause débouchant sur une extension des compétences de l'Union¹¹ ; de fait, la formulation du principe selon lequel les tâches dont les Etats ne peuvent eux-mêmes s'acquitter seront confiées à l'Union est l'autre face de l'interprétation exclusive qui en est faite en Grande-Bretagne, selon laquelle le transfert de compétences vers Bruxelles devrait être aussi réduit que possible. L'application et l'interprétation allemandes reflètent plutôt l'expérience nationale d'un principe agissant „dans les deux sens«¹².

⁸ L'actuel article 5 du Traité sur l'Union européenne.

⁹ Dans le préambule au Traité sur l'Union européenne, les parties contractantes se déclarent „résolues à poursuivre le processus de création d'une union sans cesse plus étroite des peuples d'Europe au sein de laquelle les décisions sont prises conformément au principe de subsidiarité et aussi près que possible des citoyens. En outre, le Traité d'Amsterdam précise en son art. 1 al. 2 : "Le présent traité constitue une nouvelle étape dans la réalisation d'une union sans cesse plus étroite des peuples d'Europe, dans laquelle les décisions sont prises aussi ouvertement et aussi près que possible des citoyens."

La notion de subsidiarité remonte à l'Antiquité (hellénique), mais elle est dans son acception actuelle marquée par la doctrine sociale de l'Eglise catholique des XIX^e et XX^e siècles, sur la base des encycliques du Vatican¹³. L'encyclique "Quadragesimo anno" de 1931, notamment, utilise des formules que les Etats et la Société des Nations avaient à l'époque en vue, mais qui ont inspiré le libellé du Traité de Maastricht¹⁴. Il n'est donc pas surprenant que les débats à propos de l'introduction du principe de subsidiarité aient été projetés de la politique italienne¹⁵ sur la scène européenne. Lors de l'élaboration du projet de constitution du Parlement européen de 1984¹⁶ - sous l'égide du député italien Altiero Spinelli -, les organes de la Communauté européenne engagèrent sur ce principe de subsidiarité une discussion qui déboucha sur l'art. 3 B.

¹⁰ Cf. Hort, "Am Ende steht das Wort", in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, avec des précisions sur la très grande diversité dans l'utilisation politique de la notion de subsidiarité.

¹¹ Cf.

¹² Ainsi, le Bundesrat a reconnu en 1995, dans la perspective de la préparation du Traité d'Amsterdam, que le principe de subsidiarité avait pour objet "non seulement une consolidation des Etats membres, mais aussi une extension des compétences de l'Union européenne" ; cité d'après le P^r Dammeyer, président du "Comité des Régions" (CdR) de l'UE, cf. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung du 18.07.1998, p. 5.

¹³ Sur les racines du principe de subsidiarité et son importance dans l'évolution juridique de l'UE, cf. M. Schmidhuber (alors Commissaire de la CE), "Le principe de subsidiarité dans le Traité de Maastricht", in DVBI 1993, 417 sq. et ib. in NVWZ 1992, 720 sq., Hoffschulte in "Autonomie des administrations communales et régionales dans l'Europe des régions - Du rôle du quatrième niveau dans l'Union européenne", in Knemeyer (dir. de publ.) "L'Europe des régions - L'Europe des communes", 135 sq. 150/151.

¹⁴ Cf. Pape Pie XI dans l'encyclique "Quadragesimo anno", notamment les chiffres 78 à 80, ainsi que le prolongement et l'actualisation de ces textes dans l'encyclique "Pacem in Terris", Pape Jean XXIII, du 11 avril 1963, notamment les chiffres 140 et 141. Cf. à ce sujet Hoffschulte op. cit., 151/152. De même, la "3ème encyclique sociale" ("Mater et Magistra"), Pape Jean XXIII, du 15 mai 1961, réitère le principe de subsidiarité, cf. notamment chiffre 53 id.

¹⁵ Cf. entre autres l'exposé très approfondi de Paolo Magagnotti, "Il Principio di Sussidiarietà nella Dottrina Sociale della Chiesa".

¹⁶ Le "projet Spinelli", ainsi nommé d'après le député italien Spinelli qui avait présidé un groupe de travail du PE chargé d'élaborer un projet de constitution. Spinelli était communiste à l'origine, et député communiste au Parlement italien, où il échangea ses points de vue avec Don Sturzo, député chrétien-démocrate et jésuite. En 1979, alors qu'il avait déjà rendu sa carte du Parti communiste italien, il était cependant l'un des candidats sur la liste du PCI lors des premières élections directes au PE, dont il fut l'un des parlementaires les plus considérés.

Ce principe du Traité de Maastricht s'applique-t-il également aux relations entre l'Union et les substructures des Etats membres ? Les arguments juridiques avancés sont controversés¹⁷. Mais la négation d'une telle applicabilité directe fait peu de cas du dynamisme de la formule politique dont Jacques Delors, longtemps président de la Commission européenne, n'a pas été le seul à souligner la force¹⁸. Cette négation est par ailleurs à courte vue parce que l'article F du Traité de Maastricht¹⁹ se greffe sur les structures et les traditions juridiques de l'Etat membre considéré, et qu'en outre l'art. 3 B du Traité sur l'Union européenne, l'actuel art. 5 du Traité CE, vise, du moins indirectement, le troisième et quatrième niveau de l'Union européenne, - en ce sens à structure fédérale -, et de ses membres. D'ailleurs, la Commission européenne, répondant pour son compte à une question expresse sur la ratification du Traité de Maastricht, s'est déclarée liée par le principe de subsidiarité, et de ce fait tenue dans son travail de respecter également les communes et les régions en tant que parties intégrantes des Etats membres lorsque sont présentés des règlements ou des directives intéressant les communes ou les régions²⁰. Et les Länder allemands, appuyés sur ce point par les fédérations des communes allemandes²¹, ont souscrit au même point de vue, estimant qu'aucune tâche à exécuter au sein de l'Union ne devait remonter au niveau européen dès lors que les communes et les régions sont généralement mieux à même de s'en acquitter²².

La formulation exacte de l'actuel art. 6 du Traité UE, et du texte qui l'avait précédé (art. 3 B), fit à l'époque l'objet d'âpres discussions, dont l'enjeu était en particulier de mettre les choses au clair en traçant une ligne de démarcation par rapport à ce qui aurait pu être une nouvelle "clause d'habilitation"²³ qui, en dernière analyse, signifierait une extension des compétences des organes de l'Union. Le 4 décembre 1991, le Gouvernement allemand, reprenant une proposition des chefs de

¹⁷ Cf. l'aperçu qu'en donne Schäfer, "Die deutsche kommunale Selbstverwaltung in der Europäischen Union", p. 285 sq., constatant en résumé que l'art. 3 B al. 2 du Traité CE établit un principe juridique qui n'est sanctionnable que dans certaines limites et qui ne saurait actuellement offrir aucune protection efficace contre les interventions communautaires dans l'autonomie administrative des communes des Etats membres.

¹⁸ Cf. les développements de Jacques Delors devant le Parlement européen in: Débats du PE, n° 3-424/160, 164 sq. du 18 novembre 1992. De même, le "Protocole de subsidiarité" du Traité d'Amsterdam, élaboré en 1997 à la demande allemande dans le prolongement des textes d'Edimbourg, parle d'un "concept dynamique" de subsidiarité.

¹⁹ L'actuel art. 6 du Traité sur l'Union européenne, complété à Amsterdam par un nouvel al. 3 : "L'Union respecte l'identité nationale de ses Etats membres."

²⁰ Cf. à ce propos Hoffschulte op. cit., 153/154

²¹ Cf. les propositions du RGRE (de la Section allemande du "Conseil des communes et des régions d'Europe) du 15 mai 1996 à propos du prolongement des décisions d'Edimbourg de 1992 (cf. infra) et la position de l'Union fédérale des Communes allemandes du 28 mai 1996 dans le cadre de l'audition des commissions en charge des affaires européennes au sein des deux chambres du Parlement allemand à propos du "Principe de subsidiarité dans l'UE" le 8 mai 1996, ainsi que...

²² ...la précédente déclaration du 26 novembre 1992 des Länder de la R.F.A. en préparation du Sommet d'Edimbourg (11 et 12 décembre 1992). Dans le même esprit, les chiffres 2 et 3 de la "Déclaration de Munich" du 27 octobre 1987 des Ministres-présidents - Conférence des Länder ; cf. notamment Knemeyer "Subsidiarité - Fédéralisme, décentralisation", DVBl 1990, 449 sq., 450 et Konow (secrétaire d'Etat à Düsseldorf), "A propos du principe de subsidiarité du Traité de Maastricht", DÖV 1993, 405 sq., 411.

²³ On redoutait une "habilitation" d'une simplicité semblable à ce que permettait l'ex-article 235 des Traités de Rome, c.-à.d. l'actuel art. 308 du Traité CE, fréquemment appliqué également pour étendre les compétences de Bruxelles.

gouvernement des Länder, avait donc présenté une version plus (re)strict(iv)e de la formulation de l'art. 3 B alinéa 2 du Traité UE ; mais cette version s'avéra impossible à faire passer²⁴.

L'avenir nous dira comment évoluera la pratique dans ce domaine. Certes, le Gouvernement allemand du Chancelier Helmut Kohl avait tenté de clarifier ce point lors du "Sommet de la subsidiarité" à Edimbourg²⁵, mais aussi en amont du Traité d'Amsterdam (1997) qui, tout en reprenant les dispositions du Traité de Maastricht l'ayant précédé, devait avoir pour objet de parachever, de clarifier et de compléter le Traité de 1992²⁶.

L'intensification des relations juridiques directes et indirectes entre l'Union européenne d'une part et les communes d'autres part est encore largement ignorée de larges secteurs de la vie publique²⁷. Ainsi, il y a plusieurs années déjà, alors que la Commission présentait un Livre blanc sur la réalisation du Marché intérieur, environ 120 des 286 projets institutifs de droit énumérés à l'époque concernaient le niveau communal. Si l'on passe en revue les organigrammes des municipalités ou des districts, en s'intéressant tout particulièrement aux agents qui appliquent le droit européen, on constatera que, dans la presque totalité des secteurs, les administrations communales transposent le droit communautaire - désormais appelé droit de l'Union - dans la vie quotidienne de nos concitoyens. De la qualité de l'eau potable aux directives concernant les caisses d'épargne en matière de droit bancaire, de la réglementation du trafic automobile et de l'immatriculation des véhicules à la législation relative aux plans d'aménagement des paysages, aux plans d'occupation des sols et aux plans d'urbanisme passés au crible du droit de l'Union pour s'assurer de leur compatibilité avec l'environnement, du droit de la médecine vétérinaire aux contrôles des denrées alimentaires qui, par suite de l'ouverture des frontières, touchent les produits de tous les pays, l'Europe est de plus en plus présente dans notre vie quotidienne, et par conséquent dans notre action au niveau communal.

A cela s'ajoutent de nombreux programmes de l'Union européenne conçus pour venir en aide à l'agriculture en mutation structurelle, ainsi qu'aux régions traditionnellement fondées dans le charbon, la sidérurgie, l'industrie navale et le textile. Des programmes comme RECHAR, RESIDER, RENAVAL, RETEX sont autant d'exemples de coopération entre les communes et l'Union européenne, et les régions transfrontalières telles que l'EUREGIO germano-néerlandaise élaborent avec Bruxelles des expertises structurelles et des programmes d'investissement dans le transfrontalier (INTEREG). Sans même parler de l'importance de l'aide régionale dans les Länder

²⁴ La teneur en était la suivante : "Dans les domaines qui sont réglementés dans le Traité et qui ne relèvent pas de sa compétence exclusive, la Communauté n'entre en action, conformément au principe de subsidiarité, que si et dans la mesure où les objectifs des mesures envisagées ne peuvent pas être suffisamment réalisés à l'échelon des Etats membres et de ce fait, en raison de leurs dimensions ou de leurs effets, peuvent être mieux réalisés au niveau communautaire." (Les passages en italique soulignent les conceptions alternatives les plus importantes du point de vue allemand).

²⁵ Cf. les "Lignes directrices pour l'application du principe de subsidiarité et de l'art. 3 B du Traité sur l'Union européenne" dans la version des "Conclusions du Conseil européen à Edimbourg les 11 et 12 décembre 1992", ainsi que les compléments du "Projet d'accord interinstitutionnel entre le Parlement européen, le Conseil et la Commission sur les procédures d'application du principe de subsidiarité."

²⁶ Cf. ladite "Clause de révision" du Traité de Maastricht sur l'Union européenne, art. N al. 2, qui spécifiait que 1992 serait l'année de convocation d'une nouvelle conférence intergouvernementale aux fins de révision du Traité, et qui de ce chef entraînait l'obligation d'engager des négociations, lesquelles aboutirent ultérieurement au Traité d'Amsterdam.

²⁷ Voir cependant à ce propos le compte rendu exhaustif de van Ameln dans cette publication.

issus de l'ex-RDA, où il n'est guère de communes qui ne fonctionnent sans les aides de l'Union européenne²⁸.

Mais alors, s'il est incontestable que les règles de droit et les programmes de l'Union européenne exercent, tant directement qu'indirectement, une influence croissante non seulement sur les Etats nationaux, mais aussi sur leurs substructures et sur les collectivités territoriales²⁹, il ne peut à la vérité subsister la moindre raison de douter que le même principe de subsidiarité doive régir également les rappports de la Communauté d'une part avec les organes de l'administration et de l'autonomie des communes et des régions d'autre part³⁰.

Mieux, on est en droit d'affirmer que l'idée fondamentale de subsidiarité, une fois ancrée dans le droit constitutionnel de l'Union, si elle doit bien s'appliquer aux rapports avec les Etats nationaux, doit d'autant plus („à plus forte raison“) régir les relations avec les régions et les collectivités territoriales, et cela pour une double raison : d'une part, l'article 30 GG (Loi fondamentale), replacé dans le cadre de l'Union européenne, aboutit pour ainsi dire automatiquement, - du moins en Allemagne -, à ce que les Länder (et les villes constitutives de Länder), représentent le niveau sur lequel porte le droit européen directement applicable (règlements)³¹ ; d'autre part, on voit surgir ici l'autre approche de la subsidiarité, fondamentalement différente de l'objectif de la décentralisation, une assimilation erronée faite dans la plupart des pays ; si l'adoption du principe de subsidiarité, plus encore que dans l'évolution qu'a connue jusqu'ici l'Union européenne, s'accompagne d'une réflexion sur l'éventualité et l'admissibilité juridique d'un transfert de missions et de compétences „du bas vers le haut“³², les raisons de transférer au niveau européen les missions pouvant généralement être accomplies par les régions et les collectivités territoriales seront moins invocables encore que cela n'est d'ores et déjà le cas des missions et des compétences situées au niveau national³³.

²⁸ Le 28 janvier 1998, en faisant une "Communication sur un projet de 'Programme d'action en vue du développement durable des villes'", la Commission a fourni un exemple d'actualité illustrant l'intensité de l'intervention et de l'action dans le domaine relevant des tâches communales ; cf. van Ameln op. cit.

²⁹ Cf. l'exposé éloquent de Habertzettel-Roth-Schläger "L'Europe dans les mairies - Répercussions de la législation européenne sur les communes". Les auteurs examinent à simple titre exemplatif ces effets sur le droit électoral des communes, la législation en matière d'énergie, la passation de marchés, la culture, la politique d'environnement et la politique structurelle.

³⁰ Cf. la proposition de compléter en ce sens l'art. 3 B, l'actuel art. 5 du Traité CE, Hoffschulte, pp. 157/158, id. in "Autonomie administrative des communes et des régions dans l'Allemagne de l'après-Maastricht" in „L'Europe pour les politiques au niveau communal« (Fondation de formation à la politique communale (1994), p. 9 sq., pp. 33-34.)

³¹ Ce à quoi ne s'oppose pas le fait que, dans le cas d'une exécution défailante de la part de l'Union, seul l'Etat national, c'est-à-dire en l'espèce le Gouvernement fédéral, peut être mis en accusation par-devant la CJCE puisqu'il doit s'agir sur ce point de faire observer les traités.

³² Sur le principe de subsidiarité comme "principe structurel" des rapports Etat - communes, cf. Knemeyer, Importance et configuration du principe de subsidiarité en Allemagne, manuscrit du 18 juin 1993, p. 9 sq.

³³ Sur le principe de subsidiarité eu égard par exemple à la politique structurelle de l'UE ou de la CE, cf. Derenbach, "Politique structurelle européenne: fonds structurels et programmes d'action ayant une incidence sur les communes". Manuscrit (pour la Conférence des Landkreise) d'août 1993, p. 15 sq. Derenbach met l'accent sur la décentralisation systématique, même à l'intérieur des Etats membres, et sur "l'interface" avec l'échelon communal.

Cependant, il n'échappera à personne que les demandes de subventions ont plutôt pour effet d'amollir la résolution des intéressés sur cette question, et à cet égard de contrarier plus souvent qu'il ne le faudrait l'application consécutive du principe de subsidiarité. Naturellement, cela vaut surtout pour les Etats membres plus faibles économiquement qui, dans l'espoir d'obtenir une aide de Bruxelles, ne sont que trop enclins à appeler de leurs vœux l'intervention de la centrale européenne. Mais cela vaut aussi dans une mesure croissante pour le rôle des régions, et même des communes : dans de nombreux cas, il y va d'aides financières à des projets de développement régionaux ou même locaux qui, si l'UE restait davantage en retrait, pourraient parfaitement rentrer dans le cadre de la subsidiarité et faire l'objet d'une péréquation financière régionale ou nationale, ou de programmes de soutien à l'échelon national. Les fréquents débats sur la délimitation des domaines bénéficiaires d'une aide illustrent le problème de manière très éclairante : pris isolément, un problème peut être énorme pour une ville, une commune ou une région ; considéré d'un point de vue européen et „converti« à l'échelle du pays où il se situe, il apparaît souvent convenir davantage à une intervention régionale, ou nationale dans les cas extrêmes³⁴. Le Sommet de Berlin, début 1999, a démontré éloquemment combien il était après coup difficile de redresser la situation.

La politique agricole de l'UE est - sous ce rapport - un domaine dans lequel, même depuis Maastricht, on hésite beaucoup à se demander s'il ne vaudrait pas mieux, pour des raisons d'efficacité et de moyens à mobiliser, intervenir sur le plan national, ou même régional, pour aider des structures et des secteurs spécifiques en difficulté, à tout le moins dans le cas de mutations structurelles et d'aides aux entreprises, et non pas d'interventions à grande échelle et de flux financiers ayant plutôt pour effet de cimenter les structures en place. La réforme financière de l'UE, au programme des deux prochaines années, nous réserve sans doute quelques surprises en termes de subsidiarité et de retour des responsabilités au niveau national. Les arguments ne manquent pas en faveur d'une "renationalisation" partielle du financement agricole préalablement à l'élargissement de l'UE, comme le montre une circonstance remontant à plusieurs années déjà, et dans laquelle les premiers pas de la réforme agraire se soldèrent pour l'agriculture allemande par des réductions qui, à brève échéance (et aussi sous la pression des gouvernements des Länder du sud de l'Allemagne) conduisirent au déblocage de ressources fédérales correspondantes³⁵. Les débats récurrents autour de la nécessité de réductions budgétaires de l'UE, le plus souvent assortis du refus contre toute logique de s'accommoder d'une diminution correspondante de ses propres ressources (par exemple dans l'agriculture), portent à croire qu'il s'est agi là d'un cas plutôt exceptionnel d'application - financière - du principe de subsidiarité.

Une question importante concerne en outre les effets de l'impératif de proportionnalité que le Traité de Maastricht fait dériver du principe de subsidiarité dans le cas d'interventions et de répercussions sur l'autonomie administrative des communes et dans les conditions de l'art. 5 al. 3 du Traité CE³⁶.

³⁴ C'est ainsi que les Etats riverains de la Méditerranée, redoutant du fait de l'unification de l'Allemagne une diminution des aides leur provenant, eurent pour première réaction de rejeter les problèmes des nouveaux Länder sur "l'opulente" Allemagne, à leurs yeux suffisamment puissante pour résoudre seule ces problèmes. Il fallut l'intervention énergique du Chancelier allemand, et l'assurance concomitante que les anciens bénéficiaires ne subiraient aucun désavantage, pour que les Länder de l'ex-RDA fussent mis sur les programmes d'aide de l'UE.

³⁵ Il était alors question de réaffectations budgétaires d'un montant de 3 milliards de DM.

³⁶ L'ex-article 3 B du Traité sur l'Union européenne, qui stipulait : "Les mesures de la Communauté n'excèdent pas ce qui est nécessaire pour la réalisation des objectifs du présent Traité."

Avant même Maastricht, ce principe dominait l'ordre juridique de la Communauté³⁷. En cette matière, la CJCE a souligné que „les moyens choisis pour la réalisation du but visé doivent être appropriés et ne peuvent excéder les proportions requises à cet effet.»³⁸

Les annexes au Traité d'Amsterdam ont donné une orientation décisive à cet impératif de proportionnalité³⁹. De ce principe de proportionnalité découlent les critères d'adéquation, de nécessité et d'appropriation qui, entre autres, peuvent parfaitement être invoqués pour protéger les communes⁴⁰. Toutefois, la protection⁴¹ assurée par cet alinéa 3 de l'art. 5 du Traité CE prendra davantage la forme d'une prise d'influence politique dès lors que le Comité des régions pourra invoquer cet article lors de la mise en consultation de documents et de projets de directives et de règlements. De même, les Etats membres ont de plus en plus tendance à se réclamer de ce principe afin de repousser des réglementations trop détaillées. Dans ses délibérations, le Parlement européen jouit des mêmes prérogatives, en particulier lorsque le Comité des régions a souligné les interventions ou les effets prévisibles.

B) De l'importance et de l'application futures du principe de subsidiarité et de la proximité citoyenne en Europe

Ni le cadre ni le moment présents ne conviennent à l'exposé des instruments disponibles pour renforcer le rôle des communes ou des régions dans le sens de la subsidiarité. Les résultats obtenus au fil des ans sont étonnamment abondants, que ce soit au Conseil de l'Europe ou dans l'Union européenne.

S'agissant du Conseil de l'Europe, nous mentionnerons à simple titre d'exemple : l'adoption de la "Charte de l'autonomie communale", signée par 37 des 41 Etats membres, et déjà ratifiée par pas moins de 30 d'entre eux ; la mise en place d'un Congrès des Pouvoirs locaux et régionaux de l'Europe doté de deux chambres ; l'efficacité croissante d'une procédure de "monitoring", de la part de la Chambre des communes, servant à contrôler l'avancement de la mise en pratique de la Charte de 1985 et l'évolution de l'autonomie administrative des communes dans les Etats membres ; l'incalculable contribution du Conseil de l'Europe et du Congrès à la démocratisation "par le bas" des Etats d'Europe centrale et de l'Est grâce à la mise en place, dans les anciens Etats centralisés, d'une autonomie administrative améliorée sur le plan local et régional, etc.

Pour l'Union européenne, il s'agit avant tout de la création d'un "Comité consultatif des Pouvoirs locaux et régionaux" auprès de la Commission de la CE, à un moment où le Conseil des ministres croyait encore pouvoir exclure les communes et les régions ; ensuite, avec le Traité de Maastricht, son renforcement et sa transformation en "Comité des collectivités locales et régionales", aujourd'hui abrégé en CdR (Comité des régions) un peu par paresse (et au détriment des intérêts des communes) ; l'intégration du principe de subsidiarité dans le Traité de Maastricht, principe auquel le Conseil d'Edimbourg allait peu après donner corps ; la revalorisation du CdR au

³⁷ Cf. Kutscher, "Principe de proportionnalité", p. 89 sq. et, à la même source, la mention de la jurisprudence de la CJCE ; voir également Langguth in Lenz, art. 3 B, numéro en marge 12 n.

³⁸ Cf. par ex. Rs. C-426/93 (Allemagne c/ Conseil), Jurispr. 1995, I. p. 3723 sq.

³⁹ Cf. les développements pour la proportionnalité in Chiffre 6 du „Protocole relatif à l'application des principes de subsidiarité et de proportionnalité« annexé au Traité d'Amsterdam in EU-Nachrichten, documentation n° 3, p. 47 sq., 48.

⁴⁰ En ce sens, voir par ex. Schäfer, op. cit., p. 282.

⁴¹ Schäfer op. cit., p. 284, fait observer à juste titre qu'il ne peut en découler aucune protection juridique.

niveau d'interlocuteur du Parlement européen par le Traité d'Amsterdam ; le partenariat effectif entre l'UE et les régions, mais aussi les communes, dans le cadre des programmes d'aide et de développement régional, où la concrétisation pratique des programmes, très souvent et parfois même mieux que dans la politique nationale, a été décentralisée et reconvertie en procédure "bottom-up" ("du bas vers le haut"), conformément au principe de subsidiarité ou de "proximité".

Le Sommet européen de Cologne a chargé un groupe de travail composé d'experts indépendants - choisis à dessein en dehors d'appareils gouvernementaux et nationaux hésitants - d'élaborer d'ici à la fin 2000 un projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux des citoyens européens. Est restée en suspens la question de savoir si les conclusions seraient intégrées aux Traités de Rome⁴², par exemple dans la section du Traité de Maastricht instituant pour la première fois une citoyenneté de l'Union⁴³, revendication appuyée par de nombreuses parties, allemande notamment. D'autres tentèrent d'y faire obstacle, voulant se ménager la possibilité d'en rester à une "Déclaration solennelle", semblable par exemple à celle que les organes de la CE firent en leur temps pour proclamer que la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme était désormais un "droit commun" à tous les membres, qui s'engagèrent à le respecter, sans qu'il fût préalablement nécessaire de modifier les traités. L'expérience a montré qu'il ne pourrait s'agir là que d'un intermède peu satisfaisant, ne pouvant, même dans le cas de la déclaration d'alors, résister à la pression politique qui déboucha sur une institutionnalisation dans les traités.

Dans ce contexte, il conviendrait de saisir l'occasion et de tout mettre en œuvre pour que soit atteint l'objectif d'une formalisation de la protection de l'autonomie administrative des communes et des régions. Pour ce faire, il existe un quadruple "levier" :

- Le droit à l'autonomie administrative des communes est un droit fondamental des citoyens (exercé par leurs représentations). Une charte des droits des citoyens devrait aussi dégager et souligner les niveaux auxquels le citoyen lui-même peut encore prendre ses droits en mains. Vu sous cet angle, l'exercice communautaire des droits fondamentaux est en soi un droit fondamental essentiel, que doit reconnaître une charte des droits fondamentaux inspirée par le principe de subsidiarité, et protéger contre les interventions abusives et les atteintes disproportionnées à l'autonomie administrative régionale et locale de la part l'UE et de ses organes.
- Dans le contexte de l'élargissement du Conseil de l'Europe par suite du changement de régime en Europe centrale et de l'Est, tous les candidats à l'adhésion ont dû signer et ratifier deux (des nombreuses) conventions du Conseil de l'Europe : la Convention des droits de l'homme et la "Charte de l'autonomie de l'administration communale" du Conseil de l'Europe de 1985. La première, du fait de la mention expresse des droits de l'homme dans le Traité de Maastricht (1992) est de facto devenue une part du droit constitutionnel de l'UE. [(Ainsi, le préambule parle de "l'engagement (des Etats membres) de respecter les droits de l'homme et les libertés fondamentales". L'art. 6 al. 2 Traité UE (ex-art. F de Maastricht) dispose : "L'Union respecte les droits fondamentaux, tels qu'ils sont garantis dans la Convention européenne pour la défense des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950...". Et depuis Amsterdam, l'art. 6 al. 1 Traité UE précise en outre : "L'Union repose sur les principes de la liberté, de la démocratie, du respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales ainsi que de l'Etat de droit ; ces principes sont communs à tous les Etats membres.")]

⁴² Cf. Rengeling, „Une Charte des droits fondamentaux« in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung du 21 juillet 1999.

⁴³ Les actuels art. 8 sq. du Traité CE.

- Il faut que cette incorporation réussie d'une convention du Conseil de l'Europe s'étende également à la "Charte communale" ! Compte tenu que tous les 15 membres de l'UE ont signé la Charte communale depuis 1985, même si la France et la Belgique ne l'ont pas encore ratifiée, alors que même la Grande-Bretagne, qui avait longtemps refusé de signer, a fini par signer et ratifier la Charte (1997/98). Sur un nombre d'actuellement 41 Etats membres, 37 ont signé la Charte communale (31 l'ayant ratifiée), l'art. 6 al. 1 du Traité UE complété à Amsterdam vaut donc également pour cette Charte : "Ces principes sont communs à tous les Etats membres."
- Si l'on considère au demeurant que le même art. 6 Traité UE ajoute depuis Amsterdam : "L'Union respecte l'identité nationale de ses Etats membres", la conséquence en est là aussi, - du moins en République fédérale d'Allemagne et en Autriche, pour ne citer que des Etats où une large autonomie de gestion des communes et des régions revêt une grande importance constitutionnelle, sociale et politique -, que l'Union est tenue de respecter cette autonomie comme faisant partie de "l'identité nationale", et qu'elle n'est donc pas habilitée, sans motif contraignant, à restreindre davantage que les Etats eux-mêmes ne le font (ne peuvent le faire) les deux formes de responsabilité et d'autonomie citoyennes. Ce serait en même temps tenir compte du fait que, dans plusieurs Etats membres, pour ne pas dire dans la plupart, l'autonomie administrative régionale et locale a une longue histoire qui correspond à ce que l'al. 2 du même art. 6 Traité UE circonscrit comme "les traditions constitutionnelles communes aux Etats membres en tant que principes généraux du droit communautaire« que l'Union s'engage à respecter.

Dans le même sens, on citera l'observation de Benjamin R. Barber, politologue américain et conseiller du Président Clinton⁴⁴ : "Dans les milieux du Fonds monétaire international, de l'industrie internationale du divertissement, de l'OTAN ou de la Commission européenne, le citoyen n'a plus aucun poids." L'un de ses projets vise donc à "familiariser progressivement avec des processus de décision démocratiques les participants à des initiatives communales." D'après Benjamin Barber, "la participation aux décisions reste cantonnée au niveau communal, alors que l'exercice du pouvoir est de plus en plus centralisé." Et d'ajouter : "Plus la politique s'éloigne de la base, plus la démocratie (!) se porte mal."⁴⁵ En son temps, Jean-Jacques Rousseau avait fait la même remarque, observant que le citoyen perd d'autant plus d'argent que s'éloigne de lui la gestion de taxes et d'impôts ensuite redistribués avec de grandes pertes, et que son mécontentement vis-à-vis de l'Etat n'en sera que plus vif. Pourquoi devrait-il en être autrement dans une Union européenne élargie ?!?

Naturellement, je serais très heureux que vous puissiez intégrer ces réflexions et objectifs aux avis qui devront être prochainement élaborées. Nul doute qu'un vote du Comité des Régions en ce sens pèserait d'un grand poids. Par ce biais, le CdR réaffirmerait résolument les exigences et les objectifs qui avaient été les siens jusqu'alors ; d'ailleurs, les Länder allemands ont déjà défendu la même cause à Amsterdam. Simplement, par égard envers les Etats membres hésitants sur ce point, il ne faut jamais cesser de répéter qu'il ne s'agit pas d'intervenir dans les structures internes, - serait-ce uniquement pour des raisons liées à la subsidiarité -, mais que les communes (comme les régions) doivent être mises à l'abri d'autres interventions, restrictions et sollicitations de la part de l'UE et de ses organes. Cela s'inscrirait logiquement dans le prolongement du principe de subsidiarité. Mais il en irait avant tout du respect de „l'identité nationale des Etats membres« (art. 6 al. 3 Traité UE).

⁴⁴ Cf. Focus 19/1999 du 10 mai 1999.

⁴⁵ Il convient de faire remarquer que d'après Focus (op. cit.), ce politologue américain entretient "de bons contacts avec Roman Herzog, président de la R.F.A.", que le Chancelier Schröder, d'après la même source, a prié de participer en tant que représentant de l'Allemagne et expert au groupe de travail chargé d'élaborer un projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux entre l'automne 1999 et la fin 2000.

Dans le même esprit, le Conseil des communes et des régions de l'Europe négociera avec les membres du Parlement européen, d'autant plus qu'il élabore un Livre blanc sur la mise en pratique effective du principe de subsidiarité.

Les principaux objectifs et exigences des communes et des régions européennes peuvent se résumer comme suit :

- Sans les communes et les régions, la proximité citoyenne dans l'Union européenne est irréalisable. L'autonomie des administrations locales et régionales doit être d'autant plus renforcée que l'UE s'élargit, ce qui permettra ainsi de rapprocher les citoyens du fonctionnement quotidien de l'UE et de son droit communautaire.
- L'autonomie administrative des communes, nonobstant la multiplicité de ses traditions et de ses formes dans les divers pays, constitue un droit fondamental et communautaire des citoyens dans une Europe de liberté⁴⁶. Une garantie formelle de l'autonomie administrative doit en constituer le pendant dans le droit communautaire⁴⁷.
- Dans ses traités, l'Union européenne doit à l'avenir reconnaître la "Charte de l'autonomie administrative des communes" du Conseil de l'Europe (1985) comme droit commun à l'Union et à ses Etats membres, ce qui apparaît un prolongement logique compte tenu de la réussite de la Charte au cours des 10 dernières années.
- Une future Charte des droits fondamentaux des citoyens de l'UE doit également protéger le droit à l'autonomie citoyenne vis-à-vis de l'Union et de ses organes.
- L'application par les organes de l'Union du principe de subsidiarité régissant également leurs relations et normes juridiques vis-à-vis des régions et des communes, c'est-à-dire l'application du droit matériel de la garantie d'autonomie administrative, doit se développer conformément aux protocoles annexés au Traité d'Amsterdam.
- Le droit des communes, de leurs groupements représentatifs ou du CdR d'ester en justice en cas de violation de ces deux principes et garanties.
- Le renforcement de l'autonomie administrative des communes et des régions reste toutefois un défi permanent au sein des Etats membres. L'autonomie ne pourra être protégée au niveau européen que si elle reflète non seulement les traditions nationales, mais aussi la pratique quotidienne des Etats membres.
- L'assistance et le soutien dans la mise en place d'administrations autonomes et efficaces au niveau local et régional des nouveaux Etats démocratiques de l'Europe centrale et de l'Est restera pendant une génération au moins une mission importante pour tous les Etats, aussi bien dans l'UE que dans le Conseil de l'Europe.

⁴⁶ Cf. art. 6 Traité UE (complétant l'art. F du Traité de Maastricht) : "L'Union repose sur les principes de la liberté, de la démocratie, du respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales ainsi que de l'Etat de droit ; ces principes sont communs à tous les Etats membres."

⁴⁷ L'art. 6 al. 3 du Traité UE dispose : "L'Union respecte l'identité nationale de ses Etats membres." Voir également l'avis du Bundesrat sur le Traité d'Amsterdam, 28 novembre 1997, Section II.

- La procédure du Conseil de l'Europe visant à contrôler l'avancement de l'autonomie administrative des 41 Etats membres est à cet égard l'un des instruments les plus importants dont le perfectionnement devra se poursuivre.

Conclusion :

La force de l'Europe tient à sa diversité. Le rôle futur des communes et des régions de l'Union européenne de la génération à venir devra refléter cette diversité et la faire valoir. Une Union vaste et puissante, comptant alors un demi-milliard de "citoyens européens", cherchera son identité dans cette diversité, elle devra par conséquent respecter et conforter l'autonomie et la responsabilité locales et régionales si elle veut à son tour être acceptée comme une unité nécessaire.

Subsidiarité et proximité citoyennes impliquent par ailleurs que "l'Europe des citoyens" soit une Europe des régions et des communes - sous peine d'échouer. Il s'agit là d'un élément irremplaçable, d'un trait caractéristique de la nouvelle identité européenne.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNION

fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 12. April 2000

CHARTE 4223/00

CONTRIB 98

ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend die vorläufige Stellungnahme der "European Co-operation in Anthroposophical Curative Education and Social Therapy" (ECCE).^{1 2}

¹ ECCE: Baarnseweg 5. NL-3735 MK Bosch en Duin. Tel: +31-30 692 7199.

 Fax: +31-30 692 7190.

² Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

European Co-operation in Anthroposophical Curative Education and Social Therapy

Secretariat:
Baarnseweg 5
NL-3735 MK Bosch en Duin
Telephone: + 31 30 692 71 99
Telefax : + 31 30 692 71 90
ING-Bank Zeist Nr. 69 09 28 416
Postbank Nr. 6560961

Beauftragter für EU-Grundrechte
Hellmut Hannesen
Schloßstr. 9
61209 Echzell
Tel 0049 6035 81190
Fax 0049 6035 81217
Verband.anthr@t-online.de

An die Europäische Union

Konvent für Grundrechte

7.4.2000

Sehr geehrter Herr Prof. Dr. Herzog, Sehr geehrte Damen und Herren,

Die Europäische Kooperation für anthroposophische Heilpädagogik und Sozialtherapie umfasst Verbände von Angehörigen behinderter Menschen sowie Verbände von Einrichtungen in zehn Ländern der europäischen Union.

Wir beobachten die Schaffung von europäischen Grundrechten mit großem Interesse und möchten uns in den laufenden Prozess mit der folgenden Stellungnahme einbringen.
Ergänzungen anhand der weiteren Entwicklung bleiben vorbehalten.

Wir sind gerne bereit , unsere Positionen bei einer Anhörung persönlich zu vertreten.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Hellmut Hannesen
(Beauftragter für EU-Grundrechte)

Beauftragter für EU-Grundrechte:
Hellmut Hannesen
Verband.anthr@t-online.de

Stand: 2000-04-07

Vorläufige Stellungnahme zur Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

1. Würde des Menschen

Der Schutz der Menschenwürde wird in Artikel 1, Charta 4149/00 vom 2000-03-08 kurz aber eindeutig festgelegt. Zum Schutz der Menschenwürde gehören auch das Thema Bioethik (siehe unten 2) und ein Mindestmass an sozialer Sicherung (siehe unten 5).

2. Recht auf Leben

In Artikel 2 (4149/00) heißt es: „Jede Person hat das Recht auf Leben“. Besser wäre hier die gleiche Wortwahl wie in Artikel 1 („Würde des Menschen“), da von einigen Vorden-kern der Bioethik zwischen Mensch und Person unterschieden wird.

In Artikel 2, Fassung 2000-02-15 (Charta 4123/1/00) wurde in Absatz 2 zusätzlich ge-regelt: „Jeder hat das Recht auf körperliche, psychische und genetische Unversehrtheit.“ Zu Absatz 2 wurde außerdem eine ausführliche Alternativfassung vorgeschlagen, die die aktuellen Themen der Bioethik behandelt.

Dies ist in der Fassung vom 2000-03-08 in einen Artikel 3 eingegangen. Dort fehlt die „genetische Unversehrtheit“. Immerhin sind aber in Absatz 2 einige Aspekte der Bioethik geregelt, wie Verbot eugenischer Praktiken, Verbot des Klonens von Menschen usw.

Hier sollte ein Zusatz eingefügt werden: „Medizinische Forschung ist nur zulässig, wenn der Betroffene selbst wirksam eingewilligt hat.“

3. Nichtdiskriminierung

Im Entwurf vom 2000-02-24 (4137/00) gab es einen „Artikel 19 Nichtdiskriminierung“, in dessen Aufzählung auch Behinderung enthalten war. Diese Bestimmung sollte im neuen Entwurf wieder aufgenommen werden.

4. Familie und Kinder

In Artikel 9 in der Fassung vom 2000-02-15 (4123/1/00) wurde auf den „rechtlichen, wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Schutz der Familie“ und speziell auf den „Schutz des Kindes“ hingewiesen.

Wegen aktueller Gefährdungen durch vorgeburtliche Praktiken sollte das Lebensrecht jedes Kindes besonders betont werden: „Jedes Kind hat ein Recht auf Leben“. (Dies gehört systematisch in Artikel 2 der Fassung vom 2000-03-08.)

Das Aufwachsen der Kinder ist aber heute ebenfalls gefährdet durch Umweltzerstörung, Einfluss der Massenmedien, Lärm, Technisierung usw. Deshalb ist eine Benennung dieses Schutzbedürfnisses angebracht.

5. Soziale Sicherung

In den Grundrechten sollten nicht nur individuelle Rechte enthalten sein, sondern auch ein Mindestmaß an sozialer Solidarität normiert werden, etwa in folgender Formulierung:

- 1) Jeder hat ein Recht auf menschenwürdige Existenz und die dazu erforderlichen materiellen Mittel.
- 2) Die Gesellschaft bekennt sich zu solidarischer Hilfe und zur Teilhabe aller am allgemeinen Wohlstand.
- 3) Bei der Gewährung sozialer Leistungen ist das Recht auf Selbstbestimmung und auf freie Wahl von Angeboten und Diensten zu achten.

Da der Sozialstaat eine Entwicklung der neueren Zeit ist, fällt es schwer die wesentlichen, grundrechtlichen relevanten Aspekte kurz und knapp zu fassen. Anliegen ist hier, einerseits auf eine Verpflichtung der Gemeinschaft hinzuweisen, dass ein menschenwürdiger sozialer Standard (Mindestmaß!) gewährleistet werden muss, andererseits muss deutlich gemacht werden, dass die Freiheit der Lebensgestaltung und Selbstbestimmung auch gegeben sein muss, wenn ein Mensch auf finanzielle oder sachliche Hilfe der Gemeinschaft angewiesen ist (Pflege, Betreuung, ambulante Dienste usw.). Er darf dann nicht ein Objekt der Bürokratie und Sozialplanung werden. Z.B. muss er zwischen unterschiedlichen Therapierichtungen der Medizin wählen können (z.B. Homöopathie) oder soziale Dienste von Trägern mit unterschiedlicher Konzeption und Arbeitsmethode.

Da es sich teilweise um ein Freiheitsrecht handelt, könnte dieser Teil auch bei dem allgemeinen Recht auf persönliche Freiheit bzw. Entfaltungsfreiheit angesiedelt werden.

In der Charte 4193/00 vom 29.3.2000 sind gute Vorschläge für die soziale Sicherung enthalten. Es fehlt aber die wichtige Regelung über Selbstbestimmung und Wahlmöglichkeiten auf diesem Gebiet.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 12. April 2000CHARTE 4224/00*CONTRIB 99*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend eine Stellungnahme des Forum Menschenrechte zur Grundrechtscharta. ^{1 2}

¹ AG EU-Grundrechtscharta des Forum Menschenrechte: c/o FIAN, Overwegstr. 31.
D-44625 Herne. Tel: +49-2323-490099. Fax: +49-2323-490018. E-mail: fian@fian.de
² Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

FORUM MENSCHENRECHTE

Stellungnahme zur EU-Grundrechtscharta

Das FORUM MENSCHENRECHTE begrüßt den Beschluss des Europäischen Rates vom Juni 1999, eine Charta der Menschen- und Bürgerrechte auszuarbeiten, wie wir schon 1997 gefordert haben.¹

Transparenz und Partizipation

Der Europäische Rat hat dem Konvent, der die Grundrechtscharta ausarbeiten soll, jedoch einen sehr engen Zeitplan gesetzt: schon im Oktober 2000 will der Konvent seinen Entwurf vorlegen, im Dezember soll die Grundrechtscharta vom Europäischen Rat "feierlich erklärt" werden. Dies lässt uns daran zweifeln, dass die immer wieder eingeforderte starke Bürgerbeteiligung zum Tragen kommt. Ein transparenter und partizipativer Prozess kann nicht so aussehen, dass von den 350 Millionen EU-Bürgern gerade mal ein paar Dutzend Experten an diesem Prozess beteiligt sind. Dies wird sich auch nicht durch die Internetseite des Rates (<http://ue.eu.int>) ändern.

Als Zusammenschluß von 40 Menschenrechtsorganisationen in Deutschland ist es dem FORUM MENSCHENRECHTE wichtig, angesichts der wachsenden Macht der EU-Institutionen die Rechte der Einzelnen zu stärken.

Verbindlichkeit

Dieser Grundrechtsschutz kann nur gewährleistet werden durch eine Charta, die für alle Organe und Behörden der EU sowie ihrer Mitgliedsstaaten unmittelbar verbindlich gilt. Dies gilt gerade auch in Hinblick auf die neu hinzukommenden Bereiche der gemeinsamen Außen- und Sicherheitspolitik und der Innen- und Justizpolitik. So muß z.B. im Bereich der Militärpolitik die Gewissensfreiheit von Kriegsdienstverweigerern geschützt werden.

Die Charta muß in den Vertrag selbst aufgenommen werden, damit die in ihr verankerten Menschen- und Bürgerrechte durch die einzelstaatlichen Gerichte und letztlich durch den EuGH, zu dem die Bürger direkt Zugang haben, nachprüfbar sind. Eine bloße Proklamation der Grundrechtscharta wäre ohne Rechtsverbindlichkeit eher kontraproduktiv und würde nicht zu der angestrebten Identifikation der Menschen mit der EU beitragen.

Es muß Ziel sein, einen Großteil der in der Grundrechtscharta verankerten Rechte allen Menschen zuzusprechen und nur einige ausgewählte Rechte den Unionsbürgerinnen und -bürgern vorzubehalten. Das Grundrecht auf diplomatischen und konsularischen Schutz muß auch auf anerkannte Asylbewerber ausgedehnt werden, da diese den Schutz des Herkunftslandes nicht mehr in Anspruch nehmen können. Gleichzeitig darf das Asylrecht Staatsangehörige der EU-Mitgliedsstaaten auf keinen Fall ausschließen.

Das Verfahren zur Einschränkung der in der Charta verankerten Menschen- und Bürgerrechte muß so ausgestaltet werden, dass das Europäische Parlament massgeblich beteiligt ist.

¹ Siehe Dokumentation des Kongresses "Für ein Europa der politischen und sozialen Rechte", Materialien Nr. 8

Den Grundrechtesschutz stärken

Keine Neuformulierung einer Charta zum Schutz der Menschen- und Bürgerrechte kann im 21. Jahrhundert auf die Berücksichtigung neuer Probleme und Gefahren verzichten, wie z.B. Umweltprobleme, informationelle Selbstbestimmung und Bio- und Gentechnologie. Eine bloße Kodifizierung bereits bestehender Grundrechte reicht deshalb nicht aus.

Dabei dürfen die Errungenschaften aus früheren Zeiten nicht vergessen werden. Wir möchten auf vier Bereiche aufmerksam machen, in denen nach Stand der aktuellen Diskussion ein Rückschritt droht: wirtschaftliche und soziale Menschenrechte, das Menschenrecht auf Asyl, das Verbot der Todesstrafe und Minderheitenrechte.

Wirtschaftliche, soziale und kulturelle Menschenrechte

Die Unteilbarkeit der Menschenrechte gehört zu den Grundlagen der Menschenrechtsidee auf denen die internationalen Menschenrechtserklärungen aufbauen. In Kontinuität dieser Tradition wurde auf der Wiener Menschenrechtskonferenz 1993 festgestellt: "Alle Menschenrechte sind universell, unteilbar, bedingen einander und hängen miteinander zusammen". Diese Grundübereinkunft hat in den letzten Jahren zu einer erheblichen Stärkung der Anerkennung wirtschaftlicher, sozialer und kultureller Menschenrechte geführt. In den neuen Verfassungen der letzten 15 Jahre werden wirtschaftliche und soziale Menschenrechte selbstverständlich und gleichberechtigt integriert.

Wir wenden uns gegen das Missverständnis, dass die Durchsetzung wirtschaftlicher, sozialer und kultureller Menschenrechte den Aufbau eines zentralen Versorgungsstaates erfordert. Vielmehr geht es dabei um die Schaffung und Sicherung sozialer und wirtschaftlicher Teilhabe. Der Staat hat in dieser Hinsicht Verpflichtungen auf drei Ebenen: die Respektierungspflicht, die Schutzpflicht und die Gewährleistungspflicht. Da das Gemeinschaftsrecht grundsätzlich dem nationalen Recht vorausgeht, ist eine Bindung der gesetzgebenden und ausführenden Organe auf EU-Ebene und in den Mitgliedsstaaten an die Respektierung der wirtschaftlichen, sozialen und kulturellen Menschenrechte zwingend notwendig. Die Respektierung dieser Menschenrechte muß auch Grundlage in der Beziehung zu Drittstaatenangehörigen und für alle Menschen einklagbar sein. Sozial benachteiligte Personen haben das Recht auf besondere Unterstützung. Ziel muss es sein, die wirtschaftlichen, sozialen und kulturellen Menschenrechte als Maßstab für politisches Handeln im Auge zu haben, auf nationalstaatlicher wie auf europäischer Ebene. Um dies zu gewährleisten, müssen die wirtschaftlichen, sozialen und kulturellen Menschenrechte Bestandteil der Grundrechtscharta werden, basierend auf den Internationalen Pakt über wirtschaftliche, soziale und kulturelle Menschenrechte.

Das Menschenrecht auf Asyl

Die Frage nach dem Maßstab für politisches Handeln stellt sich zur Zeit insbesondere in der Weiterentwicklung einer gemeinsamen Innen- und Justizpolitik. Grundlage für diese Politik bietet der Amsterdamer Vertrag, der am 1. Mai 1999 in Kraft trat. Bis zum Jahr 2004 sollen zentrale Bereiche der Asyl- und Migrationspolitik Gemeinschaftsrecht werden, das für alle EU-Mitgliedsstaaten bindend sein wird.

Bedeutend ist die Frage nach dem Maßstab für politisches Handeln deshalb, weil der Vertrag von Amsterdam zwar eine weitgehende Verlagerung der Asyl- und Migrationspolitik auf den ersten Pfeiler anstrebt, es aber unterlassen wurde, wirkungsvolle Mechanismen der demokratischen und gerichtlichen Kontrolle bereits für die fünfjährige Übergangszeit zu installieren. Durch die Beibehaltung des reinen Anhörungsrechts für das Europäische Parlament und durch die geringen Kontrollmöglichkeiten des Europäischen Gerichtshofes bleibt es bei der untragbaren Situation, daß Regierungen im Rat als Legislative beschließen und zu Hause als Exekutive die Regelungen umsetzen, ohne einer demokratischen Kontrolle unterworfen zu sein.

Der Schutz vor Verfolgung ist ein bedeutender Rechtsfortschritt im System des allgemeinen Menschenrechtsschutzes seit 1948. Die Entwicklung des Flüchtlingsrechts bildete sich gegen vielfältige staatliche Widerstände heraus. Sein Aushöhlung ist vorprogrammiert, wenn der Flüchtlingsschutz allein, wie im Fall der EU, vom staatlichen bzw. politischen Willen der Regierungen abhängig wird. Der völkerrechtliche Bezugsrahmen des Flüchtlingsrechtes, der höhere Rang des internationale Flüchtlingsschutzes als besondere Form des allgemeinen Menschenrechtsschutzes ist ins Zentrum zu rücken. Die Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention wird zu Recht als Magna Charta des Flüchtlingsrechtes bezeichnet. Insgesamt haben 137 Staaten die Konvention ratifiziert. Alle Mitgliedsstaaten der EU sind Unterzeichnerstaaten der Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention.

Dieser völkerrechtliche Mindeststandard bildet außerdem die Grundlage für die europäische Gestaltung des Asyl- und Flüchtlingsrechtes. Auf dem Sondergipfel in Tampere sind die Staats- und Regierungschefs der EU "... übereingekommen, auf ein Gemeinsames Asylsystem hinzuwirken, das sich auf die uneingeschränkte und allumfassende Anwendung der Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention stützt²".

Die Zukunft des europäischen Asylrechts hat Auswirkungen nicht nur auf den Menschenrechtsstandard in Europa, sondern auch weit darüber hinaus, wie Jean Noel Wetterwald, Vertreter des UNHCR kürzlich feststellte: “Die zukünftige EU-Asylpolitik wird maßgeblich auch darüber entscheiden, wie im nächsten Jahrhundert das internationale Schutzsystem für Flüchtlinge überhaupt aussehen wird. Die politisch Verantwortlichen müssen sich bewußt sein: Die Wertegemeinschaft Europäische Union steht hier in der Verantwortung für einen Grundwert, nämlich für die Institution des Asyls, deren Einrichtung man durchaus auch nach den Erfahrungen in diesem Jahrhundert als Antwort der Zivilisation auf die Barbarei begreifen kann.”

Ein grundrechtlich garantiertes Recht auf Asyl und eine Rechtsschutzgarantie sind die beste Garantie dafür, daß die Europäischen Union und ihre Mitgliedsstaaten ihren völkerrechtlichen Verpflichtungen gerecht werden. Die Rechtsweegegarantie ist das Rückgrat des modernen Rechtsstaates. Die Aufnahme des Flüchtlingsschutzes in die Grundrechtscharta ist die beste Gewähr, daß die EU ihren eigenen Ansprüchen gerecht würde. Der Text der Charta sollte unbedingt einen expliziten Verweis auf die Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention enthalten.

² Schlussfolgerungen des Vorsitizes - Europäischer Rat Tampere . Oktober 1999

Das Verbot der Todesstrafe und der Folter

Ebenfalls explizit verankert werden muß das Verbot der Todesstrafe und der Folter. Die Verankerung des Verbots der Todesstrafe und der Folter muß unabhängig von Spekulationen über eine Wiedereinführung der Todesstrafe als ein Menschenrecht in der Charta verankert werden. Mit einer Grundrechtscharta, die das Verbot der Todesstrafe und der Folter nicht explizit enthält, würde die EU ausserdem die Bemühungen um ein weltweites Verbot der Todesstrafe und der Folter negativ beeinflussen.

Das Prinzip des individuellen Abschiebeschutzes entsprechend der Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention und der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention muß in die Charta aufgenommen werden. Hier muß ein Verweis auf das Verbot der Todesstrafe und der Folter erfolgen.

Minderheitenrechte

“Niemand darf wegen seiner Rasse, Abstammung, Nationalität, Sprache, seines Geschlechts, seines Alters, seiner sexuellen Identität, seiner sozialen Herkunft oder Stellung, seiner Behinderung, seiner religiösen, weltanschaulichen oder politischen Überzeugung bevorzugt oder benachteiligt werden.” Die besonderen Bedürfnisse von Minderheiten müssen im Sinne der Gleichbehandlung Eingang in der EU-Grundrechtscharta finden. Denn Minderheiten sind Bestandteil einer jeden Gesellschaft. Minderheiten werden immer wieder Opfer von Diskriminierungen, die von Intoleranz bis hin zu physischer Vernichtung reichen.

Das A und O des Minderheitenschutzes ist das Prinzip der Gleichbehandlung. Das daraus abgeleitete Diskriminierungsverbot muss für die EU-Bürgerinnen und Bürger wie für Drittstaatenangehörige in gleicher Weise gelten. Richtig verstanden bedeutet Gleichbehandlung, dass Personen, die wegen ihrer Zugehörigkeit zu einer Minderheit Nachteile erlitten haben, eine besondere Unterstützung zusteht. Dies gilt für alle Minderheiten, seien sie ethnische, sprachliche, religiöse oder soziale Minderheiten.

Unbewältigte Minderheitenfragen, wie die Missachtung von sprachlichen Minderheiten, gibt es sowohl in den EU-Mitgliedsstaaten als auch in den Ländern, die der EU möglichst bald beizutreten wünschen. Die Aufnahme von Minderheitenrechten in die Grundrechtscharta würde klar signalisieren, dass sich die künftige Politik der EU am Schutz von Minderheiten und an dem Prinzip der Nicht-Diskriminierung ausrichtet. Dies schließt insbesondere die Respektierung und den Schutz sowie die Förderung der Minderheitensprachen ein.

Für eine glaubwürdige Menschenrechtspolitik

Die EU-Grundrechtscharta wird Auswirkungen haben auf die internationale Menschenrechtsdiskussion, insbesondere auf die konzeptionelle Weiterentwicklung der wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Menschenrechte, auf das Asylrecht, das Verbot der Todesstrafe und auf den Umgang mit Minderheiten. Hier wird die EU ihre Glaubwürdigkeit als ein politisches Gebilde, das sich an den Menschenrechten orientiert, beweisen müssen. Nur dann sind menschenrechtliche Klauseln in internationalen Verträgen überzeugend.

Die EU muss in Zukunft eine kohärente und konsequente Menschenrechtspolitik betreiben: nach außen und nach innen.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 12 April 2000CHARTE 4226/00*CONTRIB 101*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a submission by the Confederation of British Industry (CBI).^{1 2}

¹ CBI: Centre Point, 103 New Oxford Street. London WC1A 1DU. Tel: +44-0171-379 7400.
Fax: +44-0171-240 1578.

² The message has been submitted in English only.

Director-General
Digby Jones

Confederation of British Industry
Centre Point
103 New Oxford Street
London WC1A 1DU
Switchboard: 0171 379 7400
Facsimile: 0171 240 1578
Website: <http://www.cbi.org.uk>

CBI SUBMISSION TO THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS DRAFTING CONVENTION

The Confederation of British Industry (CBI) is the voice of British business, representing more than 250,000 employers, large and small, industrial and commercial.

Introduction

1. The CBI supports the European Council's objective of making the existing recognised fundamental rights and freedoms more visible to European citizens, thus promoting a culture of rights and responsibilities across the European Union.
2. We believe that EU member states already participate in a successful system of rights protection, and that the Charter should complement and not compete with this system. The best way of adding value to existing rights, instruments and systems is through a Charter that:
 - highlights the existing rights and freedoms which are generally recognised as fundamental within the EU but does not attempt to create new rights; and
 - clarifies the existing rights system, but does not undermine it.
3. This submission concentrates on the question of economic and social rights as this is the locus of the business community. The CBI is concerned that a Charter which seeks to extend beyond existing fundamental rights and complicate the existing system of rights protection could prove very damaging to the interests of European business and European citizens.

The Charter should highlight the existing rights and freedoms which are generally recognised as fundamental within the EU

4. The European Union already has an effective system for the protection of fundamental human rights, guaranteed by member states' adherence to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) and by the European Treaties.
5. There is however a strong case for a Charter to:

- set out the fundamental values that all EU member states share at the start of the 21st century;
 - make visible to EU citizens the existing fundamental rights and how they are justiciable.
6. A high profile Charter will help reinforce the European culture of rights – which benefits European businesses as well as citizens.
7. For this to achieve wide acceptance – including in the business community - the Charter must:
- focus on existing fundamental rights; and
 - complement the existing rights protection system.

The Charter should focus on existing fundamental rights

8. The Charter should focus on the existing rights and freedoms which are generally recognised as fundamental and inalienable within the EU such as the dignity of human beings, the right to life, to liberty and security and the right to a fair trial. There are certain social rights which are equally fundamental; equal treatment between men and women, the freedom to choose and engage in an occupation are, for example, clearly recognised as legal rights by member states and individuals.
9. Other social rights, such as the right to rest periods and annual leave, the right to parental leave, and certain rights to workers' information and consultation are well-established in EU legislation. They are however of a different nature to the above fundamental rights. They are limited and qualified employment rights. They are not fundamental or universal; they could be modified should the Directives that established them be reviewed, and they are therefore not inalienable rights. The inclusion in the Charter of these rights would devalue the notion of fundamental rights.

The Charter should complement the existing rights protection system

10. The CBI supports the idea of a declaratory Charter clearly setting out the status and scope of the fundamental rights which are currently recognised by the EU. We have welcomed the UK Government's proposal of a two-part document, the first part identifying the existing rights in clear and simple language for maximum impact, the second explaining the nature and scope of those rights and pointing to the appropriate source instrument and existing enforcement mechanisms.
11. This is the best way to add value to existing rights, instruments and systems, without prejudice to legal certainty. It also offers a more flexible means of highlighting rights within a wider context than would a legally binding text, which would be very difficult to agree given Member States' differing approaches.

The Convention should not seek to create new fundamental rights or new legal mechanisms for enforcement

12. Many organisations have argued that the Charter should both increase the scope of fundamental social and economic rights and ensure that they are included in the EU Treaties. We set out below why this approach is:

- wrong in principle as new rights should only be created through inter-governmental negotiations;
- potentially deeply damaging European businesses in practice should political aspirations be construed in fundamental rights; and
- likely to undermine the existing rights protection system should the Charter become legally binding.

The Convention should not bypass the normal EU decision making process by creating new fundamental rights

13. Fundamental rights are special. They are a recognition of the critical importance of an independent judiciary in protecting universal and inalienable rights. They are superior law to which all actors and legislation must conform. Placing this enormous responsibility on an unelected judiciary is reasonable only in certain cases, where rights are truly fundamental.

14. Creating new fundamental rights must therefore be done only after very serious consideration. To allow judicial review at the European level of decisions taken by national or local governments risks taking decisions out of the hands of democratically elected politicians which are rightly their responsibility.

15. Creating new fundamental rights should not be the aim of the Charter and is not the approach intended by the European Council. The Charter should not bypass the normal EU decision making process by creating new fundamental rights across EU member states. The balance of rights between the European institutions and the Member States should only be altered by governments through inter-governmental negotiations.

16. Business rejects suggestions to include in the Charter the rights in respect of workers' information and consultation, collective bargaining and action, or training. Although certain rights to workers' information and consultation are well-established in EU legislation through the collective redundancy Directive and the European works councils Directive, these are qualified and limited employment rights in specific circumstances. No fundamental, unqualified right to information and consultation of workers is recognised in the EU. Similarly, issues such as collective bargaining or training have traditionally been the responsibility of member states, in accordance with the subsidiarity principle. All member states make some provision for the use of collective agreements. However, laws and practice in relation to collective bargaining and industrial action vary considerably across member states. There is no common basis for a fundamental right. There is no legal right to vocational training currently recognised at EU level.

Political aspirations construed as fundamental rights would be damaging

17. The distinction established by the European Council at Cologne between fundamental rights and policy objectives is a vital one. Political aspirations, particularly on economic and social issues, must be recognised as such and not given legal status. The Charter should not reproduce the confusion caused by an indiscriminating use of the word ‘right’ in earlier EU texts such as the 1989 Community Charter. Political aspirations must not become ill-defined justiciable ‘rights’.
18. Turning political aspirations into legal rights would also potentially breach the subsidiarity principle. The social and employment chapters of the Treaties have already set out the powers of the Union to act on a European level. The Member States have specifically excluded the topics of pay, right of association, as well as the right to strike or impose a lockout from EU legislative competence. For example, a ‘right to fair remuneration’ would potentially jeopardise member states’ responsibility for and effective control over wages policy, breaching the subsidiarity principle. These are aspirations all member states share. But it is equally clear that member state governments have taken the view that these aspirations can only be delivered at national or local level.
19. This is not just an important point of principle. It also has major practical implications as, unlike other genuinely fundamental rights, these aspirations would be almost impossible to interpret in practice by a Court, generating uncertainty for businesses. For example:
 - It is not clear how ‘fair remuneration’ could sensibly be decided by the European Court of Justice. Wage policies should reflect national economic and political conditions – any ‘one size fits all’ EU level approach could cause significant increases in unemployment in some European countries.
 - Adequate social protection is also a policy objective, which is mainly the responsibility of national Governments, not an EU level legal right. The difficulties of determining what an adequate level of social security provision would be in a legal sense are compounded by the variety of social protection systems across the EU.
20. If incorporated into the Treaties, these aspirations would allow judicial review by the European Court of national policy. Decisions would have direct effect, requiring member states to make immediate changes to national and local legislation.

The Convention should not seek to create new legal mechanisms for enforcement

21. The CBI believes that a legally binding Charter, effectively transferring jurisdiction over core fundamental rights from the Human Rights Court at Strasbourg and national courts to the European Court of Justice, would undermine the existing rights system and create legal uncertainty.

22. The Strasbourg Court – which has jurisdiction over the ECHR - has developed a balanced approach to the interpretation and protection of fundamental rights over fifty years. In particular it has interpreted civil and political rights which have application in the employment context - such as the right to freedom of expression or the right to freedom of assembly and association - sensitively, in line with national differences. The ECJ's experience is of a different nature; it is one of harmonisation, through the creation of common standards of interpretation.
23. The CBI agrees with the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, who have underlined the potential risks of creating a parallel human rights jurisdiction through the ECJ. Overlaps of jurisdiction between the Strasbourg Court and the European Court of Justice would lead to different interpretations of fundamental rights, creating legal uncertainty. It would also create a two-speed system between EU members and the rest of the non-EU members of the Council of Europe, weakening the latter. The Charter should not bring into question the responsibilities of the existing European Courts.

Conclusion

24. The CBI supports the idea of a declaratory Charter, without legally binding effect, setting out clearly the fundamental rights which are currently recognised by the EU. We believe this is the best way to add value to existing rights and instruments, without prejudice to legal certainty. As we have highlighted, the Convention should not seek to create new fundamental rights or new legal mechanisms for enforcement

April 2000

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 18 April 2000CHARTE 4228/00*CONTRIB 102*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a submission by the Initiative "Netzwerk Dreigliederung", submitted with a view for the public hearing on the 27th of April 2000 in Brussels.^{1 2}

¹ Initiative "Netzwerk Dreigliederung": Büro Strawe, Haußmannstr. 44a, G-70188 Stuttgart.
Tel: +49-0711 23 68950. Fax: +49- 0711 23 60218. E-mail: BueroStrawe@t-online.de

² This text has been submitted in English and German languages.

Contribution to the public hearing on the Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union on the 27th of April 2000 in Bruxelles

Christoph Strawe / Initiative „Netzwerk Dreigliederung“
BuroStrawe@t-online.de

Ladies and Gentlemen,

let me first thank you for giving us the opportunity to speak to you. The discussion on the Charter gives us a chance to let Europe arise in the heads and the hearts of its citizens in a new way - not only as an economic or political executive purpose alliance, but as an actual community of culture, law, and economy - built on a common understanding of the bases and functions of Europe and on the conscious and free agreements of the citizens. In our humble opinion we shall, however, only succeed, if the inclusion of the civil society is not exhausted in this hearing. Today should rather have to form the prelude for a European-wide broad public discussion of the Charter design. This should culminate in a referendum of the citizens in the member states. The Charter has to improve the level of the fundamental right protection and strengthen the democratic participation rights in Europe. This historical chance must not be given away! As initiative, in which single personalities, organizations and institutions for an up-to-date social organization co-operate, we have made extensive suggestions for the Charter, which are published in the Internet. In the shortness of the time I shall focus on only one item:

Subsidiarity

We suggest to include an article „subsidiarity“ in a passage „Principles and functions of the European Union, which result from the fundamental rights“. In the Maastricht contract the EU has committed itself to the principle of subsidiarity, which - as formulated in a classic phrasing - has the following meaning: „[...] just as that, which the individual can accomplish out of his own initiative and with his own strength, may not be taken from him and given to the activity of society, thus it violates justice if that, which the smaller and subordinate communities can accomplish and lead to a good end, is being claimed for the broader and superordinate community [...]“.¹

1 Enzyklika „Quadragesimo anno“, Pius XI., 1931.

The confession to subsidiarity includes, which is sometimes overlooked, an obligation concerning the inner order of the associated states, not only referring to their relationship to the Union. In addition, the principle of subsidiarity sets, which is likewise overseen quite often, limits to the activity of the state not only in a vertical direction (the superordinate public level may not regulate, what can be regulated by a subordinate level), but in a horizontal direction, too: What can be regulated by the initiative of individually responsible societies, shall and must not be regulated by activities of the state at all.

Otherwise the state will be „covered and crushed under too many obligations and liabilities“². And it is even more important, that the responsibility of the single competent human being be not „covered and crushed“. In this point the principle of subsidiarity connects itself with the principle of the human rights, because these human rights, which to protect is the most distinguished obligation of the states of Europe, make individual humans the starting point and carrier of social organization.

As paragraph 1 of the article „subsidiarity“ we suggest the following formulation for the reasons mentioned:

„(1) The EU and its member states promote a seizing of social functions on free initiative and responsibility in all areas, which the legislator does not reserve to public concerning for mandatory reasons. Public functions are in each case to be assumed and regulated on the lowest possible level.“

The vertical subsidiarity with orientation on the lowest level of possible regulation is to prevent that, to cite a phrase of Roman Herzog, Europe becomes a „a moloch of regulations“.

The horizontal subsidiarity is to protect the independence of culture and economics. Therefore we suggest two further paragraphs for the article:

„(2) The EU and its member states create promoting basic conditions, so that culture can unfold in its varieties freely and self-administered; they protect the principle of public neutrality in relation to different cultural efforts.“ (I mark that, with these principles, we also support the suggestions of the European Forum for Freedom in Education and other organizations.)

Paragraph 3: „The EU and its member states protect the principle of the contractual self organization of the economic life; they create suitable basic conditions for an efficient, structurally and regionally balanced, social responsible economy. The EU and its member states do not become economically active themselves; the law regulates exceptions.“

2 Quadragesimo anno.

This basic regulation should be completed by a further article, which imposes upon certain concrete obligations to the community of states with the „fulfilment of public functions“, which would give security to the citizen that genuine state functions are assumed in as efficient and citizen-friendly a form as possible. These suggestions would, in our opinion, also contribute to improve the acceptance of the Charter and European integration by the citizens of Europe. In all other respects I may refer you again to our further suggestions as published on the webpages of the convention. Thank you for your attention!

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 18 April 2000CHARTE 4229/00*CONTRIB 103*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the Association of German Public Service Broadcasting Corporations (ARD) and German Television (ZDF) with a view for the hearing on the 27 April 2000.^{1 2}

¹ ARD: Rue de la Loi 223, B-1040 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-280 1785. Fax: +32-2-230 4434.

² This text has been submitted in German, French and English.

Draft

for a

EUROPEAN FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT TO FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND INFORMATION

in the European Charter on Fundamental Rights submitted by the Association of German Public Service Broadcasting Corporations (ARD) and German Television (ZDF)

1.4.2000

A. Draft text

1. The right to freedom of expression shall be guaranteed. Likewise, the right to obtain comprehensive information from a range of generally accessible sources shall be guaranteed. This includes, but is not limited to, access to cultural and educational content.
2. The freedom of the press, broadcasting, film and other communications addressed to the public shall be guaranteed.
3. These rights may be restricted by law only to protect legal interests of higher priority. In no case may they be restricted on account of the content of the opinion expressed, unless such a restriction serves to protect minors or personal honour, or to prevent the glorification of violence or the expression of opinions that fail to respect human dignity.
4. There shall be no censorship.

B. Notes

I. General notes

The draft text for a European fundamental right to freedom of expression and information is founded on the guarantees in Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). It takes account of the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights but presents it in more concrete and more extensively developed terms. The underlying consideration is that the ECHR already provides a benchmark for fundamental rights for the whole of Europe and that its contents represent a common denominator for all European states in this respect.

This draft European fundamental right to freedom of expression and information for a European Charter on Fundamental Rights deals with key principles, especially for broadcasting. Broadcasting is protected by the constitutions of all countries (except in the case of the United Kingdom, which has no written constitution). It is either an express provision (for example, in Germany and Portugal) or part of general freedom of opinion (for example, in Italy, France, Spain, Belgium and in Article 10(1) ECHR). In all countries, broadcasting is assigned a special role in the formation of public opinion and, hence, for society. The fundamental right to broadcasting freedom always has an objective legal aspect, too, according to the equivalent construction in all states.

Moreover, all European institutions, including - to a minor extent - the European Court of Justice (ECJ) in its jurisdiction, have repeatedly and expressly emphasized the fundamental importance and necessity of securing pluralism in broadcasting. The context of the pluralism principle also provides the justification of a dual broadcasting system. Such a system exists in all EU Member States, with central broadcasting functions assigned to public broadcasting. At a European level this consensus on the leading role of public broadcasting is set out in the Protocol to the Amsterdam Treaty. Here the special role of public broadcasting for democracy, social integration and culture is expressly pointed out and thus acknowledged at the level of the Amsterdam Treaty. Similarly, it guarantees the competence of the Member States to regulate the mission, financing and organization of public broadcasting. These guarantees and large-scale exemption of the financing of public broadcasting from the provisions of the EC Treaty must not be affected by the creation of a charter of fundamental rights. In this respect, the draft contains no assignment of competence that would favour EU institutions.

The addressee and holders of the fundamental right to freedom of expression and information are specified in the general provisions of the Charter on Fundamental Rights. In this context, it must be ensured that the charter is addressed only to the European Union and its bodies and institutions. The European Charter on Fundamental Rights including the Fundamental Right to Freedom of Opinion and Information may neither replace nor supersede the constitutions of the Member States and their regulations on media law. In particular, the way the freedom of broadcasting and, especially, public broadcasting is organized falls within the competence of each Member State and can be measured only by the respective fundamental rights guaranteed by each Member State.

One of the basic requirements for a European Charter on Fundamental Rights is that its guarantees must be justiciable. The holders of fundamental rights must be able to defend themselves in court against EU bodies and institutions. Therefore, a judicial EU authority must be created separately from the ECJ to provide effective (individual) legal protection against violations of fundamental rights by EU bodies and institutions, through special proceedings. There must also be a clear demarcation between that authority and the European Court of Human Rights, to avoid any incompatibility with the latter's jurisdiction.

ARD and ZDF regard as indispensable these requirements regarding the content and function of a European Fundamental Right to Freedom of Opinion and Information, its addressees and limitations on its effectiveness and organization according to the laws of the Member States and regarding the special judicial protection of fundamental rights. If some of these requirements cannot be achieved, ARD and ZDF recommend that a European Charter of Fundamental Rights should be brought about in such a way that the European Union should accede to the European Convention on Human Rights after meeting the corresponding pre-conditions.

II. Individual notes

1. Paragraph 1

Sub-paragraph 1 of paragraph 1 defines the "right to freedom of expression" as the fundamental right to freedom to hold opinions in a traditional and comprehensive sense. Both the internal process of forming an opinion and the external action of expressing it should be protected. With the wording "[...] shall be guaranteed", sub-paragraph 1 makes it clear that as well as being a subjective defensive right, the fundamental right also has objective legal content which must be respected by European institutions.

Sub-paragraph 2 fundamentally protects freedom of information from generally accessible sources. This guarantee is found in the same, or similar, form in all constitutions and in Article 10 ECHR and thus takes up traditional regulations. The right to gain "comprehensive" information from "varied" sources expressly accounts for the principle of pluralism, which plays a central role in all European constitutions and is emphasized by EU institutions time and again. In view of the development of an information and knowledge society, this is obviously of great importance, particularly since the constantly increasing amount of information is - to some extent - restricted by technical and financial conditions.

Sub-paragraph 3 places the guarantee in sub-paragraph 2 in more concrete, broader terms. The wording "access to cultural and educational content" - in addition to the pluralism guarantee - aims to take account of the move towards an information and knowledge society and to ensure that such content may be enjoyed. In this respect, it meets the corresponding concerns of broadcasting providers to be able to provide coverage.

2. Paragraph 2

Paragraph 2 protects the press, broadcasting, film and all other (mass) communication media and their activities. Alongside its role in providing a subjective defensive right against state intervention, it also contains an institutional safeguard. Owing to the importance of these media for society and democracy, this guarantee of fundamental rights has received a paragraph of its own. It protects communication in a comprehensive manner. The guarantee is open to any kind of media development.

3. Paragraph 3

Paragraph 3 regulates restriction options for the guarantees given in paragraphs 1 and 2 and their pre-conditions.

Under sub-paragraph 1 the fundamental rights in paragraphs 1 and 2 may be restricted only to protect legal interests of a higher priority. This may occur solely on the basis of consideration of each individual case. In addition, such a restriction must be effected "by law". The term "law" means a type of action described in the general provisions of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. In view of the outstanding importance of the freedom of opinion and information, the formal requirements for this type of action must be of a high standard, which involves, in particular, qualified participation by the European Parliament.

Sub-paragraph 2 points out in sub-sub-paragraph 1 that no restriction may be made on account of the content of the opinion expressed. Exceptions to this rule are listed in the form of a final catalogue in sub-sub-paragraph 2 and concern the protection of minors, the protection of honour, protection against the glorification of violence and the protection of human dignity. Sub-paragraph 2 must be understood in conjunction with sub-paragraph 1. As regards restrictions on a given opinion, consideration is also required in individual cases, but the inviolability of human dignity may not be the subject of consideration.

4. Paragraph 4

Paragraph 4 features the traditional ban on censorship. This guarantee is of fundamental importance. The ban on censorship should essentially emerge from the overall view of the other provisions in this draft and thus has only a declarative meaning. However, to avoid any uncertainty regarding the existence of a ban on censorship it has been expressly mentioned in the last paragraph.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 18. April 2000CHARTE 4230/00*CONTRIB 104*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend einen Beitrag des Diakonischen Werks der Evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland, im Hinblick auf die Anhörung am 27. April 2000. ¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in Deutscher sprache übermittelt.

Schriftliche Stellungnahme des Diakonischen Werkes der EKD zur Vorlage beim Konvent der EU zur Ausarbeitung einer europäischen Grundrechte-Charta.

Das Diakonische Werk der EKD beteiligt sich als einer der sechs Spitzenverbände der Freien Wohlfahrtspflege in Deutschland an dem Diskussionsprozeß um die Europäische Grundrechtecharta. Das Diakonische Werk vertritt über 30 000 Einrichtungen mit über 800 000 freiwilligen und hauptamtlichen Mitarbeitern, die in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit mit den staatlichen Institutionen der Bundesrepublik Deutschland soziale Dienste und Aufgaben der Daseinsvorsorge erfüllen. Im Rahmen dieser Partnerschaft ist das Diakonische Werk Bestandteil des deutschen Sozialstaatssystems. Als kirchlicher Wohlfahrtsverband richtet das Diakonische Werk sein Handeln am christlichen Menschenbild aus. Seine Arbeit ist Wesens- und Lebensäußerung der Evangelischen Kirche. Darüber hinaus gehört das Diakonische Werk zur "Zivilgesellschaft". Es erfüllt sozialanwaltschaftliche Funktionen und hat es sich zur Aufgabe gemacht, Menschen in allen Lebenslagen zu beraten und zu begleiten, die Stimme zu erheben für diejenigen, die nicht gehört werden, und für eine menschenwürdige Gesetzgebung einzutreten. Gleichzeitig bringt es seine Erfahrung als bedeutendes internationales Hilfswerk in die Diskussion ein, das sich weltweit für Gerechtigkeit und Wahrung der Menschenrechte einsetzt.

Für das Diakonische Werk als wertorientiert arbeitenden Wohlfahrtsverband liegt große Bedeutung in der Tatsache, daß die EU mit der Ausarbeitung der Grundrechtecharta Wertvorstellungen zur Richtschnur ihrer Politik macht. Die EU-Bürger werden mit Rechtspositionen ausgestattet, die für diese Freiheiten und Ansprüche begründen. Das ist eine greifbare Konkretisierung der in Artikel 6 EUV niedergelegten Zielbestimmung, daß sich das politische Handeln der EU an Wertvorstellungen orientieren muß, die allen europäischen Staaten gemeinsam sind.

In diesem Prozeß der Umsetzung von Wertorientierung in Politikgrundsätze und Rechtspositionen möchte das Diakonische Werk sich vor dem Hintergrund seines Selbstverständnisses und seiner Aufgabenstellung vor allem zu drei Themenbereichen äußern und dabei jeweils nur auf ausgewählte Artikel eingehen, um seine Position klar darzulegen. Diese drei Themenbereiche sind:

- 1) Freiheitsgrundrechte, insbesondere Menschenwürde, Religionsfreiheit und Asylrecht
- 2) Politische Partizipation
- 3) Soziale Grundrechte ad 1): Freiheitsgrundrechte, insbesondere Menschenwürde, Religionsfreiheit und Asylrecht

Das Diakonische Werk unterstützt nachdrücklich die Absicht des Konvents, in Artikel 1 der Charta die Wahrung der Menschenwürde festzuschreiben. Als "Muttergrundrecht", aus dem sich die meisten weiteren Freiheits- und Gleichheitsrechte und die sozialen Grundrechte ableiten lassen, gebührt der Menschenwürde dieser herausgehobene Platz in der Charta.

Noch klarer als der derzeitige Formulierungsvorschlag "Die Würde des Menschen wird unter allen Umständen gewahrt" wäre eine Formulierung in Anlehnung an Artikel 1 des Grundgesetzes:

"Die Würde des Menschen ist unantastbar".

Der Grundsatz der Wahrung der Menschenwürde verpflichtet die staatlichen Gewalten – und damit auch die Organe der EU - für jeden Menschen Lebensfreiräume zu sichern, ihm die materielle Grundlage für ein würdiges Leben zu verschaffen und insbesondere die Rechte der Schwachen und Fremden zu achten und ihnen Gerechtigkeit zukommen zu lassen. Nach Auffassung des Diakonischen Werkes besteht eine unauflösbare Verknüpfung zwischen der Gewährleistung von Freiheits- Gleichheits- und schließlich sozialen Rechten. Freiheitsrechte, die bei den elementaren Lebensgrundrechten beginnen und in den ideellen Freiheiten der Gedankens- und Gewissensfreiheit ihre Fortsetzung haben, sind nicht denkbar ohne die einzelnen Ausformungen der Gleichheitsgrundrechte, die jedem die gleichberechtigte Teilhabe am politischen und sozialen Leben ermöglichen. Die gleichberechtigte Teilhabe ist wiederum nicht denkbar ohne daß für jeden einzelnen durch die Festschreibung sozialer Grundrechte die materielle Grundlage dafür gesichert ist.

Dementsprechend begrüßt das Diakonische Werk die im Charta-Entwurf gewählte Grundrechtehierarchie, die mit den elementaren Freiheitsrechten - Recht auf Leben, Recht auf körperliche Unversehrtheit, Verbot der Folter und unmenschlicher Behandlung einschließlich des Verbotes der Todesstrafe (Artikel 2-4) - beginnt. Das Diakonische Werk tritt für eine möglichst weite Auslegung dieser Rechte ein, die frauenspezifische Aspekte umfaßt.

Zu den Lebensfreiräumen jedes einzelnen gehört nach Auffassung des Diakonischen Werkes unbedingt die Freiheit des weltanschaulichen oder religiösen Bekenntnisses. Dieses Recht ist insofern von besonderer Natur, als es die Freiheit des einzelnen, sich zu einer Weltanschauung oder zu einer Religion zu bekennen, und gleichzeitig die Freiheit des gemeinschaftlichen Bekenntnisses und die Freiheit, dieses Bekenntnis gemeinsam auszuüben, umfaßt. Die gemeinschaftliche Ausübung des Bekenntnisses ist oftmals dessen Ausdrucksform. Diese äußert sich in vielen Bereichen des gesellschaftlichen und politischen Lebens, die im Chartaentwurf präzisiert werden sollten. Für besonders bedeutend hält das Diakonische Werk Tätigkeiten in Form von Nothilfe, struktureller Hilfe und Hilfe zur Selbsthilfe, die unter dem Begriff der "karitativen Tätigkeiten" zusammengefaßt Teil des aktiven Praktizierens von Weltanschauungen und Religionen sind.

Das Diakonische Werk begrüßt daher die Festschreibung der Gedankens- Gewissens- und Religionsfreiheit in Artikel 14 der Charta. Es bedauert die Entscheidung des Konventes, es bei der kurzen Formulierung des Artikel 14 zu belassen ("Jede Person hat das Recht auf Gedanken-, Gewissens- und Religionsfreiheit") und schließt sich daher dem Vorschlag der EKD zu einer ergänzenden Formulierung an:

"Jede Person hat das Recht auf Gedanken- Religions- und Gewissensfreiheit. Die Religionsfreiheit schließt das öffentliche und private, individuelle und gemeinschaftliche Bekenntnis sowie das Recht von Kirchen und Religionsgemeinschaften zur Ordnung und Verwaltung ihrer Angelegenheiten nach den Gesetzen der Mitgliedstaaten ein"

Da das Diakonische Werk es sich zur Aufgabe macht, besonders für die Rechte der Fremden einzustehen, hält es die Festschreibung eines Asylgrundrechtes in der Europäischen Grundrechtecharta für unbedingt notwendig. Das Diakonische Werk unterstützt die in dem Änderungsantrag von Herrn Jürgen Meyer vorgeschlagene Formulierung des Asylrechtes und möchte sie um einen Verweis auf die Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention ergänzen:

Artikel 19 Asyl

- (1) Jeder, der nach Maßgabe der Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention politisch verfolgt wird oder unmenschlicher oder erniedrigender Bestrafung oder Behandlung ausgesetzt ist, genießt Asylrecht. Frauenspezifische Asylgründe sind zu berücksichtigen.
- (2) Niemand darf in einen Staat abgeschoben werden, wenn stichhaltige Gründe für die Annahme bestehen, daß nach der Abschiebung die in Abs. 1 beschriebenen Maßnahmen drohen.
- (3) Kollektivausweisungen von Ausländern sind nicht zulässig.

Der Schutz vor Verfolgung ist ein bedeutender Rechtsfortschritt im System des allgemeinen Menschenrechtsschutzes seit 1948. Auf dem Sondergipfel in Tampere sind die staats- und Regierungschefs der EU "übereingekommen, auf ein Gemeinsames Asylsystem hinzuwirken, das sich auf die uneingeschränkte und allumfassende Anwendung der Genfer Flüchtlingskonvention stützt" (Schlußfolgerungen des Vorsitzes – Europäischer Rat Tampere, Oktober 1999). Die Aufnahme des Flüchtlingsschutzes in die Grundrechtscharta ist die beste Gewähr, dass die EU ihren eigenen Ansprüchen gerecht würde. Die Zukunft des europäischen Asylrechts hat dabei Auswirkungen nicht nur auf den Menschenrechtsstandard in Europa, sondern auch weit darüber hinaus, wie Jean Noel Wetterwald, Vertreter des UNHCR kürzlich feststellte: "Die Wertegemeinschaft Europäische Union steht hier in der Verantwortung für einen Grundwert, nämlich für die Institution des Asyls, deren Einrichtung man durchaus auch nach den Erfahrungen in diesem Jahrhundert als Antwort der Zivilisation auf die Barbarei begreifen kann." (Vgl. Stellungnahme des "FORUM MENSCHENRECHTE" zur Vorlage bei der gemeinsamen Anhörung von Bundestag und Bundesrat, an der das Diakonische Werk mitgewirkt hat.)

Das Asylrecht bedarf nach Auffassung des Diakonischen Werkes einer Ergänzung im Bereich des Schutzes der Familie. Flüchtlinge müssen am Recht auf Familienleben partizipieren können. Das Diakonische Werk begrüßt deshalb die Formulierung des Artikel 13 des Charta-Entwurfes in der "Jeder"-Form: auch Flüchtlinge im Sinne der Genfer Konvention müssen Teilhaber dieses Rechtes sein.

Zu Artikel 13 verweist das Diakonische Werk im Übrigen auf die Stellungnahme der Arbeitsgemeinschaft der Familienverbände, die dem Konvent vorliegt.

ad 2: Politische Partizipation

Das Diakonische Werk bedauert, daß in den Abschnitt über die "Bürgerrechte" keine Vorschrift über die politische Teilhabe der Bürger durch Vereinigungen und Verbände eingefügt worden ist. Wenn die Absicht der europäischen Institutionen, den "Bürgerdialog" stärker zu strukturieren und die Beteiligung der "Zivilgesellschaft" an der politischen Meinungsbildung zu intensivieren, umgesetzt werden sollen, muß sich dies in der Charta in einem Grundrecht auf Bildung entsprechender Vereinigungen niederschlagen. Ein solches individuelles Partizipationsrecht ist außerdem eine wichtige Ergänzung zu dem in Artikel 15 niedergelegten Grundrecht auf Freie Meinungsäußerung. Das Diakonische Werk schlägt daher vor, in den Abschnitt "Bürgerrechte" nach Artikel D "Recht auf Teilnahme an Kommunalwahlen" folgenden neuen Artikel E einzufügen:

Artikel E Vereinigungs- und Koalitionsfreiheit

Jeder Unionsbürger hat auf Ebene seines Mitgliedstaates und auf der Ebene der Europäischen Union das Recht, Vereine und Gesellschaften zu bilden. Solche Vereinigungen können der Durchsetzung wirtschaftlicher und sozialer Interessen dienen und in Rechtssetzungsverfahren gehört werden.

ad 3: Soziale Grundrechte:

Das Diakonische Werk begrüßt nachdrücklich den in den Schlußfolgerungen des Rates von Köln festgelegten Grundsatz, soziale Grundrechte in die Charta einzufügen. Menschenrechte sind unteilbar. Ihre Unteilbarkeit ist ein Gebot der Menschenwürde. Die Festschreibung sozialer Grundrechte zu verweigern, hieße, die Ausübung der zu beschränken oder gar unmöglich zu machen.

Das Diakonische Werk ist sich bewußt, daß es bei der Gewährleistung der sozialen Grundrechte unterschiedliche Ebenen gibt. Im internationalen Menschenrechtsschutz hat sich dafür folgende Terminologie gebildet: "to protect, to respect and to fulfill": soziale Grundrechte können ihrer Natur nach politische Zielbestimmungen sein, die staatliches Handeln – oder das Handeln der EU – binden, oder justitiable individuelle Rechtspositionen.

Das Diakonische Werk tritt für die Formulierung solcher individuellen justitiablen Rechtspositionen ein. Die Europäische Union steht an der Schwelle ihrer Entwicklung von der Wirtschaftsunion zu einer politischen Union, die alle Aspekte gesellschaftlichen Lebens umfaßt. Nur wenn in dieser Union die individuelle Durchsetzung von Rechtspositionen im sozialen Bereich gewährleistet ist, ist sichergestellt, daß das Wohlergehen des einzelnen Menschen ebensolche Beachtung findet wie die Durchsetzung der Wirtschaftsinteressen im Binnenmarkt.

Besonders nachdrücklich möchte das Diakonische Werk folgende Artikel des Charta-Entwurfes unterstützen bzw. kommentieren:

Artikel II Berufsfreiheit.

Jede Person hat das Recht, ihren Beruf und ihr Gewerbe frei zu wählen und auszuüben, unbeschadet der die Freizügigkeit von Personen betreffenden Bestimmungen des Vertrages.

Gleichberechtigte Teilhabe am Berufs- und Erwerbsleben ist ein maßgeblicher Bestandteil eines menschenwürdigen Lebens. Sie bedeutet Teilhabe am gesellschaftlichen und sozialen Leben und damit Integration in die Gesellschaft. Aufgrund des oben beschriebenen Selbstverständnisses ist es dem Diakonischen Werk ein zentrales Anliegen, daß jeder ein individuelles Recht auf Zugang zum Beruf hat. Dementsprechen unterstützt das Diakonische Werk nachdrücklich das in Artikel X formulierte Recht auf Berufsausbildung und Berufsberatung.

Artikel XIII Daseinsvorsorge

- (1) Jede Person hat entsprechend den jeweiligen Gegebenheiten der einzelnen Staaten Anspruch auf staatliche Daseinsvorsorge, insbesondere auf Sozialleistungen von notwendigem Umfang
- (2) Jede Person hat das Recht, soziale Dienste ihrer Wahl gemäß ihrer Weltanschauung in Anspruch zu nehmen.

Staatliche Daseinsvorsorge ist die wichtigste Ausformung des Grundsatzes, daß jeder Mensch ein seiner Würde entsprechendes Leben führen kann. Die europäischen Gesellschaften gründen sich auf den Grundsatz der Solidarität. Jeder muß gleichberechtigten Zugang zu Leistungen der Daseinsvorsorge und des sozialen Schutzes haben. Das schließt mit ein, daß die Bereitstellung dieser Leistungen von allen Mitgliedern einer Gesellschaft getragen und deswegen als staatliche Aufgabe definiert wird. Die Ableitung dieses Rechtes aus der Menschenwürde gebietet es, einen Rechtsanspruch auf Daseinsvorsorge zu formulieren und die Bereitstellung von Leistungen der Daseinsvorsorge und sozialer Dienste nicht den freien Marktkräften zu überlassen. Da soziale Dienstleistungen auch mit Wertorientierungen verknüpft sind, ist die Wahlfreiheit zwischen verschiedenen Angeboten Äquivalent des Artikel 14 ad 1) Gedankens- Gewissens- und Religionsfreiheit.

Artikel XIV Recht auf garantierte Mindestsicherung

Jeder Person muß entsprechend den jeweiligen Gegebenheiten der einzelnen Staaten eine angemessene soziale Unterstützung gewährt werden, die es ihr ermöglicht, ein menschenwürdiges Leben zu führen. Die Mindestsicherung soll darauf ausgerichtet sein, zur Selbsthilfe zu befähigen.

Das Recht auf garantierte Mindestsicherung ist ein notwendiges Korrelat zu dem Rechtsanspruch auf Leistungen der Daseinsvorsorge: gerade die Ärmsten in einer Gesellschaft dürfen – wiederum unter Berufung auf die Menschenwürde – nicht von der Solidarität der Gemeinschaft ausgeschlossen werden. Im bundesdeutschen Sprachgebrauch ist die Verwendung des Begriffs "Sozialhilfe" für eine garantierte Mindestsicherung an dieser Stelle mißverständlich, weil sie auf die Sozialleistung Sozialhilfe verweist, die in der Bundesrepublik nur einem ausgewählten Personenkreis gewährt wird. (z.B. keine Asylbewerber). Angelehnt an die "Empfehlungen des Rates über gemeinsame Kriterien für ausreichende Zuwendungen und Leitungen im Rahmen der Systeme der sozialen Sicherung" wird hier der Ausdruck "garantierte Mindestsicherung" empfohlen.

Die garantierte Mindestsicherung bezieht sich nicht nur Einkommen und damit auf Geldleistungen, sondern z.B. auch Beratung zur Sicherung von Rechtsansprüchen. Sie muß auf die individuellen Bedürfnisse ausgerichtet sein, weil gerade in Notsituationen der individuelle Bedarf stark variiert. Die Ergänzung, daß die Mindestsicherung an dem in dem Mitgliedstaat geltenden Minimum ausgerichtet sein soll, betont die Bedeutung der Mindestsicherung als Instrument zur gesellschaftlichen Integration.

Das Diakonische Werk schlägt außerdem die Ergänzung vor, daß die Unterstützung der Aktivierung von Selbsthilfe dienen soll. Ausgehend von der protestantischen Sozialethik und der katholischen Soziallehre ist von unserem Verständnis her jeder gehalten, nach seinen Mitteln selbst für sich zu sorgen; ist er dazu nicht fähig, bekommt er die Unterstützung, die ihn wieder in die Lage zur Selbsthilfe bringt.

Artikel XV Recht auf Zugang zu Gesundheitsleistungen

Jede Person muß entsprechend den jeweiligen Gegebenheiten der einzelnen Staaten Zugang zu umfassenden individuell notwendigen Gesundheitsleistungen haben.

Das Recht auf Gesundheitsleistungen sollte so umfassend wie möglich formuliert und interpretiert werden, da Zugang zu Leistungen der Behandlungspflege allein nicht ausreichend sind. Auch ist die Präzisierung wichtig, daß medizinische Bedürfnisse individuell höchst verschieden sind und dem Einzelbedarf entsprechen müssen.

Jürgen Gohde
Präsident

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 18 April 2000CHARTE 4231/00*CONTRIB 105*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the Association of Women of Southern Europe (AFEM) with a view for the hearing on the 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English.

AFEM
ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES DE L'EUROPE MÉRIDIONALE
ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN OF SOUTHERN EUROPE

ADDENDUM TO THE PROPOSAL OF AFEM (CONTRIB 42)
FOR THE HEARING OF 27 APRIL 2000

The AFEM wishes to thank the Convention for admitting it to the hearing and welcomes the advancement of the Convention's work. The AFEM recalls that it has been among the first NGOs which submitted contributions to the Convention: a Declaration of its Board (CONTRIB 16), a Proposal of provisions (CONTRIB 42) and a declaration of its General Assembly (CONTRIB 55), in French and English.

Following the evolution of the Convention's work and on the occasion of the hearing of 27 April 2000, the AFEM has the honour to submit an Addendum to its Proposal (CONTRIB 42) which concerns certain articles of CONVENT 13, 17, 18 and 19.

All the proposals of AFEM are supported by the European Women's Lobby and the Marangopoulos Foundation of Human Rights.

• CONVENT 13

The fundamental principle of gender equality in all areas

Gender equality is a fundamental principle of Community law, a task of the Community and an objective, which the Community is obligated to promote in all its activities, and a fundamental human right (CJEC, EC Treaty)¹.

We welcome the proposal of Mr. Guy Braibant (CONTRIB 63, Article I) to proclaim this general principle in all areas, due to its importance, by one of the first Articles of the Charter and then to apply it in economic and social matters. This proposal reinforces the coherence of the Charter. It is, however, necessary to complement it as follows:

“1. Substantive equality between women and men must be ensured and applied in all areas; any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of sex is prohibited.”

“2. Temporary positive measures are indicated, in order to improve, in the first instance, the position of women, until substantive equality between women and men is achieved.”

Comments: In this way the Charter will implement CJEC case law and will respond to the findings of the competent Community and international organs that general non discrimination clauses do not suffice to eradicate discrimination on the ground of sex and to establish substantive equality between women and men.

Sex differs fundamentally from the other grounds of discrimination mentioned in Article 13 EC Treaty. Discrimination on the ground of sex is of a particular nature. It is due to prejudice which has infiltrated social and economic structures and affects mainly women. Women are neither a minority nor a group, but one of the two forms in which the human being is incarnated, and they often suffer multiple discrimination, on the ground of sex and on other grounds.

¹ Cases 149/77 Defrenne III [1978] ECR 1509, C-270/97 Sievers 10.2.2000; Arts. 2, 3(2) EC Treaty.

This is why temporary positive measures are indicated. These do not constitute discrimination, but means for achieving substantive or de facto gender equality, according to Article 4(1) of the Convention for the elimination of discrimination against women and Article 141(4) EC Treaty. Declaration No 28 annexed to the Amsterdam Treaty specifies that these measures “should, in the first instance, aim at improving the situation of women”. Such measures are also provided by an increasing number of national Constitutions² and are recommended by the competent Community and international organs. They must be applied until prejudice is overcome and substantive equality between women and men is achieved. - If the Charter does not provide for such measures, it will constitute a regression with regard to Community and international “acquis” (see our CONTRIB 42, Introductory Note).

The particular nature of discrimination against women and the aforementioned character of positive action have been very recently confirmed by the CJEC judgment in Badeck (Case C-158/97, 26.3.2000).

ARTICLE 3: Right to the respect of physical and mental integrity. This right implies the absolute prohibition:

- of eugenic practices, with or without the consent of the person concerned;
- of the cloning of human beings, with or without the consent of the person concerned;
- of the trading in the human body or any part thereof (we have proposed that these be declared “not for trade”), with or without the consent of the person concerned.

Comments: It is indispensable to specify in all cases that the consent of the person concerned is irrelevant. In the 1st and 2nd case this mention is required by bioethics. In the 3rd case it is obvious that it is impossible to know whether the consent is freely given. The prohibition of trading should not be limited to the areas of medicine and biology, but should be of a wider scope, including also the prohibition of trafficking in human beings, namely women and children, the transnational dimensions of which is a serious concern of the EU, as well as the prohibition of trading in children with a view to adoption and the renting of surrogate mothers (see Article 1 of our CONTRIB 42 and comments thereon).

ARTICLE 4: Prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Sexual mutilation (which, as it is well known, is practised even on European territory) and any other form of physical or mental violence, including violence within the family, should be expressly prohibited (see our CONTRIB 42, Article 2).

ARTICLE 16(3). Right to education. “The right of parents to have their children educated and taught in accordance with their religious and philosophical convictions shall be guaranteed, to the extent that the latter do not contravene the values and rights recognised by this Charter. In exercising this right parents shall act in the child’s best interest” (the last sentence adopts a proposal of Mr. G. Papadimitriou, see CONTRIB 97).

² Constitutions: German [Art. 3(2)], Austrian [Art. 7(2)], Portuguese [Art. 9(h)], Finnish [Art. 6(4)], Swedish [Chapter 2 §16], French [Art. 3 and 4], Greek (under discussion in Parliament).

ARTICLE X. Limitations. Such an Article, if it is to be included, should:

- mention to which Articles it refers and, in any event, exclude at least Articles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5(1), 7, 8, 9 and the principle of gender equality on which neither the EC Treaty nor most of the Constitutions allow limitations³;
- be complemented as follows: “Without prejudice to provisions affording more protection than this Charter or the European Convention on Human Rights or any other international instrument relating to human rights and freedoms, ratified by the Member States, as well as to the provisions of the Constitutions and legislation of Member States relating to such rights and freedoms...”

See our CONTRIB 42, Article Z, and Comments thereon, according to which:

The EU cannot ignore the international obligations of its Member States without losing its credibility both with its citizens and the international community, the more so as it considers itself and must be a Community based on the rule of law and wishes to play a leading role in the respect and promotion of human rights around the world. It is to the universal values and principles that Article 6(1) EC Treaty refers. This Article, as proposed, is also in line with the Community and international principle according to which Community and international standards are a minimum which may be surpassed by national law and may in no case serve as an excuse for lowering the existing national level of protection (see also Art. 137(5) EC Treaty).

ARTICLE Y. Level of protection. This article should be complemented as follows:

“No provision of this Charter may be interpreted as placing restrictions on the protection afforded by the European Convention on Human Rights or any other international instrument relating to human rights and freedoms, ratified by the Member States, as well as by the provisions of the Constitutions and legislation of Member States relating to such rights and freedoms” (see our CONTRIB 42, Article Z, and Comments thereon as quoted supra under Article X).

FIELD OF APPLICATION: See our CONTRIB 42, introductory Article:

“The Union and the Community as well as Member States secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the effective enjoyment of the rights and freedoms defined in the following Articles, which may be relied upon as against their organs and institutions as well as against individuals, in all areas of Union and Community jurisdiction.”

Comments: This Article specifies that individuals have not only rights, but also obligations. Moreover, the term “jurisdiction” means that the Charter applies in all areas that member states have yielded, or will yield in future, to EC or EU jurisdiction.

• CONVENT 17 - RIGHTS OF CITIZENS

ARTICLE A: This Article should be complemented as follows:

“The Union and its institutions are founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect of human rights and equality between women and men⁴ and the rule of law, principles which are common to the Member States.”

³ The Greek constitutional provision that allows exceptions, subject to strict conditions, is in the course of being abolished in order to be replaced by a provision relating to positive action

⁴ Article 3(2) EC Treaty, CJEC case law [Case 43/75 Defrenne II [1976] ECR 455: Article 119 (now 141) EC Treaty “forms part of the foundations of the Community”].

CONVENT 18 - SOCIAL RIGHTS

ARTICLE I. Equality between women and men. This Article should be complemented as follows, in accordance with the general principle of gender equality (supra A. I):

“1. Substantive equality between women and men must be ensured with regard to employment and social protection; any direct or indirect discrimination on the ground of sex is prohibited. Are namely ensured the equal rights of men and women to work freely chosen or accepted, to the same working conditions, to fair and equal pay for work of equal value, to social security and assistance for themselves and their family.”

“2. For the purposes of the principle of equal pay between men and women for work of equal value, “pay” means.....(insert the rest of Article 141(2) EC Treaty).

“3. Temporary positive measures are indicated, in order to improve, in the first instance, the position of women, until substantive equality between women and men is achieved.”

Comments: The 1st and 2nd paras. implement the “acquis Communautaire”. In respect of the 3rd para. see supra Comments under A. I (principle of gender equality).

ARTICLE VIII: Rights of children. According to contemporary conceptions, which are expressed in the Convention on the rights of the child, the child should not be only an object of protection, but furthermore a subject of rights. SPECIFIC ARTICLE:

“1. Children shall be treated as individuals and shall be permitted to influence matters affecting them according to their degree of maturity.” (Proposal of Mr. Paavo Nikula inspired from Article 6 of the Finnish Constitution, CONVENT 8)

“2. Every child, without any distinction in his/her respect or in respect of his/her parents, has the right to a legal existence, to the protection of his/her interests and to the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms defined in Articles.....of this Charter.”

(the Articles relating to rights that do not presuppose the age of majority should be cited; see our CONTRIB 42, Article 21).

ARTICLE XI: Right to protection of maternity. This right constitutes an expression not only of Article 137 (protection of health and security of workers), but also of Article 152 (high level of protection of human health) EC Treaty. It is inherent to human dignity and of capital importance for the very survival of Europe. It is thus wider than the right to maternity leave and belongs to every woman, not only employed women. This is why we have proposed the following Article which takes also into consideration of CJEC case law on Directive 92/85 (maternity protection) and Directive 76/207 (equal treatment). See our CONTRIB 42, Article 22:

“Every woman, without any distinction, has the right to the protection of pregnancy and maternity, including the right to sufficient maternity leave, at least of the duration provided by Community law and remunerated through social security benefits and to the maintenance, during this leave, of her rights relating to her employment, as well as to be guaranteed protection against working conditions which may harm her and/or her child, before or after confinement, and against ailments which have their origin in pregnancy, confinement or breast-feeding.”

Comments: By referring to Community law as concerns the length of the leave we ensure that the above minimum rights shall be adapted to any Community law evolution.

ARTICLE XII. Rights of parents. The social rights of parents should not be limited to parental leave. See our CONTRIB 42, Article 23, to which should be added that: “the organisation of working time must ensure the conciliation of family and professional life”. As to the length and remuneration of parental leave, see supra our proposals on maternity protection.

- CONVENT 19

ARTICLES XIII-XV. We agree with Mr. G. Braibant that the rights to social security and health must belong to every person and cover also pregnancy and maternity (see supra our Art. XI). The guarantee of an “adequate” level should remain.

LANGUAGE: The expressions used in the Charter should either be sex neutral or refer to both sexes (e.g. he/she, his/her).

- FINAL DECLARATION: The AFEM supports the proposals of the EURONET on the rights of the child (CONTRIB 22) as well as those of the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages (EBLUL, CONTRIB 50).

AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris.

Tel: 33-1-45 72 12 03. Fax: 33-1-45 72 15 03

E-mail: assafem@aol.com

Editors' note to CHARTE 4232/00 ADD 1,
Contribution by the International Federation of Human Rights (FIDH) with a view to the hearing on 27/04/00:

The INIT FR version was dated 18 April.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 7 June 2000CHARTE 4232/00*ADD 1*CONTRIB 106*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the English version of the contribution by the International Federation of Human Rights (FIDH) with a view to the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English and French languages.

fidh

Fédération Internationale des Ligues des Droits de l'Homme

ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE NON GOUVERNEMENTALE AUNT STATUT CONSULTATIF AUPRES DES NATIONS UNIES, DE L'UNESCO, ET DU CONSEIL DE L'EUROPE ET D'OBSERVATEUR AUPRES DE LA COMMISSION AFRICAINE DES DROITS DE L'HOMME ET DES PEUPLES

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

FEDERACION INTERNACIONAL
DE LOS DERECHOS HUMANOS

الائتلاف الدولية لحقوق الانسان

FIDH INTERVENTION BEFORE THE CONVENTION Hearing of April 27, 2000

« All human rights are universal, indivisible and interdependent and interrelated» (par. 5 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 1993).

These words are not rhetoric : they have a very concrete meaning and real consequences – notably on the elaboration of the new instrument currently drafted at the EU level.

1. Universality means that all individuals under the jurisdiction of the European Union Member States must benefit from the fundamental rights stated in the Charter. It would be inadmissible for FIDH that the Charter would establish categories of beneficiaries, distinguishing between European citizens, legal residents, and illegal immigrants. As a rule, the rights enshrined in the Charter should apply to all human beings; only very limited exceptions will possibly be provided for certain specific rights (right to vote and of being elected, diplomatic protection). The rights limited to European citizens should be exceptions.

In this regard, FIDH calls on the Convention to seize the occasion of the drafting process of the Charter to propose the extension of the European citizenship to persons residing legally in a member State for at least five years.

2. The universal character of human rights also means that they represent a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations. If the Council of Europe, followed by the EU, have been built on the basis of human rights, this does not mean that these values are proper to Europeans only ; that they are their own attribute or an original characteristic. Human rights lay the foundation of the identity of all human beings, and not only of Europeans. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted even before the European Community was born.

It is true that the EU is composed of strong democracies and that people living in its territory benefit from a particularly developed system of guarantees of their rights. However, people from other regions of the world also aspire to the acknowledgement of their fundamental rights, and every single day, a lot of them put their life or their security in danger for the sole reason that they appeal to the respect of these universal human rights.

If the external policy of the EU is based on human rights and democratic principles, it is precisely because these are universal values – and not because they are specifically European ones.

As the EU is elaborating a new instrument for the protection of human rights, it should reaffirm, more than ever, the universal character of these rights, as resulting from the United Nations and ILO instruments. These instruments are the everyday reference of human rights organisations and human rights defenders all around the world. By letting believe that human rights represent a European specificity, the EU would weaken its capacity of action in favour of human rights at the international level, facing the risk to be accused of « cultural imperialism » by authoritarian regimes.

In this perspective, the submission of the European institutions to the external control of the European Court of Strasbourg would have a determinant symbolic impact vis-à-vis third States and their nationals. The Charter must not be a pretext allowing the European institutions to withdraw from all external control. The elaboration of a Charter and the accession to the relevant instruments of the Council of Europe are two parallel and complementary processes.

3. Human rights are indivisible and interdependent. The terminology used has no incidence in this regard :the expressions « human rights », « rights of the person » or « fundamental rights » always refer to the same rights. In international law, the only distinction admitted amongst human rights is the one distinguishing between rights which cannot be derogated, whatever the circumstances (war, etc.), and the other fundamental rights (cf. art. 15.2 ECHR, art. 4.2 of the International Covenant on civil and political rights, art. 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 1949). The other distinctions sometimes referred to are not valid and their only effect is to increase confusion.

The rights are indivisible : they are of equal importance, and their implementation is closely linked, being civil and politic rights, or economic, social and cultural rights. Therefore, it is desirable that the future Charter consecrate all these rights.

4. The accession of the EU to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights (ECHR) and to the revised European Social Charter (ESC) remains an essential point that must be kept in mind while elaborating the Charter.

Regarding the accession to ECHR :

The European Parliament has rightly stressed the dangers, for legal security as well as for the coherence of the system of human rights protection in Europe¹, that might result from a Charter that would be binding. Indeed, the highest carefulness is necessary to avoid the adoption of the Charter making the European jurisdictional system obscure to citizens, already often ignorant of the existing procedures.

Submitting Community and Union acts to an external control, as for the acts of sovereign national authorities and jurisdictions, could reassure constitutional Courts about the existence of an equivalent protection of fundamental rights in the Community legal body. The risk that constitutional Courts of some States could question the primacy and uniform application of community law, deciding to check themselves the conformity of community acts to fundamental rights, would therefore be reduced.

As regards the risk of divergent – or even contradictory - interpretations, adopted by the European Courts, adhering to the ECHR and the external control it entails could limit the apparition of such incoherence, and have a preventive effect, binding the Community institutions to take more care over the respect for ECHR when preparing community legislation.

¹ « Insists that the rights contained in the Charter must in principle be made justiciable by the European Court of Justice, after careful consideration concerning, and adequate legislative forestalling, the multiple potentially conflicting jurisdiction as between the European Court of Human Rights, the European Court of Justice, and the highest Constitutional Court of the Member States » EP resolution on the Area of Freedom, Security and Justice, 15 Febr. 2000). « Underlines the need to establish a clear hierarchy of legal rules and a proper definition and delimitation of the powers of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, the Court of Human Rights and the national courts, in order to prevent different legal standards from being applied ». Resolution on the report on Human Rights in the EU, March 16, 2000, point 87. See also : Memorandum on the EU Charter of fundamental rights by the Standing Committee of experts on international immigration, refugee and criminal law, February 2000, p. 7 et 11 : « The EU Charter will bind the domestic authorities where they implement Community law or derogate from it. This means that the domestic courts may be confronted with two distinct standards : the EU Charter, as interpreted by the ECJ, and the ECHR, as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights. This underlines the importance of avoiding diverging interpretations at all costs... the most rational and transparent solution remains accession by the EU as such to ECHR system ».

The European Parliament has several times requested the accession of the European Communities, and more recently, of the EU, to the ECHR². The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe has also asked for it³.

It is important to note that the attribution of the legal personality to the Union and its accession to the ECHR appear amongst the issues the Portuguese Presidency might propose to the European Council of June to be added to the mandate of the IGC (inter-governmental conference).

FIDH considers that, by adopting a Charter of fundamental rights and by including it in the Treaty of the EU, Member States establish fundamental rights as an object (objective) of the EU. This means that the accession of the EU to the instruments of the Council of Europe will henceforth be possible, by virtue of Article 308 of the EC Treaty (former article 235).⁴

In fact, in its opinion of March 28, 1996, the Court of Justice of the European Communities (ECJ) stated that, if no specific competence - being express or implicit –confers generally to the Community institutions the power of promulgating rules in the field of human rights or to conclude international conventions in this field, one had to consider whether art. 235 of the Treaty (new art. 308) could form a legal basis for the accession of the European Communities to the ECHR. The Court considered that the consequences of such an accession would have gone beyond the limits of art. 235, and therefore would have supposed a previous modification of the Treaty, because the general frame resulting from the treaty provisions, and especially those defining the missions and actions of the Community, did not explicitly refer to human rights.

Taking into account this case-law, FIDH considers that if they include in the Treaty a reference to the new Charter, or even the full text of the Charter, Member States will remove the obstacle to the accession of the European Communities to the ECHR.

By adopting the Charter, Member States would take a big step towards the accession to ECHR. No fundamental objection to this accession will remain.

In particular resolution on respect for human rights in the European Union, 16 March 2000, point 88, « Urges Member States to give the EU legal personality to enable it to accede to the ECHR ». Resolution on the Charter of fundamental rights, 16 March 2000, point S and art. 15 : « Whereas the Union's access to the European Convention on Human rights following the necessary amendments to the Treaty on European Union would represent an important step towards the strengthening of the protection of fundamental rights in the Union... calls upon the IGC to enable the Union to become a party to the ECHR so as to establish close co-operation with the Council of Europe, whilst ensuring that appropriate action is taken to avoid possible conflicts or overlapping between the Court of Justice of the European Communities and the European Court of Human Rights. »

³ Resolution of 25/01/2000

⁴ Art. 308 : If action by the Community should prove necessary to attain, in the course of the operation of the common market, one of the objectives of the Community and this Treaty has not provided the necessary powers, the Council shall, acting unanimously on a proposal from the Commission and after consulting the European Parliament, take the appropriate measures.

Some of the Member States could consider that the accession to ECHR would imply in-depth modifications of the European system of protection of human rights (constitutional level). In that case, FIDH calls for the insertion in the Treaty, on the occasion of the Inter-governmental Conference, of an express provision foreseeing the possibility for the EU to accede to the ECHR.

Regarding the accession to the revised European Social Charter :

It is appropriate to distinguish between the accession to the ECHR and to the revised ESC because the monitoring mechanisms established by these instruments are completely different ; This has as consequences that (1) the reasons calling for these two ratifications do not present the same urgency and (2) these accessions do not have comparable implications on the revision of the Treaties.

- (1) The ECHR comes together with an extremely elaborated jurisdictional mechanism, which generates a risk of incoherence and confusion if the EU adopts a binding Charter with its own jurisdictional mechanism. This powerful argument in favour of the accession to the Charter is only valid to a lesser extent concerning the accession to the revised ESC, which is endowed of a less developed monitoring mechanism than the ECHR. There is however some risk of contradictory decisions between the ECJ (when it will be responsible for monitoring the respect of the future Charter) and the European Committee for social rights (which controls the respect of the ESC). The accession of the EU to the ESC is therefore desirable, but not so urgent as the accession to the ECHR – notably because all the EU Member States have not yet ratified the revised ESC.
- (2) The accession of the EU to the revised ESC would not have consequences of « constitutional scope » (cf. opinion 2/94 of 28 March 1996, ECJ), precisely because the monitoring mechanisms set up by the revised ESC are much less developed than those set up by the ECHR. The EU should therefore be able to ratify the revised ESC without any previous modification of the Treaties.

5. The competence of the EU has considerably increased, notably since the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam. The Charter should therefore cover the three pillars of the EU Treaty, including the common foreign and security policy and the judicial and police co-operation in criminal matters (which are part of the competence of the Union and not of the European Community – 3rd pillar). Indeed, the matter would be of a Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union - and not of the European Communities – covering consequently the three pillars of the European Union Treaty. This orientation corresponds to the political will expressed on the occasion of the European Councils of Cologne and Tampere, where it has systematically been question of a Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union. Furthermore, that understanding answers the will of increasing visibility in the field of fundamental rights and of increasing legal security.

The same reasoning is valid concerning the accession to the ECHR and to the revised European Social Charter. The European Union should accede as such to the relevant instruments of the Council of Europe, in order to ensure that all the acts posed by the European institutions that could have consequences on the enjoyment of fundamental rights would be submitted to the control of the Court of Strasbourg. The next inter-governmental Conference should be the occasion to confer to the EU the legal personality, in order that it could accede as such to the instruments of the Council of Europe.

6. Many people, to begin with the ECJ itself, have recognised that the right of individuals to appeal to the Court is too restricted, which is particularly unfortunate in the field of the protection of fundamental rights. FIDH considers that if the drafters of the Charter do not broaden the conditions of introduction of individual appeals before the Court - which would lead to overburden the Court - , an alternative solution could be to allow the petition of collective interest (by NGOs) in the cases where individual appeal is not admissible (e.g. : claim to strike out a ruling of general application). This mid-way solution would allow to avoid a congestion of the Court, that would lead to an excessive extension of procedures, violating therefore the right to a fair trial. This would also guarantee a jurisdictional protection of all the rights included in the future Charter, avoiding that some cases escape from all jurisdictional control. Besides, the environmental NGOs have also asked for such a mechanism (in the field of environment, damages very seldom affect directly and individually one person only, but have, on the contrary, collective consequences⁵).

The alternative solution generally presented consists in creating a mechanism of preliminary ruling from ECJ to ECHR for the questions related to the interpretation of the ECHR or to the compatibility of Community law with the Convention. That proposal does not seem satisfactory. First, it does not seem easily feasible, because of the lengthening of the procedures it would imply. Second, it is not desirable for substantial reasons : ECHR is not supposed to decide in abstracto on the compatibility of the internal law of a State party with the ECHR. Furthermore, to entrust an international jurisdiction external to the Community legal order the power of establishing the invalidity of an act of Community law would go beyond what the accession to ECHR requires. It would almost certainly derogate from the principle of the autonomy of the legal order of the European Communities. The EC would indeed be deprived of the possibility to decide on the ways to execute a possible decision of condemnation issued by ECHR.

FIDH SIX POINTS OF RECOMMANDATIONS:

1. no categories of beneficiaries of rights
2. to recall strongly the universal character of human rights
3. to consecrate all human rights (civil, political, economic, social and cultural) within the Charter, and propose an increase of the level of protection of fundamental rights
4. to include the Charter within the Treaties in order to confer it a binding character and open the door to the accession of the EU to the relevant instruments of the Council of Europe, and at least to the ECHR
5. recognition, to allow such an accession, of the legal personality of the Union
6. allowing NGOs to appeal to the ECJ when individual appeal is not possible

⁵ See : « Verdir le Traité III », recently adopted by the main environmental NGOs in preparation of the next IGC, p 7-9.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 18 April 2000CHARTE 4233/00*CONTRIB 107*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the Conference of European Churches with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000.^{1 2}

¹ Conference of European Churches, Church and Society Commission, rue Joseph II 174, B-1000 Brussels.

² This text has been submitted in English language only

CONFERENCE OF EUROPEAN CHURCHES

CHURCH AND SOCIETY COMMISSION

THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS - FIRST SUBMISSION TO THE CONVENTION

1 Introduction

- 1.1 The Conference of European Churches brings together 125 Anglican, Protestant, Old Catholic and Orthodox churches throughout the whole of Europe. The task of its Church and Society Commission includes following developments in the institutions of the European Union both on behalf of all the member churches of the Conference and specifically on behalf of those in member states of the Union.
- 1.2 The Executive Committee of the Church and Society Commission has discussed the initial steps towards the drafting of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and has made a first comment on certain elements of the Charter. The present document has been developed further following comments by members of the Commission's working groups in the light of developments in the Convention drafting the Charter. As the drafting of the Charter is a dynamic process, this document will be submitted to the plenary meeting of the Commission at the beginning of May 2000 which will discuss the matter further, review developments in the Convention which is drafting the Charter and will adopt any further comment necessary on the Charter.
- 1.3 The document has two sections following this introduction. In the section 2 there are a number of remarks relating to more general aspects of the Charter. In the following section 3 there is a more specific discussion of the issue of freedom of thought, conscience and religion including a suggested wording for an article on this subject. The Church and Society Commission would want to stress that it sees the Charter as an important development in the life of the European Union and its member states. It views it as an opportunity to make the Union more real to all those who live within the European Union by ensuring that they are offered a standard of human rights protection in relation to the Union and all its institutions and policies which is as high as they enjoy vis à vis the Member State in which they live.

2 General Comments

- 2.1 On the assumption that the content of the Charter is acceptable, there would be support for a legally binding Charter. Even if the drafting Convention has no clear mandate to prepare a legally binding document, the Charter should be more than an exercise containing only political declarations, however solemn, if it is to meet the expectations of people in the Member States. The Charter should be framed in such a way that it can become a binding part of the European Union treaties.

- 2.2 The Charter should be concerned not with an exhaustive list of general rights but should be directly linked with the actions of the European Union and of member states executing the policies and legislation of the Union. It should, therefore, cover the Common Foreign and Security Policy and the Co-operation in the Fields of Justice and Home Affairs as well as the European Community. A Charter on these lines would have an added value in clearly stating to people resident on the Union's territory that the Union's activities are at least as much linked to fundamental rights as are those of the Member States, all of which have signed and ratified the European Convention on Human Rights. At present there is technically a lower standard of human rights protection with regard to the actions of the European Union and its institutions than there is in relation to the member states. A natural corollary of this could be to amend the Union treaty to allow the European Union itself to adhere to the European Convention on Human Rights which should remain the minimum reference point for human rights throughout Europe. There would certainly need to be, however, a means of ensuring that there was a procedure to ensure that there was no conflict between the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights and no sense of there being two standards of human rights in Europe as a whole which could be used to relativise human rights and deny their universality.
- 2.3 As a pan-European body, the Conference of European Churches hopes that the Charter will be of interest throughout Europe and, in particular, it would expect the fullest possible consultation with and participation of countries currently seeking membership of the European Union. The proposal of the European Parliament's Commission on Constitutional Affairs that such countries should be given observer status in the context of the Convention and that permanent dialogue may be engaged with them in the context of the European Conference is supported.
- 2.4 The possibility of direct access by individuals to the European Court of Justice in case of infringements of rights should be considered. Direct protection of fundamental rights would be seen as an important step towards strengthening judicial control in the EU. An element of direct democracy would then strengthen the relationship between the process of developing of the Charter and deepening the character of European integration. It would be another step towards bringing the European Union closer to those who reside on its territory.
- 2.5 The question of social, economic and cultural rights should be considered in an appropriate way. The churches have a history, at least in recent times, of arguing for social justice and would welcome extensions of rights which give effect to that aim. It is recognised, however, that defining what is appropriate is a difficult task especially if the Charter is to be legally binding. It is essential that any rights granted in a legally binding Charter must be defined in such a way that they can be enforced. Thus provisions relating to equal treatment between women and men, the protection of children and young people and the right to social assistance clearly be made enforceable. It is important, however, that such rights should be expressed in sufficiently general way that the Charter does not have to be revised every time standards are raised. There must be a balance between precision and generality.

- 2.6 Fundamental Rights listed in the Charter should not be limited automatically to EU citizens. Rights of non-EU citizens, migrants, people who are nationals of third countries and asylum seekers need to be considered and there is a need to examine each provision carefully to see whether it requires to be limited to EU Citizens with it is hoped the presumption that whenever possible rights should be extended to the widest group possible. A number of particular concerns are found in this area relating to the enjoyment of the right to asylum and the need for it to have a priority over financial and administrative practice. While it would be unrealistic for persons on the territory of the Union without appropriate documentation to have every right, they are at least entitled to the absolutely fundamental right of being treated fairly and with dignity. These are issues which the Church and Society Commission is currently following up with the Churches Commission for Migrants in Europe.
- 2.7 Nevertheless, there should be a discussion as to whether the preparation of the Charter should also be taken as an opportunity to define the rights of Citizens of the European Union so as to give a real content to the concept first expressed in the Treaty on European Union in 1992. For example, consideration could be given to a right for Citizens of the European Union to vote in one of the member states to which they have a relationship at all levels in addition to their existing right to vote in the lowest level of local elections and in elections to the European Parliament.

3 Freedom of Thought, Conscience and Religion

- 3.1 Christian churches along with other communities of faith and conviction have an interest to see a provision in the Charter on freedom of religion and the right to express faith or conviction individually or collectively. At present the proposals being discussed in the Convention concentrate on statements of a positive character and it is noted that it will later address the question of general or specific clauses expressing limitations on the exercise of rights. For the moment the Church and Society Commission has followed the same pattern and would want to return to the question of limitation clauses at the time when the Convention discusses them.
- 3.2 The following wording is proposed for article 14 of the Convention as an alternative to the text currently being discussed by the Convention:

Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. Freedom of religion includes the public and the private, the individual and the corporate manifestation of belief as well as the right of churches and religious communities to organise and to administer their own affairs according to the laws of the Member States.

- 3.3 The following statement of reasons supports this proposal. Actions of the European Union not only affect how individuals exercise fundamental rights but also religious institutions, especially churches and established religious communities. The European Commission on Human Rights linked to the Council of Europe has in several statements emphasised the right of churches and religious communities to appeal under Article 9 of the European Convention of Human Rights in their own right and not only on behalf of their members. In doing so the Human Rights Commission has in fact recognised that, under Article 9, churches and religious communities can be considered as principals. To avoid ambiguity in law, it is therefore appropriate to include the praxis of these statements in the formulation of Article 14 of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. Furthermore the European Union is bound by the Declaration No. 11 annexed to the Treaty of Amsterdam concerning the status of churches and philosophical and non-confessional organisations. The status which churches and religious associations and communities have in Member States under national law should be respected and not prejudiced. The same applies to philosophical and non-confessional organisations.
- 3.4 Churches and religious communities in the Member States can be organised in many different ways and have different relationships to the state. Such structures and relationships can sometimes be regulated by law or through Church/State agreements. Many churches and religious communities have a high degree of autonomy in organising and administering their own affairs. The way in which new religious and quasi religious communities acquire established status varies from Member State to Member State. It is vital, therefore, to indicate in the Charter how the legal status in the Member States hinders actions in the Union. A reference to national law would be parallel to the proposed wording of Article 13 of the Charter dealing with family life. The right to marry and start a family is also regulated very differently in each Member State and there is, therefore, reference to national law in Article 13. In the same way reference must also be made here to the national law in the Article 14 of the Charter.

April 2000

Conference of European Churches,
Church and Society Commission,
rue Joseph II 174,
B-1000 Bruxelles.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 2 May 2000CHARTE 4234/00*CONTRIB 108*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a submission by the General Council of the Bar of England and Wales.^{1 2}

¹ General Council of the Bar of England and Wales Brussels Office: Avenue de la Joyeuse Entree 1, B-1040 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-230 4810. Fax: +32-2-230 4596.

² This text has been submitted in English language only.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

SUBMISSION BY THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE BAR OF ENGLAND AND WALES [1]

WHAT IS THE CHARTER FOR?

1. An EU Charter of Rights means different things to different people. The purposes which might be served by such a Charter, not all of them consistent with one another, include:

- * Publicising existing rights
- * Guaranteeing new rights
- * Cementing the supremacy of EU over national law
- * Providing the basis for an EU Constitution
- * “Bringing Rights Home” from Strasbourg to the EU

2. The first and most modest of those purposes is suggested by the Presidency Conclusions of the Cologne Council of 3 and 4 June 1999, which identified the need for a Charter to “consolidate” the fundamental rights applicable at Union level “in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union’s citizens”. It was pressed by Lord Goldsmith QC, the UK Government representative at the second plenary meeting of the Drafting Body on 2 February 2000. [2]

3. The more ambitious aim of guaranteeing new rights also derives support from the Cologne and Tampere Conclusions. It is difficult to see why there would need to be discussion of whether the Charter should be integrated into the Treaties, or why such an august Drafting Body should have been convened, [3] if the purpose of the Charter was limited to a publicity exercise of the kind envisaged by the United Kingdom Government. [4] The European Parliament has called for the Charter to have “an innovative character”, [5] and the President of the European Commission has described the drafting of the Charter as providing “a unique opportunity to set up a coherent and effective system of human rights protection in Europe” . [6]

4. The other three purposes identified are concerned more with constitutional matters than with the protection of human rights.

5. The third purpose – cementing the supremacy of EU over national law – recalls the jurisprudence of a number of national constitutional courts, most famously the German Federal Constitutional Court in its Solange I and Solange II cases, to the effect that the supremacy of Community law will be acknowledged only to the extent that the Community provides equivalent protection of fundamental rights to that provided under national constitutional law. [7] The decisions of the German and Danish Supreme Court in their Maastricht cases demonstrate the continued importance of this issue. [8]

6. As to the fourth purpose, the European Parliament has referred to “a mandatory fundamental rights system” as “a fundamental step towards providing the European Union with a democratic constitution”. [9] In the words of the Danish delegate to the Drafting Body, Eurosceptic MEP Jens-Peter Bonde: “Whether we like it or not, we are busy drawing up a Constitution”. [10] The consequences of this are potentially far-reaching and are considered further below. [11]

7. The fifth possible purpose – “bringing rights home” from Strasbourg – engages the delicate relationship between the European Convention of Human Rights and the EU. The adoption of a binding Charter may diminish the effectiveness of the arguments which have consistently been made by the Community institutions and a substantial number of Member States for EU accession to the Convention. [12] It might also give the ECJ the latitude to develop its own human rights jurisprudence, distinct from that of Strasbourg. [13] There are implications here not only for the EU but for the coherence of human rights protection in a greater Europe which already stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific. [14]

THE NEED FOR AN EU CHARTER

8. Whether a Charter is needed depends upon what purpose one wishes it to serve. A comprehensive and fully enforceable Charter of Human Rights might well be considered necessary or at least highly desirable by anyone wishing to see the construction of a federal European Union on the model of a nation state. It would also strengthen the hand of the ECJ as against both those national constitutional courts which have challenged its supremacy on human rights related grounds, and the European Court of Human Rights which has indicated that it will assert jurisdiction over acts falling within the Community sphere if and to the extent that human rights protection in the EU is lacking. [15]

9. We express no opinion on the essentially political question of whether those developments would be desirable or not. We do however comment from a human rights perspective on the issues raised by the first two purposes identified in the opening paragraph of this submission: whether a Charter is necessary in order either to expand or to publicise the protection of human rights in the EU. We shall do so principally in the context of the judicial protection of human rights, though we are mindful that there are many non-judicial dimensions to the question, relating for example to the competence of the Union to integrate human rights into its other policies, and the impact that a Charter would have on the human rights clauses in EU Association Agreements and on the Lome Convention. [16]

Expanding Human Rights Protection

Civil and Political Rights

10. Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union declares the Union to be founded on the principle of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and commits it to respecting fundamental rights as guaranteed by the ECHR and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States.

11. In relation to matters of Community law, justiciable in the ECJ and the Courts of the Member States, that commitment is generally honoured in practice. Under pressure from the courts of (in particular) Germany and Italy, the ECJ has been careful to give effect to fundamental rights, as regards both the acts of the Community institutions themselves [17] and – more recently – the acts of the Member States within the scope of Community law. [18] Though it is always possible to point to cases in which the ECJ wrongly understood the ECHR, [19] it is more difficult to point to a case in which the ECJ has knowingly departed from its requirements.

12. Advocate-General Jacobs was therefore correct when he stated:

“For practical purposes the European Convention of Human Rights can be regarded as part of Community law and can be invoked as such both in this Court and in national courts where Community law is in issue.” [20]

This is notwithstanding the continued non-accession of the Communities to the ECHR. In limited respects, the ECJ has even built upon the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights, notably in acknowledging the right to carry on a business, distinct from the rights in Article 1 of Protocol 1 to the Convention, and in extrapolating Convention principles to cover a right to a name. [21]

13. Any practitioner of EU law would acknowledge that there are gaps in the existing mechanisms for protecting civil and political rights. Some of the more obvious difficulties in this respect are:

- (a) the complete absence of judicial control over the remaining third pillar matters (police and judicial co-operation in criminal matters);
- (b) the highly restrictive standing rules for judicial review of Community acts in the Community courts (in particular, the requirement under Art. 230 (ex 173) of “individual concern”); [22]
- (c) the length of time that a case takes to go through the Community courts; [23] and
- (d) opaque decision-making processes within the Community institutions, coupled with inadequate access to documents.

A further and rather more esoteric gap, identified by the European Court of Human Rights in Matthews v UK, is the absence of any judicial control of human rights violations inherent in the Community Treaties themselves, as they exist or as they may be amended in the future. [24]

14. It does not however follow from the existence of these gaps that the adoption of an EU Charter is an appropriate or necessary way to fill them. The gaps relate not so much to deficiencies in the standards of human rights protection already acknowledged by the ECJ, as to political exclusions of certain areas from those standards and to methods of enforcing such standards as exist. Specific solutions exist for such problems. Thus, the jurisdiction of the ECJ could be extended to second and third pillar matters (as it already has been, by the Treaty of Amsterdam, in relation to immigration and asylum); the rules on standing could be relaxed by Treaty amendment or judicial decision; ECJ procedures could be reformed, and the necessary resources provided; and recent tentative advances towards freedom of information could be accelerated. It appears that in Strasbourg at least, there is even a remedy in relation to unreviewable provisions of Union law which are not Convention-compliant. [25] A number of suggestions have also been made for improving co-ordination between the ECJ and the European Court of Human Rights. [26]

15. It follows that in our opinion, the proposed Charter is not an obvious or necessary solution to such shortcomings as exist in the EU’s protection of civil and political rights.

Economic Social and Cultural Rights

16. There are proponents of economic, social and cultural rights who would like to see them take a more central place in the legal scheme of the EU, and who see the Charter as a means to that end. Though Community law grants many social and economic rights to Union citizens, those rights have been developed in the context of market integration. They have therefore historically concerned non-discriminatory access by Union citizens to such social provision and economic opportunity as Member States choose to make available to their own citizens, rather than the imposition of minimum standards of provision in favour of all those within the jurisdiction of the Member States. Even in those specific fields where minimum standards are now required by Community law (e.g. equal pay and treatment, working time, parental leave, industrial democracy), such standards have been motivated to a large extent by concerns to create a level playing field for businesses within the Union.

17. Economic and social rights of a more general nature are still perceived, in most if not all Member States, as beyond the reach of hard law. Such rights have traditionally been regarded as little more than exhortations to governments and decision-makers. They have very weak international enforcement mechanisms, [27] and, at the domestic level, courts have either lacked jurisdiction, or have hesitated to interfere with what are held to be political decisions, often involving the allocation of resources.

Existing Conventions have the potential to guide the development of EU law in this field, as Article 136 (ex 117) of the EC Treaty already acknowledges with its express reference to fundamental social rights such as those set out in the European Social Charter (1961) and the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (1989). The European Social Charter has also been referred to on a number of occasions by the ECJ, its Advocates-General and the Court of First Instance. [28] However, responsibility for social, educational and welfare provision still rests overwhelmingly with the Member States rather than the Union. The last Inter-Governmental Conference showed itself unwilling to incorporate into the Treaty a specific list of social and economic rights, as had been proposed by the Comité des Sages responsible for the report prepared for the IGC on a Europe of Civic and Social Rights. In this field, the Union will clearly have to proceed with caution.

18. The universal nature of most social, economic and cultural rights is still sufficiently controversial for the question of whether there is a gap in the protection of social, economic and cultural rights in the Union to be essentially a political one. Even if it is accepted that such a gap exists (because, for example, it is considered to be unconscionable that anyone resident in the Union should be unhoused, or unfed, or paid below a certain level) it has not so far as we know been suggested that the Conventions already referred to in Article 117 of the Treaty are inadequate as a statement of the relevant rights.

19. Debate is likely to centre rather on the extent to which some such rights should be rendered fully justiciable in the Community court and in the courts of the Member States in their capacity as courts of Community law. When dealing with rights which are so general in scope, and so potentially expensive in their application, it may well be that the best way of achieving the full justiciability of particular social, economic or cultural rights would be by addressing each issue in the specific Treaty context in which it arises.

Conclusion

20. We favour measures aimed at ensuring the greater effectiveness of human rights protection in the Community, but doubt the utility of the proposed EU Charter as a significant means to that end. Catalogues of fundamental rights are a necessary foundation for any modern legal order: but such catalogues already exist, in the Treaties themselves and in the various human rights Conventions already referred to in the Treaties. The energies being devoted to the formulation of the Charter might be more productively employed on less glamorous but more practical projects aimed at improving the effectiveness of human rights enforcement in the Community.

21. We are strengthened in those views by the conclusions of the EUI Final Report on the Project on the European Union and Human Rights, and by the conclusions of the Comité des Sages for whom the Final Report constituted the principal reference document. [29] No fewer than 56 specific recommendations are made in the Report, ranging from EU accession to the ECHR to procedural reforms and the introduction of detailed measures giving full effect to the anti-discrimination provision, Article 13 EC. The formulation of a Charter of Rights is conspicuous by its absence, both from the Report and from the recommendations of the Comité des Sages.

22. The final paragraph of the Report deserves quotation at length:

“The principal shortcoming of the EU’s human rights policy is not a lack of novelty or grand gestures. It is a consistent reluctance to come to grips with some basic home truths about the indivisibility of internal and external human rights policy, the need for a clear and unambiguous commitment at all levels, and the need for effective political and bureaucratic structures to give effect to those commitments. The various components of the recipe for achieving those objectives have been evident for a number of years. Until those indispensable building blocks are put into place by the Member States and the institutions of the Union there will be little point in creating grand new designs for their own sake.”

We agree. The “grand gesture” of the Charter may serve a political purpose, but it is difficult to see it having much of a tangible effect on human rights protection in the EU.

Publicising Human Rights Protection

23. The United Kingdom Government’s alternative conception of the Charter is of a document that does no more than publicise the existing protection of human rights. Lord Goldsmith QC envisages a document that is “capable of being pinned to the wall in every government office and company headquarters to remind everyone of the rights which must be respected”. [30] His suggested draft structure would contain (in Part A) a simple list of the existing rights enjoyed within the EU, and (in Part B) a statement of the legal basis for each right and of the conditions applicable to it.

24. The utility of such a document should not be over-emphasised. It would presumably not be given Treaty status, and could be no substitute for the practical measures of the type identified in the Final Project Report of the EUI. Nonetheless, we would applaud any document, officially-endorsed or otherwise, which renders the arcane world of European Union and human rights law more comprehensible to the ordinary citizen, or even to the ordinary lawyer. There are many barristers’ chambers and solicitors’ firms that could benefit from such a document, and none – we suspect – that would have no need for it. A Charter along those lines could have a useful role to play, particularly if accompanied by a wide-ranging education programme, though that role would be a far more limited one than appears to be envisaged by the establishment of the drafting apparatus and procedures that are currently in operation.

THE STATUS OF THE CHARTER

25. A Charter that took the form of a restatement or paraphrase of existing rights would be of the nature of a Treaty commentary rather than a Treaty provision. To give such a document Treaty status would appear to be pointless and even counter-productive. It would duplicate rights already embedded in the Treaty, and could open the way for arguments that established rights were to be construed in the light of the paraphrased version.

26. On the contrary assumption that the Charter that is proclaimed in December 2000 seeks to expand existing levels of human rights protection, the decision as to whether it should be given Treaty status is more difficult and more political. Any concluded view at this stage, when the content of the Charter is entirely unknown, would be premature. One comment may however be in order.

27. Whether to give Treaty status to whatever Charter emerges from the political process seems to us to be a question of greater importance for the future constitution of Europe than it is for the effectiveness of judicial human rights protection within the Union.

28. So far as human rights protection is concerned, the ECJ – and national courts applying Community law – may choose to apply the provisions of the Charter regardless of whether or not it is actually incorporated in the Treaty, and are likely to do so where necessary to achieve justice in the individual case. [31]

29. At the constitutional level, however, there can be no doubt but that to give Treaty status to a free-standing catalogue of fundamental and other rights would assist those who see the European Union developing into an autonomous State. It is not fanciful to suppose that the EU will some day acquire legal personality and a constitution of its own. [32] Any modern constitution may be expected to rest upon a catalogue of fundamental rights. The ECJ currently borrows the fundamental rights to which it gives effect from international Conventions (principally, the ECHR) and from the constitutional traditions of the Member States. A “patriated” catalogue of EU rights, tailored to the specific requirements of the EU, would strengthen the hand of those who wish for the EU to develop on the traditional model of the federal nation State.

30. The manner in which such a catalogue is introduced might also have far-reaching implications for the balance of power within the constitution of the Union. In particular, to the extent that a catalogue of fundamental rights is accorded the status of a “basic law”, whether by the express words of the treaties or by the European Court of Justice in interpreting the Treaties, it could provide a benchmark by which the ECJ could examine the constitutionality not only of secondary legislation and Community action but of subsequent Treaty amendments proposed by the Member States – and perhaps even of existing Treaty provisions. [33] In that event, it would no longer be true to say of the Member States that they are, in the well-known phrase of the German Federal Constitutional Court, “the Masters of the Treaties”.

31. We conclude that if the function of the Charter is to publicise or comment upon existing rights, there would be no point in giving it Treaty status. If its function is to guarantee new rights, the question of whether it should have Treaty status is an essentially political one, with important consequences for the future constitution of Europe, including the balance of power between the ECJ and the Member States.

THE SCOPE OF THE CHARTER

32. Under this heading, a number of issues arise upon which we comment only briefly.

On whom should the Charter impose obligations?

33. There appear to be at least two issues here, which will arise in the event that the Charter is given legal force: how if at all the public authorities upon whom any obligations will principally rest are to be defined; and the extent to which, if at all, the rights enshrined in the Charter should apply also in legal relations between individuals.

34. As to the first of those issues, there are a number of different contexts in which the concept of public authority falls to be defined in the law of the EU. The developing case law of the ECJ on those emanations of the State against which directly effective provisions of law may be enforced would provide the obvious model. [34] This is an area where the ECJ could sensibly be allowed to develop its own jurisprudence.

35. As to the second issue, the concept of Drittwirkung, or the horizontal enforcement of human rights, is a notoriously complex one. Whilst Drittwirkung is not a requirement of the ECHR, nothing in the ECHR prevents the States from conferring Drittwirkung upon Convention rights and freedoms within their national legal systems. [35] Whether the EU will wish to do so is another matter.

36. The appropriate course – as chosen by the United Kingdom in the Human Rights Act 1998 - may well be to impose any obligations against “public authorities” and to leave it to the courts to decide the extent to which the courts, as public authorities themselves, find it appropriate to give horizontal effect to particular obligations. The courts may however be assisted by some appropriate words in whatever Charter is drafted. Sir Sydney Kentridge QC has made a persuasive plea for the advantages of Mittelbaredrittwirkung, as practised by the courts of South Africa under the Constitution of 1996, whereby human rights have an indirect influence on the development of all jurisprudence by means of a constitutional requirement that “when developing the common law ... every court must promote the spirit, purport, and objects of the Bill of Rights”. [36]

To whom should the Charter give rights?

37. To the extent that the Charter merely rehearses rights granted under the Treaty to EU or EEA nationals (e.g. the right to move freely between States and to work without discrimination), there can be no objection to so limiting those rights in the form in which they may be summarised, reproduced or extended in the Charter.

38. Where fundamental rights are at stake, however, we can see no justification for limiting them to nationals of the EU. Ever since the UN Declaration of 1948, the universality of human rights has been recognised as inherent in the very nature of human beings. The ECHR requires Contracting States to secure the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention to “everyone within their jurisdiction”. The Charter should do the same.

Should the Charter apply to all three pillars?

39. The Charter should in our opinion be presumed to apply to all EU law that is justiciable before the ECJ and national courts in their capacity as courts of EU law. [37] Some areas currently excluded – in particular, police co-operation under the third pillar – have the potential to raise serious human rights issues. To the extent that there are legitimate sensitivities about judicial intrusion, it would seem appropriate to deal with these by the terms in which the rights themselves are formulated rather than by a blanket exclusion of whole policy areas from the courts and from the Charter.

THE CONTENT OF THE CHARTER

40. If the purpose of the Charter is to publicise existing human rights protection, as the United Kingdom Government believes, the content of the Charter will be self-evident: a catalogue of all existing rights, whether derived from the law of the EU, from international human rights conventions or from the constitutional principles of the Member States.

41. If the purpose of the Charter is to “patriate” Strasbourg rights, including principally the ECHR, we consider that any change to the wording of long-established Convention provisions should be avoided, and that express words should be included (as they were in s2. Human Rights Act 1998) requiring the ECJ and other courts applying EU law to take account of any relevant judgment, decision, declaration or advisory opinion of the European Court of Human Rights. [38]

42. There are three reasons for this view. First, to have two similar but distinct catalogues of fundamental rights and freedoms, which would sometimes be applicable in the same case, would cause confusion within the EU, even to professionals in the field. Secondly, it would tend to diminish the attraction of the Council of Europe and its Conventions to the States of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. Thirdly, it would make it more difficult for the EU in the future to accede to the ECHR, a step which we believe could well prove to be a positive one.

43. It is sometimes pointed out that Contracting Parties to the Council of Europe have their own national catalogues of fundamental rights, distinct from those in the ECHR, and suggested that there is no reason why the EU should not do the same. That argument overlooks the fact that the EU is not a contracting party to the ECHR, and therefore not subject to its overall control. The political reality may well prove to be that once it has its own distinct Charter of fundamental rights, the EU will diverge from the Strasbourg model with unfortunate effects for the remainder of Europe.

44. To the extent that the Charter includes rights not so far formulated in any Council of Europe or other international convention, such rights should so far as possible reflect international thinking. For example, if as has been suggested a freestanding non-discrimination requirement is to be included in the Charter, its formulation should take careful account of the negotiations that are taking place within the Council of Europe as regards the formulation of an equivalent requirement. [39]

45. We are asked, finally, about the role of subsidiarity in a Charter of EU Rights. Subsidiarity arguments may be influential in arguing for the non-inclusion of a particular right in the Charter, or for the manner in which a particular right is expressed. Once the Charter exists, however, we doubt that the concept will have much relevance. Rights contained in the EU Treaties are presumed to apply equally to all Member States: derogations are granted only exceptionally and for time-limited periods. Similarly, the derogations and reservations entered by Contracting Parties to the ECHR are relatively few in number, and new adherents to the ECHR are in many cases being required to accede to Protocols that even long-standing members did not ratify for many years. [40]

46. There may be room for Charter standards to be applied in different ways in different Member States. That room is however likely to be limited, and would be better defined in terms of margin of appreciation (broadly, the tolerance of national conditions that is exercised by a supranational court) rather than subsidiarity (the principle that rules should be adopted at the closest practicable level to the people). Even the “colonial clause” of the ECHR [41] has been narrowly construed: a similar clause could be contained in the Charter, but it would be unrealistic to expect it to have a wide application within the EU.

CONCLUSION

47. Few independent commentators and few lawyers practising in the field would have put an EU Charter of Rights anywhere near the top of their lists of useful initiatives for improving the effectiveness of human rights protection in the EU. Such gaps as we are aware of in the protection of human rights in the EU could have been filled, given the political will, in more focussed and more effective ways.

48. The constitutional implications of an EU Charter are at least as important as the human rights implications. Two of these stand out. First, a Charter has the potential to weaken the close bonds between the EU and the human rights enforcement machinery of the Council of Europe. We hope that this will not be allowed to happen. It would have been preferable in many ways if the EU had chosen to go in the opposite direction by committing itself to accession to the ECHR. Secondly, a Charter with Treaty status has the potential to boost the evolution of the EU as a self-standing federation on a nation-state model, and to increase the power of the ECJ at the expense of the Member States. On that essentially political issue we express no view.

49. Against that background, it is easy to understand why the United Kingdom Government has taken the minimalist approach of support for a Charter which would be nothing more than an informative catalogue of existing rights. There would be modest value in such a Charter, though it would hardly deserve such a grand name. It remains to be seen whether it will be sufficient to satisfy the political appetite in some quarters for more.

9 February 2000

[1] Written evidence on behalf of the Bar Council International Relations Committee, Bar Human Rights Committee, and the Bar European Group as submitted to the European Communities Committee, Sub-committee (Law and Institutions), House of Lords, England. This joint submission was drafted by David Anderson Q.C. with substantial assistance from Mathew Heim, Jemima Stratford and Margaret Gray, February 9, 2000.

[2] At the time of submitting this submission, the minutes of this plenary meeting are not available and we are unaware of its conclusions.

[3] Annex to the Presidency Conclusions of the Tampere European Council, 15 and 16 October 1999.

[4] Christian Democrat Ernst Hirsch Ballin, representing the Dutch Parliament, commented on Lord Goldsmith's proposal "We are not here to draw up a brochure to promote Europe but to draw up a legal text, transposable into law:" Agence Europe No. 7648, 4 February 2000.

[5] Resolution annexed to Draft Report of 10 January 2000.

[6] "Added Value and Shared Values", Speech to Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, Strasbourg, 25 January 2000.

[7] See, generally, Slaughter Sweet and Weiler, The European Courts and National Courts – Doctrine and Jurisprudence (Hart, 1998).

[8] [1994] 1 CMLR 57 and [1999] 3 CMLR 854.

[9] Draft Resolution on drawing up a Charter, 10 January 2000, last recital.

[10] Agence Europe No. 7648, 4 February 2000.

[11] See paragraphs 29-30, below.

[12] The Community was held to lack competence to acceded in Opinion 2/94 [1996] ECR I-1759; but the position could be reversed by Treaty amendment at any time.

[13] We are not aware of any group or institution which has overtly pressed "independence from Strasbourg" as a reason for adopting a binding Charter. However there are substantial sensitivities on the point within the Council of Europe: see the Resolution of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly of 25 January 2000, with its conclusion that "the existence of two systems of human rights protection in Europe would ... run the risk of inconsistency between their case-law, weaken the Council of Europe Court of Human Rights and be detrimental to legal certainty" (press release on Council of Europe website).

[14] There are 41 Contracting Parties to the ECHR, with a total population of more than 800 million, as against 370 million in the 15 Member States of the EU.

[15] M & Co. v Germany 64 DR 138 (1990); Matthews v United Kingdom, Judgment of 18 February 1999 (see further fn. 24 below).

[16] See, e.g., Alston and Weiler, "An 'ever closer union' in need of a human rights policy: The European Union and human rights' in The EU and Human Rights (ed. Alston, OUP 1999). That chapter is an amended version of the Final Project Report of the EUI Project on the EU and Human Rights which was the principal reference document used by the Comité des Sages in “Leading by Example: a Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000” (EUI 1998).

[17] Case 26/69 Stauder [1969] ECR 419, 425.

[18] Case 5/88 Wachauf [1989] ECR 2609, 2639.

[19] The classic examples are Joined Cases 46/87 and 227/88 Hoechst v Commission [1989] ECR 2859 (application of Article 8 ECHR to business premises) and Case 374/87 Orkem v Commission [1989] ECR 3283 (privilege against self-incrimination: judgment implicitly criticised by European Court of Human Rights in Funke (1993) A 256-A).

[20] Case C-84/95 Bosphorus [1996] ECR I-3953, 3972 para 53.

[21] Case C-168/91 Konstantinidis, per Jacobs A-G (though see, contra, Gulmann A-G in Case C-2/92 Bostock [1994] ECR I-955, fn. 12).

[22] To some extent this gap is remedied by the opportunity to assert Community rights in the national courts, coupled with the availability of the procedure for a preliminary ruling under Art. 234 (ex 177) EC. However there are significant drawbacks to this method of attacking acts and measures of the Community institutions, notably the lack of suitability of the reference procedure for the finding of fact (as to which, see Jacobs A-G in Case C-188/92 TWD [1994] ECR I-833) and the time which a reference takes even in an urgent case.

[23] In Case C-185/95P Baustahlgewebe, Judgment of 17 December 1998, the ECJ characterised a delay of more than 4 years by the Court of First Instance as a violation of the requirement in Article 6(1) ECHR of a trial within a reasonable time. In Pafitis v Greece, Judgment of 26 February 1998, the European Court of Human Rights characterised the 32-month period that it took for a preliminary ruling to be made as “relatively long”

[24] Matthews concerned a provision denying the people of Gibraltar the right to vote in European elections which was (by Council decision) incorporated into the EC Treaty and was therefore not subject to challenge in the ECJ. The Strasbourg Court ruled that the provision violated the ECHR. The case marks a new willingness on the part of Strasbourg to hold the Member States to account for their participation in EU decisions in respect of which the judicial structure of the Union provides insufficient remedies. It also creates a dilemma for the ECJ, which may not disregard or overturn the Community Treaties and which therefore appears to lack the jurisdiction to follow the Strasbourg ruling.

[25] Another possibility would be for the ECJ to assert its own jurisdiction to review Treaty provisions for compatibility with fundamental rights, a course that might be open to it were the Community to accede to the ECHR. Indeed even in advance of such accession, it would have to decide whether to give effect to the Convention over a Treaty provision if – as is possible – the subject-matter of the Matthews case were ever to come before it. Such an assertion of jurisdiction would have fundamental consequences for the ultimate balance of power in the Union: see paragraph 30, below.

[26] We are not attracted by the suggestion of a reference procedure modelled on Article 234 EC whereby the ECJ could consult the European Court of Human Rights on Convention issues (see e.g. Schermers (1990) 27 CMLRev 97-105; Lenaerts (1991) 16 ELRev 367 at 380). This could only add to the already lengthy delays that afflict almost all litigation in Luxembourg. There would be much to be said though for more contact between the two Courts, and for the circulation of judges between them.

[27] For example, the application of the European Social Charter is submitted solely to a system of supervision. There are national reports every two years which are examined by a Committee of Independent Experts, a Governmental Committee and a Parliamentary Assembly which adopts an Opinion. A recommendation may be made to a Contracting Party by the Committee of Ministers. The Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers does not even provide for a system of supervision, but simply for an annual report by the Commission. It is accompanied by an action programme, but progress towards implementation has been slow.

[28] See e.g. Case 24/86 Blaizot [1988] ECR 379; Case 236/87 Bergemann [1988] ECR 5125; Case C-192/89 Sevince [1990] ECR I-3461; Case T-45/90 Speybrouck [1992] ECR II-33.

[29] “Leading by Example: A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000” (EUI, 1998).

[30] Address to Second Plenary Meeting of the Charter of Rights Convention, 2 February 2000.

[31] That is demonstrated by the current position of the ECJ in relation to the ECHR, which does not have binding legal force in the Community legal order but is for all practical purposes applied as if it did: see the comment of Jacobs A-G in the Bosphorus case cited at paragraph 12, above.

[32] Commentators have argued that such a constitution already exists: but it is difficult to accept that the Treaties establish a constitution in the true sense of an instrument that creates a legal system without deriving its own validity from any other legal system. See generally T. Hartley, Constitutional Problems of the European Union (Hart, 1999) at pp. 179-181.

[33] Some of the academic literature relating to this possibility is referred to by T. Hartley, op. cit., p. 146 at footnote 75.

[34] See, e.g., Case C-188/89 Foster v British Gas [1990] ECR I-3313.

[35] See the discussion in van Dijk and van Hoof, Theory and Practice of the European Convention of Human Rights (3rd edn., 1998), pp. 22-26.

[36] “Lessons from South Africa” in The Impact of the Human Rights Bill on English Law (ed. Markesinis, OUP 1998) at pp. 27-28.

[37] That is the current position: see e.g. Case C-299/95 Kremzow [1997] ECR I-2969, in which the ECJ refused to rule on questions involving fundamental rights because they arose in an area outside the ambit of Community law. There is an interesting debate, more appropriately resolved by courts than by the draftsmen of Charters, as regards the circumstances in which an act of a Member State falls within the ambit of EU law for the purposes of the application of general principles, including fundamental rights: R v MAFF ex p First City Trading [1997] 1 CMLR 250 (Laws J).

[38] Clearly, the Charter would have to be construed as a living instrument, as is the ECHR itself by the European Court of Human Rights.

[39] Article 1 of Draft Protocol 12 to the ECHR. The current draft would extend the scope of the non-discrimination clause contained in Article 14 from the rights and freedoms of the ECHR itself to “any right set forth by law”.

[40] Notably Protocol 6 on the abolition of the death penalty, which the United Kingdom ratified only very recently.

[41] Article 56(3), ex 63(3), which provides: “The provisions of this Convention shall be applied in [certain territories for whose international relations a Contracting Party is responsible] with due regard, however, to local requirements.”

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 18 April 2000CHARTE 4236/00*CONTRIB 109*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a preliminary statement of the Union of Industrial and Employers' Confederations of Europe with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000.^{1 2}

¹ UNICE: rue Joseph II box 4, B-1000 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-237 6511. Fax: +32-2-231 1445.

E-mail: main@unice.be

² This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

Union of Industrial and Employers' Confederations of Europe
Union des Confédérations de l'Industrie et des Employeurs d'Europe

27 March 2000

Preliminary UNICE statement on a

Charter of Fundamental Rights

1. UNICE supports the objective of the Cologne European Council to establish a charter on fundamental rights and make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens. Article 6 paragraph 2 of the Treaty on the European Union already asserts that the Union shall respect fundamental rights as a general principle of the Community law. This objective is important not only for EU citizens but also for citizens of countries aspiring to join the EU.
2. Undoubtedly the proposed Charter should unambiguously recognise those rights and freedoms which are generally considered to be fundamental and inalienable such as the respect of dignity of the human person, the right to life, to liberty and security, or the right to a fair trial.
3. The Charter should also include other freedoms and rights associated with democracy such as freedom of assembly, freedom of expression, and the right to own and enjoy property, including intangible assets such as intellectual and industrial property.
4. In drafting the Charter, recognition should be given to the vital need for Europe to remain competitive in a global and open trading system, since this is the best way to guarantee social well being and employment. The Treaty's four fundamental freedoms - free movement of persons, goods, services and capital- should be explicitly included in the Charter, as these freedoms represent an important dimension of European citizenship. In this context, the Charter should acknowledge the key issues of freedom of enterprise and trade. Should the Charter encourage the free flow of information, this ought to be balanced against the right to privacy and data protection, including the protection of business secrets and proprietary information.
5. The application of the Charter should be limited to the Institutions and bodies of the European Union within the framework of the powers and tasks assigned to them by the European Treaties. It should respect present competences of the European Union and should not extend existing powers. The obligation to respect fundamental rights should be a constraint on the Community's action and not a licence to legislate.

6. The Charter should:
- make the existing human rights and fundamental freedoms for European citizens more visible;
 - be consistent and compatible with international conventions and Member States' national constitutions;
 - be applicable to the Union's institutions within the context of EU legislative competencies.
 - give a clear statement of the common values of democracy, tolerance and liberty for all while at the same time respecting Europe's diversity;
 - be clear and simple for maximum public impact.
7. The credibility and broad public acceptance of the Charter could be threatened if expectations are raised that cannot be fulfilled. Fundamental rights and political aspirations must be clearly delineated. In addition it should be remembered that the social and employment chapters of the Treaties have already set out the powers of the Union to act on a European level. Any change should be a specifically inter-governmental matter. It should be kept in mind that hitherto the Member States have specifically excluded the topics of pay, right of association, as well as the right to strike or impose a lockout from EU legislative competence.
8. Whatever status is given to the Charter it is essential that it should not give rise to legal uncertainty. The Charter should neither compromise existing rights nor raise conflicts of jurisprudence. In particular, overlaps of jurisdiction should be avoided, and it is important that the Charter should not raise new questions of responsibilities of the existing European Courts.
9. A forward-looking Charter should not miss the unique opportunity to express Europe's readiness to meet the upcoming challenges of developing a well-functioning market economy throughout the European Union. Therefore the freedom of establishment and entrepreneurship should be fully recognised in order to ensure the development of a democratic and enlarged Union. In focussing on the rights of European citizens, it is vital that the rights of European undertakings are also respected. Finally, UNICE believes that the Charter should specifically recognise the value and richness of diversity in Europe.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 18 April 2000CHARTE 4237/00*CONTRIB 110*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a statement of the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages (EBLUL) with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

Statement of the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languagesⁱ on European languages in the Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union

A. Preamble

Having regard to the principle of non-discrimination as a fundamental principle of human rights, established in conventional and customary law binding the member states of the European Unionⁱⁱ; recognising that this principle must be essential to the Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union; maintaining that freedom of expression and the respect for cultural identity as established in international law include the protection of linguistic rightsⁱⁱⁱ;

emphasizing that the protection of cultural and linguistic diversity in the European Union is a matter of concern to all citizens of the member states^{iv};

the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages wishes the following principles to be incorporated in the Charter of Fundamental Rights for the European Union:

B. Article

1.
European Citizens have the right to maintain and develop their own language and culture, in community with the other members of their group, as an expression of the cultural and linguistic diversity that is a common heritage of Europe.

2.
Within its spheres of competence, the European Union shall promote the effective exercise of this right.

3.
No policies and measures of the European Union shall be adopted or applied in ways that are detrimental to the linguistic diversity of Europe.

C. Justification

1.

“European Citizens have the right to maintain and develop their own language and culture, in community with the other members of their group, as an expression of the cultural and linguistic diversity that is a common heritage of Europe.”

Justification

This principle is already established in other documents binding the member states of the European Union^v.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union should lead EU member States to elaborate policy and law protecting and promoting official, State, and regional or minority languages of the member states.

This task of definition is all the more urgent, as the European Union through the process of enlargement will meet demands to address the protection of linguistic rights in the applicant countries.

2.

“Within its spheres of competence, the European Union shall promote the effective exercise of this right.”

Justification

Within its spheres of competence, the European Union already deals with matters concerning linguistic diversity^{vi}.

The development of the Regions of Europe necessarily has a cultural dimension.

European integration will in the future need support of further policies in this field, especially on plurilinguistic education and promotion of cultural diversity in media and arts.

3.

“No policies and measures of the European Union shall be adopted or applied in ways that are detrimental to the linguistic diversity of Europe.”

Justification

Measures concerning unification of the Common Market of the European Union present a risk of conflict with the principle of protection of local languages.

There is need for an instrument to balance harmonisation and integration with respect for linguistic and cultural diversity.

The suggested instrument would commit the EU to a general principle of respect for linguistic diversity, supplementing more detailed approaches developed through other instruments^{vii}.

Notes

ⁱ The European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages (EBLUL, www.eblul.org) is an independent Non-Governmental Organization. It acts and speaks on behalf of the more than 40 million European Union citizens who speak an autochthonous language other than the main official language of the State in which they live. The Bureau's general aim is to promote the autochthonous lesser used (regional, minority and non-territorial) languages of the member states of the European Union and the linguistic rights of those who speak these languages. One of the Bureau's goals is to define legal frameworks that could be applied to authorities at all levels in order to guarantee all citizens belonging to a linguistic minority all of the services they need to develop and use their language in everyday life. The members' associations are organized within Member State Committees. At present, the European Bureau is made up of 13 Committees which represent the interests of the various communities (Portugal and Greece are excepted). The Member State Committees comprise cultural organizations, official institutions and other bodies active in the field of regional or minority languages and cultures. EBLUL is in special consultative status with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations; in operational relations with UNESCO; and having consultative status with the Council of Europe. It works in close co-operation with the European Parliament and takes part in the meetings of the Intergroup for Regional and Minority Languages. It has active relations with the Committee of the Regions.

ⁱⁱ United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1948, article 2 ; Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Council of Europe 1950, article 14; Document of the Copenhagen Meeting of the Conference on the Human Dimension of the CSCE, 1990, paragraphs 30 – 40

ⁱⁱⁱ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, United Nations 1966, article 27; Convention on the Rights of the Child, United Nations 1989, articles 29 and 30; Convention Against Discrimination in Education, United Nations 1960, article 5; Document of the Copenhagen Meeting of the Conference on the Human Dimension of the CSCE 1990, paragraphs 32, 33, 34, 35, 40

^{iv} European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, Council of Europe 1992; Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, Council of Europe 1995

^v International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, United Nations 1966, article 27; Convention on the Rights of the Child, United Nations 1989, articles 29 and 30; Convention Against Discrimination in Education, United Nations 1960, article 5; Document of the Copenhagen Meeting of the Conference on the Human Dimension of the CSCE 1990, paragraphs 32, 33, 34, 35, 40

^{vi} Proposal for a decision of the European Parliament and of the Council on European Year of Languages 2001, COM(1999) 485 final

^{vii} European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, Council of Europe 1992, articles 1 and 2; Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, Council of Europe 1995, article 5

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 19 April 2000CHARTE 4239/00*CONTRIB 112*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a position by the European Union of Christian Democratic Workers (EUCDW) with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French, German and English languages.

Position of the EUCDW in view of the inclusion of Fundamental Social Rights in the Charter of human rights with the objective to be included in the EU Treaty

12.04.00

The EUCDW considers social rights as a necessary addition to the freedom rights. Basic freedom rights can only be practised when a minimum of social security is ensured. Fundamental Social Rights should be considered equally as liberties. On the contrary of "classical" freedom rights, which represent in principle "defensive rights" against the state, we demand the realisation of freedom with the help of the state.

A point of crucial importance is the exigence of work. Work is more than just a job, more than only a security of material existence. It is also a crucial factor for the own development, the own satisfaction. It also opens the chance to participate in the formation of our society. For these reasons everyone has the duty and the right to building within his own possibilities.

A number of rights result from those considerations. Those rights have to avoid that working conditions are beneath human dignity and prevent the temptation to see work only as good.

In this field, the EUCDW requires first of all the recognition of the following rights in the European Union:

- the Universal Declaration of Human Rights
- The European Convention of Human Rights
- The ILO Declaration on fundamental principles and rights at work
- The Community Charter of Workers' Fundamental Social Rights
- the above mentioned European Social Charter
- The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

The EUCDW also demands a broadly catalogue of Fundamental Social Rights, which covers beyond the rights of Workers, also the rights related to the entire life situation of persons:

- The right for families to legal, economic and social protection
- The right to equal treatment and equal chances for men and women
- The prohibition of all forms of discrimination based on sex, racial or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age and sexual orientation
- The right for disadvantaged groups to be integrated into the job market and society.
- The prohibition of Child labour.
- The right to a large social protection, which guarantees a human existence in particular in the case of unemployment, illness, care dependence and old age.
- The right to a minimum income, which makes a human existence possible.
- The right to education and training as well as lifelong education in accordance with the abilities of each person.
- The right to free choice of work.
- The right to health and safety protection at work.
- The national and trans-national right of freedom of association, collective bargaining and trade union action, including the right to cross-border solidarity action and strike.
- The right to information, consultation and participation at work on national as well as cross-border level.
- The right to conservation, protection and the improvement of the quality of the environment, to protection of the consumers and the users against an endangerment of their health and as well security against unfair commercial practices
- The right to free movement, also the third country nationals who are legally resident in the EU.
- The right to family reunification for all those who are legally in the EU.

The EUCDW demands the legally and binding inclusion of the Fundamental Social Rights in the new EU Treaty. The EUCDW is convinced that those rights, included in the Treaty, must be the best guarantee for the protection of the citizens.

For the EUCDW, respect for fundamental rights is a criterion for the adhesion to the European Union. Additionally, it is of the opinion that sanctions must be foreseen, in case of infringement of those rights.

The EUCDW also emphasises that each one which enjoys a right, has also the obligation to respect those rights: for the protection of human dignity, in particular in order to guarantee the basic values of liberty, solidarity and democracy.

European Union of Christian Democratic Workers
European Parliament ASP 2 F 154
Tel: +32 2 284 2907/ +32 2 284 33 29
Fax: +32 2 284 49 57
E-mail: NMeignen@europarl.eu.int
Bank: BACOB, Brussels 799-5503750-69

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 19 April 2000CHARTE 4240/00*CONTRIB 113*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Children's Network (EURONET) with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

EURONET
The European Children's Network
Place de Luxembourg 1
B-1050 Bruxelles
Tel: +32 2 512 4500
Fax: +32 2 512 6673
E-mail: savethechildren@skynet.be

12 April 2000

To: The Convention to draft the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights
Mr Roman Herzog, Chair of the Convention
c/o European Council of Ministers
175 Rue de la Loi
1048 Bruxelles

Contribution by the European Children's Network

Dear Mr Herzog

Re: Note Convent 13 and 18 from the Praesidium: Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

We are writing to follow up the most recent note from the Praesidium to enclose our comments and proposals for the draft Article on the Rights of the Child.

We welcome the fact that there has been a specific commitment by the Convention to include an Article on the Rights of the Child (given in the statement of reasons for Article 13 in Convent 13). This would help ensure that the EU is in line with international commitments made by member states when ratifying the Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989. It also recognises the fact that some of the rights in the Charter would not be appropriate or applicable to children and that an article is therefore needed on the rights of the child. A more detailed explanation of the need for a reference to children's rights in the Charter of Rights is contained in our submission to the Convention. (Recognition of the Rights of the Child in the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Submission from Euronet).

We have pleasure in enclosing a number of possible suggestions for texts of the article on the Rights of the Child.

The first proposal is suggested for inclusion in the introduction as an overall principle on human rights for children:

“The Union shall respect and promote children’s rights, as guaranteed by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child adopted on 20 November 1989.”

The second proposal is to be placed within the different categories of rights:

“The European Union shall ensure that all EU activities are fully compatible with the principle of the best interests of the child as a primary consideration as expressed in the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.”

Our preference is for an article in the Charter which contains an explicit reference to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, since this is the most comprehensive statement of children’s rights and has almost universal ratification.

We have noted that several members of the Convention have tabled amendments concerning children and youth and education. We would like to refer members of the Convention to the Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989. This Convention, adopted in 1989, is the fullest contemporary international expression adopted on human rights for children below the age of 18 years and expresses an holistic view of the child.

At this stage we are also writing to express our views about the proposals for Article 16 – Right to education (Convent 13). We believe that Articles 28, 29 and 30 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child deal more appropriately with the question of education of the child in line with religious, and philosophical convictions (a copy is enclosed). Article 30 states that a child belonging to a religious, linguistic minority or of indigenous origin shall not be denied the right to enjoy his or her own culture, profess and practise his or her own religion or use his or her own language. Similarly Article 14 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child states that states parties shall respect the right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. In this respect we also would like to refer to Articles 2, 3 and 12 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, which concern the principles of non-discrimination, the best interests of the child and the child’s right to express its opinion.

We therefore believe a better way of phrasing this would be:

No child shall be denied the right to education, which promotes “his or her own cultural identity, religion, language and values and the national values in the country in which the child is living, the country from which he or she may originate and for civilizations different from his or her own.”

An additional suggestion on the right to education we have is:

“Every child has the right to education”

“Children of minority communities and indigenous populations have the right to enjoy their own culture and to practise their own religion and language”.

We would also like to comment on your recent proposal for social rights in Convent 18. Article VIII refers to the protection of children and young people in respect of employment and working conditions. We would like to include a reference here to the ILO Convention 182, which aims to ban the worst forms of child labour. We see this Article as complementary to the general Article on the Rights of the Child.

We would be pleased to discuss these areas in more detail with the Convention and those responsible for drafting it.

Yours sincerely

Mieke Schuurman
Euronet Co-ordinator

Encl:

- Recognition of the Rights of the Child in the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Submission Euronet
- Copy UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, Articles 28, 29, 30.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Recognition of the Rights of the Child in the Charter of Fundamental Rights

Submission from Euronet – The European Children’s Network, to the drafting group for an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

Euronet – the European Children’s Network, is a network of children’s rights organisations including transnational networks such as BICE (International Catholic Children’s Bureau) and International Save the Children Alliance, and national members in all 15 EU member states.

Euronet welcomes the initiative of the Council of Ministers to elaborate a charter of fundamental rights. Euronet recommends that children’s rights must be included in the charter of fundamental rights and that the charter should be legally binding. Children make up 20% of the EU population yet their rights as established in international law are currently almost invisible in EU legislation, programmes and political decisions. Additionally the Charter should not simply codify existing rights but advance human rights.

Reasons to mention children’s rights explicitly in the Charter:

- To ensure that in areas where the EU legislates, children’s interests are taken into account and that legislation is not inadvertently discriminating against children.
- To ensure that the EU itself is also implementing existing international commitments such as the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

The 1989 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child is the fullest contemporary international expression of the fundamental rights of all people under the age of 18 –ie children. It has almost universal ratification with only two countries (USA and Somalia) not having ratified. The Convention states clearly that the best interests of the child should be a primary consideration in all legislation and policy (Article 3). The Convention has been ratified by all EU member states. However, whilst member states have a legal obligation to promote the best interests of the child and protect children’s fundamental rights, the EU is under no such obligation although there are many areas in which the EU currently passes legislation which have a direct or indirect bearing on children’s lives. Examples include labour legislation, consumer legislation, information and media legislation, health and the environment. Integration of the Convention on the Rights of the Child would ensure that the EU would be obliged to use the Convention as a “child proofing” tool when passing legislation.

Children’s current legal status in the EU Treaty is unclear as children’s legal status as European citizens is unclear. The EU Treaty primarily focuses on the “citizen as worker”, which excludes children. In EU law children are seen too often as only “victims” or “dependents” or “barriers to work” which is in direct contradiction with their status in the Convention on the Rights of the Child. At the moment the principle of “the best interests of the child” is only included in EU legislation on ad hoc basis. In some cases the EU has legislated to promote the highest standards of safety for children, for example in the Toy Safety Directive 1988. In other cases commercial considerations come before the best interests of the child with the potential to infringe children’s rights, for instance the Distance Selling Directive and toy and TV advertising policies of the EU. Inclusion of a reference to children’s rights in the Charter would help ensure that this process was systematic and no longer ad hoc. At present, many cases on children’s rights in the EU have had to be established by taking cases to the Court of Justice. This is inefficient and costly – integration of children’s rights into EU legislative processes would have made such cases unnecessary and ensure a more systematic protection and promotion of children’s rights.

The current Amsterdam Treaty contains legal bases which give the Commission a limited competence to promote children’s rights:

- Article K - which contains an explicit reference to “offences against children”, creates an intergovernmental competence to tackle a whole range of cross border and transnational issues affecting children. However, this Article is outside the Community application of the Treaty and fails to cover many other areas of concern for children.
- Article 13 – Non Discrimination, in particular the non discrimination on the basis of age
- Article 137 – Social Exclusion, which can be used to address the problem of children facing social exclusion (20% of EU children are living in poverty, Eurostat figures)
- Article 141 – refers to equal treatment for men and women in matters of employment, which can indirectly benefit children
- Article 143 – Demography, which could be used to collect age disaggregated statistics, including improved information on the situation of Union citizens under the age of 18.

Children need their own special set of rights in the Charter of fundamental rights because:

- Existing international standards ie the Convention on the Rights of the Child recognise the need for children to have their own set of rights.
- Children have not always been accepted as holders of rights and animals were often given rights before children.
- Children are a special category of people who have specific needs different from adults and who do not have the ability to protect themselves.

Concerning subsidiarity, Euronet recognises the fact that the principal competence for policy and legislation on children’s issues is the responsibility of the member states’ governments. However, many issues affecting children are neither uniquely national or transnational, for example, legal consequences for children when their parents separate and choose to live in different countries of the EU and the standardisation of products and services (TV, internet, media).

Conclusions

It is recommended that:

- The Charter of Fundamental Rights contains a full reference to the protection and promotion of children’s rights in the EU, best expressed by an explicit reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.
- The Charter of Fundamental Rights should be legally binding.
- A new Article should be inserted in the EU Treaties so that the Community can contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights and needs of children.

Recognition of the rights of the child in the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Submission from Euronet – The European Children’s Network, to the drafting group for an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Introduction

Euronet welcomes the initiative of the Council of Ministers to elaborate a charter of fundamental rights. In this submission Euronet demonstrates why it is necessary to have a comprehensive reference to children’s rights in the charter. Euronet recommends that in order to promote and protect children’s rights and interests and to foster their development and protect them from unforeseen negative effects of growing European integration, a reference in the Charter of Rights would need to be accompanied by a comprehensive legal basis in the Treaty on European Union.

Euronet also recommends that the Charter of Fundamental Rights is legally binding and that it goes beyond already existing international and European legal instruments.

What is Euronet ?

Euronet – the European Children’s Network, is a network of children’s rights agencies including BICE (International Catholic Children’s Bureau), International Save the Children Alliance, and national members in all 15 EU member states. Together these agencies shared a concern about the general invisibility of children in EU policy, legislation and programmes. Euronet began as a network to press for recognition of children’s rights in the EU Treaty in 1995. Euronet members worked together to strengthen the rights of the child by, amongst other things, trying to include a reference in the Amsterdam Treaty to the norms of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, ratified by all member states of the EU. Following this, Euronet has gone on to develop a comprehensive EU Children’s policy in “A Children’s policy for 21st Century Europe: First Steps”.¹

Euronet believes that children have a right to live without experiencing prejudice, exclusion and discrimination and have a right to be heard within the European institutions, including the European Parliament, Commission, Council of Ministers and Council of Europe.

Children in the EU

Children in the EU make up 20% of the population but their rights as established in international law are currently almost invisible. This leads to children’s invisibility in the legislation, policies, programmes and political decision making of the Union. Yet the future economic, social, political and cultural development of Europe is dependent on these 90 million children. As the ageing of Europe continues, children will become an even more precious and important resource. Neglecting their proper care and protection will have increasingly serious consequences. Furthermore, the EU institutions have frequently stated that it is important to “get closer to citizens” yet the interests of children are rarely included in EU legislation and Europe is still a long way from a “Citizens Europe” which includes children.

¹ “A children’s policy for 21st century Europe: First steps,” Ruxton S, Euronet, Brussels, 1999

“We are children and young people of the European Union meeting in Belfast at the end of May 1998. We demand that the European Union listen carefully to the voices of its 90 million children and young people under the age of 18 years of age. We as Europe’s young citizens are eager to contribute actively to the development and progress of Europe...In our Europe every child will be respected and listened to and every child will have the right to participate in the democratic process.”²

At the beginning of the 21st Century, Europe is at a crossroads, as it enters monetary union, enlarges eastwards and faces demographic challenges. Children will be more affected by decisions with long term implications being taken now than any other population group.

Why do children’s rights need to be included in the Charter ?

*“Our efforts to discover children’s needs in Europe are met with difficulties for two reasons. Firstly because in the EU citizens are seen as employers, employees and consumers only and secondly because children are seen as children of working parents only.”*³

The fundamental human rights of children⁴, as expressed in the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) are not yet integrated into any of the core legal texts of the EU and therefore are not integrated into EU policy and legislation. As a result children’s needs are currently largely ignored. Indeed, at present, legislation is inadvertently affecting children in a negative way. Other groups such as consumers, women, animals, disabled people are at least mentioned in the existing EU Treaty. This means that EU legislation, policy and programming is to a certain extent sensitive to their fundamental rights and interests. However in the area of children’s policy this is currently not the case. EU member states, by comparison have made greater progress to integrate the principles of the Convention into their national laws since ratification and although Euronet believes that many member states still need to make improvements before their legislation fully reflects the principles of the best interests of the child, substantial progress has been made in this area (see for example “A children’s policy for 21st Century Europe: First steps” p20 – 21⁵).

The briefing argues why children should be explicitly mentioned in the Charter in order to:-

- a) Ensure that the EU itself is also implementing existing international commitments such as the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which all EU member states have ratified.
- b) Ensure that in areas where the EU legislates, children’s interests are taken into account and that legislation is not inadvertently discriminating against children

² Active voices – children’s choices – Belfast Euronet symposium, 28/29 May 1998

³ Children as Citizens of Europe – From Rhetoric to Reality, speech at Euronet Conference Belfast – 28/5/98.

⁴ Up to now the European Commission has preferred to use the term ‘fundamental rights’ in preference to human rights in discussing its work in this area.

⁵ Op cit

The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child

“The increasing importance attached to the concept of children’s rights and the major role attributed by the international Community to the Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989, serve to underline the desirability of a greater EU sensibility in this area....The Commission (should) ensure that all legislation it drafts is fully compatible with the requirements of the Convention.”⁶

The 1989 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child is the fullest contemporary international expression of the fundamental rights of all people under the age of 18 – ie children. More than any other human rights instrument it incorporates the whole spectrum of human rights, civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. The Convention states clearly that the best interests of the child should be a primary consideration in all legislation, and policy.

“In all actions concerning children, whether undertaken by public or private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities or legal bodies, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration,”⁷

The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child is the most widely ratified human rights instrument ever, having been ratified by all states in the world (except the USA and Somalia). All EU member states, EEA states and states about to accede to the EU have ratified the Convention. However, at the moment the EU itself is under no obligation to respect the principles of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.⁸

This means that whilst the member states have a legal obligation to promote the best interests of the child and protect children’s fundamental rights, the EU and is under no such obligation. This is inconsistent and means for example that member states are regularly assessing and reviewing how their actions and legislation affects the human rights of children, whilst the EU does not do so. Without systematic reference to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a yardstick by which to judge the extent to which actions and policies promote children’s rights, there is no means by which to be sure that children’s rights are being upheld and promoted.

As the EU moves towards further integration, more and more issues concerning children are becoming transnational ones. It is important that the EU should be bound by international standards that member states have already signed up to.

There are many areas in which the EU currently passes legislation which have a direct or indirect bearing on children’s lives, these include, labour legislation (Young People at Work Directive, Parental Leave Directive), consumer legislation (see above), information and media legislation and policy, health and the environment. Integration of the principles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child would act as a “child proofing” tool and ensure that the EU was under the same obligations as its member states.

⁶ Leading by Example – A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000 – Cassese, Lalumière, Leuprecht, Robinson. Published by Academy of European Law, European University Institute, p 102.

⁷ Article 3 – Convention on the Rights of the Child.

⁸ For a further discussion see “Towards an EU Human Rights Agenda for Children” – International Save the Children Alliance Europe Group, 1998, Brussels, Rädä Barnen.

The Convention on the Rights of the Child enshrines children's right to participate in decisions which affect them.⁹ It is important that children are also given the possibility to participate actively in the development of the European ideal and concept.

Are Children's Rights dealt with by existing provisions in the Treaty covering human rights ?

Many commentators argue that the EU's overall legislative competence and approach to human rights is weak and that there is a human rights deficit.

"The Treaty did not and still does not even after the measures introduced by Amsterdam, list human rights among its objectives...the Community lacks any significant constitutional competence to deal with all but a very circumscribed range of human rights matters."¹⁰

Similarly the report by the Comité de Sages concluded "As regards the Treaties of the European Union, what we have at present is not a genuine framework of social and civil rights but rather a set of ad hoc, piecemeal measures to accompany economic integration and to allow minimum social policies to be pursued."¹¹

Euronet agrees with these assessments. Not only are existing human rights provisions in the EU Treaty weak, but those that are in the Treaty do not specifically mention children's human rights. This has very practical consequences, meaning that where human rights clauses are inserted into trade agreements or cooperation agreements, no specific attention is paid to children's rights.

Why do we need a separate expression of children's rights ?

If human rights cover all human beings, why do children need their own special set of rights ?

- Existing international standards ie the Convention on the Rights of the Child recognise the need for children to have their own set of rights, reflecting their particular needs and status.¹²
- Children have not always been accepted as holders of rights and animals were often given rights before children.
- Children are a special category of people who have specific needs and who do not have the ability to protect themselves. Adults rights are often different from children's rights and vice versa. Talking about human rights in general but not identifying specific rights for children renders children invisible and vulnerable.

⁹ Article 12, Convention on the Rights of the Child.

¹⁰ See "Leading by example – A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000", Cassese, Lalumière, Leuprecht, Robinson, Academy of European Law, European University Institute, Florence, 1998, para 60

¹¹ "For a Europe of civic and social rights" – Report by the Comité de Sages, European Commission, Brussels, 1996.

¹² See "The Child and the European Convention on Human Rights, Kilkelly, Ursula, Ashgate, UK, 1999.

What about subsidiarity – Surely the protection of children’s rights rests at the member state level ?

The principal competence for policy and legislation on children’s issues is the responsibility of member state’s Governments. However there is also a clear European dimension to the question of children’s policy. Many issues affecting children are neither uniquely national nor transnational. For example, the legal consequences for children when their parents choose to live in different parts of the EU following family breakdown, the greater cross border dissemination of child pornography, and child trafficking. Similarly as standardisation and harmonisation of products and regulation of TV, internet and media takes place at EU level, in many cases the best interests of the child are overlooked.

Euronet is not arguing for the competence for children’s policy to move to the European level but rather, where the EU passes legislation, policy and programmes, children’s rights must be taken into account. The Charter should provide a clear, simple legal basis which enables European legislators to ensure that the best interests of the child is taken into account in all European policy, law and programming. Children are affected differently from adults by European legislation and it is important that all EU policy and legislative proposals takes their needs into consideration.

Would incorporation of the ECHR into the EU Treaty help children?

Legal opinion varies as to whether incorporation of the ECHR into the EU Treaty is possible and desirable. Leaving this wider debate aside, incorporation would bring limited value for children.

Children are not specifically mentioned in the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR), although it has been frequently used to protect children’s rights in such areas as respect for family life, the right to education, protection against discrimination and the protection of physical integrity. However there are significant limitations on the ECHR as an instrument for the promotion and protection of children’s rights including its focus on relations between the state and individuals, its silence on many important areas of children’s lives.¹³

The ECHR “is....in many ways blind to children. It does make limited reference to children for example – in respect of the public nature of court proceedings in respect of juveniles and liberty and security of the person. But it fails entirely to address the concept of human rights for children within a framework appropriate to childhood in the way developed by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.”¹⁴

¹³ See “Areas and Rights covered by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which are not covered by the European Convention on Human Rights” Pascale Boucard – Steering Committee for Human Rights, Council of Europe, Strasbourg, 1995.

¹⁴ “European Convention on Human Rights – Implications for Children”1997, UK – Gerison Lansdown.

Children's rights as EU Citizens – a promise unfulfilled

“The advice I have received...is that the reference to all persons who have citizenship of a member state covers everybody, including children”¹⁵

Despite this positive statement, the rights of children as EU citizens are unclear. The focus in the Treaty on the “citizen as worker” has meant that children’s legal status as European citizens is unclear. This has led for example to the failure to incorporate the best interests of the child into EU legislation. It also means that only a limited number of action programmes, and temporary budgetlines have children as a principal target group.

Article 17 (2) of the Treaty of Amsterdam states “Citizens of the Union shall enjoy the rights conferred by this Treaty and shall be subject to the duties imposed thereby.” However, citizenship of the Union only confers the rights which are covered by the Treaty, most of which exclude children. This is because the Treaty primarily regulates issues of an economic nature, therefore focusing on groups such as workers or people providing services. As a result rights are currently related to the fact that you are an economic entity. In EU law children are seen too often as only “victims” or “dependents” or “barriers to work” in direct contradiction with their status in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and in member states’ laws.

The consequences of a lack of specific recognition for children’s rights

One of the strongest illustrations of why it is necessary to have a reference to children in the Charter is the current ad hoc nature of inclusion of the principle of “the best interests of the child” (fundamental to the protection of children’s rights in international law) in EU legislation. This is evident for example in the field of harmonisation and standardisation legislation as illustrated below.

a) Negative effects on children from EU Directives

The protection of children’s human rights should be a priority for all policies. Because of children’s particular vulnerability and needs, adults have a particular responsibility to safeguard them.

On the positive side there have been a number of cases where the EU has legislated to promote the highest standards of safety for children. These have included the Toy Safety Directive 1988, and other directives aimed at establishing standards for producers so that children cannot undo fastenings on potentially dangerous products, such as bottles of medicines. Beyond these specific cases, children have to some extent been covered by more general consumer protection initiatives.

However despite this, many problems remain. Too often commercial considerations come before the best interests of the child with the potential to infringe children’s rights. Examples of this:-

¹⁵ Statement from the then Irish Foreign Minister Gay Mitchell, representing the Irish Presidency of the EU, during revision of Amsterdam Treaty.

- Distance Selling: There is no reference to the protection of children in EU Directives on misleading advertising and on distance selling, despite evidence from consumer groups that children are often unable to distinguish between covert advertising and information and are therefore at specific risk.
- Toy Advertising: In a recent case toy manufacturers called on the European Commission to take action against the Greek Government. The Greek Government had banned TV advertising of toys because of a concern to promote the best interests of the child and ensure that no advertising was transmitted between certain hours. However the Commission claims that the Greek Government's action breaches single market rules, placing commercial interests above those of Europe's youngest citizens.
- TV Advertising: In a similar case in 1995 a UK TV station transmitted advertisements to children in Sweden, although these are prohibited for children under 12 in Sweden. Because the single Market creates a free market for movement of goods and services, this action is perfectly lawful, even though it may not be in the best interests of children.
- Chemicals and Toys: Although many member states took action to ban the use of PVC (polyvinylchlorides) in babies' toys, the European Commission took many months to introduce an EU wide ban on the use of PVC in toys. This was despite evidence from consumer and environmental groups that such toys contain harmful levels of chemicals and may damage children's rights to the highest attainable health standards.

All these examples demonstrate that the need for better protection of children's rights within the policy and decision making processes of the EU. Inclusion of a reference to children's rights in the Charter would help ensure that this process was systematic and no longer ad hoc.

b) Unnecessary Court of Justice Cases

The lack of recognition of the human rights of children in the EU Treaties, and in particular the principle of promoting the best interests of the child has meant that children's rights in the EU have developed in a piecemeal way. In some cases children's rights in the EU have had to be established by taking cases to the Court of Justice. This is inefficient and costly - it would be far more efficient to ensure that the principles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child were incorporated into the Treaty on European Union. Whilst both the judgements below did in fact rule in favour of the rights of the child, a further demonstration of the problems resulting from the lack of systematic protection of those rights, this was only achieved by taking the case to the European Court of Justice. Integration of the fundamental rights of the child into EU legislative processes would have made such cases unnecessary and ensure a more systematic protection and promotion of children's rights.

In the first case, the Commission v Belgium (42/87) established that children in one member state but living in another continue to be entitled to all forms of state education in the host country even if the working parent has retired or died in that state. The second case of Moritz v the Netherlands Ministry of Education (390/87) established that this was the case even if the child moves back to the state of origin.

c) Economic, Trade and Poverty issues

Children are also affected by EU economic and trade policies, EU Trade agreements, Economic and Monetary Union, and the single market all can impact on children, it is important that children's interests (which can be different from adults' interests) are not overlooked in these debates.¹⁶

EU economic policy for example which requires specific regions within Europe to undertake adjustment to a new economic environment can damage the development of entire generations of children in those regions. Children in such regions make up significant numbers of the 20% of EU's children suffering from social exclusion.

d) Asylum and Immigration policy

The EU is now legislating in a number of crucial areas of asylum and immigration policy as it moves from the third pillar to the first pillar. Children have very particular needs, especially child asylum seekers who are separated from their parents.

Do existing legal bases offer sufficient protection for children's rights ?

“The action taken by the EU in relation to the protection of children is still very limited, because of a lack of explicit legal bases and a failure to recognise that this action is of prime importance to the very future of the Union.”¹⁷

The current legal bases in the Amsterdam Treaty gives the Commission only a very limited competence to protect children's rights. In particular it creates a limited intergovernmental competence to tackle a whole range of cross border and transnational issues affecting children's rights.¹⁸

On the positive side, for the first time in the history of the EU, children are explicitly mentioned in the Amsterdam Treaty in Article K which contains an explicit reference to “offences against children”. Article K allows for increased cooperation between member states' police and judicial authorities in tackling crimes against children which cross national borders. Increasingly as borders disappear, children are at risk from organised crime and member states have had limited powers to deal with this in a coordinated fashion. However, Article K is outside the Community application of the Treaty, and any action has to be agreed on a case by case basis and has limited European dimension. Furthermore Article K is limited to offences against children and fails to cover many other areas of concern for children and does not provide for children's interests to be taken into account systematically in the drafting of EU legislation.

¹⁶ See “Children, Economics and the EU – Towards Child Friendly Policies” – Save the Children, 2000.

¹⁷ Quote from MEP in “Towards a Children's Policy for 21st Century Europe: First Steps” op cit.

¹⁸ For a more detailed analysis see Euronet - “The New Treaty on European Union – What is in it for children?”, Sutton, Diana, Brussels 1997 and Euronet “Towards a Children's Policy for 21st Century Europe”, op cit.

Therefore a major failing of the Treaty of Amsterdam is that it does not incorporate the respect for the fundamental principles of children's rights. It gives only a very limited competence to work at European level on a whole range of cross border and transnational problems affecting the fulfillment of children's rights. Below we analyse the limitations of other legal bases in promoting children's rights.

EU Treaty Articles relevant to children:

Article 13 - Non Discrimination:

In theory the inclusion of a non-discrimination clause on grounds of age should offer protection to children's rights, especially the right not to be discriminated against (Article 3 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child). However the reference to non discrimination on grounds of age in Article 13 has the following limitations:-

- Although age discrimination can occur at the lower end of the age range, the Commission has not yet interpreted "non discrimination on grounds of age" to include children.
- Secondly this clause does not have "direct effect", this means that it cannot be used by an individual in a court of law and cannot be used in the European Court of Justice.
- Thirdly, all measures proposed under this clause require the unanimous agreement of all EU member states' Governments.
- Fourthly, Article 13 has limited value for children because it only deals with measures aimed at combating discrimination and as we have seen children are affected by numerous other issues at a European level, and no measures can be taken under this clause to address these wider issues.
- Finally there is no spending power attached by Member States to this clause and therefore the impact of any measures taken under it will be very limited. It could not therefore be used as a legal basis for a European programme in the area of children's rights and children's policy.

Article 137 - Social Exclusion

The inclusion of Article 137 gives the Community a legal basis to combat social exclusion. This is welcome given that recent Eurostat figures demonstrate that 20% of the European Union's children are living in poverty. This new legal basis will be used for the adoption of an action programme on social exclusion, which can be used to address the problem of children facing social exclusion. It is recommended that Member States work with a broad definition of social exclusion. This clause can be agreed by qualified majority voting, thus eliminating potential problems with one or two member states blocking progress.

Article 141:

Although not directly relevant to children's rights issues this clause could be beneficial to children, since it makes reference to equal treatment for men and women in matters of employment and occupation, which could for example have a bearing on issues such as parental leave and child care.

Article 143 - Demography

This clause could be used to ensure that the European Union collects age disaggregated statistics, including improved information at the lower end of the age range, ie on the situation of Union citizens under the age of 18. Such an approach would enable the Union to have an accurate statistical assessment of the different ages of all its citizens and would assist the Union and Member States' in planning policy and services. It is important that information about the situation of children is included in such a report for a number of reasons. First children's needs are different from adults, second children will have to be responsible for supporting both financially and otherwise the Union's ageing population and finally children's services and interests must not be prejudiced as the Union and Member States focus their attention on the needs of Europe's ageing population.

The need for a legally binding charter of fundamental rights

Euronet recommends that the charter of fundamental rights is legally binding. Although a specific reference to children's rights in a non legally binding Bill of Rights would have the advantage of giving children and children's rights political visibility and as such may assist focusing the Commission and Member states attention more on the issue of European Children's policy, it would not have any legal significance and will therefore not assist in child proofing of legislation, its significance would therefore be only symbolic.

Moreover, Euronet recommends that the charter is not simply a declaration of existing rights but rather advances the promotion of children's rights and human rights. Euronet believes that a charter that is not legally binding would not address the problems of EU legislation inadvertently affecting children in a negative way which are raised in this submission.

Conclusions

It is recommended that the drafting of a Charter of Fundamental Rights should contain a full reference to the need for protection and promotion of children's rights in the EU. This is best expressed through a clear and explicit reference to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Such a reference should be used to ensure that the child dimension is taken into account in all relevant EU policy, programmes and budgets. Member states should also ensure that existing legal bases are used to the greatest extent possible to promote children's rights.

Bibliography: -

Leading by Example – A Human Rights Agenda for the European Union for the Year 2000 – Cassese, Lalumière, Leuprecht, Robinson. Published by Academy of European Law, European University Institute, Florence 1998.

The Child and the European Convention on Human Rights, Kilkelly Ursula, Ashgate, UK, 1999.

The Rights of the Child – A European Perspective, Council of Europe Publishing, Strasbourg, France, 1996.

“For a Europe of civic and social rights” – Report by the Comité des Sages (1996) – European Commission

“Towards an EU Human Rights Agenda for Children” – International Save the Children Alliance Europe Group, Brussels, Belgium 1998.

Euronet – The European Children’s Network “A children’s policy for 21st Century Europe: First Steps.” Ruxton, S. Brussels, Belgium.1999

Euronet – “The New Treaty on European Union – What is in it for Children ?”, Sutton, Diana, Brussels 1997.

“Areas and Rights covered by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which are not covered by the European Convention on Human Rights” Pascale Boucard (1995) – Steering Committee for Human Rights, Council of Europe, Strasbourg

European Convention on Human Rights – Implications for Children – 9.7.1997 – Gerison Lansdown

Comparative Study on the Political and Legal Status of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child in Europe – Rädde Barnen, Stockholm.

January 2000

*UN CONVENTION ON THE RIGHTS OF THE CHILDArticle 28

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to education, and with a view to achieving this right progressively and on the basis of equal opportunity, they shall, in particular:
 - (a) Make primary education compulsory and available free to all;
 - (b) Encourage the development of different forms of secondary education, including general and vocational education, make them available and accessible to every child, and take appropriate measures such as the introduction of free education and offering financial assistance in case of need;
 - (c) Make higher education accessible to all on the basis of capacity by every appropriate means;
 - (d) Make educational and vocational information and guidance available and accessible to all children;
 - (e) Take measures to encourage regular attendance at schools and the reduction of drop-out rates.
2. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that school discipline is administered in a manner consistent with the child's human dignity and in conformity with the present Convention.
3. States Parties shall promote and encourage international cooperation in matters relating to education, in particular with a view to contributing to the elimination of ignorance and illiteracy throughout the world and facilitating access to scientific and technical knowledge and modern teaching methods. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

Article 29

1. States Parties agree that the education of the child shall be directed to:
 - (a) The development of the child's personality, talents and mental and physical abilities to their fullest potential;
 - (b) The development of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;
 - (c) The development of respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, for the national values of the country in which the child is living, the country from which he or she may originate, and for civilizations different from his or her own;
 - (d) The preparation of the child for responsible life in a free society, in the spirit of understanding, peace, tolerance, equality of sexes, and friendship among all peoples, ethnic, national and religious groups and persons of indigenous origin;
 - (e) The development of respect for the natural environment.
2. No part of the present article or article 28 shall be construed so as to interfere with the liberty of individuals and bodies to establish and direct educational institutions, subject always to the observance of the principle set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article and to the requirements that the education given in such institutions shall conform to such minimum standards as may be laid down by the State.

Article 30

In those States in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities or persons of indigenous origin exist, a child belonging to such a minority or who is indigenous shall not be denied the right, in community with other members of his or her group, to enjoy his or her own culture, to profess and practise his or her own religion, or to use his or her own language.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 25 avril 2000CHARTE 4241/00*CONTRIB 114*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution de CAFECs en vue de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX

Contribution de CAF ECS à l'élaboration de la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

avril 2000

Secrétariat CAF ECS : Fonda - 18, rue de Varenne - 75007 Paris

Tel. :+33 (0)1 45 49 06 58 - Fax : +33 (0)1 42 84 04 84

e mail : fonda@wanadoo.fr

SOMMAIRE

Contribution de CAFECES	3
Des droits fondamentaux	5
- Identité européenne et droits de l'homme	6
- Droit d'accès au sens et au patrimoine symbolique de l'humanité	10
- Développement durable et droits de l'homme	15
- Du droit au travail au droit à la pleine activité	18
- Droit à des moyens d'existence digne	23
- Droit au temps choisi	27
- Droit d'asile	31
- Droits du citoyen et technologies de l'information et de la communication	35
- Bioéthique et droits de l'homme	38
- Droit d'accès aux droits fondamentaux	40
Bilan provisoire des travaux de la Convention	44
Annexes
- Déclaration pour une Europe civique et sociale du 27 mars 1997 (Le Monde 10.06.97)	48
- Pour une citoyenneté active en Europe, par Jean-Baptiste de Foucauld, Jean Nestor, Frédéric Pascal (La Croix 7.10.99)	52

CONTRIBUTION DE CAFECES

Depuis septembre 1996, à la suite de la publication du rapport « Pour une Europe des droits civiques et sociaux » - élaboré, à la demande de la Commission européenne, par un Comité des Sages présidé par Mme Pintasilgo, ancien premier ministre du Portugal, et dont Frédéric Pascal et Jean-Baptiste de Foucauld ont été membre et rapporteur - la Fonda anime un débat en vue de sensibiliser les associations à la construction d'une Europe plus civique et plus sociale.

La Fonda réunit des acteurs associatifs issus de secteurs diversifiés qui, au-delà de leurs divers champs d'activité, veulent contribuer à faire avancer l'idée d'une Europe qui puisse réussir son intégration politique, son développement social, son union monétaire et son élargissement. Ils se réunissent au sein d'un groupe qui a pris le nom de CAFECES (Carrefour pour une Europe civique et sociale), groupe ouvert et pluraliste. Ses membres et les associations dont ils sont issus adhèrent à la construction d'une Europe civique et sociale et se réfèrent à la Déclaration du 25 mars 1997 « Pour une Europe civique et sociale » qui a recueilli 370 signatures émanant de personnalités du monde associatif, syndical, politique et religieux.

CAFECES a salué la décision du Conseil européen de Cologne de mettre en chantier l'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne, selon une procédure de consultation nettement améliorée par rapport aux méthodes inter-gouvernementales habituelles.

CAFECES déplore parallèlement la brièveté des délais qui sont prévus, l'incertitude qui accompagne le rôle et la place future de la Charte et surtout l'absence de démarche de citoyenneté active qui aurait permis de mener en profondeur une réflexion commune sur les finalités de la construction européenne.

Pour pallier ces lacunes, les membres de CAFECES ont pensé qu'il serait intéressant d'expérimenter, à échelle réduite, la méthode qui aurait dû, à leur sens, être employée pour définir des droits. Ils ont donc décidé de travailler plus particulièrement un certain nombre de droits pour lesquels ils se sentaient une appétence et une compétence particulières.

Chaque texte a été préparé par un membre de CAFECES, qui sert de relais avec la ou les associations où il milite, le sujet ayant été choisi en fonction des préoccupations propres à chaque association. Les textes préparés ont fait l'objet, dans un premier temps, de débats au sein de CAFECES, puis remis en débat lors d'un séminaire élargi sur la base des signataires de la Déclaration du 25 mars 1997, le samedi 11 mars 2000, séminaire qui a réuni 110 participants. La rédaction définitive des textes, tenant compte des travaux du séminaire, fait l'objet de la présente publication.

Le Carrefour pour une Europe civique et sociale (CAFECES) est animé par Jean-Baptiste de Foucauld (Convictions) et Frédéric Pascal (Fonda)

En sont membres : Agnès Antoine (Démocratie et Spiritualité) - Pervenche Berès (Députée européenne - La Gauche européenne) – Jacques Berthillier (AIRE) - Jean-Claude Boual (Réseaux Services Publics) - Elisabeth Boyer (Tiers Etat) - Maurice Braud (Action Fédéraliste « Socialisme et Liberté ») - Anne David (Fonda) - Serge Depaquit (Réseau Icare) - Geneviève Dourthe - Serge Dumartin (Comité Chrétien de Solidarité avec les chômeurs) - Hugues Feltesse (Union Nationale Interfédérale des Organismes Privés Sanitaires et Sociaux - UNIOPSS - Réseau Européen de lutte contre la pauvreté France - EAPN France) - Michel Gevrey (Comité de Coordination des OEuvres Mutualistes et Coopératives de l'Education Nationale - CCOMCEN) - Arlette Heymann-Doat (Ligue des Droits de l'Homme) - Bernard Levasseur (Fonda) - Bernard Marx (Confrontations) - Martine Méheut (Union pour l'Europe fédérale) - Jean Nestor (Notre Europe) - Valérie Peugeot (Europe 99) - Robert Toulemon (Association Française d'Etude pour l'Union européenne - AFEUR) - Patrick Viveret (Centre International Pierre Mendès France) - Sylviane de Wangen (France Terre d'Asile).

DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX

La liste des droits étudiés ne prétend pas à l'exhaustivité. Elle résulte des intérêts dont sont porteurs les associations dont les responsables sont membres de CAFECES.

- ☞
- ☞☞☞☞ Identité européenne et droits de l'homme
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Droit d'accès au sens et au patrimoine symbolique de l'humanité
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Développement « durable » et droits de l'homme
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Du droit au travail au droit à la pleine activité
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Droit à des moyens d'existence digne
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Droit au temps choisi
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Droit d'asile
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Droits du citoyen et technologies de l'information et de la communication
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Bioéthique et droits de l'homme
- ☞☞☞☞☞ Droit d'accès aux droits fondamentaux

Identité européenne et droits de l'homme

Si l'Union Européenne ressent aujourd'hui la nécessité d'établir une Charte des droits fondamentaux, c'est qu'elle a conscience d'avoir à exprimer une identité pour être elle-même. C'est précisément parce qu'elle se constitue sur une base volontaire, coopérative, démocratique, non-violente que l'Europe doit définir son identité. Parce que son développement politique ne repose ni sur la force, ni sur l'idéologie, l'Europe est contrainte d'innover et de construire son identité.

Cela est d'autant plus vrai que la situation identitaire de l'Europe est paradoxale : elle a un passé, une mémoire, un héritage commun ; mais il est fait autant de divisions et de guerre que d'unité, autant de conquêtes et de domination que d'ouverture à autrui ; elle a développé une conception exigeante de la personne et a su formuler les droits de l'Homme avant de les universaliser ; mais elle les a particulièrement violés aussi. En sorte qu'au lendemain de la guerre, l'union de l'Europe s'est faite largement autour du refus de la Shoah et de la lutte contre le totalitarisme, et cela au moment même où la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'Homme était élaborée comme un rempart à la barbarie. L'Europe se situe ainsi au coeur des contradictions du monde moderne ; elle vise à les assumer et à les dépasser.

L'Europe, pour toutes ces raisons ne peut se contenter de se référer aux droits fondamentaux. Elle doit bien entendu le faire, mais en les affinant et en leur apportant sa coloration particulière, sa vision, son expérience, son idéal. Ceci conduit à trois affirmations :

- les droits et les responsabilités sont fragiles, difficiles à exercer et à faire respecter ; il y faut une attention particulière, une pédagogie constante et des garanties soigneusement élaborées ;

- le principe fondamental d'égalité de chacun est d'une extrême exigence, presque utopique, plus souvent violé que respecté, rarement appliqué dans son intégralité ; la conscience aiguë de cette situation doit mener à la vigilance et à un travail constant sur les institutions, afin qu'elles servent bien les finalités qui leur sont assignées ;
- dans toute société, mais particulièrement en Europe du fait de son histoire, la conciliation entre l'unité et la diversité constitue l'enjeu démocratique fondamental. Cette conciliation présente de nombreux aspects, qui ont chacun leurs difficultés propres. Cela est particulièrement le cas dans le domaine culturel.

Face aux défis du monde moderne, l'Europe est un pari risqué et difficile : porter l'ardente obligation de réaliser effectivement, concrètement, pour chaque personne le projet des droits de l'homme, sans se contenter de les déclarer et d'en affirmer l'existence formelle. C'est précisément dans ce défi, qui suppose que ces droits et responsabilités soient portés par des politiques, des institutions et des comportements concrets, que réside la vocation de l'Europe.

L'Europe se caractérise par l'extrême diversité des peuples qui la composent, mais aussi par la communauté des valeurs autour desquelles ceux-ci se retrouvent. Ils attachent la même valeur suprême à la dignité de la personne humaine, et ils ont des conceptions et des exigences communes en matière de démocratie et de droits de l'homme. Ce sont ces valeurs, inscrites dans une histoire et dans un projet communs, qui font l'identité européenne. L'Europe ne peut être elle-même qu'en mettant au premier rang de ce qu'elle entreprend, que ce soit dans la construction de ses institutions, dans ses politiques internes, dans sa politique d'élargissement ou dans ses relations avec le reste du monde. Nous proposons aux représentants des peuples européens de se fixer des objectifs qui soient des réponses aux défis du monde moderne conformes aux valeurs qu'ils proclament.

Principaux défis

1. La globalisation

Elle se présente aujourd'hui principalement comme un phénomène subi. Il faut apprendre à la construire en utilisant de nouveaux outils politiques.

Elle rend plus aiguë la conscience des obligations envers les peuples étrangers et plus évident le devoir de protéger les droits de l'homme partout où ils sont menacés. La nécessité s'impose de faire émerger un nouvel ordre mondial, qui comportera des institutions à compétence planétaire. Il ne s'agit pas d'abolir les institutions existantes, mais de les faire évoluer et de les intégrer, en créant, quand c'est nécessaire, des instances de pouvoir mondial dont l'autorité soit fondée juridiquement et qui soient dotées de réels moyens. Ceci oblige aussi à considérer avec plus d'acuité un problème encore mal résolu : comment concilier l'universalité et les particularismes.

2. L'extrême pauvreté et la croissance démographique

Aujourd'hui plus d'un milliard d'hommes vivent en dessous du seuil de dignité. Dans les cinquante ans qui viennent la population mondiale verra doubler son effectif par rapport à celui du début des années 90. La technique rend théoriquement possible de relever ces deux défis, mais il faut définir un nouvel ordre économique et le mettre en place.

3. Les techniques de production

La techno-science permet d'intervenir de plus en plus profondément au coeur de la matière et de la vie, et de plus en plus massivement. Il en résulte des menaces qui intéressent la collectivité humaine tout entière, et la liberté d'entreprendre ne peut plus être affirmée sans limitations. Les principes qui fondent ces limitations nouvelles doivent être dégagés.

4. La communication et l'information

L'exercice de la citoyenneté dans un monde globalisé et complexe nécessite la mise à disposition des opinions publiques d'informations très variées et vérifiées, et d'évaluations sérieusement établies. Les nouvelles techniques de traitement et de diffusion de l'information rendent cela possible, mais elles représentent aussi une menace pour la liberté spirituelle et personnelle.

Objectifs fondamentaux

En considération de ces défis, il nous paraît urgent de rappeler les valeurs fondamentales auxquelles sont attachés les peuples européens et de proclamer leur volonté de poursuivre ensemble les objectifs fondamentaux suivants :

1. Améliorer les institutions de l'Europe pour les rendre plus efficaces et plus démocratiques. Renforcer le pouvoir européen en lui confiant les décisions qui par leur nature ne peuvent être conçues que du point de vue communautaire (subsidiarité positive) tout en continuant à respecter le principe de subsidiarité négative, et parallèlement cultiver la diversité qui fait la richesse de l'Europe.

2. Donner aux citoyens la possibilité de participer effectivement aux décisions politiques et, plus généralement, à la construction du monde qu'ils légueront à leurs descendants. A cet effet la formation pendant l'enfance et tout au long de la vie, la disposition de temps pour l'exercice d'activités citoyennes, l'accès à un champ très large d'informations vérifiées et d'évaluations sérieusement fondées, sont des droits qui demandent à être mieux définis et considérablement élargis.

3. Eliminer de son sein les situations d'extrême pauvreté et d'exclusion sociale.

4. Reconnaître leur pleine dignité aux étrangers vivant sur notre sol.

5. Accueillir les peuples voisins que l'histoire a tenus écartés de la première phase de construction de l'Europe, dès lors qu'ils adhèrent aux mêmes valeurs et qu'ils partagent les mêmes objectifs.

6. Encourager la création dans les autres régions de la terre d'entités de même type, basées elles aussi sur la communauté de vision et sur la proximité géographique.

7. Contribuer à la définition d'un nouvel ordre mondial, tel que les droits politiques, économiques et sociaux de l'ensemble des humains, dans leur effectif prévisible, puissent être effectivement respectés et les conditions d'un développement durable réunies.

8. Contribuer à l'élaboration d'institutions mondiales disposant de l'autorité juridique et de moyens pratiques suffisants pour mettre en place et gérer ce nouvel ordre dans le respect des principes démocratiques.

Droit d'accès au sens et au patrimoine symbolique de l'humanité

« Qui osera mesurer les conséquences de l'interruption forcée des divers processus qui mènent à long terme à des prises de conscience sur les plans ontologique, éthique et historique et qui dépendent à la fois de l'accès aux sources et de la confrontation ouverte des idées en cours de recherche ? Bref, qui peut mesurer les conséquences de l'impossibilité d'une quelconque circulation normale de l'information, de la pensée, des connaissances, des valeurs et de toutes les prises de position publiques ? (...) A quelle profonde impuissance morale et spirituelle cette castration de la culture ne risque-t-elle pas de mener demain la nation ? »

Vaclav Havel

Lettre ouverte à Gustav Husak

1975

*Ce projet espère contribuer à la définition du modèle démocratique dont est porteuse l'Europe, un modèle où la personne humaine est au centre du dispositif politique, non seulement parce que ses droits les plus fondamentaux y sont reconnus et protégés, mais parce qu'en tant que sujet moral et responsable, elle participe, avec toutes ses ressources, à l'élaboration du destin commun de l'humanité. C'est dire qu'il propose de spécifier le modèle démocratique européen, comme un cadre politique concerné, de par son origine historique même, par le perfectionnement de l'humain en l'homme.

I - Exposé des motifs

La démocratie est la forme politique qu'ont élaborée les modernes pour donner pleinement expression à la reconnaissance de l'égalité souveraineté et dignité de chaque être humain. C'est parce que les hommes sont libres et égaux, qu'il ne peut y avoir de souveraineté politique que collective et que chacun est appelé à participer à l'élaboration du destin commun, à la création de l'histoire humaine.

Le récent effondrement des systèmes idéologiques et étatiques, qui, sous prétexte de quitter l'ordre ancien - dont le fondement était religieux - en avaient reconstruit la dimension totalisante, fait apparaître véritablement, pour la première fois dans l'histoire, la promesse démocratique dans toute son exigence : il ne s'agit rien moins que de faire advenir le régime de la pluralité humaine.

Un tel horizon implique, outre des formes de représentation et de participation renouvelées, un rôle à la fois plus conscient et accru de la société civile dans la définition des valeurs et des finalités de l'existence collective. Plus que jamais, d'ailleurs, les défis politiques, économiques, et scientifiques interrogent le sens qui doit inspirer nos différentes formes d'action dans l'histoire et la capacité que nous avons d'en maîtriser les conséquences. Du fait de la maîtrise croissante de la nature et de sa propre nature biologique, l'homme se voit en effet investi de responsabilités aussi nouvelles que considérables, qu'il ne peut assumer sans lucidité sur les risques pris, et donc sans conscience aigüe de ce qu'il a appris de lui-même au cours de l'histoire et sans interrogation sur le mystère qu'il est à lui-même. D'autre part, la question montante de l'exclusion sociale, liée à l'accumulation productive et à la sélectivité croissante du marché du travail, pose en termes nouveaux la question de la fraternité, de la solidarité et du rapport à l'autre, qui doivent être en permanence actualisées et refondées. C'est dire que les enjeux auxquels l'humanité se confronte, sont, de plus en plus, d'abord d'ordre éthique.

La prise en charge par la collectivité du sens de sa destinée ne saurait toutefois être pensable sans une aptitude de plus en plus grande des individus à donner signification à leur propre existence et à se construire comme personnes. Plus qu'auparavant, la démocratie exige de véritables sujets, conscients de leur liberté et de leur responsabilité. C'est donc, plus généralement, les conditions d'accès de chaque individu à sa propre souveraineté qui méritent d'être examinées sous un nouveau jour, tout comme les risques d'exclusion de cet accès.

Cette perspective conduit à reconsidérer la frontière entre la sphère privée et la sphère publique, entre l'homme et le citoyen. La démocratie aujourd'hui, pour être réelle, exige en effet, comme le souhaitaient les penseurs de sa fondation, que soient formés des citoyens intéressés à la chose publique, responsables et conscients de leurs droits et de leurs devoirs, c'est-à-dire, ayant intériorisé les règles du jeu démocratique. Mais plus largement encore, elle nécessite des consciences aptes à la réflexion, à la délibération, et à l'innovation morales, afin de nourrir activement le débat d'opinion permanent dans lequel elle se constitue dynamiquement, selon un processus historique ouvert. Elle demande une véritable culture morale des individus.

A l'intérieur de l'espace public démocratique en effet, et dans le respect de ses règles, l'orientation morale des décisions politiques ne saurait s'imposer a priori, mais doit être construite à partir de différentes sources éthiques, en vue d'un consensus lui-même provisoire sur ce qui est humainement bon, ici et maintenant. A la pluralité des hommes, telle que veut la respecter et la déployer la démocratie, doivent donc correspondre, dans la culture démocratique, la pluralité des points de vue sur l'homme et une recherche plurielle de la vérité.

Le travail de création de sens de la démocratie ne saurait donc se faire sans, d'une part, l'enracinement personnel des individus dans des traditions spirituelles vivantes et sans, d'autre part, la présence active de ces traditions dans le champ culturel. Et loin qu'en chaque être humain s'opposent l'individu privé et le sujet politique, ils sont appelés à fonctionner dans un processus dialectique, la personne, avec toutes ses aspirations et ses expériences de vie, contribuant à former le citoyen, tandis que, réciproquement, le citoyen enrichit l'homme.

Or, parce que les démocraties modernes ont en commun d'avoir succédé à un ordre théologico-politique, et parce qu'elles se sont construites parfois de façon conflictuelle contre lui, elles ont procédé, à des degrés divers, à une mise à l'écart de la morale et de la religion, renvoyées à la sphère de l'existence individuelle.

Cette privatisation d'une partie des ressources de sens est d'abord cause d'un appauvrissement du patrimoine culturel dont dispose la société démocratique pour se penser elle-même et travailler son identité en puisant dans les différentes strates qui se sont constituées à travers l'histoire. Cette privatisation est ensuite source d'inégalité profonde, tout particulièrement à l'égard des milieux socialement défavorisés. Sous couvert de neutralité, elle n'offre pas la chance à tous les hommes d'avoir accès à la diversité des systèmes d'interprétations de la vie humaine, et de construire leur identité personnelle. Elle ne permet pas non plus à tous les individus de donner une expression culturelle, dans l'espace public, à ce qui fait sens pour eux. En refoulant la dimension morale et spirituelle de l'existence humaine de la culture commune, elle nourrit les phénomènes fondamentalistes, communautaristes et sectaires. Elle met en danger à la fois le bon fonctionnement et la vitalité de la démocratie, dont elle affaiblit l'imagination créatrice.

Si un des enjeux majeurs des débuts historiques des démocraties au XIX^{ème} siècle fut la généralisation de l'instruction, pour instaurer le suffrage universel, le défi auquel elles doivent faire face, à l'aube du XXI^{ème} siècle, devient le problème de l'accès de tous à l'ensemble des réponses morales et métaphysiques que l'être humain a apportées, dans l'histoire, au sens de son existence, pour former le jugement éthique de chacun, construire son autonomie et accéder à une souveraineté plus responsable et plus authentique.

Parce qu'elle a été construite, après la seconde guerre mondiale, sur le refus de la dénégation de l'homme, l'Europe constitue déjà, en soi, un espace éthique. Parce qu'elle est aussi au carrefour de plusieurs héritages civilisationnels et spirituels, et riche de présences culturelles variées, elle est le lieu où peut s'affirmer, historiquement, aujourd'hui, cette démocratie plus existentielle, qui ne soit pas seulement un espace où coexistent pacifiquement de libres individualités concurrentes et où est assurée l'égalité de leurs droits, mais le lieu d'une naissance à soi pour chaque être humain et, par un même mouvement, d'une histoire voulue pour la société dont il est membre, dans le souci permanent du discernement de ce qui est humain. Dans l'espace européen, coexistent en outre plusieurs formes d'expression institutionnelle et culturelle de la laïcité, produits de contextes socio-historiques différents, et dont la mise en dialogue est un atout pour faire surgir cet humanisme pluriel.

II - Nature et extension d'un « droit d'accès au sens et patrimoine symbolique de l'humanité »

Il résulte des considérations précédentes que les démocraties modernes, pour fonctionner, doivent garder présentes et en débat les sources historiques, philosophiques, littéraires, spirituelles et religieuses de l'humanité, et les interrogations dont elles sont porteuses, pour s'appuyer sur elles dans le processus de construction du sens personnel et collectif. Mais la transmission des systèmes de valeurs, du fait de l'individualisation et du relâchement du lien social, ne se fait plus de façon naturelle et mécanique. Elle doit donc être construite socialement et collectivement, en respectant des règles d'objectivité et de pluralisme.

C'est l'un des buts des systèmes éducatifs. Mais d'une part, certaines disciplines qui ont pour objet la mémoire des sources sont dévalorisées et menacées, au nom d'un pragmatisme à courte vue ; d'autre part, en raison de la séparation excessive entre espace public et espace privé déjà évoquée, certaines sources, notamment les sources religieuses, ne sont pas prises en considération.

Il en résulte qu'un principe de nature juridique devrait être posé pour organiser l'accès de chacun à la diversité de nos sources symboliques, autrefois justement dénommées « humanités », et que ce principe devrait inspirer les modalités européennes d'organisation des espaces publics de transmission et d'échange culturels mis en place par la puissance publique, ou auxquels elle contribue, qu'il s'agisse :

- du système d'enseignement,
- de la formation permanente,
- des médias,
- ou des aides publiques à la production culturelle.

C'est pourquoi nous lançons un appel pour que les droits fondamentaux européens concernant l'information, l'éducation et la culture soient formulés de façon à inclure de façon explicite le droit à l'accès au sens et au patrimoine symbolique de l'humanité. Il ne s'agirait pas tant d'ajouter un nouveau droit à la liste des principaux droits fondamentaux, que d'infléchir la rédaction des droits cités, en précisant leur contenu, dans le sens de la dimension humaniste de l'entité européenne.

Développement durable et droits de l'homme

Soumis au double impératif éthique de solidarité synchronique avec la génération présente et de solidarité diachronique avec les générations futures, le développement durable poursuit une finalité sociale : l'épanouissement de tout l'homme et de tous les hommes (François Perroux) ou, si l'on préfère, la construction d'une civilisation de l'être dans le partage équitable de l'avoir (Joseph Lebret). Chemin faisant, il veille au respect des contraintes environnementales tout en recherchant la viabilité économique, condition instrumentale, néanmoins essentielle, pour sa réalisation.

La Charte des Nations Unies, la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, le Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques et le Pacte international relatif aux droits économiques et culturels jalonnent le processus de l'internationalisation des droits de l'homme.

En parallèle, sous la pression des mouvements citoyens et sociaux et de l'opinion publique, on assiste dans de nombreux pays à la consolidation des Etats de droit, le renforcement des garanties des libertés négatives (freedom from) et l'élargissement des libertés positives (freedom for). Partout ailleurs la lutte pour les droits de l'homme, avec ses succès et ses échecs lourdement payés, constitue un axe fondamental de la politique. Alors que se consolide le registre de la première génération des droits politiques, civils et civiques balisant le pouvoir d'action de l'Etat et s'étoffe celui de la deuxième génération des droits sociaux, économiques et culturels imposant une action positive à l'Etat, une troisième génération de droits, cette fois-ci collectifs, fait son apparition : droit à l'enfance, droit à l'environnement, droit à la ville, droit au développement des peuples, enfin reconnu à la Conférence de Vienne en 1993. Enfin, Luiz Carlos Bresser Pereira postule une quatrième génération de droits républicains garantissant aux citoyens l'accès et le bon usage des patrimoines publics – historique, environnemental et économique – (la res publica au sens littéral du terme).

Développement et démocratisation se confondent en tant que processus historique, à condition de donner une acception large au second terme. Au-delà de la simple instauration (ou rétablissement) de l'Etat de droit et des institutions de gouvernance démocratique, la démocratisation c'est aussi l'approfondissement, jamais achevé, de la démocratie au quotidien, de l'exercice de la citoyenneté en vue de l'expansion, de l'universalisation et de l'appropriation effective des droits de seconde et troisième générations.

Alors qu'en théorie les droits de l'homme sont indivisibles, dans la pratique on ne peut tout à fait éluder la question de leur hiérarchisation, notamment pour ce qui est de l'application des différents droits économiques et sociaux au vu de la multiplicité des besoins et de la pénurie des moyens. A partir de ce constat, la tentation est grande de procéder à des arbitrages abusifs. L'efficacité socio-économique ne saurait être en aucun cas invoquée pour justifier la dérive autoritaire. L'expérience tragique de notre siècle nous a appris que les droits de la première génération constituent une valeur absolue. Quant aux arbitrages délicats portant sur les droits de seconde génération, ils relèvent du fonctionnement de l'Etat de droit démocratique.

La Déclaration et le Programme d'action de Vienne, adoptés par la Conférence mondiale sur les droits de l'homme, proposent, dans le paragraphe 98, pour renforcer la jouissance des droits économiques, sociaux et culturels, la mise en oeuvre d'un système d'indicateurs pour évaluer les progrès accomplis dans la réalisation des droits énoncés dans le Pacte international.

L'analyse du développement en tant qu'appropriation des droits de l'homme pourrait donner lieu à l'élaboration d'un rapport sur la condition humaine d'une richesse considérable et d'une utilité certaine pour la formulation des politiques publiques de développement, recentrées sur la promotion des quatre générations des droits de l'homme.

Après avoir choisi la liste des droits considérés, il faudrait enquêter pays par pays sur l'état d'appropriation effective de chaque droit en distinguant la situation des différentes catégories sociales.

L'entreprise peut paraître ambitieuse. Elle est à la mesure de l'enjeu et tout à fait praticable, à condition de mobiliser les organisations citoyennes du tiers secteur travaillant dans les différents domaines couverts par un tel rapport. Elle se prête en outre à une réalisation par modules si l'opération devait s'échelonner sur plusieurs années ou devenir permanente. Il suffirait, dans ce cas, de choisir chaque année un nombre limité de droits ou encore de restreindre la portée géographique de l'étude à une région, de privilégier tantôt les populations urbaines, tantôt les populations rurales, les découpages se faisant en fonction des moyens. Mais la démarche la plus judicieuse pourrait consister à européaniser et à adapter cette démarche au processus de la Charte des droits fondamentaux.

Il s'agirait ainsi d'ouvrir une démarche précise coiffant l'ensemble des propositions : l'analyse du développement en tant qu'appropriation des droits fondamentaux pourrait donner lieu à l'élaboration d'un rapport sur la réalisation de ceux-ci. Il s'agirait d'enquêter pays par pays sur l'état d'appropriation effective de chaque droit en distinguant la situation des différentes catégories sociales.

Une telle démarche serait d'utilité certaine pour la formulation et l'évaluation des politiques publiques de développement recentrées sur la promotion des différentes générations de droits humains.

La proposition suivante, formulée par Ignacy Sachs, pourrait être valable pour l'ensemble de la Charte : « La Déclaration et le Programme d'action de Vienne, adoptées par la Conférence mondiale sur les droits de l'homme proposent, dans le paragraphe 98, pour renforcer la jouissance des droits économiques, sociaux et culturels, la mise en oeuvre d'un système d'indicateurs pour évaluer le progrès accomplis dans la réalisation des droits énoncés dans le Pacte international. »

Mais la pratique des « indicateurs » (généralement chiffrés) peut être très réductrice. On devrait plutôt songer à des dispositifs d'analyse et d'évaluation en termes de « grille ».

Du droit au travail au droit à la pleine activité

Exposé des motifs

L'inscription de ce droit dans la Charte répond à un double objectif :

- faciliter l'intégration dans la société, des personnes exclues ou menacées d'exclusion par la persistance d'un chômage structurel que le retour à la croissance ne permettra pas d'éliminer ;
- assurer la satisfaction de besoins individuels ou sociaux, partiellement insolvables ou mal assurés grâce au développement d'un tiers secteur moins coûteux et moins rigide que les services publics classiques, mieux adapté aux réalités de la société contemporaine, au prolongement de la vie humaine, au développement des organisations non gouvernementales.

L'innovation que représente le droit à la pleine activité suppose que soit écartées d'emblée deux objections : l'instauration de ce droit ne saurait s'accompagner de nouvelles contraintes imposées aux chômeurs, ni se traduire par le développement camouflé d'un nouveau secteur public.

Modalités de mise en oeuvre

Une grande souplesse dans l'application devrait être laissée aux Etats. Ceux-ci pourront organiser eux-mêmes la pleine activité ou en confier la mise en oeuvre aux collectivités décentralisées. Ils seront cependant comptables devant l'Union de la garantie effective du droit à la pleine activité. On peut se demander s'il ne conviendrait pas de reconnaître une possibilité, voire une obligation d'intervention de l'Union, en cas de carence d'un Etat.

Les Etats ou les collectivités décentralisées pourront avoir recours à des associations ou à des entreprises pour l'offre de contrats d'activité et l'organisation de services destinés à employer les titulaires de ces contrats.

Sélection des candidats

Le droit à la pleine activité ne sera subordonné à aucune condition de diplôme ou d'expérience professionnelle. Chaque candidat aura la possibilité d'exiger qu'une offre raisonnable lui soit présentée. Après trois refus successifs de sa part, il pourra faire appel à une instance d'arbitrage. Celle-ci appréciera si les offres rejetées étaient raisonnables. Il faut entendre par là l'offre d'une activité correspondant aux capacités du demandeur et dans la mesure du possible à ses souhaits, mais non nécessairement à son niveau de qualification ou à ses expériences professionnelles antérieures. Un mécanisme d'appel devra être prévu afin d'assurer une jurisprudence harmonisée dans l'ensemble des Etats membres.

Les Etats membres auront la faculté, mais non l'obligation, de limiter l'offre de pleine activité aux personnes à qui aucune offre d'emploi satisfaisante dans l'économie marchande n'a pu être proposée.

Le contrat pourra être interrompu si l'organisme employeur estime que le titulaire ne donne pas satisfaction. Celui-ci aura la faculté de solliciter un autre contrat auprès d'un autre organisme. En cas de litige, il pourra faire appel à l'instance d'arbitrage.

Il ne saurait être question d'étendre le droit à la pleine activité aux retraités. Il serait dépourvu de toute signification pour les bénévoles. En revanche, le développement d'un tiers secteur d'économie sociale devrait permettre la mobilisation de retraités et de bénévoles en vue de tâches d'intérêt général.

Les bénévoles recevraient des indemnités pour frais, par exemple de transport, ou des indemnités complémentaires en cas d'insuffisance de leurs revenus. Il en serait de même des retraités. Ceux-ci pourraient notamment, en fonction de leurs capacités et de leurs expériences, se voir confier des tâches d'encadrement.

Tâches susceptibles d'être assurées par un tiers secteur d'économie sociale

On ne donnera ici que quelques exemples dans le domaine de l'aide aux personnes, de la santé, de la sécurité, de l'environnement et de la justice.

1 – Aide aux personnes

Le tiers secteur serait particulièrement utile pour permettre le maintien à domicile des personnes âgées (l'aide aux achats, aux formalités administratives, soins mineurs, réconfort moral), l'aide aux couples ayant des enfants et dont les deux conjoints exercent une profession (garde des enfants à domicile, accompagnement à la crèche ou à la halte garderie, voire assistance scolaire à domicile).

2 – Santé

Le recours au tiers secteur permettrait d'améliorer les services rendus aux personnes hospitalisées et, dans certains cas, de réduire la durée des hospitalisations (voir ci-dessus aide aux personnes âgées qui peut aussi bien s'appliquer aux personnes en convalescence).

3 – Sécurité

Le maintien ou le rétablissement de la sécurité, en particulier dans les transports et dans le milieu scolaire fait partie des tâches qui pourraient être confiées à des titulaires de contrats d'activité, aussi bien jeunes qu'adultes ou en retraite. Les contrats emplois-solidarité offerts à des jeunes constituent une première expérience qui s'est révélée utile et devrait être pérennisée.

4 – Environnement

De nombreux travaux d'entretien ou d'aménagement gagneraient à être confiés à des associations lorsque les administrations d'Etat ou locales n'ont pas les moyens de les exécuter. Il en est ainsi en particulier des travaux qui ne nécessitent pas l'emploi d'un matériel lourd ou même dont l'emploi d'un matériel lourd est de nature à compromettre la bonne exécution. Tel est le cas de l'entretien des sentiers, cours d'eau et de leurs berges.

Dès à présent, l'entretien et la mise en valeur de certains éléments du patrimoine naturel ou architectural sont assurés par des associations de bénévoles. L'action de ces associations pourrait être utilement développée si elles disposaient d'un encadrement permanent dans le cadre de contrats d'activité. Elles pourraient aussi offrir des contrats à des demandeurs d'activité.

5 – Justice

Il est généralement reconnu que la prison n'est pas le meilleur mode de traitement de la délinquance primaire. L'organisation de chantiers soumis à une discipline stricte serait sans aucun doute préférable à l'enfermement qui place de jeunes délinquants primaires sous l'emprise de délinquants ou de criminels confirmés.

Dans ce domaine, il pourrait être fait appel à des personnes en retraite ou en pré-retraite ayant exercé des fonctions d'autorité, qu'il s'agisse d'enseignants, de militaires ou de cadres du secteur privé.

Certes, l'organisation de chantiers pour délinquants primaires ne pourrait relever entièrement des contrats d'activité. Mais ceux-ci devraient en faciliter la mise en place et en réduire le coût.

Retour à l'emploi-formation

La proposition visant à reconnaître, à côté du droit à l'emploi, un droit à l'activité est parfois décrite comme une menace d'extension de la précarité. Il s'agit là d'un contresens. En effet, l'un des objectifs essentiels qui vise la reconnaissance de ce droit est précisément de faire échapper à la précarité toutes les personnes qui manifestent un désir sincère et une volonté réelle de s'intégrer à la société et de se rendre utiles.

Cet objectif sera d'autant mieux reconnu que seront ménagées les possibilités de retour à l'emploi dans l'économie marchande ou dans les services publics. C'est pourquoi des formations devront être offertes aux titulaires de contrats d'activité : soit en début de contrat, lorsqu'une formation préalable s'avère nécessaire, soit en cours de contrat, en vue d'un perfectionnement, soit en fin de contrat, en vue soit d'un changement d'affectation au sein du tiers secteur, soit du passage ou du retour à l'économie marchande ou aux services publics. Concernant ces derniers, il serait approprié de reculer les limites d'âge en fonction de la durée du travail, dans un contrat d'activité, voire d'en faire un critère d'admission aux concours des fonctions publiques d'Etat, locale ou hospitalière.

La reconnaissance du droit à la pleine activité ne saurait être considérée comme un palliatif temporaire à la crise de l'emploi. Il s'agit en réalité d'un mode de transformation de la société donnant sa juste place à des activités ne relevant ni du secteur marchand, ni des services publics classiques. Il s'agit aussi, dans l'optique de ce qu'Edgar Morin appelle une « politique de civilisation », d'offrir à toutes les personnes qui en ont le désir et la possibilité de participer à la vie de la société en exerçant une activité d'intérêt général, le plus souvent contre rémunération, mais aussi, le cas échéant, à titre totalement ou partiellement bénévole.

En généralisant une telle innovation, l'Union européenne libérerait ses Etats membres de rigidités qui les paralysent tout en mettant à son actif une véritable avancée de civilisation.

Proposition

« Toute personne adulte dépourvue d'emploi doit se voir offrir la possibilité de participer à une activité d'intérêt général normalement rémunérée. »

Droit à des moyens d'existence digne

Ce texte a soulevé des réserves de la part des associations, tant sur le principe que sur les modalités, au cours des différentes réunions de CAFECs. Ces idées doivent continuer à être approfondies, car elles sont novatrices.

Exposé des motifs

A mesure que, globalement, le monde s'enrichit, on note que les inégalités s'accroissent. Le droit au travail est inscrit dans la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, mais le travail est inégalement réparti. Or, chaque individu, comme producteur et/ou consommateur, contribue à tout âge à l'augmentation du PIB d'un pays, d'un continent ou de la planète. A défaut de la reconnaissance de ces rôles naturels d'agents économiques, une large partie des citoyens se trouve ainsi spoliée. On tend alors à rompre l'unité du corps social dont chaque individu est l'une des composantes, obligeant ainsi les plus démunis à se déclarer pauvres et à dépendre de l'assistance des autres. Il s'agit donc d'un droit fondamental : celui de l'accès aux fruits de la richesse collective pour disposer de moyens d'existence digne. Ce constat nous oblige à réfléchir sur l'évolution des modes d'appropriation et de répartition des richesses :

- peut-on persister à vouloir faire du travail le seul facteur d'intégration sociale ?
- le temps n'est-il pas venu de prendre en compte la richesse collective ?

- chacun n'a-t-il pas un droit naturel à en recevoir une part ?
- en ce sens peut on encore refuser la reconnaissance d'un droit à des moyens d'existence digne ?

Pour répondre à ces interrogations, réfléchissons sur la valeur donnée au travail dans notre société, plus particulièrement dans les rapports entre :

- le travail et la propriété
- le travail et la productivité
- le travail et les revenus.

I - Travail et propriété

Si la propriété individuelle est un droit naturel de l'homme, car il est légitime de posséder ce que l'on a obtenu par ses efforts ou par ceux des siens, la délimitation de la part revenant à chacun pose un double problème :

1- D'une part, en raison de l'importance de l'héritage culturel commun. En effet, toute appropriation privée (de machines, de travail) ainsi que les revenus qui en découlent sont aussi le résultat d'échanges multiples, marchands mais aussi non marchands, dépendant de l'ensemble des connaissances, du capital matériel et social accumulé, et encore des infrastructures et de la culture même dans laquelle nous sommes plongés. C'est cet ensemble qui conditionne l'efficacité des efforts individuels et caractérise le niveau de vie d'un pays. Ces fruits appartiennent donc à tous, qu'ils travaillent ou non, et la justice sociale impose que chacun en reçoive une part égale.

2 - D'autre part, la multiplication des échanges, la mondialisation de la circulation des biens et des hommes génèrent de nouvelles formes de richesses, dont il est difficile d'identifier les auteurs et donc de déterminer la part leur revenant en propre. En outre, la révolution informationnelle dématérialise le travail et produit des synergies multiples et en réseaux. A qui appartient le produit de ce travail ? Qui peut en revendiquer la propriété de bout en bout ? Personne en propre. Dans ce contexte, le travail individuel est comme dissout, mais ses effets sont démultipliés dans des proportions non mesurables.

Ces phénomènes existaient déjà en proportion moindre jusqu'ici ; leur amplification soudaine nous les rend incontournables. Ils nous imposent, aujourd'hui, de trouver la contre-partie revenant à chacun de la reconnaissance de ce capital collectif.

II - Travail et productivité

Dans l'entreprise, on ne peut éluder les effets des gains de productivité sur la réduction de la durée du travail ni en tirer les conséquences. Il y a un siècle on travaillait 4.000 heures et actuellement moins de la moitié ; le temps libre est ainsi devenu supérieur au temps de travail, selon une tendance inscrite dans une évolution historique irréversible. La productivité est bonne en soi, car elle améliore notre qualité de vie, d'autant qu'en permettant l'augmentation du temps libre, elle devient créatrice de richesses par les relations et les activités non marchandes quelle suscite, si elle s'accompagne d'un large effort d'éducation et de communication.

Mais cette augmentation de temps libre serait récessive si elle devait entraîner une baisse de revenu, tout particulièrement pour les catégories les moins favorisées.

III - Travail et revenus

Un nombre appréciable d'individus ou d'institutions disposent d'un pouvoir non négligeable sur le maintien de leur revenu : les fonctionnaires par leur statut protégé, les salariés des grandes entreprises par la pression syndicale, les détenteurs de capitaux par leur rentabilité à long terme, les retraités par la sécurité de leur retraite. A l'opposé, les travailleurs indépendants, les occasionnels, les petits salariés du privé sont totalement livrés aux fluctuations du marché.

Ce sont précisément ceux qui pour vivre ne dépendent que de leur seul travail ou ne disposent que de minima précaires, car conditionnels, qui subissent le plus violemment les incidences des mutations technologiques et économiques. En outre, la volonté de travailler n'assure plus un revenu suffisant au travailleur précaire qui n'a aucune prise sur le marché du travail. Sa précarité est aggravée par un triple constat : il ne peut choisir son activité ni négocier sa rémunération, et il vit au jour le jour sans assurance pour le lendemain.

La condition de ceux qui se trouvent ainsi paupérisés crée un nouveau clivage social et la nouvelle grande inégalité sociale d'aujourd'hui.

Proposition

On retrouverait le sens de la liberté et de la fraternité en investissant dans la personne par la reconnaissance de son droit à des moyens d'existence digne tout au long de sa vie.

Pour la collectivité ce serait prendre en compte la part du capital social humain revenant de droit à chaque individu. Loin d'être une charge, cela réaliserait un vivifiant investissement social, car l'individu, lors de sa vie active, serait ainsi incité à contribuer par lui-même à l'enrichissement collectif. Ce droit apporterait le gène du changement au bénéfice d'une société au service de l'homme, dans laquelle :

- la sécurité serait mieux assurée et les initiatives libérées
- chaque homme serait reconnu dans son appartenance à la communauté.

On imagine le caractère fédérateur de ce nouveau contrat social s'il était proposé par la France, inspiratrice des droits de l'homme, pour être peu à peu adopté dans l'Union européenne par les Etats membres.

Droit au temps choisi

Exposé des motifs

Tout individu adulte est titulaire de responsabilités envers lui-même, envers sa famille, envers les groupes sociaux dont il fait partie ou avec lesquels il contracte. A l'exercice de chacune de ces responsabilités, l'individu alloue la partie requise du temps total dont il dispose. Encore faut-il que les contraintes de l'organisation sociale ne s'opposent pas à cette allocation du temps, notamment celui nécessaire à la vie personnelle et familiale à laquelle la personne a droit comme l'un des garants de sa dignité.

Or, les évolutions contemporaines mettent en cause la capacité de l'individu de gérer son temps, donc sa capacité de faire face à l'ensemble des responsabilités qui lui incombent. Deux grandes tendances se font jour :

- l'une est la difficulté de plus en plus grande à encadrer contractuellement le temps de travail. Le temps de travail est plus difficile à contrôler du fait que, sous l'effet notamment des nouveaux moyens de communication, il n'y a plus de relation, aussi systématique que dans le passé, entre temps de travail et lieu de travail. Par ailleurs, la flexibilité des horaires et du calendrier de travail s'accroît. Dans certains cas, la dimension mondiale des échanges professionnels soumettent d'aucuns aux rythmes temporels de personnes situées dans un tout autre contexte géographique et social. Or la flexibilité s'oppose à la prévisibilité. Elle obère donc la capacité de l'individu à organiser ses autres temps sociaux ;

- la deuxième tendance renforce la première. C'est le fait que la fonction économique prend de plus en plus le pas sur toutes les autres fonctions, quand elle ne nie pas purement et simplement leur légitimité et leur rôle. C'est en imposant ses temps et ses rythmes qu'elle marque sa prééminence et contrarie l'exercice des responsabilités sociales essentielles portées par les individus.

Affirmation d'un droit

En conséquence, dans le cadre européen, qui semble particulièrement bien adapté pour en traiter, il convient d'affirmer le droit suivant :

Dans le cadre contractuel des relations de travail, chacun a le droit de faire valoir tout au long de son existence, l'harmonie des temps consacrés à sa vie professionnelle, à sa formation, à l'exercice de ses responsabilités familiales et civiques et à son épanouissement personnel.

Modalités de mise en oeuvre de ce droit

La mise en oeuvre d'un tel droit n'est pas aisée. Elle doit se traduire, soit par des dispositifs réglant :

- la quantité de temps consacrée à la vie professionnelle,
- les interférences de la vie professionnelle avec les autres responsabilités sociales,
- les délais de prévenance pour les changements d'affectation du temps ; soit par la précision d'un certain nombre de principes découlant de ce droit fondamental, principes qui pourront être invoqués en cas de recours pour non respect dudit droit.

1. Quantité de temps consacrée à la vie professionnelle

Pour que l'intégrité de la personne soit respectée, les législations nationales doivent comporter :

- des règles d'âge minimum ;
- une ou des définitions du temps de travail effectif qui se référeront au temps à disposition de l'employeur, quelle que soit la localisation de la personne. Pourraient être considérés comme temps à disposition de l'employeur les temps d'interruption de l'activité professionnelle inférieurs à un certain pourcentage du temps de travail quotidien, ainsi que les temps pendant lesquels il est fait obligation au salarié d'être joignable par tout moyen de communication ;

- des durées maximales quotidienne, hebdomadaire, annuelle. Pour s'adapter aux caractéristiques des secteurs professionnels, ces durées maximales ne seront pas fixées de manière absolue, mais conditionnelle ; par exemple, plus la durée hebdomadaire maximum sera élevée, plus la durée annuelle maximum sera faible ;
- des règles de compensation du non-respect des durées contractuelles, avec abondement d'un compte épargne-temps.

2. Interférences réciproques de la vie professionnelle et des autres responsabilités sociales

Pour que l'intégrité de la personne et l'exercice de ses responsabilités familiales et sociales soient respectés, il convient d'encadrer la vie professionnelle de telle manière que ses modalités d'organisation n'aient pas pour effet de perturber les autres temps sociaux. Inversement, les autres temps sociaux ne doivent interférer sur la vie professionnelle que dans des cas limités et précis.

L'application du premier principe se traduit par :

- l'ouverture d'une possibilité, pour chacun, d'adapter la durée, les horaires et le calendrier de travail aux contraintes résultant de l'exercice de ses responsabilités familiales et sociales. Cette possibilité est, la plupart du temps, déjà ouverte par des dispositions du droit du travail, soit pour des événements familiaux (maternité, décès de proches, mariage, ...), soit pour l'exercice de responsabilités syndicales. Elle pourrait être étendue par des dispositifs d'épargne-temps avec des règles de tirage, modulées selon les motifs du tirage, ou par la pratique de la renégociation des temps contractuels de travail, en cas de changement dans la situation familiale, voire sociale, du salarié ;

- le respect de délais de prévenance en cas de changement d'horaire ou de calendrier de travail. Les délais de prévenance peuvent être réduits, tant pour le salarié que pour l'employeur, pour les seuls cas de force majeure. L'invocation de la force majeure est elle-même limitée à un certain nombre de cas dans l'année et fait jouer, à chaque fois, une clause de pénalisation en temps au profit du salarié ou au profit de l'employeur, selon les cas ;

- un devoir de préservation, dans le travail, de l'intégrité du salarié de telle sorte que ne soit pas obérée sa capacité d'assumer ses responsabilités hors de son travail.

L'application du deuxième principe se traduit par :

- un devoir de ne pas utiliser de façon abusive les règles instaurées pour préserver les temps sociaux autres que le temps professionnel,

- le jeu à double sens des pénalisations liées au non-respect des délais de prévenance.

Droit d'asile

Exposé des motifs

Le respect, la promotion et la sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des principes démocratiques, qui font l'objet de références explicites dans le dispositif du Traité sur l'Union européenne, constituent un facteur essentiel des relations entre la Communauté européenne et les pays tiers. Le respect des droits de l'homme, qui s'affirme comme l'un des éléments fondamentaux de l'appartenance à l'Union européenne, a été consacré comme principe de base de son action.

Le droit à l'asile est reconnu comme un droit fondamental de toute personne, quelle que soit son origine, qui se sent persécutée, et que tout Etat de droit se doit de respecter indépendamment du contexte économique et politique (et donc de la politique migratoire) du moment. Il est inscrit dans de nombreux textes de proclamation des droits : dans certaines constitutions européennes, en particulier dans le préambule de celle de la France, et dans la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. La Convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951 relative au statut des réfugiés et dont le champ d'application a été étendu hors d'Europe par un Protocole de 1967 donne une définition du réfugié et fixe son statut. Ces deux textes - la Convention et le Protocole - ont été signés et ratifiés par tous les actuels Etats membres de l'Union européenne. Ils fournissent le socle juridique sur lequel doit être fondé le droit d'asile à l'intérieur de l'Union.

Mais depuis la fin des années 70, les conditions d'exercice du droit d'asile ont été rendues plus difficiles dans les pays riches, notamment dans les pays de l'Union européenne, du fait :

- du nombre toujours important et grandissant des réfugiés (violations massives des droits de l'homme dans le monde entier, développement de l'information et prise de conscience de leurs droits par les victimes, développement des moyens de transport),
- de la montée du chômage dans les pays européens et de la fermeture de leurs frontières à l'immigration économique, rendant plus problématique le simple accès sur leurs territoires,
- de la plus grande complexité des relations diplomatiques.

En conséquence les pays d'accueil, notamment européens, ont semblé être pris de court par l'augmentation des demandes d'asile ; d'autre part les réfugiés sont quelquefois utilisés comme un enjeu dans les relations (politiques, économiques, diplomatiques) entre les gouvernements, des Etats n'admettant pas que certains de leurs ressortissants puissent trouver protection auprès d'un autre Etat. Ces éléments ont conduit à des variations dans l'application de la Convention de Genève de 1951 et du traitement des demandes d'asile dans les différents pays de l'Union européenne qui ont senti la nécessité d'harmoniser leurs pratiques.

Aussi, depuis une quinzaine d'années, les questions touchant au droit d'asile sont une préoccupation constante dans les relations intergouvernementales des Etats membres. Elles sont formalisées dans le Traité de Maastricht instituant l'Union européenne et seront probablement communautarisées, au moins partiellement dans les cinq ans de l'entrée en vigueur du Traité d'Amsterdam.

Les conclusions du Sommet européen de Tampere abordent pour la première fois la question du droit d'asile en termes de droits de l'homme « 4. Notre objectif est une Union européenne ouverte et sûre, pleinement attachée au respect des obligations de la Convention de Genève sur les réfugiés et des autres instruments pertinents en matière de droits de l'homme, et capable de répondre aux besoins humanitaires sur la base de la solidarité... ».

Mais cette déclaration, dont les interprétations peuvent être diverses, ne trouve pas encore sa traduction dans les traités ou les textes fondamentaux de l'Union européenne.

Le droit d'asile doit être inscrit parmi les tout premiers droits politiques dans une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne :

- parce que, étant l'une des valeurs fondatrices de l'Europe et touchant à un point particulièrement sensible du monde moderne, le traitement du problème par l'Union européenne aura des conséquences dans le monde entier. Si l'Europe veut être un modèle en matière de droits de l'homme, elle se doit de les proclamer et de les respecter d'abord chez elle ;
- parce que si la solidarité en matière d'accueil de réfugiés s'exerce dans le partage entre pays européens, elle est aussi un devoir et une nécessité au plan international, car les réfugiés sont accueillis, en écrasante majorité, dans les pays pauvres ;
- parce que, bien que toujours proclamé, c'est un des droits les plus menacés pour les raisons citées ci-dessus. La Convention de Genève de 1951 elle-même, qui connaît des variations dans son application, a subi des attaques frontales de la part de certains gouvernements européens (notamment par l'Autriche). La pléthore de textes dans ce domaine (résolutions, conclusions, recommandations, positions communes...) élaborés entre pays de l'Union depuis quinze ans est d'ailleurs le reflet de cette menace. Il convient donc d'en fixer le principe, qui devra être appliqué selon la Convention de Genève et le droit dérivé des traités, sous le contrôle de la Cour de justice ;
- parce que la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales signée au sein du Conseil de l'Europe - le seul grand texte européen sur les droits de l'homme actuellement efficace, puisqu'il est assorti d'une instance juridictionnelle chargée de sanctionner, sur saisine individuelle, les manquements au respect de ses dispositions - n'en traite pas. Plusieurs tentatives, dans les années 80, d'y annexer un protocole sur l'asile n'ont pas abouti ;
- parce que les Etats candidats à l'entrée dans l'Union européenne n'ont pas les mêmes traditions à cet égard et doivent sans ambiguïté s'aligner sur les standards communs en la matière en cas d'élargissement de l'Union.

Propositions

Une Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne devrait donc :

- 1 - proclamer le droit de quiconque craignant une persécution, quels que soient son sexe, son origine géographique, sa nationalité, sa religion, etc... de trouver asile dans l'Union. Ce droit implique l'accès des demandeurs d'asile à une procédure juste et efficace pour l'examen de leur demande et, par voie de conséquence, l'accès au territoire des Etats membres en tenant compte de leur choix du pays en raison des attaches familiales, culturelles, linguistiques ou autres. Des conditions de vie dignes doivent être assurées dès l'entrée sur le territoire ;
- 2 - programmer la signature par l'Union elle-même de la Convention de Genève de 1951 qui doit être appliquée sans restriction et de façon harmonisée conformément à la doctrine du Haut commissariat des Nations Unies ;
- 3 - rappeler le caractère non inamical de l'acte d'accorder l'asile.

Droits du citoyen et technologies de l'information et de la communication

Contexte

L'entrée dans l'ère numérique représente une révolution qui est certainement du même ordre d'importance que celle qu'a représentée l'imprimerie. Elle a une dimension technique et une dimension économique qui ne doivent pas être négligées, mais elle entraînera aussi une transformation culturelle profonde. L'homme de l'ère numérique disposera de possibilités absolument nouvelles pour produire, traiter et diffuser les informations et les savoirs. Si ces possibilités sont intelligemment exploitées et convenablement maîtrisées, elles ouvrent des perspectives considérables à l'enrichissement personnel et à la participation des citoyens à la vie publique. Mais ces effets heureux ne sont que possibles, il faut les vouloir et les construire.

La Commission européenne a réagi à l'ampleur du défi que représentent les nouvelles techniques en définissant l'initiative eEurope (1).

L'initiative de la Commission mérite d'être suivie d'effet, mais elle fait preuve aussi d'insuffisances, ce qui inspire les propositions qui suivent.

Propositions

1 - Le programme d'éducation tel qu'il est proposé est essentiellement tourné vers la maîtrise de l'outil technique. C'est évidemment la première étape à franchir, mais c'est la plus facile. Le véritable enjeu, c'est d'apprendre aux nouvelles générations à s'orienter, à gérer un flux permanent d'informations d'une importance jamais vue. Il y a un risque que les esprits soient noyés ou restent passifs devant cette masse. Il faut donc qu'ils apprennent à sélectionner, comprendre, interpréter avec un esprit critique, enfin à utiliser ces informations et ces savoirs.

2 – L'action « gouvernements en ligne » semble se limiter au niveau communautaire et gouvernemental. Tout en respectant le principe de subsidiarité, il conviendrait d'encourager et d'aider les actions au niveau local et territorial. C'est un échelon privilégié déjà riche d'initiatives où pourront être expérimentées, dans la diversité, des formes nouvelles d'exercice de la démocratie.

3 - Le besoin d'information du citoyen n'est pas limité au secteur gouvernemental. Quel que soit leur statut, public ou privé, les entreprises et les associations ont une activité qui intéresse la collectivité toute entière. Elles devraient être soumises à des obligations de transparence et d'évaluation de leur activité plus grandes qu'actuellement. Les nouvelles techniques permettent de rendre disponible en ligne la masse d'informations et de rapports qui en résulterait, à condition qu'elle soit dans un langage clair et accessible.

4 - La Commission se montre très sensible aux possibilités de la « nouvelle économie » en termes de croissance et d'emplois. Ce sont en effet des aspects importants. Il serait néanmoins dangereux de ne pas envisager la dimension complète de la révolution en cours. Il faut ouvrir la place à une utilisation non exclusivement marchande de la Toile, en considérant celle-ci comme un véritable service public de la communication citoyenne, ce qui suppose multiplication des points d'accès publics, moyens de financement, acteurs autorisés et peut-être là encore autorité de régulation.

5 - Les conditions de la naissance de la Toile ont fait que la langue anglaise y est très largement prédominante. L'Europe devrait introduire dans son programme une dimension de préservation de sa diversité linguistique. Cela commence par la mise en place de normes de logiciels permettant d'écrire et de transporter sans les déformer les signes qui ne sont pas utilisés en anglais (accents).

6 - L'ère numérique ouvre un champ nouveau à la liberté d'expression, donc aussi à des abus possibles de cette liberté. Il conviendrait de réfléchir aux conditions d'application des limites déjà existantes (diffamation, protection de la vie privée, incitation au crime, etc...) mais aussi à la possibilité d'authentifier les informations (labels de vérification, autorité de contrôle ?).

7 - Dans une organisation où la plupart des actes de la vie courante sont susceptibles de laisser une trace informatique, la puissance des outils informatiques en matière de saisie, de stockage de données, de regroupement de fichiers, ouvre des possibilités de manipulations attentatoires à la liberté, à la dignité ou à l'intimité des personnes. Le droit à la protection des données, tel qu'il est actuellement formulé n'est pas suffisant. La loi devrait également prévoir des restrictions concernant le stockage et l'exploitation qui est faite de ces données.

8 - Les techniques de traitement de l'information et de la communication, si elles ne sont pas mises à la portée de tous, constitueront un nouveau facteur d'inégalité, voire d'exclusion. Bien utilisées, elles peuvent au contraire servir à lutter contre l'exclusion. Il est donc très important de bien formuler les conditions pratiques d'exercice du droit à l'accès à la Toile.

- (1) Les objectifs qu'elle a retenus sont les suivants :
- « faire entrer tous les citoyens, foyers, entreprises, écoles, et administrations dans l'ère numérique et leur donner un accès en ligne ;
 - introduire en Europe une culture numérique soutenue par un esprit d'entreprise favorable au financement et au développement de nouvelles idées ;
 - veiller à ce que l'ensemble de ce processus ait une vocation d'intégration sociale, gagne la confiance du consommateur et renforce la cohésion sociale. »

Bioéthique et droits de l'homme

Les progrès de la biologie et de la médecine posent des questions pour les droits de l'homme.

Ils sont incontestablement positifs pour certains droits : le droit à la connaissance, le droit à la protection de la santé. Mais ils présentent des risques : que l'homme soit traité en objet, qu'il soit soumis à des discriminations. Ces risques ont été formalisés par la doctrine eugéniste, à la fin du XIX^{ème} siècle, visant à améliorer l'espèce humaine. Le nazisme se présenta comme une mise en oeuvre de cette doctrine.

Une réponse morale fut d'abord apportée par les médecins : Code de Nuremberg (1947), Déclaration d'Helsinki (1964). Des réponses juridiques ont été ensuite formulées dans des lois (en France, lois « bioéthique », 1994), des conventions internationales (Convention « biomédecine » du Conseil de l'Europe, 1996).

La Communauté européenne a intégré dans son champ de compétences ces questions. Au « Groupe des conseillers pour l'éthique de la biotechnologie », créé en 1991 auprès de la Commission, a succédé, en 1997, le « Groupe européen d'éthique des sciences et des nouvelles technologies » (GEE). Il a rendu des avis sur les banques de tissus humains et sur la recherche sur l'embryon humain. Une directive sur les brevets en matière génétique a été adoptée en 1998. Le Parlement européen a adopté une résolution, en 1998, en faveur de l'interdiction du clonage des êtres humains.

Des droits ont été dégagés : dignité de la personne humaine, respect de la vie privée, non-discrimination, droit à la protection de la santé. Leur protection passe par le respect de certaines conditions : consentement de la personne, non patrimonialité du corps humain, intégrité de la personne.

La découverte, permanente et de plus en plus rapide, de nouvelles techniques médicales et de nouvelles données biologiques, pose, sans cesse, la question de l'acceptabilité de l'usage de ces découvertes au regard de ces droits.

Pour répondre, il convient, et c'est peut-être le plus difficile, d'identifier les critères qui sont pertinents et ceux qui ne le sont pas.

Premier axe : qui peut (et doit) poser des règles ?

Ce sont les autorités politiques, en ce qu'elles sont démocratiques. Ce ne sont ni les autorités médicales, ni les autorités religieuses, ni les acteurs économiques. Autrement dit, il revient à la loi de trancher en cas de conflit.

Deuxième axe : existe-t-il des principes qui doivent guider le législateur et le juge ?

Un premier principe correspond à la finalité des règles : elle est éthique, ce qui signifie que la fin des décisions est le respect des personnes (Jean-Paul Thomas : « il n'est pas d'autre principe éthique que celui du respect des personnes (1) »). Un deuxième principe est la prise en compte, dans l'usage des techniques nouvelles, de la notion de proportionnalité entre la fin et les moyens. On en trouve une application dans la directive sur les brevets.

L'Union européenne intervient, de façon normative, dans les domaines de la recherche biologique et de la santé. Ses actes doivent être inspirés par des principes directeurs qu'il convient de formaliser.

(1) in La bioéthique est-elle de mauvaise foi ? PUF, 1999, p.39)

Droit d'accès aux droits fondamentaux

L'affirmation de droits fondamentaux ne suffit pas si n'est pas garantie leur pleine effectivité.

Constat

□□□□ Les personnes en difficulté n'ont pas un accès satisfaisant à l'ensemble de la palette des droits offerts (manque d'information, complexité des procédures, temps administratifs ne correspondant pas aux rythmes sociaux, arbitraires administratifs, absence d'aide au remplissage des formulaires et à la recherche des justificatifs demandés...). Elles ne peuvent en conséquence mobiliser convenablement leur pleine capacité à sortir de leur précarité, de leur marginalité ou de leur isolement.

□□□□ Les personnes en difficulté ont besoin, plus que d'autres, d'un accompagnement pour les aider à retrouver dignité et citoyenneté. L'accompagnement social, bien que prévu dans un certain nombre de dispositifs (logement, emploi, revenu minimum) reste souvent trop aléatoire ou trop restrictif.

□□□□ Les aides et interventions délivrées par les administrations (guichets et services divers...) sont trop souvent cloisonnées et souffrent de discontinuité les unes par rapport aux autres, engendrant une grande perte d'efficacité.

□□□□ Plutôt que de rendre effectif pour chacun l'accès aux droits existants, une mauvaise tentation est trop souvent éprouvée par les pouvoirs publics de créer des droits, plus ou moins au rabais, qui marginalisent les plus démunis.

Propositions

Une réelle garantie de la pleine efficacité des droits doit reposer sur trois piliers :

- l'accessibilité et la proximité
- la garantie de plein exercice
- l'évaluation contradictoire

1. L'accessibilité et la proximité des droits fondamentaux

Devant la complexité du droit et des dispositifs publics, aujourd'hui sont contredites les affirmations « nul n'est censé ignorer la loi » et « tous sont égaux devant la loi ». On ne peut que déclarer « nul n'est censé connaître la loi » et « la loi protège les forts et délaisse les faibles ».

Droit à l'information

Pour que le droit soit effectif, il faut envisager l'obligation pour les administrations d'informer sur la nature et l'étendue des droits des publics concernés.

- Créer des lieux d'information inter-administratifs.
- Instaurer dans chaque ville, quartier ou zone rurale un service public de conseil juridique.
- Rendre responsable tout service public du bon traitement (délais) et de la transmission des dossiers (guichet unique interne).
- Obliger fermement toutes les administrations et services publics à motiver précisément tout refus d'accès à un droit ouvert et à donner toutes les informations utiles pour faciliter un éventuel recours.
- Renforcer les mesures qui encouragent les personnes les plus qualifiées et expérimentées à s'investir professionnellement dans les zones géographiques défavorisées.
- Prévoir dans tout dispositif public des moyens de communication adaptés aux publics les plus démunis.

□□□□□ Instaurer un droit à l'interprétation pour les personnes d'origine étrangère.

Droit à la formation

Pour que le droit ne soit pas une source d'incompréhension pour tous ceux qui doivent s'y référer dans leurs interventions et démarches, il faut généraliser une formation à la connaissance des situations et des processus d'exclusion sociale.

□□□□□ Introduire, dans les programmes de formation initiale et continue des professionnels susceptibles d'être en contact avec les populations en difficulté (enseignants, personnels de justice, policiers, professionnels de santé, travailleurs sociaux...), un enseignement leur permettant de mieux connaître et prendre en compte les réalités des situations de précarité, pauvreté ou exclusion sociale.

□□□□□ Promouvoir la formation dans les écoles à l'ensemble des droits de l'homme (droits civiques, civils, économiques, sociaux et culturels...)

Droit à la représentation et au partenariat

Pour que tous soient à même de voir pris en compte leurs droits dans les lieux où se décident leur avenir

□□□□□ Instaurer un droit à la représentation des personnes en difficulté ou des associations ou organisations syndicales au sein desquelles elles font entendre leur parole dans toutes les instances où se définissent des orientations ou des décisions concernant leurs droits fondamentaux.

□□□□□ Etablir un droit à la domiciliation pour l'ensemble des personnes y compris pour les personnes sans domicile fixe.

□□□□□ Instaurer un droit à l'accompagnement pour toute personne en difficulté sociale : l'accompagnement devant être entendu comme une démarche volontaire engageant de manière réciproque accompagnant et accompagné.

2. La garantie d'exercice des droits fondamentaux

Droit au recours non juridictionnel : c'est-à-dire à la médiation, la conciliation et l'arbitrage

- Généraliser auprès de chaque autorité locale la présence permanente et disponible d'un correspondant du médiateur national.
- Accroître le nombre de médiateurs-conciliateurs auprès des tribunaux.

Droit au recours juridictionnel

- Renforcer la justiciabilité de tous les droits fondamentaux affirmés, y compris les « droits interprétables » (ex. : aide sociale).
- Rendre pleinement accessible l'aide juridique.
- Donner sa pleine application à la notion de délai raisonnable de jugement définie par la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme.

Droit à la continuité

- Rendre impossibles les chutes brutales de ressources liées à des changements de situation administrative.
- Introduire des dispositifs accompagnant les ruptures financières : surendettement, garantie d'accès à l'énergie et à l'eau, garantie du droit à un logement...

3. L'évaluation contradictoire

Pilotée par une instance indépendante, l'évaluation de la pleine effectivité de l'accès aux droits fondamentaux est essentielle pour garantir que les personnes qui en ont le plus besoin ne restent pas à l'écart de leurs droits.

- Produire tous les deux ans un rapport public rassemblant l'expression de toutes les parties concernées par la mise en oeuvre de la législation garantissant les droits fondamentaux.
- Promouvoir à l'échelon local et régional des consultations des usagers des services publics et des associations au sein desquelles ils font entendre leur parole.

BILAN PROVISOIRE DES TRAVAUX DE LA CONVENTION

Les 11 et 12 septembre 2000, la Convention chargée de l'élaboration du projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne transmettra le résultat de ses travaux au Conseil et au Parlement européen. S'engagera alors un débat portant à la fois sur le contenu et sur le statut de la Charte, qui sera conclu à l'occasion du Conseil européen de Nice les 7 et 8 décembre 2000. Quelle que soit l'issue de ce processus, l'état des travaux de la Convention permet de dresser un bilan provisoire de cette expérience originale.

Ce bilan provisoire peut se lire sous deux angles :

- l'appréciation du contenu du projet de Charte : l'état d'élaboration de la soixantaine d'articles sur lesquels la Convention a concentré ses travaux ;
- l'appréciation de la valeur de la procédure originale qui a été suivie par la Convention.

1 - Pour ce qui concerne le contenu de la Charte, il apparaît que la Convention aura globalement rempli sa mission : la soixantaine d'articles qu'elle proposera consolideront les droits épars dans diverses conventions internationales sous une forme lisible par les citoyens européens. Seront ainsi confortés à la fois le support d'une citoyenneté enrichie par rapport aux actuels Traités et un ancrage plus explicite de l'Union dans les formes d'une communauté politique régie par le droit.

Il est par contre probable que certaines des difficultés rencontrées dans les travaux de la Convention ne trouveront pas de solution définitive à l'échéance du Conseil de Nice :

- l'expression de certains droits liés à l'évolution des sciences et des techniques (intégrité du corps humain, protection des données individuelles) ou à celle de nos sociétés (éducation, droit de la famille) gardera une formulation provisoire qui, pour être adaptée aux réalités du monde actuel, nécessitera une poursuite de la réflexion ;
- il en est de même en matière de droit au travail et à un revenu, de temps choisi, de droit à l'initiative, de droit à l'insertion, et plus généralement de droit à un développement socialement et écologiquement durable, pourtant au coeur des débats de société actuels ;
- la définition actuelle de la citoyenneté européenne, liée à la nationalité dans les Etats-membres, ne permettra pas une distinction claire et définitive entre les droits des citoyens européens, ceux des résidents sur le territoire de l'Union, et ceux garantis à toute personne se trouvant sur ce territoire, quel que soit son statut ;
- la distinction entre les droits fondamentaux, les principes directeurs des politiques de l'Union et certaines décisions destinées à favoriser l'exercice de ces droits restera ambiguë (égalité des sexes, statut d'association européenne).

Dans ces différents domaines, la Charte revêtira le caractère d'un exercice ambitieux, permettant une affirmation politique immédiate, mais en même temps provisoire, et nécessitant un approfondissement ultérieur.

2 - Pour ce qui concerne la procédure en elle même, il est clair qu'elle aura démontré ses mérites :

- le caractère ouvert et public des travaux, qui donne lieu à des échanges approfondis contraste heureusement avec celui, limité, abscons et codifié de la CIG (Conférence intergouvernementale), prisonnière de sa configuration diplomatique et de son ordre du jour limité. S'il s'agit d'approfondir la question : « pourquoi voulons nous vivre ensemble, et pour quoi faire ? », la procédure de la Convention apparaît considérablement plus imaginative que celle de la CIG (Conférence intergouvernementale) ;

- l'association des Parlements nationaux au processus de la construction européenne apparaît considérablement plus prometteur que celle offerte par les procédures habituelles (COSAC) qui restent axées sur le contrôle extérieur.

Il apparaît, dans le même temps qu'elle n'aura pas pu aller jusqu'au bout de la démarche qu'elle a initié :

- la Convention n'a réellement développé ses travaux selon la méthode ouverte et publique qu'elle a initiée qu'à compter de février 2000. La notoriété de celle-ci reste ainsi limitée et réservée à un cercle restreint d'associations et de responsables familiers des enceintes bruxelloises. Beaucoup de voix qui méritaient d'être entendues n'auront pu s'exprimer que tardivement et partiellement ;

- sur beaucoup de questions abordées, le dialogue aura à peine eu le temps de se nouer (cf. les points soulignés au 1° ci-dessus) et laisserait un sentiment d'inachèvement s'il devait s'arrêter en décembre 2000. Clore les travaux de la Convention à l'automne 2000 serait ainsi une source de frustration par rapport aux espoirs soulevés par le caractère ambitieux de la démarche qu'elle a initiée. « Siffler la fin de la récréation » laisserait à beaucoup l'impression d'avoir été manipulés, ce qui n'était certainement pas le but de l'exercice.

3 - Quelle que soit l'approche retenue, celle du contenu comme celle de la procédure, il apparaît impensable que l'exercice en cours soit clos avec le Conseil européen de Nice. Ceci serait de surcroît contradictoire avec les objectifs stratégiques 2000-2005 « Donner forme à la nouvelle Europe » proposés par la Commission (1) , qui font de la « promotion de nouvelles formes de gouvernance » permettant de renforcer la voix de la société civile dans l'élaboration et la mise en oeuvre des politiques la première des quatre priorités de l'Union pour la période considérée. La seule question qui devrait se poser est donc celle du comment poursuivre les travaux entamés : faut-il pérenniser la formule de la Convention, inventée dans une perspective précise (celle du Conseil de Nice), ou imaginer une procédure plus « institutionnelle » qui garde un lien privilégié avec le Parlement européen et accorde un rôle plus explicite à un Comité économique et social dont le troisième collège serait rénové en conséquence ?

(1) COM 2000 - 154 final 9.02.2000 « Objectifs stratégiques 2000-2005 »

Afin d'éviter toute rupture démobilisatrice, le plus sage serait de proroger les travaux de la Convention pour une période de trois ans et, à la lumière d'une procédure qui aurait ainsi pu aller jusqu'à son terme, décider de l'avenir de ce type de mécanisme participatif. Les travaux de la Convention ainsi prolongée auraient trois débouchés distincts :

- la mise au points de compléments à la Charte retenue à l'automne 2000 (quel que soit son statut) sur les points qui méritent un approfondissement ;
- l'élaboration de principes directeurs pour les politiques de l'Union (par exemple la lutte contre les discriminations), qu'ils soient généraux ou spécifiques à certaines politiques ;
- la proposition de mesures destinées à « renforcer la voix de la société civile » : par exemple un statut européen pour les associations et les fondations.

En conséquence, CAF ECS propose d'ajouter dans les traités, l'article suivant :

« La Charte des droits fondamentaux est complétée par une nouvelle réunion de la Convention pour une période de trois ans et selon une procédure analogue ».

1er avril 2000

Annexe 1

Déclaration

pour une Europe civique et sociale

La société change, un autre monde est en train de naître. L'Europe est à la croisée des chemins. Elle a besoin d'une nouvelle fondation pour répondre aux défis auxquels elle est confrontée, ceux de la monnaie unique, de l'approfondissement politique, de l'élargissement à l'Est et de son ouverture sur le monde.

Les questions civiques et sociales sont désormais au coeur des défis de la construction européenne. L'Union européenne ne se construira pas sur fond de chômage et d'exclusion. Sans cohésion sociale, la monnaie unique sera friable. Or, le défi de l'emploi et de l'exclusion exige un renouvellement important des politiques et des conceptions du travail et de l'activité. Il faut défendre le modèle social européen, mais aussi innover pour faire progresser cet atout de compétitivité et de redistribution. Enfin, l'Union doit affirmer beaucoup plus nettement son identité et celle-ci est indissociable de la citoyenneté. Or, l'ébauche de citoyenneté européenne instituée par le Traité de Maastricht a un contenu principalement fonctionnel et n'apparaît pas encore comme l'expression d'une société politique en gestation.

Les nouvelles fondations de l'Europe seront civiques et sociales ou ne seront pas. Cela suppose que le sens et le contenu du projet politique européen soient débattus, puis définis clairement. L'Europe doit réfléchir aux finalités qu'elle se donne et mettre l'économie à sa place, au service de l'homme et non l'inverse.

A cet égard, les conditions actuelles de déroulement de la Conférence intergouvernementale ne paraissent pas à la hauteur des enjeux. La CIG n'aura véritablement atteint son but que si elle donne une assise suffisante à la citoyenneté et à la solidarité. Alors l'Union sortira renforcée, pourra s'élargir dans de bonnes conditions et faire face aux défis auxquels elle est confrontée.

13 dispositions constituent le minimum que les citoyens sont en droit d'attendre de la CIG

1 - Intégrer dans le Traité une liste de droits fondamentaux civiques et sociaux indivisibles, en particulier le principe de non discrimination et de promotion de l'égalité des chances dans le progrès, un meilleur exercice de la liberté de circulation et d'association pour tous les résidents. Le respect de ces droits s'imposerait à toutes les institutions de l'Union. Ils seraient directement applicables par la Cour de justice des Communautés européennes.

2 - Permettre à la Cour de justice des Communautés européennes de contrôler le respect des droits fondamentaux reconnus par la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales du Conseil de l'Europe, par la Charte sociale de ce même Conseil et par les conventions internationales signées par tous les Etats membres, comme celles de l'OIT ou de l'ONU.

3 - Ouvrir un espace public de délibération permettant l'expression d'une citoyenneté active. Le processus de révision institutionnelle de l'Union ne peut rester strictement intergouvernemental et doit permettre aux citoyens, à leurs organisations ou à leurs représentants de s'exprimer. L'Europe civique et sociale a besoin d'une méthode dont les principes doivent être posés dès maintenant par la CIG :

- en associant plus étroitement le Parlement européen aux travaux de la CIG ;
- en posant le principe que la règle de la majorité qualifiée s'applique pour la mise en oeuvre des droits civiques et sociaux dans le cadre des compétences de l'Union ;
- en prévoyant que les citoyens, la société civile, le Comité économique et social, le Comité des régions, les parlements nationaux et le Parlement européen soient réellement associés à l'élaboration et à la mise en oeuvre des politiques communautaires et aux progrès institutionnels de l'union politique européenne ;

- en assurant la lisibilité des textes, nécessaire au débat public, en particulier en regroupant en un seul document les textes concernant la Communauté européenne et l'Union européenne, actuellement dispersés en 15 traités ;

- en lançant dès à présent un processus d'élaboration collective d'une charte pour le progrès des droits et responsabilités civiques et sociaux, processus s'étendant sur plusieurs années et permettant de prendre en compte les nouvelles aspirations et contraintes de nos sociétés (éducation tout au long de la vie, environnement, générations futures, temps choisi, bioéthique, nouvelles techniques d'information, minorités, etc.).

4 - Etablir et fonder des politiques communes en matière de justice et d'affaire intérieures sur le respect des droits fondamentaux de la personne et des conventions internationales, notamment pour les politiques d'immigration et d'asile, d'entrée et de séjour des citoyens des pays tiers ; les faire rentrer sur ces bases dans le domaine communautaire.

5 - Prévoir des dispositions particulières pour permettre à l'Union de mener des actions de lutte contre l'exclusion, coordonnées avec celles des Etats et reconnaître, au niveau de l'Union, le principe du droit à un revenu minimum les modalités et conditions étant déterminées par les Etats membres.

6 - Conférer aux politiques sociales relevant de la compétence de l'Union une efficacité aussi grande que les autres : les regrouper dans un titre unique intégrer le Protocole social dans le Traité après en avoir élargi le contenu en matière de lutte contre l'exclusion sociale ; leur appliquer la règle de la majorité qualifiée ; évaluer systématiquement sur une base pluraliste et contradictoire l'impact des politiques et programmes de l'Union sur la cohésion sociale.

7 - Affirmer fortement la légitimité des dispositions qui permettent à l'Union, à la Commission et au Parlement européen de mener des actions d'animation du débat, de coordination, d'impulsion, de coopération, d'expérimentation et d'évaluation, notamment dans le domaine social. L'Europe doit apprendre à s'enrichir de ses différences dans le respect des principes de subsidiarité et de proportionnalité, qui ne doivent pas pour autant constituer un alibi à l'immobilisme ou aux crispations nationales.

8 - Définir clairement les responsabilités de l'Union en matière d'emploi et les instruments monétaires, économiques et financiers nécessaires pour les assumer. La CIG devra notamment :

- prévoir des dispositions pour que les orientations relatives à la politique de l'emploi et à la politique économique permettent de promouvoir la croissance et l'emploi en même temps que la stabilité des prix ;
- assigner à la Banque Centrale européenne un objectif de pleine utilisation des forces productives s'ajoutant à l'objectif actuel de stabilité des prix.

9 - Renforcer le rôle de partenaire de toutes les organisations syndicales et patronales représentatives dans le domaine des relations de travail, des droits économiques et sociaux, dans l'élaboration et le suivi des politiques sociales ; reconnaître un véritable droit européen des conventions collectives sur le plan interprofessionnel et au niveau des branches, afin notamment de lutter contre le dumping social.

10 - Reconnaître plus explicitement le rôle des associations : les impliquer davantage dans le processus d'élaboration et de suivi des politiques sociales ; faire une place particulière aux organisations de la société civile qui s'efforcent de promouvoir la participation et la représentation des chômeurs et des exclus.

11 - Reconnaître la spécificité des modes de production et des structures des organisations de l'économie sociale (coopératives, mutualités, associatims/fondations) reconnaître le caractère d'intérêt général de certaines de leurs opérations adopter un statut de coopérative européenne, de mutualité européenne et d'association européenne permettant des coopérations sur une base transnationale.

12 - Reconnaître explicitement dans le Traité, le rôle des services publics et d'intérêt général en matière de cohésion sociale et d'aménagement du territoire.

13 - Contribuer par des mesures adéquates non seulement au développement économique, mais aussi à la promotion des droits civiques et sociaux dans les pays émergents et dans les pays à l'écart du développement.

25 mars 1997

Annexe 2

Pour une citoyenneté active en Europe

Le récent Conseil européen de Cologne a décidé la convocation d'une Conférence intergouvernementale pour résoudre les questions institutionnelles qui n'ont pas été réglées à Amsterdam et doivent l'être avant l'élargissement. Il a également estimé que, « à ce stade de développement de l'Union Européenne, il conviendrait de réunir les droits fondamentaux en vigueur au niveau de l'Union dans une charte de manière à leur donner une plus grande visibilité ». L'annexe 4 des conclusions de la présidence précise le contenu et surtout les modalités d'élaboration de cette charte : « Une enceinte composée des représentants des Chefs d'Etat et de Gouvernement et du Président de la Commission européenne ainsi que de membres du Parlement européen et des parlements nationaux, devrait élaborer un projet... Des représentants de la Cour de justice devraient y participer à titre d'observateurs. Des représentants du Comité économique et social et du Comité des régions ainsi que des groupes sociaux et des experts, devraient être entendus. Le secrétariat devrait être assuré par le Secrétariat général du Conseil ». Cette enceinte doit « présenter un projet en temps utile avant le Conseil européen en décembre de l'an 2000 ». La Charte sera alors solennellement proclamée, et « ensuite il faudra examiner si et, le échéant, la manière dont la charte pourrait être intégrée dans les traités ».

Il faut certes se féliciter que cette proposition du Comité des Sages, fortement soutenue par le mouvement associatif et reprise par plusieurs partis politiques (les partis socialistes européens et, en France, les Verts et l'UDF), ait été ainsi validée et que l'on sorte de façon ténue, sur ce point au moins, de la méthode intergouvernementale dont on a trop vu les limites.

Il importe cependant de ne pas se tromper sur la portée de l'entreprise. Autant par son mode d'élaboration que par son contenu, la Charte des droits fondamentaux est une occasion unique d'ouvrir la voie au pacte constitutionnel qui se révélera nécessaire pour accompagner et réussir le grand élargissement vers l'Est et vers le Sud. L'exercice de discussions des droits, la manière de les élaborer, importe autant que leur proclamation et leur application. C'est une bonne façon d'initier l'espace politique de débat public dont nous avons besoin pour être assurés du fonctionnement démocratique de l'Union et du respect de la souveraineté populaire. Plus qu'un traité, moins qu'une constitution, ce texte devrait être l'expression de cette démocratie participative constituante que les Etats membres n'ont pas su mettre en oeuvre jusqu'ici et que les méthodes strictement intergouvernementales de révision des traités ne permettent pas.

Or, du fait de la méthode retenue, la décision de Cologne risque d'aboutir, si elle est appliquée limitativement, à une codification sans grande portée de textes existants. On aurait ainsi manqué un rendez-vous historique pour vivifier une citoyenneté européenne menacée par l'abstention et pour bâtir ensemble le projet de civilisation dont l'Europe a besoin. Les insuffisances de la procédure envisagée apparaissent dans quatre domaines :

1) Il ne s'agit pas seulement de « réunir les droits fondamentaux en vigueur », mais de les affiner, de les approfondir, et de les compléter pour tenir compte des évolutions de la société. Une série de questions nouvelles se pose en effet : comment se décline aujourd'hui le droit au travail ? faut-il créer un droit à l'insertion ? au temps choisi ? à un environnement de qualité ? faut-il compléter le droit à la santé par un droit des malades ? comment prendre en compte les droits des générations futures ? comment protéger la vie privée ? quelles sont les limites des recherches génétiques ? Et quelles sont les responsabilités de l'Etat, mais aussi les devoirs de la société civile pour parvenir à un exercice effectif de ces droits ? Et cette liste n'est évidemment pas limitative et devra faire l'objet d'un débat.

2) Un travail collectif important est donc indispensable pour formuler de façon correcte et réaliste cet ensemble de droits et de responsabilités. Cette charte ne peut pas être octroyée d'en haut, élaborée à dire d'experts, ni résulter d'un collage technocratique des déclarations existantes. Son élaboration doit être issue d'un processus de citoyenneté active qui lui donne toute sa valeur et toute sa force. A cet égard, le processus de consultation envisagé, bien que substantiellement amélioré, n'est ni assez large, ni assez ouvert ; en particulier, la société civile, dans toutes ses composantes, ne pourra pas être vraiment associée aux débats. Les sujets à traiter sont en effet très complexes et techniques et très discutés, notamment par des ONG spécialisées qui ont beaucoup à dire. Il conviendrait donc qu'un ensemble de livres blancs concernant les différents droits et devoirs en cause soit rédigé puis discuté avant que les instances politiques ne tranchent.

3) Tout cela prend nécessairement du temps : c'est là le prix de la démocratie ! Il est illusoire de penser qu'un vrai travail démocratique puisse être réalisé en un peu plus de un an. Soit l'on se contentera d'un bref « bill of rights », soit l'exercice sera bâclé. Il est donc indispensable de se donner le temps nécessaire. Notamment pour permettre au Parlement européen nouvellement élu de débattre du projet de Charte, après avoir auditionné les représentants des forces civiques et sociales européennes. Faire l'économie de ce débat serait dénier au Parlement son rôle de représentation des citoyens et donner indirectement raison aux abstentionnistes dont la proportion croissante était unanimement déplorée à l'issue de l'élection du 13 juin dernier.

4) Enfin, un délai plus long, pour une opération plus lourde, n'a de sens que si elle est assurée de son utilité, c'est-à-dire s'il est convenu, dès le départ, que la Charte sera pleinement intégrée dans les Traités. Ce point devrait donc être acté dès le démarrage du processus.

Ne gâchons pas une belle occasion de faire de la politique autrement et de réconcilier l'Europe et le citoyen : cette chance est à notre portée.

Pour CAFECES
Jean-Baptiste de Foucauld
Jean Nestor - Frédéric Pascal
La Croix - 7.10.99

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 19 April 2000CHARTE 4242/00*CONTRIB 115*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Housing Forum (EHF) with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

CECODHAS
COFACE
ENHR
EOSH
ESCS
EUROCITIES
FEANTSA
IUT
RHF
UEPC

EUROPEAN HOUSING FORUM

A Forum for a Housing Debate
in the european Union

The right to housing and the charter of fundamental rights of the european union

Formed following the European Parliament resolution on social aspects of housing (May 1997), the European Housing Forum is a centre of exchange and discussion between networks involved in housing present in Brussels (local authorities, social landlords, private developers, surveyors, charitable and family associations, tenants, researchers).

Its aims are the exchange of information between its members, the identification of themes deserving discussion, the instigation of joint initiatives with regard to EU institutions on specific subjects unanimously chosen by its members, and the promotion of the importance of the housing sector at all levels.

The Forum members are the European federations most representative in the housing sector:

CECODHAS, European liaison committee for social housing, housing nearly one out of four Europeans in the European Union,

COFACE – housing commission, Confederation of family organisations in the European Union,

ENHR, European Network for Housing Research, grouping together nearly a thousand researchers from all disciplines working on questions concerning housing,

EOSH, European social housing observatory,

ECSH, European society of chartered surveyors,

EUROCITIES, European network of major European cities,

FEANTSA, European federation of national associations working with the homeless,
IUT, international tenants association,
RHF, Network, habitat and French-speaking countries,
UEPC, European association of builders and developers.

Within the scope of auditioning NGOs and civil society, the forum members wished to contribute collectively to the works of the convention by inviting its members to discuss the right to housing, based on an inventory of the recognition of the right to housing on international, European, Community and national levels.

In addition, the Forum members invite the convention members and the NGO and civil society representatives to participate in their European conference which will take place on 15 September at UNESCO in Paris on the theme of: "Access to housing in the European Union: a right?" within the framework of the 12th informal meeting of European Union housing ministers which will take place on 18 and 19 September in Paris on the theme of access to housing.

Brussels, 14 April 2000

Contact :

Laurent Ghékiere
European Housing Forum
c/o EEF - boîte 9
1-2 avenue des arts
B- 1210 Bruxelles
tel : +322 231 04 28
fax : +322 217 66 12
email : observatoire@wanadoo.fr

The recognition of the right to housing:

A inventory for a debate on the convention of the right to housing

THE RIGHT TO HOUSING AT INTERNATIONAL LEVEL
Universal declaration of human rights, 1948	article 25.1: “every person has the right to a standard of living sufficing to ensure his health, his well-being and those of his family, in particular as regards food, clothing, housing, medical care, as well as for the necessary social services”.
Agreement on economic, social and cultural rights, 1966	article 11: “ the States which are party to this agreement acknowledge the right of every person to a standard of living sufficing for himself and his family, including sufficient food, clothing and housing, as well as a constant improvement in his living conditions”.
Declaration on progress and development in the social domain (United Nations, 1969)	article 10 f part II defines as one of the main objectives of the development policies: “To provide for all, and in particular for people with a low income and large families, satisfactory housing and collective services”.
Workers (ILO, 1962), refugees (ILO, 1961), children (UN, 1959, 1989), women (UN, 1979), elderly workers (ILO, 1980), immigrant workers (ILO, 1990), minorities (UN, 1991), native peoples (UN, 1993)	Are all target groups which are protected, in particular, by an explicit reference to housing conditions.
Habitat Conference II 3 to 14 juin 1996	International undertaking and plan of action consisting of “obligations of the government to help the population to obtain housing and to protect and improve the neighbourhoods”. Affiliation of the European Union to the Istanbul declaration

THE RIGHT TO HOUSING AT EUROPEAN LEVEL
Council of Europe European Agreement on the protection of human rights and basic liberties, 4 November 1950:	No reference is made to the right to housing but... Article 8 states the right of all people to respect for their private and family life, their home and their correspondence and article 12, the right to found a family.
Council of Europe The European Social Charter drawn up at the Council of Europe on 18 October 1961 and revised on 3 May 1996	The revised social charter adds new rights, specifying in particular that all people have the right to protection against poverty and social exclusion and that all people have the right to housing. Article 31 “With a view to ensuring the proper exercise of the right to housing, the parties undertake to take measures intended: To encourage access to housing of an adequate standard, to prevent and reduce the state of homelessness with a view to its gradual elimination, to make the cost of housing accessible to people who do not have sufficient resources.
Permanent conference of local and regional authorities of Europe, 1993	Recommendation aiming at integrating the right to housing in the existing legal instruments, in particular the European Agreement of Human Rights

THE RIGHT TO HOUSING AT COMMUNITY LEVEL
Treaty of the European Union	Article 136 of the Treaty instituting the European Community refers to the fundamental social rights set out in the European Social Charter of 1961. (the revised social charter includes the right to housing).
European Parliament, Commission on the freedom and rights of citizens, Bertal Haarder report (March 2000)	The report demands that all economic and social rights – ranging from social protection to adequate housing conditions and from health care to appropriate education – be incorporated in the future EU Charter of basic rights.
European Parliament resolution on the social aspects of housing (May 1997)	“Invite the European Union to include the right to housing in treaties and in the CIG.
European Parliament resolution on the United Nations Habitat II conference (May 1996)	“Immediately invite the European Union to incorporate the right to housing in all treaties and charters regulating the activities and goals of the European Union”.
European Parliament, Resolution on housing for the homeless (June 1987)	“(…) that the right to a habitat be guaranteed by legislative texts, that the member States acknowledge it as a fundamental right”
Committee of the regions: announcement of initiative for the homeless (1999/C 293/ 07) :	Recommendations 5.4: “To reinforce the principle of the right to housing on a European Union scale Considering that housing is the first condition to enable a person to engage in a process of social and professional insertion, the Committee of the regions invites the European courts to increase the study of the principle of the right to housing”
European Commission Communication: Building a Europe of “inclusion” (March 2000)	“The loss of housing is one of the most serious representations of poverty and social exclusion”. “...improve the general impact of social inclusion measures thanks to a framework legislation that defines exclusion in terms of access to fundamental rights in the fields of employment, housing, health care, justice, education, culture, family and the protection of children”.

THE RIGHT TO HOUSING IN THE MEMBER STATES
Constitution: Belgium	Article 23 of the Constitution of 1994: “Everyone has the right to lead a life which respects human dignity (...) by guaranteeing economic, social and cultural rights (...) These rights include: ... the right to decent housing”
Constitution: Spain	Article 47 of the Constitution of 1978: “All Spanish people have the right to enjoy decent and suitable housing...”
Constitution: Greece	Article 21 of the Constitution of 1975: “The obtaining of housing by the homeless or those who are housed in an unsuitable fashion constitutes a matter for special attention by the State”
Constitution: Portugal	Article 65 of the Constitution of 1976 revised in 1992 : “Everyone has the right for himself and his family to housing of a suitable size, meeting standards of hygiene and comfort and preserving personal and family privacy...”
Constitution: Finland	Section 15a of the Constitution of 1995: “The public authorities must (...) promote everyone’s right to decent housing and encouraging everyone’s efforts to have his own housing is the task of the public authorities”
Constitution: Netherlands	Article 22.2 of the Constitution of 1984: “The public authorities have the duty of supplying proper housing”
Constitution: Sweden	Article 2, chapter I of the Constitution of 1976/77: “ ...it is incumbent on the community to ensure the right to housing...”
Constitution of certain German länder	Bremen, Berlin, Brandenburg, Bavaria, Hamburg
Law : France	Law of 22 June 1982; law of 31 May 1990, exclusion law of 1998: exclusion law “The right to lodging is a fundamental right” Decision of the Constitutional Council of 19 January 1995 “the possibility of everyone to have decent housing is an objective of constitutional value”
Law: Denmark	Anti-poverty legislation: the law on social assistance places on the town councils the burden of supplying suitable housing
Law: United Kingdom	Housing Act of 1996: the law imposes on the local authorities [the duty] to house certain categories of homeless persons
Law: Italy	The right to housing is acknowledged in the legislation of a number of Italian regions; it is considered to have a constitutional role. Judgments of the constitutional court of Italy: housing is a fundamental social right
Law: Ireland	Housing Act of 1988: the local authorities are obliged to assess the importance of housing needs, to make a census of homeless persons and to set housing priorities
Law: Luxembourg	No specific legislation
Law: Germany	Despite a refusal by the federal authorities to speak of the right to housing, the länder and the Communities must ensure that nobody sleeps in the street. For public order’s sake, they may requisition vacant housing.

EUROPEAN HOUSING FORUM

Conference 2000

CECODHAS – COFACE – ENHR – EOSH – ESCS – EUROCITIES – FEANTSA – IUT – RHF - UEPC

Access to housing in the EU :A right ?

venue
UNESCO - Paris
14-16 september 2000

14 september 2000

6.30 pm - 7 pm : registration - dossier

7 pm : cocktail of welcome

8 pm : free

(invited persons to be confirmed)

15 september 2000

8.30 : welcome

9.15 : Opening of the conference by Mrs Martine Aubry, french minister of employment and solidarity

9.30 : Introductory report on access to housing in the EU and the right to housing (expert)

10.00 : European Housing Forum panel : from right to practices : focal issues of partnership process

10.00 : Local authorities (EUROCITIES)

10.30 : debate

10.45-11.30 : coffee break

11.30 : Social sector (CECODHAS-RHF)

11.45 : Private sector (UEPC - ESCS)

12.00 : Associative sector (FEANTSA)

12.15 : debate

12.30 - 2.00 : lunch

2.00 : Tenants and families associations (IUT - COFACE)

2.15 : debate

2.30 : synthesis and conclusions of the panel by ENHR

3.00 : The right to housing and the european charter of fundamental rights : stakes for social and urban cohesion of the EU (a european parliamentary : reporter of human rights report)

3.30 : Political panel :

- United Nations : Klaus Topfer, Habitat : security of tenure and urban governance campaign
 - Council of Europe : Antonio Mesquita : social charter and access to housing
 - European Parliament : Nicole Fontaine : Charter of fundamental rights of the EU
 - Committee of the Region : François Geindre : report on housing for the homelessness
 - European commission : Anna Diamantopoulou : building a Europe of social inclusion
- A Mayor of a city of a eastern country candidate : access to housing dilemma and strategies in eastern Europe

5.00 : adoption of the resolution of the conference towards the convention, the ministries of housing and the french presidency

5.15 : conclusions of the conference by Louis Besson, State secretary on housing, France

5.30 : cocktail

16 septembre 2000 (to be confirmed)

9.30 - 12.00 : professionnall visits on projects on access to housing for target groups in Paris and the region Ile-de-France

Reminder :

18-19 september 2000 – Paris : 12th informal meeting of EU housing ministers on access to housing and public policies

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 19 avril 2000CHARTE 4243/00*CONTRIB 116*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution du Collectif pour la Charte des droits fondamentaux (CCDF) en vue de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

Sur la logique et la structure du projet

1. Le CCDF a décidé de ne pas ajouter une revue exhaustive des articles du projet à celles qui ont été déjà entreprises... souvent par des organisations qui comptent parmi ses membres. Il concentrera donc ses remarques, suggestions et propositions d'amendements, d'une part sur les partis méthodologiques et dispositions du projet qui posent problème au regard de sa plate-forme initiale, d'autre part sur certaines dispositions dont l'enjeu lui semble particulièrement essentiel.
2. Il apparaît ainsi dès l'examen des articles 1^{er} à 16 - mais cette remarque concerne à la vérité l'ensemble du texte - que la structure même du projet ne peut, en l'état, satisfaire aux exigences de transparence et de sécurité juridique qui s'imposent tout particulièrement dans l'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux.

Le texte est en effet dédoublé en une succession d'articles numérotés, rédigés avec concision et reproduits en caractères gras, et en une série d'« exposés des motifs » accompagnant chacun de ces articles, si bien qu'un lecteur de bonne foi, fût-il juriste, s'attend à ce que, comme leur nom l'indique, les « exposés des motifs » se bornent à expliquer les raisons pour lesquelles ont été retenues les normes contenues dans la-série des articles.

Il n'en est malheureusement pas ainsi. Il arrive que l'« exposé des motifs » restreigne considérablement le contenu (par exemple article 2.2) et/ou la portée (par exemple article 1^{er}) de la norme posée dans l'article correspondant, cependant que la formulation à la fois brève, très générale voire ambiguë, des articles en vient parfois à priver d'effectivité les principes posés et les droits reconnus (par exemple du fait du recours à « notamment » dans l'article 3.2, ou de la simple référence à « des cas spécifiques » dans l'article 6).

Le lecteur qui se bornerait à prendre connaissance des articles, comme il est habitué à le faire en lisant par exemple la Déclaration française de 1789 ou la Déclaration universelle de 1948, d'une part croirait intégralement protégés des droits qui ne le sont que partiellement ou conditionnellement (par exemple en ce qui concerne l'interdiction de la peine de mort posée apparemment sans restrictions par l'article 2.2), d'autre part ne peut toujours mesurer avec une certitude raisonnable la portée de la reconnaissance et de la protection des droits fondamentaux, du fait des formulations elliptiques et ambiguës ci-dessus critiquées.

On peut en particulier se demander pourquoi les références à la CEDH ont toutes été renvoyées aux « exposés des motifs », alors qu'elles constituent souvent des restrictions de la portée des droits énoncés dans les articles. Il serait moins trompeur pour le lecteur de pratiquer des références explicites, fussent-elles concises, dans le corps des articles ; cela permettrait du même coup de s'interroger sur l'opportunité de certaines de ces références qui ont pu vieillir au point de heurter les conceptions des droits fondamentaux que nous partageons aujourd'hui (par exemple lorsque l'article 5^e de la CEDH, cité par l'exposé des motifs de l'article 6, admet la détention des personnes porteuses d'une maladie contagieuse et des vagabonds... ; les rédacteurs ont parfois senti le danger au point de réécrire certaines formules : ainsi les « principes généraux du droit reconnus par les nations civilisées » de l'article 7.2 de la CEDH sont-ils devenus dans l'article 10.2 « les principes généraux du droit reconnus par les nations démocratiques » ; il se confirme ainsi que l'écriture dans le corps des articles a des effets salutaires).

La reprise des formulations de la CEDH peut comporter des conséquences franchement inadmissibles, par exemple lorsque l'article 13, portant sur le respect de la vie familiale, énonce un « droit de se marier et de fonder une famille » qui subordonne l'existence de la famille au prononcé du mariage. Que la liberté du mariage mérite d'être protégée en tant que telle ne fait aucun doute ; que soient pour autant niés ou ignorés les droits et libertés des couples non mariés (et notamment des couples homosexuels) passe aujourd'hui l'entendement.

Il est donc absolument indispensable de revenir à l'usage qu'impose la logique : au dispositif la norme, à l'exposé des motifs la glose, et au lecteur la garantie de la sincérité de cette répartition des espaces et des valeurs.

La Charte et la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales : questions de rédaction

Le Conseil européen a demandé que la Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne contienne les droits de liberté et d'égalité ainsi que les droits de procédure tels que garantis par la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales.

Pour la plupart des articles, le projet reprend le texte de la Convention affirmant le droit et renvoie dans un exposé des motifs les dispositions de la Convention qui précisent les cas dans lesquels l'exercice de ces droits peut être limité. Par ailleurs, un article « horizontal » (convent 13, 8 mars 2000, article X) définit de façon générale les conditions de licéité des limitations « au respect des droits et libertés » reconnus dans la Charte.

Qu'il soit nécessaire de préciser ces conditions est certain. C'est un élément essentiel de la garantie des droits et libertés. Et les conditions définies par l'article X sont convenables, même si l'exposé des motifs interprète de façon extensive l'arrêt Huvig, en admettant que l'exigence de loi soit comprise au sens matériel et non formel. Cela est une régression par rapport à la démocratie, comme le pensait Sir Robert Megarry dans l'affaire Malone (28 février 1979) et comme la Cour interaméricaine des droits de l'homme ne l'admet pas (9 mai 1986).

Une interrogation subsiste sur l'opportunité de reprendre dans l'exposé des motifs l'intégralité des dispositions de la Convention européenne de sauvegardes des droits de l'homme. En effet, il apparaît que certaines reflètent des conceptions qui avaient cours en 1950, mais qui ne sont plus admissibles cinquante ans après. Par exemple, l'exposé des motifs du projet d'article 6 (droit à la liberté et à la sûreté) reprend l'article 5 CEDH, avec l'ensemble de ses exceptions, y compris le e), qui permet la détention « d'une personne susceptible de propager une maladie contagieuse, d'un aliéné, d'un alcoolique, d'un toxicomane ou d'un vagabond ».

En ce qui concerne les vagabonds, cette disposition reflète des conceptions du XIX^e siècle, que le nouveau code pénal français a abandonnées. Pour les maladies contagieuses, elle est lourde de menaces, compte tenu des risques de traitement discriminatoire qui ont surgi avec l'apparition du SIDA. C'est, en définitive, l'ensemble du e) qui est contestable, comme reflet d'une volonté de contrôle social aboutissant à l'exclusion.

Il serait donc nécessaire de réexaminer la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme en tenant compte de l'évolution de la pensée libérale.

Sur le projet d'article 3 : droit au respect de l'intégrité

L'alinéa 2 porte sur le respect de principes dans le cadre de la médecine et de la biologie. Qu'il faille poser des principes dans ce domaine est certain. Ils doivent correspondre à la finalité poursuivie par les décisions dans ce domaine, qui ne peut être que le respect des personnes, seul principe éthique de portée générale (Jean-Paul Thomas : « il n'est pas d'autre principe éthique que celui du respect des personnes », in La bioéthique est-elle de mauvaise foi ? P.U.F.1999,p.39).

Des droits ont été affirmés depuis un demi-siècle. Leur respect s'impose dans le cadre de la recherche biologique et de la médecine : ce sont la dignité de la personne humaine, le respect de la vie privée, la non-discrimination, le droit à la protection de la santé. Leur protection passe par le respect de certaines conditions : consentement de la personne, non patrimonialité du corps humain, intégrité de la personne.

Qu'au lieu de réaffirmer ces droits et le principe de respect des personnes, une charte des droits fondamentaux pose des interdictions revient à aborder la question à l'envers. Les rédacteurs sont alors contraints, dans l'exposé des motifs de préciser que « l'énumération n'est pas exhaustive, ce qui permet une évolution pour tenir compte des progrès éventuels en la matière ». C'est faire penser que des progrès doivent se traduire par de nouvelles interdictions. C'est aussi supposer que les Etats puissent s'accorder sur l'admissibilité de ces progrès, alors qu'on sait qu'il n'en est rien. Ni l'Allemagne, ni l'Angleterre, pour des raisons opposées, n'ont ratifié la convention européenne pour la protection des droits de l'homme et de la dignité de l'être humain à l'égard des applications de la biologie et de la médecine. La charte ne peut éluder le rôle du législateur national.

Cette approche naît plus de la diabolisation des progrès de la connaissance biologique et de la médecine, que des interdictions permettraient d'exorciser, que d'un réel souci de mettre le respect de l'homme au centre des droits (cf. Jean-Pierre Baud, L'affaire de la main volée, une histoire juridique du corps, Seuil, 1993).

Une charte des droits doit affirmer des droits (respect de la personne, protection de la vie privée, non discrimination, droit à la protection de la santé) qui devront être protégés dans tous les cas et ne pas se contenter d'interdictions qui ne correspondent qu'aux craintes du moment.

Droit d'asile

Proposition d'amendement

Le Point 2 sur les expulsions collectives devrait faire l'objet d'un article séparé. Le titre de l'article 17 se réduirait donc à : droit d'asile. En associant le droit d'asile à la notion d'expulsion, on se place dans une logique de police de l'immigration et non dans une logique de droits fondamentaux.

17.1

Remplacer le paragraphe par : « Toute personne fuyant la persécution a droit de trouver asile dans un Etat membre de l'Union. Ce droit implique l'accès des demandeurs d'asile à une procédure juste et efficace pour l'examen de leur demande et, par voie de conséquence, l'accès au territoire des Etats membres, en tenant compte de leur choix du pays en raison des attaches familiales, culturelles, linguistiques ou autres. Les Etats de l'Union appliquent la convention de Genève de 1951 sur les réfugiés sans restriction et de façon harmonisée. Ils rappellent le caractère non inamical à l'égard du pays d'origine de l'acte d'accorder l'asile. »

Exposé des motifs :

I.- La Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne ne peut pas énoncer des droits en deçà de ce qu'énonce et garantit déjà le droit international. Or la Convention de Genève de 1951 sur les réfugiés (avec son protocole de 1967) n'admet plus de restrictions géographiques à son champ d'application et prohibe toute discrimination quand au pays d'origine (article 3)

1/ Sur le principe, la notion de « pays sûr », qui est implicite dans la rédaction proposée de l'article 17.1, et celle de droit d'asile sont antinomiques.

- d'une part, parce qu'aucun Etat n'est jamais définitivement « sûr ». La démocratie et le respect des droits de l'homme sont garantis aussi par l'existence de contre-pouvoirs, de procédures de contrôle et de recours contre d'éventuelles dérives dont aucun Etat n'est totalement à l'abri (les exemples ne manquent pas). Un Etat vraiment « sûr » n'a pas besoin de se proclamer tel.

- d'autre part, si le fait de donner l'asile à une personne, et a fortiori d'examiner sa demande d'asile, est considéré comme un acte inamical ou un jugement de valeur sur le pays d'origine, il n'y aura plus de droit d'asile car, surtout dans un contexte de mondialisation de l'économie, celui-ci sera l'objet de pressions diplomatiques et de marchandages de toutes sortes au détriment du droit des gens.

2/ en droit, la définition actuelle du réfugié peut s'appliquer à toute personne qui se trouve hors de son pays d'origine ou, pour les apatrides, de celui où elle a sa résidence habituelle, c'est-à-dire hors du pays duquel elle est en droit d'attendre une protection. Cette protection s'exerce, à travers la détention d'un passeport ou d'un titre de voyage, par les représentations consulaires des Etats. Or il n'y a pas encore de passeport unique et de consulats de l'Union européenne. Exclure la possibilité pour les ressortissants d'un Etat de l'Union de pouvoir demander l'asile dans un autre Etat de l'Union reviendrait à restreindre le champ d'application de la Convention de Genève de 1951 ainsi que l'a souligné Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les Réfugiés.

3/ La portée de cette restriction du champ d'application d'une convention internationale protectrice qui a été élaborée par et pour l'Europe serait concrètement négligeable car il y a très peu de demandes dans l'actuelle Union européenne. Par contre son impact juridique et sa possible utilisation à travers le monde seraient redoutables.

Pour toutes ces raisons, les défenseurs du droit d'asile ne peuvent pas accepter la rédaction proposée de l'article 17.1. C'est toute la Charte des droits fondamentaux qui deviendrait suspecte à leurs yeux si cette rédaction était maintenue.

Il faut noter que la France n'a jamais reconnu la notion de « pays sûr » en matière de droit d'asile et n'a jamais établi officiellement de liste de pays sûrs.

Le protocole sur le droit d'asile pour les ressortissants des Etats membres de l'Union européenne a déjà donné lieu, en septembre 1998, à un avis dans ce sens de la Commission Nationale consultative des droits de l'homme auprès du Premier ministre.

II.- Par « fuyant une persécution », il faut entendre que l'intéressé craint une persécution et que c'est en raison de cette crainte qu'il a fui son pays.

III.- Le réfugié doit être protégé et ses droits fondamentaux garantis. L'application de la convention de Dublin qui définit l'Etat responsable de l'examen d'une demande d'asile ne doit pas conduire au non respect d'autres droits, notamment en séparant les familles. C'est pourquoi son choix du pays d'asile doit être pris en considération.

ANNEXEI.- Rappel du projet présenté par le présidium de la Convention :Article 17. Droit d'asile et expulsion

1. Les personnes qui ne sont pas ressortissantes de l'Union ont un droit d'asile dans l'Union européenne [conformément à la Convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951 et au protocole du 31 janvier 1967 relatifs au statut des réfugiés][dans les conditions prévues par les traités].

2. Les expulsions collectives d'étrangers sont interdites.

Commentaire

Cet article est inspiré de l'article 4 du protocole N° 4 à la convention européenne des droits de l'homme en ce qui concerne les expulsions collectives. La déclaration du Parlement européen de 1989 ne contenait aucune indication mais il n'existait pas à l'époque de politique communautaire. Le texte du paragraphe 1 est inspiré de l'article 63 CE qui incorpore en droit communautaire la convention sur les réfugiés. Les dispositions de l'article 1 du protocole n° 7 à la convention européenne des droits de l'homme relatives aux garanties procédurales en cas d'expulsion n'ont pas été reprises car la plupart des Etats membres n'ont pas signé ou ratifié ce protocole. De toute façon, la convention de Genève contient des garanties en ce domaine. Il a été suggéré d'ajouter une référence au droit à une protection temporaire pour les personnes déplacées « dans les conditions fixées par les traités ou les mesures prises pour son application, mais en l'état actuel du droit positif, existe-t-il un tel droit ?

Sur les « droits des citoyens »

Dans le « convent 10 » du 28 février, la structure de la Charte comportait une section consacrée aux « droits politiques ». Ce terme a été remplacé par celui de « droits des citoyens » dans le « convent 17 » du 20 mars 2000.

Ce changement semble regrettable. Le terme de « droits politiques » a l'avantage d'être plus clair, plus facile à cerner. Utiliser le terme de « droits des citoyens » est une extrapolation abusive des articles 17 à 22 CE, introduits par le traité de Maastricht, sous le titre de « citoyenneté de l'Union ». Il s'agissait alors de rapprocher l'Europe des citoyens, ce qui était un ancien projet, qu'on peut faire remonter au sommet de Copenhague de 1973. Pour cela, la voie choisie a été l'attribution de droits liés à la libre circulation des travailleurs. On a ainsi permis à des travailleurs de continuer à exercer leurs droits civiques aux élections locales de leur lieu de résidence et aux élections européennes, comme cela avait été esquissé dans le rapport Adonino de 1984, en liant ces droits à la liberté de circulation et de séjourner, et en y ajoutant le droit à une protection diplomatique, le droit de pétition et le recours à un médiateur.

De son côté, le Parlement européen a adopté, en 1989, une Déclaration sur les droits et libertés fondamentaux, sans limiter leur bénéfice aux citoyens des Etats membres de la Communauté européenne.

Le terme de « citoyenneté » a eu un énorme succès, sans qu'on s'interroge nécessairement sur son contenu. A priori, on a considéré que c'était un pas en avant, vers une Europe plus politique, moins strictement économique.

Il est fâcheux de continuer à « enrichir » cette notion, sans réfléchir sur le sens même du terme de citoyenneté, car cela conduit à ...appauvrir la portée des droits, en réservant aux « citoyens » des droits dont il n'y a aucune raison de refuser le bénéfice à tous. Ainsi, le projet réserverait aux citoyens le droit à une bonne administration.

La difficulté est ressentie par les rédacteurs, qui utilisent alternativement la formule « citoyen » et « toute personne » (articles E, H).

Il convient donc de distinguer les droits politiques, réservés aux citoyens de l'Union européenne, et les autres droits. Pour de nouveaux droits, comme le droit à une bonne administration, il n'y a aucune raison de ne pas les attribuer à toute personne. Pour les droits créés par le traité de Maastricht, sous la rubrique « citoyenneté de l'Union », mais qui ne sont pas des droits politiques (accès au médiateur, liberté de mouvement) il convient d'une part de s'interroger sur la pertinence de la référence au citoyen et d'autre part d'intégrer les modifications apportées par le traité d'Amsterdam.

Enfin, nous estimons qu'il faudra parvenir à dissocier l'attribution de la citoyenneté de l'Union européenne de la nationalité des Etats membres.

Sur les droits sociaux

La Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne doit assurer la prise en compte des droits sociaux dans l'ordre juridique européen. Elle devra donc comporter un corpus dédié à ces préoccupations, en prenant le soin :

- d'entendre les droits sociaux au delà de l'acception courante,
- de les garantir par une rédaction utile.

Quels sont les droits sociaux à garantir ?

La Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne doit affirmer :

1. Dans le travail :

- le droit à une rémunération équitable,
- le droit à l'égalité de traitement entre les hommes et les femmes,
- le droit à la liberté d'exercice professionnel dans tous les pays de l'Union,
- le droit à l'information, à la consultation, et à la participation, des travailleurs,
- le droit d'association, de négociation et d'action collective des employeurs et des travailleurs,
- le droit au repos hebdomadaire et aux congés annuels payés,
- le droit à la sécurité et à l'hygiène dans le travail,
- l'interdiction du travail pour les mineurs de moins de 16 ans et le droit à des conditions spécifiques pour les travailleurs de moins de 18 ans,

- le droit à la protection en cas de licenciement,
- le droit à la formation et à l'orientation professionnelle,
- le droit des travailleurs à la protection maternelle,
- le droit des travailleurs au congé parental.

2. Dans la garantie de revenus.

- le droit à un revenu minimum garanti indépendamment du travail pour ceux qui n'occupent pas un travail.

3. Dans le logement.

- le droit à un logement décent.

4. Dans la protection sociale :

- le droit à la sécurité sociale pour toute personne, travailleur et ses ayants droits,
- le droit à l'aide sociale pour toute personne dont la situation ne permet pas de bénéficier des prestations de sécurité sociale.

5. Dans l'accès aux soins de santé :

- le droit à l'information de santé,
- le droit aux moyens de prévention en matière de protection de la santé,
- le droit aux soins de santé.

6. Dans les droits de personnes malades et handicapées.

Il semble nécessaire d'ajouter des droits pour les personnes malades ou handicapées (pour éviter les discriminations en raison de l'état de santé). Ce sont aussi parfois des droits des personnes tout simplement (accès au dossier médical).

On trouvera en annexe une contribution à cet égard. Chaque élément est sans doute à ventiler entre les articles transversaux (anti-discriminations) et des articles spécifiques (droit à la protection des données informatiques personnelles, droit au dossier, droit à la dignité...).

Quelle rédaction revendiquer ?

- ⇒ Il faut insister sur la nécessité de rédactions précises en posant le principe que tout membre de phrase pouvant générer un doute ou une interrogation doit être complété, soit par une indication temporelle, soit par une précision spatiale, soit par tout critère ad hoc. C'est la seule manière d'aller au delà d'une charte "pétition programmatique".
- ⇒ Mais, c'est peut-être dans les articles transversaux qu'il faut œuvrer le plus pour faire en sorte que les droits reconnus par la Charte soient effectifs, le plus possible, pour les personnes (exemple de l'article anti-discrimination).
- ⇒ Il faut aussi penser à la rédaction "cliquet" :

« Toute disposition conférant un droit supérieur à celui reconnu par les dispositions de la présente charte s'applique sans préjudice des droits énoncés par cette dernière ».

Contribution sur les droits des personnes malades :

Droit à l'information.

« Le patient a le droit d'être pleinement informé de son état de santé, y compris des données médicales qui s'y rapportent ; des actes médicaux envisagés, avec les risques et avantages qu'ils comportent, et des possibilités thérapeutiques alternatives, y compris des effets d'une absence de traitement et du diagnostic, du pronostic et des progrès du traitement.

Le patient a le droit de ne pas être informé, sur sa demande expresse.

Le patient a le droit de choisir une personne qui, le cas échéant, devra recevoir l'information en leur nom ».

Droit au consentement.

« Aucun acte médical ne peut être pratiqué sans le consentement éclairé préalable du patient. Il a le droit de refuser un acte médical ou de l'interrompre.

Lorsqu'un représentant légal est requis, le patient doit être néanmoins associé à la prise de décision.

Le consentement du patient est également requis pour la conservation et l'utilisation des substances provenant de son corps.

Le consentement éclairé du patient est aussi nécessaire pour toute participation à l'enseignement clinique et pour toute participation à une activité de recherche scientifique ».

Droit d'accès au dossier médical.

« Le patient, le cas échéant par l'intermédiaire d'une personne qu'il désigne, a le droit d'accéder directement à son dossier médical, de recevoir copie de la totalité ou de partie de ces dossiers. Cet accès ne s'applique pas aux données relatives à des tiers ».

Droit à la protection du dossier médical.

« Les informations confidentielles concernant un patient ne peuvent être divulguées que si le patient y consent explicitement ou que si la loi l'autorise expressément. Toutes les données identifiables concernant un patient doivent être protégées par un moyen de protection adapté au mode de stockage choisi. Les substances humaines à partir desquelles des données identifiables peuvent être obtenues, doivent également être protégées.

Le patient a le droit de demander que soit corrigées, complétées, supprimées, précisées et/ou mises à jour, les données de caractère personnel ou médical le concernant, lorsqu'elles sont inexactes, incomplètes, ambiguës ou périmées, ou sans rapport avec les besoins du diagnostic, du traitement et des soins ».

Droit à la protection de la vie privée et de l'intimité.

« Le patient a le droit au respect de sa vie privée qui ne peut faire l'objet d'aucune ingérence sauf si elle est justifiée par les nécessités du diagnostic, le traitement et les soins, et que le patient y consent.

Le patient a le droit au respect de l'intimité de sa personne ».

Droit à la dignité.

« Le patient a le droit d'être soulagé de la douleur, dans la mesure où le permettent les connaissances. Il a le droit de recevoir des soins palliatifs humains et de mourir dans la dignité ».

Droit à l'assistance religieuse et au soutien.

« Le patient a le droit de recevoir ou de refuser une aide spirituelle ou morale, y compris celle d'un ministre représentant la religion de son choix.

Le patient a le droit de recevoir ou de refuser le soutien de ses parents, proches et amis, ou des représentants d'une organisation non gouvernementale de son choix ».

Droit à la participation.

« Les patients ont un droit collectif à être représentés à chaque niveau du système de santé à propos des questions relatives à la planification et à l'évaluation des services, y compris la gamme, la qualité et le fonctionnement des prestations et services ».

Droit à la médiation et à la réclamation.

« Le patient doit avoir accès aux informations et aux conseils lui permettant d'exercer les droits énoncés ci-dessus. Celui qui estime que ses droits n'ont pas été respectés doit avoir la possibilité de faire examiner son litige par un organisme indépendant, le cas échéant également compétent pour exercer une médiation, et/ou devant une juridiction ».

Sur les services d'intérêt général

- a) Toute personne a droit à l'accès aux services d'intérêt général.
- b) Les services d'intérêt général garantissent l'exercice des droits fondamentaux.
- c) Un contrôle continu et démocratique s'assure de leur efficacité et de leur capacité à s'adapter en permanence aux évolutions des besoins ainsi qu'au progrès social et technologique.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 19 avril 2000CHARTE 4244/00*CONTRIB 117*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution du Conseil Central des Communautés Philosophiques non-Confessionnelles (CCL) en vue de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

Conseil Central des Communautés Philosophiques non Confessionnelles de Belgique (C.C.L.) asbl

Secrétariat fédéral tél. 32-2/627.68.31 – Fax : 32-2/627.68.01
Campus de la Plaine - ULB CP 136
Avenue A. Fraiteur
1050 Bruxelles
e-mail : cal@ulb.ac.be – Site Internet : www.laicite.be

Centrale Raad der Niet – Confessionele Levensbeschouwelijke Gemeenschappen van België (C.V.R.) v.z.w.

Federaal Secretariaat Tel. 32-2/735.81.92 – fax. 32-2/735.81.66
Brand Whitlocklaan, 50
1200 Brussel
e-mail : cmd.federaal@uvv.uvv.be

Charte des droits fondamentaux

Audition de la société civile du 27 avril 2000

Mémoire et vocation de l'Europe: L'humanisme européen

En Europe, de nombreux apports de divers courants de sensibilité et de pensée ont convergé. L'humanisme est fait de toutes les valeurs qui ont germé dans ces différentes cultures. Ces courants ont contribué d'une manière ou d'une autre à la formation de l'humanisme moderne : certes, ils ont également recelé des tendances anti-humanistes et ont pu entrer parfois en contradiction les uns avec les autres.

On peut retenir les principales valeurs constitutives de l'humanisme, dont l'Europe a été le creuset. Tout d'abord, au-delà de toutes distinctions ou situations, la dignité égale de toute personne humaine, d'où découlent la liberté et la justice comme exigences indivisibles et universelles. Cette valeur inconditionnelle, irréductible, doit être affirmée comme pré-supposé incontournable. Il s'agit là d'un sentiment commun, d'une conviction, qui se sont progressivement imposés au cours de l'histoire, et qui marquent chaque homme, quelles que soient les motivations diverses dont on les étaye.

La reconnaissance de l'égalité de dignité de toute personne humaine, femme ou homme, induit un type de société qui permet et favorise la dimension foncièrement relationnelle de la liberté humaine. Même régulée par des lois, d'ailleurs en constant remaniement, cette société doit s'ouvrir à la possibilité de transgressions responsables car celles-ci sont le ferment indispensable d'autonomie personnelle et de progrès des institutions.

La conscience de la fragilité de tout système suscite des structures ouvertes aptes à l'écoute, au dialogue, au changement. D'où le refus de tout "intégrisme" et la capacité d'intégrer du nouveau. Cette mémoire, qui confère à l'Europe une chance et une responsabilité spécifiques, doit cependant nous rappeler aussi les dérives particulièrement graves dont elle porte le poids.

Le brassage des cultures qui a fait l'identité européenne et sa richesse impose aux gouvernants et aux citoyens de l'Europe un devoir d'ouverture et d'acceptation de la diversité

Enfin, les valeurs de tolérance et d'humanisme qui constituent le patrimoine commun et le ciment de l'Europe moderne, au delà des différences nationales, régionales ou traditionnelles implique dans le chef de toute autorité publique une rigoureuse impartialité à l'égard de toutes les conceptions philosophiques ou religieuses et la garantie de l'indépendance de la sphère privée des citoyens en matière d'option confessionnelle ou non confessionnelle.

Les valeurs communes européennes exigent de toutes les institutions publiques, celles de l'Union et celles des Etats, un rigoureux devoir d'impartialité et la garantie de la dignité des personnes et des droits humains.

Par leur adhésion aux différents traités et à l'Union, les Etats membres garantissent en leur nom et au nom des institutions européennes l'égalité de tous devant la loi sans distinction de sexe, d'origine, de culture, de conviction ou de choix de vie.

Pour une charte étendue

Il est certes intéressant de présenter clairement au public européen certains droits que l'on pourrait appeler de base. Ceux-ci sont acquis et exprimés dans des textes dont tous ne sont pas encore bien connus des citoyens.

Nous ferons à ce propos quelques remarques par rapport aux articles actuellement proposés par le Présidium.

Mais une charte européenne devrait pouvoir faire davantage.

Une partie importante de la population s'interroge et voudrait entendre exprimer des droits qu'elle considère fondamentaux, compte tenu de l'évolution de la société moderne.

Le risque est grand de décevoir ces citoyens européens en publiant une charte qui ne répond pas à leur attente concernant les exigences, de droits culturels, de droits sociaux, de droits des enfants, de normes et indicateurs de développement durable,

Ne pourrait on également définir les droits à une participation des citoyens à des services d'intérêt général ?

Il s'agit, non plus de droits individuels, mais de droits collectifs (collective rights).

Nous ferons à cet égard quelques suggestions

Une charte des droits fondamentaux doit affirmer la laïcité des institutions européennes et le principe d'impartialité qui implique qu'aucune conception religieuse ou philosophique particulière ne peut bénéficier d'un traitement privilégié .

La charte fait référence à la liberté religieuse garantie, notamment par la Convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'Homme et par les Constitutions nationales des États membres de l'Union.

Une charte des droits fondamentaux doit préciser que cette liberté essentielle instituée au bénéfice des personnes de toutes convictions, confessionnelles et non confessionnelles ne confère aucun privilège aux institutions religieuses, entièrement soumises à la loi commune.

La charte doit aussi rappeler qu'aucune prescription religieuse ne peut avoir d'effet contraignant sous l'angle de la loi civile et que la force publique ne peut en aucune hypothèse y prêter main forte.

Une charte des droits fondamentaux doit relever qu'au même titre que tout autre groupe de pression ou tout mouvement associatif les Eglises peuvent être entendues par les autorités publiques de l'Union ou des États membres, mais que ces consultations éventuelles ne peuvent être institutionnalisées, ni donner l'apparence d'une confessionnalisation de l'Europe ou d'un État membre, en contradiction avec l'idéal démocratique (annexe 2).

Remarques concernant la proposition du Présidium

ART. 3 - Droit au respect de l'intégrité

§ 2, 4^{ème} alinéa - Clonage reproductif humain

Le paragraphe 2 dernier alinéa relatif au clonage reproductif humain n'a pas sa place dans une Charte des droits fondamentaux et devrait être retiré.

Commentaires:

Comme le souligne le commentaire du document, ce point est extrait de la Convention de biomédecine du Conseil de l'Europe, convention qui peut être régulièrement soumise à révision par les Puissances signataires, notamment pour des raisons d'évolution des connaissances scientifiques. Il ne paraît pas indiqué de devoir faire évoluer de telle sorte la Charte.

Il convient également de faire observer que cette interdiction est en contradiction avec la "liberté de recherche scientifique" que la charte entend proclamer et qui fait partie de la grande tradition et du fonds commun de l'héritage européen.

Un commentaire plus général est en annexe 1.

ART 14 - Liberté de conscience

Il y aurait lieu d'ajouter un second paragraphe:

Toute personne a droit à la garantie par les États et l'Union de la sphère d'autonomie quant à ses conceptions philosophiques ou religieuses.

Commentaire:

L'acceptation du pluralisme induit une ouverture, une pratique de la tolérance à l'égard de la personne d'autrui et une stricte neutralité des pouvoirs publics des États et de l'Union à l'égard de toutes les convictions religieuses et philosophiques. (annexe 2)

Cette neutralité implique:

la non-ingérence des États et de l'Union dans les affaires de toute organisation religieuse ou philosophique non confessionnelle. Un État se garde d'intervenir dans leur organisation interne, dans la définition de leurs positions éthiques ou encore dans la nomination de leurs représentants;

la non-ingérence de toute organisation religieuse ou philosophique non confessionnelle dans les affaires des États et de l'Union.

ART 15 - Liberté d'expression

Au §1 il conviendrait d'ajouter:

La liberté d'expression vaut aussi pour les informations et idées qui heurtent, choquent ou inquiètent

ART 16 - Droit à l'éducation

Toute personne a droit à l'éducation.

Le § 1 devrait être complété comme suit:

Ce droit ne comporte pas l'obligation des pouvoirs publics de subventionner un enseignement autre qu'un enseignement ouvert à tous, en dehors de toute référence politique et religieuse.

Les Pouvoirs publics ne peuvent imposer un enseignement religieux.

Le § 3 devrait être modifié comme suit:

Les parents ont le droit d'assurer l'éducation religieuse ou philosophique de leurs enfants conformément à leurs convictions, dans un système éducatif visant à former des citoyens responsables, capables de contribuer au développement d'une société démocratique, solidaire, pluraliste et ouverte aux autres cultures.

i) Justificatif

La liberté de choix des parents ne peut avoir pour conséquence le renforcement de tendances anti-démocratiques ou intolérantes.

ii) Commentaires

Pour éviter toute confusion ou reconnaître d'emblée qu'un enseignement peut s'inscrire avec ses références philosophiques ou religieuses dans les objectifs visés ici, il suffit qu'il reconnaisse que d'autres valeurs, d'autres références sont aussi légitimes dans une société que celles qu'il a lui-même retenues.

Les élèves doivent être formés à reconnaître la pluralité des valeurs qui constituent l'humanisme européen. En ce sens, le système éducatif fournit aux jeunes les éléments d'information qui contribuent au développement libre et graduel de leur personnalité et qui leur permette de comprendre les options différentes ou divergentes qui constituent l'opinion.

Droits à établir

Non-discrimination

1- Une clause indépendante de non-discrimination devrait être prévue, s'inspirant de l'article 13 (ex 6A) du Traité de l'Union:

La jouissance des droits fondamentaux doit bénéficier à toute personne sans discrimination fondée sur le sexe, l'origine ethnique ou sociale, les croyances religieuses ou philosophiques, un handicap, l'âge ou l'orientation sexuelle. La non discrimination entre les sexes comporte l'égalité entre les hommes et les femmes à l'accès aux charges publiques et privées et à la protection sociale.

2- Discrimination sur base religieuse

Les prescriptions religieuses ne peuvent faire obstacle à la pleine jouissance et au plein exercice des droits civils et politiques. Elles ne peuvent davantage dispenser du respect de ces droits.

Aucune prescription religieuse ne peut être retenue comme cause de justification, cause d'excuse ou de circonstance atténuante d'une infraction pénale.

Annexe 1

C'est principalement au nom du respect de la dignité humaine qu'est condamnée a priori la naissance programmée d'un enfant qui serait la réplique exacte, la "photocopie" d'une personne vivante ou ayant existé. Ce seul fait le priverait de toute personnalité propre puisqu'il ne serait ni plus ni moins qu'un moyen de satisfaire une curiosité, le fantasme de l'immortalité ou celui, plus inacceptable encore, d'une réserve d'organes immunocompatibles.

Cette présentation est assurément réductrice en cela qu'elle ne souligne que l'inacceptable perspective de la conception d'un être comme moyen et non comme une fin en soi. Cette attitude excessive se doit en effet d'être nuancée d'autant plus qu'elle justifie aux yeux de beaucoup une interdiction absolue de tout transfert d'un noyau humain dans un ovocyte énucléé, qu'il s'agisse d'aboutir à la naissance d'une personne, à la production de pré-embryons ou à celle de cellules différenciées en culture.

Il est par ailleurs inexact d'affirmer qu'un tel transfert nucléaire crée une copie parfaite. Cette assertion fait une fois de plus l'apologie du déterminisme génétique et ignore les influences épigénétiques qu'exercent le cytoplasme de l'ovocyte, les échanges foeto-maternels durant la gestation, l'environnement de l'enfant.

Nul n'est jamais la réplique exacte d'un autre. Tout au plus lui est-il physiquement très semblable comme le sont les vrais jumeaux à chacun desquels l'Eglise accorde d'ailleurs une âme et l'Etat, le droit de vote. Ils sont donc très loin d'être privés l'un ou l'autre de leur propre dignité, ceux qui sont d'incalculables véhicules de culture comme le souligne si bien le professeur Fernand LEROY dans l'ouvrage qu'il leur consacre ("Les Jumeaux dans tous leurs états" Ed. De Boeck Université, 1995).

C'est l'intention qui est à la base de la conception volontaire d'une prétendue copie et non l'existence de celle-ci qui fait d'elle un moyen ou une fin en soi. La création ex vivo de jumeaux ne semble donc pas être justifiable alors que la multiplication embryonnaire par dissociation précoce des blastomères pourrait fort bien trouver sa raison d'être dans la perspective de recherches ou dans la constitution d'une réserve de pré-embryons pour augmenter les chances de succès d'une fécondation in vitro. Cette justification pourrait tout aussi bien s'appliquer au transfert des noyaux d'un embryon précoce fait de quelques cellules d'autant plus qu'aucune de ces deux stratégies ne bouleverserait les règles de la parenté.

Un moratoire volontaire

Un moratoire pourrait permettre une réflexion en profondeur sur l'opportunité d'envisager la conception d'un être par clonage dans des circonstances exceptionnelles. Il pourrait par exemple s'agir de satisfaire le désir d'avoir un enfant génétique manifesté par un couple dont la femme souffre d'une affection héréditaire grave transmise par les seules mitochondries du cytoplasme des ovocytes (myopathie, cardiomyopathie, neuropathie optique de Leber) ou encore celui manifesté par un couple dont le partenaire masculin est totalement stérile. Dans le premier cas, un enfant qui ne serait la réplique de personne pourrait naître du transfert d'un noyau d'un pré-embryon du couple concerné dans le cytoplasme d'un ovocyte d'une donneuse. Dans le second, un noyau somatique d'un des parents pourrait être transféré. L'enfant qui en serait issu serait assurément le "clone" de sa mère ou de son père dans le sens qu'on a donné à ce mot à propos de la naissance de Dolly. Mais l'intention d'avoir un enfant et non un sosie doit ici être prise en considération.

Ajoutons que dans le cas du transfert d'un noyau paternel dans l'ovocyte énucléé maternel, le génome nucléaire du premier serait accompagné du génome mitochondrial du second et qu'à ce titre, l'enfant ne serait pas une réplique génétique parfaite du père. Les influences épigénétiques feraient d'ailleurs aussi de leur fille une personne différente de la mère.

Ces deux exemples ne font qu'illustrer la complexité d'un problème qu'on ramène trop souvent à la vision diabolique d'armées d'individus identiques soumis au pouvoir d'un petit nombre. Lorsque furent connus les premiers essais de fécondation in vitro menés par le Prof. R. EDWARDS, des voix se sont élevées dénonçant une pratique qui ne pouvait conduire qu'à la dégénérescence de l'espèce humaine...

Extrait de: Henri Alexandre, in Outils de réflexion, Centre d'action laïque, Bruxelles, (2000)

Annexe 2 - Relations avec les Églises

Sous "l'Ancien Régime", les Églises (le plus fréquemment seule l'Église de la religion dominante) intervenaient dans les affaires de la Cité.

Actuellement les Églises se considèrent toujours comme porte-parole de valeurs, de normes et de règles de vie que tous les citoyens sont censés partager. On constate que des fidèles, de plus en plus nombreux et même ceux d'entre eux qui recourent à des cérémonies religieuses, ne suivent plus les mots d'ordre de leur Église et souvent contestent ceux-ci en de nombreuses matières.

Les Églises ne sont plus représentatives de l'ensemble de leurs fidèles et certainement pas de l'ensemble des citoyens dont un nombre de plus en plus important n'adhère plus à aucune Église. Il faut remarquer que plusieurs d'entre elles sont organisées de manière non démocratique.

Le cas de l'Église catholique est particulier car elle a la possibilité d'intervenir par le biais de l'État du Saint Siège, lequel n'a pas adhéré et n'est pas en condition d'adhérer à la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme.

Aucune scorie de l'histoire ne peut plus justifier l'ingérence d'une autorité religieuse, quelle qu'elle soit, dans les affaires publiques de l'Union ou des Etats membres (ce qui implique notamment le retrait du statut d'observateur et des privilèges diplomatiques accordés à un Etat sans peuple, tel le Vatican.) .

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 19 avril 2000CHARTE 4245/00*CONTRIB 118*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution de "Terre Des Hommes France" en vue de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

TERRE DES HOMMES FRANCE

4, rue Franklin - 93200 Saint Denis - ☎ : 01.48.09.09.76 - Fax 01.48.09.15.75 - CCP 2133Z Paris

La grave situation d'exclusion et de pauvreté qui touche des millions d'êtres humains a probablement deux causes fondamentales :

- d'une part , les graves déséquilibres Nord Sud : le poids négatif de la dette sur les efforts de développement des pays pauvres, la politique internationale d'échanges commerciaux (OMC)...
- d'autre part, le déséquilibre de réalisation entre les droits civils et politiques et les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels .

Le dernier rapport du Développement humain réalisé par le Programme des Nations Unies pour le Développement affirme que : « ...plus de 80 pays ont aujourd'hui un revenu par habitant inférieur à ce qu'il était il y a dix ans...»

Nous sommes parvenus à la certitude qu'un travail de solidarité ne suffit pas à lui seul et que notre devoir d'ONG est d'agir, en collaboration avec nos partenaires, pour faire reconnaître les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels comme une dimension pleine et entière du développement humain.

Tout comme René Cassin croyait en la force d'une déclaration pour faire avancer les droits de l'Homme, Terre des Hommes pense qu'il ne saurait y avoir de progrès durable dans le Monde sans l'adoption de textes juridiques applicables qui reconnaissent les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels comme un droit fondamental de la personne humaine.

De quel autre moyen disposons nous pour lutter contre la situation dénoncée par Bernard Cassen dans le Monde Diplomatique de Novembre 1999 à propos de Seattle: "...les représentants de gouvernements dont seulement une poignée ont les moyens humains de suivre des dossiers techniques complexes. Autour d'eux, les milliers de lobbyistes des multinationales les encadrent et les conseillent. Ce sont eux seuls qui sont demandeurs d'une nouvelle dose de libéralisme affectant des domaines d'activité jusqu'ici à l'abri de la marchandisation comme l'éducation et la santé".

Voilà pourquoi Terre des Hommes France mène un combat pour une reconnaissance juridique et économique des droits économiques, sociaux et culturels, et souligne leur interdépendance et leur indivisibilité.

L'association veut particulièrement attirer l'attention sur ces droits qui, en dépit d'efforts formels, semblent encore négligés. Une charte des droits fondamentaux ne peut décemment se construire à partir d'une hiérarchisation des droits.

Longtemps considérés comme subsidiaires, les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels ont démontré qu'ils étaient une condition de réalisation des droits civils et politiques.

- Que vaut la liberté de la presse pour l'analphabète,
- le droit de vote pour l'esclave,
- que signifie la citoyenneté pour l'affamé ?

En conséquence, Terre des Hommes France propose la contribution suivante, base de son intervention le 27 avril 2000 dans le cadre du projet de Charte des Droits fondamentaux:

L'exemple du droit à l'éducation tel qu'il est aujourd'hui abordé dans le projet de charte suscite les inquiétudes de l'association.

D'une part, parce qu'il est séparé des autres droits économiques, sociaux et culturels.

S'il n'est pas faux de le concevoir comme un droit fondamental, il paraît inique de le traiter en dehors du champ social global déterminé par les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels.

On ne peut accepter l'argument qu'un titre relatif aux droits de l'enfant développera la question car le droit à l'éducation n'est pas spécifique à l'enfance.

D'autre part, parce que la conception de ce droit, tel qu'il est présenté, est réductrice.

C'est une vision libérale essentiellement qui consacre le droit à l'instruction conçu comme un droit d'accès à l'enseignement public, gratuit et obligatoire sans proposer une vision rénovée du droit à l'enseignement. Le texte entretient la confusion entre instruction, éducation et enseignement et semble s'orienter vers un droit à l'éducation qui serait un droit/liberté (n'exigeant pas une action positive de l'Etat). Seul le droit à l'instruction apparaît comme un droit/créance.

Si nous ne nous en tenons qu'au droit à l'instruction, le combat de la gratuité est aujourd'hui dépassé, car ce droit ne se réduit pas à la gratuité et à l'obligation. S'instruire, c'est disposer d'un enseignement de qualité dans un environnement favorable au développement des facultés intellectuelles.

Le droit à l'instruction se confond dans la Charte avec le droit à l'enseignement. L'école est-elle aujourd'hui et sera t-elle demain la seule dispensatrice des savoirs?

Il existe dans les sources internationales des droits de l'Homme qui font allusion à l'épanouissement individuel par l'éducation et qui intègrent une dimension culturelle (Déclaration universelle des droits de l'Homme de 1948 ; Pacte relatif aux droits économiques, sociaux et culturels de 1966 dans son article 13 ; Convention sur les droits de l'enfant de 1990 dans son article 29). Or, le nouveau projet ne fait pas référence à ces textes mais cite exclusivement les traditions constitutionnelles des États et l'article 2 du Protocole additionnel de la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme de 1950. Il semble qu'il y ait là une marque idéologique.

Enfin, il semble nécessaire que l'Europe intègre une dimension culturelle aux droits fondamentaux à travers le droit à l'éducation qui se définit comme « la mise en œuvre des moyens propres à assurer la formation et le développement d'un être humain ». L'ensemble des droits culturels, dont la teneur est définie dans le projet de déclaration de l'Unesco, ne peuvent exister sans éducation, d'où la nécessité selon nous de consacrer un titre au droit à l'éducation dans lequel pourraient apparaître deux paragraphes, le premier sur l'instruction, le second sur les droits « éducatifs » (culture et famille) qui ne sauraient être confondus avec l'instruction.

Christiane CHARRETON
Présidente

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 19 April 2000CHARTE 4246/00*CONTRIB 119*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Region of the International Lesbian and Gay Association (ILGA-Europe) with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ These texts have been submitted in English language only.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

Address by ILGA-Europe¹, The European Region of the International Lesbian and Gay Association, to the Charter Convention on 27 April 2000

It is a great honour for our organisation, the European Region of the International Lesbian and Gay Association, to address the Convention on behalf of Europe's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered communities. But for us it is more than an honour: it is an important symbol of the immense change taking place in European society: 20, 15, even 10 years ago our presence at an event such as this would have been unthinkable. Centuries-old patterns of exclusion, enforced invisibility, oppression, even at times persecution, are breaking up. And with the break-up of these patterns an immeasurable burden of isolation, emotional deprivation, self-denial and discrimination is being lifted from the shoulders of millions of people in Europe.

The European Union has made important contributions to this development, with repeated resolutions by the Parliament, and of course with Article 13 of the EC Treaty. It can make a further very important contribution with the Charter, particularly in the articles covering non-discrimination and family life.

The Treaty of Amsterdam broke new ground with the inclusion of age, disability and sexual orientation in Article 13 of the EC Treaty. We believe most strongly that all three characteristics should be included in the non-discrimination article of the Charter.

As regards sexual orientation discrimination, the reality is that, despite the progress referred to above, discriminatory practices remain widespread, involving both private individuals, and governments. Our written submission to you provides much detail. Suffice it to say here:

- that such discrimination can be found in the laws or regulations of seven member states and eight accession countries, including both the criminal code, and access to certain types of state employment;
- that discrimination by individual employers is extensive;
- that homophobic violence remains a serious problem, as last year's London pub bombing, which killed three people and injured sixty, reminded us all too tragically.

¹ ILGA-Europe is a non-governmental organisation that seeks to defend the human rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered persons at European level. Its membership consists of over 150 non-governmental organisations, whose members are mainly lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered individuals, in over 30 European countries. It is a member of the Platform of European Social NGOs and enjoys consultative status with the Council of Europe.

But the problem goes beyond particular acts of discrimination by governments or individuals: the fact remains that many people both in public life and as private citizens still consider the expression of homophobic attitudes legitimate and respectable. Explicit reference in the Charter is needed above all to signal that sexual orientation discrimination is as unacceptable as discrimination based, for example, on race or religion.

Transsexual and transgender people experience very similar types of discrimination: violence, harassment, and the denial of jobs or services. Their small number makes them particularly vulnerable on the one hand, but on the other, makes it extremely difficult for them to obtain any protection against discrimination through new legislation. For these reasons, we urge that you also include gender identity in the non-discrimination article of the Charter.

Turning now to the question of partnerships and family life: some of the realities of life in Europe today are:

- that millions of people are living together as same-sex partners;
- that in many cases children are being brought up by these couples, or indeed by single people who are lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgendered.

To repeat: these are realities. They cannot be wished away or ignored.

The qualities which go to make up a good partnership and a good family -- for example, love, mutual respect, commitment, equality, -- are in no sense dependent on the sex of the members. The desire to be a parent, and the qualities that make a good parent, are also unrelated to the sexual orientation or gender identity of the individual.

These partners, these children, these parents, these families, deserve the protection and support of society just as much as any others. This protection and support can come only with proper and full legal recognition. We urge therefore that the articles of the Charter dealing with these issues be drafted in a manner that is inclusive rather than exclusive, acknowledging that a variety of forms of family exists in today's society.

We have emphasised the need for the new Charter both to signal the unacceptability of discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity, and to foster a vision of family life which is humane, inclusive, and grounded in reality. We have highlighted the progress made in recent years, but also shown how far there is still to go. Europe will be a better, freer, and more accepting place for all its citizens when those who are lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered can be themselves, openly and without fear. We believe that if our suggestions are taken up in the Charter, that Europe will be one step closer to becoming a reality.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

Submission of ILGA-Europe¹, the European Region of the International Lesbian and Gay Association, to the Charter Convention²

1. Summary

ILGA-Europe's main recommendations are as follows:

The non-discrimination article of the Charter should include every ground of discrimination listed in Article 13 of the EC Treaty and Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights. The list in Article 13 EC, adopted in 1997, includes three important new grounds, disability, age and sexual orientation, which do not appear in the list in Article 14 of the Convention, adopted in 1950. However, ILGA Europe would wish to see the combined EC Treaty/Convention list supplemented in the European Union Charter by one additional ground, gender identity. We believe that this would serve to emphasise the need for protection from discrimination of a small, but very vulnerable group, transgendered people.

Article 13, Family Life of the draft Charter should be worded to recognise the diversity of family life in today's Europe.

2. NON-DISCRIMINATION

2.1 The inclusion of sexual orientation in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination

The two main arguments for the inclusion of sexual orientation in the non-discrimination clause of the European Union Charter rest on the serious and wide-spread nature of the discrimination, and on the numerous precedents which now exist in European and national law for the inclusion of such a reference.

¹ ILGA-Europe is a non-governmental organisation that seeks to defend the human rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered persons at European level. Its membership consists of over 150 non-governmental organisations, whose members are mainly lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered individuals, in over 30 European countries. It is a member of the Platform of European Social NGOs and enjoys consultative status with the Council of Europe.

² Drafted for the Board of ILGA-Europe by Nigel Warner, with the assistance of Dr. Robert Wintemute, School of Law, King's College, University of London, United Kingdom, and Dr. Kees Waaldijk, Faculty of Law, University of Leiden, Netherlands.

2.1.1 The seriousness of sexual orientation discrimination

ILGA Europe has recently published a comprehensive survey of discrimination against lesbian, gay and bisexual persons in Europe³. This reveals a most disturbing picture of the extent and seriousness of sexual orientation discrimination in Europe, whether among Member States of the European Union, the accession countries, or other European countries. For example:

- * Discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation can be found in the laws or regulations of 7 Member States⁴, and 8 accession countries.⁵ The most common such provision, a discriminatory age of consent (4 Member States and 6 accession countries), has been ruled a violation of the European Convention on Human Rights by the European Commission on Human Rights.⁶
- * 4 Member States and 2 accession countries⁷ have legal provisions or regulations that deny employment on the basis of sexual orientation in certain fields of state employment. The most common such provision, in the case of the armed forces (applying in 3 Member States and 2 accession countries), has been ruled a violation of the Convention by the European Court of Human Rights.⁸
- Studies in Sweden and the UK show that employment discrimination by individual employers is extensive. For example, a 1997 report by the Swedish Ministry of Labour included a survey of 650 lesbian, gay and bisexual persons. 12% said they had been turned down for a job as a result of sexual orientation, 8% had been denied promotion, and 8% had been forced to leave their job.⁹
- Homophobic violence is very common, as surveys in Ireland, Sweden and the United Kingdom have revealed.¹⁰ Typically, around a quarter of respondents in these surveys had been the victim of a violent attack. It is clear that in many European countries it can be very dangerous to identify oneself in public places as gay.

³ “Discrimination Against Lesbian, Gay And Bisexual Persons In Europe” - A report by ILGA-Europe to the Legal Affairs and Human Rights Committee of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe as a contribution to the preparation of its Report and Recommendations on the Situation of Lesbians and Gays in the of the Council of Europe (Motion for a Resolution - Doc. 8319) 16th February 2000 – available at:

<http://www.steff.suite.dk/ilgaeur.htm#Information>

⁴ Austria, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Luxembourg, Portugal, UK

⁵ Bulgaria, Cyprus, Estonia, Hungary, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Turkey

⁶ European Commission of Human Rights report on Application No.25186/94, Euan Sutherland against United Kingdom (1 July 1997)

⁷ Germany, Greece, Luxembourg, Poland, Portugal, Turkey. In the case of Germany, a report in the Tageszeitung on 8th April 2000 suggests that the Ministry of Defence, faced with losing a case before the Federal Constitutional Court, is in the process of lifting the restrictions on homosexuals serving in the armed forces.

⁸ Lustig-Prean & Beckett v. United Kingdom (Applications nos. 31417/96 and 32377/96) (27 Sept. 1999)

⁹ Arbetsmarknadsdepartementet. Stockholm (1997): Förbud mot diskriminering i arbetslivet på grund av sexuell läggning. Betänkande av utredningen mot diskriminering i arbetslivet på grund av sexuell läggning (SEDA). Statens offentliga utredningar 1997:175

¹⁰ Gay and Lesbian Equality Network and NEXUS Research Co-operative (1995) - Poverty, Lesbians and Gay Men: The Economic and Social Effects of Discrimination Dublin: Combat Poverty Agency; Tiby, E and Lander, I (1996) – “Hat, hot, våld - utsatta homosexuella kvinnor och män. En pilotstudie i Stockholm. Stockholm: Folkhälsoinstitutet; Mason, A. and Palmer, A. (1996) - “Queer Bashing -- a national survey of hate crimes against lesbians and gay men”. London: Stonewall;

- * Only 4 Member States and one accession country¹¹ accord a significant degree of legal recognition to same-sex partnerships (none of which is without discriminatory elements).

Inclusion of sexual orientation in the non-discrimination clause of the European Union Charter is made all the more necessary by:

the failure of so many governments to recognise that sexual orientation discrimination is as pernicious and as damaging as other forms of prohibited discrimination, and to take steps to eliminate it both from their own laws and regulations, and to counter it in society generally; The fact that many people, both in public life, and as private citizens, still consider the expression of homophobic attitudes to be legitimate and respectable.

2.1.2 Precedents in European and National Law¹²

The European Community has express competence to combat sexual orientation discrimination under Article 13 of the EC Treaty, inserted by the Treaty of Amsterdam in 1997. This is a most important precedent, in the light of which the exclusion of sexual orientation discrimination from the non-discrimination clause of the Charter would be highly anomalous. Indeed, omission from the Charter would represent a signal that the Union had weakened its view as to the unacceptability of sexual orientation discrimination.

Although the European Convention on Human Rights does not make explicit mention of sexual orientation, a recent judgment of the European Court of Human Rights recognises that sexual orientation discrimination is a prohibited ground of discrimination under Article 14 of the Convention.¹³ Moreover, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe voted in January 2000 to support a recommendation that sexual orientation be included in the list of prohibited grounds in the new draft Protocol No 12 to the Convention, which is currently under consideration by the Committee of Ministers. It took the view that explicit reference should be made to grounds of discrimination that were “especially odious”, and that sexual orientation discrimination was amongst these.¹⁴

¹¹ Denmark, France, Hungary, Netherlands, Sweden

¹² For a comprehensive survey of the national and international precedents, see Submission of ILGA-Europe to the Steering Committee for Human Rights (CDDH), Council of Europe (28 February 2000) on enshrining the principle of equality between men and women in the new Draft Protocol No. 12, and on the inclusion of sexual orientation discrimination in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination. The submission can be accessed at: http://www.steff.suite.dk/Protocol_12_Submission1.doc

¹³ Salgueiro Da Silva Mouta C. Portugal - (Application no 33290/96) (21 Dec. 1999)

¹⁴ Opinion No. 216 (2000) – Assembly debate on 26 January 2000

Since the 1970s, national anti-discrimination legislation and bills of rights in national constitutions, within and outside Europe, have increasingly recognised sexual orientation discrimination. Within the Member States of the European Union, the term "sexual orientation" (or a similar ground intended to cover sexual orientation) appears as a prohibited ground of discrimination in the legislation of 8 states: Denmark, Finland, France, Ireland, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Spain and Sweden. It also appears in the legislation of one accession country, Slovenia, in that of two other European countries, Iceland and Norway, and in that of seven countries outside Europe, Canada¹⁵, Australia¹⁶, the United States¹⁷, Israel, Namibia, New Zealand and South Africa. Moreover, in four countries, South Africa (1993), Ecuador (1998), Fiji (1998) and Switzerland (1999), sexual orientation (or a similar ground intended to cover sexual orientation) is included in the non-discrimination provision of the national constitution.

2.2 Gender Identity¹⁸

2.2.1 ILGA-Europe submits that the non-discrimination article of the EU Charter should also include the ground "gender identity" so as to make it clear that people who are transsexual or transgender¹⁹ are protected and in recognition of the particular vulnerability of this group.

2.2.2 The seriousness of discrimination

Transsexual and transgender people are one of the most vulnerable minorities in Europe. Their relatively small numbers make it extremely difficult for them to obtain any protection against discrimination through new legislation. They face violence, harassment and the denial of jobs or services because their gender identity or expression does not correspond with their recorded birth sex.²⁰ The discrimination they face can be quite as severe as that faced by other groups who traditionally are accorded specific protection by national and international anti-discrimination legislation.

¹⁵ In legislation at the federal level, in 9 of 10 provinces, and in 1 of 3 territories; in addition the Supreme Court of Canada has ordered that it be "read into" the legislation of the 3 remaining jurisdictions.

¹⁶ In the legislation of 5 of 6 states and in both territories

¹⁷ In the legislation of 11 of 50 states, the District of Columbia, and most major cities

¹⁸ For a more detailed statement of the arguments, see "Proposed Additional Protocol Broadening Article 14 Of The European Convention: The Need For Express Inclusion Of "Gender Identity"" (A submission by ILGA-Europe to the Steering Committee on Human Rights, Council of Europe – accessible at: <http://www.steff.suite.dk/art14trans.htm>)

¹⁹ The term transgender is used as an umbrella term that includes both pre- and post-surgical reassignment transsexual people. It also includes transsexual people who choose not or who, for some other reason, are unable to undergo genital reconstruction. It further includes all persons whose perceived gender or anatomic sex may conflict with their gender expression, such as masculine-appearing women and feminine-appearing men.

²⁰ See Melanie McMullan & Stephen Whittle, Transvestism, Transsexualism and the Law, 2d ed. (London: The Beaumont Trust, The Gender Trust, 1995).

When a transsexual person undergoes gender reassignment, some countries refuse to acknowledge the change of their social gender and/or the change of their body morphology²¹. In these states transsexual people are forced to endure the almost daily humiliation of revealing their birth sex in many practical areas of life, so making them vulnerable to discrimination and prejudice regardless of the success of their gender role transition. The European Court of Human Rights condemned this practice, where forced disclosure of birth sex is sufficiently frequent, by finding a violation of Article 8 in B. v. France (1992). In that case, the applicant could not legally change her male forename, and could not prevent the disclosure of her birth sex (male) in documents such as her national identity card and her passport, and in her social security number.²²

Additionally this failure to recognise their new gender role means that for many they are effectively unable, in law, to found families and to take on the full social responsibilities embedded within the family.

2.2.3 Increasing recognition at the European and national level

There is throughout Europe ever wider recognition of transsexuality both by legislation and judicial decision and sex change surgery is allowed in every member state of the European Community.

In 1989 the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted Recommendation 1117 on discrimination against transsexuals and a Resolution on the condition of transsexuals, which in cases of transsexualism called on Member States to introduce legislation whereby

“all discrimination in the enjoyment of fundamental rights and freedoms is prohibited in accordance with Article 14 of the European Convention of Human Rights.”²³

Moreover, despite the extreme difficulties that transsexual people experience in attempting to invoke the legislative process, there have been in the 1990s a growing number of precedents within countries for express protection. The anti-discrimination legislation of a number of cities in the USA includes “gender identity” as a prohibited ground²⁴. In the US state of Minnesota, anti-discrimination legislation defines “sexual orientation” as including “having ... a self-image or identity not traditionally associated with one’s biological maleness or femaleness”²⁵ and in California gender and gender expression are protected categories under the state’s Hate Crime’s legislation²⁶.

²¹ See Amicus Brief by Liberty in the Sheffield and Horsham case - <http://www.pfc.org.uk/legal/lib-amic.htm>

²² B v France [1992], Ser. A, No. 232-C, paras. 25-26, 59-63. The Court noted, at para. 12, that the applicant was “unable to find employment because of the hostile reactions she aroused”.

²³ Recommendation 1117, 1989, Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe

²⁴ These cities include Minneapolis, San Francisco, Evanston (Illinois), Louisville (Kentucky) and Houston

²⁵ See Minn. Stat. Ann. s. 363.01(45).

²⁶ Calif. Stat. AB 1999, signed on the 28th September 1998.

Discrimination against transsexual persons is also expressly prohibited in South Australia²⁷ and in the Northern Territory of Australia²⁸ where the ground sexuality is defined to include ‘transsexuality’, and in the Australian Capital Territory, where “transsexuality” is a separate prohibited ground²⁹. In New South Wales in Australia³⁰ discrimination is prohibited ‘on transgender grounds’ and the legislation refers to people as ‘being transgender’.

2.3 A Non-Exhaustive List of Grounds

The Charter’s non-discrimination article will establish a general non-discrimination principle for the EU. Such a general principle can only be established if the list of grounds in the article is open-ended or non-exhaustive, as is the case in Article 14 of the European Convention (“on any ground such as ... or other status”), Article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (“without distinction of any kind, such as ... or other status”), or Article 26 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (“on any ground such as ... or other status”).

The current draft of the Charter’s non-discrimination article – Draft Article 19(1) (CHARTE 4137/00 – CONVENT 8) is not open-ended. It should therefore be reworded as follows: “1. Any discrimination based on any ground such as ... or other status shall be prohibited.”

3 PRIVATE AND FAMILY LIFE

The European Convention on Human Rights includes respect for private and family life in one article, with the following wording: “the right to respect for private and family life”.

The most recent draft of the text covering private and family life available at the time of writing (CHARTE 4149/00 CONVENT 13) separates the right to respect for family life from that for private life by placing it in Article 13, Family Life, and refers to “privacy” rather than “private life”. We believe that it would be preferable for the Charter to follow the approach used in the Convention:

a. “Private life” is a concept that has been interpreted by the European Court and Commission of Human Rights in a large number of published decisions. “Privacy”, found in Article 26 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, may or may not have the same breadth as “private life”, and has been interpreted in relatively few cases by the United Nations Human Rights Committee.

²⁷ Equal Opportunity Act, 1984.

²⁸ Anti-Discrimination Act (REPA007), 1996.

²⁹ Discrimination Act No.81 of 1991.

³⁰ Anti-Discrimination Act No 48 of 1977, as amended by the Transgender (Anti-Discrimination and Other Acts Amendment) Act No. 22 of 1996, Schedule 1.

b. “Private life” should also appear in the same article as “family life”, to emphasise, as the European Court of Human Rights has done in its case law, that family life can exist between cohabiting partners in the absence of a marriage. In both Article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 26 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the reference to “privacy” is followed immediately by a reference to “family”. This is logical in that “family life” is one of the most important aspects of a person’s “private life”.

4 RIGHT TO MARRY AND TO FOUND A FAMILY

The most recent draft of the article on Family Life (CHARTE 4149/00 CONV 13) reads as follows:

“Article 13. Family life

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his family life.
2. Everyone has the right to marry and to found a family, according to the laws of the Member States governing the exercise of this right.
3. Protection of the family on a legal, economic and social level shall be ensured.”

As noted above, we believe that the “right to respect for family life” should be moved to Article 12, Respect for Private Life.

In addition, we suggest that Draft Article 13(3) should be amended as follows:

“3. Protection of families on a legal, economic and social level, and recognition of their diversity, shall be ensured.”

It is abundantly clear at the dawn of the 21st century that we can no longer speak of “the family”, as if every family in the EU consisted of a married heterosexual couple and their children living together. We would not speak of “the religion”, because there are different religions in the EU. Similarly, there is now a variety of forms of “families” in the EU, and the EU Charter must provide for the recognition of this social reality.

5 LEGAL STATUS OF CHARTER

ILGA-Europe considers that the Charter must be incorporated in the European Union Treaties, so as to avoid amounting to no more than an ineffectual declaration.

6 THIRD COUNTRY NATIONALS

ILGA-Europe supports the complete and express recognition of the fundamental rights of third country nationals within the territory of the European Union.

15th April 2000

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 19 April 2000CHARTE 4247/00*CONTRIB 120*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the European Women's Lobby with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

LOBBY EUROPEEN DES FEMMES EUROPEAN WOMEN'S LOBBY

10/04/00

EWL opinion on a gender perspective in the drafting of a European Union Charter on Fundamental Rights

Having followed closely the work of the Convention in charge of the drafting of a EU Charter on Fundamental Rights, the European Women Lobby formulates the following demands in relation to the introduction of a gender perspective in the Charter¹:

1. Concerning the content of the Charter:

- The EWL stresses that human rights are indivisible and that the full set of rights, civil, political, social and economic and political should be incorporated in the Charter.
- The EWL urges the Convention to adopt a gender perspective while elaborating the whole Charter. The principle of gender mainstreaming i.e. the integration of women's interests and perspective needs to be respected by the Convention throughout its work on the EU Charter on Fundamental Rights.
- The List of rights should include:
 - The prohibition of gender-based discrimination

A provision solely dedicated to the fight against discrimination on the ground of sex is crucially needed. It should clearly state the unconditional and fundamental principle of equality between women and men. The provision must not only ensure equal treatment and rights before the law, or prohibit discrimination on the ground of sex, but also commit the EU to the goal of de facto gender equality, thus taking the shape of positive obligation.

- Parity democracy

The principle of parity democracy, meaning the equal representation of women and men in all bodies, should be established as a fundamental principle for both the European integration and the institutions of the Union.

EWL- LEF, 18 rue Hydraulique, B-1210 Bruxelles
Tel. +32 2 217 90 20 – Fax: +32 2 219 84 51 - e-mail: ewl@womenlobby.org
Website: <http://www.womenlobby.org>

¹ A more complete opinion in relation to the Charter is being prepared by the EWL.

- Integrating a gender dimension in asylum policy

The Charter should contain a provision recognising the special needs of women asylum seekers and refugees. Specific gender-related violence or persecution should be considered a violation of women's human rights, on the basis of which asylum can be granted.

These persecutions include among others, genital mutilation, forced marriage, rape and other forms of sexual violence, restrictions or discriminatory treatment, whether they are enforced by legal norms or imposed by social or religious norms, and which threaten or harm women's physical or psychological integrity.

2. Concerning the form of the Charter and the composition of the Convention

- Form of the Charter

The EU Charter should have a fully binding legal status and a mandatory character upon the institutions and the Member States.

It should also be given direct effect, allowing any European Citizen to bring an action to court on the basis of a violation of a provision contained in the Charter.

- Composition of the Convention in charge of drafting the Charter

The EWL deplors that only 9 of the 62 members working on the elaboration of the Charter are women. Of 8 women representing national institutions, 4 are alternate members, and as such, do not have the right to speak and vote when the full member is present. The EWL fears that women's interest may be overlooked in the elaboration process and demands that this situation be corrected as soon as possible.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 19 avril 2000CHARTE 4248/00*CONTRIB 121*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution de Eurocities, soumise par M. Delebecque, vice-Président de la Communauté Urbaine de Lille, en vue de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

AF/PB/137.2000

Mesdames et Messieurs,

An nom d'EUROCITES je tiens à vous remercier vivement d'avoir bien voulu accepter de nous recevoir pour vous exposer les grandes lignes de nos préoccupations en tant qu'Elus, maires de grandes villes et leaders de métropoles européennes.

Créé il y a plus de 10 ans, Eurocities réunit actuellement 97 grandes villes et métropoles de l'Union Européenne auxquelles sont associées des villes appartenant à des Pays d'Europe de l'Est et d'Europe centrale qui devraient intégrer l'Union Européenne au cours des années à venir.

En tant que Maires et Elus, nous avons donc en charge « le destin » de près de 100 millions de citoyens qui sont pour l'essentiel des citadins, qui travaillent et vivent dans un milieu urbain au sens large du terme. Nos responsabilités nous obligent à être extrêmement attentifs à leurs besoins et à leurs attentes.

Les collectivités locales sont les premiers donneurs d'ordre en terme d'investissements et nous avons en tant qu'Elus une double responsabilité à l'égard de nos citoyens : une responsabilité financière, en réalisant les équipements, les services publics et les infrastructures les mieux adaptés aux objectifs de progrès et de développement, tout en étant respectueux de l'argent publics.

Une responsabilité politique et morale, en faisant en sorte que les citoyens soient les acteurs à part entière de la vie de la cité et qu'ils puissent pleinement prendre part à tous les domaines de la vie quotidienne : économique, sociale, éducative, culturelle, etc...

Or, depuis 10 ans, nous sommes bien placés pour observer et constater des tendances qui s'expriment avec acuité dans les grandes villes : la pauvreté, les détresses morales, l'isolement, la difficulté d'affronter les administrations, l'insécurité, le tout sur fond de chômage...

Certes, les grandes villes sont à bien des égards des « moteurs de développement » et c'est ce qui incite des catégories de personnes à venir y habiter, y trouver refuge espérant obtenir sinon les attributs d'une citoyenneté reconnue, du moins un peu de quiétude et de secours élémentaires.

Mais les grandes villes sont aussi et malheureusement des lieux où se concentrent et s'accumulent les difficultés. Les maires ne peuvent pas à eux seuls faire face à cette accumulation de problèmes, et résoudre les situations personnels qu'ils rencontrent quotidiennement. En tous les cas, nous ne voulons plus nous satisfaire de cette situation ! ...

C'est la raison pour laquelle les Maires d'Eurocities saluent chaleureusement l'initiative de l'Union Européenne, de doter l'Europe d'une Charte des Droits Fondamentaux qui de surcroît, aura « force de Loi » en s'imposant aux Etats-membres. Le Parlement Européen qui a massivement approuvé son caractère juridiquement contraignant par le biais de son incorporation au Traité d'Amsterdam, est un élément fondamental pour EUROCITES.

Car en effet, il faut savoir que les maires de grandes villes ont tout autant que les simples citoyens, beaucoup de difficultés à démêler les fils inextricables d'administrations qui, à tous les niveaux, rendent les procédures toujours plus complexes à l'égard des citoyens.

De ce fait ils leur est souvent impossible d'apporter des solutions à leurs problèmes. Ils seraient simples à régler s'ils ne se heurtaient pas à une multiplicité d'acteurs dont les points de vue et règlements sont souvent en opposition... Et voilà pourquoi chaque Etat s'avère le plus souvent incapable d'améliorer par lui même la condition de certaines catégories de citoyens.

Or, grâce à ce que l'on peut déjà considérer comme une loi « supra nationale » la Charte Européenne permettra par le simple fait d'y faire référence, d'apporter la solution au problème pratique rencontré « sur le terrain » et contourner ainsi les procédures administratives locales qui faisaient précisément obstacle à une solution satisfaisante et cohérente...

Pour le reste, et je ne vous étonnerai pas, en vous disant combien EUROCIDTES est sensible et motivé sur le respect et l'application de certains droits fondamentaux tels que :

⇒ le droit de vote aux élections municipales pour les citoyens des villes et communes qui n'ont pas la nationalité d'un état-membre de l'Union Européenne mais qui travaillent et vivent au sein d'une collectivité où ils sont régulièrement et durablement installés.

⇒ les droits sociaux et économiques sont également au cœur de nos préoccupations pour les raisons que j'évoquais précédemment et je veux citer pour exemple :

- le droit à une éducation et une formation répondant au voeu de chacun,
- le droit d'accéder et de participer à la vie culturelle de la cité,
- le droit de bénéficier d'une information claire et complète sur les droits et les devoirs des citoyens
- le droit de bénéficier d'un environnement écologique et urbain adapté et équilibré,
- le droit à la dignité et à la santé, à l'assistance en faveur des plus défavorisés,
- le droit de vivre dans un logement sain et adapté aux familles,
- la prise en compte des enfants et des jeunes en les dotant de droits protecteurs, en leur forgeant un sentiment d'identité européenne, en faisant d'eux les acteurs de développement de demain. Etc...

Je sais qu'actuellement la Convention travaille sur ces différents points et, vous savez pouvoir compter sur nous, si vous souhaitiez obtenir un avis sur les problématiques urbaines dans leur ensemble.

EUROCIDTES a adressé à ses membres, un questionnaire qui permettra, au vu des observations formulées, d'élaborer un texte solennel d'Eurocities sur la question des droits des citoyens qui vivent au cœur de nos villes.

Ce texte vous sera adressé au début du mois de novembre, afin qu'il soit en quelque sorte la contribution à la Charte dont vous aurez défini les termes.

Soyez assurés de notre soutien en faveur de votre démarche. Celle-ci doit marquer un tournant décisif dans la prise de conscience des Européens quant à leur sentiment d'appartenance à l'Europe et la certitude que jamais dans l'Histoire, la dignité humaine et le respect des droits des citoyens n'auront été affirmés et effectivement appliqués avec autant de lucidité et de conviction.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 19. April 2000CHARTE 4249/00*CONTRIB 122*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend einen Beitrag von der Evangelischen Akademie Thüringen zu Forderungen der Frauentagung.^{1 2}

¹ Evangelische Akademie Thüringen, Zinzendorfhaus, D-99192 Neudietendorf.

² Tel: +33-036202-9840. E-mail: evakthue@t-online.de
Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache vorgelegt.

Evangelische Akademie Thüringen
Zinzendorfhaus
99192 Neudietendorf
(Dtl.) 036202/9840
evakthue@t-online.de

Forderungen der Frauentagung der Evangelischen Akademie Thüringen „Frauenstimmen im Vaterland - Frauen und nationale Identität“:

Am Wochenende vom 31.03.-02.04.2000 fand im thüringischen Neudietendorf eine internationale Frauentagung statt. Die Teilnehmerinnen aus Polen, Litauen, Tschechien, Bosnien, Russland, der Türkei, aus Deutschland, Migrantinnen und Asylbewerberinnen beschäftigten sich auch mit der zur Zeit entstehenden Europäischen Charta der Menschenrechte. Als Ergebnis der Tagung stellen die Frauen folgenden Forderungskatalog auf:

- Änderungsvorschlag zu Artikel 1 des Charta-Entwurfs: Gleichheit von Männern und Frauen

Die Gleichheit von Frauen und Männern in den Bereichen Arbeit und Beschäftigung und sozialer Schutz ist zu gewährleisten.

„Die Gleichbehandlung von Frauen und Männern ist zu gewährleisten. Die Chancengleichheit für Frauen und Männer ist zu garantieren. Zu diesem Zweck sind alle notwendigen Maßnahmen durchzuführen, mit denen die Verwirklichung der Gleichheit von Frauen und Männern vor allem im Hinblick auf den Zugang zu Beschäftigung, Arbeitsentgelt, Arbeitsbedingungen, sozialen Schutz, allgemeine und berufliche Bildung sowie beruflichen Aufstieg sichergestellt wird. Es sind Instrumente einzuführen, welche die Umsetzung dieser Maßnahmen auf nationaler und internationaler Ebene kontrollieren. Hierzu müssen geschlechtsspezifische Erhebungen und Statistiken erstellt und weitergeführt werden.“

- Änderungsvorschlag zu Artikel 19 des Charta-Entwurfs: Asyl

(Dieser Vorschlag bezieht sich auf den Änderungsvorschlag, der durch Prof. Dr. Jürgen Meyer im Konvent eingebracht wurde.)

1. Jeder und jede, der oder die politisch verfolgt wird oder unmenschlicher oder erniedrigender Bestrafung oder Behandlung ausgesetzt ist, genießt Asylrecht. Frauenspezifische Asylgründe, vor allem Vergewaltigung oder Handlungen die das sexuelle Selbstbestimmungsrecht (z.B. durch Menschenhandel) verletzen, sind zu berücksichtigen.

2. Niemand darf in einem Staat abgeschoben werden, wenn stichhaltige Gründe für die Annahme bestehen, dass nach der Abschiebung die in Abs. 1 beschriebenen Maßnahmen drohen.
3. Kollektivausweisungen von Ausländerinnen und Ausländern sind nicht zulässig.

Begründung:

Die in Abs.1 Satz 2 enthaltene Aufnahme von frauenspezifischen Asylgründen lehnt sich an der international zunehmenden Erkenntnis an, dass Frauen als Hälfte der Menschheit oftmals besonderen Verfolgungen ausgesetzt sind.

- Aufnahme reproduktiver und sexueller Rechte in die Charta

(Dieser Vorschlag bezieht sich auf die IPPF-Charta über sexuelle und reproduktive Rechte)

Reproduktive und sexuelle Rechte, das heisst die Rechte auf sexuelle Orientierung, auf Entscheidungsfreiheit über Heirat, Gründung und Planung einer Familie und Lebensgemeinschaft sollen allen Personen gegen eine erzwungene Eheschließung schützen, sowie ihnen die Entscheidungsfreiheit über Kinderzahl und das Lebensalter der Frauen, in dem die Kinder geboren werden, garantieren.

Das Recht auf Gesundheitsversorgung und den Schutz der Gesundheit soll das Recht aller Personen auf den bestmöglichen Grad medizinischer Versorgung schützen und ebenso das Recht auf Schutz vor traditionellen Praktiken, die die Gesundheit gefährden.

Das Recht auf Freiheit von Folter und Mißhandlungen soll Kinder, Frauen und Männer vor allen Formen sexueller Gewalt, Ausbeutung und Mißbrauch schützen.

- Aufnahme einer Geschlechterquote bei Entscheidungsprozessen in die Charta

Es soll sichergestellt werden, dass in den Gremien der EU Frauen nicht weniger als 40 Prozent ausmachen.

Kommentar:

Dieser demokratische Grundsatz wird in den Programmen der UNO bereits verwirklicht.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 20 April 2000CHARTE 4250/00*CONTRIB 123*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a submission by the European Blind Union with a view to the hearing on the 27 April 2000.¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

M. Jean Paul Jacque
Convention Secretariat
Council Legal Service
Council of the European Union
Justus Lipsius Building
Rue de la Loi 175
B-1048 Brussels
Belgium

19 April 2000

By email to fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int, copied to Margit.Huy@consilium.eu.int

Dear M. Jacque

Re: European Blind Union participation in the hearing at the Convention meeting of 27 April 2000.

Further to your letter to our President John Wall CBE of 7 April with details of the hearing on 27 April 2000, please find below a short submission on behalf of the European Blind Union. This begins on the following page. We would be very grateful if this could be circulated to members of the Convention ahead of the hearing.

Many thanks in advance for your cooperation.

Yours sincerely

Julian Smith
On behalf of John Wall CBE, President of the European Blind Union

Submission of the European Blind Union:

About blind and partially sighted people in the EU

Across the fifteen EU member countries the number of blind and partially sighted people is 7.4 million. As the age profile of the visually impaired population is biased towards older people, the increase in the number of older people across Europe will lead to an increase in the number of people with a visual impairment. It is clear therefore that the rights and needs of visually impaired people will remain an important subject for the European Union and will need to be borne in mind by the Convention.

A summary of the European Blind Union's views on the Draft Charter

The Convention's work on drafting a Charter of Fundamental Rights offers an historic opportunity for the rights of visually impaired people to be publicly recognised by the EU as a whole. Such recognition would help enormously the many visually impaired people in the EU who are working for proper social and related rights to be included in individual items of legislation as they affect our everyday lives. Having a positive Charter to refer to would strengthen our arguments in favour of our rights being met in each relevant law and standard as they are negotiated, in a huge variety of subject areas – for example, on accessible design of future transport vehicles and systems, on access to information from the public and private sector, and on employment rights for visually impaired people. These are just three examples of the huge number of policy subjects which could be assisted by a strong Charter of Fundamental Rights.

The primary concern for visually impaired people is the right to have access to information in a format we can use. Without access to the same information the rest of society receives, visually impaired people are effectively discriminated against and excluded from parts of life which others take for granted.

The following four specific points are suggested for inclusion in the Charter:

1. All disabled people in the European Union have the right to lead their lives free from discrimination based on their disability and to enjoy equal civil rights with the rest of society. The EU governments and institutions agreeing this Charter recognise the need for actions to be taken to make these rights a reality, beginning as a priority with the right of people to have access to information in a format they can use and the right to be able to work.

2. The EU governments and institutions agree to meet the rights and needs of disabled people in the EU when drawing up measures relating to the Internal Market for goods, services, capital and labour.
3. The EU governments and institutions agree to assess the ways in which all proposed EU and national legislation and programmes can take account of the needs and rights of disabled people.
4. The EU governments and institutions agree to consult widely with disabled people themselves, through their representative organisations at EU and national level, when assessing proposed legislation and programmes, particularly when these are specifically targeted at meeting the needs and rights of disabled people. Such consultation should include disability-specific organisations where appropriate, for example consulting the European Blind Union where visually impaired people are directly affected by a particular proposed measure.

John Wall CBE
President of the European Blind Union
Address: Royal National Institute for the Blind
224 Great Portland Street
LONDON
W1N 6AA
United Kingdom

Telephone number +44 171 391 2205, or +44 171 391 2202
Email cbird@rnib.org.uk or jksmith@rnib.org.uk
Fax +44 171 387 3107

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 26 avril 2000CHARTE 4251/00*CONTRIB 124*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution de l'Office catholique d'information et d'initiative pour l'Europe (OCIPE) en vue de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

Charte des droits fondamentaux

Consultation des ONG

27 avril 2000

Proposition de l'OCIFE

Office catholique d'information et d'initiative pour l'Europe

3 rue de Trévires, 1040 Bruxelles

Tél 737 97 22 e-mail : pierredech@compuserve.com

Pierre de Charentenay

L'OCIFE propose de commencer la Charte par un préambule qui pourrait contenir des éléments comme suit (en l'absence de préambule, ces éléments devraient être présents dans la Charte):

Préambule

Les peuples de l'Union Européenne se dotent d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux pour manifester à tous, citoyens d'Europe et citoyens du monde, les valeurs qui sont les leurs et qu'ils veulent promouvoir autant dans leurs frontières qu'à l'extérieur. Fondés sur la dignité humaine, ces droits trouvent leur sens dans la possibilité pour chaque citoyen de constituer des communautés de vie et de travail. Ne pouvant être réalisés que par l'action déterminée de chacun, ces droits forment un ensemble de tâches à accomplir dont la première est l'exigence de solidarité et de fraternité. Dans le respect des différences, tous les citoyens de l'Union européenne sont acteurs et bénéficiaires de ces droits pour former ensemble une communauté politique.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 26 avril 2000CHARTE 4252/00*CONTRIB 125*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution de "World Conference on Religion & Peace" (WCRP) en vue de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française seulement.

W C R P Europe
World Conference on Religion & Peace

BELGIAN CHAPTER (local adress)
Avenue Boileau, 12
1040 Bruxelles
Tél. : 0032-2-772.27.37
Fax : 0032-2-771.44.39
Email : excoser.j.agie@skynet.be

Bruxelles, le 25 avril 2000

PROJET POUR L'AUDITION

Monsieur le Président,

La "World Conference on Religion and Peace " (W.C.R.P.), O.N.G. reconnue par les Nations Unies regroupe des représentants des grandes religions du monde en vue de promouvoir la paix et de soutenir tous les efforts susceptibles d'y conduire, une paix durable au bénéfice de tous les être humains.

Dans cette perspective, la W.C.R.P. soutient le " Projet de Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne " dans la mesure où d'une part il ne met pas en cause les droits de l'homme déjà reconnus en Europe, et d'autre part se centre sur des droits liés directement à une citoyenneté européenne.

A. La question des droits de l'homme.

LA W.C.R.P. considère que les droits de l'homme sont par excellence une préoccupation appartenant à l'ensemble de l'humanité représentés par les Etats membres des Nations Unies. Il en est tout particulièrement ainsi depuis que la Déclaration et le programme d'action de la Conférence mondiale sur les droits de l'homme de Vienne en juin 1993, a été adopté par consensus par les représentants des 171 Etats. Ce document associe clairement les droits de l'homme et le principe de démocratie. Il présente un programme de développement et de lutte contre la pauvreté et les inégalités comme moyen d'aboutir à une paix durable.

Les droits de l'homme appartenant à toute l'humanité, la W.C.R.P. attire l'attention de l'Union européenne sur la nécessité de maintenir sa claire adhésion à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et au principe d'une Cour européenne des Droits de l'homme.

La W.C.R.P. s'associe donc aux craintes exprimées par le Conseil de l'Europe ainsi qu'aux vues exprimées par le Rapport Simitis exprimant l'avis d'un groupe d'experts réunis par la Commission européenne.

La W.C. R. P. estime qu'une Charte européenne ne peut remettre en cause des engagements qui sont pris dans une perspective mondiale.

B. Une Charte des droits des citoyens.

La W. C. R. P. voit dans le projet d'une Charte européenne une occasion de combler un vide grandissant dans le processus politique plutôt qu'économique. Au niveau des personnes, cela a conduit à un déficit démocratique incontestable.

Le processus européen qui semble devoir s'étendre à terme à l'ensemble des Etats du continent européen soulève le problème d'un 'espace conceptuel commun de la nationalité'. Celui-ci se doit de renforcer le respect des droits de l'homme en y associant une vision commune des droits liés à la prééminence du principe de territoire, à l'acquisition de celui-ci, à la question d'une défense prioritaire par l'Europe d'un accès aux réfugiés persécutés en raison de leur religion ou de leurs convictions philosophique et politique. Le droit des travailleurs à la présence de leur famille se doit d'être respecté : le droit électoral de l'ensemble des citoyens européens doit être garanti.

Une Charte ainsi conçue posséderait ainsi son objet propre et viendrait heureusement compléter l'application par l'Europe des droits de l'homme. Ceci constituerait un pas supplémentaire d'un processus dont l'objectif Premier est de maintenir la paix en Europe et d'aider à la défense de celle-ci dans le monde.

Dr. Joseph AGIE de SELSATEN
WCRP Belgium
Président

Mr. Jehangir SAROSH
WCRP Europe
Moderator

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 2. Mai 2000CHARTE 4253/00*CONTRIB 126*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte anliegend die Stellungnahme des Europäischen Forums für Freiheit im Bildungswesen (EFFE) anlässlich der Anhörung vom 27. April 2000. ¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

Herrn
Jean Paul Jacqué
Rue de la Loi 175

B-1048 Bruxelles

25.4.2000

Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Sehr geehrter Herr Jacqué, das Europäische Forum für Freiheit im Bildungswesen unterbreitet für einen Bildungsartikel der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union (zur Zeit Art. 16 des Entwurfs) folgenden Formulierungsvorschlag:

Artikel 16: Recht auf Bildung

- (1) Jeder hat das Recht auf Bildung. Dazu gehört der unentgeltliche Zugang zum allgemeinbildenden Unterricht bei gleichen finanziellen Bedingungen für alle allgemeinbildenden Schulen.
- (2) Bildung und Erziehung sind frei. Sie sind auf die volle Entfaltung der Fähigkeiten und Begabungen gerichtet.
- (3) Das Recht der Eltern, Erziehung und Bildung ihrer Kinder entsprechend ihren religiösen, weltanschaulichen und pädagogischen Überzeugungen sicherzustellen, wird garantiert.
- (4) Jeder hat das Recht zur Errichtung und zum Betrieb von Bildungseinrichtungen unter Beachtung der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten. Die freie Wahl der Schule wird garantiert.

Begründung:

Das Europäische Forum für Freiheit im Bildungswesen ist ein Netzwerk von Bürgern Europas aus 30 Ländern, die davon überzeugt sind, daß die Zukunft Europas entscheidend davon abhängt, wieviel innere und äußere Freiheit Bildung und Erziehung ermöglichen. Darum begrüßt und unterstützt das EFFE die Forderung nach einer Charta der Grundrechte für die Europäische Union, in der auch das Recht auf Bildung und die Unterrichtsfreiheit ihren Ausdruck finden. Das Recht auf Bildung ist Menschenrecht und kann nur durch staatliche Leistungen verwirklicht werden. Dementsprechend geht es über einen rein abwehrrechtlichen Charakter hinaus.

Der zuletzt veröffentlichte Entwurf des Art. 16 gewährleistet bereits

- die Anerkennung des Rechts auf Bildung,
- die unentgeltliche Teilnahme am Pflichtschulunterricht,
- die Gründungsfreiheit,
- das Elternwahlrecht in Übereinstimmung mit eigenen religiösen und weltanschaulichen Überzeugungen.

Nach Auffassung des EFFE fehlen jedoch zwei unverzichtbare Bestandteile eines den gegenwärtigen Zeitforderungen entsprechenden Bildungsartikels. Ziel der Charta der Grundrechte muß es sein, die Rechte der Bürger Europas zu stärken. Deswegen reicht auf dem Feld der Bildung und Erziehung ein Minimalkonsens auf in allen Mitgliedstaaten bereits verwirklichte Verfassungsgrundsätze nicht aus. Den Orientierungsrahmen bieten vielmehr die Staaten, in denen die Menschen- und Grundrechte bereits vorbildlich verwirklicht worden sind. Nur so kann Europa zu einem Europa der Bürger werden.

1. Elternwahlrecht in Übereinstimmung mit pädagogischen Überzeugungen:

Der Entwurf von Art. 16 gewährleistet bereits die primäre Erziehungsverantwortung der Eltern und ihr Recht, die Grundentscheidung über die Erziehung ihrer Kinder durch die freie Wahl der Schule zu treffen. Darin liegt zugleich die Absage an ein staatliches Schulmonopol und die Förderung von Vielfalt im Bildungsleben. Die Gewährleistung einer lebendigen, das Schulsystem der Mitgliedstaaten immer neu befruchtenden Vielfalt darf sich aber nicht darauf beschränken, religiöse und weltanschauliche Überzeugungen zu respektieren, sondern muß auch für pädagogische Überzeugungen Raum bieten. In der Europäischen Union ist neben dem religiösen auch das pädagogische Elternrecht Bestandteil der Verfassungstradition der Mitgliedstaaten.

2. Das Prinzip der Nichtdiskriminierung hinsichtlich der finanziellen Bedingungen für alle allgemeinbildenden Schulen unabhängig von ihrer Trägerschaft:

Erziehung und Bildung dürfen nicht zum Objekt finanzieller Interessen werden. In einer Zeit der Leistungsgesellschaft haben die Mitgliedstaaten insbesondere die Verpflichtung, dafür zu sorgen, daß Bildung und Erziehung weder von einzelnen Staaten im Sinne eines Schulmonopols für sich beansprucht werden noch dem Wettbewerb eines freien Marktes überlassen werden, sondern vielmehr von Bürgerinnen und Bürgern Europas in eigener gesellschaftlicher Verantwortung als öffentliche Aufgabe gestaltet werden.

Die primäre Erziehungsverantwortung der Eltern erfordert neben dem Recht, die Schule frei zu wählen, die Anerkennung des Rechts zur Gründung und Unterhaltung von Schulen in freier Trägerschaft. Dieses Wahlrecht setzt jedoch voraus, daß Eltern unter gleichen materiellen Bedingungen zwischen staatlichen und nichtstaatlichen Schulen frei wählen können.

Ein Bildungsartikel für die Europäische Charta der Grundrechte steht auch in engem Zusammenhang mit anderen Grundfreiheiten des Gemeinschaftsvertrages. So fällt der Unterricht an privaten Bildungseinrichtungen unter die aktive und passive Dienstleistungsfreiheit und darf nicht behindert werden.

In der Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte ist anerkannt, daß Art. 2 des ersten Zusatzprotokolls der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention das Recht garantiert, eine Privatschule zu begründen und zu führen. Daraus wird zwar ein Recht auf Finanzierung dieser Schulen nicht unmittelbar hergeleitet; jedoch gewährt die Mehrheit der Mitgliedstaaten nichtstaatlichen Schulen Finanzleistungen. Ferner haben die Niederlande bei Abschluß des Zusatzprotokolls den Standpunkt vertreten, daß sehr wohl eine Finanzierung der nichtstaatlichen Schulen durch Art. 2 des ersten Zusatzprotokolls geboten sei.

Das EFFE erinnert außerdem nachdrücklich an die Entschließung des Europäischen Parlaments zur Freiheit der Erziehung in der Europäischen Gemeinschaft vom 14.3.1984. Ziffer I 9 dieser Entschließung lautet:

"Aus dem Recht der Freiheit der Erziehung folgt wesensnotwendig die Verpflichtung der Mitgliedstaaten, die praktische Wahrnehmung dieses Rechts auch finanziell zu ermöglichen und den Schulen die zur Durchführung ihrer Aufgaben und zur Erfüllung ihrer Pflichten erforderlichen öffentlichen Zuschüsse ohne Diskriminierung der Organisatoren, der Eltern, der Schüler oder des Personals zu den gleichen Bedingungen zu gewähren, wie sie die entsprechenden öffentlichen Unterrichtsanstalten genießen; dem steht jedoch nicht entgegen, daß von den frei gegründeten Schulen ein gewisser Eigenbetrag als Ausdruck der Eigenverantwortlichkeit und zur Unterstützung ihrer Unabhängigkeit zu fordern ist."

Mit freundlichen Grüßen
für das Europäische Forum für Freiheit im Bildungswesen

(Krampen)

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 2 mai 2000CHARTE 4254/00*CONTRIB 127*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après la présentation du "Diakonischen Werks der Evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland" à l'occasion de l'audition du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langues française et allemande.

Présentation orale de la prise de position du „Diakonisches Werk der Evangelischen Kirche Deutschlands“ à l’occasion de l’audition de la Société civile tenue par la Convention pour l’élaboration d’une Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l’Union Européenne.

Le „Diakonisches Werk der Evangelischen Kirche Deutschlands“ participe au débat de l’élaboration de la Charte des Droits fondamentaux en tant qu’une des six Grandes Organisations allemandes de solidarité et d’assistance sociale. Le „Diakonisches Werk“ représente plus de 30.000 sous-organisations avec plus de 800.000 employés salariés ou volontaires. En partenariat avec l’Etat fédéral allemand, le Diakonisches Werk offre des services sociaux de tout genre. Depuis 150 ans, nous sommes un acteur important de la Société civile. Basé sur l’image chrétienne de l’homme nous collaborons avec notre organisation-soeur, la Caritas, pour combattre l’exclusion sociale.

Le „Diakonisches Werk“ considère la dignité de la personne humaine telle qu’elle sera définie dans l’article premier du projet de Charte comme le droit de base, dont tous les autres droits fondamentaux doivent être déduits (article 1, document „Convention 13”).

Nous estimons que l’un des droits les plus importants à déduire de la dignité de la personne humaine est la liberté de pensée, de conscience et de religion (article 14, document „convention 13”). Ce droit doit inclure le droit à l’exercice commun de la religion ou conviction. Quant à la rédaction de ce droit sous forme d’un paragraphe supplémentaire à la version actuelle de l’article 14 nous nous joignons à la proposition de l’Eglise Protestante Allemande (Evangelische Kirche Deutschlands). Le droit d’exercice commun d’une conviction ou religion peut s’avérer dans la Société civile comme source d’actions inspirées par des valeurs.

En rédigeant nos propositions pour les articles concernant les droits sociaux nous nous sommes basés sur notre richesse d’expérience comme acteur de la Société civile inspiré par des valeurs. En revendiquant des droits fondamentaux sociaux, nous voulons assurer la possibilité de chacun de participer à la vie sociale. Pour nous, cette participation de chacun est partie intégrante de la dignité de la personne humaine.

Par conséquent, nous estimons nécessaire de munir chacun d’un droit à l’accès aux prestations et aux services sociaux. Je souligne: d’un droit à l’accès. En demandant les droits fondamentaux sociaux, nous ne voulons pas obliger l’Etat à des prestations irréalisables. Nous voulons plutôt assurer le droit individuel de chacun de participer aux prestations et aux services sociaux dans la mesure où il en a besoin. Nous considérons ce droit individuel comme base pour le combat efficace contre l’exclusion sociale.

Il s’agit précisément de ce droit de chacun de participer à la vie sociale et aux régimes de sécurité sociale quand nous parlons de Services d’Intérêt Général. („Daseinsvorsorge“). C’est en toute connaissance de cause que nous avons introduit cette notion de Services d’Intérêt Général dans notre proposition de rédaction de l’article XIII du document „Convention 19“ Par cette notion nous entendons une sécurité de base au sens large, une sécurité de base dans son meilleur sens. Par cette notion nous n’entendons pas une hyperprotection, mais l’accès garanti aux prestations sociales, apte à mobiliser des forces pour des efforts personnels des personnes aidées.

Nous tenons spécialement aux articles garantissant l'accès à la profession, aux prestations dans le domaine de la santé et à un minimum de sécurité sociale (articles II, XV et XIV du document „Convention 18“). Nous sommes convaincus que la garantie de l'accès à ces prestations de Services d'Intérêt Général dans le cadre des législations des Etats membres exprime le principe de solidarité que déjà maintenant le Traité de l'Union Européenne évoque comme un de ses éléments de base. La Charte des droits fondamentaux doit être à la hauteur de ce principe.

Qui veut vraiment garantir les droits fondamentaux au niveau européen, doit, si nécessaire, assurer pour chacun les conditions matérielles qui lui permettent de jouir des droits de liberté et d'égalité. Uniquement si l'on assure des droits fondamentaux sociaux individuels dans l'Union Européenne, on réalise une condition essentielle pour que le bien-être de chacun soit reconnu au même niveau que les intérêts économiques des acteurs du grand marché intérieur.

Bruxelles, le 27 avril 2000

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 28. April 2000CHARTE 4255/00*CONTRIB 128*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend eine Stellungnahme der Europäischen Union Christlich-Demokratischer Arbeitnehmer (EUCDA) zur Einbeziehung sozialer Grundrechte anlässlich der Anhörung am 27. April 2000. ¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache vorgelegt.

Stellungnahme der EUCDA zur Einbeziehung sozialer Grundrechte in die Charta der Menschenrechte mit dem Ziel, sie in den EU-Vertrag aufzunehmen

15.04.00

Die EUCDA sieht in den sozialen Rechten eine notwendige Ergänzung zu den Freiheitsrechten. Grundfreiheiten können nicht wahrgenommen werden, wenn nicht ein Mindestmaß an sozialer Sicherheit gewährleistet ist. Von daher sind soziale Grundrechte vom Verfahren her auf eine Stufe zu stellen mit den Freiheitsrechten. Im Gegensatz zu den "klassischen" Freiheitsrechten, die im Prinzip "Abwehrrechte" gegen den Staat darstellen, fordern wir die Verwirklichung von Freiheit mit Hilfe des Staates ein.

Ein Punkt von zentraler Bedeutung ist dabei die Forderung nach Arbeit. Arbeit ist mehr als Beschäftigung, mehr als nur eine Absicherung der materiellen Existenz. Sie ist auch ein entscheidender Faktor der eigenen Entwicklung, der Selbstverwirklichung. Sie eröffnet aber auch die Chance zur Teilnahme am Aufbau der Gesellschaft. Aus diesen Gründen hat jeder im Rahmen seiner Möglichkeiten die Pflicht zur und das Recht auf Arbeit.

Aus dieser Überlegung folgt eine Reihe von Rechten, die menschenunwürdige Arbeitsbedingungen ebenso verhindern sollen wie die Versuchung, Arbeit allein als käufliche Ware zu betrachten.

Die EUCDA schließt sich in diesem Zusammenhang zunächst einmal der Forderung an, daß von der Europäischen Union folgende Rechte anerkannt werden sollen:

- die allgemeine Erklärung der Menschenrechte
- die Europäische Konvention zum Schutze der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten
- IAO- Erklärung über die Grundprinzipien und Grundrechte am Arbeitsplatz
- die Gemeinschaftscharta der sozialen Grundrechte der Arbeitnehmer
- die überarbeitete Europäische Sozialcharta
- UN- Übereinkommen über die Rechte des Kindes

Die EUCDA fordert darüber hinaus einen breit angelegten Katalog an sozialen Grundrechten, der über die Rechte der Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer hinaus soziale Rechte und auch Verbote umfaßt, die die gesamte Lebenssituation der Menschen betreffen:

- das Recht der Familie auf rechtlichen, wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Schutz
- das Recht auf gleiche Behandlung und gleiche Chancen für Männer und Frauen
- das Verbot aller Formen der Diskriminierung aus Gründen des Geschlechts, der Rasse, der ethnischen Herkunft, der Religion oder der Weltanschauung, einer Behinderung, des Alters oder der sexuellen Ausrichtung
- das Recht bislang benachteiligter Gruppen auf Eingliederung in den Arbeitsmarkt und die Gesellschaft
- das Verbot der Kinderarbeit
- das Recht auf einen umfassenden sozialen Schutz, der insbesondere im Fall der Arbeitslosigkeit, bei Krankheit, bei Pflegebedürftigkeit und im Alter ein menschenwürdiges Dasein garantiert

- das Recht auf ein Mindesteinkommen, das ein menschenwürdiges Dasein ermöglicht
- das Recht auf Bildung und Ausbildung sowie lebenslange Weiterbildung gemäß den Fähigkeiten jedes Einzelnen
- das Recht auf freie Berufswahl
- das Recht auf Sicherheit und Gesundheitsschutz am Arbeitsplatz
- das Recht auf nationale und grenzüberschreitende Vereinigungsfreiheit und Kollektivverhandlungen sowie auf Gewerkschaftsaktionen einschließlich des Rechts zu grenzüberschreitenden unterstützenden Aktionen und Streiks
- das nationale und grenzüberschreitende Recht der Information, Konsultation und Partizipation der Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer
- das Recht auf die Erhaltung, den Schutz und die Verbesserung der Qualität der Umwelt, auf den Schutz der Verbraucher und der Benutzer vor einer Gefährdung ihrer Gesundheit und Sicherheit sowie gegen unlautere Handelspraktiken
- das Recht auf Freizügigkeit, auch für die Angehörigen von Drittstaaten, die sich legal in der EU aufhalten
- das Recht auf Familienzusammenführung für alle diejenigen, die sich rechtmäßig auf dem Gebiet der EU aufhalten

Das mittel- und langfristige Ziel der EUCDA ist es, daß die sozialen Grundrechte rechtlich verbindlich und einklagbar in den neuen EU-Vertrag aufgenommen werden. Sie ist davon überzeugt, daß die Rechte, die in die Verträge aufgenommen werden, die besten Standards für den Schutz der Bürgerinnen und Bürger setzen müssen.

Dabei ist es der EUCDA bewußt, daß einige Grundrechte unmittelbar anwendbar sind, während andere Grundrechte nur durch ein individuelles Klagerecht auf der Grundlage eines Rechtsaktes (Richtlinie, Gesetz etc.) durchgesetzt werden können. Dieser Rechtsakt selbst muß selbstverständlich auf einem Grundrecht beruhen.

Die EUCDA sieht in der Einhaltung von Grundrechten nicht nur ein Kriterium für die Aufnahme in die Europäische Union, sie hält es auch geboten, Sanktionsmechanismen für den Fall von deutlichen Verstößen gegen sie einzurichten.

Die EUCDA hebt auch hervor, daß jeder, der Rechte genießt, auch die Verpflichtung hat, durch eigenes Verhalten für diese einzustehen: für die Wahrung der Menschenwürde, insbesondere für die Sicherung der Grundwerte der Freiheit und der Solidarität sowie für eine Stärkung der Demokratie.

Europäische Union Christlich-Demokratischer Arbeitnehmer

Europäisches Parlament ASP 2 F 154

Tel: +32 2 284 2907/ +32 2 284 33 29

Fax:+32 2 284 49 57

E-mail: NMeignen@europarl.eu.int

Bank: BACOB, Brussels 799-5503750-69

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 28 avril 2000CHARTE 4256/00*CONTRIB 129*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une intervention de la Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social, présentée par M. Olivier Gerhard lors de l'audition publique du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française seulement.

Intervention de la Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social, présentée par Olivier Gerhard, devant la Convention chargée de l'élaboration d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux dans l'Union européenne,
Bruxelles, le 27 avril 2000

Mesdames et messieurs les membres de la Convention,

La Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social rassemble une trentaine d'ONG. Elle s'est engagée en faveur d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux dans l'Union européenne dès que cette proposition a été formulée par le Comité des Sages, présidé par Mme Maria Lourdes Pintasilgo. En 1998, avec la Confédération européenne des syndicats, elle a lancé un appel pour qu'une telle Charte soit élaborée. Depuis, cette collaboration s'est renforcée et a conduit la Confédération européenne des syndicats et la Plate-forme des ONG européennes du secteur social à mener une campagne commune, comportant d'une part des documents de proposition et d'autre part des réunions dans les 15 Etats membres, de façon à prendre en compte, dans l'élaboration de cette Charte, les attentes des personnes qui vivent dans l'Union européenne et qui, souvent, mais malheureusement pas toujours, y travaillent.

Au cours de l'année dernière, nous avons élaboré en commun un document de travail intitulé " Les droits fondamentaux : le coeur de l'Europe " et sous-titré " Intégrer les droits fondamentaux dans les Traités de l'Union ". Permettez-moi donc de souligner aujourd'hui cinq points indispensables afin que la Charte que vous êtes en train d'élaborer place les droits fondamentaux, dans leur ensemble, au centre de la construction européenne.

Le premier point a déjà été souligné par de nombreux orateurs. Cette Charte serait sans valeur si elle n'était pas contraignante et intégrée dans les Traités.

Le second point tient à ce que cette Charte doit bénéficier à tous. Nous nous félicitons que la plupart des articles prévus disent " toute personne a droit à .. ". Nous pensons pourtant que certains droits réservés pour le moment aux citoyens comme le droit à la libre circulation ou le droit de vote aux élections locales et européennes doivent être étendus aux résidents. Il serait également nécessaire d'introduire dans la Charte un article prévoyant une égalité de traitement en matière de droits civils, politiques, économiques, sociaux et culturels entre citoyens européens et ressortissants de pays tiers résidant légalement dans l'Union européenne.

Lors de ses travaux, et ce sera le troisième point, la Convention s'est référée de façon permanente à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme. Maintenant qu'elle aborde la question des droits sociaux, nous souhaitons qu'elle prenne de même pour référence la Charte sociale européenne, cet instrument du Conseil de l'Europe qui a été révisé en 1996. Cette révision a amené une série de nouveaux droits, aussi bien pour les travailleurs (par exemple le droit à la dignité dans le travail) que pour toute personne (par exemple le droit au logement ou le droit à la protection contre la pauvreté et l'exclusion sociale). Avec son mécanisme de contrôle et la possibilité de réclamation collective, cette Charte est un instrument moderne dont il faut s'inspirer. Il faut aussi savoir faire des pas supplémentaires. Par exemple, la Charte sociale européenne révisée prévoit un " droit à l'aide sociale ", repris dans les projets soumis actuellement par le secrétariat à la Convention. Sur ce point, la Convention doit suivre les progrès faits par quasiment l'ensemble des Etats membres en inscrivant le " droit à un revenu minimum garanti pour vivre dans la dignité ". Par rapport à ce droit au revenu minimum garanti comme sur d'autres droits sociaux, trois députées européennes membres de votre Convention, Mme Bérès, Paciotti et van den Burg ont soumis plusieurs amendements, nous vous demandons de les soutenir.

Le quatrième point porte sur la façon dont la Charte des droits fondamentaux dans l'Union européenne sera contraignante. Pour les droits civils et politiques, les juristes sont habitués à prévoir des recours individuels ou collectifs. Concernant les droits sociaux, il s'agit souvent moins de recours directs que de recours par rapport à l'action, aux programmes, aux moyens (ou au manque de tels moyens) mis en oeuvre par l'Union et les Etats membres pour assurer l'accès effectif aux droits. C'est pourquoi nous proposons que, dans la Charte, figure l'engagement de l'Union de mettre en oeuvre un plan quinquennal de mise en oeuvre des droits sociaux, avec un mécanisme précis d'évaluation et de suivi.

Le cinquième et dernier point porte sur les ONG. Cette audition est une mise oeuvre d'une consultation des ONG, d'un dialogue civil. Ce qui est ici vécu est désormais reconnu comme essentiel au bon fonctionnement de la démocratie. C'est pourquoi nous demandons que la Charte comporte un article sur le droit des ONG à être consultées au niveau de l'Union européenne, droit qui doit donner lieu à l'établissement d'un dialogue civil structuré.

Nous vous remercions de nous avoir permis d'exercer ici ce droit.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 28 April 2000CHARTE 4257/00*CONTRIB 130*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a submission by the Eversheds Business Lawyers in Europe. ^{1 2}

¹ Eversheds Business Lawyers in Europe: Fitzalan House, Fitzalan Road, CF24 0EE
DX 33016 Cardiff. Tel: +44-1222 471147. Fax: +44-1222 464347.

² E-mail: audreywilliams@eversheds.com

² This text has been submitted in English language only.

SUBMISSIONS ON THE DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

Eversheds is a European law firm, with key locations within a number of EU jurisdictions. The exercise which we have undertaken is to draw comparisons across three of the EU jurisdictions, by way of illustration, to explain the existing provisions, and help to illustrate whether the fundamental rights are really required via a separate EU Charter. We make this submission following a review of the proposed new rights and having undertaken a review of the existing legislation in each of the EU countries where we operate, or as appropriate propose new legislation. We have considerable experience in relation to dealing with issues of discrimination, fundamental rights, employment issues and human rights. We are particularly concerned that the most effective venue for enforcement of rights at the nature identified, is in the domestic courts and legislation. In the establishment of the EU Charter, individuals presumably, would be given the right to seek to challenge and refer matters to the European Court of Justice on assistance and interpretation. Organisations and business in particular, will therefore face the potential for further claims and challenges. A more effective method by which rights of the nature set out in the Charter are introduced should be via the existing route of directives which are then interpreted as appropriate and brought into effect by domestic laws where they become enforceable in the domestic courts.

Summary Response

Our overriding concern in relation to the proposed Charter is that it extends well beyond the scope of the original terms of the Treaty of Rome. In addition, it also touches upon rights already provided for in the European Convention on Human Rights (“ECHR”). The potential for dual challenges to be brought by individuals may therefore exist under both the EU Charter as well as the European Convention, and potentially a third challenge where in particular jurisdictions the rights guaranteed by the ECHR have been in-acted within domestic legislation.

There is a particular issue in this regard within the United Kingdom, where, with effect from October 2000, the Human Rights Act 1998 will introduce new domestically enforceable rights within the UK jurisdiction as well as placing public bodies, including the courts, under an obligation to observe and enforce the rights enshrined within the ECHR.

We set out below, based on the proposed Articles to be contained in the Charter, our comments on each fundamental right.

1 Article I - Equality between Men And Women

Proposal: “Equality between men and women must be ensured with regard to work and employment and social protection”.

Such protection is already contained within a number of EU provisions including:

- Article 141 (in respect of pay);
- The Equal Treatment directive; and
- The Equal Pay directive.

certainly as regards work.

In the UK, such rights are enshrined both by direct reliance upon the European provisions, as well as the Equal Pay Act 1970 and the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

In the Netherlands, Article 1 of the Dutch constitution (“GRONDWET”), the General Equal Treatment Act and the Act of Equal Treatment of Men and Women in Labour Relations of 1980. Furthermore, Article 7: 646, 647 and 647 of the Dutch civil code deals with preventing discrimination in training programmes, conditions of employment and promotion as well as when terminating employment contracts.

French law contains provisions regarding equality between men and women within the Labour code (Article L.123-1 and L.122-45) both during the recruitment procedure, the term of the contract and at dismissal. The French provisions moreover carry the sanction of criminal penalties against an employer.

2 Article II - Right to choose an Occupation

Proposal: “Everyone has the right to choose and to engage in his occupation or business, without prejudice to the rules in the Treaty relating to the free movement of persons”.

Within the European Union and indeed the European Economic Area, freedom of movement is provided for across the member states. To this extent the right to choose and engage in occupation is protected.

Furthermore, in the UK as well as preventing sex discrimination, the context of which are dealt with above, the Race Relations Act 1976 also prevents discrimination on grounds of an individual’s race, colour, ethnic or national origin.

Of course, freedom of movement is also a fundamental right embodied within the Treaty of Rome.

Again in the Netherlands, Section 19 paragraph 3 of the Dutch constitution contains a right to freedom of labour to prevent interference by the authorities - although these rights are subject to social economic circumstances.

Under French law, the same right to choose an occupation is implicit within the preamble of the 1958 constitution. However, there are certain regulated professions for which freedom is restricted.

It is suggested that such a potentially wide ranging right to choose an occupation, would have to be qualified as appropriate, taking into account policy considerations and occupations where qualifications are clearly essential in order to be able to carry out the role in question.

3 Article III - Worker’s Right to Information & Consultation

Proposal: “Workers and their representatives have the right to effective information and consultation within the undertaking which employs them, particularly in the context of collective redundancy procedures and decisions relating to conditions of work and to the working environment”.

Again, provisions have already been enacted at European level to deal with European Works Councils in respect of transnational bodies and Community undertakings.

Within the UK, there is already a substantial amount of protection which requires consultation with worker's representatives (Trade Union or employee representatives) and obligations to inform and consult in respect of:-

- Collective redundancies;
- Contractual changes which are proposed;
- Collective matters which may result in dismissal; and
- Health and safety consultation obligations.

In the Netherlands, a substantial body of existing law already provides for the establishment of works councils and collective consultation, including:-

- The Works Council Act;
- The Notification of Redundancy Act;
- Social Economic Council Merger Conduct Code; and
- Collective Employment Contract.

Works Councils under the first item listed must be established in undertakings of 50 or more consisting of employee representatives elected by the employees. Rights to certain information is also provided, including details concerning the control, reduction, expansion or changes to the undertaking in which the employee works. The Notification of Redundancy Act requires collective consultation and information and there are also provisions dealing with mass lay off.

In France, the right to information is provided through the requirement placed upon an employer to post minimum information (for example in respect of working hours and collective agreements which are applicable) at the works premises and again, there is a mechanism for the election and appointment of staff representatives. Information and consultation obligations exist for works councils concerning matters affecting the volume structure, working time, conditions of the workforce as well as changes in the economics or control and structure of the employer company. Substantial remedies exist in respect of infringement of these provision, including imprisonment and/or a fine.

Many European Union countries already have a provision which enact the provisions concerning workers representatives and redundancies under Directive 98/59/EC in addition to the European Works Council provisions.

4 Article IV - Freedom of Association, Rights of Collective Bargaining and Collective Action

Proposal: “Employers and workers have the right to associate freely, including at European Union level, in order to form the professional or trades union organisations of their choice to defend their economic and social interests.

Every employer and every worker has the right to join or not to join these organisations, without this causing him any personal or professional harm”.

In the UK, provisions already exist to protect individuals from joining or indeed declining to join a recognised Trade Union. This protection extends to prevent individuals being refused employment, being subjected to a detriment or indeed being dismissed or victimised in any other way. In addition, under the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992, recognised Trade Unions and their representatives gain the right to certain minimum information concerned with collective bargaining as well as health and safety rights and time off rights for training. Thus, provision already exists to allow freedom of association.

Under Dutch legislation, both the constitution (Article 8), the Dutch Civil Code (Article 7: 670 sub 5) and the Collective Employment Contracts Act protects the individual’s right and freedom to join a Trade Union and termination of the contract, because of membership or because the individual has undertaken the activities of an association or Trade Union, is unlawful.

Similarly, under the French jurisdiction, there is the right to associate a protection against dismissal or discrimination. Discrimination on grounds of Union membership is indeed a criminal offence (punishable by two years' imprisonment and/or a fine).

Proposal: “Employers or employers’ organisations, on the one hand, and workers’ organisations, on the other hand, have the right, under the conditions laid down by national legislation practice, to negotiate and conclude collective agreements, including at European Union level”.

As such, legislation does not exist to provide the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements European wide. However, there is nothing to prevent organisations from forming PAN European Associations and indeed a number of employers and indeed Union bodies already do so.

At a domestic level, under UK legislation, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements (known as “recognition”) is about to be introduced by new legislation in the summer of 1999 under the Employment Relations Act 1999. It would be of major concern if, in addition to the freedom of association rights contained in the ECHR and the new rights contained in the Employment Relations Act 1999, a further additional right and requirement was invoked by the introduction of the EU Charter provisions.

Collective bargaining is also already provided for under Dutch law in the Collective Employment Contract Act, the Works Council Act and Social Economic Council Merger Conduct Code. Whilst this is provided on a private law basis, it is based on the principle of freedom of contracts and although there is no right to require an organisation to determine or agree a collective employment contract, the right to so contract exists.

Proposal: “Workers and employers have the right in cases of conflicts of interest to take collective action at European Union level should the occasion arise, including the right to strike”.

Within each jurisdiction, individual employees have a right to strike or take other collective action although this right does not appear to be formally recognised in legislation. However, the Council of Europe Social Charter which recognises the right to collective action is, for example, deemed applicable in the Netherlands. It is in fact a constitutional right under French law and special protection exists in the UK to restrict or limit the circumstances in which individuals who are taking collective action can be dismissed.

The Charter here however appears to envisage the right to take collective action at European Union level, presumably, where a particular issue arises between the worker and employer which has an impact at a PAN European level. Our view is that the right to strike and to take other action needs to be carefully regulated and set out and that it is preferable for the circumstances in which action can be permitted to be determined by domestic laws. From the point of view of encouraging the economic well being of the European Union, we would not support the encouragement of European level collective action save in circumstances where there genuinely is an “EU issue” at stake.

5 Article VII - Right to Equal Remuneration for Equal Work

Proposal: “Every worker has the right to equal remuneration for work of equal value”.

We refer to our observations at Article I above as to the provisions already applying.

Many jurisdictions have already enacted the Equal Pay Directive and are obliged to observe Article 141 of the Treaty, and we do not see the need to duplicate these requirements and rights by separate EU Charter legislation.

6 Article VI - Right to Rest Periods and Annual Leave

Proposal: “Every worker has the right to a weekly rest period and to an annual period of paid leave”.

These provisions were required to be introduced in all member states by the Working Time Directive. It is suggested therefore that protection already exists in this area and all European Union member countries should have enacted the Working Time Directive provisions in October of 1998. If the Commission is not satisfied that all individual employees and workers are being given these rights, we suggest that that is a matter which should be addressed via infringement proceedings.

Again, we are concerned that what is being proposed amounts to a duplication of rights.

The UK have certainly introduced the Working Time Directive, which does guarantee weekly rest and annual periods of leave through its Working Time Regulations.

In France, Articles L-223-1 of the Labour Code provides for 5 weeks' paid holiday and 20 minute rest breaks for every 6 hours as well as a requirement that individuals are not required to work more than 6 consecutive hours and, reflecting the EU Directive a daily 11 hour rest.

In the Netherlands the Working Hours Act again addresses minimum holiday entitlement (20 days) which can be increased by collective agreement or individual agreement (together with maximum work times and minimum rest periods).

7 Article VII - Safe and Health Working Conditions

Proposal: “Every worker has the right to safe and healthy working conditions”.

Again, there is European Directive legislation via the “framework” directive and subsequent daughter directives, which have been enacted in the UK, again via the management of Health and Safety Work Regulations, in the Netherlands by a number of items of legislation including:-

- The Working Conditions Act;
- The Working Conditions Regulations; and
- The Working Conditions Scheme.

Similarly, it is part of the Labour Code in France contained within Article L-231-1.

These provisions respectively deal with the requirement to establish works committees with health and safety responsibilities and to consult on such items.

8 Article VIII - Protection of Children and Young People

Proposal: “The minimum age of admission to employment must not be lower than the minimum school leaving age and, in any case, not lower than 15 years.

Young people under 18 years of age must have working conditions which suit their age and be protected against any work likely to harm their safety, health or physical, mental, moral or social development or to jeopardise their education”.

The Working Time Directive referred to in paragraph 6 above provides for the protection of young workers throughout the European Union.

As stated in paragraph 6 the Directive has been implemented within the UK. Young workers are defined in the Directive as being aged between 15 or the minimum school leaving age (whichever is the lowest) and 18. The Directive provides for the protection of young workers as defined including minimum rest periods of 12 consecutive hours in each 24 hours, a weekly rest period of not less than 48 hours in each 7 day period the young worker is employed, and protection to ensure that the young worker’s specific development and vocational training and access to employment needs are met.

In Holland, the Working Hours Act define a minor as a person under the age of 18 and, from the age of 16 only is entitled to enter into an employment agreement. Any person under the age of 16 can only be employed with the permission of his legal representative. There are special working hours and rest period restrictions and night working and overtime employment is forbidden.

Similarly, under the French labour code, specific protection exists for what are defined as young workers and this includes restrictions on their working time so that those under 18 cannot work for more than 8 hours per day or 4½ hours without a break.

9 Article IX - Right to Protection in Cases of Termination of Employment

Proposal: “Workers have the right not to have their employment terminated without valid reason and to adequate compensation or other appropriate relief if their employment is terminated without valid reason”.

It is accepted that the provisions as to termination and protection in this regard is very limited under EU legislative provisions. In the UK, protection exists under the Employment Rights Act 1996, in laws which prevent what is known as “unfair dismissal”. These provisions go on to limit the circumstances in which an individual can be dismissed for fair reasons and provide remedies currently at £50,000 as a maximum award where a dismissal is not for a valid (fair) reason. Additional compensation and in some circumstances reinstatement or re-engagement to require the employer to take the individual back in their employ exists, for example in relation to pregnancy related dismissals, Trade Union related dismissals and indeed, dismissals on grounds of health and safety or representative status.

In the Netherlands, an employer is required to obtain a permit from the Director or the District Employment Services Authority before giving notice to terminate or alternatively an application must be made to the Cantonal Court under the Dutch Civil Code, requesting the setting aside of a contract of employment for serious reasons. Again, special protection exists to prevent dismissal for reasons such as Trade Union membership and political affiliation. Finally, there is also the right to be granted severance pay upon termination provided the employee is not at fault for the dismissal. The amount of severance pay reflects the damages suffered.

In France again, there are certain protected employees (such as staff representatives) who cannot be dismissed without prior authorisation from the Labour Inspector which will only be given after a contradictory enquiry is undertaken. There is also a legal dismissal procedure in respect of non-protected employees.

10 Article X - Right to Vocational Training and Guidance

Proposal: “Everyone must have access, without discrimination, to appropriate vocational training and guidance and to benefit therefrom throughout his working life”.

In the UK, there is the concept of lifetime training and encouragement is certainly given to provide vocational training although no specific right to training provided. There is similarly no such right under Dutch law, although in France, an employer has an obligation of guidance and adaptation in respect of his employees.

11 Article XI - Right of Employed Women to Protection of Maternity

Proposal: “Every employed woman has the right to maternity leave of at least 14 weeks before and/or after childbirth”.

The Pregnant Workers Directive introduced minimum requirements to be invoked in each member state. In the UK, this was enacted in 1993 and has further been enhanced by a recent change which provides to all individuals the right to 18 weeks' maternity leave (if their baby is expected on or after the 30th April 2000).

In Holland, 16 weeks' maternity leave on full pay is an obligation as well as other special protection and in France a minimum of 6 weeks before giving birth and 10 weeks after.

Again, these rights are already guaranteed and provided by the implementation of the Pregnant Workers Directive, in each member state. We therefore do not see the merit in further duplication.

12 Article XII - Right to Parental Leave

Proposal: “Every worker has the right to parental leave of at least 3 months following the birth or adoption of a child”.

The Parental Leave Directive again, as with the Pregnant Workers Directive, obliges member states to introduce a minimum right to parental leave in respect of a child following birth or adoption.

This has been enacted in the UK, Holland and France. Given again that this is a more recent new right, we cannot see the merit or indeed the driving force behind imposing this as a fundamental right in the European Union through the Charter, when it is already provided for and in existence.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 2 May 2000CHARTE 4258/00*CONTRIB 131*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter two contributions by the Union of European Federalists (UEF) on occasion of the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French, English and German languages.

UEF

Union of European Federalists
Union des Fédéralistes Européens
Union der Europäischen Föderalisten

Charter of Basic Rights

Resolution of the UEF Federal Committee on the Charter of Basic Rights and the Intergovernmental Conference (Extract)

Brussels, 20 – 21 November 1999

The Union of European Federalists,

(...)

- recalls the decision of the Cologne European Council in June 1999 that “the fundamental rights applicable at Union level should be consolidated in a Charter and thereby made more evident”;
- insists that this proposed Charter, which is important in itself, must not be a substitute for a European Union Constitution;
- welcomes the introduction of a new working method involving representatives of the European Parliament, national parliaments, citizen's organisations and the Member States' governments in the preparation of the Charter, thereby establishing a new procedure which provides the method by which the European Union Constitution should be drawn up.

The Union of European Federalists, therefore calls on the European Council meeting in Helsinki to decide on joint action with the European Parliament and the Member States' Parliaments to adopt the same procedure as agreed by the European Council of Cologne for the Charter of Basic Rights to draw up a Constitution of the European Union which should include citizen's rights and obligations.

Secrétariat général européen: Place du Luxembourg, 1 – B-1050 BRUXELLES
Tél. +32-2-508.30.30 – Fax +32-2-512.66.73 – E-mai: uef.european.federalists@skynet.be

Resolution on the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights as an important step towards a European Constitution

The UEF Federal Committee meeting in Brussels on 1 and 2 April 2000,

1. Welcomes the initiative for the drafting of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and reminds
 - that the European Union is a union of shared values
 - that a consolidation of these crucial basic and human rights constitutes an important point of reference for European citizens
 - that the fundamental rights of the European Union include not only human but also social and cultural rights as well as rights devolving from the implications of the IT society;
2. Underlines the democratic principle that all political power originates from the political will of the citizens. This principle has to be integrated in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. The coming into office of the future European Government has to reflect the result of European elections;
3. Calls for
 - the incorporation of the EU Fundamental Rights into the EU and EC treaties, thus granting them fully binding legal status
 - the application of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights throughout the Union and any infringements to be dealt with by the European Court of Justice;
4. Calls for the members of the EU Fundamental Rights Convention to initiate a broad public debate involving the parliaments and assemblies at different levels as well as organisations of the civil society;
5. Considers
 - that the elaboration of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights is an important step towards a European Constitution
 - that other elements will have to follow such as the provisions on the decision-making process of the European Union and the distribution of competences between the EU, the Member states, and the subnational levels of governments;

Welcomes the introduction of a new method by which members of the European Parliament, members of national parliaments and representatives of the national governments - involving the organisations of the civil society - are working together for the drafting of the Charter. After the successful completion of the deliberations on the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights, the Convention should commence to work on further elements of a European Constitution.

Secrétariat général européen: Place du Luxembourg, 1 – B-1050 BRUXELLES
Tél. +32-2-508.30.30 – Fax +32-2-512.66.73 – E-mail: uef.european.federalists@skynet.be

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 2 May 2000CHARTE 4259/00*CONTRIB 132*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the statement by the European Newspaper Publishers' Association (ENPA) given at the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English, French and German languages.

Hearing on a draft Charter of Fundamental Rights 27 April 2000, European Parliament, Brussels

- Statement by the European Newspaper Publishers' Association ENPA -

ENPA represents some 3000 daily, weekly and Sunday newspapers from seventeen European countries. The associated publishing houses sell more than 91 million copies each day, which are read by over 240 million people.

In the context of framing a draft Charter of Fundamental Rights, freedom of expression and press freedom are of paramount importance to ENPA.

European newspaper publishers welcome the Convention's attempt to put the fundamental right to freedom of expression at the heart of its proposal. Nevertheless, a general clause such as this demands clarification, such as how it is subsequently to be understood by the newspapers.

Freedom of expression as an essential prerequisite for the realisation and development of the individual is well established in the classic tradition of human rights. As such, this freedom is an integral requirement of a democratic system of government. Accordingly, the European Court of Human Rights stressed that freedom of expression, according to Article 10, paragraph 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), is one of the foundation stones of a democratic society and is essential to its further development as well as individual self-realisation. Furthermore this freedom is recognised as a general legal principle in Community law (Article 6 TEU).

Given this background and the stipulation that press freedom is part of the right to freedom of expression, the European newspaper publishers support the following interpretations of the aforementioned rights.

Press freedom is primarily a right to defence against intervention from both public and private sectors. Only a free press, free from censorship, can fulfil its important democratic function.

Publishers and other media companies must, therefore, be able to establish themselves freely in society like other private businesses. They are therefore in journalistic and economic competition, in which public authorities are fundamentally not allowed to intervene. This must be rooted in the principle that anyone, at any time has the right to run a press business without the permission of the authorities and without a licence.

Gathering information is also a basic prerequisite for a functioning press. In particular, this includes unhindered access to information available in public institutions and its divulgence by the competent offices.

Furthermore, every possible technical means of communication must play a part in guaranteeing press freedom. The right to freedom of expression would be worthless if the press were hindered in the dissemination of their products.

Moreover, press freedom must not be differentiated according to individual product categories and journalistic or technical qualities. Freedom covers the entire content of publications, including editorial as well as advertising.

Existing limitations, as we know them for instance from the European Convention on Human Rights, must be interpreted narrowly with regard to the Charter and must not infringe the basic right of press freedom. This is untouchable.

In this context ENPA has the following expectations of the Charter and its interpretation.

- The defence of the fundamental right to press freedom in the framework of the European Charter, should not retreat from the framework established by Article 6, paragraph 2 (TEU). The guarantee of press freedom as a basic right also derives from Article 10 (ECHR) and from the joint constitutional traditions of the Member States.
- A codified basic right to press freedom at a European level should primarily be a right to defence against state or state-tolerated third-party intervention.

- Rerwordings by the Charter must not reduce the current level of press freedom. On the contrary: for the benefit of democracy and the development of the individual this should be recognised as an opportunity to blaze a trail for a more liberal level.

The convention will shortly receive a comprehensive legal opinion on the subject of press freedom at a European level, commissioned by the “Foundation for Democracy and Press Freedom“ and the foundation “Press Freedom”. Both are German institutions.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 2 mai 2000CHARTE 4260/00*CONTRIB 133*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver le texte proposé de la Fédération Humaniste Européenne à l'occasion de l'audition du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française seulement.

Fédération Humaniste Européenne

Voici le texte proposé par notre Fédération dans le cadre de l'audition de ce jeudi 27 avril.

Je vous en souhaite bonne réception

Charte des Droits fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne.

Audition de la société civile du 27 avril 2000 - Parlement Eurpéen - Bruxelles.

Texte proposé par la Fédération Humaniste Européenne/European Humanist Federation.

La Fédération Humaniste Européenne, qui regroupe plus de vingt cinq associations dans seize pays européens, s'inscrit dans la tradition humaniste des Lumières. A ce titre ses membres militent pour le dépassement des nationalismes, pour le respect des droits de l'homme, pour une démarche morale humaniste s'appuyant sur la responsabilité et la solidarité civile et sociale et pour le pluralisme philosophique.

Leur action se fonde sur une approche éthique rationnelle reposant essentiellement sur la libre pensée et la liberté de conscience.

Notre Fédération s'inscrit donc sans réticence dans le projet d'une Europe ouverte et tolérante.

La réflexion qui nous rassemble fait partie d'une démarche pleine de promesses, à condition que celle-ci se fasse dans la cohérence. C'est la raison pour laquelle la FHE réitère son souhait, déjà exprimé lors des auditions dans le cadre de la CIG précédente, de voir l'UE adhérer à la Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme. Celle-ci devrait s'accompagner de la reconnaissance de la juridiction obligatoire de la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme et du droit de présenter des requêtes individuelles. Ce système aurait l'avantage de permettre le contrôle, par un juge externe à l'ordre juridique communautaire, de la compatibilité du droit communautaire avec la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme.

Fidèle à sa tradition, la FHE insiste pour que la Charte sauvegarde, sans ambiguïté, la préséance des droits individuels fondés sur l'affirmation humaniste des libertés fondamentales par rapport à toute autre grille de lecture de la notion de droits de l'homme. A ce titre, la liste des différentes formes de discrimination à l'article 13 du traité d'Amsterdam devrait être étendue afin d'englober celle fondée sur les convictions philosophiques.

Cette protection due à l'individu, qui est - tout compte fait- la minorité la plus minoritaire, s'accompagne de la nécessité de promouvoir la responsabilité citoyenne. Cette notion doit encore être largement renforcée en Europe. C'est la raison pour laquelle nous souhaitons que la Charte soit proclamée au nom des citoyens européens et qu'elle soit ratifiée, dans les différents états, après une large consultation de ces mêmes citoyens.

La Charte doit clairement poser le principe de la non discrimination entre les hommes et les femmes et, en matière de liberté de conscience, il convient de rappeler que celle-ci englobe le droit de changer de religion ou de ne pas en avoir. En matière d'éducation, si les parents ont certes le droit d'élever leurs enfants en fonction de leurs convictions, il n'en reste pas moins que ces enfants doivent pouvoir devenir des adultes autonomes et responsables, capable de formuler leurs propres jugements de valeurs et choix de vie.

Une autre de nos préoccupations est d'éviter que la notion des "Droits de l'Homme" soit détournée de son véritable objet par une interprétation ou une utilisation extensive et abusive. Ce problème se pose, entre autres, dans deux domaines sensibles: celui de l'autonomie de décision en matière de choix de vie et celui de la bioéthique.

Par exemple, il serait inacceptable de voir la Charte interprétée pour limiter la liberté individuelle face à des questions aussi délicates que le droit à une mort digne ou la possibilité pour les femmes d'interrompre une grossesse non désirée. De même, utiliser une Charte des droits fondamentaux pour empêcher les recherches sur l'embryon ou le génome humain ne nous paraîtrait pas plus concevable dans une Europe soucieuse de respecter la diversité des approches en matière d'éthique. Enfin, inclure dans la Charte des dispositions destinées à protéger un concept de "famille" dont la définition ne tiendrait pas compte des récentes évolutions que celui-ci a subi ne manquerait pas de mettre le texte en porte à faux par rapport à la réalité sociologique qui prédomine dans nos pays.

La Charte se doit aussi d'intégrer et de protéger le modèle social européen comme rempart contre l'exclusion. Il conviendrait donc de s'inspirer de la Charte européenne des droits sociaux adoptée par le Conseil de l'Europe. De même, une réflexion s'impose afin que l'adoption de la Charte ne renforce pas la forteresse "Europe" et que ses dispositions en matière de droits sociaux tiennent aussi compte de l'importance que continueront à avoir dans l'avenir les communautés de migrants en fonction des politiques d'asile et d'immigration de l'UE. Ces politiques devraient, selon nous, aller de pair avec une coopération plus active avec les pays tiers, notamment ceux qui sont en voie de développement.

Enfin, et nous l'avons salué, l'Europe qui se construit est une Europe de la diversité culturelle, ethnique, religieuse. Elle se doit donc d'être une aire de tolérance et, mieux encore, de respect et de compréhension mutuelle. La Fédération insiste sur le rôle que la puissance publique doit jouer en cette matière, particulièrement en matière d'enseignement.

Nous considérons que seule la prééminence du civil sur le religieux, de l'intérêt public général sur les aspirations de groupes idéologiques particuliers, seront en mesure d'éviter que la diversité socio-culturelle ne se traduise en une juxtaposition de ghettos indifférents, voire opposés, sinon hostiles, les uns aux autres.

Si l'Union européenne veut être un espace de liberté, de sécurité et de justice, c'est en affirmant, en vertu de la légitimité démocratique, le principe de base de la séparation de l'autorité publique de toute puissance particulière ou influence partisane de quelque nature que ce soit, qu'elle y parviendra le plus sûrement.

Texte présenté par la

Fédération Humaniste Européenne/European Humanist Federation association internationale sans but lucratif de droit belge
CP 237 - Campus de la Plaine ULB
1050 Bruxelles
Tel + 32 2 627 68 90
email cwachtelaer@arcadis.be

Claude Wachtelaer
Secretary General
European Humanist Federation
CP 237 Campus de la Plaine ULB
B - 1050 Bruxelles

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 2 May 2000CHARTE 4262/00*CONTRIB 135*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a submission by the Young European Federalists (JEF) on the occasion of the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

Jeunes Européens Fédéralistes Young European Federalists International Organisation
JEF Place du Luxembourg plein1, B-1050 Bruxelles/Brussel —	JEF European Secretariat Place du Luxembourg plein1 B-1050 Bruxelles/Brussel Tel: +32-2-512.0053 Fax: +32-2-512.6673 e-mail: info@jef-europe.org

THE YOUNG EUROPEAN FEDERALISTS ON THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The Young European Federalists welcome the decision to establish a Charter of the Fundamental Rights of the European Union and stress the following points:

1. The establishment of a Charter of the Fundamental Rights of the European citizens is a crucial achievement and could be the first piece of a real European Constitution. The European Union and the European Communities are still dominated by the economic dimension, the Single European Market and the Monetary Union. Most of the citizens feel the Union as distant, bureaucratic and far from their problems. The establishment of the Charter could mark the start of a new Europe focussed on the citizens and moving forward to a real Political Union. However, the Charter can unfold all its potential only if its creation is soon accompanied by a radical and comprehensive reform of the Union's foundations and institutions, that lead to a true European federal Constitution, to give the Union the capacity to pursue effectively the values and goals that the Charter will solemnly enshrine. It would be very important if the Convention kept such point in front of the member states, specially considering the parallel ongoing process of the Intergovernmental Conference.

2. It is vital that the Charter becomes a legally binding document, integral part of the Treaties, and does not remain a simple Declaration. The European Union has already seen many Fundamental Rights declarations (see for example the European Parliament Declaration from 1989). Many international organisations have issued Declarations and Conventions of Rights, without having the powers to enforce them. What the Union needs now is a visible and transparent Bill of Rights of the European Citizens which gives the people awareness of their rights and access to the European Court of Justice for their enforcement. A binding Charter - by defining clearly the values, principle and goals at the heart of the Union - would also enhance the legitimisation and credibility of the future work and actions of the all Union's institutions. This is even more important in view of the enlargement of the Union to new members.

3. The Charter should acknowledge and enshrine the unique features of the European model. A mixture and balance of individual freedom, in all its aspects, and solidarity and welfare make the European model unique. This should be reflected in the Charter. Moreover, European unification marks the historic achievement of European pacification by the creation of a Union among nations and peoples that fought each other for centuries: the inclusion in the Charter of the individual's "right to peace", and the Union's obligation to defend it, would symbolise perfectly such novelty of the European experiment. An other important way to transform "empty rights" in the Treaties into tangible rights would be to guarantee the right of direct access by individuals to the European Court of Justice, and to extend the civil rights to all residents of the EU, regardless of their citizenship.

4. The Charter should acknowledge and enshrine the achievements of the European political tradition paving the way for a clarification of what the Union is and how it works. Centuries of political fights in Europe have established the basic principle that "sovereignty lies in the people" and that of the division of powers. These historic achievements at national level are still opposed in the European Union, which is therefore not yet a democracy. The "European citizenship" has been created by the Amsterdam Treaty, but it remains an empty word as long as the citizens are deprived of the fundamental right of

5. citizenship: the power to decide the Government and the policies of the Union. The institutions of the Union are the embryo of a real supranational democracy, but the European Parliament is still denied full legislative powers, the Council combines legislative and executive powers ineffectively, the Commission is not a real Government - all this makes the Union still undemocratic and ineffective. If the Charter reaffirmed the basic principle of “people sovereignty” in the Union, this could pave the way for a comprehensive redefinition of what the Union is and how it works, and thus for a real European democracy.

6. The Convention process to draft the Charter is very innovative and should be extended to the reform of the Union’s institutions. So far, the building of Europe has left aside the citizens and their elected representatives in the European Parliament, it has been the exclusive domain of the representatives of the member states governments. The involvement of the European Parliament and the national parliaments, as well as the dialogue with the civil society, makes the mechanism to elaborate the Charter profoundly innovative and more democratic than any other procedure experienced at European level so far. This method should replace the elaboration of fundamental texts of the European Union by Intergovernmental Conferences. The Convention could make its voice heard on this point already during the current Intergovernmental Conference.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 4 May 2000CHARTE 4263/00*CONTRIB 136*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe on the occasion of the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French, German and English languages.

PROJECT FOR THE CHART OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

Contribution of the Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe

Paris March 7th 2000

Fédération des Associations Familiales Catholiques en Europe
Föderation der Katholischen Familienverbände in Europa
Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe

Secrétariat - Federführender Verband - Associatiocharge
Confédération Nationale des Associations Familiales Catholiques
28, place Saint-Georges – F 75009 PARIS

Tél. : (0033) 01 48 78 81 61 Fax : (0033) 01 48 78 07 35 E.mail : afcfrance@compuserve.com

Georges Nothelfer - Secrétaire Général

Tél/Fax : (0033) 04 94 33 44 71 E.mail : fed.afc.europe@wanadoo.fr

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe groups numerous national family associations originating in divers European countries. It represents 5.5 million European families, or about 25 million persons.

Strengthened by this mandate and conscious of the importance of the future European Chart of Fundamental Rights, we intend to submit the fruit of our experience to your reflection.

EXPOSURE OF MOTIVES

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe supports the reflection being currently devoted by the European Union to the elaboration of a Chart of Fundamental Rights conform to the conclusions formulated by the presidency at the European Councils of Cologne and Tampere. However, it is not the object of the FCFAE to take a stand on the constraining character of this Chart or on the rapport of jurisdictions between the European Court of Justice and the European Court on Human Rights.

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe,

Rejoicing that fundamental rights have benefited from constant attention on behalf of the European Court of Justice as well as the Council of Ministers,

Concerned the European fundamental rights remain faithful to their philosophical and religious foundation, notably by a just understanding of the dignity of the human person and his life environment,

Considering the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaimed by the United Nations' General Assembly of December 10th 1948, in particular Article 1 (All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.)

Considering the European Convention of the Protection of the Human Rights and Fundamental Liberties, adopted by the Council of Europe on the 4th of November 1950, and in particular its 8th and 12th articles,

Considering the revised European Social Chart, adopted by the Council of Europe on the 3rd of May 1996, and in particular its 16th, 17th and 19th articles,

Considering the principle of subsidiarity of citizens, families, cities, regions, nations and States, which implies the respect of the national and the regional laws of the member countries and the candidate countries,

Considering that there are fundamental duties which correspond to fundamental rights

Reminding all that the family, the community of the life of a man and a woman, founded upon the stable public engagement of marriage and open to life, structures society and assures its cohesion, and that it is the only social cell capable of transmitting life, all the while offering to the child an adapted educative milieu, and that the family consequently merits having its' legal recognition, protection and promotion reinforced within the fundamental rights .

Considering that child's rights, and notably as they are guaranteed on the international level by the United Nations Convention on Child's Rights of 1989, are an integral part of fundamental rights, and in particular in its preamble and its 5th and 18th article,

Reiterating that the first right of a child is that of a "protected childhood" within the heart of a stable family and that law must favor this protection and stability,

Concerned that the contribution of families to the economic activity of the European Union, and that their importance as a factor of growth as investors, educators and consumers be justly appreciated,

Desirous that particular attention be accorded to the educative tasks accomplished within the heart of the family, and that the family's irreplaceable value on the human, social, cultural, as well as economic levels, be taken into account,

The Federation of Catholic Family Associations in Europe insists that the following rights be guaranteed within the framework of the Chart of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

RESOLUTION

The first human right is the right of life. The respect of human life extends to all ages of life, whatever may be the state of health of the person.

The right to contract a marriage, as the union of a man and a woman, and the right to found a family must be recognized, if the future spouses have reached the required age and unite the conditions demanded in this case by national laws, to the extent that these laws do not conflict with the fundamental principles established in the present chart. The marriage can only be contracted with the free and full consent of the future spouses.

The family is the natural and fundamental element of society. It has the right to specific economic, juridical and social protection, notably by the means of social and family benefits, by fiscal measures, by the encouragement to build lodgings adapted to the needs of families, by help given to young households, and by all and any other appropriate measures.

Every child has the right to be raised by its natural or adoptive parents. The European Union will respect the right of parents to assure the education of their children conform to their religious and philosophical convictions.

Migrant families have the right to the same social protection as that accorded to other families.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 4 mai 2000CHARTE 4264/00*CONTRIB 137*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint l'introduction de la Conférence des Régions Périphériques maritimes d'Europe (CRPM) faite à l'occasion de l'audition du 27 avril 2000.¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française seulement.

CONTRIBUTION DE LA CRPM A L'ELABORATION DU PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPEENNE

Nous voudrions tout d'abord vivement remercier la convention de permettre à la CRPM, organisation représentant 126 régions d'Europe, de s'exprimer sur une question aussi majeure pour nos citoyens.

Le respect des droits fondamentaux de nos citoyens est l'un des principes fondateurs de l'Union européenne et la condition essentielle pour sa légitimité, comme l'affirme à juste titre le Traité. Bien qu'un encadrement juridique contraignant existe déjà en partie, nous considérons toutefois que la décision du Conseil européen de Cologne des 3 et 4 juin 1999, d'établir une Charte des Droits Fondamentaux, est essentielle afin de renforcer leur visibilité et leur portée auprès des citoyens de l'Union.

Dans cette configuration, la CRPM souhaiterait aujourd'hui même rappeler deux grands principes qui lui semblent indispensables d'être érigés à terme comme des droits fondamentaux.

Le premier principe est celui de la relation essentielle entre la gouvernance de l'Union européenne et la mobilisation des citoyens européens au travers de la reconnaissance et de l'implication du niveau régional. Rapprocher l'Europe des citoyens, est en effet un des enjeux majeurs de l'avenir de la construction européenne et l'une des garanties de sa crédibilité. Prendre en considération dans l'élaboration de cette Charte des droits fondamentaux, les droits économiques et sociaux des citoyens, est à juste titre un élément essentiel et indispensable. Nous considérons toutefois qu'il est également important de ne pas oublier que l'Union est aussi fondée sur le principe intangible de démocratie, reconnu sous la forme de la démocratie représentative, c'est à dire du droit des citoyens de participer à la gestion des affaires publiques par l'intermédiaire de leurs représentants élus. Sans vouloir rentrer ici dans le débat sur le déficit de démocratie, nous considérons que le droit d'expression des citoyens dans la définition et la mise en œuvre des orientations stratégiques et des politiques de l'Union passe nécessairement par la reconnaissance du « fait » régional, ou d'une plus grande implication des échelons infra-étatiques à la gouvernance de l'Union. Echelons qui représentent aujourd'hui au mieux les préoccupations de nos citoyens et qui constituent leur plus proche capacité d'expression. Cette reconnaissance d'un plus grand rôle des régions comme partenaires à part entière de la construction européenne est seule à même de redonner aux citoyens un véritable « droit d'expression » sur les orientations générales de l'avenir de l'Union et surtout sur les politiques ayant un impact territorial, et qui, de ce fait, les concernent directement.

Le second principe est intimement lié au précédent. Il s'agit de la reconnaissance de l'objectif de cohésion territoriale au même titre que celui de la cohésion économique et sociale et ce si nous voulons éviter la construction d'une Europe à deux voire trois vitesses avec tous les risques de rejet et d'éclatement que celle-ci impliquerait. Cette dimension territoriale est un autre élément que la Charte devrait prendre en considération. La tendance actuelle est en effet à la concentration des activités économiques dans les régions fortes de l'Union, autour de grandes capitales, ce qui se traduit par de fortes disparités de développement entre nos territoires. Les principaux écarts de compétitivité subsistent, voire se creusent en termes d'accessibilité aux marchés, d'innovation, de formation et d'adaptation des systèmes productifs. Cette évolution ne peut perdurer d'autant plus que l'élargissement risque encore d'accroître les écarts de développement. Nos citoyens pourront-ils adhérer au projet européen tant qu'il subsiste un réel déséquilibre de développement entre leurs territoires, tant que la croissance et le développement de l'économie européenne ne profitent pas à tous et n'offrent pas à chacun l'opportunité de s'épanouir dans son espace culturel et social de référence ? Le territoire ne doit pas, à notre sens, rester uniquement un espace de référence politique mais devenir également un espace capable d'offrir à ses habitants toutes les opportunités de développement économique. Or la cohésion territoriale, c'est à dire le développement harmonieux et équilibré du territoire européen, trop absente du débat européen, doit devenir un complément indispensable à la cohésion économique et sociale qui figure déjà à l'article 2 du Traité. Nous considérons ainsi qu'il est fondamental de donner à chaque citoyen européen, quel que soit le territoire où il réside, les mêmes opportunités de développement, d'accès à l'éducation, à la formation, au savoir etc. Il s'agit d'un véritable droit dont doivent jouir nos concitoyens et que la Charte devrait, par conséquent, prendre légitimement en considération.

Comme vous pouvez le constater, il s'agit de deux principes de base qui nous semblent devoir être absolument affirmés et qui donc à ce titre trouvent toute leur place au sein d'une telle charte. De toute évidence, leur prise en compte et leur affirmation constituent aux yeux de la CRPM une condition indispensable pour une bonne poursuite du processus d'intégration européenne.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 4 May 2000CHARTE 4265/00*CONTRIB 138*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution with specific reference to the revised European Social Charter by Mr. Klaus Lörcher. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

Contribution to the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

(CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2)

FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS with specific reference
to the
REVISED EUROPEAN SOCIAL CHARTER

by Klaus Lörcher

March 2000

Table of Contents

PART I : FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS CONTAINED IN THE REVISED EUROPEAN SOCIAL CHARTER AND REFERRED TO IN THE LIST (CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2).....	4
PART II : FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS CONTAINED IN THE REVISED EUROPEAN SOCIAL CHARTER AND NOT REFERRED TO IN THE LIST (CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2)	19

Introduction

This contribution to the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is aimed at facilitating the work on the formulation of the fundamental social rights. Its basis is the Presidency note (CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2) containing the 'list of rights'.

Following the principal line of the Presidency note the contribution is mainly based on the Revised European Social Charter (ESC) of the Council of Europe. In guaranteeing the social rights the ESC is the indivisible counterpart of the European Convention on Human Rights.

The first part of the contribution is devoted to the comparison of the short description in the 'list of rights' with wording of the ESC of the respective rights.

Furthermore, the contribution aims at showing that a significant number of rights contained in the Revised European Social Charter have not been incorporated in the 'list of rights' as yet. Thus, the second part of this paper.

In general, these remarks could be seen in the context of the references in CHARTE 4124/00 (CONTRIB 19) to the Revised European Social Charter and should be seen as argument to prevent any further progress in respect of fundamental social rights.

PART I: FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS CONTAINED IN THE REVISED EUROPEAN SOCIAL CHARTER AND REFERRED TO IN THE LIST (CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2)

This table aims at comparing the list of economic and social rights contained in CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2 (the list) with the wording² of the

- Revised European Social Charter (ESC)³ and the
- Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.).

Besides the references in the list to the - Treaty establishing the European Community (EC) and

- the Declaration of fundamental rights and freedoms adopted by the European Parliament on 12 April 1989 (EP Decl.)

it further adds short references to

- secondary legislation in the social policy field by EC Directives⁴ (EC Dir.) and
- ILO Conventions⁵ (ILO Conv.) relevant to the rights in question.

² The text in 'Arial' is quoting CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2; all additions to this text appear in 'Times New Roman'.

³ The text of the provisions of the ESC does not contain the horizontal provisions in Part V of the ESC and in the Appendix.

⁴ These references are not exhaustive; in particular all the individual directives on safety and health are not mentioned.

⁵ These references are not exhaustive; in general they stick to the most recent Convention. Furthermore, Recommendations are not mentioned either.

COMPARATIVE TABLE FOR SOCIAL RIGHTS (CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2)

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
			Article¹	With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right ..., the Parties undertake ²	Point		Article	Article		No.
(13) ³	Right to education and vocational training, freedom of choice of method of education ⁴		10	[see No. 7]	15	[see No. 7]	150	16
(14)	Freedom of association and assembly, including freedom to demonstrate, freedom to form trade unions and freedom to join a political party		5	that national law shall not be such as to impair, nor shall it be so applied as to impair, this freedom. The extent to which the guarantees provided for in this article shall apply to the police shall be determined by national laws or regulations. The principle governing the application to the members of the armed forces of these guarantees and the extent to which they shall apply to persons in this category shall equally be determined by national laws or regulations.	11	Employers and workers of the European Community shall have the right of association in order to constitute professional organizations or trade unions of their choice for the defence of their economic and social interests. Every employer and every worker shall have the freedom to join or not to join such organizations without any personal or occupational damage being thereby suffered by him.				87

¹ The figures in []-brackets refer to the paragraphs of the articles of the ESC

² This is the introductory part of every article of the European Social Charter, it has to be complemented by the right in question.

³ Nos. (13) and (14) refer to the first part of rights in the list of CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2; the following numbers refer to the part 'Economic and social right/objectives'

⁴ For the new formulation for the "Right to education" see CHARTE 4149/00, CONVENT 13, Art. 16 (vocational training is not mentioned)

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
1.	Right to work	Objective of a high level of employment,	1 [1]	to accept as one of their primary aims and responsibilities the achievement and maintenance of as high and stable a level of employment as possible, with a view to the attainment of full employment;			127			122 freedom to choose and engage in an occupation	1 [2]	to protect effectively the right of the worker to earn his living in an occupation freely entered upon;	4	Every individual shall be free to choose and engage in an occupation according to the regulations governing each occupation.
2.	Right to safety and health at work	right or political objective	3 [1]	to formulate, implement and periodically review a coherent national policy on occupational safety, occupational health and the working environment. The primary aim of this policy shall be to improve occupational safety and health and to prevent accidents and injury to health arising out of, linked with or occurring in the course of work, particularly by minimising the causes of hazards inherent in the working environment;	19	Every worker must enjoy satisfactory health and safety conditions. Appropriate measures must be taken in order to achieve further harmonisation of conditions in this area while maintaining the improvements made. These measures shall take account, in particular, of the need for training, information, consultation and balanced participation of workers as regards the risk incurred and the steps to eliminate or reduce them. The provisions regarding implementation of internal market shall help to ensure such protection.	140	13	89/ 391 and a large number of individual directives	155 and a large number of further Conventions
			3 [2]	to issue safety and health regulations;
			3 [3]	to provide for the enforcement of such regulations by measures of supervision;
			3 [4]	to promote the progressive development of occupational health services for all workers with essentially preventive and advisory functions.

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
3.	Fair remuneration and minimum wage	Distinguish what falls under a right and what constitutes a political right	4 ⁵ [1]	to recognise the right of workers to a remuneration such as will give them and their families a decent standard of living;	5 ⁶	All employment shall be fairly remunerated. To this end, in accordance with arrangements applying in each country: (i) workers shall be assured of an equitable wage, i.e. a wage sufficient to enable them to have a decent standard of living; (ii) workers subject to terms of employment other than an open-ended full-time contract shall benefit from an equitable reference wage;		13
			4 [5]	to permit deductions from wages only under conditions and to the extent prescribed by national laws or regulations or fixed by collective agreements or arbitration awards.		(iii) wages may be withheld, seized or transferred only in accordance with national law; such provisions should entail measures enabling the worker concerned to continue to enjoy the necessary means of subsistence for him or herself and his or her family.				95
4.	Right to weekly rest period and	right or political objective	2 [5]	to ensure a weekly rest period which shall, as far as possible, coincide with the day recognised by tradition or custom in the country or region concerned as a day of rest;	8	Every worker of the European Community shall have a right to a weekly rest period and to annual paid leave, the duration of which must be progressively harmonized in accordance with national practices.			93/104 Art. 5	14, 106
	paid holidays		2 [3]	to provide for a minimum of four weeks' annual holiday with pay;					93/104 Art. 7	132

⁵ Last part of Art. 4 ESC: „The exercise of these rights shall be achieved by freely concluded collective agreements, by statutory wage-fixing machinery, or by other means appropriate to national conditions.“

⁶ Although Point 4 of the Community Charter is mentioned here, it is obvious that Point 5 was meant (see the correct reference in No. 1 to Point 4 of the Community Charter).

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
5.	Pensions ⁷	right or political objective	23	to adopt or encourage, either directly or in co-operation with public or private organisations, appropriate measures designed in particular: to enable elderly persons to remain full members of society for as long as possible, by means of: a adequate resources enabling them to lead a decent life and play an active part in public, social and cultural life;	24 and	According to the arrangements applying in each country: 24. Every worker of the European Community must, at the time of retirement, be able to enjoy resources affording him or her a decent standard of living.
				to enable elderly persons to choose their life-style freely and to lead independent lives in their familiar surroundings for as long as they wish and are able, by means of: b the health care and the services necessitated by their state;	25	25. Any person who has reached retirement age but who is not entitled to a pension or who does not have other means of subsistence, must be entitled to sufficient resources and to medical and social assistance specifically suited to his needs.
6.	Free access to placement services	right or political objective	1 [3]	To establish or maintain free employment services for all workers;	6	Every individual must be able to have access to public placement services free of charge.				96
7.	Vocational guidance and continuing training	right or political objective	9 and ...	9. to provide or promote, as necessary, a service which will assist all persons, including the handicapped, to solve problems related to occupational choice and progress, with due regard to the individual's characteristics and their relation to occupational opportunity: this assistance should be available free of charge, both to young persons, including schoolchildren, and to adults.	15	Every worker of the European Community must be able to have access to vocational training and to benefit therefrom throughout his working life. In the conditions governing access to such training there may be no discrimination on grounds of nationality. The competent public authorities, undertakings or the two sides of industry, each within their own sphere of				142

⁷ The word 'pension' might not be correct in this context, since this area is linked to 'social security' (see No. 12), whereas the principal area here seems to be the general protection of the elderly people in respect of their financial resources

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv competence, should set up continuing and permanent training systems enabling every person to undergo retraining more especially through leave for training purposes, to improve his skills or to acquire new skills, particularly in the light of technical developments.
			10 [1]	To provide or promote, as necessary, the technical and vocational training of all persons, including the handicapped, in consultation with employers' and workers' organisations, and to grant facilities for access to higher technical and university education, based solely on individual aptitude;
			10 [2]	To provide or promote a system of apprenticeship and other systematic arrangements for training young boys and girls in their various employments;
			10 [3]	to provide or promote, as necessary: a adequate and readily available training facilities for adult workers; b special facilities for the retraining of adult workers needed as a result of technological development or new trends in employment;
			10 [4]	to provide or promote, as necessary, special measures for the retraining and reintegration of the long-term unemployed;
			10 [5]	to encourage the full utilisation of the facilities provided by appropriate measures such as: a reducing or abolishing any fees or charges;

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
				b granting financial assistance in appropriate cases; c including in the normal working hours time spent on supplementary training taken by the worker, at the request of his employer, during employment; d ensuring, through adequate supervision, in consultation with the employers' and workers' organisations, the efficiency of apprenticeship and other training arrangements for young workers, and the adequate protection of young workers generally.
8.	Workers' right to information and consultation		6 [1]	to promote joint consultation between workers and employers; ⁸	17	Information, consultation and participation for workers must be developed along appropriate lines, taking account of the practices in force in the various Member States. This shall apply especially in companies having establishments in two or more Members States of the European Community.	137	14	Many articles in individual directives; 94/45 ⁹
9.	Right to collective bargaining		6 [2]	to promote, where necessary and appropriate, machinery for voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organisations and workers' organisations, with a view to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment by means of collective agreements;	12	Employers or employers' organizations, on the one hand, and workers' organizations, on the other, shall have to right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements under the condition laid down by national legislation and practice. The dialogue between the two sides of industry at European level which must be developed, may, if the parties deem it desirable, result in contractual relations at	137			98

⁸ The reference should not only contain Art. 6 para. 1 ESC, but also Art. 21 ESC ('The right to information and consultation') and Art. 22 ESC ('The right to take part in the determination and improvement of working conditions and working environment')

⁹ European Works Council Directive

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv inter-occupational and sectoral level.
10.	Right to strike		6 [4]	and recognise: the right of workers and employers to collective action in cases of conflicts of interest, including the right to strike, subject to obligations that might arise out of collective agreements previously entered into.	13	The right to resort to collective action in the event of a conflict of interests shall include the right to strike, subject to obligations arising under national regulations and collective agreements. In order to facilitate the settlement of industrial disputes the establishment and utilization at the appropriate levels of conciliation, mediation and arbitration procedures should be encouraged in accordance with national practice. ¹⁰		14		¹¹
11.	Right to health	right or political objective	11	either directly or in co-operation with public or private organisations, to take appropriate measures designed inter alia :	19	[see under No. 2]	152	15
			11 [1]	to remove as far as possible the causes of ill-health;
			11 [2]	to provide advisory and educational facilities for the promotion of health and the encouragement of individual responsibility in matters of health;
			11 [3]	to prevent as far as possible epidemic, endemic and other diseases, as well as accidents.
12.	Right to social security, right	right or political	{12}	to establish or maintain a system of social security;	10	According to the arrangement applying in		15		102, 121,

¹⁰ see in this respect ESC Art. 6 para. 3: to promote the establishment and use of appropriate machinery for conciliation and voluntary arbitration for the settlement of labour disputes; (which has not been referred to expressly in the list)

¹¹ Case-law of the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations (CEACR) and Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA)

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
	to social and medical assistance	objective	¹² [1]			each country: 10. Every worker of the European Community shall have a right to adequate social protection and shall, whatever his status and whatever the size of the undertaking in which he is employed, enjoy an adequate level of social security benefits. Persons who have been unable to enter or re-enter the labour market and have no means of subsistence must be able to receive sufficient resources and social assistance in keeping with their particular situation.				128, 130, 168.
			{12} [2]	to maintain the social security system at a satisfactory level at least equal to that necessary for the ratification of the European Code of Social Security;
			{12} [3]	to endeavour to raise progressively the system of social security to a higher level;
			{12} [4]	to take steps, by the conclusion of appropriate bilateral and multilateral agreements or by other means, and subject to the conditions laid down in such agreements, in order to ensure: a equal treatment with their own nationals of the nationals of other Parties in respect of social security rights, including the retention of benefits arising out of social security legislation, whatever movements the

¹² The list is not referring to Art. 12 ESC (that is why Art. 12 only appears in { }-brackets); but the reference to Point 10 of the Community Charter makes it perfectly clear that this is the content of the 'right to social security' (Art. 13 ESC, which is referred to alone only deals with the field of the 'right to social and medical assistance').

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv persons protected may undertake between the territories of the Parties; b the granting, maintenance and resumption of social security rights by such means as the accumulation of insurance or employment periods completed under the legislation of each of the Parties.
			13 [1]	to ensure that any person who is without adequate resources and who is unable to secure such resources either by his own efforts or from other sources, in particular by benefits under a social security scheme, be granted adequate assistance, and, in case of sickness, the care necessitated by his condition;
			13 [2]	to ensure that persons receiving such assistance shall not, for that reason, suffer from a diminution of their political or social rights;
			13 [3]	to provide that everyone may receive by appropriate public or private services such advice and personal help as may be required to prevent, to remove, or to alleviate personal or family want;
			13 [4]	to apply the provisions referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this article on an equal footing with their nationals to nationals of other Parties lawfully within their territories, in accordance with their obligations under the European Convention on Social and Medical

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
				Assistance, signed at Paris on 11 December 1953.
13.	Protection of maternity		8 [1]	to provide either by paid leave, by adequate social security benefits or by benefits from public funds for employed women to take leave before and after childbirth up to a total of at least fourteen weeks;					92/85 Art. 8	103, ¹³
			8 [2]	to consider it as unlawful for an employer to give a woman notice of dismissal during the period from the time she notifies her employer that she is pregnant until the end of her maternity leave, or to give her notice of dismissal at such a time that the notice would expire during such a period;					92/85 Art. 10	158 Art. 5 lit. e
			8 [3]	to provide that mothers who are nursing their infants shall be entitled to sufficient time off for this purpose;					-
			8 [4]	to regulate the employment in night work of pregnant women, women who have recently given birth and women nursing their infants;					92/85 Art. 7	89 with Prot.
			8 [5]	to prohibit the employment of pregnant women, women who have recently given birth or who are nursing their infants in underground mining and all other work which is unsuitable by reason of its dangerous, unhealthy or arduous nature and to take appropriate measures to protect the employment rights of these women.					92/85 Art. 6	45
14.	Protection of children and		{7} ¹⁴ [1]	to provide that the minimum age of admission to employment shall be 15 years, subject to exceptions	20 seq.	20. Without prejudice to such rules as may be more favourable to young people, in			94/33 Art. 4	138

¹³ The International Labour Conference 2000 will most probably adopt a revised Convention

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
	young persons			for children employed in prescribed light work without harm to their health, morals or education;		particular those ensuring their preparation for work through vocational training, and subject to derogations limited to certain light work, the minimum employment age must not be lower than the minimum school-leaving age and, in any case, not lower than 15 years.
			{7} [2]	To provide that the minimum age of admission to employment shall be 18 years with respect to prescribed occupations regarded as dangerous or unhealthy;					94/33 Art. 7
			{7} [3]	To provide that persons who are still subject to compulsory education shall not be employed in such work as would deprive them of the full benefit of their education;
			{7} [5]	To recognise the right of young workers and apprentices to a fair wage or other appropriate allowances;		21. Young people who are in gainful employment must receive equitable remuneration in accordance with national practice.			-
						22. Appropriate measures must be taken to adjust labour regulations applicable to young workers so that their specific development and vocational training and access to employment needs are met.
			{7} [4] and	4. to provide that the working hours of persons under 18 years of age shall be limited in accordance with the needs of their development, and particularly with their		The duration of work must, in particular be limited - without it being possible to circumvent this limitation through recourse			94/33 Art. 8	79

¹⁴ The list is not referring to Art. 7 ESC (that is why Art. 7 only appears in []-brackets); but the reference to Point 20 seq. Of the Community Charter makes it perfectly clear that this is the content of the 'protection of children and young workers' (Art. 17 ESC, which is referred to instead deals with the wider field of 'the right of children and young persons to social, legal and economic protection'.

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
			[8]	need for vocational training; 8. to provide that persons under 18 years of age shall not be employed in night work with the exception of certain occupations provided for by national laws or regulations;		to overtime - and night work prohibited in case of workers under 18 years of age, save in the case of certain jobs laid down in national legislation or regulations.			and 9
			{7} [6]	To provide that the time spent by young persons in vocational training during the normal working hours with the consent of the employer shall be treated as forming part of the working day;		23. Following the end of compulsory education, young people must be entitled to receive initial vocational training of a sufficient duration to enable them to adapt to the requirements of their future working life; for young workers, such training should take place during working hours.			94/33 Art. 8 para. 3
			{7} [9]	to provide that persons under 18 years of age employed in occupations prescribed by national laws or regulations shall be subject to regular medical control;						77 and 78
			17	either directly or in co-operation with public and private organisations, to take all appropriate and necessary measures designed: a to ensure that children and young persons, taking account of the rights and duties of their parents, have the care, the assistance, the education and the training they need, in particular by providing for the establishment or maintenance of institutions and services sufficient and adequate for this purpose; b to protect children and young persons against negligence, violence or exploitation; c to provide protection and special aid from the state for children and young persons temporarily or definitively deprived of their family's support;

No.	Description	right or objective	ESC	(Revised) European Social Charter (ESC)	Com Ch.	Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Com.Ch.)	EC	EP Decl	EC Dir.	ILO Conv
			17 [2]	to provide to children and young persons a free primary and secondary education as well as to encourage regular attendance at schools.
15.	Integration of disabled persons		15 [1]	to take the necessary measures to provide persons with disabilities with guidance, education and vocational training in the framework of general schemes wherever possible or, where this is not possible, through specialised bodies, public or private;	26	All disabled persons, whatever the origin and nature of their disablement, must be entitled to additional concrete measures aimed at improving their social and professional integration. These measures must concern, in particular, according to the capacities of the beneficiaries, vocational training ...				159
			15 [2]	to promote their access to employment through all measures tending to encourage employers to hire and keep in employment persons with disabilities in the ordinary working environment and to adjust the working conditions to the needs of the disabled or, where this is not possible by reason of the disability, by arranging for or creating sheltered employment according to the level of disability. In certain cases, such measures may require recourse to specialised placement and support services;		... ergonomics ,...
			15 [3]	to promote their full social integration and participation in the life of the community in particular through measures, including technical aids, aiming to overcome barriers to communication and mobility and enabling access to transport, housing, cultural activities and leisure.		... accessibility, mobility, means of transport and housing.

I. PART II: FUNDAMENTAL SOCIAL RIGHTS CONTAINED IN THE REVISED EUROPEAN SOCIAL CHARTER AND NOT REFERRED TO IN THE LIST (CHARTE 4112/2/00 REV 2)

The following compilation is based on Part II of the Revised European Social Charter. It contains all substantive articles. Only those provisions which have been taken account of in the 'list of rights' have been taken off, instead one will find a special reference to the relevant number in Part I "[See No. in the list in Part I]".

Many of these major deficiencies are even less understandable, since the rights are already recognised not only in the Revised European Social Charter but also by EC Directives and/or ILO Conventions.

Rights¹	ESC provisions	EC Directives	ILO Conventions No.
Information on essential aspects of the contract	Art. 2 para. 6	91/533
Protection in case of night work	Art. 2 para.7	93/104 Art. 8 seq.	171
Period of notice for termination of employment	Art. 4 para. 4		158
Migrant Workers	Art. 18 and 19		97 and 143
Termination of employment	Art. 24		158
Protection of workers' claims in the event of the insolvency of their employer	Art 25	80/987
Workers with family responsibilities	Art. 27		156
Workers' representatives protection in the undertaking and facilities to be accorded to them	Art. 28		135
Information and consultation in collective redundancy procedures	Art. 29	75/129	158

Some 'new' provisions remain. The main elements should also be taken into account when formulating fundamental social rights in the new perspective of the European Union and European Community, which is also standing for these rights²:

- right to dignity at work (Art. 26 ESC)

¹ Taken from the Revised European Social Charter in numerical order

² be it be Recommendations (dignity at work) or by programmes (poverty and social exclusion).

- poverty and social exclusion (Art. 30 ESC)
- right to housing (Art. 31).

N.B.

Although the following provisions also have not been taken account of in the list there seem to be specific reasons

Content	Provisions of the ESC	Possible Reasons
Equality of men and women	Art. 4 par. 3 and Art. 20 ESC	New Art. 141 EC
Consultation and contribution	Art. 21 and 22 ESC	See No. 8 in Part I

EUROPEAN SOCIAL CHARTER

(Revised)
Strasbourg, 3.V.1996
ETS No. 163

Part II

Article 1 - The right to work

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to work, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 1 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 1 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 1 in the list in Part I]
4. to provide or promote appropriate vocational guidance, training and rehabilitation.³

Article 2 - The right to just conditions of work

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to just conditions of work, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 4 in the list in Part I]
2. to provide for public holidays with pay;
3. [See No. 4 in the list in Part I]
4. to eliminate risks in inherently dangerous or unhealthy occupations, and where it has not yet been possible to eliminate or reduce sufficiently these risks, to provide for either a reduction of working hours or additional paid holidays for workers engaged in such occupations;
5. to ensure a weekly rest period which shall, as far as possible, coincide with the day recognised by tradition or custom in the country or region concerned as a day of rest;
6. to ensure that workers are informed in written form, as soon as possible, and in any event not later than two months after the date of commencing their employment, of the essential aspects of the contract or employment relationship;
7. to ensure that workers performing night work benefit from measures which take account of the special nature of the work.

Article 3 - The right to safe and healthy working conditions

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to safe and healthy working conditions, the Parties undertake, in consultation with employers' and

³ Although this provision has not been referred to expressly it could be regarded to be covered by No. 7 of the list in Part I workers' organisations:

1. [See No. 2 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 2 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 2 in the list in Part I]
4. [See No. 2 in the list in Part I]

Article 4 - The right to a fair remuneration

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to a fair remuneration, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 3 in the list in Part I]
2. to recognise the right of workers to an increased rate of remuneration for overtime work, subject to exceptions in particular cases;
3. to recognise the right of men and women workers to equal pay for work of equal value;
4. to recognise the right of all workers to a reasonable period of notice for termination of employment;
5. [See No. 3 in the list in Part I].

The exercise of these rights shall be achieved by freely concluded collective agreements, by statutory wage-fixing machinery, or by other means appropriate to national conditions.

Article 5 - The right to organise

With a view to ensuring or promoting the freedom of workers and employers to form local, national or international organisations for the protection of their economic and social interests and to join those organisations, the Parties undertake

[See No. (13) in the list in Part I]

Article 6 - The right to bargain collectively

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to bargain collectively, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 8 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 9 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 10 in the list in Part I]

and

4. [See No. 10 in the list in Part I]

Article 7 - The right of children and young persons to protection

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of children and young persons to protection, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
4. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
5. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
6. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
7. to provide that employed persons of under 18 years of age shall be entitled to a minimum of four weeks' annual holiday with pay;⁴
8. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
9. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
10. to ensure special protection against physical and moral dangers to which children and young persons are exposed, and particularly against those resulting directly or indirectly from their work.

Article 8 - The right of employed women to protection of maternity

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of employed women to the protection of maternity, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 13 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 13 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 13 in the list in Part I]
4. [See No. 13 in the list in Part I]
5. [See No. 13 in the list in Part I]

Article 9 - The right to vocational guidance

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to vocational guidance, the Parties undertake

[See No. 7 in the list in Part I]

Article 10 - The right to vocational training

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to vocational training, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 7 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 7 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 7 in the list in Part I]

⁴ Since the general provision on paid leave has been included [see No. 4 in the list in Part I] and since there is no higher standard required for young persons, this provision seems to be covered by the list.

4. [See No. 7 in the list in Part I]

Article 11 - The right to protection of health

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to protection of health, the Parties undertake, either directly or in co-operation with public or private organisations, to take appropriate measures designed inter alia:

1. [See No. 11 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 11 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 11 in the list in Part I]

Article 12 - The right to social security

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to social security, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]
4. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]

Article 13 - The right to social and medical assistance

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to social and medical assistance, the Parties undertake:

1. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]
4. [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]

Article 14 - The right to benefit from social welfare services

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to benefit from social welfare services, the Parties undertake:

1. to promote or provide services which, by using methods of social work, would contribute to the welfare and development of both individuals and groups in the community, and to their adjustment to the social environment;
2. to encourage the participation of individuals and voluntary or other organisations in the establishment and maintenance of such services.

Article 15 - The right of persons with disabilities to independence, social integration and participation in the life of the community

With a view to ensuring to persons with disabilities, irrespective of age and the nature and origin of their disabilities, the effective exercise of the right to independence, social integration and participation in the life of the community, the Parties undertake, in particular:

1. [See No. 15 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 15 in the list in Part I]
3. [See No. 15 in the list in Part I]

Article 16 - The right of the family to social, legal and economic protection

With a view to ensuring the necessary conditions for the full development of the family, which is a fundamental unit of society, the Parties undertake to promote the economic, legal and social protection of family life by such means as social and family benefits, fiscal arrangements, provision of family housing, benefits for the newly married and other appropriate means.

Article 17 - The right of children and young persons to social, legal and economic protection

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of children and young persons to grow up in an environment which encourages the full development of their personality and of their physical and mental capacities, the Parties undertake,

1. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]
2. [See No. 14 in the list in Part I]

Article 18 - The right to engage in a gainful occupation in the territory of other Parties

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to engage in a gainful occupation in the territory of any other Party, the Parties undertake:

1. to apply existing regulations in a spirit of liberality;
2. to simplify existing formalities and to reduce or abolish chancery dues and other charges payable by foreign workers or their employers;
3. to liberalise, individually or collectively, regulations governing the employment of foreign workers;

and recognise:

4. the right of their nationals to leave the country to engage in a gainful occupation in the territories of the other Parties.

Article 19 - The right of migrant workers and their families to protection and assistance

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of migrant workers and their families to protection and assistance in the territory of any other Party, the Parties undertake:

1. to maintain or to satisfy themselves that there are maintained adequate and free services to assist such workers, particularly in obtaining accurate information, and to take all appropriate steps, so far as national laws and regulations permit, against misleading propaganda relating to emigration and immigration;

2. to adopt appropriate measures within their own jurisdiction to facilitate the departure, journey and reception of such workers and their families, and to provide, within their own jurisdiction, appropriate services for health, medical attention and good hygienic conditions during the journey;
3. to promote co-operation, as appropriate, between social services, public and private, in emigration and immigration countries;
4. to secure for such workers lawfully within their territories, insofar as such matters are regulated by law or regulations or are subject to the control of administrative authorities, treatment not less favourable than that of their own nationals in respect of the following matters:
 - a remuneration and other employment and working conditions;
 - b membership of trade unions and enjoyment of the benefits of collective bargaining;
 - c accommodation;
5. to secure for such workers lawfully within their territories treatment not less favourable than that of their own nationals with regard to employment taxes, dues or contributions payable in respect of employed persons;
6. to facilitate as far as possible the reunion of the family of a foreign worker permitted to establish himself in the territory;
7. to secure for such workers lawfully within their territories treatment not less favourable than that of their own nationals in respect of legal proceedings relating to matters referred to in this article;
8. to secure that such workers lawfully residing within their territories are not expelled unless they endanger national security or offend against public interest or morality;
9. to permit, within legal limits, the transfer of such parts of the earnings and savings of such workers as they may desire;
10. to extend the protection and assistance provided for in this article to self-employed migrants insofar as such measures apply;
11. to promote and facilitate the teaching of the national language of the receiving state or, if there are several, one of these languages, to migrant workers and members of their families;
12. to promote and facilitate, as far as practicable, the teaching of the migrant worker's mother tongue to the children of the migrant worker.

Article 20 - The right to equal opportunities and equal treatment in matters of employment and occupation without discrimination on the grounds of sex

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to equal opportunities and equal treatment in matters of employment and occupation without discrimination on the grounds of sex, the Parties undertake to recognise that right and to take appropriate measures to ensure or promote its application in the following fields:

- a access to employment, protection against dismissal and occupational reintegration;
- b vocational guidance, training, retraining and rehabilitation;
- c terms of employment and working conditions, including remuneration;
- d career development, including promotion.

Article 21 - The right to information and consultation

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of workers to be informed and consulted within the undertaking, the Parties undertake to adopt or encourage measures enabling workers or their representatives, in accordance with national legislation and practice:

- a to be informed regularly or at the appropriate time and in a comprehensible way about the economic and financial situation of the undertaking employing them, on the understanding that the disclosure of certain information which could be prejudicial to the undertaking may be refused or subject to confidentiality; and
- b to be consulted in good time on proposed decisions which could substantially affect the interests of workers, particularly on those decisions which could have an important impact on the employment situation in the undertaking.

Article 22 - The right to take part in the determination and improvement of the working conditions and working environment

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of workers to take part in the determination and improvement of the working conditions and working environment in the undertaking, the Parties undertake to adopt or encourage measures enabling workers or their representatives, in accordance with national legislation and practice, to contribute:

- a to the determination and the improvement of the working conditions, work organisation and working environment;
- b to the protection of health and safety within the undertaking;
- c to the organisation of social and socio-cultural services and facilities within the undertaking;
- d to the supervision of the observance of regulations on these matters.

Article 23 - The right of elderly persons to social protection

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of elderly persons to social protection, the Parties undertake to adopt or encourage, either directly or in co-operation with public or private organisations, appropriate measures designed in particular:

- to enable elderly persons to remain full members of society for as long as possible, by means of:
 - a [See No. 5 in the list in Part I]
 - b provision of information about services and facilities available for elderly persons and their opportunities to make use of them;

to enable elderly persons to choose their life-style freely and to lead independent lives in their familiar surroundings for as long as they wish and are able, by means of:

a provision of housing suited to their needs and their state of health or of adequate support for adapting their housing;

b [See No. 12 in the list in Part I]

to guarantee elderly persons living in institutions appropriate support, while respecting their privacy, and participation in decisions concerning living conditions in the institution.

Article 24 - The right to protection in cases of termination of employment

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of workers to protection in cases of termination of employment, the Parties undertake to recognise:

a the right of all workers not to have their employment terminated without valid reasons for such termination connected with their capacity or conduct or based on the operational requirements of the undertaking, establishment or service;

b the right of workers whose employment is terminated without a valid reason to adequate compensation or other appropriate relief.

To this end the Parties undertake to ensure that a worker who considers that his employment has been terminated without a valid reason shall have the right to appeal to an impartial body.

Article 25 - The right of workers to the protection of their claims in the event of the insolvency of their employer

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of workers to the protection of their claims in the event of the insolvency of their employer, the Parties undertake to provide that workers' claims arising from contracts of employment or employment relationships be guaranteed by a guarantee institution or by any other effective form of protection.

Article 26 - The right to dignity at work

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of all workers to protection of their dignity at work, the Parties undertake, in consultation with employers' and workers' organisations:

1. to promote awareness, information and prevention of sexual harassment in the workplace or in relation to work and to take all appropriate measures to protect workers from such conduct;
2. to promote awareness, information and prevention of recurrent reprehensible or distinctly negative and offensive actions directed against individual workers in the workplace or in relation to work and to take all appropriate measures to protect workers from such conduct.

Article 27 - The right of workers with family responsibilities to equal opportunities and equal treatment

With a view to ensuring the exercise of the right to equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women workers with family responsibilities and between such workers and other workers, the Parties undertake:

1. to take appropriate measures:
 - a to enable workers with family responsibilities to enter and remain in employment, as well as to re-enter employment after an absence due to those responsibilities, including measures in the field of vocational guidance and training;
 - b to take account of their needs in terms of conditions of employment and social security;
 - c to develop or promote services, public or private, in particular child daycare services and other childcare arrangements;
2. to provide a possibility for either parent to obtain, during a period after maternity leave, parental leave to take care of a child, the duration and conditions of which should be determined by national legislation, collective agreements or practice;
3. to ensure that family responsibilities shall not, as such, constitute a valid reason for termination of employment.

Article 28 - The right of workers' representatives to protection in the undertaking and facilities to be accorded to them

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of workers' representatives to carry out their functions, the Parties undertake to ensure that in the undertaking:

- a they enjoy effective protection against acts prejudicial to them, including dismissal, based on their status or activities as workers' representatives within the undertaking;
- b they are afforded such facilities as may be appropriate in order to enable them to carry out their functions promptly and efficiently, account being taken of the industrial relations system of the country and the needs, size and capabilities of the undertaking concerned.

Article 29 - The right to information and consultation in collective redundancy procedures

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of workers to be informed and consulted in situations of collective redundancies, the Parties undertake to ensure that employers shall inform and consult workers' representatives, in good time prior to such collective redundancies, on ways and means of avoiding collective redundancies or limiting their occurrence and mitigating their consequences, for example by recourse to accompanying social measures aimed, in particular, at aid for the redeployment or retraining of the workers concerned.

Article 30 - The right to protection against poverty and social exclusion

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to protection against poverty and social exclusion, the Parties undertake:

a to take measures within the framework of an overall and co-ordinated approach to promote the effective access of persons who live or risk living in a situation of social exclusion or poverty, as well as their families, to, in particular, employment, housing, training, education, culture and social and medical assistance;

b to review these measures with a view to their adaptation if necessary.

Article 31 - The right to housing

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to housing, the Parties undertake to take measures designed:

1. to promote access to housing of an adequate standard;
2. to prevent and reduce homelessness with a view to its gradual elimination;
3. to make the price of housing accessible to those without adequate resources.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 22 May 2000CHARTE 4266/00*CONTRIB 139*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the submission by the Society for Threatened Peoples International in occasion of the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in German and English languages.

Towards the effective protection of minorities in the EU 's future Charter on Fundamental Rights

Written submission by Society for Threatened Peoples International to the hearing of the European Parliament in Brussels on 27 April 2000

Mr President,
Representatives of the European Parliament and the EU Member States,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

On behalf of the Society for Threatened Peoples (Gesellschaft für bedrohte Völker/GfbV) International we salute you and thank you for the invitation to attend this hearing.

Our human rights organisation, which has been working for more than 30 years on behalf of linguistic, ethnic and religious minorities subjected to discrimination and persecution in Europe and throughout the world, welcomes the advent of a European Union Charter on Fundamental Rights. It is high time for the growing might of the EU institutions to be balanced by the establishment of legal rights of a binding and individually accessible nature for the people living in Europe. We note with particular concern, however, that the draft texts of the Convention on Fundamental Rights to date have made no provision for the necessary protection of linguistic, ethnic and religious minorities in Europe.

Minorities are an integral part of every society. They contribute to the essential diversity of cultures. They are therefore entitled to recognition and protection. Nevertheless time after time minorities in Europe have become the victims of persecution, climaxing in the crimes of genocide, class murder and mass deportation committed by the National Socialism, Fascist and Communist dictatorships. Such crimes are still continuing in the Balkans today. Even in the stable democracies of western Europe people are discriminated against on account of their skin colour, language, culture or religion.

The victims of discrimination also include members of linguistic minorities and ethnic groups long-established in Europe. Although citizens of their own national states and of the EU, they are frequently deprived of the resources their educational and cultural institutions require. This has resulted in a process of progressive cultural impoverishment: the „euromosaic“ study published by the European Commission in 1996 indicated that almost half the 46 minority languages of Europe had either only „limited“ or „no prospects of survival“.

It is the opinion of international lawyers of repute that the only effective source of protection for linguistic, ethnic, religious and similar communities is the guarantee of their collective rights. However it appears to have already been decided that, following the tradition of international agreements on human rights already in force and the constitutions of the European democracies, the Charter on Fundamental Rights will embody individual rights. It appears all the more important, then, that the Charter should incorporate an Article which guarantees minimum rights for the members of ethnic or national, linguistic and religious minorities. Based on Article 27 of the International Covenant on Political and Civil Rights of 1966 we propose the following form of words:

Persons belonging to ethnic or national, linguistic or religious minorities shall have the right, in community with other members of their group, to practise their religion, to promote their own culture and to use their own language in private or public.

The outlawing of discrimination on the grounds of race, origin, nationality, language, gender, sexual orientation, religion, ideology or political opinion is likewise imperative if minorities are to be protected. It is almost certain that the Charter on Fundamental Rights will in fact contain an Article dealing with this subject and it is essential therefore that the prohibition of discriminations should apply not only to the citizens of the Union but explicitly to all peoples within the area of the EU.

As we are aware from discussions relating, for example, to the equal status of men and women or the problems of disabled persons, discrimination applied in practice against entire groups can often only be remedied with difficulty. In order to ensure that equal opportunities for such groups is a reality, we call for „affirmative action“ along the lines of the successful American model: groups that have suffered discrimination should qualify for special support. Such support should moreover be targeted in particular at members of long-established linguistic, ethnic or national minorities. The discussion concerning whether the Charter should include political targets in addition to individual rights has been a source of controversy. Nevertheless we are now proposing that the following paragraph be added to the Article dealing with the protection of minorities:

The EU and the Member States call for specific measures to be taken to ensure the genuine equality of members of national majorities and members of linguistic, ethnic or national minorities. The EU calls for trans-border co-operation in minority regions.

We also urge the EU to give a lead regarding the prevention of genocide, mass expulsion and other grave crimes against humanity by adopting the Charter on Fundamental Rights. In addition to making this a target for political action, we would also urge the inclusion of an Article on the right to a homeland that would offer individual protection from expulsion :

1. Every person shall have the right to remain in their place of residence, their home region and their own country.
2. Every person shall have the right likewise to return of their own free decision to a place of their choice within their country of origin.

The prohibition of individual or collective expulsion, the right to a return home in safety and the freedom to choose a place of residence are already enshrined in different Articles of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the European Convention on Human Rights and the Supplementary Protocols thereto. The right to a homeland was introduced in the Draft Declaration on Population Transfers and the Implantation of Settlers unanimously adopted by the UN Human Rights Commission on 17 April 1998.

Finally we would counsel against any attempt to limit the scope of the Fundamental Rights concerned or to restrict the Charter to a non-binding declaration. Not only would this result in the destruction of the concept of a European „Bill of Rights “,the international evolution of human rights would also experience a severe setback. In the final declaration issued by the Council of Europe meeting in Copenhagen in 1993 the Members of what was then the EC stated that their willingness to agree to the admission of additional states was conditional on the enactment of legislation incorporating the protection of minorities into the constitutions of the countries concerned.The adoption of such a right in the Charter on Fundamental Rights has therefore become a test of credibility.

On behalf of GfbV International we wish the members of the Convention every sagacity,courage and success in dealing with the task in front of them.

Luxembourg/Goettingen, April 2000,
Tilman Zulch, President of GfbV International,
Andre Rollinger, Vice-president

The Society for Threatened Peoples (Gesellschaft für bedrohte Völker/GfbV)International, human rights organization for discriminated and persecuted ethnic,religious and national minorities,has offices in Germany, Luxembourg,Austria,Switzerland,South Tyrol/Italy,Bosnia-Hercegovina and in France.Since 1993,she has Consultative Status (Cat.Spec.)with the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC)of the United Nations.

To get more information about our human rights work,to support this submission for a better protection of minorities in the EU 's future Charter on Fundamental Rights or in case of any questions,suggestions or new ideas concerning this campaign,please contact Dr.Andreas Selmeçi at our main office,P.O.Box 20 24,D-37010 Göttingen,Tel.+49 551 49906-22,Fax +49 551 58028,e-mail pogrom@gfbv.de.Information about this campaign is also available on our homepage www.gfbv.de (click on the British banner and look at „Documents and Statements about Threatened Peoples and Minorities “).

Editors' note to CHARTE 4268/00,
Intervention du Mouvement international ATD Quart Monde à l'occasion de l'audition publique du 27/04/00:

CHARTE 4267/00 never issued.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 5 mai 2000CHARTE 4268/00*CONTRIB 141*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver l'intervention du Mouvement international ATD Quart Monde à l'occasion de l'audition du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française seulement.

Intervention du Mouvement international ATD Quart Monde, devant la Convention chargée d'élaborer une Charte des droits fondamentaux dans l'Union européenne, jeudi 27 avril 2000

Le Mouvement ATD Quart Monde qui est né en 1957, dans la glaise d'un bidonville de la banlieue parisienne de la volonté du Père Joseph Wresinski, un homme qui avait personnellement connu la grande pauvreté, se réjouit d'avoir été retenu dans le cadre de cette audition dédiée à la Charte des droits fondamentaux dans l'Union européenne.

Associé aux prises de position de nombreuses ONG présentes et, notamment au " Common statement " signé par beaucoup d'entre elles, le Mouvement international ATD Quart Monde voudrait vous exprimer cinq propositions.

Tout d'abord - et c'est le premier point, nous nous réjouissons de voir les travaux de la Convention progresser dans une optique très positive, qui consiste à rédiger une Charte à caractère contraignant et destinée à être intégrée dans les Traités de l'Union européenne. Cette attitude correspond à l'attente de millions de citoyens et de citoyennes qui seraient très déçus de trouver en fin de compte une coquille vide.. entourée d'un très joli ruban.

Du coup - et c'est mon deuxième point - on aborde le contenu de la Charte. Celle-ci doit comprendre l'ensemble des droits garantis dans la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme (Rome 1950) et dans la Charte sociale européenne révisée (Strasbourg 1996) qui constitue une excellente base pour les droits sociaux. Elle comprend notamment, à son article 30, un droit qui ne figurait dans aucun autre instrument des droits de l'homme, le " droit à la protection contre la pauvreté et l'exclusion sociale ". Ce nouveau droit a été obtenu suite aux propositions des personnes et familles très pauvres. Il devrait figurer aussi dans votre Charte, de même que le droit au logement qui se trouve à l'article 31 de la Charte sociale européenne révisée.

Je vais maintenant mettre l'accent sur un 3^{ème} point, le droit à un revenu minimum garanti, qui est une revendication très ancienne du Mouvement ATD Quart Monde. Nous nous sommes réjouis lorsqu'en 1996, le Comité des Sages, présidé par Mme Maria Lourdes Pintasilgo avait proposé que ce droit figure parmi les droits fondamentaux à mettre dans le Traité d'Amsterdam comme symbole de l'Europe sociale. Car ce droit doit permettre à chacun de vivre dans la dignité. Il constitue un tremplin pour que chacun puisse être intégré à la société et assurer sa santé, son bien-être et celui de sa famille. Le projet travaillé actuellement par votre Convention comprend un article XIV sur le " droit à l'aide sociale ". A nos yeux, la ligne de progrès dans ce domaine serait de passer de " l'aide sociale " au " revenu minimum garanti ". Nous sommes heureux que plusieurs membres de la Convention aient déposé un amendement en ce sens.

Un quatrième point correspond également à l'une de nos plus anciennes demandes, c'est l'inscription dans la Charte du droit à la consultation et à la participation des ONG européennes auprès des Institutions européennes. De récentes initiatives nous laissent espérer des avancées dans ce que l'on désigne désormais par " dialogue civil structuré ". En tout cas, l'audition organisée aujourd'hui par la Convention conforte cet espoir.

En conclusion, il n'est pas inutile de rappeler que l'adhésion de l'Union européenne à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et à la Charte sociale européenne révisée favoriserait une cohérence entre les différentes politiques de protection des droits en Europe.

Ainsi, sur ce point comme sur d'autres, l'action du Mouvement international ATD Quart Monde s'inscrit dans une mémoire, dans une histoire. Le 17 octobre 1987, le Père Joseph Wresinski réunissait une nombreuse assistance au Trocadéro à Paris. Depuis, cette date a été prise par l'ONU comme Journée mondiale du refus de la misère et on peut lire sur la Dalle du Parvis des Libertés et des Droits de l'homme cette inscription : “ Là où des hommes sont condamnés à vivre dans la misère, les droits de l'homme sont violés. S'unir pour les faire respecter est un devoir sacré. ”

Le 10 mai 1998, à la Haye, lors du 50^{ème} anniversaire du premier Congrès européen, au cours duquel les Européens avaient été appelés à “ faire échec à la guerre, à la peur et à la misère ”, Madame Alwine de Vos van Steenwijk, présidente internationale du Mouvement ATD Quart Monde, était intervenue à la séance de clôture pour que le XXe siècle ne se termine pas sans un acte fort, un Sommet européen contre la pauvreté. Le récent Conseil européen de Lisbonne, malgré un ordre du jour chargé, a donné une première réponse à cette demande en lançant une nouvelle méthode ouverte de coordination prenant en compte les millions d'exclus et en qualifiant la situation “ d'intolérable ”.

Monsieur le Président, je ne cacherai pas mon émotion en vous confiant ce message au nom des plus démunis : “ Dans cette Europe que nous voulons construire avec plus de paix, de prospérité et de solidarité, ne nous laissez pas camper aux portes de la Cité, parce que nous voulons contribuer à réaliser une démocratie digne de ce nom, fondée sur les droits fondamentaux pour tous. ”

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 8 May 2000CHARTE 4273/00*CONTRIB 146*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the position paper of the Irish Business Bureau (IBB) and Employers Confederation (IBEC) following the hearing of 27 April 2000. ^{1 2}

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

² Irish Business and Employers Confederation, Brussels Office - The Irish Business Bureau
Rue Montoyer 17-19, box 3, 1000 Brussels. Tel. +32 (0)2 - 512.3333. Fax +32 (0)2 512.1353
e-mail: ibb@ibec.ie

The Inter-Governmental Conference of the European Union

and

The Charter on Fundamental Human Rights

Position Paper of the Irish Business and Employers Confederation

This submission is IBEC's contribution to the Irish Government both in respect of the recently opened negotiations to revise the European Union's Treaties and the simultaneous, but separate, elaboration of a Charter on Fundamental Human Rights.

1. The Inter-Governmental Conference

The legal rationale for holding yet another Inter-Governmental Conference (IGC) stems from a Protocol annexed to the last treaty revision, the 1997 Amsterdam Treaty. It stipulated that at least one year before the membership of the European Union exceeds twenty, a conference of the 15 EU governments would be convened in order to revise 'the composition and functioning of the institutions'. Thus, for enlargement to become a reality, the EU would be obliged to reform its working methods.

This IGC opened on 14 February 2000, not one year before enlargement to new Member States, as foreseen by Amsterdam, but years before that could realistically happen. The Heads of State and Government, at the Helsinki European Council in December 1999, agreed that the three so-called 'leftover' issues¹ from Amsterdam must be addressed right now, before the enlargement negotiations started at all. This means that what is decided over the coming year by the 15 will actually settle the shape and working methods of a Union eventually comprising upwards of 13 more countries.²

A more ambitious agenda of reform, as articulated by the Commission, has been postponed.

The IGC will continue to meet on a weekly basis at the level of personal representatives of the EU's Foreign Ministers, chaired by the Portuguese and subsequently by the French Presidencies. It is envisaged that the negotiations will conclude at the Nice Summit on 7-8 December.

The issues that are relevant from a business and employer perspective include:

- * Ireland's influence within the Community Institutions
- * Extending Qualified Majority Voting
- * The scale of ambition of the IGC

- IBEC's Overarching Views

IBEC takes the view that the Irish Government should not restrict itself to a cautious and incremental approach to the negotiations on Treaty reform, but should adopt a robust and pro-active attitude to adapt the Community in advance of enlargement.

While recognising political realities at EU level, IBEC believes it is in the long-term interest of the Community to proceed now with fundamental constitutional reform. Rather than focusing on the limited agenda favoured by the majority of Member States, there is merit in considering extending the IGC process to other areas, some of which have been identified by the Commission. Recognising that enlargement will not happen before 2005, Member States could set the target of having the results of a more comprehensive IGC submitted to Europe's electorate in June 2004, the date of the next direct elections to the European Parliament.

IBEC also believes that, at a fundamental level, the current negotiations must not lead to the traditional balance between large and small Member States being re-weighted in favour of the former, to the extent that a 'directory' of five, and eventually six countries, could come to dominate the future direction and policies of the EU. This would not achieve the declared Treaty goal of 'deepening the solidarity between the peoples of Europe while respecting their history, their culture and their traditions'.

- Reform of the European Commission

The Treaty of Amsterdam stipulated that at the date of the next enlargement - now expected sometime between 2004 to 2006 - the Commission would comprise of only one representative from each country, thus reducing the number of Commissioners from Germany, France, Italy, Spain and the UK. In the short term therefore, assuming that fewer than five countries join in the first wave, this would possibly mean all countries which have two Commissioners would lose one nomination.

IBEC does not share the view that some Member States can be ultimately left un-represented within the College of Commissioners. In particular, any attempt to fix the number of Commissioners at a level³ which would result in uninterrupted representation of large Member States but with some form of rotation for smaller countries, is not acceptable. The essence of democracy is adequate representation. In Ireland's case, it is inconceivable that we would be excluded from the Executive given the pivotal role it plays.

By contrast, the option of re-casting the role of Commissioners would be much more practicable. In this scenario, the President would head a College comprising of a reduced number of ‘senior’ Commissioners, with ‘junior’ Commissioners reporting to individual Commissioners, much in the same way as cabinet government already operates in several Member States. The number of junior positions could easily vary as a function of the number of countries in the EU at any given time; while the allocation of the senior Commission portfolios would be decided by the President elect, on the basis of merit rather than the country of origin of the prospective Commissioner, and independently of deliberations within the Council, as has been the case up to now. In this way, the calibre of politicians putting their names forward for a post in the Commission would be the decisive factor in the quality of their post in Brussels.

- Re-weighting of Voting Strengths in the Council of Ministers

The above-mentioned Amsterdam Protocol stated that the modification of national representation in the Commission would be conditional upon an appropriate re-weighting of votes in the Council, thereby ‘compensating’ larger Member States for the loss of their second Commissioner. The two options suggested at Amsterdam were a straight re-weighting of the number of votes allocated to each country, or the introduction of a dual majority, in which a qualified majority would equal, not 71% of the votes cast, but would instead constitute a simple majority of the Member States and a majority of the EU population.

The latter of these options is favoured by IBEC, as it guarantees the interests of sovereign states - one Irish vote being equal to one German vote, just as Alaska (0.6 million people) and California (32 million) are equally represented in the US Senate. On the other hand, the will of the EU population as a whole would be justly reflected in the need for all adopted legislation to represent a majority of EU citizens - thus in a system with 370 votes (each vote representing 1 million voters) where 186 were necessary to adopt a proposal, Ireland would have 4 votes and Germany 87; each vote representing one million voters. This dual majority system would have the benefit of simplicity, transparency and ultimately flexibility, in the event of successive enlargements.

- Voting Procedures in the Council of Ministers

Qualified majority voting already applies to over 70% of all legislation negotiated in Brussels and Strasbourg. It is proposed that QMV be extended to all of the remaining spheres of Community legislation, with the exception of major constitutional decisions, such as accession of new Member States and reforms of the treaties. IBEC accepts in principle the logic of a further extension of QMV to some of the areas, in particular internal market issues, still covered by unanimity.

IBEC believes QMV should be extended to the following areas:

- in the budgetary field of own resources (Art. 269);
- measures taken when a Member State is threatened with severe difficulties caused by exceptional occurrences (Art. 100);
- transport regime affecting living standards and employment (Art. 71,2);
- culture (Art. 151,5⁴), decisions on freedom of movement in the EC (Art. 18,2⁵);
- rights of self-employed to provide services in other Member States (Art. 47, 2⁶); and
- actions in favour of the competitiveness of industry (Art. 157,3).

Further consideration needs to be given regarding the extension of QMV to external trade policy issues (Art. 133).

A failure to grasp the nettle of a further pooling of sovereignty in these areas can only increase the threat of greater use of 'closer co-operation' between some Member States. Ireland has already experienced, in a less than ideal manner, the operation of such flexibility both from the inside and the outside (EMU and Schengen).

The provisions in the treaty on EMU need to be updated, taking account of the fact that the euro is now a reality, and providing greater clarity for potential second and third wave entrants. In addition, for the purpose of simplicity and greater democratic accountability, IBEC considers that the existing articles on economic and monetary policy under Title VII of the EC Treaty relating to the use of the 'co-operation' procedure should be replaced with the co-decision procedure.

No further extension of QMV can be accepted in areas fundamental to the sovereignty and national interests of Member States. This includes national social security arrangements (and all other measures foreseen by Art. 137,3), environment measures of a fiscal nature (and all other measures foreseen by Art. 175,2), tasks and objectives of the structural funds (Art. 161), and, above all, taxation policy and tax rates (Art. 93-94). However, implementing decisions which stem from earlier unanimous framework decisions in the taxation field could be taken by QMV.

- Other Issues

In the event that the IGC extends its agenda to such matters as the first and second pillars, IBEC would reserve the right to make a further submission.

2. Charter On Fundamental Human Rights

The Treaty of Amsterdam states (Article 6.1): "The Union is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. Thus there is already a clear assertion that fundamental rights exist and must be respected.

In trying to create a "Europe of the Citizen", fundamental rights were deemed by politicians only to work if they are highly visible and if ascertainable rights "stimulate the readiness to accept the EU and to identify with its growing intensification" in the EU citizen. The expected 'Bill of Rights' did not appear in the Amsterdam Treaty.

In attempting to address these concerns, the Helsinki European Council has brought together a Convention of MEPs, members of government (Michael O'Kennedy T.D. for the Irish government) and members of national parliaments (Desmond O'Malley T.D. and Bernard Durkan T.D. for Dáil Éireann). Their brief is to produce a draft Charter of Fundamental Rights covering civil, political and social rights.

The list of rights the group is reviewing is extensive, inspired by the 'main' Charters which already apply including the European Convention of Human Rights, various ILO, UN and Council of Europe Treaties. One issue which has already emerged is whether a distinction could be made between civil and political rights and economic and social objectives and how they may be implemented. The biggest problem is less the content of the Charter but its legal status. At present, the aim is to establish a Bill of Rights, rather than conferring new powers on the Union to legislate in the field of fundamental rights. While the Charter is intended to apply solely to the Union's institutions and not to activities of Member States, the efficient safeguard of fundamental rights as a rule presupposes judicial protection. Thus there is significant political pressure to make the Charter legally binding as part of the EU's Treaties.

The impact of this aspiration has not yet been thought through. To give legal status to, for example, the right to a healthy environment or to join a trade union could give any citizen the right to bring an individual company or Member State to a national court or the ECJ for not safeguarding that right, or in extremis could force the national legislator or the ECJ to develop a more coherent theory of limitation. The binding nature of the Charter would not be a problem if it merely listed the rights that have an essentially justiciable character. However, if the Charter included rights that would ordinarily be considered to be in the nature of non-binding commitments or aspirations, the whole project could become a legal minefield. Creating legal uncertainty must be avoided at all costs. While the choice is a political one, the Charter is already being drafted so that it is capable of being incorporated into the treaties if needed.

A binding Charter is strongly supported by the European Parliament whose MEPs foresee plaintiffs taking cases on foot of the Charter having access to the ECJ. The Parliament also has on its agenda that fundamental rights could be extended to cover such matters as biotechnology.

A strategy which is gaining in popularity within the Convention is to have two parts to the Charter, one which is legally binding, the other describing these rights and obligations and which reflects aspirations and is not binding. This is the ideal way to give added value to European citizens, without prejudice to legal certainty.

Another complication is that the Charter may place those rights simultaneously under the jurisdiction of the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights, creating the need for a new relationship to be worked out.

The draft Charter will be ready by the end of 2000, and may become part of the new Treaty on institutional reforms which may be adopted by the Nice Summit in December.

IBEC supports the drawing up of a Charter subject to the following comments:

1. Only fundamental and universal rights should be covered by the Charter. Standards set by Community Directives should not fall within the remit of the Convention.
2. The Charter should express the Treaty's four fundamental freedoms (free movement of goods, people, services and capital), but should not declare these principles to be fundamental rights.
3. The Charter should state, perhaps in the Preamble, that the protection of fundamental rights recognises the importance of maintaining Europe's competitiveness.
4. It should clarify existing rights, but not undermine them.
5. No new rights should be promulgated.
6. No new powers should be given to the Community's Institutions. The Charter is not a licence for the EU to regulate.
7. The Charter should not be legally binding.
8. There should be no commitment to a right to vocational training (ref: Article 12) or to workers' information and consultation (these issues are more appropriate to secondary legislation, or to Codes of Best Practice).
9. The right to join a trade union should be balance with a right to exercise freedom not to join a trade union or association (ref: Article 13).
10. The right to ownership should have regard to Ireland's constitutional position on property rights and the Planning Act 2000 (ref: Article 16).
11. Respect for the Charter should be conditional of continuing membership of the Union.
12. The autonomy of the European social partners under the Social Protocol should be acknowledged, perhaps by an interpretative statement.
13. The current non-binding Social Charter should not be amended by the Convention. Proposals to enshrine trade union rights and to incorporate such rights as the right to a minimum wage, the right to housing and the right to protection from social exclusion and to include a right of access to social rights are, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, not a matter for determination at Community level.

The Charter will be portrayed as being of real significance to the Union's citizens. Therefore nothing should be included that cannot be fulfilled. A clear distinction should be made between fundamental rights and political aspirations. Corresponding obligations should also be included where this is relevant.

Finally, IBEC would like to know whether a referendum will be needed in Ireland if the Charter is adopted.

3. Communicating “Europe”

The Programme for Prosperity and Fairness includes a commitment that a programme will be put in place by government “to adjust Irish public awareness of EU matters away from the direct cash transfers and towards the more indirect but still substantial benefits arising from the social, economic and cultural development of the EU”. (Framework IV, section 4.6.4).

IBEC believes this initiative should be launched as soon as possible in the context of the current IGC and the on-going work of the Convention. Public awareness of Europe in Ireland is positive. Therefore it is critical that the issues being negotiated this year are communicated in a professional, timely and transparent manner. A debate about Ireland’s role in an enlarged Europe should be encouraged.

April 2000

-
- ¹ Size and composition of the European Commission; weighting of votes in the Council of Ministers; and possible extension of qualified majority voting in the Council.
- ² Poland, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Slovenia, Estonia and Cyprus; who were joined by Slovakia, Latvia, Lithuania, Romania, Bulgaria and Malta following the Helsinki Summit, with Turkey recognised as a long-term candidate. Positive reaction to the recent political advances in Croatia would suggest that both it and other Balkan states will not be excluded from the enlargement process.
- ³ For example, fixing the number of Commissioners at 21 would hypothetically allow 6 Member States to be guaranteed a seat, but would force the remaining 21 countries to be represented in only 5 of 7 Commission terms of office.
- ⁴ Decisions in this sphere, while taken by co-decision between the institutions, are seriously delayed by the requirement for unanimity in Council throughout the procedure. A similar anomaly for decision in the R&D sector was removed at Amsterdam.
- ⁵ Ibid.
- ⁶ Ibid.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 8 mai 2000CHARTE 4274/00*CONTRIB 147*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint le texte de l'exposé de la Fédération des Associations Familiales Catholiques en Europe à l'occasion de l'audition du 27 avril 2000.¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

FEDERATION DES ASSOCIATIONS FAMILIALES CATHOLIQUES EN EUROPE

FÖDERATION DER KATHOLISCHEN FAMILIENVERBÄNDE IN EUROPA

FEDERATION OF CATHOLIC FAMILY ASSOCIATIONS IN EUROPE

Charte Européenne des Droits Fondamentaux

Intervention auprès de la Convention le 27 avril 2000

le 25.04.2000

Monsieur le Président, Mesdames et Messieurs les Députés, Mesdames et Messieurs,

Au nom de La Fédération des AFC en Europe, qui représente 5.5 millions de familles, je vous remercie de l'audition qui nous est accordée.

La Famille est la plus ancienne structure de la Communauté humaine, elle précède toute organisation publique ou d'Etat, elle est l'élément naturel et fondamental de la Société.

Communauté de vie d'un homme et d'une femme, établie sur l'engagement public stable du mariage, ouverte à la vie, la Famille structure la Société et assure sa cohésion en profondeur. Elle est le lieu privilégié à l'accueil de la vie.

C'est en son sein que s'accomplit l'apprentissage fondamental et indispensable du « vivre en société » par les tâches éducatives qui incombent aux parents, mais aussi à travers des liens d'amour, d'affection et de protection, qu'aucune loi ne peut décréter.

C'est en famille que l'on apprend l'acceptation de l'autre différent de soi, le vivre ensemble au jour le jour, le partage des biens matériels comme aussi des joies et des peines, la tolérance et le pardon qui permettent de dépasser les situations conflictuelles, le soutien aux plus faibles, la solidarité et la prise en charge intergénérationnelle. La Famille n'est-elle pas la première caisse de chômage pour les jeunes en quête d'emploi ?

Par la complémentarité Homme-Femme, Père-Mère dans leurs rôles éducatifs respectifs, dès le plus jeune âge, l'enfant peut se structurer psychiquement et affectivement. « L'enfant, pour l'épanouissement harmonieux de sa personnalité, doit grandir dans le milieu familial, dans un climat de bonheur, d'amour et de compréhension ». (Conv. Droits de l'enfant). L'enfant a le droit d'être élevé par sa mère et son père.

Certes, des dysfonctionnements existent dans certaines familles, d'autres sont blessées, notamment par des séparations, cependant cela n'enlève en aucun cas les valeurs essentielles pour la vie en société, transmises dans et par la cellule familiale.

C'est pourquoi, une Société soucieuse de son avenir doit veiller à la stabilité des familles et favoriser l'accueil de la vie.

Aucune structure d'Etat n'est en mesure de remplacer la Famille, plusieurs exemples à travers l'histoire l'ont largement démontré. Plutôt que de tenter de se substituer aux familles, les pouvoirs publics ont le devoir de soutenir les familles, de les encourager, de leur garantir des droits spécifiques.

L'ONU dans sa « Déclaration Universelle des Droits de l'Homme », Le Conseil de l'Europe dans sa « Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme » et dans sa « Charte Sociale Révisée », enfin la « Convention des Nations Unies sur les droits de l'enfant » mentionnent clairement que « la Famille est l'élément naturel et fondamental de la société, qu'elle est le milieu naturel pour la croissance et le bien être de tous ses membres et en particulier des enfants, et qu'elle doit recevoir la protection et l'assistance dont elle a besoin pour pouvoir jouer pleinement son rôle dans la communauté. »

Il nous paraît indispensable que la Famille soit intégrée dans la « Charte Européenne des Droits Fondamentaux ». Cette Charte ne peut pas rester en deçà des conventions susmentionnées déjà ratifiées par beaucoup d'Etats. Il est hautement souhaitable qu'une recommandation européenne en faveur d'une réelle politique familiale soit élaborée afin de servir de cadre aux Etats-membres.

La Famille représente infiniment plus que des droits individuels additionnés, (droit de l'Homme, droit de la Femme, droit de l'Enfant) et par le principe de la non discrimination, elle doit être prise en compte en tant que telle, élément naturel et fondamental de la Société, à laquelle sont attachés des droits comme aussi des devoirs.

C'est cela que nous demandons dans notre « Contribution », Contribution qui vous fut adressée et dont je vous remercie de bien vouloir prendre connaissance, afin d'en tenir compte dans la rédaction de la CHARTE.

Je vous remercie de votre attention.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 8. Mai 2000CHARTE 4275/00*CONTRIB 148*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend einen Beitrag des deutschen Städte- und Gemeindebundes. ¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache vorgelegt.

Deutscher Städte- und Gemeindebund

Herrn
Bundespräsident a.D.
Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog
Präsident des EU-Grundrechtekonvents
Postfach 86 04 45
81631 München

Dr. Gerd Landsberg

Geschäftsführendes
Präsidialmitglied

Marienstraße 6
12207 Berlin

Telefon 030.773 07.223
Telefax 030.773 07.222

Berlin, den 17. April 2000

G/3 050-25 zi

Erarbeitung einer EU-Charta der Grundrechte

Appell des Deutschen Städte- und Gemeindebundes nach einem Recht auf Selbstverwaltung in der EU-Charta der Grundrechte

Sehr geehrter Herr Bundespräsident a.D. Professor Dr. Herzog, der Deutsche Städte- und Gemeindebund möchte Ihnen gerne einen Vorschlag im Rahmen der Erarbeitung einer EU-Charta der Grundrechte unterbreiten.

Die deutschen Städte und Gemeinden sind in vielfältiger Weise vom europäischen Integrationsprozess betroffen. Sie legen dabei ein klares Bekenntnis zur Europäischen Union und zum europäischen Einigungsprozess ab. Wenn davon gesprochen wird, ein "Europa der Bürger und Bürgerinnen" errichten zu wollen, so möchten wir in diesem Zusammenhang darauf hinweisen, dass es die kommunale Ebene ist, die dem Bürger am nächsten steht und tagtäglich vor diesen in der Verantwortung, die Politikgestaltung der höheren politischen Ebenen zu vertreten und umzusetzen. Gleichmaßen erlaubt und gewährleistet es die kommunale Selbstverwaltung, die Identifizierung des Bürgers mit dem Staat zu stärken und Demokratie als politische Mitwirkungsmöglichkeit unmittelbar erlebbar zu machen.

Der Deutsche Städte- und Gemeindebund ist daher der Auffassung, dass der Prozess der Erarbeitung einer EU-Charta der Grundrechte auch Anlass sein sollte, über dieses Politikmodell und dessen Zukunft im europäischen Integrationsprozess nachzudenken und entsprechende Schlüsse für die Charta zu ziehen.

Bei der EU-Charta der Grundrechte geht es nicht nur darum, einen Konsens unter den nationalen (verfassungs-)rechtlichen Grundpositionen zu erzeugen. Die supranationalen Handlungsformen der EU haben Frage- und Problemstellungen auch für bürgerschaftliche Rechtspositionen erzeugt, die naturgemäß bisher von den nationalen Rechtsordnungen nicht beantwortet werden mussten. Daher muss eine EU-Charta der Grundrechte notwendigerweise über den Konsens der nationalen Ordnungen hinaus Antworten auf diese europäischen Fragen geben.

Dies betrifft insbesondere das Subsidiaritätsprinzip, das in der sowohl in der Präambel des EU-Vertrages wie auch in Art. 5 des EG-Vertrages unmittelbar im europäischen Primärrecht verankert ist. Da es sich hierbei um ein so tragendes wie grundlegendes Prinzip für die (zukünftige) Entwicklung der Europäischen Union handelt, muss das Subsidiaritätsprinzip auch als bürgerschaftliche Rechtskomponente Aufnahme in die EU-Charta der Grundrechte finden.

Wir schlagen daher vor, dies dadurch anzustreben, dass folgende Textpassage eines "Rechts auf Selbstverwaltung" zur Verwirklichung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips im Verhältnis zum Bürger in die Charta aufgenommen wird:

"Die Europäische Union gewährleistet und fördert das Recht der Bürgerinnen und Bürger, ihre örtlichen Angelegenheiten mit Hilfe kommunaler Gebietskörperschaften selbst effektiv zu gestalten, die über demokratisch legitimierte Beschlussfassungsorgane und eine große Autonomie im Hinblick auf ihre Befugnisse und Mittel verfügen."

Ein bürgerschaftliches Recht auf effektive Gestaltung der örtlichen Angelegenheiten durch demokratisch gewählte Vertretungen ist eine praktische Ausprägung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips. So wie es möglich war, die Inhalte der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention in Artikel 6 des EU-Vertrages aufzunehmen, muss es auch möglich sein, die für die Bürgernähe wesentlichen örtlichen Freiheits- und Gestaltungsrechte in geeigneter Form zu gewährleisten. Dies gilt umsomehr, als die lokale Gestaltung des unmittelbaren Lebensumfeldes ein wichtiger Bestandteil europäischen Kultur- und Politikverständnisses ist.

Vor der Gründung der Nationalstaaten war Europa ein Gebilde aus Städten und Gemeinden. Aus diesen selbstbewussten dezentralen Strukturen ist auch die EU gewachsen. Die in der Charta der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung des Europarates (1988) festgeschriebenen Grundsätze der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung sind allen EU-Mitgliedsstaaten gemein. Diese Charta wurde von nahezu allen EU-Mitgliedsstaaten völkerrechtlich verbindlich ratifiziert. Daher kann bereits davon gesprochen werden, dass die Grundsätze kommunaler Selbstverwaltungstätigkeit zur nationalen Identität der Mitgliedsstaaten im Sinne des Art. 6 Abs. 3 EU-Vertrag zählen.

Der beratende Ausschuss der regionalen und lokalen Gebietskörperschaften in der Europäischen Union (AdR) hat wiederholt ihre Aufnahme in die EG-Verträge gefordert. Dies ist um so notwendiger und nützlicher, als die Charta der kommunalen Selbstverwaltung die erste rechtliche Vereinbarung zwischen europäischen Staaten war, in der das Subsidiaritätsprinzip definiert wird.

Bei dem Subsidiaritätsprinzip handelt es sich um ein sozialphilosophisches Konzept. Es betrifft in grundlegender Weise die Gestaltung einer gesellschaftlichen Kompetenz- und Zuständigkeitsverteilung. Diese Verteilung lässt in erkennbarer Weise Schlüsse für die Zuweisung von Kompetenzen für die über- und untergeordneten Regierungs- und Verwaltungsebenen eines Staates zu. Es wäre somit angemessen, in der EU-Charta der Grundrechte die Grundsätze einer effektiven Gestaltung der örtlichen Lebensverhältnisse als bürgerschaftliche Rechtsposition aufzunehmen.

Der "örtliche Bezug" des Subsidiaritätsprinzips ist bereits heute im EG-Vertrag erwähnt. So gibt bspw. Art. 19 Abs. 1 EG-Vertrag jedem Unionsbürger das aktive und passive Wahlrecht bei Kommunalwahlen. Dieses durch den EG-Vertrag gewährleistete Recht unterstellt denknötwendig eine effektive Gestaltung der Lebensverhältnisse vor Ort durch demokratisch gewählte Vertretungen. Es ist daher nur konsequent, diese Komponente auch in der EU-Charta der Grundrechte anzuerkennen. Schließlich bringt es das Subsidiaritätsprinzip schlechthin zum Ausdruck, dass politische Entscheidungen möglichst bürgernah getroffen werden. Mit einem modernen Grundrecht auf Selbstverwaltung und Subsidiarität betritt man also im EG-Recht nicht grundsätzlich "Neuland".

Der AdR hat in seiner Stellungnahme zur Erarbeitung einer EU-Grundrechtecharta (Dokument CdR 327/99 rev. 1) ebenfalls aufgefordert, ein bürgerschaftliches Recht aufzunehmen, nach dem die örtlichen Angelegenheiten von demokratisch gewählten Vertretungen effektiv wahrgenommen werden können. Dies wird zu dem zutreffend in der Initiativstellungnahme des Ausschusses der Regionen zu dem Thema "Unionsbürgerschaft" (Az.: CdR 226/99 rev. 2) zum Ausdruck gebracht.

Gerade im Zusammenhang mit der Erweiterung der EU nach Mittel- und Osteuropa hat dieser Zusammenhang neue Bedeutung erlangt. Die Beitrittsstaaten legen großen Wert auf die Kultivierung lokaler und regionaler Demokratie, gerade und auch im EU-Zusammenhang. Durch eine möglichst bürgernahe Politik in der EU erfolgt zudem eine Stärkung der Europäischen Integration. Der Formulierungsvorschlag des Deutschen Städte- und Gemeindebundes für ein Recht auf Selbstverwaltung als Ausprägung des Subsidiaritätsprinzips überlässt es zudem ganz im Sinne des Subsidiaritätsprinzips den Mitgliedsstaaten und Regionen selbst, wie die konkrete Ausgestaltungen örtlicher Demokratie erfolgen soll.

Wir würden Sie daher sehr gerne darum bitten, sehr geehrter Herr Bundespräsident a.D. Professor Dr. Herzog, sich im Sinne unseres Vorschlags beim weiteren Prozess der Erarbeitung der EU-Charta der Grundrechte einzusetzen.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

(Dr. Gerd Landsberg)

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 8 mai 2000CHARTE 4276/00*CONTRIB 149*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint le texte de l'intervention de l'OCIFE à l'occasion de l'audition du 27 avril 2000.^{1 2}

¹ Pierre de Charentenay, Directeur de l'OCIFE (Bureau européen des jésuites)
3 rue de Trévires, 1040 Bruxelles. Tél. 737 97 22.

² Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

Audition de l'OCIPE à la Convention de la Charte des droits fondamentaux
27 avril 2000

Je veux d'abord approuver le travail déjà fait par la Convention et appuyer tout ce processus de rédaction d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux. Ces droits doivent être défendus et leur mise en forme est une étape politique essentielle pour l'Europe.

Mais mon propos voudrait insister sur la dimension collective de notre vie commune. Le bien de la communauté politique européenne ne sera pas automatiquement servi par une juxtaposition des droits individuels. Cette juxtaposition risque d'isoler les individus, voire de les opposer les uns aux autres, en tout cas de briser le lien de solidarité sans lequel il n'y a pas de société humaine. Nous avons tous besoin de relations, de communauté autant que du respect de nos droits individuels. Quelle société européenne aurons nous construit, si nous préparons des vies protégées mais dans la solitude et l'ignorance mutuelle ? Nous aurons renforcé le côté négatif de la modernité de plus en plus individualiste en augmentant l'anomie et l'isolement dans lesquels vit chaque citoyen. Dans ce contexte, une défense absolue des droits individuels risque de favoriser les effets pervers d'éclatement de nos sociétés comme si l'individu pouvait vivre seul au monde.

Or notre modèle européen est un modèle unique d'équilibre qui allie le respect de l'individu et de la communauté. Il n'est ni entièrement dominé par le seul souci de l'individu, ni entièrement dominé par la seule préoccupation de la communauté. Ainsi les individus ont-ils des obligations vis-à-vis de la collectivité. Quant à la communauté, elle a aussi des droits, même si elle n'a pas tous les droits. La dignité humaine, fondement des droits, ne peut être réalisée et protégée que dans le cadre d'une vie en communauté. C'est là dessus que la Charte doit prendre position en soulignant l'obligation sociale des individus et le droit correspondant de chaque citoyen à une vie relationnelle, une vie communautaire humaine

Si cette charte doit être au moins aussi exigeante que tous les grands textes précédant elle ne peut pas faire moins que la Déclaration Universelle des droits de l'homme de 1948 qui dans son article 1 invite tous les êtres humains " à agir les uns envers les autres dans un esprit de fraternité "

C'est dans cet esprit que je propose que soit rédigé un court préambule à cette charte, dont je vous mets un projet ci-dessous:

Préambule

Les peuples de l'Union Européenne se dotent d'une Charte des droits fondamentaux pour manifester à tous, citoyens d'Europe et citoyens du monde, les valeurs qui sont les leurs et qu'ils veulent promouvoir autant dans leurs frontières qu'à l'extérieur. Ces droits sont fondés sur le respect de la dignité humaine. Ils trouvent leur expression dans une vie sociale et politique, et dans la possibilité pour chaque citoyen de constituer des communautés de vie et de travail. Ne pouvant être réalisés que par l'action déterminée de chacun, ces droits forment un ensemble de tâches à accomplir dont la première est l'exigence de solidarité et de fraternité. Dans le respect des différences, tous les citoyens de l'Union européenne sont acteurs et bénéficiaires de ces droits pour former ensemble une communauté politique.

Pierre de Charentenay

OCIPE

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNE

fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 12 mai 2000

CHARTE 4277/00

CONTRIB 150

NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint une contribution du Centre Européen des Entreprises à Participation Publique et des Entreprises d'Intérêt Économique Général (CEEP) ^{1 2}

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française seulement.

² CEEP: rue de la Charité 15 boîte 12, B-1210 Bruxelles. Tél: +32-2-219 2798.
Fax: +32-2-218 1213. E-mail: CEEP@interweb.be

CENTRE EUROPEEN DES ENTREPRISES
 À PARTICIPATION PUBLIQUE
 ET DES ENTREPRISES
 D'INTÉRÊT ÉCONOMIQUE GÉNÉRAL
 EUROPEAN CENTRE OF ENTERPRISES WITH PUBLIC PARTICIPATION AND OF ENTERPRISES
 OF GENERAL ECONOMIC INTEREST

CEEP.00/S.P.05
 Le 5 mai 20000

CONTRIBUTION DU CENTRE EUROPÉEN DES ENTREPRISES À PARTICIPATION PUBLIQUE ET DES ENTREPRISES D'INTÉRÊT ÉCONOMIQUE GÉNÉRAL (CEEP)

Droits fondamentaux et services d'intérêt général

Parmi les droits fondamentaux, on peut distinguer les droits de nature constitutionnelle tels que le droit d'expression, le droit d'association, ... qui sont affirmés par des textes de portée juridique, et que les citoyens peuvent exercer individuellement ou collectivement. Aucune structure particulière n'est nécessaire pour permettre l'exercice de ces droits. Si un citoyen considère que ses droits sont bafoués, il a la possibilité de s'adresser directement au pouvoir judiciaire pour faire cesser le trouble.

Mais il existe d'autres types de droits, principalement dans le domaine économique et social, qui constituent en fait des objectifs, tels le droit à la santé, à l'éducation, au logement, les droits d'accès à des moyens de communication, de déplacement, Ces droits sont des objectifs pour nos sociétés démocratiques, dont la mise en oeuvre est assurée par des services. Ces services ont des caractéristiques particulières, notamment en ce qui concerne l'égalité d'accès, et la continuité de service, et des modalités d'organisation et de gestion dont les principes doivent être définis et contrôlés par l'autorité publique, principalement dans les domaines de la sécurité, la tarification, et la qualité de service. Ce sont des services d'intérêt général .

Les droits fondamentaux doivent être garantis

Affirmer les droits fondamentaux des citoyens suppose que des mesures efficaces sont prises pour en assurer le respect.

En ce qui concerne les droits qui peuvent être exercés directement par les citoyens, la garantie de l'exercice de ces droits est assurée par un texte ayant une portée juridique permettant l'accès individuel au tribunal compétent.

Lorsque les droits nécessitent l'accès à un service d'intérêt général, il appartient à l'autorité publique compétente d'organiser ce service en respectant certains critères dont les principaux ont été évoqués précédemment. Si cette organisation est défailante, le recours aux tribunaux n'est possible que dans des cas limités (discrimination individuelle par exemple).

La nécessité d'un document de référence au niveau européen concernant les services d'intérêt général

Si des droits fondamentaux basés sur des services d'intérêt général sont affirmés au niveau de l'Union Européenne, un texte doit être établi au même niveau pour définir les principes régissant ces services, afin d'assurer une garantie et cohérence minimales concernant l'exercice de ces droits au niveau européen, et de servir de référence aux Etats candidats à l'adhésion. Il faut souligner qu'il n'existe actuellement même pas une définition commune de la notion de service d'intérêt général, et que le seul texte officiel est une communication de 1996 de la Commission Européenne, qui ne traite qu'une partie du sujet et qui n'a pas de portée réglementaire.

Ce texte de référence pourrait prendre la forme d'une Charte des Services d'Intérêt Général.

Le CEEP demande à la Convention de prendre en considération cette lacune, en préconisant dans ses conclusions la préparation d'une Charte des Services d'Intérêt Général comme complément indispensable de la Charte des Droits Fondamentaux.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 8 May 2000CHARTE 4278/00*CONTRIB 151*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the intervention by the Franciscans (Commission for Justice, Peace and Integration of Creation) made at the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

Dear Ladies and gentlemen, members of the European Parliament

We appreciate the chance that you give the Franciscan movement, to contribute to the Charter intended to improve and guarantee the rights of the people in the European Union. We stand in the tradition of St. Francis of Assisi respecting all life.

Related to the Tampere paper “Franciscans International”, the NGO of the Franciscan family together with the International Catholic Migration Commission, intervened during the 56th U.N. Human Rights commission on the question of migrant workers informing the Commission of the seminar: “Europe: an area of freedom, security and justice?”(10 and 11 April 2000). The seminar on European Refugee and Migration Policy brought 90 participants together mostly from Church based organizations all over Europe. Human Dignity, inalienable, indivisible and inherent to every human being, no matter where they come from or which legal status they may enjoy, was at the centre of all our reflections during these two days. In our view, the respect for Human Dignity implies a specific approach to the different policy areas. We are glad to see, that this value is also reflected in the Charter. Values need to be fed by a spirituality that strengthen people to fulfill human values. Some results of the conference I will share with you:

- Refugees and Asylum seekers: Among the Member States of the European Union, there is a need for harmonized asylum procedures as well as a common refugee definition. Together with decent reception conditions there is a need to respect the basic rights of every refugee or asylum applicant. These measures will not only help refugees in an uncertain situation, but also prevent an “Asylum Shopping” in different Member States. According to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the notion of security does not only apply to the States but also every human being. In this context, we are concerned about the European Union’s readmission policy with regard to States where the security of the refugee cannot be guaranteed.
- Migrants: We call for a positive approach to Migration, which is, and always has been be an important benefit in our societies. The present lack, in many European Countries, of a coherent immigration legislation has a role to play in forcing people to use the asylum corridor to immigrate, and eventually get into an illegal situation. Our economies make large profit from migrants, not only by importing highly qualified specialists, but also by implicitly accepting the system’s need for clandestine, low-qualified and badly-paid labour force. In this context, we may never forget the dignity of every migrant who is often in search for a better life for him- or herself and his/her family.
- Trafficked Women and Children. Our concern goes to the victims of trafficking who are the weakest of all, having been humiliated, raped and consequently deprived of the most basic rights. They are often traumatized and need long term protection, legal and social assistance. They should be entitled to a permanent legal resident status, not to be limited to the sole purpose of serving as witnesses against the traffickers. Trafficking with human beings is a world business with high profit and low risk, compared to the trafficking with drugs and weapons. Traffickers who use coercion should undergo severe punishment, the confiscated money being used to provide help to the victims. However, as long as no coercion is used, trafficking might be the only hope for a refugee to get to the European Union. It is therefore indispensable to ensure the access to EU territory in order to provide for the examination of an asylum claim. This element finally shows the close links that exist between the different policies needed to create an area of freedom, security and justice for all.

Point 3 on page 10 of the charter speaks about the treatment of refugees. I suppose, this also means, that the so-called Dublin claimants and the repeated asylum seekers have the right for a shelter, food etc. We experience that these refugees have not always access to this rights in the Netherlands and sometimes not always in other European countries.

The procedures do not give people a citizen status for years resulting in psychological damages and other trauma.

In the whole discussion on migration we see the reduction of human beings to an economic factor: In fact to buy computer specialist in Poland and India without giving European citizens rights is a form of colonialism; could be experienced as a new form of colonialism human knowledge from the south to the industrialized Northern countries.

As a catholic worker priest in Berlin last year proved a lot of people who work illegal are exploited: low wages and the total lack of social security.

Women and children are trafficked for the sex industry. As soon as they are found they have no right of protection nor the necessary support for the trial against the traffickers and for their own rehabilitation. They have been abused by citizens of Europe.

Some examples: I know a case of a young 17 year old woman, who did not get sufficient support from the German authorities to proceed against traffickers in the Netherlands. She wanted to stay on a safe place in Germany.

A Dutch woman from Moroccan origin does not get the necessary protection against her family, who do not accept her independence. Human Rights means direct protection without any reserve.

Human Rights means, that a human being is more than a economic asset or a juridical entity.

Asylum seekers don't have the same rights and obligations as other people and the authorities. If a asylum seeker don't observe the rules and the terms, he or she loses his or her case. However, if the authorities don't observe the rules and the terms there often are no sanctions.

Man and woman ought to have the same right in the asylum procedure.

Refugees should have the right to visit their family, if the family lives in another region or country.

A citizen of Europe can contribute to the society. A asylum seeker has no right to contribute to his or her stay during the procedure by looking for work: a strange situation, that encourages and stimulates xenophobia. This prescription prevents asylum seekers having the possibility contributing to the society they live in.

Human Rights means, that anyone, who has a legal status has the right to marry without restrictions. Very often Government officials, who have to judge the story of an asylum seeker, are of the opinion, that every asylum seeker is a liar, unless he proves the opposite.

So we agree with your viewpoint on page 46: the Charter has to cover anyone in the territory of the Union, which includes foreigners and, in particular, immigrants.

On page 21 you talk about the right on peace. Therefore I ask you to support the European Network for Civil Peace Services, that wants to intermediate in areas of conflicts.

Economic sanctions referred to on page 48 function only with the support of opposition leaders, who are recognized as decent women and men. With regard to foreign policy we have to realize the consequences of our colonial past until now. This is also important for economic relations and trade.

I suppose, that this charter will function as international law so that the member states are obliged to implement this Charter. We agree with conclusion 4 on page 50.

Good and just rights will prevail.

Two other points: Equality of the person with regard to the law and Human Rights can't imply differentiation between rich and poor. We see that people with money can protract a procedure while people with little money are forced to stop their procedure for the court. Security means also traffic security. That gives the authorities the obligation to make traffic more secure. Last weekend (Eastern) until Sunday evening here in Belgium were already 14 people killed by accidents.

We want to contribute further if you so wish.
Peace and all Good.
Louis Bohte ofm

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 8 May 2000CHARTE 4279/00*CONTRIB 152*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a letter from the Marangopoulos Foundation for Human Rights to the Convention.¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

To the Convention elaborating the Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights
of the European Union

By this letter the Marangopoulos Foundation for Human Rights, which enjoys consultative status with the UN [ECOSOC (special), DPI], the UNESCO (official relations) and the Council of Europe, expresses its support to the AFEM proposals concerning the European Human Rights Charter (CONTRIB 105 in conjunction with CONTRIB 42).

We would be grateful if you could transmit this letter to the President and the members of the Convention and have it published on the website of the Convention.

Sincerely,

Prof. Alice Yotopoulos-Marangopoulos
President of the Foundation

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNE

fundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 5 mai 2000
(OR. d)

CHARTE 4281/00

CONTRIB 154

NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après les observations concernant les documents CHARTE 4149/00 CONVENT 13, CHARTE 4137/00 CONVENT 8, CHARTE 4170/00 CONVENT 17, CHARTE 4192/00 CONVENT 18, CHARTE 4193/00 CONVENT 19, CHARTE 4227/00 CONVENT 26 et CHARTE 4235/00 CONVENT 27, élaborées par le gouvernement, le ministère des affaires étrangères et le ministère de la justice de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.¹

¹ Ce texte est présenté en langue allemande et en langue française.

Berlin, le 26 avril 2000

Observations concernant les documents Convent 13, 8, 17, 18, 19, 26, 27

Article 13 Vie familiale (Convent 13)

Modification possible : Complément éventuel concernant les communautés de vie (par exemple : "Les communautés de vie établies de façon durable ont un droit à la protection contre la discrimination").

Article 16 Droit à l'éducation (Convent 13)

Observation : Se pose la question du lien avec l'article sur la formation et l'orientation professionnelles, article X (Convent 18).

Article 13 Liberté de réunion et d'association (Convent 8)

Observation : Se pose la question du lien avec les dispositions relatives aux partis, article B (Convent 17), et aux syndicats, article IV (Convent 18).

Article 14 Droit d'accès aux informations (Convent 8)

Proposition de modification : Au lieu de "institutions de l'Union européenne", adopter une formulation plus proche du texte de l'article 255 : "...droit d'accès aux documents du Parlement européen, du Conseil et de la Commission."...

Article 15 Protection des données (Convent 8)

Modification possible : La formulation pourrait être plus axée sur le droit des personnes à déterminer ce qui peut être fait des données les concernant (par exemple : "Toute personne a le droit de décider elle-même de la divulgation et de l'utilisation de ses données personnelles, ainsi que d'obtenir des informations sur l'enregistrement de ces mêmes données, dans la mesure où les droits de tiers ne s'y opposent pas.").

Article 16 Droit de propriété (Convent 8)

Modification possible : Dans le texte, on pourrait remplacer "indemnité préalable" par "indemnité octroyée rapidement" ou par une autre formule analogue.

Article 17 Droit d'asile et expulsion (Convent 8)

Observation : Sous réserve de propositions de modification.

Article 19 Non-discrimination (Convent 8)

Observation : Il y aurait lieu de préciser le lien entre ce droit fondamental et l'interdiction des discriminations entre les ressortissants des États membres, article J (Convent 17).

Article A Principe de démocratie (Convent 17)

Proposition de modification : Il y a lieu de renoncer au paragraphe 1, étant donné que la notion de "peuple" ne peut faire l'objet d'un consensus et qu'elle ne renvoie à aucun droit. Au paragraphe 2, on peut supprimer le terme "institutions". Au paragraphe 3, on peut parler des "membres du Parlement européen". Au paragraphe 3, deuxième moitié de la phrase, il serait souhaitable d'ajouter le critère de l'égalité de suffrage.

Article C Droit de participer aux élections du Parlement européen (Convent 17)

Observation : Possibilité de fusionner les articles C et D. Possibilité de renoncer le cas échéant à la deuxième phrase compte tenu de la clause horizontale H 3.

Article D Droit de participer aux élections municipales (Convent 17)

Observation : L'article D peut être fusionné avec l'article C. Possibilité de renoncer le cas échéant à la deuxième phrase compte tenu de la clause horizontale H 3.

Article E Droit à une bonne administration [relations avec l'administration] (Convent 17)

Proposition de modification : Il conviendrait d'ajouter le mot "notamment" ("ce droit comporte notamment...") avant l'énumération qui figure au paragraphe 2, étant donné que celle-ci n'est pas exhaustive. Le cercle des destinataires devrait être étendu à tous les citoyens de l'Union ("Tout citoyen de l'Union et toute personne...").

Article J Non-discrimination (Convent 17)

Observation : Le lien avec d'autres discriminations interdites (Article 19 Convent 8) et la place par rapport à celles-ci restent à préciser.

Article I Égalité entre les hommes et les femmes (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : Le texte devrait parler d'"égalité de traitement" au lieu d'"égalité".

Observation : La possibilité de procéder à une "discrimination positive" pourrait être ouverte dans le cadre de la disposition générale relative à la non-discrimination (actuellement article 19 Convent 8).

Article II Liberté professionnelle (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : Les termes "Toute personne" devraient être remplacés par "Tout citoyen et toute citoyenne de l'Union". Il y aurait alors lieu de supprimer la deuxième moitié de la phrase à partir de "sans préjudice".

Article III Droit à l'information et à la consultation des travailleurs (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : Dans la version allemande, remplacer, dans le titre de l'article "Pflicht zur" par "Recht auf" [cette proposition ne concerne pas le texte français]. Au début du texte doit figurer un "ou" au lieu d'un "et" ("Les travailleurs ou leurs représentants") conformément à l'article 21 de la Charte sociale. Alléger le reste du texte dans la mesure du possible, c'est-à-dire supprimer le membre de phrase commençant par "notamment...".

Article IV Droit d'association, de négociation et d'action collective (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : La deuxième phrase du paragraphe 1 devrait être supprimée. Il serait souhaitable de supprimer la référence au droit de grève.

Article V Droit à une rémunération égale pour un travail égal (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : Devrait être supprimé, car l'article 4 de la version révisée de la Charte sociale, en son point 3, qui concerne ce sujet, a un autre contenu et ce principe ne peut être formulé comme un droit sans que cela pose des problèmes considérables.

Article VI Droit au repos et au congé annuel (Convent 18)

Modification possible : On peut se demander si cet élément mérite de figurer dans la Charte ou s'il entre trop dans les détails.

Article VIII Protection des enfants et des adolescents (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : La limite d'âge de quinze est trop rigide. Il doit pouvoir y avoir des exceptions, comme celles permises par le point 20 de la Charte communautaire des droits sociaux fondamentaux. Les termes "en tout cas" doivent être supprimés. Il sera peut-être nécessaire de modérer encore le texte. Se pose en outre la question de savoir si cette disposition est trop spécifique, ou si ce domaine de protection est couvert par d'autres droits fondamentaux. Une disposition générale relative à la protection des enfants et des adolescents est encore en cours d'examen au sein de la Convention.

Article IX Droit à la protection en cas de licenciement (Convent 18)

Observation : Des exceptions doivent être possibles, pour les petites entreprises comportant jusqu'à cinq salariés et pour les relations de travail durant les six premiers mois, par exemple. Au cas où la clause générale de limitation ne le permettrait pas, la possibilité de faire des exceptions devrait être prévue dans le texte de la disposition.

Article X Droit à la formation et à l'orientation professionnelles (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : Dans l'intitulé, il conviendrait d'ajouter les termes "un accès sans discriminations à" après "Droit à". Par ailleurs, il faut tirer au clair la question du lien avec le droit à l'éducation (actuellement article 16, Convent 13).

Article XI Droit des travailleuses à la protection de la maternité (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : Afin de rendre le texte plus général, il convient d'insérer après "maternité" le mot "approprié" et de supprimer les termes "d'au moins quatorze semaines" : "Toute travailleuse a droit à un congé de maternité approprié avant et/ou après l'accouchement." Reste à savoir si cet élément mérite de figurer dans la Charte et s'il n'est pas trop spécifique.

Article XII Droit au congé parental (Convent 18)

Proposition de modification : Afin de rendre le texte plus général, il convient d'insérer après "parental" le mot "approprié" et de supprimer les termes "d'au moins 3 mois" : "Tout travailleur a droit à un congé parental approprié à la suite de la naissance ou de l'adoption de son enfant." Reste à savoir si cet élément mérite de figurer dans la Charte et s'il n'est pas trop spécifique.

Article XIII Sécurité sociale (Convent 19)

Proposition de modification : Au lieu de "selon les modalités", formuler de la manière suivante : "selon la situation juridique."

Article XIV Droit à l'aide sociale (Convent 19)

Proposition de modification : Au lieu de "ressources suffisantes", mieux vaut opter pour "ressources nécessaires". Ajouter le cas échéant le droit à une aide permettant d'accéder à un logement convenable.

Article XV Droit à l'accès aux soins de santé (Convent 19) Observation : Problème des destinataires (compétences de l'Union).

Article XVI Droit des personnes âgées à la protection sociale (Convent 26)

Observation : La question du lien de cet article avec la protection sociale en général pourrait être soulevée.

Article XVII Droits des personnes handicapées à l'insertion sociale et professionnelle (Convent 26)

Observation : Le texte pourrait par la suite être formulé de manière à être plus proche de l'article 19, paragraphe 2 (Convent 8), et même y être éventuellement inséré.

Article XVIII Droit des travailleurs migrants à l'égalité de traitement (Convent 26)

Observation : Ce texte pose un problème, parce qu'il fonde un droit dont ne bénéficient que des pays tiers. Se pose par ailleurs la question de sa place par rapport aux autres dispositions relatives à la non-discrimination.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 2 May 2000CHARTE 4282/00*CONTRIB 155*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the presentation by the General Council of the Bar of England and Wales at the hearing on 27 April 2000.^{1 2}

¹ General Council of the Bar of England and Wales Brussels Office: Avenue de la Joyeuse Entree 1, B-1040 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-230 4810. Fax: +32-2-230 4596.

² This text has been submitted in English language only.

Charter of Fundamental rights, Hearing, April 27

Bar Council of England and Wales contribution

On February 9, 2000 the Bar Council International Relations Committee submitted a 13 page paper to the House of Lords Select Committee, (Upper House of the British Parliament) which was at the time considering a number of questions about the Charter, and had sought the Bar's opinion. That document was submitted by the Bar to the Convention in advance of this hearing, and I refer you to it for a detailed exposé of our position.

Some of the main points arising are :

- * The Tampere Council's objective to "consolidate" the fundamental rights applicable at Union level "in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens" is not necessarily best served by the creation of a new charter.
- * Expansion of human rights protection could be achieved by other means, including the extension of the ECJ's jurisdiction to second and third pillar matters, and the development of the jurisprudence in line with existing conventions, as has happened in relation to the ECHR. The Bar also believes that, in any event, the Community should become a signatory to the Convention.
- * We are concerned, apart from anything else, not to give the wrong signal to non-EU signatories and potential signatories to the Convention.
- * Treaty status - we consider that this question is of more political and constitutional significance than legal - treaty status is not an essential pre-requisite to improving the effectiveness of judicial human rights protection in the Union.

However, since that document was drafted, the voices in favour of having a Charter, which will be incorporated into the Treaties, seem to have become louder. Accordingly, whilst I commend to you the Bar's submitted paper which sets out the debate, today I would like to mention a few practical concerns that we have, based on that assumption.

Justicability and enforceability

The Bar, being an independent referral profession, has the scope, possibly more than almost any other branch of the legal profession, apart from those in large law firms, to specialise. However, even those who validly claim to be specialists in the field of human rights experience difficulty from time-to-time in dealing with national human rights protection and the Convention system.

A third layer of Community law, differing from the others, would result in great confusion for all - most especially for the very citizens we are supposed to be serving.

It is essential to ensure that the Charter is uncomplicated to understand and does not increase legal complexity.

New rights - provided they are clearly drafted, we do not choose to comment on them substantively at this point.

However, any rights that are already covered by the Convention should be incorporated in exactly the form in which they are already familiar from that.

Areas of confusion over jurisdiction, notably between the European Court of Human rights ("ECHR") and the European Court of Justice ("ECJ"):

Situation when the rights are the same or similar to those in the European Convention are incorporated into the Charter,

- * What force of law will the jurisprudence of the ECHR have?
- * How can it be ensured that the courts develop consistent jurisprudence hereafter?
- * If there are contradictions, which will have precedence?
- * Could we end up with a situation where national courts could cherry-pick between them?
- * If the same issue is before both courts at the same time, which, if either, should stay the procedure pending the others' decision?
- * Where does this leave us in advising clients both within the EU and outside?

New rights

- * If an issue is within the scope of EU law, will new rights apply?
- * If it is outside the scope of EU law but within that of the European Convention will the new rights still apply? Again, what if there is a conflict with Strasbourg?

Balance of Powers

In its 1999 judgement in the Matthews case, the ECHR took the dramatic stance of striking down a Treaty article for breach of the Convention.

* Is the ECJ to be able to do the same?

* What effect will that have on the balance of powers? - Member States would no longer hold sole power to change the Treaty?

Thank you.

Evanna Fruithof
General Council of the Bar of England and Wales,
Brussels Office
Ave de la Joyeuse Entrée 1 - 5,
B-1040

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 8 May 2000CHARTE 4283/00*CONTRIB 156*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the statement by Food First Information and Action Network (FIAN-International) for Forum Menschenrechte given at the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Public Hearing of the Convent

April, 27th 2000, Brussels

Contribution by Michael Windfuhr, Executive Director,
FIAN – FoodFirst Information and Action Network

For Forum Menschenrechte (German Forum for Human Rights)

Today, Forum Menschenrechte, which was founded in connection with the 1993 Conference for Human Rights in Vienna, is bringing together 40 German human rights organisations. The Forum Menschenrechte has been following the debate on the fundamental rights in the European Union and since 1997 has been calling for a Charter of Fundamental Rights¹.

Forum Menschenrechte has formulated a joint statement on the Charter which has been presented to the German members of the Charter, and which can be obtained from the homepage of the European Council. Forum Menschenrechte has asked Michael Windfuhr from FIAN to represent the German human rights organisations in the hearing of the Convent.

FIAN (FoodFirst Information and Action Network) was founded in 1986 by human rights activists in Belgium, Germany and Sweden with the aim of establishing an international human rights organisation concerned with the question of the implementation of social, economic and cultural human rights (esc-rights). As the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural rights comprises of a variety of rights, the founding members of FIAN decided to focus the mandate of FIAN on the right to adequate food (Article 11 of the Covenant). Currently, FIAN-International has sections and co-ordinating bodies in 20 countries, and members in about 60 countries. FIAN has advisory status with the United Nations, as well as with the OAU and the European human rights system.

Why include economic rights in the Charter of Fundamental Rights?

Essentially, there are five arguments for the inclusion of economic rights in the Charter. These should be mentioned here, before discussing the arguments that are commonly levelled against the inclusion of economic rights in the Charter, especially the lack of justiciability.

¹ See documentation of the congress held in 1997 „Für ein Europa der politischen und sozialen Rechte“ Forum Menschenrechte, Materialien Nr. 8

Five arguments for the inclusion of economic rights in the Charter of fundamental rights:

1. The defence of human dignity calls for the recognition of the indivisibility of human rights

In the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the signatory states obligate themselves to the “creation of a world in which the human beings, free from fear and need, enjoy the freedom of speech and belief.” This statement has its origin in the observation that social crisis has commonly been one of the factors in promoting rises in fascism. These words of the preamble of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights are pointing to the close connection between, and the common reference of, both civil-political, and economic, social and cultural human rights, which is manifesting itself in the concept of human dignity. In 1966, the United Nations finalised the adoption of two treaties codifying human rights, making them legally binding – the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Both became effective in 1976, bound together by a joint preamble that emphasises the indivisibility of human rights: “The ideal of free human beings enjoying civil and political freedom and freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy his civil and political rights, as well as his economic, social and cultural rights.”

2. The division of human rights is undermining the effective protection of human rights

Additional to the historical reasons for the emphasis on the indivisibility of human rights, practical experiences has made it mandatory for human rights organisations to defend the indivisibility of human rights. Those who are facing political persecution and discrimination are often activists, trade unionists etc., who are engaging themselves in the defence of economic, social and cultural rights.

Working with organisations in the defence of the human right to food, FIAN is on a daily basis experiencing this close relationship. For the victims of human rights violations, any differentiation in classes of human rights is irrelevant. They experience both types of threats as what they are: a violation of their dignity as human beings.

3. Lately, the idea of the indivisibility of human rights has experienced impressive support

The indivisibility of human rights is part of the consensus on which the international treaties in the field of human rights are based. Following this tradition, the 1993 Vienna Conference on human rights again emphasised the indivisibility of human rights – “All rights are universal, indivisible, and interdependent and interrelated.” This basic consensus has led to an immense improvement in the recognition of esc-rights during the last 15 years. A lot of new constitutions have placed esc-rights alongside civil-political rights. The work on esc-rights within the human rights system of the United Nations has developed dramatically since the end of the 1980s. In the African, inter-American and European human rights systems, esc-rights have naturally been integrated, and the inter-American and the European system have even developed an appeal procedure.

4. A Charter of Fundamental Rights lacking economic human rights would be a step backward and a precarious international signal

Until today, 50 years after the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the indivisibility of human rights has not been realised neither in state practice or in the human rights instruments of the United Nations and in public consciousness. Translating this human rights mandate into practice has to be the central aim of a modern human rights system. A Charter of Fundamental Rights lacking economic human rights would throw us back 20 years in the understanding of human rights and would call into question the results of the Vienna Conference. For the human rights system this would weigh more heavily than the questioning of human rights using cultural arguments. States responsible for massive violations of economic, social and cultural rights could point to an European Charter lacking economic rights in defence of their actions.

5. All EU member states have accepted the protection and the fulfilment of esc-rights as binding obligations

In all EU member states, esc-rights have been accepted for a long time already, and are therefore part of the state obligations of the EU countries. In addition, the EU members have supported the European Social Charter and have ratified a variety of other conventions which explicitly and implicitly include esc-rights, and which therefore imply obligations for the EU member states. These are for example the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as a variety of conventions of the ILO. During several World Summits throughout the 1990s, the EU member states have declared their intention to implement esc-rights (World Population Summit, World Social Summit, etc). It is therefore obvious that they have taken on the responsibility to respect, to protect and to fulfil these rights when also acting within the framework of the European Union. This is even more important as decisions on the EU-level have direct influence on the fulfilment of the esc-rights of those people resident in the member states of the European Union.

Discussion of arguments and problems which are levelled against the inclusion of esc-rights in the Charter of Fundamental Rights

Below are the series of arguments which are generally levelled against esc-rights, some of which can be found also in the discussion on the Charter

The first argument questioning the nature of esc-rights as fundamental and human rights is the high costs connected with the fulfilment of these rights. In order to provide all people with access to adequate food, housing, education and health services, massive investment and economic development is needed. Another argument closely connected with the one of high costs is a justiciable one, dealing with the nature of esc-rights. All rights have to be directly implementable. Esc-rights, on the other hand, are said to be implementable only over a long period of time and are therefore to be seen as political goals, not as rights. Another conclusion on the different legal nature of the two groups of human rights is that civil-political human rights are first of all ‘negative rights’ protecting the individual against abuse of state power, while esc-rights call for an active role of the state in their implementation and are therefore called ‘positive rights’. From this point of view, the writing-down of esc-rights as directly implementable fundamental rights would restrict the states too much politically and would reduce political fields of action.

The rest of this text will deal with the counter arguments to these assumptions. At the centre is the change in direction that has been achieved in the human rights system dealing with esc-rights during the last few years. This change in direction has coincided with several other developments supporting this change: the end of the Cold War, the growing demands for economic rights by NGOs; the creation of an UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights that is equal in status to the UN Human Rights Committee; and the strengthening of esc-rights in the regional human rights systems.

1. The legal nature of esc-rights is not different from civil-political rights: they comprise of state obligations on three levels

The starting point of this change in direction lies with the growing experience of concrete cases of violations of esc-rights that have been documented by NGOs and by the UN bodies working on human rights. Of course, not every hungry or illiterate person is the victim of human rights violations. However, the influence of wrong or missing state intervention on the number of hungry, illiterate and homeless people is very high. State forces are often directly involved when people are evicted from their land or when homes are destroyed for urban development. They do not act when peasants are violently thrown from their land by the owners of large estates, when wages are paid below the minimum wage or when certain groups are denied their right to work. Often, they only use a percentage of available resources to enable people without any income to get access to productive resources.

These examples illustrate that the old judicial opposition of negative and positive rights cannot be justified objectively. Esc-rights do not essentially obligate states to anything different from civil-political rights:

1. The respect of existing possibilities for participation, both political and economic, meaning the respect of an individual’s physical integrity as well as freedom of profession or the access to land (obligation to respect)
2. The protection of the individual by legal systems and the police, for example the freedom to act politically as well as the freedom to use resources for economic purposes (freedom from corruption, security of land titles, protection of the tenant etc.) (obligation to protect).
3. State action to create supportive frameworks for the fulfilment of human rights, this means the reduction of destructive frameworks and the creation of supportive ones (obligation to fulfil).

2. The costs of implementing esc-rights are not necessarily higher than implementing civil-political rights

Civil-political rights call for the same state involvement and are in the same way impossible to be realised without money. No state can immediately guarantee free access to land to everyone the same as no state can immediately guarantee an independent judiciary based on fair trial. The number of human rights specialists and of NGOs who, in agreement with the results from the Vienna Conference, see an end to the differential interpretation of the two Covenants and who only see slight differences in the degree of the obligations to respect, to protect and to fulfil, is growing rapidly. Human rights law both obligate states to refrain from violating human rights and to pursue an active policy aimed at fulfilling these rights. The implementation of esc-rights does not call for the revival or the cementing of a centralised supplier state, but for the creation of opportunities and the protection of social and economic participation for everyone.

3. esc-rights are often seen as second-class rights, as their complete fulfilment can be achieved only step by step or gradually. However, this is also the case with other fundamental rights that belong to the group of civil-political rights (For example non-discrimination of men and women). In the same way as these rights, esc-rights should be recognised as fundamental rights, even if their fulfilment can be achieved only gradually.

The protection of fundamental rights can therefore not be restricted to directly implementable and justiciable rights but has to be comprehensive. The line deviding directly implementable and justiciable rights does not lie between civil-political rights and esc-rights but between the possibility for direct realisation of different levels of state obligations resulting from human rights. The obligations to respect and to protect are largely directly implementable and justiciable.

4. esc-rights are largely directly implementable, so one cannot talk of a lack of justiciability

In its legal commentary on the nature of state obligations in relation to esc-rights (General Comment No. 3), the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has pointed out that many obligations resulting from the esc-rights are directly realisable, for example all anti-discriminatory measures. The state obligations to respect and protect these rights are largely directly implementable and justiciable.

5. The nature of esc-rights should generally not be questioned using the argument that for their full implementation positive state action is needed. The availability of state social security forms the basic content of esc rights and should also be at the core of the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

The realisation of civil-political rights also requires positive state action, without their legal nature being called into question. Should the fulfilment bound obligations on esc rights be excluded from the Charter as they can only be realised gradually and consequently represent political goals rather than rights?

Answering this question, we have to make the difference of whether we are talking about the implementation of basic standards or about the full realisation of these rights. In its previous work, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has made explicit that the obligation to fulfil first of all obligates the state to identify all groups at risk and to design policies to support them. If the state fails to do so, it has already violated the right concerned (for example the right of minorities to access education services). Furthermore, the Committee has developed the concept of “core content” (for the right to education: access to primary education), which implies that basic services should be provided by all states irrespective of their level of development. International jurists have impressively supported this in the Maastricht Guidelines. In our opinion, in the Charter of Fundamental Rights, the right to a living wage should be read as the core content of the right to an adequate standard of living.

The question of available resources for the implementation of esc-rights becomes relevant only beyond the fulfilment of the core content. The full realisation of the right to education requires more financial resources. In article 2, the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights calls for the use of the “maximum of available resources”. This full implementation can certainly only be included in the Charter as a political goal, so that the state’s freedom to act is not restricted too much. However, the progressive full implementation of esc-rights has to be supplemented with benchmarks and has to be monitored regularly.

6. In the international human rights system, esc-rights are provided for with weaker instruments and have been largely neglected by international law. This discrimination against esc-rights should however not be used as an argument for continuing discrimination in the future.

Except for the obligation to report, international law does not know any instruments for enforcement of esc-rights, like a procedure for individual complaint. This means that no case law has been developed. The inter-American and the European human rights systems have in the meantime accepted procedures for individual complaints. Concerning the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, an optional protocol to the Covenant is currently being considered by the Commission on Human Rights.

Again and again, it is suggested that esc-rights are not formulated in a precise legal manner, because the relevant clauses in the Covenant are not exact. Again, one can say, that, as with all fundamental rights, interpretation and the development of case law will help develop a more precise understanding. Case law of the ECHR has contributed to an immense improvement in the understanding of these rights. In the field of esc-rights, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has started to develop precise legal commentaries in the form of “General Comments”. The accusation that esc-rights are not well enough defined has its roots in the fact that intensive legal occupation with these rights has only started recently. Case law and legal interpretations will help to overcome this backward nature.

However, there are also other reasons than legal ones responsible for the neglect of esc-rights. Both groups of human rights have been politically instrumentalised during the Cold War. While the Western countries have been referring to the violation of civil-political rights in Eastern Europe, the East was pointing to the neglect of economic and social rights in the West (like unemployment and homelessness). This political take-over has thoroughly influenced the understanding and education on human rights. In Western countries, the public understanding and media coverage of human rights is dominated by the focus on civil-political rights like the right to be free from torture, death penalty and political oppression.

7. The inclusion of esc-rights in the Charter will not extend the responsibilities of EU institutions beyond those laid down in the EU treaties. The aim of including esc-rights is firstly to ensure that all the esc-rights of those resident within the EU are not violated by decisions taken on the European level.

Especially in the field of the fulfilment of esc-rights, the EU has already far-reaching legal capabilities. The accountability of policies of all organs of the EU and the member states is very important, especially as the economic frameworks are largely determined at the European level. Esc-rights imply negative rights, protecting all residents in the EU against the possible negative implications of EU-policy on the application of these rights.

The European citizens and all those resident within the EU, will not understand and accept the implied set-back in the protection of their rights if the Charter does not include the respect, the protection and the fulfilment of their economic, social and cultural rights.

Conclusion

- Through their commitment to human rights, states are obligated to not violate these rights and to actively pursue their fulfilment. The implementation of esc-rights does not call for the revival or the cementing of a centralised supplier state, but for the creation of opportunities and the protection of social and economic participation for everyone.

- A Charter of Fundamental Rights lacking economic human rights would throw us back 20 years in the understanding of human rights and would call into question the results of the Vienna Conference. For the human rights system this would weigh more heavily than the questioning of human rights using cultural arguments. States responsible for massive violations of economic, social and cultural rights could point to an European Charter lacking economic rights in defence of their actions.

Editors' note to CHARTE 4286/00,
Common Statement of the Platform of European Social NGOs and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) given at the public hearing on 27/04/00:

See also CHARTE 4324/00.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 12 May 2000CHARTE 4286/00*CONTRIB 158*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a Common Statement of the Platform of European Social NGOs and the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC) participating in the public hearing on 27 April 2000.

1 2

¹ For the names of the NGO's, please refer to page 2.

² This text has been submitted in English language only.

Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM)
ATD Quart Monde
Carrefour pour une Europe civique et sociale (CAFECES)
Collectif sur la Charte des droits fondamentaux
Commission Justice et Paix
Eurolink Age
European Anti Poverty Network (EAPN)
European Movement
European Union Migrant's Forum
Fédération européenne du Personnel des Services Publics (EUROFEDOP)
FONDA pour la vie associative
Franciscans (Commission for Justice, Peace and Integration of Creation)
Initiative "Netzwerk Dreigliederung"
International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims
Office catholique d'information et d'initiative pour l'Europe (OCIPE)
Permanent Forum of Civil Society
Society for Threatened Peoples International
Terre des Hommes France
The European Region of the International Lesbian and Gay Organisation (ILGA)
Union des Fédéralistes Européens (UEF)*
Young European Federalists (JEF)*

* avec le commentaire suivant : "L'élaboration de la Charte des droits fondamentaux doit s'inscrire dans le cadre d'un processus d'élaboration d'une Constitution européenne".

THE QUALITY TEST”

Common Statement of NGOs participating in the Hearing on the Charter of Fundamental Rights Brussels, 27 April 2000.

What the Charter needs to be What that requires

1. An EU Charter, shining beacon across Europe on common values and objectives of peoples sharing the same aspiration to peace, development and freedom, belonging to various faiths, beliefs and civilisations and part of the first planetary generation.

2. A Charter for Women and Men

3. A Charter for all: Citizens, Residents, Migrants, Refugees, Undocumented persons

4. A Charter on essential rights from the Council of Europe, the U.N. and I.L.O agreements

5. A Charter on Individual and Collective Rights,

6. A Charter on the Common Good

- To address the universal character of Fundamental Rights.
- To recognise equality between women and men as a founding principle of the Union
- To use inclusive language.
- To recognise the principle of non discrimination
- To protect the rights of minorities, to use their languages and to transmit their cultures and values in accordance with the Charter
- Never to fall short of agreements even if signed only by some of the EU Member States
- To supplement, strengthen, build on existing rights
- To protect collective rights such as cultural and linguistic rights, the rights of trade unions and associations
- To guarantee a right of consultation for NGOs at the European level
- To recognise access to justice at EU level for NGOs defending the common good and the rights of future generations
- To secure recognition of the common good which is the foundation of a community of persons living together in solidarity and respect
- To give everyone access to the common goods and Public Services, secure transparency in management and participation in the assessment of

7. A Charter on civil and political, social, cultural and ecological rights

- the management
- To declare that the Charter secures indivisible rights
- To recognise and guarantee the right to local self-government
- To guarantee the key programmatic social, environmental, cultural and education rights for all, for the implementation of which
 - (i) indicators and convergence mechanisms need to be designed
 - (ii) a multiannual implementation programme needs to be developed
 - (iii) a system of monitoring, benchmarking and assessment needs to be in place

8. A Charter on Participatory Democracy at European level

- To secure transparency and access to information
- To define participatory democracy rights at EU as well as at local level
- To recognise the right to a democracy based on equality and parity
- A Charter which defines the criteria for strategic impact assessments of EU policies on all those who find themselves affected by EU actions abroad

9. A Charter which inspires the Union in all its external actions.

- The Charter should be legally binding for all the EU Institutions and the Member States.
- Infringement should be examined by the EU Court of Justice and Member State status should be suspended for any State found to be in serious infringement

10. A legally binding Charter

- To be submitted to an indicative vote by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, involving MPs of all EU Applicant Countries
- To ask for an indicative vote of NGOs on the draft Charter
- To pass the above quality test successfully.

11. A Charter adopted by a participatory procedure

12. A Charter to be integrated in the Treaty

The Signatories request the opportunity to have a real debate with the Members of the Convention on 6 June 2000, at the occasion of the “open doors” day organised by the Convention in the EP.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 8 mai 2000CHARTE 4287/00*CONTRIB 159*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-joint l'intervention du Comité européen de coordination de l'habitat social (CECODHAS) faite à l'occasion de l'audition du 27 avril 2000.¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langue française uniquement.

Intervention de J. Berké, au nom du CECODHAS, à la séance d'audition par la convention chargée d'élaborer la charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union Européenne le 27 avril au Parlement européen

Destinataires :

- N. Van Velzen – M. Delebarre
- J. Badet
- P.L. Marty
- Convention

Je me présente, Jacques Berké, vice-président de l'Union nationale HLM et vice-président du CECODHAS, le comité européen de coordination de l'habitat social, présidé par Nico Van Velzen, que je représente aujourd'hui.

Le CECODHAS réunit l'ensemble des fédérations d'organismes qui produisent et gèrent des logements sociaux en Europe. Nous produisons 500.000 logements par an, nous en gérons 20 millions et nous avons vendu ou financé 10 millions de logements en accession ; en résumé nous logeons environ un européen sur 5.

Nous avons examiné avec attention, compte tenu de notre diversité, l'idée d'intégration du droit au logement dans la charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne.

Naturellement, les traités ne reconnaissent pas de compétence à l'Union en matière de logement et nous sommes en faveur du maintien du principe de subsidiarité en ce domaine.

Mais au niveau européen, la charte sociale de 1996 fait déjà référence au droit au logement dans son article 31 ; je la cite : en vue d'assurer l'exercice effectif du droit au logement, les parties s'engagent à prendre des mesures destinées :

- A favoriser l'accès à un logement d'un niveau suffisant,
- A prévenir et à réduire l'état de sans abri en vue de son élimination progressive,
- A rendre le coût du logement accessible aux personnes qui ne disposent pas de ressources suffisantes.

Il y a donc là une première reconnaissance, au niveau européen, du droit au logement.

Nous avons ensuite étudié la situation dans nos différents pays. La référence au droit au logement n'apparaît pas dans toutes les législations du fait notamment des interprétations différentes données à la notion de droit : droit programmatique ou droit sanctionnable ? Nous avons noté que si certains pays n'ont pas inscrit ce droit dans leurs législations, ces mêmes pays vont parfois plus loin que les autres dans la mise en œuvre effective de ce droit pour certains types de populations : je pense en particulier aux femmes seules avec des enfants en Grande Bretagne ou aux sans abri en Allemagne.

Enfin nous avons constaté que la garantie d'un certain nombre d'autres droits passe par la mise en œuvre du droit au logement comme l'a rappelé C. Parmentier tout à l'heure au nom des sans abri : les droits relatifs à la sûreté de la personne, au respect de la vie privée, de la vie familiale, le droit au travail, à l'éducation, à la santé supposent évidemment l'accès à un logement ; la notion même de dignité humaine suppose des conditions décentes d'habitat.

Compte tenu de tous ces éléments, nous avons considéré à l'unanimité des représentants des 15 pays dans notre comité, que le droit au logement devait être reconnu comme un droit de nature programmatique, qui oblige les pouvoirs publics de chaque pays à développer les politiques et mobiliser les moyens qui permettent de favoriser l'accès à un logement décent.

Si ce droit programmatique ne peut être un droit sanctionnable, nous pensons que la mise en œuvre de ce droit passe par le développement d'une politique de logement social que nous avons proposée à la commission européenne de définir ainsi : des logements locatifs ou en accession à la propriété pour lesquels sont définies des règles d'accès en faveur des ménages ayant des difficultés à se loger, ceci précisément afin de favoriser la mise en œuvre du droit au logement.

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 8. Mai 2000CHARTE 4288/00*CONTRIB 160*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend zwei Briefe, die die Jungen Europäischen Föderalisten (JEF) an Herrn Bundespräsident a.d. Roman HERZOG gerichtet haben. ¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache vorgelegt.

internationale
Junge Europäische Föderalisten
Bundesverband

Junge Europäische Föderalisten • Europa-Zentrum •
Bachstraße 32 • D-53115 Bonn

Herrn
Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog
Postfach 860 445

81631 München

Junge Europäische Föderalisten
JEF-Deutschland e.V.

Bundessekretariat
Europa-Zentrum
Bachstraße 32
D-53115 Bonn

Fon: 0228-639328

Fax: 0228-694984

E-mail: info@jef.de

Internet: <http://www.jef.de>

Berlin/Hamburg, 27.11.1999

Arbeit des Grundrechtskonvents

Sehr geehrter Herr Prof. Herzog, zunächst möchten wir Ihnen zu Ihrer Nominierung als Mitglied des Europäischen Grundrechtskonventes als Vertreter des Bundeskanzlers gratulieren.

Wir, die Jungen Europäischen Föderalisten, sind eine in 30 europäischen Staaten aktive, europapolitische, aber parteipolitisch unabhängige Jugendorganisation und haben uns der Förderung der europäischen Integration durch Aktionen, Kampagnen, Seminarveranstaltungen, Vorträgen und Veröffentlichungen verschrieben.

So setzen wir uns seit Jahrzehnten für die Schaffung einer föderalen europäischen Verfassung ein.

1997 haben wir in diesem Zusammenhang die Kampagne für eine europäische Verfassung gestartet und eine virtuelle Arbeitsgruppe Verfassung ins Leben gerufen, die über das Internet Gedanken zu den wünschenswerten Inhalten einer Verfassung für einen Europäischen Bundesstaat austauschte. Die von uns diskutierten Punkte betrafen die Kompetenzverteilung, die Grundprinzipien einer künftigen Europäischen Verfassungsordnung wie Demokratie, Rechtsstaatlichkeit, Menschenrechte, Subsidiarität und Solidarität und v. a. eine umfassende Grundrechtsordnung.

Vorangestellt haben wir unserem Vorschlag demgemäß als Kernpunkt einer künftigen europäischen Verfassung einen Katalog von Grund-, Freiheits- und Verfahrensrechten, den Sie anliegend erhalten.

In diesem Zusammenhang begrüßen wir auch die Einrichtung eines konstitutionellen Ausschusses im neugewählten Europaparlament.

Wir verstehen unsere Arbeit als Input für alle, die an der Schaffung einer europäischen Verfassungsordnung arbeiten und haben uns demgemäß mit Politikern aus Bundestag und Europaparlament in Verbindung gesetzt um ihnen unsere Ideen zu vermitteln.

Zu unserer Freude hat sich zu Beginn der neuen Legislatur des Europäischen Parlaments eine interfraktionelle Intergroup für eine Europäische Verfassung gegründet, der bereits über 130 Abgeordnete angehören.

Wir würden uns freuen, wenn sich auch der europäische Grundrechtskonvent mit unseren Ideen auseinandersetzen und die JEF im Rahmen der Beteiligung von Nichtregierungsorganisationen mit in seine Arbeit einbeziehen würde.

Wir wünschen Ihnen viel Erfolg bei Ihrer Arbeit und verbleiben

mit freundlichen Grüßen

Marc-Oliver Pahl

David Schneider-Addae-Mensah

Bundesvorsitzender

Stv. Bundesvorsitzender

Anlage: Ideen der virtuellen JEF-AG Verfassung zu einem europäischen Grundrechtskatalog

internationale
Junge Europäische Föderalisten
Bundesverband

Junge Europäische Föderalisten • Europa-Zentrum •
Bachstraße 32 • D-53115 Bonn

An den
Europäischen Grundrechtskonvent
c/o Generalsekretariat des Rates
Rue de la Loi 175

B-1049 Bruxelles

Junge Europäische Föderalisten
JEF-Deutschland e.V.
Bundessekretariat
Europa-Zentrum
Bachstraße 32
D-53115 Bonn
Fon: 0228-639328
Fax: 0228-694984
E-mail: info@jef.de
Internet: <http://www.jef.de>

Berlin/Hamburg, 14. März 2000

Arbeit des Grundrechtskonvents

Sehr geehrte Mitglieder des Grundrechtskonvents, wie wir bereits mit Schreiben vom 27.11.1999 an den Vorsitzenden des Grundrechtskonvents, Herrn Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog, auf das wir bedauerlicherweise keine Antwort erhielten, mitteilten, sind wir, die Jungen Europäischen Föderalisten, eine in 30 europäischen Staaten aktive, europapolitische, aber parteipolitisch unabhängige Jugendorganisation.

Wir haben uns der Förderung der europäischen Integration durch Aktionen, Kampagnen, Seminarveranstaltungen, Vorträgen und Veröffentlichungen verschrieben.

So setzen wir uns seit Jahrzehnten für die Schaffung einer föderalen europäischen Verfassung ein.

1997 haben wir in diesem Zusammenhang die Kampagne für eine europäische Verfassung gestartet und eine virtuelle Arbeitsgruppe Verfassung ins Leben gerufen, die über das Internet Gedanken zu den wünschenswerten Inhalten einer Verfassung für einen Europäischen Bundesstaat austauschte.

Die von uns diskutierten Punkte betrafen die Kompetenzverteilung, die Grundprinzipien einer künftigen Europäischen Verfassungsordnung wie Demokratie, Rechtsstaatlichkeit, Menschenrechte, Subsidiarität und Solidarität und v. a. eine umfassende Grundrechtsordnung.

Vorangestellt haben wir unserem Vorschlag demgemäß als Kernpunkt einer künftigen europäischen Verfassung einen Katalog von Grund-, Freiheits- und Verfahrensrechten, den wir bereits an Herrn Prof. Herzog übersandt hatten.

Wir verstehen unsere Arbeit als Input für alle, die an der Schaffung einer europäischen Verfassungsordnung arbeiten und haben uns demgemäß mit Politikern aus Bundestag und Europaparlament in Verbindung gesetzt um ihnen unsere Ideen zu vermitteln.

Zu unserer Freude hat sich zu Beginn der neuen Legislatur des Europäischen Parlaments eine interfraktionelle Intergroup für eine Europäische Verfassung gegründet, der bereits über 130 Abgeordnete angehören.

Wir appellieren an den Konvent, mit seiner Arbeit nicht nur einen weiteren Katalog von Grundrechten zu schaffen, der dann in der Luft hängt.

Vielmehr fordern wir den Prozeß der Grundrechtskodifikation mit jenem der derzeit laufenden Vertragsrevision zu verknüpfen und die von Ihnen erarbeitete Grundrechtscharta bereits in Nizza in den EU-Vertrag zu integrieren. Nur so kann eine echte Union der Bürger entstehen.

Ein wirklich demokratisches Europa braucht eine Verfassung!

Demokratisch gebotene Transparenz in der Europäischen Union erfordert die Auflösung der derzeitigen, verworrenen Vertragssituation und den Übergang von der Vertragslogik zur Verfassungslogik.

Zur wirklichen Demokratisierung der Europäischen Union bedarf es tiefgreifender institutioneller Reformen, die sich nicht in der Bearbeitung der left overs von Amsterdam erschöpfen, sondern ein Europäisches Parlament mit zentraler Bedeutung für die europäische Gesetzgebung schaffen und den Rat zu einer zweiten parlamentarischen Kammer machen.

Nur so wird die Union der 25 oder 30 wirklich überlebensfähig sein.

Ein demokratisches Europa verlangt aber auch eine klare Kompetenzaufteilung zwischen der EU und ihren Mitgliedstaaten, in der durchaus auch der Rückfluß einzelner Zuständigkeiten an die Mitgliedstaaten und Regionen denkbar ist.

Dennoch legen wir größten Wert auf eine exklusive Kompetenz der EU in der Außen- und Verteidigungspolitik und weitgehenden Kompetenzen in der Innen- und Rechtspolitik.

Ein System Weimar muß verhindert werden. D. h. die von Ihnen erarbeiteten Grundrechte der Union müssen einklagbare subjektive Rechte darstellen, weswegen wir die Schaffung einer europäischen Verfassungsgerichtsbarkeit mit entsprechenden Rechtsbehelfen für unabdingbar halten.

Solch tiefgreifende institutionelle Veränderungen sind aber nur im Rahmen einer europäischen Verfassung möglich.

Deshalb fordern wir den Konvent auf, seine Arbeit nicht isoliert zu sehen, sondern als historische Chance zum Einstieg in einen echten Konstitutionalisierungsprozeß in Europa zu begreifen.

Als europaweit agierender Verband möchten wir Sie bitten, uns gemäß dem Kölner Ratsbeschuß künftig stärker in Ihre Arbeit einzubinden.
Nur durch den Kontakt mit gesellschaftlichen Gruppen der Mitgliedstaaten kann eine wirkliche Bürgerverfassung für Europa gelingen.

In diesem Sinne wünschen wir Ihnen und uns allen ein gutes Gelingen der Grundrechtscharta als Grundstein einer künftigen europäischen Verfassung und verbleiben

mit freundlichen Grüßen

Marc-Oliver Pahl

David Schneider-Addae-Mensah

Bundesvorsitzender

Stv. Bundesvorsitzender

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 10. Mai 2000CHARTE 4289/00*CONTRIB 161*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend eine Stellungnahme der Kommission Europa des Deutschen Juristinnenbundes.^{1 2}

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache vorgelegt.

² Deutscher Juristinnenbund: Reuterstraße 241, 53113 D-Bonn. Tel: +49-0228-91510-0.
Fax: +49-0228-211009.

Deutscher
Juristinnenbund

Vereinigung der Juristinnen,
Volkswirtinnen und
Betriebswirtinnen e.V.
Geschäftsstelle

Reuterstraße 241
53113 Bonn
fon: 49 - 228 - 915100
fax: 49 - 228 - 211009
geschaeftsstelle@djbb.
de
www.djbb.de

Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Stellungnahme der Kommission Europa des djbb

Stand: 5. Mai 2000

Die Grundrechtscharta der Europäischen Union wird das Europa der Bürgerinnen und Bürger um einen großen und entscheidenden Schritt voranbringen. Der djbb begrüßt es, wenn hiermit der heute erreichte Grundrechtsstandard niedergeschrieben wird und gleichzeitig die Chance genutzt wird, diesen weiterzuentwickeln, bspw. durch die Aufnahme sozialer Grundrechte.

Ausgangspunkt

Derzeit hat die EU gemäß Art. 6 Abs. 2 EUV die Grundrechte gemäß der EMRK, und wie sie sich aus den gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten ergeben, zu achten. Hierzu liegt bereits umfangreiche Rechtsprechung des EuGH vor.

Fortentwicklung

Es ist allerdings zu beachten, daß die EMRK nicht mehr den aktuellsten Stand der europäischen Grundrechtskultur formuliert; so weist sie z.B. Lücken beim Gleichheitssatz auf. Bei einer Gesamtschau der europäischen Verfassungstraditionen sollten auch die Verfassungen der deutschen Länder berücksichtigt werden; diese formulieren z.B. weitergehende Handlungsziele.

Ziel

Die Bürgerinnen und Bürger der Europäischen Union sollen wissen, welche Rechte Ihnen zustehen (Transparenz), daß die EU sich hieran halten will (rechtliche Verbindlichkeit) sowie daß und wie sie diese durchsetzen können (effektiver Rechtsschutz).

Transparenz

Die Grundrechte müssen für die EU-Bürgerinnen und Bürger verständlich geschrieben und leicht auffindbar sein. Letzteres spricht auch dafür, sie in den EUV aufzunehmen.

Rechtliche Verbindlichkeit

Um diese Verbindlichkeit zu erreichen, sollte die Grundrechtscharta entsprechend formuliert in den EUV selbst aufgenommen werden. Eine umfassende Bindung der EU ist dabei anzustreben (Handlungen aller Organe etc.).

Effektiver Rechtsschutz

Der Rechtsschutz ist effektiv zu gestalten. Zu den bisherigen Möglichkeiten wie z.B. Vorlageentscheidungen nationaler Gerichte an den EuGH hinzu kommen muß daher eine Grundrechtsklage insbesondere für die einzelnen Bürgerinnen und Bürger direkt zum EuGH und zwar nach Erschöpfung des nationalen Rechtsweges sowie wenn keine gleichzeitige Klagemöglichkeit andernorts besteht. Hierbei sollte auch Verbänden – wie z.B. dem djb - zumindest ein Recht zur Stellungnahme eingeräumt werden; eine Verbandsklage wäre wünschenswert.

Zwingende Folge einer solchen zusätzlichen Klagemöglichkeit ist eine verbesserte Ausstattung des EuGH im Hinblick auf seine Ressourcen. Denkbar wäre eine Grundrechtskammer. Bei der Besetzung ist neben einem Proporz der Mitgliedstaaten auch ein Geschlechterproporz notwendig.

Sprachliche Fassung:

Die vom Präsidium vorgelegten überarbeiteten Artikel (Convent 13) sind geschlechtsneutral bzw. geschlechtsdifferenziert formuliert worden. Der djb regt an, daß die gesamte Grundrechtscharta entsprechend formuliert wird.

Die bis jetzt vorliegenden Formulierungsvorschläge sind grundsätzlich zu begrüßen, da sie den europäischen Grundrechtsstandard sachgerecht formulieren. Klarstellungen und Änderungen werden für folgende Bereiche vorgeschlagen:

Art. 1 Würde des Menschen (Convent 13)

Die Würde des Menschen wird unter allen Umständen geachtet und geschützt.

Anmerkung:

Sinnvoll ist die Regelung des Geltungsbereichs in einem Artikel 1 vor der Nennung der Grundrechte oder in einer Präambel.

Keinesfalls darf der Grundrechtskatalog aber in irgendeiner Form von der Regelung des Geltungsbereichs unterbrochen werden. Sonst besteht die Gefahr, daß die Bindung an die vor der Regelung stehenden Grundrechte angezweifelt wird. Insofern sollte die Regelung des Geltungsbereichs auch nicht in einem Absatz 2 zu dem Artikel über die Menschenwürde stehen.

Art. 2 neu Recht auf freie Entwicklung der Persönlichkeit

Alle Menschen haben das Recht, sich frei in ihrer Persönlichkeit zu entwickeln, soweit sie nicht gegen die Rechte anderer, innerstaatliches Recht oder das Recht der Europäischen Union verstoßen. Der Kern ihrer Persönlichkeit ist frei von hoheitlicher Einmischung.

Begründung:

Eine allgemeine Handlungsfreiheit ist mehreren europäischen Verfassungen bekannt. Ihre Auffangfunktion macht eine Überprüfung der Rechtmäßigkeit jeglicher belastender Eingriffe möglich, insbesondere des auch europarechtlich anerkannten Grundsatzes der Verhältnismäßigkeit.

Als besonders wichtige Ausprägung der Menschenwürde bedarf es eines ausdrücklichen absoluten Schutzes des Persönlichkeitskerns, der auch über den Schutz des Privatlebens im Sinne des Art. 12 (Convent 13) hinausgeht.

Die Menschenwürde stellt eine absolute Tabugrenze dar, die klassisch mit Bereichen wie Menschenhandel, Folter, Todesstrafe oder Euthanasie verbunden wird.

Die neuere Rechtsentwicklung und die durch sie reflektierte rasante Entwicklung im technologischen Bereich haben jedoch gezeigt, daß auch Fälle wie die Verwendbarkeit von Tagebucheintragungen, die Speicherung persönlicher Daten, der Schutz des Namens, das Recht auf Kenntnis der eigenen Abstammung etc. den Kernbereich sowohl der allgemeinen Handlungsfreiheit als auch der Menschenwürde berühren. Eine ausdrückliche grundrechtliche Absicherung ist deshalb geboten.

Die Formulierung „Achtung ihres Privatlebens“ aus Art. 12 (Convent 13) dagegen deutet auf eine Begrenzung des Persönlichkeitsschutzes auf den Bereich außerhalb des Berufs, des öffentlichen Lebens, kurz innerhalb der eigenen vier Wände hin, der zwar notwendig aber nicht ausreichend ist

Art. 7 Recht auf gerichtlichen Rechtsschutz und Verfahrensgrundsätze (Convent 13)

Jede Person, deren Rechte und Freiheiten verletzt worden sind, hat das Recht auf wirksamen Rechtsschutz vor einem Gericht.

Jede an einem Gerichts- oder Verwaltungsverfahren beteiligte Person hat Anspruch auf rechtliches Gehör.

Jede Person hat einen Anspruch darauf, daß Verfahren in angemessener Dauer durchgeführt und mit einer anfechtbaren sowie mit einer begründeten Entscheidung abgeschlossen werden.

Für das Handeln der Gemeinschaftsorgane gilt der Grundsatz der Verhältnismäßigkeit.

Der Grundsatz der Vertraulichkeit und Amtsverschwiegenheit wird garantiert.

Begründung:

Es erscheint wünschenswert wegen der zu erwartenden Zunahme von Verfahrensentscheidungen der Gemeinschaftsorgane nicht nur die Beschwerdemöglichkeit einzuräumen, sondern schon für das vorher stattfindende Verwaltungsverfahren die grundlegenden Verfahrensprinzipien in die Grundrechtscharta aufzunehmen und somit die Rechtsstaatlichkeit auch dieses Handelns festzuschreiben.

Es könnte einfach auf die insoweit bereits existierende Rechtsprechung zu den vom EuGH anerkannten bzw. entwickelten Verfahrensgrundrechten zurückgegriffen werden. Die Beachtung dieser Verfahrensrechte in allen Verfahren ist ein elementarer Grundsatz des Gemeinschaftsrechts.

Wegen der Bedeutung dieser allgemeinen Verfahrensgrundsätze sollten diese als Abs. 2 – 5 angefügt werden.

Art. 8 Recht auf ein unparteiisches Gericht (Convent 13)

Jede Person hat Anspruch darauf, daß ihre Sache in billiger Weise öffentlich und innerhalb einer angemessenen Frist von einem unabhängigen und unparteiischen, auf Gesetz beruhenden Gericht verhandelt wird. Für diejenigen, die nicht über ausreichende Mittel verfügen, wird eine unentgeltliche Prozeßkostenhilfe bereitgestellt, sofern diese Hilfe unerläßlich ist, um den Zugang zum Recht wirksam zu gewährleisten. Dies gilt auch für Zeuginnen und Zeugen sowie Opfer von Gewaltstraftaten.

Begründung:

Wünschenswert wäre im Hinblick auf Satz 2, daß - insbesondere in Strafverfahren - neben den Rechten des Beschuldigten auch die Rechte der Zeugen beziehungsweise allgemein der Opfer von Gewaltstraftaten angemessen auszugestalten sind und ihnen ebenfalls unentgeltlich effektiver Schutz ihrer Rechte im Verfahren gewährleistet wird. Dies wird in dem neuen Satz 3 vorgeschlagen.

Eine solche Regelung ist für Frauen besonders wichtig, da sie oft über kein eigenes Einkommen oder lediglich über geringes Einkommen verfügen.

Art. 12 Achtung des Privatlebens (Convent 13)

Jede Person hat Anspruch auf Schutz des Privatlebens vor Zugriffen anderer oder der Union so auf freie Gestaltung ihrer Privatsphäre, auf Schutz ihrer Ehre, ihrer Wohnung sowie ihrer Kommunikation.

Begründung:

Die vom Präsidium vorgeschlagene Formulierung "Achtung des Privatlebens" ist ungenau und vermittelt den Eindruck eines im Schutzgehalt nur gering ausgestalteten subjektive Rechts. Es wird daher eine Präzisierung vorgeschlagen, die deutlich macht, daß das Recht auf Privatleben sowohl ein subjektives Abwehrrecht, als auch ein subjektives Recht auf Gestaltung der privaten Sphäre nach eigener persönlicher Entscheidung umfaßt.

Die Einfügung des Begriffes der "Ehre" wird begrüßt, da damit über den gegenständlich zu erfassenden Privatbereich hinaus ein Anspruch auf Schutz persönlicher Wertvorstellungen, Empfindungen und Einstellungen gewährt wird. Der Schutz der Ehre ist von Art. 1 "Würde des Menschen" zwar grundsätzlich mit abgedeckt, dennoch ist eine Konkretisierung gegenüber dem allgemein gefaßten Grundrecht der Menschenwürde notwendig. Durch die Einbeziehung der Ehre in den Schutzbereich des Privatlebens wird der persönlichen Integrität eines jeden Menschen eine hervorragende Bedeutung zugemessen.

Die Aufnahme des Ehrenschatzes in den Bereich der Schutzklausel zur Achtung des Privatlebens bedeutet eine Aufwertung gegenüber der Ehrenschatzregelungen des deutschen Grundgesetzes. Dort ist die Ehre in Artikel 5 Abs. 2 GG als eine Schranke des Grundrechts der Meinungs-, Presse- und Rundfunkfreiheit normiert.

Unter Zugrundelegung eines weitgehenden Verständnisses des Ehrenschatzes wird von dessen Schutzbereich nicht nur die Abwehr ehrverletzender Äußerungen oder Werturteile erfaßt, sondern vielmehr auch jede weitere Handlung gegen die persönliche Integrität, insbesondere die – psychische und physische – Gewalt in der Ehe oder sonstige Belästigungen, die in den Persönlichkeitsbereich eines Menschen eingreifen.

Der Ehrenschatz geht im übrigen weiter, als der in Artikel 3 (Convent 13) geschützte Bereich der körperlichen und psychischen Unversehrtheit. Dort zeigt insbesondere Abs. 2, daß der Schutzbereich von Artikel 3 eher in die Richtung einer medizinisch-biologischen Unversehrtheit zu verstehen ist, wohingegen der Ehrenschatz die Unversehrtheit der Gefühle, Empfindungen und Wertvorstellungen erfaßt.

Die Gewährung des Ehrenschatzes darf nicht zur Einschränkung der Selbstbestimmung von Frauen führen.

Art. 13 Ehe und Familie (Convent 13)

Jede Person hat das Recht auf rechtlichen, wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Schutzes ihres Familienlebens.

Jede Person hat das Recht, nach den Gesetzen der Mitgliedstaaten, die die Ausübung dieses Rechtes regeln, eine Ehe einzugehen und eine Familie zu gründen. Niemand darf zur Eheschließung gezwungen werden.

Die Vereinbarkeit von Familie und Erwerbsarbeit ist zu gewährleisten.

Begründung:

Zu Abs. 1:

Die vom Präsidium vorgeschlagene Formulierung „Achtung“ ist zu präzisieren unter Zuhilfenahme des vom Präsidium vorgeschlagenen Absatzes 3. Die hier vorgeschlagene Formulierung „rechtlicher, wirtschaftlicher und sozialer Schutzes“ (bisher Abs. 3 des Präsidiumsvorschlages) ist differenzierter und faßt es als subjektives Recht klarer. Alleinerziehende, kinderreiche Lebensgemeinschaften und solche mit behinderten Angehörigen sind mit der vorgeschlagenen Formulierung ebenso erfaßt wie Menschen, die in häuslicher Gemeinschaft Kinder aufziehen oder Hilfsbedürftige betreuen.

Zu Abs. 2:

Die zentrale Gefährdungslage im Eherecht – der Zwang zur Eheschließung – ist im Präsidiumsvorschlag nicht berücksichtigt und sollte ergänzt werden.

Zu Abs. 3:

Das Recht auf Ehe und Familie kann nicht losgelöst von der im täglichen Leben immer auftauchenden Frage der Vereinbarkeit mit der Erwerbsarbeit geregelt werden. Frauen und Männer sind Erwerbstätige und tragen zugleich Familienverantwortung. Dies gilt insbesondere im Zuge der fortschreitenden Individualisierung der Rechte und im Hinblick darauf, daß die Alleinverdienerfamilie heute nicht mehr die Lebenswirklichkeit widerspiegelt. Dieses Spannungsfeld ist zu thematisieren und die Vereinbarkeit als Handlungsziel in die Grundrechtscharta aufzunehmen. Die Union sollte verpflichtet werden, die Vereinbarkeit von Familie und Erwerbsarbeit von Frauen und Männern zu berücksichtigen, wenn sie im Rahmen ihrer Zuständigkeiten Maßnahmen beschließt.

Art. 18 Gleichheit (Convent 8, S. 7)

Alle Menschen sind vor dem Recht gleich.

Unterscheidungen nach der ethnischen oder sozialen Herkunft, der Hautfarbe, der Religion, der politischen Anschauung, der sexuellen Identität oder der Behinderung sind untersagt, sofern sie nicht zum Ausgleich bestehender Nachteile erforderlich sind.

Begründung:

Abs. 2:

Der hier vorgeschlagene Abs. 2 entspricht im Kern dem vom Präsidium vorgeschlagenen Art. 19. Die Rechtsgleichheit wird hier im Sinne genereller rechtlicher Differenzierungsverbote konkretisiert. Kompensatorische Maßnahmen sind ausdrücklich zulässig. Allerdings müssen diese auch erforderlich sein. Die vorgeschlagene Umschreibung des Benachteiligungsverbot ist klarer und juristisch eindeutiger als ein Diskriminierungsverbot. Es sind wesentliche Merkmale ausgewählt worden, die elementaren Unrechtserfahrungen entsprechen. Das vom Präsidium auf der Grundlage der EMRK vorgeschlagene generelle Unterscheidungsverbot nach dem Alter oder dem Vermögen wird abgelehnt. In beiden Fällen existieren vielfältige und allgemein akzeptierte gesetzliche Differenzierungen (Altersgrenzen; Steuer- und Leistungsgesetze), die ein generelles Differenzierungsverbot nicht sachgerecht erscheinen lassen. Der allgemeine Gleichheitssatz bietet hier einen ausreichenden Schutz.

Art. 19 Gleichstellung von Frau und Mann (Convent 8, S. 7)

Die Union und die Mitgliedstaaten sind verpflichtet, die Bedingungen für die Gleichstellung von Frauen und Männern in allen Bereichen zu schaffen und bei ihren Maßnahmen die Geschlechtergleichstellung miteinzubeziehen.

Neben der Ungleichbehandlung nach dem Geschlecht ist die Verwendung von Kriterien untersagt, die formal geschlechtsneutral sind, jedoch einen erheblich höheren Anteil der Angehörigen eines Geschlechtes betreffen, ohne daß sie durch wichtige Gründe, die nicht auf das Geschlecht bezogen sind, gerechtfertigt werden können.

Zur Herstellung tatsächlicher Gleichberechtigung sind Maßnahmen zur Förderung des benachteiligten Geschlechts zulässig.

Begründung:

Die vom Präsidium vorgeschlagene Einbindung der Geschlechtergleichstellung in die Nichtdiskriminierung (Art. 19) ist unangemessen. Die Verankerung der Gleichstellung von Frauen und Männern sollte in einem eigenständigen Artikel besonders herausgehoben werden. Mehr als die Hälfte der Bevölkerung in den Mitgliedstaaten sind Frauen. Die Rechte von Frauen sind deshalb nicht als ein Aspekt des Minderheitenschutzes zu betrachten.

Abs.1:

Die Voraussetzungen der tatsächlichen Gleichberechtigung können von der Union und den Mitgliedstaaten verwirklicht werden. Das Ergebnis selbst, wie z.B. die gleiche Teilhabe auf allen Ebenen des Erwerbslebens kann nicht von den Mitgliedstaaten oder der Union hergestellt werden. Im zweiten Teilsatz ist der gender-mainstreaming-Ansatz formuliert. Union und Mitgliedstaaten müssen die Geschlechtergleichstellung überall miteinbeziehen.

Abs. 2:

Das unmittelbare Diskriminierungsverbot ist in einer Grundrechtscharta festzuschreiben. Dazu gehören auch verdeckte Benachteiligungen, die nur ein Geschlecht betreffen. Die Verankerung eines qualifizierten mittelbaren Diskriminierungsverbotes ist gleichfalls notwendig. Das entspricht der bisherigen Rechtslage.

Abs. 3:

Die Wirklichkeit zeigt deutlich notwendigen Handlungsbedarf. Frauen nehmen anders als Männer am öffentlichen Leben und am Erwerbsarbeitsleben teil. Sie sind in Entscheidungspositionen im wirtschaftlichen und politischen Bereich deutlich unterrepräsentiert, wenn überhaupt vertreten. Im Hinblick auf die effektive Gewährleistung der vollen Gleichberechtigung von Frauen und Männern sind deshalb spezifische Vergünstigungen des benachteiligten Geschlechts beizubehalten oder zu beschließen. Eine Kompensationsklausel, wie in Abs. 3 vorgeschlagen, ist deshalb in die Grundrechtscharta aufzunehmen.

Art. 19 Asyl (Convent 8, S. 6)

(1) Jede nicht der Union angehörende Person, die politisch, aus religiösen oder rassistischen Gründen verfolgt wird oder unmenschlicher oder erniedrigender Bestrafung oder Behandlung ausgesetzt ist, hat ein Recht auf Asyl in der Europäischen Union. Sie hat ein Bleiberecht bis zum Abschluß des Verfahrens.

Kollektivausweisungen von Ausländerinnen und Ausländern sind nicht zulässig.

Begründung:

Das Asylrecht in Abs. 1 ist differenzierter zu fassen. Die vorgeschlagene Formulierung ermöglicht die Anerkennung religiöser, rassistischer und frauenspezifischer Fluchtgründe. Der notwendige Abschiebungsschutz ist als Satz 2 angefügt.

Art. E Recht auf Vertretung

Die gleichberechtigte Teilhabe und Vertretung von Frauen und Männern sind zu gewährleisten.

Begründung:

Frauen sind in EU-Gremien eklatant unterrepräsentiert. Die Besetzung des Konvents zum Entwurf einer Grundrechtscharta ist hierfür ein deutlicher Beweis (9 Frauen und 53 Männer).

Die vorgeschlagene Regelung sichert, daß zukünftig die wahlrechtlichen und organisatorischen Voraussetzungen für eine angemessene Beteiligung von Frauen und Männern getroffen werden müssen. Eine solche Verpflichtung kann in unterschiedlicher Weise umgesetzt werden. Eine Regelung mit langfristiger Geltung sollte kein bestimmtes Verfahren festlegen, sondern offen sein für Weiterentwicklungen und Anpassungsnotwendigkeiten an geänderte Verhältnisse.

Art. II Berufsfreiheit (Convent 18)

(1) Jede Person hat das Recht, ihren Beruf und ihr Gewerbe frei zu wählen und auszuüben, unbeschadet der die Freizügigkeit von Personen betreffenden Bestimmungen des Vertrages.

(2) Zwangsarbeit ist verboten.

Begründung:

Abs. 2:

Das in einem neuen Absatz 2 vorgeschlagene Verbot der Zwangsarbeit entspricht den Grundsätzen der mitgliedstaatlichen Demokratien.

Art. XI Rechte der Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer als Eltern (Convent 18)

Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer genießen als Eltern besonderen Schutz. Den Belangen von schwangeren Arbeitnehmerinnen ist besonders Rechnung zu tragen.

Begründung:

Elternschaft ist Aufgabe von Müttern und Vätern, die in aller Regel gleichzeitig Arbeitnehmerinnen und Arbeitnehmer sind. Um ihren gesellschaftlich wichtigen Betreuungs- und Erziehungsaufgaben nachkommen zu können, benötigen sie einen besonderen Schutz. Dieser besondere Schutz beschränkt sich nicht auf die Gewährung von Elternurlaub. Der durch die Richtlinie 96/34/EG vorgegebene Anspruch auf mindestens drei Monate Elternurlaub ist zudem ausbaufähig. Es sind auch andere Maßnahmen, wie etwa die Freistellung wegen Krankheit des Kindes oder ein Anspruch auf Teilzeit denkbar. Entsprechende gesetzliche Regelungen existieren bereits auf nationaler Ebene oder sind in Vorbereitung.

Im Präsidiumsvorschlag wird in Art. XI (Convent 18) ein Mutterschutz von mindestens vierzehn Wochen als Recht der Arbeitnehmerin formuliert, der gestrichen werden sollte. Der Vorschlag entspricht zwar der momentanen Rechtslage (Richtlinie 92/85/EG). Es ist aber denkbar, daß weitergehende und andere Maßnahmen zum Schutz schwangerer Arbeitnehmerinnen entwickelt werden. Eine Grundrechtscharta sollte diese Entwicklungsmöglichkeit bieten.

Wegen des Sachzusammenhangs sollten die vom Präsidium vorgeschlagenen Art. XI und XII zu dem hier vorgeschlagenen einheitlichen Art. XI zusammengefaßt werden.

gez. Sabine Overkämping
Vorsitzende der Kommission Europa des djb

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 10 May 2000CHARTE 4290/00*CONTRIB 162*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the position and the statement by the Amnesty International presented at the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

(a) amnesty international

EUROPEAN CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

April 2000

Amnesty International
European Union Association
70-72 Rue du Commerce
B-1040 BRUSSELS
tel. +32 2 502 14 99
fax. + 32 2 502 56 86
e-mail. Amnesty-EU@aieu.be

Amnesty International is an independent worldwide movement working for the release of all prisoners of conscience, fair and prompt trials for political prisoners and an end to torture, extrajudicial executions, "disappearances" and the death penalty. It is funded by donations from its members and supporters throughout the world. It has formal relations with the United Nations, Unesco, the Council of Europe, the Organization of African Unity and the Organization of American States.

Introduction

The question of how to protect human rights in the European Union (EU) legal order has been debated since the very first steps were taken to found the European Communities.

As the activity of the European Community (EC) started to extend to areas in which it had an increasing influence on individual rights, the concern among Member States in relation to human rights protection grew¹. While the European Court of Justice stated the primacy of Community Law, even over the constitutional orders of Member States, it refused to recognise jurisdiction on matters of fundamental rights, in absence of Community Law provisions². However, the European Court of Justice, concerned that the precedence of the Community legal order might be questioned by Member States, soon started to develop an indirect protection of human rights, stating that fundamental rights are enshrined in the general principles of Community law, and protected by the Court³. In 1974, the European Court of Justice stated that in guaranteeing respect for human rights, the Court is bound to draw inspiration from the constitutional traditions common to Member States and from the international human rights treaties on which the Member States have collaborated or of which they are signatories⁴. A year later, the European Court of Justice referred for the first time to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights) as a reference for the protection of fundamental rights within the EC legal order⁵. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights was first mentioned in the Orkem case, judgment of 18 October 1989⁶.

The importance of respect for fundamental rights has been repeatedly recognised by the other EU institutions in non-legally binding texts, such as the Joint Declaration on Fundamental Rights of the European Parliament, the Council and the Commission of 5 April 1977⁷, which has been followed by several other texts of political nature⁸.

A treaty reference to human rights was first introduced by the Preamble of the 1986 Single European Act, and was later included in the body of a treaty by article F(2) of the 1992 Treaty on the European Union (TEU), the Maastricht Treaty. Article 6 of the TEU, as amended by the 1997 Amsterdam Treaty, is the current human rights provision applicable to the activities of the EU, which as article F(2) already did before, states that “the Union shall respect fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on 4 November 1950 and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as general principles of Community law”. The Amsterdam Treaty has also introduced a mechanism for the Union to address “serious and persistent” violations of human rights by Member States (article 7 of the TEU), which reinforces the accountability of Member States in relation to human rights protection.

¹ Cases Frontini e Pozzari, judgment of 27 December 1973 (Il Foro Italiano, 1974-I, p. 315) and first Solange case, judgment of 29 May 1974 (BverfGE, 37, p. 271).

² Case 1/58, Stork v. High Authority [1959] ECR 17, later confirmed by Joint Cases 36, 37, 38 and 40/59, Comptoir de vente de charbon de la Ruhr v. High Authority [1960] ECR 423.

³ Case 29/69, Stauder, [1969] ECR 419.

⁴ Case 4/73, Nold [1974] ECR 491.

⁵ Case 36/75, Rutili [1975] ECR 1219.

⁶ Case 374/87, Orkem [1989] ECR 3283.

⁷ OJ 1977 C 103/1.

⁸ For a list of such texts, see European Court of Justice Opinion 2/94 (ECHR) [1996] ECR I-1759, at I-1768.

The latest step in this process is the elaboration of the European Charter of Fundamental Rights, decided by the European Council meeting in Cologne in June 1999.

As a human rights organisation, Amnesty International welcomes initiatives to improve human rights protection. Amnesty International is an independent and impartial worldwide movement with more than a million members and supporters. Its mission is to contribute to the observance throughout the world of human rights as set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It campaigns to fulfil this goal by promoting human rights in general as well as opposing specific abuses. Recognising that all human rights are indivisible and interdependent, Amnesty International urges all governments to ratify and implement international human rights standards. It seeks to improve on the protection offered by those standards, in particular in respect of fundamental civil and political rights.

Amnesty International's interest in the proposed European Charter is a positive one in that it offers a perspective of real improvement in the human rights protection currently afforded by the European Union. At the same time Amnesty International is concerned that it should in no way result in a lowering of the current level of protection, and that any ambiguity in that respect be ruled out.

To that end, this paper analyses the issues raised by the adoption of the European Charter and advances recommendations so that it could constitute a real improvement in the human rights protection currently afforded by the EU. In doing so, Amnesty International wishes to emphasise that the European Charter should only be adopted as a legally binding instrument if certain basic conditions are fulfilled.

Part I: Horizontal issues

1. Legal nature of the European Charter

The mandate that the Convention in charge of drafting the European Charter has received from the Cologne European Council is the elaboration of a non-legally binding declaration. However, as the Cologne conclusions already foresaw, its legally binding nature may be decided at a later stage.

Amnesty International believes that the incorporation of a charter recognising the strongest possible guaranteed human rights into the provisions of the TEU or in an annexed protocol, thus ensuring its legally binding nature, would be a desirable step, provided certain essential conditions are satisfied, for the following reasons:

- 1) The status of human rights in the EU legal order would be clearly spelled out, thus correcting the legal uncertainty which currently surrounds this issue.
- 2) Human rights would obtain an enhanced status in the EU legal order, thus ensuring that they are not considered “inferior law”, and subordinated to the “higher law” of the economic freedoms granted by the Treaty establishing the European Community (TEC).
- 3) A new layer of human rights protection would be established, while access to the Council of Europe protection organs would still be available.

A legally binding European Charter, however, must meet certain conditions in order to constitute a real improvement in human rights protection in the EU:

- 1) The adoption of the European Charter must not result in a possible diminution of the current level of protection that human rights enjoy in its Member States under the European Convention on Human Rights and other relevant international human rights instruments, as interpreted by relevant courts and monitoring bodies.
- 2) Furthermore, as the European Convention on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments provide for a minimum contemporary standard, nothing precludes the EU going beyond that minimum standard and developing the highest level of protection for individuals subject to its jurisdiction. Therefore, the European Charter should take account of the developments in international law, both of treaty and of customary legal nature, as well as developments reflected in a variety of non-treaty standards and serve to include fundamental rights that have not necessarily been included in other international instruments.
- 3) Everyone's fundamental rights must be recognised without discrimination, since under international human rights law, fundamental rights cannot be object of discrimination on account of national origin.
- 4) The European Charter rights must be justiciable. Therefore, the necessary treaty amendments should be adopted in order to ensure that the European Court of Justice has jurisdiction in all the areas of EU activity in relation to human rights violations, this is, full jurisdiction not only on EC matters (including Title IV of the TEC) but also on Title V (Common Foreign and Security Policy) and Title VI (Justice and Home Affairs) of the TEU. Similarly, the necessary treaty amendments should be adopted in order to ensure proper access by the individual to the European Court of Justice⁹.

Amnesty International calls for a legally binding European Charter provided that it guarantees the fundamental rights of all individuals without discrimination, strengthens rather than weakens the current level of human rights protection in the EU, serves to include fundamental rights that have not necessarily been included in other international instruments, and is fully justiciable by the European Court of Justice and by national courts when applying EC/EU Law.

2. Scope of the European Charter

The European Charter is currently intended to apply to the activities of the EU institutions and to those actions of Member States which fall within the scope of EC/EU legislation. It is also intended to apply to all activities of the EU, this is to all three pillars (European Community, Common Foreign and Security Policy, Justice and Home Affairs) and not only to activities under the framework of EC law.

An effective protection of fundamental rights requires that not only the traditional EU actors are bound by the European Charter, but also the different entities created under the TEU, particularly in the framework of the intergovernmental cooperation, as their activities are increasingly likely to have an effect on fundamental rights (for instance, the High Level Working Group on Asylum and Migration, which has received the mandate to adopt an inter-pillar approach in its activities).

⁹ These arguments shall be developed below, under section 3.

In line with the case law of the European Court of Justice, the European Charter should also be applicable to private parties acting with the consent or acquiescence of governments, when human rights violations result from their activities. An example of such action by private parties is that of carriers' involvement in immigration control¹⁰, which may result in the violation of the right of everyone to leave a country in which they fear persecution¹¹.

Such a scope for the European Charter would confirm the status quo. A new dimension in the field of human rights protection in the EU would be to ensure that the European Charter covers Member States' action outside the current sphere of EC/EU law. This would enhance human rights protection through EC/EU Law and would confer added value to the European Charter even if such action was only justiciable at the national level¹².

Amnesty International calls for a European Charter that applies to all the activities of the EU institutions, the entities created under the TEU, Member States when acting within and also outside the sphere of EC/EU law and to private parties acting with the consent or acquiescence of governments.

3. Justiciability of human rights in the EU

In assessing the protection of human rights by the European Court of Justice, it is important to note that the European Court of Justice is neither an international human rights court nor a court of appeal. In this regard, and notwithstanding the protection of fundamental rights developed by the European Court of Justice which has been described above, the jurisdiction of the European Court of Justice is a sui generis one.

a) Limited access by individuals

In application of article 230 of the TEC, an individual may bring a case before the European Court of Justice asking for the repeal of certain decisions adopted by the EU when such decisions are addressed to him or her, or when, although in the form of a regulation or a decision addressed to another person, they are of direct and individual concern to the former. The European Court of Justice has developed a very restrictive interpretation of these requirements. In addition, the grounds for these claims are very limited: the European Court of Justice shall have jurisdiction in actions brought on grounds of lack of competence, infringement of an essential procedural requirement, infringement of the TEC or of any rule of law relating to its application, or misuse of powers. The possibilities for individuals to bring their cases before the European Court of Justice for assessment of alleged human rights violations by the EU are therefore very limited.

¹⁰ ILPA submissions on an European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights (ILPA European Update: March 2000, p. 6).

¹¹ Cf. Human Rights Committee general comment on article 12 of the ICCPR.

¹² Clapham, A. On Complementarity in Europe, paper presented at the Conference "The Protection of Human Rights in the 21st Century: Towards Greater Complementarity within and between European Regional Organisations", organised by Irish Presidency of the Council of Europe, 3-4 March 2000, Dublin.

b) Limited scope ratione materiae

Under article 46 of the TEU, the jurisdiction of the European Court of Justice is extended to article 6, but it is limited to actions by the institutions, in so far the European Court of Justice has jurisdiction according to the relevant provisions in the treaties. And indeed, several areas of EC/EU action which are likely to have an effect on fundamental rights are either excluded from the European Court of Justice control or such control is limited.

This is the case in relation to Title IV of the TEC, where the general rules on the European Court of Justice jurisdiction are applied restrictively in the field of asylum, as it is provided by article 68 of the TEC: the European Court of Justice is only given jurisdiction on cases where a question on the interpretation of the Treaty provisions or on the validity or interpretation of acts of the institutions of the Community based on such provisions is raised in a case pending before a court or a tribunal of a Member State against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under national law. In that case, that court or tribunal is not obliged to submit the case to the European Court of Justice, but shall do so only if it considers that a decision on the question is necessary to enable it to give judgment. However, despite this restrictive jurisdiction, due to the fact that decisions by the European Court of Justice on interpretation of EC Law are binding on all Member States, any decision on one individual case would be automatically applicable in all Member States.

Similarly, under article 35 of the TEU, the European Court of Justice jurisdiction on Justice and Home Affairs matters is restricted and furthermore, Title V on Common Foreign Security Policy is completely excluded from the jurisdiction of the Court.

Amnesty International calls for the necessary treaty amendments to be adopted in order to ensure greater access for individual complaints about the violation of fundamental rights and that the European Court of Justice has jurisdiction in all the areas of EU activity in relation to human rights, this is, full jurisdiction not only on EC matters (including Title IV of the TEC) but also on Title V (Common Foreign and Security Policy) and Title VI (Justice and Home Affairs) of the TEU.

4. International accountability of the EU in the field of human rights: accession to the European Convention on Human Rights

Even if the EU adopted a legally binding European Charter of fundamental rights applicable to all EU activities, fully justiciable by the European Court of Justice, the interpretation of human rights observance would remain sealed within the EU's own institutional system. It would not fulfill the fundamental requirement that the EU be subject to international obligations and monitoring in this field.

a) The need for international accountability of the EU in the field of human rights

While EU Member States' violations of international human rights law can be assessed by international monitoring bodies, EU activities lack international accountability as no international court or other body has jurisdiction to assess violations of international human rights law by the EU.

Taking note that Member States have ceded ever increasing areas of competence to the EU, which results in an ever larger impact on the individual by rules determined and adopted at EU level, Amnesty International recalls that ceding competence to take action in certain fields to a supra-national authority should not remove those fields from the scope of application of Member States' international commitments. Member States when implementing European Union law remain subject to the supervisory mechanisms of the European Convention on Human Rights. However, the EU decisions as such are not subject to external supervision under the European Convention on Human Rights. Independent investigation and assessment by the international human rights monitoring mechanisms established under international treaties is critical to the protection of human rights. The effectiveness of international instruments in safeguarding human rights is diminished where external scrutiny is excluded. The principle of accountability of states and supra-national bodies for human rights compliance to international human rights enforcement mechanisms must be respected.

This approach, however, raises issues related to the competence of the EC/EU in the field of human rights. Article 5 of the TEC establishes that the Community is to act within the limits of the powers conferred upon it by the Treaty and of the objectives assigned to it therein. Therefore, the EC has only those powers which have been conferred to it.

The European Court of Justice has played a key role in the development of the source, nature and extent of EC competence. The European Court of Justice case law has established that the powers on the basis of which the EC acts are not necessarily the express consequence of specific provisions of the Treaty but may also be implied from them¹³. In relation to human rights, the Court held in its opinion 2/94 on accession by the EC to the European Convention on Human Rights that there is no express or implicit EC competence to act in the field of human rights, as “no Treaty provision confers on the Community institutions any general power to enact rules on human rights or to conclude international conventions in this field”¹⁴. Such competence would require Treaty amendment.

b) Diverging interpretations of the European Charter and the European Convention on Human Rights

In the ever increasing context of EU activity in the field of human rights, the risks of different interpretations of the same fundamental rights by the two bodies charged with the interpretation of the European Charter and the European Convention on Human Rights should not be underestimated.

Although the European Court of Justice has followed the case-law of the Strasbourg organs in its interpretation of European Convention on Human Rights provisions in most cases, the European Court of Justice has not considered itself bound to do so, and it has sometimes produced its own interpretation of European Convention on Human Rights provisions¹⁵.

¹³ Opinion 1/76 (European laying-up fund for inland waterway vessels) [1977] ECR 741.

¹⁴ [1996] ECR I-1759, at I-1787.

¹⁵ Diverging interpretations can be found, for instance, in Case 260/89, ERT [1989] ECR 2925 and Informationsverein Lentia et al. c. Austria, on article 10 European Convention on Human Rights; or Cases 46/87 and 227/88, Hoerchts [1989] 2859 and Nimietz v. Alemania, judgment of 16 December 1992 on article 8. On this issue, see Lawson, R. “Confusion and Conflict? Diverging Interpretations of the European Convention on Human Rights in Strasbourg and Luxembourg”, in Lawson, R. and de Blois, M. (eds.) The Dynamics of the Protection of Human Rights in Europe. Essays in Honour of Henry G. Schermes, 1994, pp. 219-252.

Although international monitoring bodies do not have jurisdiction to examine decisions by EU institutions, they do have jurisdiction to examine claims from individuals against Member States decisions in application of EU law. It can be expected that as more competencies are transferred to the EC in areas that affect basic human rights (and particularly in relation to rights of an absolute nature, such as the right to life or to freedom from torture), there is also a risk that divergence of interpretations may become more common. The Strasbourg organs have stated that although they have no jurisdiction to examine claims against EU institutions, they do have jurisdiction to examine the compatibility of measures adopted by State Parties in application of EC law with the European Convention on Human Rights.

The case law of the European Court of Human Rights has outlined the relation between EC Law and the European Convention on Human Rights in several decisions. In a recent case, the European Court of Human Rights has pronounced itself on the compatibility of the application of the Dublin Convention (whose content should be the object of an EC instrument in application of article 63 of the TEC) with the European Convention on Human Rights in TI v. the UK (decision following the admissibility hearing of 7 March 2000). The Court stated that the UK could not rely automatically “on the arrangements made in the Dublin Convention concerning the attribution of responsibility between European countries for deciding asylum claims” since “where States establish international organisations, or mutatis mutandis international agreements, to pursue co-operation in certain fields of activities, there may be implications for the protection of fundamental rights. It would be incompatible with the purpose and object of the Convention if Contracting States were thereby absolved from their responsibility under the Convention in relation to the field of activity covered by such attribution”.

As we can see, in the case of diverging interpretations between the European Convention on Human Rights and European Charter, Member States may sometimes be faced with the obligation to comply with two contradictory international obligations or even judgments in relation to the same matter. Accession by the EC/EU to the European Convention on Human Rights would be one way to ensure a uniform interpretation of the same provisions.

Amnesty International recommends that a method be devised to ensure that the EC/EU act in conformity with the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights, as well as other international human rights law and standards. One way of achieving this objective, which Amnesty International has recommended in the past, would be to make the necessary amendments to the Treaties to enable and require the EC/EU to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights¹⁶. As the EC can acquire exclusive external competence in certain areas through different means, Amnesty International recommends that great care be taken in the drafting of any Treaty provision in this regard, so as to exclude the possibility that the EC/EU acquire any exclusive external competence in the field of human rights, as it would be detrimental to the international development of human rights standards if Member States were precluded from adhering to new conventions setting higher human rights standards.

¹⁶The organisation has already expressed itself in the same terms in 1993 as the issue was raised by the Belgian Presidency of the EU and in 1996 in the context of the IGC which resulted in the Amsterdam Treaty.

Part II: Fundamental Rights in the European Charter

The following comments by Amnesty International are based on the draft articles included in document CHARTE 4149/00, except those related to freedom of assembly and association and to the right to asylum, which are based in document CHARTE 4137/00, as the wording of these rights has not been the object of revision by the Convention so far. However, the organisation may wish to submit further comments on future drafts.

Article 2. Right to life.

The fundamental right to life, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. This right is non-derogable in all circumstances.

Amnesty International opposes the death penalty as a violation of human rights, holding that it violates the right to life and is the ultimate cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. Although Amnesty International recognises the logic of including the prohibition of the death penalty in the article on the right to life, as has been done in many national constitutions, it recommends that the prohibition of the death penalty is linked also to the prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, as has been done in some national constitutions. In Amnesty International's view, the death penalty violates both of these rights.

Support for this position comes from court decisions, such as the Hungarian Constitutional Court ruling of 24 October 1990 that the death penalty violates the right to life and to human dignity as provided under the country's constitution. Further support is evidenced by the adoption of international and regional instruments providing for the abolition of the death penalty: the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention on Human Rights. Furthermore, under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court adopted in 1998, the death penalty is excluded from the punishments which this court will be authorised to impose, even though it has jurisdiction over extremely grave crimes: crimes against humanity, including genocide, and violations of the laws of armed conflict. Similarly, in establishing the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in 1993 and 1994 respectively, the UN Security Council excluded the death penalty for these crimes.

Amnesty International calls for a European Charter provision which not only prohibits that individuals shall be condemned to the death penalty or executed, but which also includes the prohibition of enacting or retaining any laws that provide for the death penalty. Amnesty International also recommends that the prohibition of the death penalty (without exception) be linked not only to the right to life, but to other human rights, in particular the right to physical and mental integrity (and specifically the right not to be subjected to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment).

Articles 3 and 4. The right to respect for integrity and the prohibition of torture

The principle that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. This right is non-derogable in all circumstances.

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment violate the integrity and dignity of the human person, constitute a breach of all accepted norms of civilised behaviour and are universally prohibited under national and international law.

2. Amnesty International recalls that the victims of torture can include not only political prisoners, but also members of vulnerable groups such as ethnic and sexual minorities, refugees and asylum-seekers, immigrants, common criminal suspects and prisoners, the socially deprived and the economically marginalised.

Amnesty International calls on EU member states to commit themselves to the total abolition of torture and other forms of ill-treatment, including the adoption of effective laws to take action so that those responsible for torture from anywhere in the world who enter their territory are brought to justice, either by submitting their cases to their prosecuting authorities or by extraditing the suspects, as required by the Convention against Torture.

Amnesty International calls for a European Charter provision that enshrines the principle that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Therefore, the current wording should read “no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment”, in line with Article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Article 5 of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights.

Article 6. Right to liberty and security

The fundamental right to liberty and security of person, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. The essential corollary to the right to liberty is protection against arbitrary arrest or unlawful detention. This basic guarantee applies to everyone, whether held in connection with criminal charges or on any other grounds, such as for instance, immigration control.

The current wording of Article 6 falls short of the guarantees recognised in the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols and other relevant international law and standards, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, the Statutes and Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Crimes Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda, the UN Standard on Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the UN Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, the UN Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, or the UN Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers.

Amnesty International notes that imprisonment and other severe deprivation of physical liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law, as well as other infringements of fundamental rights which may result from such deprivations, such as torture and “disappearances”, may –as recognised in the Rome Statute- constitute a crime against humanity if committed on a widespread or systematic basis pursuant to or in furtherance of a state or organisational policy.

Therefore, the article on the right to liberty and security should not only be non-derogable, but should also include the safeguards reflecting the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation, which include the following rights among those set out in more detail in Amnesty International’s Fair Trials Manual, 1998 (AI Index: POL 30/02/98):

- 1.- The right to be promptly informed of one’s rights, including the right to lodge complaints about one’s treatment.
- 2.- The right to be brought before a judicial authority without delay after being taken into custody.
- 3.- The right to prompt access to a lawyer and family or friends.
- 4.- The right to have a lawyer present during questioning.
- 5.- The right to challenge the lawfulness of detention.
- 6.- The right to trial within a reasonable time or to release from detention.

Article 7. Right to an effective remedy

The fundamental right to an effective remedy, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. This right should be non-derogable.

The current wording of Article 7 falls short of the guarantees recognised in the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols and other relevant international law and standards, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention against Torture, the UN Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, the Final Report prepared by Mr Joinet pursuant to Sub-Commission decision 1996/119, Annex II: Set of Principles for the Protection and Promotion of Human Rights through Action to Combat Impunity, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub. 2/1997/20(1997) (Joinet Principles), the UN Commission on Human Rights Independent Expert on the Right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, Draft Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for victims of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law (Final Draft), 18 January 2000, U.N. Doc. E/CN.4/2000/62(2000) (Van Boven-Bassiouni Principles) or the rights of victims and accused to remedies in Articles 75 and 85 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.

Therefore, the article on the right to an effective remedy should also include the safeguards reflecting the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation. In this regard, the current wording omits the clarification that the right applies “notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity”. The provision should not be construed as excluding remedies before national authorities, in so far the responsibility of member states may be engaged in the application of the European Charter.

Articles 8 and 9. Right to a fair trial and rights of the defence

The fundamental right to a fair trial, which includes rights to an effective defence, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. This right should be non-derogable in all circumstances. Indeed, depriving a protected person under international humanitarian law of the right to a fair trial during armed conflict may constitute a war crime in certain circumstances.

The current wording of Articles 8 and 9 falls short of the guarantees recognised in the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols and other relevant international law and standards, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention against Torture, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, the Statutes and Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Crimes Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda, the UN Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the UN Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, the UN Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, or the UN Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers. Therefore, the specific rights enshrined in international treaties and standards should be expressly included in the provisions.

Amnesty International also notes that (see Amnesty International's Fair Trials Manual, 1998; AI Index: POL 30/02/98):

1. Article 8 omits a number of important aspects of the right to a fair trial in Article 14 (1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, not expressly mentioned in Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, including the right to equality before courts and tribunals, to be tried by competent tribunal and to a public judgment.
2. The right to free legal aid in Article 8 is more restrictive than in Article 14 (3) (d) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Article 67 (1) (d) of the Rome Statute by requiring a threshold showing that it is "indispensable" and it changes the standard from "the interests of justice" to the undefined "ensure the effectiveness of access to justice".
3. Other important rights to a fair trial recognised in contemporary international instruments not found in the European Convention on Human Rights or its Protocols are omitted, such as the right to remain silent, without such silence being a consideration in the determination of guilt or innocence (Article 55 (2) (b) of the Rome Statute, Rules 42 (A) (iii) of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda Rules of Procedure and Evidence) and the right not to be questioned in the presence of counsel unless the person has voluntarily waived his or her right to counsel (Article 55 (2) (d) of the Rome Statute and Rules 42 (B) of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda Rules of Procedure and Evidence, both of which include the right to be informed of the right before questioning). These examples are, of course, only illustrative.
4. Article 9 falls short of the guarantees of the right to a presumption of innocence in Articles 66 and 67 (i) of the Rome Statute.

Article 11. Right not to be tried or punished twice

The fundamental right not to be tried or punished twice, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. This right should be non-derogable.

The current wording of Article 11 falls short of the guarantees recognised in the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols and other relevant international law and standards, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Therefore, the article on the right not to be tried or punished twice should reflect the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation. In particular, it should include a reference to the single jurisdiction limitation, in line with Article 4 para. 1 of Protocol 7 to the European Convention on Human Rights.

Article 14. Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

The fundamental right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. This is a non-derogable right.

The current wording of Article 14 falls short of the guarantees recognised in the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols and other relevant international law and standards, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Therefore, the article on the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion (a non-derogable right under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights) should reflect the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation. In particular, the provision should reflect that freedom of thought, conscience and religion includes the right conscientious objection and that the right to freedom of religion includes the right to change one's religion or belief, the freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest one's religion or beliefs in worship, teaching, practice and observance, as well as the right not to hold any religious beliefs or to practice any religion

Article 15. Freedom of expression

The fundamental right to freedom of expression, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter.

The current wording of Article 15 falls short of the guarantees recognised in the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols and other relevant international law and standards, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. For example, Article 15 fails to make clear that it protects the right to freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authorities and regardless of frontiers.

Therefore, the article on the right to freedom of expression, and any restrictions on this right, should reflect the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation.

Article 13 (CHARTER 4137/00). Freedom of assembly and association

The right of everyone to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association, as recognised in international law and standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, should be enshrined in the European Charter. Any limitations must be consistent with international law and standards.

Many individuals throughout the world are detained because they have exercised peacefully their right to freedom of assembly and association. This right is at the core of Amnesty International's work and should be enshrined in the European Charter as strongly as possible.

Article 17 (CHARTER 4137/00). The right to asylum and non-refoulement

The right of everyone to asylum should be enshrined in the European Charter. This right is already enshrined in the legal orders of all member states, so its inclusion in the European Charter would reflect this legal development in an international instrument at the European level.

Amnesty International would like to see an express reference to the UN Refugee Convention and to other relevant international obligations for member states, such as the European Convention on Human Rights, in line with article 63 of the Treaty on the European Community.

Amnesty International notes that the current draft provision excludes nationals of member states from the right to asylum. In order to ensure that people who would risk serious human rights violations if returned to a particular country are identified as such and afforded protection, all asylum-seekers should have access to a fair and satisfactory asylum procedure.

Restricting the right to asylum on the grounds of national origin constitutes a clear violation of the UN Refugee Convention and other international human rights treaties. Amnesty International recalls that under international law, discrimination in the enjoyment of fundamental rights on the grounds of national origin is forbidden (article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 3 of the UN Refugee Convention, article 3 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights) and therefore calls for the express recognition of the right to asylum for all individuals. Such recognition would be in line with conclusion 13 of the Tampere Summit, whereby the Heads of State and Government reaffirmed "the importance the Union and Member States attach to absolute respect of the right to seek asylum".

Amnesty International asks for an express provision on the absolute principle of non-refoulement, a norm of customary international law, as included in article 33 para. 1 of the UN Refugee Convention and in other international treaties, of universal and regional application, such as article 3 of the UN Convention against torture and article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which prohibit the forced return of individuals (whether directly or indirectly) to the territories where their lives or freedom are at risk or where they would be at risk of torture. Amnesty International asks for this provision to include an express prohibition against sending an individual to a country where he or she would face an unfair trial or the death penalty.

Amnesty International asks for an express provision on the guarantees that assist individuals in expulsion, extradition, or any other form of forced removal procedures that they may be subjected to in accordance with due process of law. Such provision would be in line with Article 32 of the UN Refugee Convention and article 13 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (to which all member states are parties) and with the case-law of international monitoring bodies, such as the European Court of Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee or the Committee against Torture.

Summary of recommendations by Amnesty International

1.- As a human rights organisation, Amnesty International welcomes initiatives to improve human rights protection. Recognising that all human rights are indivisible and interdependent, Amnesty International urges all governments to ratify and implement international human rights standards. Amnesty International's interest in the proposed European Charter is a positive one in that it offers a perspective of real improvement in the human rights protection currently afforded by the European Union. At the same time Amnesty International is concerned that it should in no way result in a lowering of the current level of protection, and that any ambiguity in that respect be ruled out. Amnesty International wishes to emphasise that the European Charter should only be adopted as a legally binding instrument if certain basic conditions are fulfilled.

2.- Amnesty International calls for a legally binding European Charter provided that it guarantees the fundamental rights of all individuals without discrimination, strengthens rather than weakens the current level of human rights protection in the EU, serves to include fundamental rights that have not necessarily been included in other international instruments, and is fully justiciable by the European Court of Justice and by national courts when applying EC/EU Law.

3.- Amnesty International calls for a European Charter that applies to all the activities of the EU institutions, the entities created under the TEU, Member States when acting within and also outside the sphere of EC/EU law and private parties acting with the consent or acquiescence of governments.

4.- Amnesty International calls for the necessary treaty amendments to be adopted in order to ensure greater access for individual complaints about the violation of fundamental rights and that the European Court of Justice has jurisdiction in all the areas of EU activity in relation to human rights, this is, full jurisdiction not only on EC matters (including Title IV of the TEC) but also on Title V (Common Foreign and Security Policy) and Title VI (Justice and Home Affairs) of the TEU.

5.- Amnesty International recommends that a method be devised to ensure that the EC/EU act in conformity with the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights, as well as with other international human rights law and standards. One way of achieving this objective, which Amnesty International has recommended in the past, would be to make the necessary amendments to the Treaties to enable and require the EC/EU to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights. As the EC can acquire exclusive external competence in certain areas through different means, Amnesty International recommends that great care be taken in the drafting of any Treaty provision in this regard, so as to exclude the possibility that the EC/EU acquire any exclusive external competence in the field of human rights, as it would be detrimental to the international development of human rights standards if Member States were precluded from adhering to new conventions setting higher human rights standards.

6.- Amnesty International urges that the articles on fundamental rights be drafted to reflect the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation.

Statement by Amnesty International

Convention NGO Hearing on the European Charter of Fundamental Rights

27 April 2000

The question of how to protect human rights in the European Union (EU) legal order has been debated since the very first steps were taken to found the European Communities.

As a human rights organisation, Amnesty International welcomes initiatives to improve human rights protection throughout the world. Recognising that all human rights are indivisible and interdependent, Amnesty International urges all governments to ratify and implement international human rights standards. Amnesty International's interest in the proposed European Charter is a positive one in that it offers a perspective of real improvement in the human rights protection currently afforded by the European Union. At the same time Amnesty International is concerned that it should in no way result in a lowering of the current level of protection, and that any ambiguity in that respect be ruled out. Amnesty International wishes to emphasise that the European Charter should only be adopted as a legally binding instrument if certain basic conditions are fulfilled.

To that end, the organisation has issued a paper which analyses the issues raised by the adoption of the European Charter as well as the draft articles as they stand today, and advances recommendations so that it could constitute a real improvement in the human rights protection currently afforded by the EU. Copies of this paper are available now and an electronic version shall be forwarded to the Convention Secretariat.

1. Amnesty International calls for a legally binding European Charter provided that it guarantees the fundamental rights of all individuals without discrimination (particularly discrimination on the grounds of national origin), strengthens rather than weakens the current level of human rights protection in the EU, serves to include fundamental rights that have not necessarily been included in other international instruments, such as the fundamental right to asylum, and is fully justiciable by the European Court of Justice and by national courts when applying EC/EU Law.

2. Amnesty International calls for a European Charter that applies to all the activities of the EU institutions, the entities created under the TEU, Member States when acting within and also outside the sphere of EC/EU law and private parties acting with the consent or acquiescence of governments.

3. Amnesty International calls for the necessary treaty amendments to be adopted in order to ensure greater access for individual complaints about the violation of fundamental rights and that the European Court of Justice has jurisdiction in all the areas of EU activity in relation to human rights, this is, full jurisdiction not only on EC matters (including Title IV of the TEC) but also on Title V (Common Foreign and Security Policy) and Title VI (Justice and Home Affairs) of the TEU.

4. Amnesty International further recommends that a method be devised to ensure that the EC/EU act in conformity with the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols, as interpreted by the European Court of Human Rights, as well as with other international human rights law and standards. One way of achieving this objective, which Amnesty International has recommended in the past, would be to make the necessary amendments to the Treaties to enable and require the EC/EU to accede to the European Convention on Human Rights. As the EC can acquire exclusive external competence in certain areas through different means, great care should be taken in the drafting of any Treaty provision in this regard, so as to exclude the possibility that the EC/EU acquire any exclusive external competence in the field of human rights, as it would be detrimental to the international development of human rights standards if Member States were precluded from adhering to new conventions setting higher human rights standards.

5. Amnesty International urges that the articles on fundamental rights be drafted to reflect the broad framework of existing and evolving international law and standards, including the relevant jurisprudence and interpretation.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 10 May 2000CHARTE 4291/00*CONTRIB 163*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the presentation by the European Landowner's Organisation (ELO) given at the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

Presentation by Johan Nordenfalk, President of ELO, at the public hearing regarding the Charter of Fundamental Human Rights, given before the Convention on April 27, 2000.

Mr President, Ladies and Gentlemen,

We from the European Landowners' Organisation – ELO – thank you very much for allowing us to come here and present our views on ownership rights.

ELO is a federation of national landowners' organisations in the EU countries. We represent, directly or indirectly, 30 million people owning land in the countryside - quite a force, for instance four times bigger than the 7 million agricultural farmers. Many of us are also involved in agriculture, but most perform other rural activities, ranging from forestry and small business to energy production and aqua-culture etc.

Today I represent also the forest-organisation CEPF and the millions of urban owners, as their organisations GEFI and UIPI have authorised us to speak on their behalf.

Why then are ownership rights so important?

Well history shows that whenever ownership rights are neglected, the economy and the environment suffers - look for instance at former eastern Europe.

As to the economy, this is particularly important right now when the Union is embarking on an ambitious economic program to achieve full employment.

In my country, Sweden, we learnt this the hard way, because when earlier ownership was less well protected, major entrepreneurs like the founders of well-known companies like Ikea, Tetrapak etc migrated. The Union must not repeat that mistake. Ownership conditions for secure long term investments are crucial.

As to the environment: what nobody owns, nobody cares about. What is needed is an owner that loves his property, cares for it, wants to pass it on to his children, and feels safe enough to share it also with others. A secure owner is the environment's best friend!

And now to the wording of the article.

We are very glad that the Praesidium has proposed some changes in comparison with the European Convention on Human Rights, which is not adequate for the demands of today. The Praesidium's wording is an important step in the right direction. We have however, in a document registered as contribution 73 submitted proposals for some further improvements.

Before commenting on these, let me just underline that we fully accept that the authorities always must have the right to intervene for some good reason – it is the criteria and the conditions we are discussing.

Mr President, in order to describe our submissions, let me use an example that can fit both the countryside and the cities

Suppose you own a house with a nice garden. One day the authorities come and say that you must for some reason, perhaps biodiversity, plant thistles all over your garden.

I guess you would be upset – your children will not be able to play on your lawn, enjoy the flowers etc.

But the authorities may say: "Why complain? You still own your house and your garden!"
"But", you say, "I have little use for it anymore!"

This is why we want the words "and restricted in their use" included – it must be clearer that is not only depriving you of your house that counts.

Secondly, there must be some acceptable reason for the authorities' intrusion. Maybe in our example there is - it depends on the circumstances. But to only prescribe "in the public interest" is too weak - almost anything can be labelled "public interest", as also very recent history shows. We suggest "where deemed necessary". Also other wordings are possible, like some already used in the Union countries: for instance "significant public cause", or "public need".

Thirdly the compensation. Suppose in our example that you decide to sell your house and instead buy another one just like it. Before the thistle decision they were both worth, say, 100. Now you will only get, say, 80 for yours but the other still costs 100. I believe most of us would consider it correct that you get compensation for your loss of 20 so that you can buy the similar house. That is why we have proposed "full and prior compensation".

Anyone of you who owns a house, a business or whatever, may one day face a compulsory intervention – something that can change your life. It can not be correct that one person alone shall carry the burden for something that should benefit society as a whole and thus be born by all of us as taxpayers.

In addition to these three changes submitted in our document, our German members have mentioned that the "Grundgesetz" also explicitly protects "inheritance". To make it more clear we would thus propose to add "right to inheritance" to the first sentence in your wording.

Mr President, Ladies and Gentlemen!

One task of the Charter is to make the rights more visible to the Union's citizens.

We believe that our suggestions achieve just that and make the article on ownership more clear and understandable.

But equally important, we believe that with our wording, we will have ownership rights that will benefit the whole Union, its economy, the employment and the environment.

ELO proposed wording of article on ownership rights :

Everyone is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions and the rights to inheritance. No one may be deprived of his possessions or restricted in their use, except where deemed necessary in the public interest and in the cases and subject to the conditions provided for by law and subject to full and prior compensation.

European Landowners' Organisation
Avenue Pasteur, 23 – B 1300 Wavre
A. Tel : +32 10 23 29 02 ◊ Fax : +32 10 23 29 09 ◊ e-mail : elo@skynet.be

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 23 May 2000CHARTE 4292/00*CONTRIB 164*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter an open letter to the Convention and the intervention by the Federation of National Organisations Working with the Homeless (FEANTSA) given at the hearing on 27 April 2000.¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

Brussels, 8 May 2000

Open letter to the members of the Convention responsible for drafting the proposed European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights

Dear Madam / Sir,

I am writing to you on behalf of FEANTSA - the European Federation of National Organisations Working with the Homeless. FEANTSA brings together some 60 not-for-profit organisations in the social or community sector that provide a wide range of services to homeless people in all the EU member states, and in a number of the accession countries.

We have been very interested to hear about the work being carried out by the Convention with responsibility for drafting the proposed European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights. We are convinced that the proposed EU Charter should also enshrine those rights which are most important to the most disadvantaged members of our societies - including the right to housing.

Decent housing and living conditions are among the most basic needs of each individual. Gaining secure access to adequate accommodation is often a pre-condition for exercising many of the fundamental rights which form the foundations of all decent societies, and should be enjoyed by everyone. These include the right of access to education, the right to work, the right to social protection, the right to healthcare services, the right to personal privacy and family life, as well as access to basic services such as water and electricity.

The European Observatory on Homelessness (which has conducted research on homelessness in the Member States on behalf of FEANTSA since 1991) has compiled an overview of the situation in the fifteen EU member states. Approximately three million people have no fixed home of their own, while a further 15 million people live in sub-standard or overcrowded accommodation. On this basis, we can estimate that across the European Union, one person in 20 is denied access to decent housing.

Since 1948, the Universal Declaration on Human Rights has proclaimed that: "everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services" (Article 25.1). More than 100 states are committed to taking appropriate steps to ensure the realisation of the right to housing, under article 11.1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (1966).

At the level of the Council of Europe, the European Social Charter was adopted in 1961, and the revised European Social Charter (RESC) was opened for signature in 1996. The right to housing is enshrined in Article 31 of the RESC, which sets out a series of three objectives:

"With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right to housing, the Parties undertake to take measures designed:

- 1. to promote access to housing of an adequate standard;*
- 2. to prevent and reduce homelessness with a view to its gradual elimination;*
- 3. to make the price of housing accessible to those without adequate resources".*

The Revised European Social Charter officially entered into force on 1 July 1999. But the current situation is that only five countries have completed the ratification process: France, Italy, Sweden, Romania and Slovenia. Most of the EU countries have signed but not yet ratified the RESC: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Luxembourg, Portugal and the United Kingdom. FEANTSA strongly advocates that every European country should sign and ratify the Revised European Social Charter. This will provide us with a common foundation, upon which we can develop and implement effective policy solutions at all levels, in order to tackle social exclusion and homelessness.

In relation to the proposed European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights, we must ask the following question: Will the proposed Charter represent a step forward in terms of protecting the fundamental rights of the most disadvantaged members of our societies?

We welcome the fact that the Convention is willing to consider all the main dimensions of fundamental human rights, including civil, political, legal, social and economic rights. However, we are extremely concerned that the right to housing was not included in the draft list of fundamental rights which was presented at the most recent meeting of the Convention.

As civilised and democratic societies, we have a collective responsibility to ensure that all citizens and residents are able to gain access to adequate accommodation. The prevention and elimination of homelessness can only be achieved through the recognition and realisation of the right to housing. This conviction is enshrined in the revised European Social Charter, and is also reflected in numerous texts of national constitutions and laws that have been enacted in the member states of the European Union.

We fear that the adoption of an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights which excludes the right to housing would send out a negative signal to the citizens of Europe and to the national governments of the member states and of the accession countries. It would suggest that the right to housing is somehow less important than other fundamental human rights. It would imply that our societies are willing to tolerate that thousands of people become homeless every year. It could undermine the efforts of those of us who are working to protect the fundamental rights of the most disadvantaged members of our societies.

We respectfully appeal to you to ensure that the full range of social rights - including the right to housing - are included in the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Yours sincerely,

John Evans
President of FEANTSA

Public Hearing of the Convention on the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights

European Parliament, Brussels, 27 April 2000

Address by Catherine Parmentier, Secretary General of FEANTSA

Mr Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen members of the Convention, the following address is made on behalf of FEANTSA, the European Federation of National Organisations Working with the Homeless.

FEANTSA currently brings together some seventy national and regional associations working to provide a broad range of services for the homeless in the Member States of the EU as well as in a number of candidates for EU membership. FEANTSA is also responsible for running a research structure, the European Observatory on Homelessness, which works in cooperation with 15 universities and research organizations throughout the Member States.

The wish we express today is for recognition by the members of the Convention of a right to decent and affordable housing for all, even for those on low incomes.

1. The context

At present, 18 million Europeans (or one person in twenty) in the 15 countries of the European Union are denied access to reasonable housing. Of these, 3 million are actually homeless, and 15 million are living in sub-standard and overcrowded housing.

The European housing market is characterized by rising costs, particularly in the private rented sector, while insecurity in the labour market means that the resources households are able to devote to housing are increasingly under pressure.

In these conditions there is an urgent need for the right to decent housing to be placed at the centre of the political agenda at all levels, and consequently also therefore at the centre of the Charter of Fundamental Rights.

2. Housing and the other Fundamental Rights

Adequate housing and reasonable living conditions are among the most basic needs of each individual. Housing is the first and last line of defence against social exclusion.

The access to decent, stable housing is frequently also the indispensable precondition for the exercise of most of the other fundamental rights currently under discussion in this forum and whose inclusion in the Charter appears not to pose a problem.

What real relevance for homeless people have any of the following rights: the right to privacy? the right to personal dignity? the right to lifelong education? the right to maternity care? the right to social protection? the right to protection of children? the right to the integration of the handicapped? the right to the protection of family life? the right to health care? the right to education for children? the right to personal security? the right to work? the right to a normal working week? The right to vote?

These rights are all devoid of meaning for people who have lost their homes. It is no exaggeration to describe homelessness as a negation of citizenship.

3. Integrating the right to housing in the Charter

Housing is too important and too expensive an item to be decided by the law of the market with no public regulation. Recognition of a right to adequate and affordable housing by the public authorities at all levels constitutes the best long-term guarantee for the implementation of general policies designed to address this fundamental and universal need.

I would like to remind you (and on this subject the document drawn up by the European Housing Forum can be consulted on the websites of the Convention and of the Forum) that the need for recognition of the right to housing has received backing at the community level from several sources, including :

- the European Parliament: three Resolutions (87, 96 and 97) and the Bertel Haarder report in March 2000 of the Commission on the freedom and rights of the citizens;
- the Committee of the Regions: Own Initiative report, 1999, Opinion on housing and the homeless;
- the European Commission, in its March 2000 Communication Building an inclusive Europe, points out that 'Homelessness is one of the most severe expressions of poverty and social exclusion'.

It is relevant to mention here that the European political calendar over the next two years contains a unique combination of initiatives for promoting adequate housing provision for everyone:

- the examination in the annual meetings of housing ministers under four successive presidencies - Portugal, France, Sweden and Belgium - of the role of public policy in facilitating access to housing;
- the work of the group of specialists on access to housing of the Council of Europe and the publication by this group in 2001 of a report on housing among disadvantaged groups in Europe, plus recommendations to the Committee of Ministers of the Member States;
- the launch this year by the United Nations of the Global Campaign for Security of Tenure, and the organization in 2001 at New York of the World Habitat Conference (Istanbul + 5).

The European Union must include these ideas and efforts in its action.

Access to decent and affordable housing for all is an absolute precondition for the social cohesion which was identified at the Lisbon Summit as one of the main objectives for the Union.

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Convention, I submit that if the Charter of Fundamental Rights is to be a truly coherent document, forming the basis of a project for European society, with the aim defined by the committee of experts on Fundamental Rights of informing the action of the European Union in all areas and at all times, then the right to housing must be included. This is a priority.

Thank you.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 16 May 2000CHARTE 4293/00*CONTRIB 165*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the position paper from Eurolink Age on occasion of the public hearing on 27 April 2000.^{1 2}

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

² Eurolink Age: Tel: +44-181 765 7715. Fax: +44-181 679 6727.

European Union proposals for a draft Charter of fundamental rights of the EU

Eurolink Age position paper

Introduction

Eurolink Age is a network of organisations and individuals throughout the European Union that promotes good policy and practice on ageing in the interests of the 121.4 million older people (defined as 50+) in the EU. It has been in operation since 1981. As a non-governmental organisation we are delighted to respond to the invitation to contribute to the drafting process for a Charter of fundamental rights for the EU.

This position paper, based on the Presidency note of 27 January 2000, has been drawn up in consultation with c.140 Eurolink Age members across Europe who are concerned to ensure that older people's interests are fully taken into account by the Charter drafted by the Convention.

Comments on 'Draft list of fundamental rights' circulated by the Portuguese Presidency on 27 January 2000

List of rights

Eurolink Age draws to the attention of the Convention some specific rights which are particularly sensitive for older people, aspects of which should, in our opinion, be addressed as detailed drafting work continues. The following comments are numbered in accordance with the Portuguese Presidency list.

Dignity

1. This right should incorporate the relevant United Nations Principle for Older Persons: 'Older persons should be able to live in dignity and security and be free of exploitation and physical or mental abuse'.

Right to life

2. This right must take account of the sensitive issue of end of life rights, relating to access to medical treatment, to health-related choices in later life, and in relation to euthanasia. This is an emotive matter which must be treated with great respect.

Liberty and security

3. The European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms sets out exceptions to the general right to protection in the event of deprivation of liberty. These include: ‘the lawful detention of personsof unsound mind,’ (Article 5(e)). In view of the higher incidence of mental frailty among older people, Eurolink Age believes it is important that ‘persons of unsound mind’ be defined in such a way that adequate protection is ensured for individuals, such as Alzheimer’s disease sufferers, whose liberty may be infringed while they are still capable of – and can benefit from – taking some responsibility for their own affairs.

Respect for private and family life: right to privacy, home, correspondence

8. In practice today, this right is often infringed in the case of frail older people. The Charter should follow the United Nations Principles which address these issues, particularly in relation to supporting the continuing independence of older people and also concerning their ‘human rights and fundamental freedoms when residing in any shelter, care or treatment facility’.

Due regard should be given to those older people who find themselves victim to family abuse.

Article 23 of the Revised European Social Charter, on the right of elderly people to social protection, guarantees the respect of older people living in institutions. Eurolink Age calls on the Convention to incorporate Article 23 in its entirety into the draft Charter.

Right to education and vocational training, freedom of choice of method of education

13. The drafting of this right should take account of life-long learning, and the need to tailor education and vocational training to individual requirements. Research by Eurolink Age suggests that within the workplace older workers are often unable to benefit from training due to inappropriate delivery aimed at younger people.

Freedom of movement

17. The EC affords limited rights for those above retirement age to reside in another Member State. We believe that this right should be expressed in such a way that individuals will be able to rely on it when the implementing provisions are not applied in the spirit of the Treaties by all Member States, as is often the case today.

Right to property

18. Eurolink Age believes that the term ‘property’ should be defined to include social security rights and benefits which apply and which are accrued by the individual in the course of their life.

Non-discrimination

21. Age as a basis for discrimination is included in Article 13 of the EC Treaties but not per se in the ECHR (Article 14). Eurolink Age believes that all persons of whatever age should enjoy the right of freedom from discrimination in all aspects of their lives, including the workplace, health and other services.

Economic and social rights/objectives

2,3 and 4. Working conditions

Eurolink Age welcomes the basic rights put forward for the benefit of all workers. It is important that those with informal employment status are also taken into account, including volunteers and informal family carers.

5. Pensions

Eurolink Age argues that there should be a right to an adequate pension for all older people, in line with Council Recommendation 92/441/EEC on common criteria concerning sufficient resources and social assistance in social protection systems. Older people currently make up the highest proportion of Europe's socially excluded people - 35% of those living below the poverty line in the EU are age 50 and over (ECHP, 1995 wave). They are among the most vulnerable, and least able to change their situation.

11, 12 and 15. Social protection

Eurolink Age believes that everyone covered by the Charter should enjoy a right to a minimum level of healthcare, to social security, social and medical assistance, and – if affected by a disabling condition – to positive measures towards integration in society.

Implementing the Charter

Accessible for all

2. The EU Council has stated that the protection of fundamental rights is a founding principle of the EU, and that there is a need to make these fundamental rights more visible to the Union's citizens.¹ Eurolink Age believes that these rights will only be visible to individuals if they are presented in an understandable and accessible manner, and if there is straightforward, affordable recourse for individuals whose rights are denied.

3. The Convention has indicated that it is not yet certain what legal status the Charter will have, if any. Eurolink Age argues that it is imperative that the Charter is legally binding and can ultimately be relied upon by individuals. Unless the Charter is applied in practice, the original goal set out at the Cologne summit in June 1999 – 'to establish a Charter of fundamental rights in order to make their overriding importance and relevance more visible to the Union's citizens' – becomes a nonsense. In particular, we believe that it is no longer acceptable to sideline those – such as non-EU citizens or older people without a history of involvement in the labour market - who may be affected by, but not yet protected by the EC Treaties.

¹ Conclusions of the European Council in Cologne, 3-4/6/99

Grievances should be dealt with within an acceptable timeframe.

4. At present, those provisions under the EC Treaties with direct effect (which can be relied upon by individuals) are enforceable through national judicial systems and the European Court. The process is time consuming. Where a case is referred to the Court of Justice, it can take two years or longer before a judgment is given. If the final Charter is to be relied upon by individuals, legal procedures must ensure that an already lengthy system is not further worsened as a result of the Charter. Especially for elderly people, recourse must be obtainable within an acceptable timeframe.

5. We draw the attention of the Convention to the ‘Declaration of principles to mark the end of the European Year of the Elderly and Solidarity between Generations’ agreed by the EU Council and Ministers for Social Affairs, meeting on 8 December 1993, as well as to the United Nations Principles for Older Persons². We believe that these principles should be incorporated into the draft Charter.

² Resolution 46/91, adopted by the UN General Assembly on 16 December 1991

Annex 1Extract from the Declaration of Principles of the Council of the European Union and the Ministers for Social Affairs, meeting within the Council of 8 December 1993 to mark the end of the European Year of the Elderly and of Solidarity between Generations (1993)

Ministers

9. DECLARE that:

- Member States recognize, in their legislation and policies, the full citizenship of the elderly, in freedom and with equal rights and obligations, in all areas of the life of the community;

- they intend to promote the integration of the elderly in all areas of the life of the community, thereby acting to counter social exclusion and isolation as well as discrimination, given that all persons of any age are entitled to recognition of their human dignity;

10. – DECLARE that Member States wish to pursue policies based on the essential principles of solidarity between and within generations in order to:

- promote the social integration of the elderly by enabling them to manifest themselves in society in the spheres of family, social, political, cultural, recreational and educational life;

- encourage respect for the elderly as individuals and their right to privacy and physical integrity, and promote opportunities for the elderly to assume their responsibilities;

11. CALL UPON MEMBER STATES, in accordance with the above principles, to approve the following objectives framing policies concerning areas of special interest to the elderly:(i) regarding level of income and standard of living:

(a) take measures to guarantee the elderly the right to minimum resources and/or access to other systems of social protection and to enable them to play a continuing part in social life on an independent basis;

(b) grant the elderly, when ceasing work at the end of their working lives, a substitute income, determined by means of standard benefits or calculated in relation to their earlier earnings, maintaining their standard of living in a reasonable manner, on the basis of their participation in appropriate social-security schemes;

- (c) refer, in setting amounts, to such indicators as they consider appropriate, e.g. statistics on the average available income in the Member State concerned, statistics on household consumption, the statutory minimum wage, if any, or price levels;
 - (d) introduce arrangements for periodic review of such amounts in accordance with these indicators, to ensure that needs continue to be met;
 - (e) ensure that the elderly can remain active in society and, having due regard to the economic and employment situation in each Member State, can retain links with the labour market;
 - (f) in due course, adapt pension schemes to demographic changes, while maintaining the basic role of statutory retirement arrangements;
- (ii) regarding housing and mobility:
- (a) encourage a flexible housing policy providing for a variety of accommodation which enables the elderly to continue to play a part in the life of the community; in this connection, account should be taken of the personal wishes of the elderly to continue living in their own homes;
 - (b) ensure that the independence and privacy of the elderly are respected;
 - (c) encourage the independence of the elderly by promoting a residential environment and transport infrastructure that are accessible and safe;
- (iii) regarding provision of care and services:
- (a) on the basis of objective criteria, provide adequate assistance geared to the autonomy and physical, mental and social well-being of the elderly; such assistance could include home care, home help, mobile services, sheltered housing and health services;
 - (b) encourage co-ordination of the various health and social services;
 - (c) promote a range of qualified services to meet the new requirements of a population with increasing numbers of very elderly people, so that dependence and institutionalization can be avoided as far as possible; this applies in particular to persons suffering from ageing diseases;

- (d) establish criteria for introducing and organizing such services and facilities;
 - (e) without concentrating exclusively on the elderly as a target group, envisage preventive measures aimed at forestalling or delaying the onset of diseases and the beginning of dependence;
- (iv) regarding employment of elderly workers and preparation for retirement:
- take initiatives to:
 - (a) assess, in a spirit of solidarity between generations, the extent to which differential treatment based on age is justified;
 - (b) make possible a smooth transition from working life to retirement;
 - (c) provide appropriate support for the elderly during that transition by introducing facilities for advice and counselling, information and practical assistance and streamlining administrative procedures accordingly;
 - (d) encourage the passing on of expertise to rising generations in order to take advantage of the experience of the elderly;
- (v) regarding the participation of the elderly:
- promote, in all layers of society, full involvement of the elderly in the life of the community through suitable provision of the information needed for active involvement in appropriate fashion in all areas concerning them;

12. EMPHASIZE that:

- (a) the attainment of the above objectives can make a considerable contribution towards combating and preventing the social exclusion and isolation of the elderly;
- (b) it is desirable to encourage the attainment of those objectives in the Member States;
- (c) the Council and the Ministers for Social Affairs will periodically review progress in implementing those objectives;

13. NOTE the following statement by the Commission:

‘The Commission emphasizes that demographic trends, and the ageing of the population in particular, constitute one of the major challenges for social policies. It further points out that the European Year of the Elderly and of Solidarity between Generations has enabled firm progress to be made on, in particular, data analysis, the debate on the implications of ageing, the development of innovative approaches, the exchange of experience, the mobilization of the bodies involved, co-operation between the latter and active participation by the persons concerned.

In this connection, it emphasizes that activities need to be undertaken which draw on this progress and that the 1994 budget guidelines provide a modest, but useful, basis for this purpose.

On the basis of the evaluation under way and the achievements of the European Year it intends to make medium-term proposals in 1994 for increased Community support for Member States’ policies in this area.’

Annex 2

Revised European Social Charter

Article 23 the right of elderly persons to social protection

With a view to ensuring the effective exercise of the right of elderly persons to social protection, the Parties undertake to adopt or encourage, either directly or in co-operation with public or private organisations, appropriate measures designed in particular:

- to enable elderly persons to remain full members of society for as long as possible, by means of:
 - a adequate resources enabling them to lead a decent life and play an active part in public, social and cultural life;
 - b provision of information about services and facilities available for elderly persons and their opportunities to make use of them;
- to enable elderly persons to choose their life-style freely and to lead independent lives in their familiar surroundings for as long as they wish and are able, by means of:
 - a provision of housing suited to their needs and their state of health or of adequate support for adapting their housing;
 - b the health care and the services necessitated by their state;
- to guarantee elderly persons living in institutions appropriate support, while respecting their privacy, and participation in decisions concerning living conditions in the institution.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 12 May 2000CHARTE 4294/00*CONTRIB 166*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the presentation by "European citizens and their associations" (ECAS), given at the public hearing on 27 April 2000. ^{1 2}

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

² ECAS: 53, rue de la Concorde, B-1050 Brussels. Tel: +32-2-548 0490.
Fax: +32-2-548 0499. E-mail: admin@ecas.org

Presentation by ECAS to THE HEARING FOR NGOS ON THE DRAFT CHARTER on fundamental rights

ECAS is an advice service for European citizens and their associations. As part of the "Dialogue with citizens" project, our team of lawyers has handled over 30,000 questions from ordinary people about their rights to live and work in the EU. You can find with us the evidence of how Europe is not working properly for citizens in the areas of recognition of free movement, social rights and professional qualifications. We have also carried out discussion groups and research on European citizenship.

There is much rhetoric in the discussion of rights. We hope that the convention will keep in mind the concerns of ordinary people. There is a need to reaffirm European citizenship. All too often there is a clash between the expectations to which this concept gives rise and what happens in practice when Member States' administrations apply the exceptions rather the spirit of Community law. How can the 16 year old German girl denied access to a training course in France because of her nationality, or the aid worker facing an expulsion order from Belgium, or the teacher waiting five years for her qualifications to be recognised in Spain take the concept of European citizenship seriously? It is vital therefore for the convention to address how effective mechanisms for advice, conciliation and access to justice can be developed nationally and at EU level. The charter should hold out tangible benefits to people.

We would like to make three points referring in particular to the proposed articles on the rights of citizens (doc. Charte 4170/00, convent 17) and a fourth point concerning relations between the Charter and the European convention on human rights:

1. The need for a focal point on European citizenship

Why since Maastricht has citizenship of the Union remained a cinderella concept? One reason is that in the Treaties and hence in the administrative and committee structures of the Institutions the notion of citizenship is atomised and responsibilities scattered. The charter could therefore provide a focal point by bringing together and strengthening in a single text all EU provisions relating to European citizens. The convention, in articles A to J, is making progress on grouping together different aspects of the citizen's relations with the EU Institutions and political rights. More needs to be done in the area of freedom of movement in the broadest sense where there is only one article proposed, letter J, thus neglecting other Treaty provisions on free movement of workers, recognition of qualifications and access to employment in the public sector.

For example, the right to diplomatic and consular protection was included in the draft list of fundamental rights proposed on 27 January 2000 but appears to be forgotten so far in the draft articles. The Commission and European Parliament have often called for a regrouping of all articles relating to European citizenship and free movement, whilst the report of the high level panel chaired by Simone Veil of March 1997 called for a single Commissioner.

2. The need to develop the concept of European citizenship

The convention should also come forward with ideas to develop European citizenship, since article 18 of the Treaty recognises that it is an evolving concept. In response therefore to your question “Where rights are reserved for citizens alone, should there be a general clause to the effect that such rights may be extended to third country nationals?”, our reply is “yes”, but subject to certain conditions such as legal residence in a Member State for five years or over. Why in an internal market and a global economy does the EU allow its own citizens to live and work in other Member States, whilst keeping third country nationals locked in separate national economies? And there are other issues here too. By accepting Article 18 as it stands with its apparently innocuous phrase “subject to the limitations and conditions laid down”, the convention would be endorsing an economic, 19th century concept of citizenship whereby EU citizens without sufficient resources may be expelled from another Member State. The EU’s own concept of citizenship is at variance with other Treaty provisions on non-discrimination and fighting social exclusion. Free movement is easier for those in employment than for job seekers, trainees or students. If all EU citizens were given a one year unrestricted residence right, many problems could be resolved.

3. The need to solve problems and make rights enforceable

People expect European citizenship to mean that the EU Institutions have a responsibility to deal with their problems, and are transparent and accountable. The convention is responding to this demand, but the draft articles remain rather general, and could address as follows, some more specific and legitimate grievances:

- One could add to the principles of democracy in Article A that “deliberations of a legislative nature in the Institutions are held in public” which is true in this house but not in the Council of Ministers.
- One could also add to Article E “citizens of the Union have a right to be informed of their European rights and duties and of the policies of the Union”, which is really a precondition to having any relations with the administration.
- The right to be heard and receive a response should be defined (i.e. not exceeding one month) and also applied to the particular issue to which the ombudsman has drawn attention, i.e. the accountability of the Commission to complainants;

In this report, we would propose an amendment to strengthen the rights of the citizen as follows:

“Every natural of legal person has the right to address a complaint to the European Commission and to be informed of the action taken, or of the reasons why the Institution considers that no action should be taken. If the absence of action has no legal grounds, the plaintiff with a legitimate interest may bring the matter directly before the European Court of Justice”.

This sanction does not mean that we are in favour of litigation per se. On the contrary we know that people are extremely reluctant to go to court, and we believe that the convention should also reflect the mood both of the public and ministries of justice in favour of quick, inexpensive and effective alternative dispute resolution.

4. The Charter and the European Convention on human rights

For the last 10 years, like other NGOs we have been demanding that the EU should adhere to the Council of Europe convention on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Citizens should have the same right of appeal in relation to EU decisions as they have in relation to their own governments and courts. Today we would probably go further. The Council of Europe has enlarged rapidly, some would say too rapidly, with the risk of erosion of its human rights “acquis”. It is also the traditional meeting place of EU members and applicant states. The convention should not only recommend the Treaty changes and protocols necessary for the EU to join, but also how to strengthen and modernise the Council of Europe’s human rights machinery and provide for sanctions to ensure that the decisions of the Strasbourg Court are enforced. There is often a case for strengthening Institutions which exist rather than creating new ones, which in this case would simply add to the widespread confusion about the role of the different European and International Courts.

Finally, there can be no true citizenship based solely on rights without the other side of the coin – responsibilities - and we do not find this reflected yet in the draft.

SUMMARY OF THE ECAS POSITION ON EUROPEAN CITIZENSHIP AND FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

- 1) Every person holding the nationality of a member state and/or legally resident in the European Union for over five years should be able to acquire certain European citizenship rights.
- 2) The Union should accede to the European Convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms and its protocols.
- 3) Every person should be guaranteed protection against discrimination on whatever grounds including age, disability, race, religion, sex and sexual orientation. Positive discrimination to ensure equal rights should be allowed.
- 4) The Union should have action programmes which cover the issues of social rights, access to services, safety, health and the environment. There should be particular attention to vulnerable groups in society.
- 5) Citizens of the Union have a right to seek work and reside freely anywhere in the Union without internal border controls and a common external frontier. An action programme should seek to eliminate the visible and hidden barriers to exercising these rights.
- 6) Every citizen of the Union residing in another Member State should have the right to vote and stand as a candidate in all elections and to participate in referenda.
- 7) Citizens of the Union should have the right to associate freely and establish European associations or foundations across borders to make their voice heard by the Union institutions.
- 8) Citizens of the Union should have a right to be informed of the Union's policies whilst enjoying freedom of access to documents and the legislative process.
- 9) Every natural or legal person should be able to hold the Commission accountable to respond to complaints in addition to the right to petition the European Parliament or apply to the Ombudsman.
- 10) Every person, or association acting on their behalf, should be able to defend their European rights in a tribunal and be able to appeal to the European Court of Justice if other remedies are exhausted.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 16 May 2000CHARTE 4296/00*CONTRIB 168*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the intervention by the European Council of Steiner Waldorf Schools given at the hearing on 27 April 2000. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

European Council of Steiner Waldorf Schools STATEMENT MADE AT THE HEARING OF NGOs ON APRIL 27th, 2000 BEFORE THE CONVENT ENTRUSTED WITH DRAFTING A EUROPEAN CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Dear Mr. Chairman, dear members of the convent, my name is Detlef Hardorp and I am speaking here today on behalf not only of the German "Bund der Waldorfschulen", but also on behalf of the European Council of Steiner Waldorf Schools (ECSWS). We represent the largest school movement independent of church and state in Europe. Of the 800 plus Steiner Waldorf schools world-wide, 589 are in Europe, in 19 European countries. We have been working together with a number of other European organisations like ECNAIS and OIDEL, representing altogether more than ten million pupils in European independent schools, on a wording for article 16, and a joint proposal will be presented this afternoon by the European Forum for Freedom in Education (EFFE).

My plea here today is for a Europe which actively supports more diversity in education with a stronger emphasis on understanding and tolerance within a multi-cultural Europe. Steiner Waldorf schools follow an international curriculum that gets adapted to the particular culture of the region the school happens to be in, with a strong emphasis on the European dimension. For example, Steiner Waldorf Schools immerse children in two foreign languages and their respective cultures from class one - with 80 years of experience to look back upon.

The Netherlands have treated all providers of primary and secondary education equally since 1917, without discrimination with regard to public funding. This could have a model function. Other countries demand that a school follow their national curriculum in order to be eligible for subsidies. This can lead to discrimination against those parents who, for example, opt for a stronger European or international orientation of the school of their choice. Should this remain acceptable in Europe? Is it not precisely the task of the EU to reinforce the European dimension of education (as noted, for example, by Andrew Duff, CHARTE 4218/00, page 104)?

Without subsidies, independent schools either turn into classic "private" schools for the rich - which is not compatible with the social philosophy of Steiner Waldorf education, or they are forced to underpay their teachers and to constantly hover on the brink of economic disaster - the plight of Steiner Waldorf schools in a number of European countries. So my plea here is for diversity in education which must guarantee funding through the member states.

It would suffice to take seriously the "Resolution on Freedom of Education in the European Community" of the EP, passed in 1984 (14-3-1984). I would like to quote one sentence in particular:

»In accordance with the right to freedom of education, Member States shall be required to provide the financial means whereby this right can be exercised in practice, and to make the necessary public grants to enable schools to carry out their tasks and fulfil their duties under the same conditions as in corresponding State establishments, without discrimination as regards administration, parents, pupils or staff.«

Besides the Netherlands, there is a definitive tendency in this direction. Sweden, for example, put this into practice about a decade ago: primary and secondary education is now equitably funded in that country. In other words, schools run by the state and schools run by third sector NGOs receive the same amount of money. National authorities there no longer privilege themselves. There has been no remorse about the greater diversity of education this has brought about in Sweden.

The EU is not and should not be in a position to regulate the content of education beyond assuring diversity and non-discrimination and furthering the European dimension. But that is already a lot, if taken seriously and given a binding framework.

Please allow me a brief comment on the fear of sects opening schools, which has been voiced occasionally in the discussion. It should go without saying that all schools must respect human and fundamental rights. The fear of sects seems to come largely from countries with little experience with diversity in education. I have not heard of sects taking over schools in countries that already have a lot of diversity. Is the fact that paper money can be counterfeited an argument against the free circulation of money? Obviously measures against counterfeiting need to be taken, and these exist.

Please allow a further remark with regard to M. Berthu's minority opinion: subsidiarity is not only applicable between different levels of governmental authorities, but should also be applied between authorities and citizens! Precisely because we want freedom and diversity, we need an article on education in the charter which takes us a step forward in giving more responsibility in education to the third sector.

I quite agree with Mr. Griffith and others that it is insufficient to speak only of parental choice with regards to religious and philosophical convictions, but that educational preferences (critères pédagogiques) need to be included in the wording of the charter.

To sum up: It would be helpful to have a European Charter of Fundamental Rights which guarantees minority rights also in the educational sector with regard to reasonable educational convictions of parents, and which stipulates non-discrimination also for powerful member states with regards to less powerful NGOs trying to serve the needs of these minorities with innovative quality education: subsidiarity at the lowest level. This is - in my view - the direction in which education needs to develop in a civil society.

Thank for your attention!

Dr. Detlef Hardorp, EU Liaison Officer, ECSWS
Home Office: Friedrich-Ludwig-Jahn-Strasse 46, D-14612 Falkensee
Tel: +49 3322 24 26 24, Fax: +49 3322 24 27 24, Email: dh@waldorf.net
Brussels Office: Rue du Trône 194, B-1050 Brussels. Tel: +32 2 644 00 43

MEMBERS:

AUSTRIA: Österreichische Vereinigung freier Bildungsstätten auf anthroposophischer Grundlage

BELGIUM: Federatie van Rudolf Steinerscholen in Vlaanderen

CZECH REPUBLIC: Asociace waldorfských škol

DENMARK: Sammenslutningen af Rudolf Steiner Skoler i Danmark

ESTONIA: Eesti Waldorfkoolide Ühendus

FINLAND: Steinerpedagogiikan seura ry

FRANCE: Fédération des Écoles Rudolf Steiner en France

GERMANY: Bund der Freien Waldorfschulen e.V.

HUNGARY: Magyar Waldorf Szövetség

ITALY: Federazione della Scuole Rudolf Steiner in Italia

LUXEMBURG: Veräin fir Waldorfpädagogik Lëtzebuerg

NETHERLANDS: Bond van Vrije Scholen

NORWAY: Steinerskolene i Norge

RUSSIA: Association of Waldorf Schools

SWEDEN: Waldorfskole-federationen

SWITZERLAND: Arbeitsgemeinschaft der Rudolf Steiner Schulen

UNITED KINGDOM: Steiner Schools Fellowship

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS:

EIRE: Irish Steiner Waldorf Education Association

SLOVENIA: Drustvo prijateljev waldorfske šole

AFFILIATE MEMBER:

Association of Waldorf Schools of North America

ECSWS, Kidbrooke Park, Forest Row, Sussex RH18 5JA England

Office Tel +44 1342 822115 Fax. +44 1342 826004

Proprietors: Steiner Schools Fellowship Ltd. Registered Charity No. 295104

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 25 May 2000CHARTE 4298/00*CONTRIB 170*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the second submission by the Confederation of British Industry (CBI). ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

Confederation of British IndustryDirector-General
Digby JonesCentre Point
103 New Oxford Street
London WC1A 1DU
Switchboard: 0171 379 7400
Facsimile: 0171 240 1578
Website: <http://www.cbi.org.uk>CBI SECOND SUBMISSION TO THE EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS DRAFTING CONVENTION

The Confederation of British Industry (CBI) is the voice of British business, representing more than 250,000 employers, large and small, industrial and commercial.

This second CBI submission to the Convention focuses on the economic and social rights which are currently being discussed.

Summary

1. As outlined in its earlier submission to the Convention, the CBI supports a declaratory Charter which sets out existing justiciable fundamental rights – whether derived from the European Convention on Human Rights or the EU Treaties – and how citizens can enforce them. We believe this approach will maximise the visibility of fundamental rights to EU citizens, whilst preserving the existing, effective legal mechanisms.
2. We remain deeply concerned by calls to extend the list of existing fundamental rights and to make the Charter legally binding by incorporating it into the Treaties. The advocates of this approach aim to develop a European Constitution by creating binding rights at EU level in areas which have traditionally been the ultimate responsibility of national governments. This would be an enormous political step. Such shifts in sovereignty have major implications and should only be considered through full intergovernmental discussions. We do not believe that contemplation of such a radical approach is compatible with the mandate provided at Cologne – which was clear that the Convention’s primary role was to consider how to make existing rights more visible.
3. The term ‘fundamental social rights’ can create confusion. It is used in different community texts to describe both justiciable rights and political aspirations which cannot be enforced by the Courts. For example, the European Convention on Human Rights clearly has direct legal effect – EU citizens can take cases under it to the Strasbourg Court. Such rights should, in our view, be included in the Charter. By contrast, the fundamental rights referred to in the 1961 European Social Charter and the 1989 Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights of Workers are political aspirations, values and policy objectives that all member states agree to pursue at the appropriate level, but which have no legal effect. Whilst these are of great importance, they do not have the same legal status as justiciable rights. We do not believe that they should be included in the Charter.

The CBI believes that it is critical that the differing legal status of “fundamental social rights” must be fully acknowledged in discussion of both the scope and legal status of the Charter.

A declaratory Charter focusing on those rights which are currently justiciable is the best way to meet the Council’s objective of raising EU citizens’ awareness of their fundamental rights.

5. The CBI believes the role of the Charter is to raise EU citizens’ awareness of their existing rights – an objective that we fully support. Looking at the Conventions 18, 19 and 26, the CBI believes that only those fundamental rights and freedoms which are at present directly enforceable should be incorporated into the Charter, namely:
 - The freedom to choose and practise trade and profession, which is closely associated with the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States as established in article 18 of the TEC.
 - The right to equal pay between men and women, as set out in article 141 of the TEC.
 - The right to freedom of association, set out in article 11 of the ECHR.
 - The right to equality between men and women and the right of disabled persons to social and professional integration should be considered as elements of the general principle of non-discrimination established in article 14 of the ECHR.
6. The Charter should set out these justiciable rights in clear and simple language for maximum impact and point to the appropriate source instrument and existing legal mechanisms by which citizens can enforce these rights.
7. The legal mechanisms for enforcing ECHR rights would be altered if they were incorporated into the EU Treaties. This would undermine the current effective system of enforcement and generate considerable legal uncertainty:
 - Overlaps of jurisdiction between the Strasbourg Court and the European Court of Justice would lead to different interpretations of fundamental rights, undermining legal certainty.
 - It would also create a two-speed system of case law development that would weaken the Council of Europe. The European Court would develop its own body of case law that would not be applicable to non-EU members of the Council of Europe.
 - The Strasbourg Court – which has jurisdiction over the ECHR - has developed a balanced approach to the interpretation and protection of fundamental rights over fifty years, which should be built on rather than undermined. Some have argued that even if the ECHR were incorporated into the Treaty, it would be possible to ensure the precedence of the Strasbourg Court over ECHR rights. It is unclear how this could be achieved given that the European Court has responsibility for Treaty rights.

The balance of powers between the EU and member states should only be altered through intergovernmental negotiations

8. There have been many calls to include in the Charter fundamental rights which are not currently legally enforceable by citizens through the Courts. There have been particular demands for inclusion of the political aspirations outlined in the 1961 European Social Charter and the 1989 Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights of Workers. These Charters set out important values and objectives which EU member states have agreed to respect and work towards, at national or European level as appropriate. But these “fundamental rights” are clearly of a different nature and status from the justiciable rights in the European Convention and enshrined in the EU Treaties (as set out above). The CBI believes that they should not be incorporated into a legally binding Charter as this would:

- Create new rights at EU level, shifting the balance of power between member states and the EU outside of the normal process of intergovernmental negotiations; and
- Create considerable legal confusion for business and individual citizens.

9. The CBI believes that guaranteeing new rights at EU level through their incorporation into the Treaty would change the balance of power between member states and the EU. The social and employment chapters of the Treaties have clearly set out the powers of the Union to act on a European level, specifically excluding topics such as pay, the right of association, the right to strike or impose a lockout from EU legislative competence. To incorporate such rights in a legally binding Charter would expand the competence of the EU in these areas. For example:

- Empowering the ECJ to undertake judicial review of the French SMIC or the UK national minimum wage would undermine member states’ responsibility for and effective control over wages policy.
- Collective bargaining systems vary considerably across member states. To introduce an unqualified fundamental right to collective bargaining in EU law would risk overturning national industrial relations cultures.
- Each member state has its own unique system of social protection. Creating EU level rights in relation to social security would risk undermining national systems which are responsive to the democratic choices of the electorate.

Equally, issues such as health, education and employment policy have traditionally been the responsibility of national governments. The principle of subsidiarity – that action should be taken at the lowest effective level – requires that these remain largely national rather than EU-level issues.

10. From a practical viewpoint, the CBI believes that incorporating such ‘aspirational’ rights into the Charter would create legal confusion, as they would be almost impossible to interpret in practice by a Court. For example, it is not clear how rights to ‘fair remuneration’ or to ‘adequate social security’ could be interpreted at EU level. Wage policies need to take into account national economic conditions; there is no “one size fits all” approach. Equally, the diversity of social security systems across the EU would make it very difficult to determine what is an ‘adequate’ level.

Directives should not become justiciable fundamental rights

11. There are, of course, a range of areas covered by the 1961 and 1989 Charters where the EU has a Treaty competence. Maternity rights, rights to parental leave, rest periods, certain rights to workers' information and consultation, and to health and safety in the workplace (and so on) are well established in EU legislation. However, they are heavily qualified legislative rights which apply only in specific circumstances. To turn them into unqualified justiciable fundamental rights would potentially lead to a more expansive interpretation of these rights by the ECJ. This would require member states to make immediate changes to national and local legislation, therefore generating legal uncertainty for business. For example, an unqualified right to information and consultation would potentially lead to a complete overhaul of all national frameworks of industrial relations. Whilst there are already information and consultation rights set out in Directives on European Works Councils, Collective Redundancies, Acquired Rights etc., these only apply when certain conditions have been met. And at national level, consultation rights are triggered in differing situations following national industrial relations traditions. An unqualified binding fundamental right in this area would allow the ECJ to develop a more expansive, harmonising jurisprudence that would fail to respect national culture and practice.

ILO Conventions are different

12. A number of organisations have also argued that some of the rights outlined in ILO Conventions signed by EU member states should be included in the Charter. These are critically important global minimum standards, which are binding on those member states that ratify them. But they are not directly justiciable rights which can be enforced by individuals in a way which can be compared with the ECHR or the Treaty rights. Instead they are enforced through decrees of an ILO committee following successful applications from either trade unions or employer organisations. Their inclusion in a legally binding Charter - where they would have direct effect on the law of member states through judgements of the European Court - would not be appropriate.

Conclusion

13. The CBI supports a declaratory Charter clearly setting out the existing justiciable fundamental rights and freedoms set out in the Treaties and in the ECHR.
14. Those fundamental rights which do not have direct legal effect, such as those referred to in the 1961 and 1989 Charters, are of a different nature and status. They are political aspirations of the European Union, best delivered either at national level or through Directives – where Treaty powers exist. The Convention should take full account of this distinction when drafting the Charter.

15. It is not appropriate for the Convention to seek to shift the balance of power between the EU and member states through the development of a Charter to be incorporated into the Treaty. Any such shifts in sovereignty should only be proposed following full intergovernmental discussions.

Human Resources Policy, May 2000

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 23. Mai 2000CHARTE 4300/00*CONTRIB 172*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend eine Stellungnahme der Evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland (EKD), im Hinblick auf die Anhörung am 27. April 2000. ¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache vorgelegt.

Stellungnahme der Evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland (EKD) zur Erarbeitung einer Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

I. Vorbemerkungen

1. Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland (EKD) begrüßt den Beschluss der Staats- und Regierungschefs der Europäischen Union, den Schutz der Grundrechte in der Europäischen Union durch eine Charta zu verstärken, und verfolgt die Beratungen des mit der Erarbeitung beauftragten Konvents mit großer Aufmerksamkeit. Die Synode der Evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland hat anlässlich ihrer Tagung im November 1999 in Leipzig einige Grundprinzipien formuliert, die für die Erarbeitung der Charta leitend sein sollten. Dieser Beschluss wurde dem Konvent bereits übermittelt und ist auf der Website des Rates zur Charta verfügbar.

Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland erwartet, dass die Charta dazu beitragen wird, der Union ein für Bürgerinnen und Bürger sichtbares politisches Fundament zu geben und die Rechtsgemeinschaft zwischen der Union und den Mitgliedstaaten zu stärken. Sie hält das Vorhaben zudem für dringlich, da die Europäische Konvention zum Schutz der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten (EMRK) ungeachtet Artikel 6 Abs. 2 des EU-Vertrages die supra-nationalen Institutionen der Europäischen Union zur Zeit nicht unmittelbar bindet, da die Europäische Union bzw. die Europäische Gemeinschaft dieser Konvention bisher nicht beigetreten ist bzw. beitreten konnte.

2. Grund- und Menschenrechte sowie Grundwerte sind Ausdruck von Wertüberzeugungen und Einstellungen, die für den gesellschaftlichen Zusammenhalt eines Gemeinwesens wichtig sind und von denen die Erfüllung der staatlichen Aufgaben abhängt. Gerade der weltanschaulich neutrale Staat, der – wie es im Diktum des deutschen Verfassungsrechtlers Ernst-Wolfgang Böckenförde heißt – von Voraussetzungen lebt, die er selbst nicht garantieren kann, ist darauf angewiesen, dass Kirchen, Religions- und Weltanschauungsgemeinschaften Werte bilden und vermitteln. Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland nimmt daher die Gelegenheit gerne wahr, zur Erarbeitung der Charta Stellung zu nehmen. Sie möchte in diesem Zusammenhang nicht unerwähnt lassen, dass einige Grundrechte, namentlich der Schutz der Menschenwürde, zum Kern der christlichen Tradition unserer europäischen Kultur gehören.

II. Zum Inhalt der Charta

1. Die Akzeptanz der geplanten Charta wird vermutlich erleichtert und gefördert, wenn sie sich im Bereich der Menschenrechte und Grundfreiheiten an den Artikeln 2 bis 14 der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention orientiert. Gleichwohl muss auch hier der Fortentwicklung durch die Zusatzprotokolle sowie der Rechtsprechung des Menschenrechtsgerichtshofs ausreichend Rechnung getragen werden. Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland hält daher eine horizontale Klausel für unabdingbar, die sicherstellt, dass der durch die Charta vermittelte Schutz der Grund- und Menschenrechte jedenfalls nicht hinter dem durch die

EMRK einschließlich der zu ihr entwickelten Rechtsprechung zurückbleiben darf. Daneben ist die eigenständige Rechtsentwicklung in der Europäischen Gemeinschaft, die Auswirkungen der Binnenmarktfreiheiten sowie die Ausprägungen von Grundrechten eigener Art wie beispielsweise die Gleichbehandlung von Frauen und Männern im Arbeitsleben bei der Formulierung von Rechten gebührend zu berücksichtigen.

Da Artikel 6 EU-Vertrag sich bezüglich der Achtung der Menschenrechte nicht ausschließlich auf die EMRK, sondern darüber hinaus auf die „gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten“ bezieht, erscheint es geboten, bei der Konzipierung der Charta auch die Verfassungskataloge der Mitgliedstaaten zu beachten. Dem Geist der Gemeinschaft und den Traditionen, die sich in der Geschichte der europäischen Integration herausgebildet haben, würde es nach kirchlicher Auffassung entsprechen, auch die Grundrechtskataloge der Verfassungen der EU-Beitrittskandidaten ergänzend zu Rate zu ziehen, um beispielsweise herauszufiltern, was sie zu den gemeinsamen Verfassungsüberlieferungen der Mitgliedstaaten beitragen werden.

2. Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland ist der Auffassung, dass der Charta eine Präambel vorangeschickt werden sollte, in der neben einem Bekenntnis zu den unverletzlichen und unveräußerlichen Menschenrechten auch Gemeinschaftsprinzipien als politische Handlungsziele der Union formuliert werden sollten. In Anlehnung an Artikel 6 Abs. 1 EU-Vertrag sollten Freiheit, Demokratie, Achtung der Menschenrechte und Rechtsstaatlichkeit als Voraussetzung für die Entfaltung föderaler, sozialer und kultureller Prinzipien unter Beachtung des Grundsatzes der Subsidiarität festgehalten werden.

3. Zu den bereits vorliegenden Artikelvorschlägen des Präsidiums sind folgende Anmerkungen zu machen:

Artikel 1. Würde des Menschen

Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland schlägt vor, diesen Artikel anders als im Dokument CONVENT 13, COR 1 folgendermaßen zu formulieren:

„Die Würde des Menschen ist unantastbar. Sie zu achten und zu schützen, ist Verpflichtung aller öffentlichen Gewalt, soweit sie durch die Europäische Union ausgeübt wird.“

Artikel 13. Familienleben

Der Artikel sollte die Überschrift Ehe und Familie erhalten und wie folgt lauten:

- (1) Jeder hat das Recht auf Achtung seines Familienlebens.
- (2) Männer und Frauen haben das Recht, nach den innerstaatlichen Gesetzen, welche die Ausübung des Rechts regeln, eine Ehe einzugehen und eine Familie zu gründen.
- (3) Der Schutz der Familie und ihre rechtliche, wirtschaftliche und soziale Förderung werden gewährleistet.

Aus kirchlicher Sicht ist eine derartige Formulierung geboten, um klarzustellen, dass eine Ehe nur zwischen zwei Personen verschiedenen Geschlechts geschlossen werden kann. Die Förderung der Familie ist nach kirchlicher Auffassung in erster Linie Aufgabe der Mitgliedstaaten. Dieser Anknüpfungspunkt bei den Mitgliedstaaten stellt auch in Zukunft sich verändernde gesellschaftliche und rechtliche Entwicklungen im Blick auf Ehe und Familie sicher.

Artikel 14. Gedanken-, Gewissens- und Religionsfreiheit

Um sicherzustellen, dass auch die korporative Religionsfreiheit gewährleistet ist, wird in Abänderung der Formulierung in Dokument CONVENT 13 folgender Text vorgeschlagen:

Jede Person hat das Recht auf Gedanken-, Religions- und Gewissensfreiheit. Die Religionsfreiheit schließt das öffentliche und private, individuelle und gemeinschaftliche Bekenntnis sowie das Recht von Kirchen und Religionsgemeinschaften zur Ordnung und Verwaltung ihrer Angelegenheiten nach den Gesetzen der Mitgliedstaaten ein.

Durch das Handeln der Union ist nicht nur der einzelne in der Ausübung seiner Grundrechte betroffen, sondern auch Körperschaften im Bereich der Religion, insbesondere Kirchen und verfasste Religionsgemeinschaften. Die Menschenrechtskommission des Europarates hat in ihrer Spruchpraxis der letzten Jahre zunehmend Kirchen oder Religionsgemeinschaften eine Berufung auf Artikel 9 EMRK aus eigenem Recht und nicht nur stellvertretend für ihre Mitglieder zugesprochen und damit grundsätzlich die Rechtsträgerschaft einer Religions- oder Weltanschauungsgemeinschaft nach Artikel 9 anerkannt. Aus Gründen der Rechtsklarheit ist es angezeigt, diese Spruchpraxis in der Formulierung von Artikel 14 aufzunehmen.

Des Weiteren ist die Union durch die Erklärung zum Status der Kirchen und weltanschaulichen Gemeinschaften zum Vertrag von Amsterdam (Erklärung Nr. 11) gehalten, den Status, den Kirchen und religiöse Vereinigungen oder Gemeinschaften in den Mitgliedstaaten nach deren Rechtsvorschriften genießen, zu achten und nicht zu beeinträchtigen. Gleiches gilt für Weltanschauungsgemeinschaften.

Die Organisationsformen von Kirchen und Religionsgemeinschaften und ihr jeweiliges Verhältnis zu den Mitgliedstaaten ist in der Union sehr unterschiedlich. Teilweise ist es mit Verfassungsrang ausgestattet oder durch Konkordate und Staatskirchenverträge ausgestaltet. Viele Kirchen und Religionsgemeinschaften genießen ein hohes Maß an Autonomie bei der Regelung und Verwaltung ihrer Angelegenheiten. Die Einwirkungen des Gemeinschaftsrechtes ist angesichts dieser Vielfalt ebenso unterschiedlich. Zudem ist die Anerkennungspraxis neuer religiöser und quasireligiöser Gemeinschaften von Mitgliedstaat zu Mitgliedstaat sehr uneinheitlich. Aus diesen Gründen ist es unverzichtbar, in die Charta einen Bezug auf die Rechtslage in den Mitgliedstaaten als Schranke für das Handeln der Union aufzunehmen. Eine Anknüpfung an innerstaatliches Recht steht zudem in Parallele zur Regelung des Entwurfs für Artikel 13 Abs. 2 zum Familienleben. Da das Recht, eine Ehe einzugehen und eine Familie zu gründen, in den Mitgliedstaaten sehr unterschiedlich geregelt ist, muss auch hier die Charta eine Anknüpfung an innerstaatliches Recht der Mitgliedstaaten vornehmen.

Wirtschaftliche und soziale Rechte

Da die europäische Sozialordnung auch eine Ausprägung der christlichen Tradition Europas ist, hält die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland es für wichtig, dass die Charta Bestimmungen zu wirtschaftlichen, sozialen und kulturellen Rechten enthält, die so formuliert werden, dass sie keine Probleme der Justitiabilität aufwerfen und zur richterlichen Überprüfung im Individualbeschwerdeverfahren geeignet sind. Daher ist bei elementaren Mindestschutzforderungen, wie sie z.B. im Rahmen der ILO und des UN-Sozialpaktes enthalten sind, an eine Aufnahme in die Charta zu denken, insbesondere, soweit die Mitgliedstaaten ihnen beigetreten sind und diese in allen EU-Staaten verfassungsrechtlich oder einfachgesetzlich gewährleistet sind.

Der Beschluss des Europäischen Rates von Köln hat die Europäische Sozialcharta ausdrücklich als Referenzdokument für die Erarbeitung der Charta genannt. Hiermit sind jedoch unbestreitbar eine Reihe von Problemen, z.B. die unterschiedliche Verbindlichkeit gegenüber den Signatarstaaten sowie der ggfs. rasche Wandel von Einzelbestimmungen verbunden, die in den Beratungen dieses Kapitels der Charta auch im Konvent bereits angesprochen worden sind. Letztlich wird am Bereich der wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Rechte die Problematik einer Ausgestaltung der Rechte als Menschenrechte – von der grundsätzlich ausgegangen werden sollte - bzw. als EU-Bürgerrechte besonders deutlich.

Statt konkreter Artikelvorschläge möchte die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland auf folgende Herausforderungen hinweisen, die bei der Beratung von wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Rechten beachtlich sind:

- Generationengerechtigkeit und Nachhaltigkeit
- Stärkung der Selbstverantwortung des Menschen einerseits, damit der Sozialstaat nicht durch ein Übermaß an Ansprüchen überfordert wird, und Verpflichtung zur Hilfe für diejenigen, die sich aus eigener Kraft nicht helfen können, andererseits,
- Verstärkung der Ausbildungs- und Weiterbildungsangebote z.B. für Niedrigqualifizierte
- Ausbau der Rechte Behinderter
- Bekämpfung von Ausgrenzung und Armut
- Verantwortung der Industrieländer für die weltweite Entwicklung.

III. Zum Geltungsbereich der Charta

Ungeachtet der offenen Frage, ob die Charta durch eine Implementierung in das Vertragswerk unmittelbare Rechtsverbindlichkeit erlangen wird, sollte dieses Ziel bei ihrer Formulierung durchgängig bedacht werden, damit eine Einfügung in das Vertragswerk ohne große textliche Änderungen möglich wird.

Bislang noch nicht hinreichend deutlich ist die Formulierung der horizontalen Bestimmungen bzw. der Schranken der in der Charta verankerten Grund- und Menschenrechte. Die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland möchte zu folgenden Aspekten konkrete Vorschläge machen:

Träger von Grundrechten

Als Träger von Grundrechten kommen in erster Linie natürliche Personen in Betracht, in einem gewissen Umfang jedoch auch juristische Personen. Hierzu wird folgender Formulierungsvorschlag unterbreitet:

Die in der Charta aufgeführten Grundrechte gelten für natürliche und für juristische Personen sowie für sonstige Vereinigungen, soweit sie ihrem Wesen nach auf diese anwendbar sind.

Bindungswirkung und Schutzniveau

Zur Bindungswirkung wird folgender Vorschlag gemacht:

Die in dieser Charta enthaltenen Grundrechte binden die Organe der Europäischen Union und die Mitgliedstaaten, soweit sie Gemeinschaftsrecht vollziehen. Keine Bestimmung dieser Charta darf als Einschränkung des Schutzes ausgelegt werden, der durch die Europäische Menschenrechtskonvention in der Auslegung durch den Europäischen Menschenrechtsgerichtshof gewährt wird.

Konkurrierende Kontrollmechanismen

Es scheint dringend geboten zu verhindern, dass es in der Konsequenz der Grundrechtecharta zu konkurrierenden Kontrollmechanismen durch den Europäischen Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte und den Europäischen Gerichtshof kommt. Die vom Generalsekretär des Europarates Dr. Walter Schwimmer angeregte Regelung, die es dem EuGH erlauben würde, Auslegungsfragen dem Europäischen Gerichtshof für Menschenrechte vorzulegen, erscheint unter diesem Gesichtspunkt sehr erwägenswert (vgl. Walter Schwimmer, Einheit – auch in den Menschenrechten, FAZ vom 14. März 2000, S. 12).

Brüssel, den 10. April 2000

Heidrun Tempel
Oberkirchenrätin
Leiterin des Büros

Für Rückfragen:

Außenstelle des Bevollmächtigten des Rates der EKD bei der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und der Europäischen Union
Blvd. Charlemagne 28
1000 Bruxelles
Tel: (02) 230.16.39
Fax: (02) 280.01.08
E-Mail: ekd.brussel@village.uunet.be

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 17 May 2000CHARTE 4301/00*CONTRIB 173*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a contribution by the International Institute for Right of Nationality and Regionality.¹

¹ This text has been submitted in German and English languages.

Professor Dr. Dieter Blumenwitz, Würzburg
Markus Pallek, LL.M. (NYU), Attorney-at-Law (New York), Berlin

A. Draft of a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Article x

A minority in the sense of this charter is a group numerically inferior to the rest of the population of a State, in a nondominant position, whose members – being citizens of the Union traditionally settling in their well-defined and long-established territories – possess ethnic, religious or linguistic characteristics differing from those of the rest of the population and show, if only implicitly, a sense of solidarity, directed towards preserving their culture, traditions, religion or language.

Article y

(1) Persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities have the right to equality before the law and equal protection of the law. Any discrimination based on belonging to a minority shall be prohibited. Every person belonging to a minority shall have the right freely to choose to be treated or not to be treated as such and no disadvantage of any kind shall result from this choice. Affirmative action policies intending to promote equality in fact between persons belonging to minorities and persons belonging to the majority in all areas of economical, social, political, and cultural life, shall not be considered to be an act of discrimination. Within the framework of their general integration policy, member States shall refrain from policies and practices aimed at assimilation of minorities against their will. This applies especially to measures of any kind in the traditional settling territories of those minorities.

(2) Persons belonging to such minorities shall have the freedom to peaceful assembly and shall have the right to found associations and organizations, including political parties.

(3) Persons belonging to such minorities shall have the right to enjoy their own culture and traditions, to profess and practice their own religion or to use their own language across frontiers and also in community with other members of their group. This shall include the right to use their names in the minority language and the right to official recognition of them.

(4) In their traditional settling areas persons belonging to such minorities shall have the right to use their minority languages in relation with administrative and judicial authorities, which shall include the right to receive answers from these authorities in their minority languages. In case of an arrest a person belonging to a minority shall have the right to be informed in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of any accusation against him, and to defend himself in this language, if necessary with the free assistance of an interpreter.

(5) Persons belonging to such minorities shall have the right to learn their minority language. In their traditional settling areas they shall have the right to be instructed in their languages. These rights shall be implemented by the member States within the frameworks of their educational systems or by permitting the right to set up and manage private educational establishments. Member States contribute financially to the latter mentioned establishments an proportional amount that equals their proportional financial engagement in public educational establishments. Moreover, the member States shall take measures in fields of education and research to foster knowledge of the culture, history, language and religion of such minorities and of the majority.

Article y

The member States respect the identity and the interests of immigrant groups. Persons belonging to such groups have the right to equality before the law and equal protection of the law. Any discrimination based on belonging to such a group shall be prohibited.

B. Conclusions (short version)

The elaboration of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union is a wise amendment of the body of community law despite the already existing fundamental rights jurisprudence of the Court of Justice of the European Communities. Through its transparency a written statute of fundamental rights illustrates these rights for the citizens of the Union, thus raising the acceptance of the Union and the identification with the Union on the side of the citizens. However, the latter mentioned goal can only be achieved, if legally binding provisions are laid down, not just political intentions or hortatory provisions.

The inclusion of a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union is necessary, because community law does not yet contain any direct provisions ensuring the protection of minorities and the few provisions that provide some indirect minority protections are insufficient and extremely fragmented.

The international standard of the substantive law of minority protection is enshrined in Article 27 of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights of 1966 and in the Declaration of the General Assembly of the United Nations on the Rights of members of national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities of 1992. The minority protection within the framework of the CSCE/OSCE system in as far as the CSCE documents influenced and inspired the respective works of other bodies like the Council of Europe or the European Union.

For the determination of the European standard of minority protection the work of the Council of Europe, in particular the European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages of 1992, the draft additional protocol to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms on the Protection of National Minorities and the Framework Convention of the European Council on the Protection of National Minorities of 1995, can be considered as crucial. Especially the last mentioned document contains the current standard of substantive minority protection law, that should also be codified in a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union. This result is also reflected in the state practice of the European Union, e.g. regarding the criteria that have been formulated for a diplomatic recognition of the successor states of Yugoslavia or the criteria that have been formulated for the accession of the middle and east European states to the European Union.

Immigrant groups, or “new minorities” as they are referred to by some academics in the field of public international law are in a situation which differs fundamentally from the situation of the “classic”, i.e. the well-defined and long-established minorities. Whereas immigrant groups are above all interested in protection against discrimination and their smooth integration into the society of their new resident country, minorities, which are normally fully integrated into the majority society, are rather interested in preserving their cultural specifics, which are constantly endangered by a certain pressure to assimilate flowing from the constant exposure to the majority culture. Both immigrant groups and minority groups are in need of special protection and also deserve special protection. However, applying an identical protection concept to both groups would amount to ignoring their particular and very different protection needs. Therefore, the task must be to develop protection concepts for each group, immigrants on the one hand and minorities on the other hand, which are individually tailored to suit their particular protection needs. The formulation of a minority protection clause or a minority definition must be clearly based on this approach.

The Court of Justice of the European Communities must be charged with the control of the enforcement of the provisions of the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

C. Detailed paper on the inclusion of a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union page:

- Table of contents -

I. Initial thoughts	- 6-
1. The current situation under EC law and the European Council decision of Cologne	- 8-
2. The fundamental choice between a legally binding and a hortatory document	- 10-
3. The political situation until the European Council at Tampere (15./16.10.1999)	- 12-
II. The international standard of substantive minority protection law	- 13-
1. Art. 27 of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights of 1966	- 14-
2. The Declaration of Rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities of 1992	- 16-
3. Further provisions of public international law	- 18-
III. Minority protection under the CSCE/OSCE system	- 18-
1. The emergence of the substantive minority protection	- 18-
2. The emergence of institutional protection	- 19-
3. Current developments	- 20-
4. The legal character of the CSCE/OSCE documents	- 21-
IV. Minority protection by the works of the Council of Europe	- 21-
1. Initial efforts	- 21-
2. The European Charter on Human Rights of 1950	- 22-
3. The European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages of 1992	- 23-
4. (Unsuccessful) initiatives on the way to the Framework Convention of 1995	- 25-
5. The Framework Convention of the Council of Europe on the Protection of national minorities of 1995	- 27-
V. Minority protection by the European Union	- 30-
1. (Unsuccessful) initiatives of the European Parliament	- 31-
2. The „Copenhagen criteria“ for the accession candidates of 1993	- 32-
3. The position of the European Union in the conflict in Yugoslavia	- 34-
VI. Conclusions and draft clauses	- 34-
1. Political obstacles to the inclusion of a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union	- 35-
2. Summary of the standard of the public international law and the EC law of minority protection	- 36-
3. The problem of defining the term „minority“ in the light of the discussion about emergence of „new minorities“	- 38-
a) The dispute	- 38-
b) The background	- 40-
c) Eide's suggestion	- 42-
d) Comment	- 42-
4. Draft of a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union	- 44-

I. Initial thoughts

The idea to elaborate a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union emerged from the desire to agree on a set of fundamental rights for the EU citizens to be included in the body of substantive EC law, despite the existence of the European Charter on Human Rights (ECHR) and the fundamental rights jurisprudence of the Court of Justice of the European Communities (ECJ). Germany chairing the European Council in the first half of 1999 had a strong interest in the creation of such a Charter and accordingly put the issue on the agenda for its presidency. Communicating the focal points of the German EU-presidency to the European Parliament, the German minister of foreign affairs, Joseph Fischer, announced the following statement on January 12, 1999 in Strassbourg:¹

“In order to strengthen the rights of the citizens, Germany proposes in the long run the elaboration of a European Charter on Fundamental Rights. We intend to launch an initiative in this direction during our presidency. Our aim is to consolidate the legitimacy and identity of the EU. The European Parliament, which provided important preliminary work elaborating the draft constitution of 1994, as well as the national parliaments and possibly many other social groups shall participate in the drafting of such a Charter on Fundamental Rights.”

This initiative was warmly welcomed by German EU politicians across party lines and - with only little dispute with regard to the contents and the implementation of the project - strongly supported. In late April 1999 the (then) 47 MEPs of the CDU/CSU revived the discussion about a Constitution for the EU with a proposal that also touched on the creation of a Charter on Fundamental Rights.² On behalf of the German MEPs Georg Jarzembowski (CDU) stressed how important it was for the EU citizens to know which rights they were entitled to in a Europe that was more and more turning into a federal state. If they feel that their fundamental rights have been violated there must be the possibility to bring the case in the European Court of Justice. The codification of a European Charter on Fundamental Rights would be a crucial element to get there. On behalf of the Federal Government the Minister of Justice Herta Däubler-Gmelin stated that the drafting of a Charter on Fundamental Rights would be a difficult but very rewarding project.³ Party chairman Wolfgang Schäuble (CDU) and the foreign affairs spokesman of the CDU/CSU fraction in the German Bundestag Karl Lamers also issued opinions on this topic suggesting the creation of a “European Constitutional Treaty” (“europäischer Verfassungsvertrag”), which, among other things, would have to answer the question about the fundamental values, convictions and interests that tie the Europeans together.⁴ Moreover, there would be a consensus in Germany that the profile of the EU as a “community of values” would have to be sharpened, without aiming at the creation of a “super-state Europe” and that the elaboration of a European Charter on Fundamental Rights would be an appropriate instrument to reach that goal. Within the framework of the European Council summit on June 3 and 4, 1999 in Cologne the German presidency managed to convince their European partners of the importance to elaborate a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union and the following decision was taken:

¹ Cited from Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung (FAZ) of December 13, 1999.

² FAZ of April 24, 1999.

³ FAZ of April 28, 1999.

⁴ Schäuble/Lamers, Europa braucht einen Verfassungsvertrag, in: FAZ of May 4, 1999.

“The safeguarding of fundamental rights is a founding principle of the European Union and the indispensable prerequisite for its legitimacy. The obligation of the Union to respect fundamental rights has been confirmed and developed by the jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice. In view of the current status of the Union it is necessary to draft a Charter on these rights to visibly lay down the significance of the fundamental rights and their range for the citizens of the Union.

In the opinion of the European Council this Charter shall comprise equality, liberty and due process rights, as they are guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and as they follow from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as general principles of Community law. Moreover, the Charter shall include fundamental rights that only the citizens of the Union shall be entitled to. Furthermore, when the Charter will be drafted economical and social rights, as they are laid down in the European Social Charter and in the Community Charter on Fundamental Social Rights of Workers (Article 136 EC Treaty), shall also be considered in as far as they do not merely determine aims for actions of the Union (...)”⁵

In the decision the German presidency asked the future Finnish chair to create the prerequisites for the implementation of this decision until the next European Council special summit on October 15 and 16, 1999 in Tampere.⁶ Moreover, it was decided in Cologne to generally revise the Community Treaties with the Amsterdam amendments within the framework of an intergovernmental conference during the course of 2000. It is planned to begin this intergovernmental conference under Portuguese presidency in the first half of 2000 and to complete it under French presidency until the end of 2000.⁷

The necessity to include a minority protection clause in such a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union arises from a variety of political reasons. One of the main reasons is that especially in the conflict in former Yugoslavia it became very clear how drastic ethnic tensions can erupt where a functioning system of minority protection is lacking. However, this conflict was only the tip of the iceberg, effectively presented by the mass media, of European minority problems. Many unresolved minority crises are looming, even in the Member States of the European Union or the Council of Europe. A further reason to consider the inclusion of a minority protection provision in a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union is that the academic world almost unanimously criticizes the existing European law on the protection of minorities as inefficient or insufficient.⁸

⁵ Decision of the European Council of June 4, 1999 on the elaboration of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union, Annex IV. Text cf.: EuGRZ 1999, pp. 364.

⁶ European Council of Cologne, Final conclusions of the presidency.

⁷ FAZ of June 5, 1999; Gelinsky, Ein Luftschloss ?, in: FAZ of September 28, 1999.

⁸ Cf.: Hofmann, Minderheitenschutz in Europa (Berlin 1995), pp. 63; Streinz, Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrechte in der Europäischen Union, in: Blumenwitz/Gornig, Der Schutz von Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrechten durch die Europäische Union (Köln 1996), p. 11, 29; Siegert, Minderheitenschutz in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (Berlin 1999), p. 93; Niewerth, Der kollektive und der positive Schutz von Minderheiten und ihre Durchsetzung im Völkerrecht (Berlin 1996), pp. 215; Scherer-Leydecker, Minderheiten und sonstige ethnische Gruppen (Berlin 1997), p. 167.

1. The current situation under EC law and the European Council decision of Cologne

Starting point and background of the reflections to create a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union is the discussion – that has been going on for some time both in academia and in practice - about the existence or emergence of a European constitutional law and about the codification of European fundamental rights.⁹ Even if we do not have a written catalogue of fundamental rights in substantive community law yet, this does not mean that the EU citizens are unprotected in that respect.¹⁰ Since its ruling in the Stauder case¹¹ in 1969 the European Court of Justice protects the fundamental rights, which the Court derives as general principles of community law from a synopsis of the constitutional traditions common to the Member States and a blink towards the ECHR.¹² In particular the ECJ has defined the following fundamental community rights and applied them in different cases: the right to human dignity, the right to privacy in various forms, the right to equal protection by the law, the principle of equal opportunities, the freedom of religious belief, the freedom to form associations, the principle of free trade, the occupational liberty, the right to own property, the prohibition of gender discrimination, the principle of equality before the law, the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press, the prohibition of retroactive criminal laws and due process rights.¹³ A individual or collective fundamental right envisaging the protection of minorities does, as of yet, neither exist in community law, nor can it be found by the jurisdiction of the ECJ.¹⁴ With regard to fundamental rights the Union citizen faces the difficulty of ⁹ Cf. the recent article by the director of the Walter-Hallstein-Institute for European Constitutional Law at Humboldt University Berlin Professor Dr. Ingolf Pernice, Vertragsrevision oder Europäische Verfassungsgebung, in: FAZ of July 7, Juli 1999. Cf. generally on the issue: v. Bogdandy, Skizzen einer Theorie der Gemeinschaftsverfassung, in: v. Danwitz, Auf dem Weg zu einer Europäischen Staatlichkeit (Bonn 1993), pp. 9; Häberle, Die europäische Verfassungsstaatlichkeit, in: Weber/Rath-Kathrein, Neue Wege zur Allgemeinen Staatslehre (Kehl 1993), pp. 29; Grimm, Braucht Europa eine Verfassung?, in: JZ 1995, pp. 581; Rodriguez-Iglesias, Zur „Verfassung“ der Europäischen Gemeinschaft, in: EuGRZ 1996, pp. 125; Schilling, Die Verfassung Europas, in: StW&StPr 1996, pp. 387; Zuleeg, Die Verfassung der Europäischen Gemeinschaft in der Rechtsprechung des Europäischen Gerichtshofs, in: BB 1994, pp. 581; Schuppert, Zur Staatswerdung Europas – Überlegungen zu Bedingungsfaktoren und Perspektiven der europäischen Verfassungsentwicklung, in: StW&StPr 1994, pp. 35; v. Bogdandy/Nettesheim, Die Europäische Union: ein einheitlicher Verband mit eigener Rechtsordnung, in: EuR 1995, pp. 3162; Schröder, Grundsatzfragen einer europäischen Verfassungsgebung, in: FS Heymanns Verlag, pp. 349.

¹⁰ Cf. generally on the issue: Streinz (footnote 8), pp. 11; Rengeling, Eine Charta der Grundrechte, in: FAZ of July 21, 1999; Gelinsky, Kleine Schritte genügen nicht, in: FAZ of April 18, 1999; Gelinsky, Im Jubiläumsjahr des Grundgesetzes steht Europa im Mittelpunkt, in: FAZ of April 26, 1999.

¹¹ ECJ Case 29/69, Erich Stauder vs. Stadt Ulm, E.C.R. pp. 419 (1969).

¹² Streinz, Europarecht (Heidelberg 1996), 3rd Ed., pp. 108.

¹³ Streinz (footnote 12), pp. 115; Hummer/Simma/Vedder, Europarecht in Fällen (Baden-Baden 1999), 3rd Ed., pp. 415.

¹⁴ In this context reference shall be made to an initiative of the Europäische Akademie Bozen: in December of 1998 the Academy presented an action plan to promote human rights, minority rights, cultural diversity and economic and social consolidation to the President of the European Commission. Academics who participated in drafting this study tried, sometimes through the use of extensive interpretations of current provisions, to shed new light on the way ahead with regard to Community law. These interpretations, however, question in no way the call for the codification of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Cf.

lacking transparency, because, as has been mentioned before, the fundamental rights have not been laid down in a written catalogue yet. Apart from the fundamental freedoms the EC Treaty only contains the principle of equal remuneration for men and women (Article 141 EC Treaty) and the prohibition of discrimination (Article 12 EC Treaty). Moreover, Article 6 EU Treaty spells out that the Union is based on the principles of freedom, democracy, the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the rule of law and that the Union respects fundamental rights as guaranteed by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on 4 November 1950 and as they result from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, as general principles of Community law. As regards the necessity to formulate European fundamental rights the German Foreign Office (Auswärtiges Amt) stated on August 9, 1999 in its report on the status of the implementation of the European Council decision of Cologne and in preparation of the summit of Tampere:

“With regard to fundamental rights that have to be observed by the Union the Treaties only point in a general clause to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and the constitutional traditions common to the Member States (Article 6 Paragraph 2 EU Treaty). Moreover, reference is made to the European Social Charter and the Charter of Social Fundamental Rights of the Workers (Article 136 EC Treaty). A codification of fundamental community rights would render the fundamental rights more visible with regard to their range and significance and would thus strengthen the identity and legitimacy of the Union. Also the transparency and legal certainty with regard to the scope of the protection of fundamental rights would be enhanced that way.”

More transparency and clarity for the Union citizen with regard to the existence of his fundamental rights thus become important reasons for the elaboration of a Charter on fundamental rights of the European Union. Moreover, seen from the perspective of European human rights foreign policy within the framework of the Common Foreign and Security Policy it seems wise to be able to point to a set of fundamental rights laid down in a written catalogue. Finally, the Union would give some guidance to the accession candidates in Middle and Eastern Europe on how to run a fundamental rights policy on a national level.¹⁵ Bearing in mind the futile efforts of other bodies at other times, the codification of fundamental rights on the initiative of the European Council now seems to be the right way at the right time. In 1989 for example the European Parliament passed a declaration on fundamental rights and fundamental freedoms and in 1994 it rendered a resolution on the constitution of the European Union.¹⁶ Once again these drafts did not contain any provisions on the minority protection on a European basis.

Europäischen Akademie Bozen, Paket für Europa, Arbeitsheft der Akademie Nr. 10 (1998). Cf. also: Blumenwitz, Die minderheitenschutzrechtlichen Anforderungen der EU hinsichtlich des Beitritts der ost- und ostmitteleuropäischen Staaten, in: Blumenwitz/Gornig/Murswiek, Fortschritte im Beitrittsprozeß der Staaten Mitteleuropas zur EU (Bonn 1999), p. 25, 34.

¹⁵ Rengeling (footnote 10), in: FAZ of July, 21 1999.

¹⁶ Second report of the institutional committee on the constitution of the European Union of February 9, 1994 („Herman-Report“); cf.: Hilf, Eine Verfassung für die Europäische Union: Zum Entwurf des Institutionellen Ausschusses des Europäischen Parlaments, in: Integration 1994/2, pp. 68; Rengeling (footnote 10), in: FAZ of July, 21 1999.

These initiatives were then not picked up by bodies who would have been competent to implement them. The last initiative to lay down European fundamental rights in the substantive body of community law had been launched in 1996 as an accession of the European Community to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms had been contemplated. According to the ECJ an accession of the European Community to the ECHR could only be executed in the form of an explicit amendment of the Treaties because of the massive impact this would have on the legal system of the Community.¹⁷ In the decisive passage of its opinion the ECJ holds:¹⁸

“Respect for human rights is therefore a condition of the lawfulness of Community acts. Accession to the Convention would, however, entail a substantial change in the present Community system for the protection of human rights in that it would entail the entry of the Community into distinct international institutional system as well as integration of all the provisions of the Convention into the Community legal order.”

The ECJ concluded that under current EC law the Community is lacking the competence to accede to the ECHR.¹⁹ The content of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union to be drafted was roughly outlined by the European Council in its Cologne decision of June 4, 1999. Apart from liberty rights, equality rights and due process rights, which can also be found in the ECHR and in the constitutions of the Member States, the inclusion of economic and social rights in the Charter on Fundamental Rights, like those laid down in the European Social Charter of October 18, 1961 and the Community Charter of fundamental social rights of workers of December, 9, 1989, shall also be considered. The addition that economic and social rights shall only be included “in as far as they do not merely determine aims for actions of the Union“, signals that those rights to be created shall be enforceable by the individual citizen, and shall not be merely aims for action or programmatic clauses.²⁰ Moreover, a distinction between human rights and Union citizen rights shall be drawn.

¹⁷ ECJ, opinion 2/94, accession of the Community to the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, E.C.R. pp. I-1763 (1994).

¹⁸ ECJ, opinion 2/94, accession of the Community to the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, E.C.R. pp. I-1763 (1994), note 34.

¹⁹ ECJ, opinion 2/94, accession of the Community to the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, E.C.R. pp. I-1763 (1994), note 36.

²⁰ Cf. Rengeling (footnote 10), in: FAZ of July 21, 1999.

2. The fundamental choice between a legally binding and a hortatory document

A very fundamental initial decision must be taken with respect to the question whether a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union should be legally binding under public international law or Community law or whether it should merely be hortatory as a political document. Although both options entail advantages, the decision should be in favor of a legally binding document.

A classic example for a mere policy instrument are the documents of the Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE). Clear advantage of these kinds of diplomatic arrangements is the inclination of the negotiating parties to make farther reaching commitments and to formulate the provisions more clearly than they would be if a binding international treaty would be negotiated which could perhaps be enforced by other States or even by individual citizens in national courts. Even if no distinct legal obligations exist, such political arrangements can have great impact in the international area. The CSCE process for example, which was initiated in 1975 in Helsinki, was of decisive significance for the East West disengagement and eventually for the end of the "Cold War". Nevertheless it can also not be denied that this process did not entail a significant improvement of the substantive legal position of the individuals living in the CSCE States. A Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union could be adopted as mere policy agenda in the hope that the ECJ may incorporate the Charter in the body of directly applicable and effective Community law through its jurisprudence. The improved chances of being able to achieve further reaching and clearer provisions that way would be obvious. However, to proceed that way can be quite risky. Even if in the early years the ECJ's jurisdiction showed a certain inclination to declare provisions directly applicable, which initially were not necessarily supposed to have that effect,²¹ it is highly unlikely that nowadays the ECJ would still maintain such an inclination. To even consider its direct effect the ECJ basically requires a provision to be "sufficiently precise and unconditional".²² A direct effect of provisions in international treaties, even if they may be binding under public international law, is granted very seldom by the ECJ. The jurisprudence concerning GATT/WTO provisions²³ or in the context of association treaties of the EU with third country States²⁴ may prove this estimation right. Moreover, in its opinion on the ECHR²⁵ the ECJ makes it very clear, that it is not willing to assume the political responsibility for the introduction of a written catalogue of fundamental rights, if the Member States themselves seem reluctant to agree to an ²¹ Cf. especially the decision of the ECJ on the direct applicability of primary EC law, commencing with case 26/62, van Gend & Loos, E.C.R. pp. 1 (1963); or the jurisprudence on the direct effect of directives: cf. the leading cases 148/78, Ratti, E.C.R. pp. 1629 (1979); case 41/74, van Duyn, E.C.R. pp. 1337 (1974).

²² Cf. case 190/87, Moormann, E.C.R. pp. 4689 (1988).

²³ Cf. the decisions of the ECJ in joint cases 21-24/72, International Fruit Company, E.C.R. pp. 1219 (1972); or case C-280/93, Germany v. Council (Banana market regulation), E.C.R. pp. I-4973 (1994).

²⁴ Cf. case 12/86, Demirel, E.C.R. pp. 3719 (1987).

²⁵ ECJ, opinion 2/94, accession of the Community to the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, E.C.R. pp. I-1763 (1994).

explicit amendment of the Treaties in that respect.

The drafting of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union in the form of binding Community law and possibly as integral part of primary EC law by laying it down in the Treaties themselves, seems to be the clearly favorable option. Although the European Council is as of yet undecided in that respect, it showed a slight inclination towards the option of a legally binding document.²⁶ In the decision of June, 4 1999 the European Council states:²⁷

“The European Council will propose to the European Parliament and the Commission to ceremoniously proclaim together with the Council a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union on the basis of the draft. Subsequently, it must be determined if and should the occasion arise in which way the Charter shall be included in the Treaties. The European Council charges the General Council with initiating the necessary steps until the Tampere summit of the European Council.”

The Federal Government supports the inclusion of the Charter in the Treaties.²⁸ In any event, it should be decided that the Court of Justice shall have jurisdiction over the rights enshrined in the Charter. This is not self-evident as can be seen looking at the limited jurisdiction of the ECJ with regard to the second and third pillar of the European Union, the common foreign and security policy and the cooperation in justice and home affairs.²⁹ Whether or not to introduce some kind of “European constitutional complaint” to the ECJ is an issue that can be tackled after the core content of fundamental rights to be included in the Charter has been drafted.³⁰

3. The political situation until the European Council at Tampere (15./16.10.1999)

As regards the procedural aspects of the drafting of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union the European Council has rendered the following decision:³¹

“The European Council is of the opinion that such a Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union must be drafted by a committee that consists of representatives of the heads of States and governments and the president of the European Commission as well as members of the European Parliament and the national parliaments. Representatives of the Court of Justice shall participate as observers. Representatives of the Economic and Social Council, the Council of the ²⁶ Cf. for the latest negotiation results: Gelinsky (footnote 7), in: FAZ of September 28, 1999.

²⁷ Decision of the European Council of June 4, 1999 on the elaboration of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union, Annex IV. Text cf.: EuGRZ 1999, pp. 364.

²⁸ Report of August 12, 1999 by the AA to the EU-Committee of the Deutsche Bundestag under § 3 EuZBBG and § 3 EuZBLG. Cf. also the unequivocal statement of Bundesjustizministerin Däubler-Gmelin at the Richtertag 1999 in Karlsruhe, reported in: FAZ of October 5, 1999.

²⁹ Cf. article 46 EU Treaty.

³⁰ Cf. Gelinsky (footnote 10), in: FAZ of April 18, 1999; Gelinsky (footnote 10), in: FAZ of April 26, 1999.

³¹ Decision of the European Council of June 4, 1999 on the elaboration of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union, Annex IV. Text cf.: EuGRZ 1999, pp. 364.

Regions and social groups as well as experts shall be consulted. The secretariat general of the Council shall be charged with administrative tasks. The committee shall timely present a draft until the European Council summit meeting in December 2000.”

On its meeting on June 3 and 4, 1999 in Cologne the European Council has asked the Finnish presidency to take the necessary steps for the implementation of its decision until the special European Council meeting on October 15 and 16, 1999 in Tampere. Together with the European Parliament the Council must decide the issue of the composition of the committee, the chair of the committee and procedural question. After informal consultations with the European Parliament the position of the Council was scheduled to be determined by the general council on October 11 and 12, 1999 the latest. The decision was subsequently taken by the European Council on its special meeting in Tampere.³² In preparation of this decision an ad-hoc-group was installed that met twice until the Tampere summit. Until the Tampere summit the following issues were considered as not yet decided by the Finnish Presidency: regarding the chair of the committee there are three options: a) the respective representative of the Council chair (1999 Finland, first half of 2000: Portugal, second half of 2000: France); b) permanent chairman; c) permanent chairman to be determined by the committee itself. As regards the number of member of the European Parliament it remains to be decided whether 8 MEPs (reflecting the number of fractions of the EP) or 15 MEPs (reflecting the number of representatives of the heads of States and governments) should participate. With regard to the number of representatives of the national parliaments there are also two options: a) 15 members of national parliaments altogether or b) 30 members altogether to enable States with bicameral systems to send a representative from each chamber. As concerns the working procedure three options are currently discussed: a) “small” secretariat: chairman and vice-chairman of the committee together with the Council secretariat; b) “large” secretariat: all representatives of the heads of States and governments are members, to increase the influence of the national governments; c) determination of this issue by the committee itself. Eventually, the adoption of the Charter by the committee remains to be decided. Again there are three options: a) “soft consensus”: draft Charter is deemed to be adopted as soon as the chair is convinced that a respective consensus is achieved; b) majority decision or c) the adoption procedure will be determined by the committee itself.³³ These formal aspects were finally determined at the Tampere summit.³⁴

Even before the Tampere summit an agreement could be reached with regard to the following issues.³⁵ First of all, it was decided that 15 representatives of the heads of States and governments and a representative of the president of the Commission shall participate. The representative of the ³² Cf. FAZ of October 16, 1999 and FAZ of October 18, 1999.

³³ Cf. the report of August 12, 1999 by the AA to the EU-Committee of the Deutsche Bundestag under § 3 EuZBBG and § 3 EuZBLG and the report of the Council Presidency to COREPER of July 30, 1999.

³⁴ The decisions of the Tampere summit were not yet available when this paper was written. According to information provided by FAZ the committee will consist of 62 members who will appoint a chairman. Cf. FAZ of October 16, 1999 and FAZ of October 18, 1999.

³⁵ The decisions of the Tampere summit were not yet available when this paper was written. According to information provided by FAZ the committee will consist of 62 members who will appoint a chairman. Cf. FAZ of October 16, 1999 and FAZ of October 18, 1999.

Federal Republic of Germany is former Federal President Roman Herzog.³⁶ Furthermore, there was consensus that two representatives of the European Court of Justice will participate having observer status. Moreover, the vast majority of delegations would like to invite representatives of the Council of Europe and the European Court of Human Rights – in view of their great expertise in the field of fundamental rights - giving them also observer status. Also undisputed is that the Economic and Social Council, the Council of the Regions and the European ombudsman shall be consulted as organs of the European Union and that the accession candidates shall also have a fair chance to be involved. The committee shall be entitled to consult other bodies, social groups or experts. The secretariat shall be administered by the secretariat general of the Council. As regards procedural issues it was decided that the meetings of the committee shall be public and the documents deliberated shall be accessible for the public. The committee will convene in Brussels in the Council building and the Parliament building alternately. The meetings shall be interpreted in all Community languages.³⁷

II. The international standard of substantive minority protection law

The first thing to be contemplated if a minority clause is to be included in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union is the content of such a provision. In order to do this it seems useful to start out by analyzing the current international standard of substantive minority protection law.

In view of the failure of the minority protection system during the time between the world wars, the architects of a future world order lost their faith in systems providing collective protection of minorities at the end of World War II.³⁸ The human individual moved to the center of the protection efforts. The leading opinion³⁹ at that time was that if only the international community could succeed in establishing a comprehensive system of the protection of individual human rights, minority protection would almost naturally be included in such a system.⁴⁰ The protection of the group, in other words the social context of the individual, seemed superfluous. Neither the Charter of the United Nations of June 26, 1946, nor the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of December 10, 1948 contained minority protection provisions. Only General Assembly Resolution 217 (III) C of December 10, 1948 stated laconically that the United Nations must not turn a blind eye on the fate of minorities.⁴¹

³⁶ Gelinsky (footnote 7), in: FAZ of September, 28 1999.

³⁷ Cf. the report of August 12, 1999 by the AA to the EU-Committee of the Deutsche Bundestag under § 3 EuZBBG and § 3 EuZBLG and the report of the Council Presidency to COREPER of July 30, 1999.

³⁸ Thornberry, International law and the rights of minorities (Oxford, New York 1994), pp. 46.

³⁹ Kunz, Present status of the international law for the protection of minorities, in: 48 AJIL 282 (1954); Lerner, Group rights and discrimination in international law (Dordrecht u.a. 1991), p. 14.

⁴⁰ Cf. the 1950 study of the UN secretariat general „Study of the Legal Validity of the Undertakings Concerning Minorities“, UN Doc. E/CN.4/367, pp. 70.

⁴¹ Res. 217 (III) C., „Fate of minorities“, UN Doc. A/3/SR.183, S. 935; cf. Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 47.

A new glacial period for the further development of the law of minority protection, at least in its collective form, set in. Even the dedicated efforts of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,⁴² which had been established in 1947 by the UN Human Rights Commission, on the one hand, and the inclusion of a minority protection provision⁴³ in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of December 19, 1966 on the other hand, could not change this. Only countries that were driven by the fear that their multi-ethnic identity might lead to the decline of the integrity of their whole state had a vital interest in pushing the development of minority rights ahead within the international community.⁴⁴

However, in the beginning of the eighties a process of rethinking and reconsidering the issue of minority rights slowly set in as after the death of Josip Broz Tito the Yugoslavian tragedy took its course. Both Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union were decomposed by the erupting nationalism of their ethnic minorities, which could no longer be subdued. The stability of the “Cold War” was gone and in Europe as well as in other continents historically deeply rooted nationality conflicts broke out again, often in a cruel way.⁴⁵ “Pandora’s box” of minority and ethnic groups problems had been opened once again.⁴⁶

Scholars and practitioners realized that these conflict potentials could not be tamed by merely providing human rights, but that re-introducing and ensuring means to legally protect the rights of minorities was absolutely indispensable.⁴⁷ The British scholar Patrick Thornberry saw the law of minority protection rise again like phoenix from the ashes.⁴⁸ And indeed, the beginning of the nineties saw the emergence of significant instruments for the protection of minorities both on an international⁴⁹ and a national level.⁵⁰

⁴² Ansbach, Die Unterkommission zur Verhinderung der Diskriminierung und zum Schutz von Minderheiten – Perspektiven ihrer weiteren Arbeit, in: AVR 1993, pp. 232.

⁴³ Article 27 CCPR.

⁴⁴ Brems, Die politische Integration ethnischer Minderheiten (Frankfurt am Main 1995), pp. 21 and 224; Meissner, Nationale Autonomie und Minderheitenschutz in der Sowjetunion, in: Blumenwitz/v. Mangoldt, Neubestätigung und Weiterentwicklung von Menschenrechten und Volksgruppenrechten in Mitteleuropa (Bonn 1991), pp. 95.

⁴⁵ Brems (footnote 45), p. 1.

⁴⁶ Blumenwitz, Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrecht - Aktuelle Entwicklung (Bonn 1992), p. 5.

⁴⁷ Vgl. etwa: Capotorti, Die Rechte der Angehörigen von Minderheiten, in: VN 1980, pp. 113; Gerdes, Minderheitenschutz – eine internationale Rechtsnorm auf der Suche nach ihrem Gegenstand, in: VN 1980, pp. 126; Ermacora, Späte Einsichten - Der Entwurf der UN-Erklärung zum Minderheitenschutz, in: VN 1992, pp. 149.

⁴⁸ Thornberry, Is there a Phoenix in the Ashes? International law and minority rights, in: 15 TexasILJ 421 (1981).

⁴⁹ Cf. the „Declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities“ of December 18, 1992, which was adopted by the UN General Assembly as Resolution 47/135; UN Doc. A/RES/47/135, pp. 210.

⁵⁰ Cf. for example the document of the Copenhagen conference on the human dimension of the CSCE of June 29, 1990, reprinted in: 29 ILM 1305 (1990); cf. also the European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages of June 22, 1992, BGBl. 1998 II, pp. 1315; and the European Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities of November 10, 1994, EuGRZ 1995, pp. 268.

1. Art. 27 of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights of 1966

A careful change in the States' position towards the protection of minorities through instruments of public international law on a universal level came about in the sixties and led to the codification of article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of December 19, 1966 (CCPR)⁵¹. This provision held:

*“In those States in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities exist, persons belonging to such minorities shall not be denied the right, in community with the other members of their group, to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practice their own religion, or to use their own language.”*⁵²

The CCPR entered into force on March 23, 1973. Although article 27 of the CCPR is primarily an individualistic fundamental right, it also contains a collective element through the formulation “in community with other members of their group”.⁵³ As regards the content⁵⁴ of the provision, minorities undoubtedly are guaranteed a privileged right to commonly enjoy their culture, language and religion as against the majority of the population. As a primarily negating right, the provision obliges the State parties to refrain from any action, which could pressure the minorities towards assimilation. However, according to the predominant opinion⁵⁵ the States are not obliged to actively promote their minorities, in other words they are not urged to introduce “affirmative action” measures. Because of its universal application article 27 CCPR is formulated in a very general way.⁵⁶ Together with a facultative protocol⁵⁷ the Covenant provides for means to enforce the guaranteed rights. According to article 40 CCPR the State parties are obliged to report to a Human Rights Committee, which was established by virtue of article 28 et seq. of the CCPR, the measures they have taken in order to implement the guaranteed rights by the CCPR. Under the facultative protocol persons belonging to minorities can reprimand a violation of their rights to the Human Rights Committee by virtue of an individual request for relief. This slowly established a sort of article 27 “case law”, which helps clarifying contested questions on the interpretation of the provision.⁵⁸ Persons belonging to a minority in the sense of article 27 CCPR are defined by the Human Rights Committee - in accordance with the dominant academic opinion and the states practice - by subjective criteria (e.g. free confession to belong to a minority) which are counterbalanced by objective (e.g. a certain stability of the minority group) criteria.⁵⁹ The Human ⁵¹ BGBl. 1973 II pp. 1534.

⁵² Definition: BGBl. 1973 II p. 1534.

⁵³ Kimminich, Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrecht im Spiegel der Völkerrechtsentwicklung nach dem Zweiten Weltkrieg, in: BayVBl. 1993, p. 321, 323; Hofmann, Minderheitenschutz in Europa, in: ZaöRV 1992, p. 1, 9.

⁵⁴ Nowak, UNO-Pakt über bürgerliche und politische Rechte und Fakultativprotokoll. CCPR-Kommentar (Kehl am Rhein u.a. 1989), Art. 27, footnotes 38 et seq.; Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 9.

⁵⁵ Franke/Hofmann, Nationale Minderheiten – Ein Thema für das Grundgesetz ?, in: EuGRZ 1992, p. 401, 403; Hailbronner, Der Schutz der Minderheiten im Völkerrecht, in: Im Dienste der Gemeinschaft, Festschrift für D. Schindler (Basel u.a. 1989), p. 75, 83.

⁵⁶ Blumenwitz (footnote 47), p. 49.

⁵⁷ BGBl. 1992 II S. 1247 ff.

⁵⁸ Rensmann, Der Minderheitenschutz im Rechtssystem der Vereinten Nationen, in: AWR-Bulletin 1992, p. 99, 101 ff. (brief presentation of the leading cases).

⁵⁹ Oxenknecht, Der Schutz ethnischer, religiöser und sprachlicher Minderheiten in Art. 27 des Internationalen Paktes über bürgerliche und politische Rechte vom 16. Dezember 1966

Rights Committee expressly includes aliens, i.e. persons who do not have the citizenship of the country where they reside, in the scope of application of article 27 CCPR.⁶⁰ However, in the light of the ongoing developments under the auspices of the CSCE and the Council of Europe, which will be explained in detail supra, it seems very doubtful whether this opinion is shared by the States in a way permitting to consider this opinion as customary law in that respect.⁶¹

(Frankfurt am Main u.a. 1988), pp. 191; Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 8.

⁶⁰ Nowak (footnote 55), Art. 27, footnote 17.

⁶¹ Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 7.

2. The Declaration of Rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities of 1992

In 1971 the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities charged its member Francesco Capotorti with elaborating a comprehensive study on the rights of minorities. This study,⁶² which was completed in 1977, concluded that the General Assembly should render a basic resolution supposed to facilitate the implementation of the rights guaranteed by article 27 CCPR. The study is based on a dynamic interpretation that understands article 27 CCPR, because of its indefinite operative aims, as a framework provision to be brought to life by adequate executing action on a national level.⁶³

After the Sub-Commission adopted the goals of this study, Yugoslavia came forth with a draft declaration,⁶⁴ which was the subject of the following debates together with the Capotorti-study. In detail the Yugoslavian draft contains the right of existence of a minority, the right to claim respect and the promotion of the particular minority specificities as well as the right of full equality as against the majority population. Moreover, the draft lays down the principle of non-discrimination and acknowledges the necessity of measures, which enable the minority to freely express and develop their cultural characteristics. The fundamental rights are formulated in a way that give them a collective effect.⁶⁵ The consultations in a especially established open ended working group dragged on until 1991. Only under the impression of resurrecting nationality conflicts in east and southeast Europe and after express request by the General Assembly, the working group came forth with a final draft⁶⁶ in December of 1991. The 48th session of the Human Rights Commission deliberated eventually adopted this draft in February 1992 and sent it via the Economic and Social Council (ECOSCO) to the 48th General Assembly, which adopted the declaration⁶⁷ on December 18, 1992 in consensus.

⁶² Capotorti, Study on the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev. 1.; cf. also Capotorti (footnote 48), pp. 113.

⁶³ Dicke, Die UN-Deklaration zum Minderheitenschutz, in: EA 1993, p. 107, 109.

⁶⁴ UN Doc. E/CN.4/L.1367/Rev.1.

⁶⁵ Blumenwitz (footnote 47), S. 50.

⁶⁶ „Draft Declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities”, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1992/48.

⁶⁷ General Assembly, Res. 47/137 of December 18, 1992.

The declaration consists of a preamble and nine operating articles.⁶⁸ In the preamble the General Assembly spells out its motives. It considers the protection of minorities as integral part of the protection of human rights thereby strengthening the individualistic concept and rejecting the Yugoslavian conception of collective group rights.⁶⁹ Article 1 of the Declaration determines that States must create safe and favorable development conditions for the existence and identity of minorities through legislation and otherwise. Articles 2 and 3 define the rights of persons belonging to minorities. Those shall have the right to exercise their own culture, religion and language alone and in community with other members of their group. Moreover, within the limits of national laws they shall have the right to participate in political decisions on a national or regional level as far as these decisions touch on the minorities' interests. They are permitted to found associations and to maintain relations with members of their own group across State borders and with other minorities. Article 3 contains a special non-discrimination provision: persons belonging to minorities may exercise their rights individually or in community with other members of their group without any discrimination resulting from this. Article 4 contains four tiered State obligations. States are obliged to take measures to enable persons belonging to minorities to enjoy their human rights without being discriminated against. The States must create favorable conditions to enable minorities to exercise their particularities with regard to culture, language, religion and tradition, safe actions that would violate national laws or international standards. The other three State obligations are weaker. States shall ensure, as far as possible, that persons belonging to minorities get the chance to learn their mother tongue or to be taught in that respective language. Furthermore, States shall ensure the possibility for minorities to learn about their history, their traditions, their language and their culture. Persons belonging to minorities must have the opportunity to acquire knowledge about the society they live in. This provision was created to prevent the segregation of minorities and facilitate their integration. Persons belonging to minorities shall be able to participate in the economic development of the country and shall be adequately consulted with regard to matters of national policy making as well as of international cooperation according to article 5. Articles 6 and 7 contain hortatory provisions concerning cooperation, the exchange of information and experience in the field of minority issues. These provisions underscore the conflict preventive character of the law of minority protection. According to article 8 State measures based on the Declaration shall not be considered to be an act of discrimination,⁷⁰ which puts affirmative action measures in the field of minority protection in conformity with human rights. However, the Declaration justifies on violation of the goals and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in particular the sovereign equality, territorial integrity and political independence of States. Finally, article 9 encourages the organs and special organizations within the United Nations system to help implementing the goals and rights enshrined in the Declaration within their respective competence to the fullest possible extent.

⁶⁸ „Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities“ of the General Assembly of December 18, 1992, UN Doc. A/RES/47/135; cf.: Dicke (footnote 64), pp. 107; Rensmann (footnote 59), pp. 99; Ermacora (footnote 48), pp. 149.

⁶⁹ Preamble, point 4.

⁷⁰ In the sense of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948.

The Declaration has been criticized for giving the States too much discretion with regard to the implementation of the rights, because on the one hand the formulations were too cautious and too vague⁷¹ and on the other hand provisions envisaging the implementation and the enforcement of the rights were lacking altogether.⁷² What is also missing is the definition of the term “minority”, what led the German delegation to issue a declaration stating that the Federal Republic of Germany would only recognize citizens as minorities who have been living in its territory for a long period of time, thereby excluding aliens and migrant workers from the scope of minority protection. However, what finally remains to be said about the Declaration is that it is based on a modern understanding of statehood and sovereignty. The State founded on the principles of democracy and the rule of law is the prerequisite of an effective system of minority protection. The principle of the prohibition of discrimination already deeply rooted in international law is consequently supplemented by the obligation of the States to promote the existence and identity of minorities and to prevent assimilative pressure.⁷³ The success of the Declaration, however, depends on the willingness of the States to implement into national policy the underlying insight of the Declaration, that the protection of ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities needs special promotion. From a legal point of view the Declaration is not a binding act under public international law but merely a hortatory guideline and thus soft law.⁷⁴ However, if the goals of the Declaration are sufficiently and universally recognized, there is a possibility that it might become a general principle of international law and thus customary law.⁷⁵

⁷¹ Blumenwitz (footnote 47), p. 51.

⁷² Ermacora (footnote 48), p. 149, 151.

⁷³ Dicke (footnote 64), p. 107, 115.

⁷⁴ Heintschel von Heinegg, in: Ipsen, Völkerrecht (München 1990), 3rd Ed., § 19 notes 13.

⁷⁵ Ermacora (footnote 48), p. 149, 151.

3. Further provisions of public international law

On a universal level the discussed provisions on the protection of minorities are flanked by further provisions of public international law.⁷⁶ In order to gather a “minimum standard“ of the substantive law of minority protection, analyzing these flanking provisions seem to be unproductive. For this reason they will not be further assessed at this point.⁷⁷

III. Minority protection under the CSCE/OSCE system

A further object of examination shall be the development of the system of minority protection within the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE).

1. The emergence of the substantive minority protection

In the Helsinki final act⁷⁸ of August 1, 1975 minority protection was explicitly mentioned for the first time. In principle VII, the so called human rights principle, the CSCE States declared to recognize the right of persons belonging to minorities to equality before the law and to let those people enjoy human rights and fundamental freedoms to the fullest extent. Unfortunately, this confession was limited to those States where minorities existed. This, however, gives the States the possibility to get around their obligation to protect minorities by simply denying their existence on the country's territory. Nevertheless, with the acknowledgement of specific justified demands of persons belonging to minorities the foundation was laid for a development that was later referred to as the “CSCE-process”.⁷⁹ At the follow-up meetings in Belgrade (1977/78) and Madrid (1980-83) no further progress with regard to minority protection could be achieved. The development of the protection of minorities was continued at the follow-up meeting in Vienna, which began on November 4, 1986 and ended with the adoption of the final document on January 15, 1989.⁸⁰ Besides the repetition of the declaration of Helsinki (protection of fundamental rights and prohibition of discrimination) a totally new aspect was introduced: the guarantee to protect the ethnic, cultural, linguistic and religious identity of national minorities was supplemented by the declaration to create conditions to promote that identity. This meant that the participating States explicitly committed themselves to taking actions in the field of minority protection (principle sections 18 and 19). Persons belonging to minorities were allowed to maintain contacts across borders with persons sharing the same national origin or the same cultural heritage (section 31). Moreover, educational training in the field of their own culture and instruction of the children in their own language, religion and cultural identity by the parents was granted (section 68).⁸¹ A real breakthrough in the field of minority protection was reached with the adoption of the final ⁷⁶ Hailbronner (footnote 56), p. 85 ff.

⁷⁷ Cf. the instruments on the protection of „indigenous peoples“ (cf.: Heintze, Völkerrecht und indigenes peoples, ZaöRV 1990, pp. 39).

⁷⁸ Reprinted in: EA 1975, D 437.

⁷⁹ Widmer, Europäische Bemühungen zur Lösung der Minderheitenfrage, in: EA 1993, p. 265, 267; Kimminich (footnote 54), p. 321, 325.

⁸⁰ Reprinted in: EuGRZ, 1989, pp. 85.

⁸¹ von Studnitz, Minderheitenschutz im KSZE-Prozess, in: Blumenwitz/von Mangoldt, Neubestätigung und Weiterentwicklung von Menschenrechten und Volksgruppenrechten in Mitteleuropa (Bonn 1991), p. 31, 35.

document⁸² at the Copenhagen meeting of the conference on the human dimension of the CSCE on June 29, 1990. The overcoming of the East-West conflict brought about a very favorable political climate. The body of minority rights that were passed at the Copenhagen meeting filled a whole chapter in the final document (Chapter IV, sections 30-40) is still the basis of the law of minority protection of the CSCE system. The participating States granted their national minorities the right to enjoy their human rights and fundamental freedoms without discrimination and in full equality before the law and declared to take affirmative action measures if necessary to enforce these rights (section 31). Moreover, it was agreed that every person belonging to a minority shall have the right freely to choose to be treated or not to be treated as such and no disadvantage of any kind shall result from this choice (section 32). Section 32 paragraphs 1 through 6 contain further and more detailed individual minority rights, concerning in particular the private and public use of minority languages, the practice of a religion, the guarantee to cross-border contacts, the freedom to form associations, and cultural activities. Section 34 contains the commitment to provide the opportunity for minorities to be instructed in their mother tongue and to use their mother tongue before authorities. Sections 33 through 35 oblige to protect and to promote the identity of national minorities.⁸³ For the time being the process of creating substantive minority rights came to an end with the success of Copenhagen. In the “Charter of Paris for a new Europe” of November 21, 1990⁸⁴ the participating States merely affirmed that the ethnic, cultural, linguistic and religious identity of national minorities must be protected and that persons belonging to national minorities must have the right to freely express, to preserve and to develop this identity without any discrimination and in full equality before the law. In order to improve the cooperation with regard to minorities and in the field of minority protection it was decided to hold an expert meeting on July 1 through 19, 1991 in Geneva on the issue. There, however, no progress could be made predominantly because of the hesitant and counterproductive positions of countries like Bulgaria, Romania, France, Greece and Turkey. Accordingly, the final act⁸⁵ is characterized by compromises. Some collective minority rights were granted and it was agreed that supporting minority rights must not be considered as an intervention in the internal affairs of another participating country. However, these “gains” were significantly weakened by the accord that not all ethnic, cultural, linguistic or religious differences would necessarily lead to the formation of a national minority, because this formulation gives the States the possibility to deny the existence of minorities.⁸⁶

⁸² Reprinted in: EuGRZ, 1990, pp. 239.

⁸³ Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 14.

⁸⁴ Reprinted in: EuGRZ 1990, pp. 517; cf.: Schöndube, Eine Ära des Föderalismus in Europa ist angesagt - die Wiederentdeckung der nationalen Minderheiten, in: Das Parlament of May 1, 1992, p. 2.

⁸⁵ Reprinted in: EuGRZ, 1991, pp. 492.

⁸⁶ Blumenwitz (footnote 47), p. 54; Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 16.

2. The emergence of institutional protection

The third meeting of the conference on the human dimension, which was held from September 10 through October 4, 1991 in Moscow,⁸⁷ could not agree to adopt new provisions in the field of minority protection. However, the participating countries agreed on a procedural mechanism to check whether the obligations concerning the granting of human rights and minority protection were accordingly met. This procedure was named “the mechanism of the human dimension”. Should a human rights or minority rights problem occur, either the concerned State or a group of otherwise interested States can - if necessary even without the consent of the concerned State - invite a CSCE expert commission. This commission is charged with finding facts, reporting and issuing recommendations. The recommendations of the experts will then be considered by the Committee of High Officials of the CSCE, which can take further action. Since the second meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers of the CSCE Member States on January 30 and 31, 1992 in Prague,⁸⁸ such a decision to seek further action, which formerly required a consensus, can now be taken even without the consent of the concerned State in cases of clear, flagrant and ongoing violations of obligations under the “human dimension” of the CSCE. This agreement was named “consensus-minus-one-rule”.⁸⁹ It is quite remarkable that the “mechanism of the human dimension” now allows new interventions in the principle of non-interference in internal affairs, which was formerly defended vigorously by several States.⁹⁰ Also at the fourth follow-up meeting on March 24 through July 8, 1992 in Helsinki⁹¹ no further progress in the field on minority rights was made. Executing a recommendation of this follow-up meeting, the heads of States and Governments decided at their summit on July 9 and 10, 1992 in Helsinki to establish the office of a “High Commissioner on national minorities”.⁹² The mandate of the High Commissioner, however, is very limited. Under the auspices of the Committee of High Officials he deals with emerging conflicts threatening to aggravate into international conflicts. The High Commissioner, whose task it is to draw the attention of the competent CSCE bodies to dangerous developments, may initiate emergency action to prevent conflicts. However, he will not be able to consider individual complaints filed with his office by single persons belonging to minorities. Moreover, he is explicitly barred from dealing with those minority conflicts that entail violent acts of terrorism.⁹³ Eventually, it was decided to hold so-called implementation meetings on a regular basis and in the presence of non-governmental-organizations. Purpose of those meetings is a details exchange of opinions about the latest implementation developments with regard to the obligations under the “human dimension” including the provisions on minority protection.⁹⁴ The first implementation meeting on ⁸⁷ Final act reprinted in: EuGRZ 1991, pp. 495.

⁸⁸ Final act reprinted in: EuGRZ 1992, pp. 124.

⁸⁹ von Studnitz, Politische Vertretung von Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrechten auf verschiedenen staatlichen und zwischenstaatlichen Ebenen, in: Blumenwitz/Gornig, Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrechte in Theorie und Praxis (Bonn 1993), p. 17, 21; Hausmann, KSZE ... Ein Kürzel, das die Welt veränderte, in: Das Parlament of May 1, 1992, p. 5.

⁹⁰ Widmer (footnote 82), p. 265, 270.

⁹¹ Final act reprinted in: Bulletin des Presse- und Informationsamtes der Bundesregierung 1992, pp. 773.

⁹² Cf.: The Economist, September 11, 1999, p. 39 and Rüb, Früh und regelmäßig, in: FAZ of November 19, 1999.

⁹³ Widmer (footnote 82), p. 265, 271; Hofmann, Die Bedeutung des Schutzes von Minderheiten und Volksgruppen für eine neue Ordnung in Europa und in der Welt, in: AWR-Bulletin, No. 1-2/94, p. 19.

⁹⁴ von Studnitz (footnote 94), p. 17, 21.

the “human dimension” was held on September 27 through October 15, 1993 in Warsaw.⁹⁵

⁹⁵ Cf. EA, 1993, Z 246.

3. Current developments

For the time being, the development in the field of minority protection under the CSCE system came to an end with the summit in December of 1994 in Budapest, where the renaming of the CSCE in “Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE)” took place.⁹⁶ This change, however, had no influence on the existing institutional structure. Some of the existing institutions were renamed.⁹⁷ The substantive standard of minority protection was neither extended or refined in Budapest nor anytime later.

4. The legal character of the CSCE/OSCE documents

Finally, a brief word on the legal character of the CSCE/OSCE documents and acts shall be said. At several follow-up and expert meetings the CSCE/OSCE managed to adopt quite an impressive number of minority rights. One of the reasons for this success might have been the legal character or quality of the final acts, which are mere political agreements and do not have a legally binding effect as long as they have not become customary law yet.⁹⁸ But still these provisions, which are usually adopted by consensus, are politically binding, what led to a quite satisfactory adherence to them. The lately passed consensus rules show an effect which is increasingly binding. Especially the control mechanisms make it difficult for the Member States to get around the obligations they have committed themselves to.⁹⁹

IV. Minority protection by the works of the Council of Europe

Next, the work of the Council of Europe in the field of minority protection shall be analyzed.¹⁰⁰ The Council of Europe as a regional European international organization has compulsory competence on the field of human rights. The efforts of the Council of Europe with regard to the protection of minorities were in most instances initiated by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.¹⁰¹ After initial efforts in the field of minority protection proved futile, the nineties brought the adoption of the Charter on the Protection of Minority or Regional Languages and the Framework Convention on the Protection of National Minorities.¹⁰²

⁹⁶ Cf. the Budapest document reprinted in: Bulletin des Presse- und Informationsamtes der Bundesregierung 1994, pp. 1079; cf. also Tretter, Von der KSZE zur OSZE – Einführung in die für den Schutz der Menschenrechte relevanten Teile des Budapester KSZE-Dokuments 1994, in: EuGRZ 1995, pp. 296.

⁹⁷ Details cf.: Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 184.

⁹⁸ Blumenwitz (footnote 47), p. 52; Hofmann (footnote 54), p. 14.

⁹⁹ Widmer (footnote 82), p. 265, 267; von Studnitz (footnote 84), p. 31, 34.

¹⁰⁰ Cf. generally: Konstantinov, Minderheitenschutz und Europarat, in: Heintze, Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker – Herausforderung der Staatenwelt (Bonn 1997), pp. 177.

¹⁰¹ Formerly: Counselling Assembly.

¹⁰² Cf.: Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 141; Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 33; Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 203

1. Initial efforts

On the initiative of the Danish delegate Hermod Lannung the issue of the inclusion of a minority protection clause in the ECHR¹⁰³ was already debated at the consultative meeting of the Council of Europe when it was drafting the ECHR. However, a provision on minority protection was not included in the final version of this document.¹⁰⁴ In 1956 the issue minority protection was again on the agenda of the Counseling Assembly of the Council of Europe. The Assembly established a sub-committee of the legal committee to analyze the issue. The work of the minority sub-committee dragged on for several years until a group of delegates suggested to draft an additional protocol to the ECHR on the protection of minorities. First of all, the minority sub-committee dealt with the definition of the term minority and reached a consensus that only “separate or distinct groups, well-defined and long established on the territory of a state“ should be comprised.¹⁰⁵ In 1961 the legal committee finally agreed on the wording of a minority protection provision, which was supposed to be adopted as an additional protocol to the ECHR.¹⁰⁶

„Persons belonging to a national minority shall not be denied the right, in community with other members of their group, and as far as compatible with public order, to enjoy their own culture, to use their own language, to establish their own schools and receive teaching in the language of their choice or to profess and practice their own religion.“

The codification of a minority definition had been dropped. Even though the Assembly adopted this provision as recommendation no. 285 (1961) and sent it to the Committee of Ministers for its adoption, the provision never entered into force, because the majority of the members of the Council of Europe opposed it.¹⁰⁷ It was argued, that the protection of minorities was already ensured by many documents in the field of public international law and that the practices of the States of the Council of Europe did not show the need for immediate action in that area.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰³ Cf. Lannung, The rights of minorities, in: FS for Modinos, pp. 181; Modeen, The International Protection of National Minorities in Europe (Abo 1969), p. 127.

¹⁰⁴ Cf. infra.

¹⁰⁵ Lannung (footnote 106), pp. 181.

¹⁰⁶ Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), p. 145; Cf. also Lannung (footnote 106), pp. 181.

¹⁰⁷ Lannung (footnote 106), pp. 181; Modeen (footnote 106), p. 128.

¹⁰⁸ Details cf. Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 145.

2. The European Charter on Human Rights of 1950

As already mentioned, the efforts of the Council of Europe in the field of minority protection reached back in its initial years in 1949. Following the fashion at that time of a concept of individual human rights the European Charter on Human Rights (ECHR) of November 4, 1950,¹⁰⁹ however, did not contain an explicit provision on the protection of minorities. Minorities were protected indirectly by the general prohibition of discriminations of article 14 of the ECHR. This provision contains the obligation of all Member States to provide for the enjoyment of the guaranteed rights and freedoms without any discrimination based on race, skin color, language, the national or social origin, or the belonging to a national minority. Moreover, the traditional lifestyle of a minority can fall within the scope of article 8 ECHR, which prohibits the invasion of privacy.¹¹⁰ Article 6 paragraph 3 subparagraph e ECHR provides for the right of any accused to demand the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand the language of the court or cannot defend himself in that language. This provision benefits foreigners as well as persons belonging to minorities. Moreover, through its jurisprudence the European Court of Human Rights has clarified some provisions of the ECHR with regard to their protective effect for minorities. In the quite known “Belgian language case” the European Court of Human Rights decided, that no obligation for States to establish or to finance a certain educational institution follows from article 2 of the Second Additional Protocol in conjunction with article 14 ECHR.¹¹¹ That meant in particular that there was no right for parents to claim that their children were instructed in any other language than the official language of the respective country.¹¹² In sum the significance of the ECHR in the field of the effective protection of national minorities in the State parties must unfortunately be considered as very low.¹¹³

¹⁰⁹ BGBl. 1952 II p. 685, 953; latest amendment of November 1, 1994; BGBl. 1994 II pp. 3624.

¹¹⁰ Details cf.: Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 33; Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 12 and Klebes, Rechtsnormen – politische Willenserklärungen – praktische Projekte, in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 2.

¹¹¹ EuGMRE 2, pp. 1 = EuGRZ 1975, pp. 298.

¹¹² Blumenwitz, Volksgruppen und Minderheiten. Politische Vertretung und Kulturautonomie (Berlin 1995), p. 157.

¹¹³ This are the conclusions of Hofmann (footnote 8), p. 33 and Klebes (footnote 113), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 2.

3. The European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages of 1992

In the beginning of the eighties, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe put the issue of minority protection on the agenda once again. This time it picked the issue of the protection of regional and minority languages. By recommendation no. 928 (1981) the Parliamentary Assembly suggested that the Committee of Ministers consider action in that area.¹¹⁴ Eleven years later, on June 25, 1992 the Committee of Ministers finally passed the “European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages”, which was put up for signature on November 5, 1992.¹¹⁵ Purpose of the Charter is the protection and promotion of regional and minority languages in schools, before the administrative bodies, before the courts and in the media, but not the promotion of minorities as such. That way the Committee of Ministers hoped to make the adoption of the Charter easier for those States, that denied the existence of minorities on their territory, through omitting long and fatiguing debates about the definition of the term minority.¹¹⁶ However, through defining the object to be protected, i.e. the regional or minority languages, in article 1 paragraph a), the Charter implicitly also defined the minority groups to be protected. Article 1 paragraph a) has the following wording:

„For the purpose of this Charter:
 “regional or minority language“ means languages that are:
 traditionally used within a given territory of a State by nationals of that State who form a group numerically smaller than the rest of the State’s population; and different from the official language(s) of that State;
 it does not include either dialects of the official language(s) of the State or the languages of migrants;“

This definition excludes immigrant groups or sometimes so-called “new minorities” even twice from the scope of the Charter. On the one hand only languages spoken by nationals of one of the State parties are protected and on the other hand languages of migrants are explicitly excluded from protection, even if they have acquired the citizenship of their resident State in the meantime.¹¹⁷

The Charter is divided into five parts: general provisions, objectives and principles, measures to promote the use of regional or minority languages in public life, application of the Charter and final provisions.¹¹⁸

¹¹⁴ Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 146.

¹¹⁵ HRLJ 1993, pp. 148; BGBl. 1998 II pp. 1314.

¹¹⁶ Konstantinov (footnote 103), p. 188.

¹¹⁷ This is especially true for France and Great Britain. When the new laws on citizenship enter into force on January 1, 2000 this can also be expected for Germany. Cf.: Europäisches Parlament, Generaldirektion Wissenschaft, Doc. Nr. IV/WIP/98/10/022, Staatsangehörigkeit in den Mitgliedstaaten der EG, as of: October 30, 1998.

¹¹⁸ Cf. Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 55.

Articles 2 and 3 which are the central clauses among the general provisions lay out the complicated structure of the Charter, which grants the State parties much leeway as to the intensity of protection they would like to allow under the Charter. Article 2 paragraph 1 generally obliges all States parties to apply the objectives and principles (i.e. article 7) of the Charter to all regional or minority languages which meet the criteria spelled out in article 1. Under article 3 paragraph 1 of the Charter each State party shall specify, in its instrument of ratification, each regional or minority language they would like to promote in a particular way according to the catalogue of part III. (articles 8 through 14). The reason for this complicated system is to give the State parties a wide discretion in order to gain wide acceptance of the Charter among the Member States of the Council of Europe. However, this also means that the contracting States are under no legal obligation to promote all regional or minority languages spoken within their territory according to part III. of the Charter in a particular way. The contracting parties are not even obliged to notify any of their regional or minority language for the particular protection provided for in part III. of the Charter. Moreover, the State parties have even further discretion. Even if they chose some or all of their minority languages for the special protection under part III. of the Charter, they can pick single provisions from part III. for each language. Only the obligation under article 2 paragraph 2 to at least pick out a specified minimum number of provisions from the offered catalogues to apply to their regional or minority languages limits this discretion in a certain way.¹¹⁹

Part II. of the Charter, which is codified in article 7, determines the objectives and principles, on which the State parties must base their policies, legislation and practice with respect to all regional or minority languages spoken within their territories. Article 7 hardly lays down any specific legal obligation of the State parties and confers no subjective rights to the speakers of regional or minority languages. Basically article 7 only encourages the State parties to promote the use of regional or minority languages, to facilitate their use in public life and determines that the promotion of regional or minority languages shall not be regarded as an act of discrimination against the majority language.¹²⁰

Part III. of the Charter contains in articles 8 through 14 a detailed catalogue of the substantive measures to promote the regional or minority languages notified according to article 2 paragraph 2. As mentioned before, the contracting States can pick specific promotion measures and are only obliged to pick a minimum number of such measures from the different catalogues. Article 8 provides for specific promotional measures in the educational sector. Article 9 determines the protection measures supposed to allow the use of regional or minority languages before judicial authorities.

¹¹⁹ The content of at least 35 of the substantive provisions in articles 8 through 14 has to be implemented. Among those provisions at least three have to be picked from article 8 (education) and 12 (cultural activities and institutions). At least one has to be picked from article 9 (judicial authorities), 10 (administrative authorities), 11 (media) and 13 (economic and social life).

¹²⁰ Hofmann (footnote 8), p. 57.

Article 10 offers promotional measures to encourage the use of regional or minority languages before national or regional administrative authorities. Article 11 intends to promote the presence of regional or minority languages in the media sector. Article 12 wants to strengthen the position of regional or minority languages in the cultural sector. Article 13 offers promotional measures for regional or minority languages in economic and social life. Article 14 intends to strengthen the contacts of speakers of the same regional or minority languages across borders. Articles 15 through 17 control the implementation and enforcement of the Charter and establish a reporting system.

As the Charter entered into force on March 1, 1998¹²¹ it is very difficult to assess it in a compulsory way.¹²² A few points can be made though at this moment. The most positive aspect about the Charter is probably its mere existence. The fact that it was possible to agree on an international treaty which could be put up for signature is a great success in itself after so many initiatives to codify rights of minorities on an international level failed.¹²³ On the other hand there are several shortcomings of the Charter that cannot be overlooked. Firstly, the Charter does not confer a single subjective right to the speakers of regional or minority languages. The structure of the Charter, which allows the different State parties to pick different promotional measures, brings on the one hand with it, that a common minimal standard will not be feasible, and enables on the other hand States generally hostile towards minorities, to pick the least possible protection standard for their minorities without being exposed to the accusation not having joined the Charter. Moreover, many of the obligations are formulated in such a cautious way that a real legal obligation under international law is hardly existing. Finally, to choose a reporting system to monitor the implementation of the Charter is the “weakest” form to control the enforcement of an international treaty.¹²⁴

¹²¹ Cf. BT.-Drucks. 14/1130, p. 5 (report of the federal government on the activities of the Council of Europe).

¹²² Hausmann, Die bloße Existenz der Europäischen Charta ist ihre Stärke, in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 3.

¹²³ Hausmann (footnote 125), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 3.; Hofmann (footnote 8), p. 62.

¹²⁴ Cf. Hausmann (footnote 125), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 3.; Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 62 and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 148

4. (Unsuccessful) initiatives on the way to the Framework Convention of 1995

Until the Framework Convention for the protection of national minorities could be put up for signature there were many efforts by the Council of Europe and its bodies to elaborate a compulsory code of the rights of minorities. For the moment the Framework Convention marks the final point in codifying the rights of minorities and the only compulsory set of international law in force that has been enacted under the auspices of the Council of Europe. For this reason the initiatives on the way to the Framework Convention shall only be analyzed briefly.¹²⁵

In view of the aggravating minority conflicts after the collapse of the Eastern Bloc, the Council of Europe established on May 8, 1990 the European Commission for Democracy through Law, the so-called Venice Commission as a advisory body. This body, consisting of leading academics in the field of international law, presented to the Committee of Ministers on February 8, 1991 a compulsory draft convention¹²⁶ on the protection of minorities. This draft¹²⁷ contained a definition of the term minority that excluded aliens, many individual rights and some group rights. The monitoring mechanism provides for a reporting system and the possibility to file complaints both for States and individuals. On November 26, 1991 the government of Austria presented to the Committee of Ministers a draft additional protocol to the ECHR on the protection of minorities. This draft had the elegant advantage of conferring the control over the implementation of minority rights to already existing and reliable bodies within the system of the Council of Europe (the Human Rights Committee and the European Court for Human Rights).¹²⁸ Moreover, there existed a draft “Convention on Fundamental Rights of the European Ethnic Groups” (the so-called “Bozen draft”) elaborated by the Federalist Union of European Ethnic Groups (FUEV), a non-governmental organization.¹²⁹

¹²⁵ For a detailed analysis of the initiatives cf. Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 38 and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 149.

¹²⁶ Reprinted in: Human Rights Law Journal 1991, pp. 296.

¹²⁷ Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 18; Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 40 and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 151.

¹²⁸ Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 21; Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 43 and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 153.

¹²⁹ Hillgruber, Minderheitenschutz im Rahmen der Europäischen Menschenrechtskonvention – Stand und Entwicklung, in: Blumenwitz/Gornig, Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrechte in Theorie und Praxis (Bonn 1993), p. 39, 43; Ludwig, Werden sie wirksam geschützt, so zücken sie den Dolch nicht – Nationale Minderheiten verlangen kollektivrechtlichen Volksgruppenschutz, in: FAZ of May 18, 1994, p. 8, und Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 159.

On November 23 through 27, 1992 the expert committee for the protection of national minorities met for the first time. The task of this committee was to assess the feasibility to create legal standards for the protection of national minorities in the spirit of the European Charter on Human Rights using the already existing drafts.¹³⁰ The findings of that expert committee were the decisive initiative for the discussion and finally the adoption of the additional protocol to the European Charter on Human Rights of February 1, 1993¹³¹ by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. The term “national minority” is defined in article 1 of the draft additional protocol like this:

“Article 1

For the purpose of this Convention the term “national minority” shall mean a group of persons in a State who

- a. settle within the territory of that State being citizens of that States,*
- b. maintain long existing and well established relations to that State,*
- c. possess specific ethnic, cultural, religious or linguistic characteristics,*
- d. are sufficiently represented, although their number is less than that of the rest of the population of that States or a region of this State,*
- e. are willing to commonly preserve the features that characterize their identity, especially their culture, their traditions, their religion or language.”*

The belonging to a national minority is a matter of personal choice, that must not entail any disadvantage. Persons belonging to national minorities have the right to freely express, to preserve and to develop their religious, ethnic, linguistic and/or cultural identity without being assimilated against their will. They can practice and enjoy their rights individually or in community with others. Persons belonging to national minorities have the right to equality before the law; any discrimination based on the affiliation with a national minority is forbidden. They have the right to found their own organizations, including political parties. Moreover, persons belonging to national minorities have the right to freely use their mother tongue. They can also use their names in their language. In regions where a significant part of a national minority settles, the persons belonging to that minority have the right to use their mother tongue before administrative authorities and before courts. Persons belonging to national minorities can demand that their language be taught as a foreign language in schools and that an adequate number of schools be established that use their mother tongue as language of instruction. Moreover, they have the right to establish and maintain cross-border contacts to people with the same minority identity. In regions, where persons belonging to national minorities form a regional majority, they shall have the right to maintain their own local or autonomous administrative bodies or shall have a special status. Measures of protection and promotion of persons belonging to national minorities are not to be considered as an act of discrimination against the rest of the population.¹³² The Parliamentary Assembly recommended, the Committee of Ministers adopt an additional protocol to the European Charter on Human Rights on the rights of minorities using their draft as a guideline. The Committee of Ministers should enable the heads of States and governments of the Council of Europe to pass a protocol on minority rights at their meeting on October 8 and 9, 1993 in Vienna and put it up for ¹³⁰ Klebes, Für ein gesamteuropäisches Minderheitenrecht – Zum Stand der Arbeiten des Europarates in Straßburg, in: Das Parlament of May 1, 1992, p. 4.

¹³¹ Recommendation No. 1201 (1993) concerning an additional protocol to the ECHR on minority rights reprinted in: EuGRZ 1993, pp. 151 or BT.-Drucks. 12/4572.

¹³² BT.-Drucks. 12/4572; BT.-Drucks. 12/5227; Steiner, Die Entwicklung des Minderheitenschutzes im Rahmen des Europarates, in: Blumenwitz/Gornig, Minderheiten- und Volksgruppenrechte in Theorie und Praxis (Bonn 1993), pp. 29, 36; Wollenschläger, Minderheitenschutz im internationalen, europäischen und nationalen Recht, in: AWR-Bulletin, No. 1-2/94, p. 9.

signature.¹³³ However, the Vienna summit¹³⁴ of heads of States and governments did not pass an additional protocol, but rather charged the Committee of Ministers with preparing a framework convention for the protection of national minorities. Moreover, an additional protocol was to be drafted, which was supposed to supplement the European Charter on Human Rights in the cultural area with provisions that would grant individual rights especially for persons belonging to national minorities.¹³⁵

¹³³ Recommendation No. 1201 (1993) concerning an additional protocol to the ECHR on minority rights reprinted in: EuGRZ 1993, pp. 151 or BT.-Drucks. 12/4572.

¹³⁴ Final act „Declaration of Vienna” reprinted in: EA 1993, D 478.

¹³⁵ EA 1993, Z 246; Laux, Das Gipfeltreffen des Europarates in Wien, in: EA 1993, D 478; Ludwig (footnote 132), in: FAZ of May 18, 1994, p. 8.

5. The Framework Convention of the Council of Europe on the Protection of National Minorities of 1995

In February 1994 the ad-hoc-committee that had been established by the Committee of Ministers began drafting the Framework Convention. Sensitive issues were resolved on a ministerial level in October 1994 and after the following meeting of the ad-hoc-committee the final draft of the Framework Convention was completed. The Committee of Ministers adopted the draft on November 10, 1994 and on February 1, 1995 the Framework Convention was put up for signature.¹³⁶

Before an in-depth analysis of the Convention it must be noted that many Member States of the Council of Europe took a very hostile position during the discussions as they were still afraid of a destabilizing spiral beginning with the granting of a cultural autonomy for minorities, continuing with the minorities' self-administration and inevitably leading to a secession of the minority. Other States are philosophically based on the assumption that granting special rights for particular groups within a society would be incompatible with the principle of the universality of human rights,¹³⁷ what made it even further difficult to find a consensus.

Subject of the Framework Convention are national minorities or persons belonging to such minorities. The objective is the protection of the minorities through granting rights for persons belonging to them.¹³⁸ The Framework Convention does not provide a definition of the term "minority", because again no consensus could be reached in that respect. On this issue the explanatory report¹³⁹ says:

"Furthermore, it must be noted that the Framework Convention does not contain a definition of the term national minority. Therefore, a pragmatic view had to be chosen based on the realization that it is currently impossible to find a definition, which would be fully acceptable to all the Member States of the Council of Europe."

This means, in other words, that the supporters of minority protection were rather ready to accept an agreement on a text without a definition, than to run the risk of having to abandon the project of a convention on the subject altogether. The Framework Convention is an international treaty laying down the principles and leaving it up to the State parties to choose the means of its implementation.

The preamble of the Framework Convention addresses worries of many Member States of the Council of Europe, which participated in drafting this treaty, by explicitly stating in its last paragraph that the Framework Convention ensures "the effective protection of national minorities and of the rights and freedoms of persons belonging to those minorities, within the rule of law, respecting the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of States." This clearly defines the outer boundaries of the scope within which the Member States are willing to grant minority rights.¹⁴⁰ Article 1 identifies the objective of the Framework Convention as "the protection of national

¹³⁶ The text is reprinted in: BGBl. 1997 II pp. 1408.

¹³⁷ This is especially true for France.

¹³⁸ An in-depth analysis of the Framework Convention was done by Klebes, Rahmenübereinkommen des Europarats zum Schutz nationaler Minderheiten, in: EuGRZ 1995, pp. 262. Cf. also Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 164 and Hausmann, Bescheidener Einstieg in ein gesamteuropäisches Recht, in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 2.

¹³⁹ Reprinted in: EuGRZ 1995, pp. 271.

¹⁴⁰ Cf. Klebes (footnote 141), pp. 262, 265.

minorities and the rights and freedoms of persons belonging to those minorities.”¹⁴¹ In this respect paragraph 13 of the explanatory report¹⁴² emphasizes that the Framework Convention does not grant any collective rights. It is equally clear that persons belonging to such minorities will not be provided with any subjective rights. Moreover, article 1 stresses the significance of the protection of minority rights as being an integral part of the international protection of human rights and as such falling within the scope of international cooperation, what should be self-evident. Article 2 of the Framework Convention reiterates another self-evident truth, namely that the Convention shall be applied in good faith, in a spirit of understanding and tolerance and in conformity with the principles of good neighborliness, friendly relations and cooperation between States. Article 3 codifies the so-called “confession principle” bringing it in accordance with the dominant opinion¹⁴³ with regard to a minority definition, i.e. that the minority features are made up by subjective and objective criteria. Article 3 paragraph 1 says accordingly: “every person belonging to a national minority shall have the right freely to choose to be treated or not to be treated as such (...)” Paragraph 35 of the explanatory report clarifies in that respect that article 3 does not grant the right for any person to arbitrarily decide for himself to belong to a certain national minority, but that the subjective choice of a person in that respect must be backed by inalienable and objective criteria regarding this identity. Article 4 codifies the right of minorities to equality before the law and equal protection by the law and statutes a fundamental prohibition of any discrimination. Article 4 paragraph 2 permits affirmative action measures and paragraph 3 states that such measures are not to be considered as acts of discrimination against the majority population. Article 5 lays down the prohibition of the assimilation of minorities against their will. However, this prohibition is limited as it binds the Member States “without prejudice to measures taken in pursuance of their general integration policy”. Article 6 commands equally pathetic as meaningless to “encourage a spirit of tolerance and intercultural dialogue and to promote mutual respect and understanding and cooperation”. Just like article 11 of the ECHR, article 7 of the Framework Convention grants the freedom of peaceful assembly and the freedom of association. Contrarily to the draft of an additional protocol to the ECHR on the protection of minorities,¹⁴⁴ the Framework Convention does not explicitly grant the right of minorities to found own organizations including political parties. Article 8 protects the right to manifest a religious belief.¹⁴⁵ Article 9 regulates the freedom of speech and expression and the freedom of the press with regard to minority languages. Article 10 of the Framework Convention addresses the use of minority languages generally. The freedom to use minority languages in private and in public life must be granted. The formulation of the right to use minority languages before administrative authorities is slightly weaker. The way article 10 is formulated leaves a lot of discretion to the States as to how they want to implement the provision.¹⁴⁶ In case of an arrest a person belonging to a minority shall according to article 10 paragraph 3 have the right to be informed promptly in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and shall have the right of free assistance of an interpreter if necessary. Article 11 paragraph 1 gives the persons belonging to minorities the right to use their names in the minority language. Again

¹⁴¹ Cf. supra.

¹⁴² Reprinted in: EuGRZ 1995, pp. 271.

¹⁴³ Cf. Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 39.

¹⁴⁴ Recommendation No. 1201 (1993) concerning an additional protocol to the ECHR on minority rights reprinted in: EuGRZ 1993, pp. 151 or BT.-Drucks. 12/4572.

¹⁴⁵ Cf. also the corresponding article 9 ECHR.

¹⁴⁶ An example for a vague formulation of an obligation under the Framework Convention would be article 10 paragraph 2: “In areas inhabited by persons belonging to national minorities traditionally or in substantial numbers, if those persons so request and where such a request corresponds to a real need, the Parties shall endeavour to ensure, as far as possible, the conditions which would make it possible to use the minority language in relations between those persons and the administrative authorities.” watered down by very vague formulations, article 11 paragraphs 2 and 3 allow the use of topographical indications in the minority language. Article 12 permits the States to take promotional measures in the fields of education and research to foster knowledge of the culture, history, language and religion of their national minorities and of the majority. Moreover, equal opportunities for access to education at all levels for persons belonging to minorities shall be promoted. Article 13 grants persons belonging to national minorities the right to set up and manage their own private educational and training establishments. This right is very limited by the additional remark that the exercise of this right shall not entail any financial obligation for the parties. Article 14 recognizes the right of every person belonging to a national minority to learn his minority language or even to have the opportunity to be instructed in the minority language. The content of article 14 is also watered down by its vague formulation. Article 15 wants to ensure the effective participation of persons belonging to national minorities in cultural, social and economic life and in public affairs, in particular those affecting them. This hints to the ideas of participation and integration. Article 16 wants to save minorities in their traditional settling areas from demographic measures that might pose a threat to the minority community. Finally, articles 17 and 18 want to facilitate cross-border contacts of minority groups and the international cooperation of States to improve the situation in that area. In order to control the implementation of the Framework Convention, articles 24 through 26 provide for a reporting system, one of the weakest monitoring possibilities for international treaties.¹⁴⁷

Comparing the provisions of the Framework Convention with the draft additional protocol to the ECHR on the protection of minority rights,¹⁴⁸ two provisions catch the eye which have not been included in the Framework Convention. Assessing those provisions, however, is useful for finding the current common standard of substantive European minority law. In contrast with article 11 of the draft additional protocol to the ECHR the Framework Convention does not include the right for minorities to establish their own regional or autonomous administrative authorities or get a special status in those parts of the country, where they form the majority. The reason for the non-inclusion of this provision in the Framework Convention is presumably the aforementioned fear of some Members of the Council of Europe of the spiral cultural autonomy - self-government - secession. Furthermore, the right to file an individual complaint, if a person belonging to a minority feels violated in his rights, which was codified in article 9 of the draft additional protocol to the ECHR, is also not included in the Framework Convention.¹⁴⁹

¹⁴⁷ Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 205; Weckerling, Der Durchführungsmechanismus des Rahmenabkommens des Europarates zum Schutz nationaler Minderheiten, in: EuGRZ 1997, pp. 605.

¹⁴⁸ Recommendation No. 1201 (1993) concerning an additional protocol to the ECHR on minority rights reprinted in: EuGRZ 1993, pp. 151 or BT.-Drucks. 12/4572.

¹⁴⁹ Cf. article 9 of the draft additional protocol to the ECHR.

The Framework Convention of the Council of Europe for the Protection of National Minorities entered into force on February 1, 1998. Because practical experience is still scarce a compulsory conclusion is difficult to draw. The reporter of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe summed up the criticism of the Framework Convention's content by saying in the framework of the putting up for signature ceremony:¹⁵⁰

“Unfortunately the wording of the Convention is quite vague. It lays down a number of not very precisely defined objectives and principles, the keeping of which is an obligation of the States, but which are not enforceable by individuals. Its implementation mechanism is ineffective and there is indeed a danger that monitoring the implementation of the Convention is fully within the discretion of the States.”

Nevertheless it must be seen as a great political success that already 26 out of the 41 Members of the Council of Europe, among them some “big”, i.e. politically powerful ones, have ratified the Framework Convention.¹⁵¹ Unfortunately countries like Turkey, Belgium or Greece could not be convinced to join the Convention so far. France is at least considering an accession to the Framework Convention.¹⁵² Despite its shortcomings, the sometimes vague and restrictive formulation of the granted rights and the lack of an effective mechanism to control its implementation, the Framework Convention could have a chance of developing into a moral authority in the field of minority protection because of the accession of many and among those some very important States. Together with the European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages the Framework Convention is the basis for the creation of a genuine European law of minority protection.¹⁵³ In a way the rights laid down in the Framework Convention can be seen as the basic arsenal of European substantial minority law.

¹⁵⁰ Cf. Klebes (footnote 141), p. 262, 267.

¹⁵¹ The Framework Convention has already been ratified by Armenia, Austria, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Italy, Liechtenstein, Malta, Moldavia, Norway, Romania, Russia, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Switzerland, Macedonia, the Ukraine, Great Britain, Bulgaria and Ireland; cf. Hausmann (footnote 141), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 2.

¹⁵² The Framework Convention has already been ratified by Armenia, Austria, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Italy, Liechtenstein, Malta, Moldavia, Norway, Romania, Russia, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Switzerland, Macedonia, the Ukraine, Great Britain, Bulgaria and Ireland; cf. Hausmann (footnote 141), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 2.

¹⁵³ Cf. Klebes (footnote 141), p. 262, 268 and Hausmann (footnote 141), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 2 and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), p. 167.

V. Minority protection by the European Union

The law of minority protection can still not be found in the core provisions of substantive EC law as it is laid down in the treaties.¹⁵⁴ The few provisions that provide some indirect minority protection and the jurisprudence of the ECJ in that respect have already been analyzed supra.¹⁵⁵ Besides looking at some (unsuccessful) initiatives of the European Parliament to strengthen the protection of minority rights in community law, this part will briefly analyze the “foreign policy” of the European Union in the field of minority protection. As a real, genuine European foreign policy is not yet existing, the term “foreign policy” must be put in quotation marks. Instead of having means to formulate a compulsory foreign policy, the Union can take some action in that direction within the intergovernmental cooperation under the second pillar of the Union, the common foreign and security policy.¹⁵⁶ In that respect it is interesting to assess the conditions the new middle and eastern European candidates for membership in the EU must comply with in the field of minority protection, and the position of the European Union with regard to minority protection during the conflict in former Yugoslavia.

1. (Unsuccessful) initiatives of the European Parliament

The European Parliament launched several initiatives to provide the minorities in the European Community with compulsory protection. None of these initiatives, however, developed into more than a draft. On July 31, 1984 42 members of the European Parliament introduced a motion for resolution which was mainly based on a report¹⁵⁷ on the rights of ethnic groups and minorities by the Bavarian delegate Alfons Goppel. Subsequently, this motion became the basis for further action of the European Parliament in that direction. In February 1992 the delegate Franz Ludwig Graf Stauffenberg presented a draft motion¹⁵⁸ by the EPP fraction in the EP which invited the governments of the Member States to determine the rights of ethnic groups and persons belonging to them, to secure them by laying them down in a binding Charter and to permanently protect them that way. The draft Charter defines the term “ethnic group” as the totality of all those citizens of a Member State of the European Community, which live in that territory traditionally and since generations, possess common ethnic, religious and/or linguistic characteristics, which distinguish them from other parts of the population, which possess a typical cultural identity and which form a numerical minority against the rest of the population of that State. Persons belonging to one of those ethnic groups shall have the right of recognition of their existence and their identity. Compulsory resettlement and expulsion shall be prohibited under the right to the native land. Persons belonging to an ethnic group shall have the right to establish their own political parties and to administrative self-government on a regional or municipal level within the common State order. They shall have the right of protection and promotion of the cultural life of the ethnic group and to preservation of their cultural heritage. The States are obliged to promote the production and dissemination of press, audio and video productions of the ethnic groups and to use bilingual topographic indications. Moreover, the States have to provide for ways so that persons belonging to ethnic groups can enforce their rights in the courts. However, it must also be noted that the legislative bodies of the ¹⁵⁴ Brems (footnote 45), p. 62.

¹⁵⁵ Vgl. Blumenwitz (footnote 14), p. 25, 34; Europäischen Akademie Bozen, Paket für Europa, Arbeitsheft der Akademie No. 10 (1998).

¹⁵⁶ Streinz (footnote 8), p. 11, 13.

¹⁵⁷ Reprinted in: Europa Ethnica 1984, pp. 233.

¹⁵⁸ On the content cf. Kimminich (footnote 54), pp. 321, 324; Goppel, Die Region: Hort für Minderheiten – Plädoyer für ein europäisches Volksgruppen- und Minderheitenrecht, in: Das Parlament of May 1, 1992, p. 16.

European Communities are probably lacking the competence to regulate minority issues, as even the general authorization of article 308 EC Treaty will not provide the power to legislate issues in that area. Therefore, a Charter on the Rights of Ethnic Groups would have to be designed as a special international treaty or an annex to the Treaties explicitly amending the primary law of the European Communities.¹⁵⁹ After MEP Graf Stauffenberg had been removed from the committee for law and civil rights, MEP Alber (who now is Advocate General with the ECJ) had been charged with pushing the draft Charter on the Rights of Ethnic Groups ahead. On May 14, 1993 Mr. Alber again presented an update of the draft Charter, which unfortunately also failed.¹⁶⁰

2. The “Copenhagen criteria“ for the accession candidates of 1993

Since the changes in middle and eastern Europe the European Union has encouraged these States to introduce human and minority rights. The desire of those States to join the European Union was seen as the strongest incentive to introduce such changes. In June of 1993 the heads of States and Governments decided at the Copenhagen summit, that the European Union generally welcomes the accession of the middle and eastern European candidates.¹⁶¹ At the same time criteria for the accession were elaborated that entered the EU lingo as the “Copenhagen criteria”.¹⁶² The decisive passage of the final conclusions of the Council summit of Copenhagen reads like this:¹⁶³

„membership requires that the candidate country:
 - has achieved stability of institutions guaranteeing democracy, the rule of law, human rights, and respect for and protection of minorities,
 - the existence of a functioning market economy as well as the capacity to cope with competitive pressure and market forces within the Union, and
 - (has) the ability to take on the obligations of membership, including adherence to the aims of political, economic and monetary union.“

Even if grave doubt existed whether the Union would be serious about the political claims against the accession candidates, these doubts were dispelled by the Commission when it published its “agenda 2000” in July 1997. Of course the EU analyzed primarily economical data within the framework of the assessment of the candidates’ progress with regard to an accession. Nevertheless also political criteria were broadly assessed and the totally unsatisfactory situation with regard to minority rights in Slovakia lead to the loss of this State’s position among the group 1 accession candidates.¹⁶⁴

¹⁵⁹ Blumenwitz (footnote 47), p. 60.

¹⁶⁰ Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 170; Streinz (footnote 8), p. 11, 14.

¹⁶¹ States in group 1 are: Poland, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Slovenia, Estonia, and Cyprus. Other candidates are: Lithuania, Bulgaria, Latvia, Romania, the Slovak Republic and Malta. Turkey is associated since 1962.

¹⁶² Cf. Blumenwitz (footnote 14), pp. 25, 28; Freudenberg, Das diktierte Wohlverhalten für die Neuen im EU-Club, in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 5.

¹⁶³ European Commission, COM(97) 2000 Vol. 1, Agenda 2000, 1. For a stronger and wider Union, S. 41.

¹⁶⁴ Freudenberg (footnote 165), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 5.

Applying the “Copenhagen criteria” the Commission made it very clear that it would, in their assessment, not only consider the constitution and the statutes of a candidate but also the political practice, which would also have to be in line with western European standards.¹⁶⁵ With regard to minority rights the Agenda 2000 states:¹⁶⁶

„Respect for minorities

Many of the applicant countries have minority populations, whose satisfactory integration into society is a condition for democratic stability. Minorities account for 44% of the population in Latvia (where 34% are Russian), 38% in Estonia (30% Russian), 20% in Lithuania (9% Russian, 7% Polish), 18% in Slovakia (11% Hungarian, 5% Roma), 14% in Bulgaria (9% Turks, 5% Roma) and 13% in Romania (8% Hungarian, 4% Roma).

A number of texts governing the protection of national minorities have been adopted by the Council of Europe, in particular the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and recommendation 1201 adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe in 1993. The latter, though not binding, recommends that collective rights be recognized, while the Framework Convention safeguards the individual rights of persons belonging to minority groups. (...)

Except for the situation of the Roma minority in a number of applicants, which gives cause for concern, the integration of minorities in their societies is, in general, satisfactory.

Minority problems, if unresolved, could affect democratic stability or lead to disputes with neighboring countries. It is therefore in the interest of the Union and of the applicant countries that satisfactory progress in integrating minority populations be achieved before the accession process is completed, using all opportunities offered in this context.

Conclusion

Even though progress has still to be made in a number of applicant countries as regards actually practicing democracy and protecting minorities, only one applicant State - Slovakia - does not satisfy the political conditions laid down by the European Council in Copenhagen.“

As regards the middle and eastern European States it is thus the Commission, who determines the quite cryptic Copenhagen criterion of the “stability of institutions guaranteeing (...) respect for and protection of minorities”. It is noteworthy, though, that in doing so, the Commission uses two references to determine the standard of minority protection it demands on the side of the accession candidates: on the one hand it uses the Framework Convention of the Council of Europe for the Protection of National Minorities¹⁶⁷ and on the other hand it also consults recommendation no. 1201

¹⁶⁵ Freudenberg (footnote 165), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 5.

¹⁶⁶ European Commission, COM(97) 2000 Vol. 1, Agenda 2000, 1. For a stronger and wider Union, S. 44 f.

¹⁶⁷ The text is reprinted in: BGBl. 1997 II pp. 1408.

of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe of February 1, 1993 concerning an additional protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights on the rights of national minorities.¹⁶⁸ The first document, though in force has not been ratified by States like Belgium, France and Greece, the latter document is not even in force but is still being negotiated.¹⁶⁹

The Commission's approach of demanding from the accession candidates not only a "smallest common denominator" with regard to the standards of minority protection must be appreciated. This approach is obviously inspired by the jurisprudence of the ECJ in the field of its fundamental rights jurisdiction, which also sets the standards for fundamental rights not to the level of a "smallest common denominator".¹⁷⁰ In sum, the standard of minority rights as it is laid down in the Framework Convention and which is almost identical with the standard of rights as it is enshrined in the draft additional protocol to the European Charter on Human Rights concerning the rights of national minorities¹⁷¹ seems to be the current standard of the body of European minority law according to the interpretation of the "Copenhagen criteria" by the Commission.

3. The position of the European Union in the conflict in Yugoslavia

Even before the "Copenhagen criteria" were formulated, the European Union had insisted on the obedience to minority rights when it set up the criteria for the diplomatic recognition of the new States that emerged after the disintegration of Yugoslavia.¹⁷² After an increasing number of States declared themselves independent,¹⁷³ the Council determined the criteria for the recognition under international law of the emerging States by the Member States of the European Community on December 16, 1991.¹⁷⁴ On the basis of a common position¹⁷⁵ the EC demanded for the recognition of the new States under international law the "recognition of the provisions of the UN-Charter and the obligations of the final act of Helsinki and the Charter of Paris, especially regarding the rule of law, democracy and human rights", "the guarantee of rights of ethnic and national groups and minorities in accordance with the obligations within the framework of the CSCE" and the "recognition of the inviolability of all borders, which can only be changed peacefully and conjointly."¹⁷⁶ The recognition of Slovenia followed suit without further conditions. For the recognition of Croatia the EU demanded further guarantees regarding the protection of the Serb minority in the Krajina.¹⁷⁷

¹⁶⁸ Recommendation No. 1201 (1993) concerning an additional protocol to the ECHR on minority rights reprinted in: EuGRZ 1993, pp. 151 or BT.-Drucks. 12/4572.

¹⁶⁹ Vgl. Klebes (footnote 141), p. 262, 268, and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), p. 158.

¹⁷⁰ Vgl. Streinz (footnote 12), pp. 109.

¹⁷¹ These two instruments are compared in: EuGRZ 1995, pp. 279.

¹⁷² Vgl. hierzu: Blumenwitz (footnote 14), pp. 25; Bothe/Hailbronner/Klein/Kunig/Schröder/Graf Vitzthum, Völkerrecht (Berlin New York 1997), pp. 228; Streinz (footnote 8), p. 11, 12.

¹⁷³ On October 10, 1991 Slovenia and Croatia declared themselves independent from Yugoslavia; cf. EA 1991, D 528.

¹⁷⁴ EA 1992, D 120.

¹⁷⁵ Now codified in article 12 EU Treaty.

¹⁷⁶ Cf. EA 1992, D 120.

¹⁷⁷ Bothe/Hailbronner/Klein/Kunig/Schröder/Graf Vitzthum (footnote 175), pp. 228.

Moreover, the EC demanded from the recognition candidates the obedience to the whole substantive minority law from the beginning of the CSCE in 1975 until the adoption of the “Charter of Paris for a new Europe”.¹⁷⁸ As we have seen¹⁷⁹ this is basically the complete substantive body of minority law, which could be reached within the framework of the CSCE.

Basically the obligations until the Charter of Paris do not exceed the standard of rights as it had been codified in the Framework Convention and the draft additional protocol to the ECHR. Had the EC in 1991 already been able to refer to the minority protecting documents of the Council of Europe, it would doubtlessly have done so. In sum we can thus note, that the demands on the new accession candidates rather reflect the opinion with regard to the current standard of European minority law, than do those demands that the EC formulated in 1991 for the diplomatic recognition of the emerging States after the Yugoslavia crisis. Thus, the State practice during the conflict in Yugoslavia backs the result we have found so far: the current standard of the law on the protection of minorities is quite well reflected by the set of rights as it is laid down in the Framework Convention and in the draft additional protocol to the ECHR concerning the rights of national minorities.

VI. Conclusions and draft clauses

After an assessment of the current situation under EC law for the creation of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union and an analysis of the current standard of European and international law on the protection of minorities, we are now ready to dare formulating a draft minority clause that could become part of a Fundamental Rights Charter. In doing this there are of course also some political and tactical considerations that must be taken into account.

1. Political obstacles to the inclusion of a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Without claiming to provide a general analysis of the chances and obstacles for the inclusion of a minority protection clause in a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union, some comments on the difficulties of drafting such a minority protection clause, that could be encountered by a drafting committee, shall be identified at this point. Basically, fundamental objections against introducing a minority protection provision can be expected from three countries: Belgium, Greece and France. These three States have until now neither ratified the European Charter on Regional or Minority languages nor the Framework Convention of the Council of Europe for the Protection of the Rights of National Minorities.

¹⁷⁸ Blumenwitz (footnote 14), pp. 25.

¹⁷⁹ Point III.1.

Few States are structured as complicated as Belgium.¹⁸⁰ The federal system of the Belgian State comprises three regions: the Flamish, the Wallonian and the Brussels region; and three communities: the Flamish (59% of the population), the Wallonian (40% of the population) and the German (1% of the population). They all have their own parliaments, governments and competence. This complicated structure makes it very difficult for Belgium to implement minority rights, which were drafted to fit States with much less complicated minority structures.

Greece¹⁸¹ recognizes within its territory only the “Muslim” (i.e. Turkish) minority in western Thracia. The Treaty of Lausanne of July 24, 1923 obliges Greece to recognize this minority. Many linguistic and religious minorities live within the Greek territory, which cannot be numbered specifically as Greece does not ascertain data on this issue. Apart from the so-called “Muslim” minority Greece denies to have further minorities and constantly takes a fundamentally hostile position when international treaties supposed to create minority rights are being negotiated.

France¹⁸² denies the existence of any minority within its territory. The reason for this is a philosophical one. The official position is that there are no ethnic or linguistic minorities in France, but only French citizens with linguistic peculiarities. Moreover, it conflicts with the French understanding of the universality of human rights to grant special rights to a specific group within its population. This position is usually based on article 2 paragraphs 1 and 2 of the Constitution of the Fifth Republic:

“(1) France is a indivisible, laicistic, democratic and social republic. It ensures the equality of all citizens before the law without regard of differences of origin, race or religion. It respects any faith.
(2) The language of the republic is French.”

France always argues this opinion emphatically even on the international level. Pointing to the cited constitutional provision France has even entered a reservation to article 27 CCPR explaining that article 27 CCPR would not be applicable to France because there were no ethnic or religious minorities in France.¹⁸³ How deeply convinced of this opinion even the highest State bodies are can be told from several decisions of the Constitutional Council (conseil constitutionnel). The conseil constitutionnel declared the Statute of Corsica unconstitutional because it used the term “Corsican people („peuple corse“).¹⁸⁴ The conseil constitutionnel also declared the ratification of the European Charter on Regional or Minority Rights by France unconstitutional.¹⁸⁵ In view of this ¹⁸⁰ Cf. Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 68; Mathiak, Die rechtliche Stellung der Minderheiten in Belgien, in: Frowein/Hofmann/Oeter, Das Minderheitenrecht europäischer Staaten (Berlin u.a. 1993), Teil 1, pp. 1; Newson, Europa und das Königshaus als Kitt für die zerstrittenen Volksgruppen, in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 8.

¹⁸¹ Cf. Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 95; Filos, Die rechtliche Stellung der Minderheiten in Griechenland, in: Frowein/Hofmann/Oeter, Das Minderheitenrecht europäischer Staaten (Berlin u.a. 1994), Teil 2, pp. 61.

¹⁸² Vgl. Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 91; Polakiewicz, Die rechtliche Stellung der Minderheiten in Frankreich, in: Frowein/Hofmann/Oeter, Das Minderheitenrecht europäischer Staaten (Berlin u.a. 1993), Teil 1, pp. 126; Wiegel, „Ein Grammatikbuch ist besser als eine Anleitung zur Sprengkörperherstellung !“, in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 8; Hausmann (footnote 141), in: Das Parlament of August 20, 1999, p. 2 und Rudolf (footnote 87), p. 185, 192.

¹⁸³ Streinz (footnote 8), p. 11, 26.

¹⁸⁴ Hofmann (footnote 8), pp. 92; Streinz (footnote 8), p. 11, 26.

¹⁸⁵ Cf. Wiegel, Die Sprache der Republik, in: FAZ of June 29, 1999; Le Monde of June 25, 1999; FAZ of June 19, 1999.

background it becomes clear that France also takes a usually fundamentally hostile position towards the codification of minority rights.¹⁸⁶

The other Member States of the European Union do not seem to have specific tendencies to oppose the creation of a minority protection clause in a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

2. Summary of the standard of the public international law and the EC law of minority protection

In sum there are four European and international legal documents that should be consulted within the framework of drafting a minority protection provision in a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union: article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration of the UN General Assembly on the Rights of Persons belonging to National, Ethnic, Religious or Linguistic Minorities of 1992, the European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages of 1992 and the Framework Convention of the Council of Europe for the Protection of National Minorities of 1995.

Because of its universal character the substantive content of article 27 of the CCPR is not very compulsory. Basically persons belonging to minorities shall have a privileged right against the majority of the population to commonly cultivate their specific culture, language and religion. This provision has therefore mainly the function of prohibiting any discrimination and keeping assimilative pressure from the minority groups.

The Declaration on the rights of minorities of the UN General Assembly of 1992 is wider and more detailed in setting the standards for the legal protection of minority rights. Articles 2 and 3 provide the standard set by article 27 CCPR more detailed and add the right for persons belonging to minorities to found their own organizations. Article 4 contains tiered State obligations. First, States are permitted to take affirmative action measures in order to implement the objectives laid down in articles 2 and 3. Moreover, persons belonging to minorities shall be given the opportunity to learn their mother tongue or even to be instructed in that language. Furthermore, through increasing the mutual knowledge of the language and culture of the minority population on the one hand and the majority population on the other, an approach of the different parts of the population and an improved integration of minorities shall be achieved. This objective is also being pursued by article 5. Finally, articles 6 and 7 stress the conflict preventive character of the law of minority protection by encouraging cross-border cooperation in that area. All of these rights are sometimes formulated very vaguely and are mostly under a ordre-public reservation. Under no circumstances these rights can justify violations of the sovereign equality of States and the territorial and political integrity of the States.

¹⁸⁶ Rudolf (footnote 87), pp. 185, 192.

The CSCE/OSCE system of protecting minorities which came to a halt in 1991 with the Charter of Paris does not provide further substantive rights compared with the aforementioned documents. Moreover, the merely politically but not legally binding character of the obligations in the CSCE documents inflates their importance even further.

The consultation of the European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages of 1992 also entails major difficulties. The concept of the Charter giving the State parties ample possibilities to pick the rights they would like to grant their minorities, makes it almost impossible to filter out a common standard of protection which could be used for drafting a minority protection provision in a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Article 7, describing the core of protection that any regional or minority language must be provided with, merely encourages the States in a hortatory way to generally promote the use of regional or minority languages and clarifies that taking affirmative action measures must not be considered to be an act of discrimination. Basically, under article 2 paragraph 2 the State parties are only obliged to pick at least 3 paragraphs or subparagraphs of articles 8 (education) and 12 (cultural activities and institutions), which shows at least some focus. In particular the Charter stresses only the significance to learn and cultivate regional or minority languages in order to preserve them.

The main document which should be consulted to help drafting a minority protection provision for a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union is the Framework Convention of the Council of Europe for the Protection of National Minorities of 1995. The Framework Convention's content is largely identical with the content of the 1993 draft additional protocol to the ECHR concerning the protection of minorities. However, the Framework Convention should be primarily consulted as it is actually in force in contrast to the draft protocol. The substantive content of the Framework Convention is based on the subjective "principle of confession" to which some objective criteria are added. Articles 4 and 5 codify the right of persons belonging to minorities to equality before the law and equal protection of the law, the prohibition of discrimination and the prohibition to be assimilated against their will. Affirmative action measures shall not be considered to be an act of discrimination against the majority population. Articles 7 and 8 grant the freedom of peaceful assembly, the freedom to found associations and the religious freedom. Article 9 regulates the use of regional or minority languages with regard to free speech and the freedom of the press. Article 10 sets up a tiered system for the use of regional or minority languages in other areas: in private and in public life persons belonging to minorities are of course free to speak their language, a little more limited is the use of regional or minority languages before administrative and judicial authorities. Article 11 permits the use of one's name and the use of topographic indications in the minority language. Articles 12 through 14 grant rights in the educational domain: persons belonging to minorities shall be able to get information about their own culture and traditions, they shall have the right to establish and manage educational institutions and they shall be given the opportunity to learn their mother tongue or even to be instructed in that language. Article 16 intends to preserve the minority communities in their traditional settling areas and articles 17 and 18 envisage the promotion of cross-border cooperation in the field of minority protection.

The “Copenhagen criteria”, which the middle and eastern European accession candidates have to meet as current legal standard of minority protection, also ensue from the set of rights as it is codified in the Framework Convention.

In the light of these findings we can conclude that the standard of rights as it is codified in the Framework Convention of the Council of Europe for the Protection of National Minorities of 1995 should be used as a reference when drafting a minority protection provision for a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

3. The problem of defining the term “minority“ in the light of the discussion about emergence of “new minorities”

Looking at the emergence of the current standard of the European and international law of minority protection it is astonishing that it had not been possible to agree on a binding and universally accepted definition of the term “minority”. This problem has even been aggravated by a recent debate on the protection of the so-called “new minorities”. An academic opinion that recently emerged¹⁸⁷ wants to extend the set of legal standards that has been developed in order to protect minorities to immigrant groups.¹⁸⁸ Those immigrant groups are called “new minorities”, what would consequently entail the inclusion of these groups in the definition of the term “minority”.

a) The dispute

Since the end of World War I., the high time of the international law of minority protection, both academics and diplomats tried to agree on a definition of the term “minority” that would be universally acceptable.¹⁸⁹ Despite the investment of great efforts this undertaking failed almost completely. More than 80 years have passed since the end of World War I. and it seems doubtful if it will ever be possible to find a minority definition for the area of international law that could gain world-wide acceptance. This is basically the historical background and the reason why the substantive instruments of minority protection under international law do not contain a definition of the term “minority”. Many academic writings in the field of international law¹⁹⁰ follow the definition proposed by the special rapporteur of the Sub-commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities of the UN Human Rights Commission, Francesco Capotorti,¹⁹¹ which at least offers some guidance. Capotorti’s definition refers to article 27 of the ¹⁸⁷ Tomuschat, Protection of Minorities under Article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in: FS für Mosler (Berlin u.a. 1983), pp. 949.

¹⁸⁸ This opinion is supported by: Wolfrum, The emergence of „new minorities“ as a result of migration, in: Brölmann/Lefeber/Zieck, Peoples and minorities in international law (Dordrecht u.a. 1993), pp. 153; Nowak (footnote 55), Art. 27, note 16; Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 44, und Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 270; Brusis/Janning, „Verhinderte Nationen“. Über den Umgang mit ethnischen Minderheiten, in: Internationale Politik, Heft 9/1999, pp. 1 and Schulze-Fielitz, Verfassungsrecht und neue Minderheiten, in: Fleiner-Gerster, Die multikulturelle und multi-ethnische Gesellschaft (Fribourg 1995), pp. 133.

¹⁸⁹ Cf.: Blumenwitz (footnote 47), pp. 37; Steiner/Alston, International Human Rights in Context (Oxford u.a. 1996), pp. 86; Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 5 or Erlar, Das Recht der nationalen Minderheiten (Münster 1931).

¹⁹⁰ Cf. Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 30 and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 56.

¹⁹¹ Capotorti, Study on the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious and linguistic

CCPR, analyzed supra.¹⁹² A minority in the sense of article 27 CCPR shall thus be defined as a:

“(...) group numerically inferior to the rest of the population of a State, in a nondominant position, whose members - being nationals of the State - possess ethnic, religious or linguistic characteristics differing from those of the rest of the population and show, if only implicitly, a sense of solidarity, directed towards preserving their culture, traditions, religion or language”¹⁹³

This definition¹⁹⁴ combines subjective and objective elements. Four of those elements are relatively clear and undisputed. The first criterion is the numerical inferiority. How many individuals are exactly necessary to form a minority remains unclear.¹⁹⁵ For our considerations this is irrelevant, though. The second criterion is the inferior position of the minority against the majority.¹⁹⁶ Thirdly, the minority group must possess specific ethnic, religious or linguistic characteristics. These can be objective (language) or subjective (religion) criteria. The fourth criterion is the existence of a certain sense of solidarity within the minority group. Capotorti claimed this criterion as the identity of a minority would surely be doomed to disappear without the members’ will to preserve their culture and traditions.¹⁹⁷

The mentioned four criteria are rather undisputed in the pertinent literature of international law. However, there are two criteria that are highly disputed. The dispute revolves around the question whether immigrant groups or aliens must generally and legally be considered as minorities, especially in the sense of article 27 of the CCPR. On the one hand, this touches on the question, whether the element of a “proven historical consistency” is an implicit part of the minority definition. In that context, Capotorti’s definition simply mentions a sense of solidarity, directed towards preserving particular characteristics. In close connection to that issue is the other contested question, whether a minority must traditionally settle in a certain territory or whether it must settle within a closed area.

minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev. 1.

¹⁹² Point II.1.

¹⁹³ Capotorti, Study on the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev. 1 para. 568.

¹⁹⁴ An extensive analysis of the definition has been conducted by Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 32 and Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 242.

¹⁹⁵ Niewerth proposes to decide this on a case-by-case basis (footnote 8), p. 34; for Scherer-Leydecker two individuals suffice (footnote 8), p. 266.

¹⁹⁶ The textbook example for a dominant minority is still the white population in South Africa: cf. Ramaga, Relativity of the minority concept, in: HRQ 1992, p. 104.

¹⁹⁷ This happened to the Polish people who stayed in Germany after World War II. as they were assimilated losing their minority characteristics. Cf. Hahn, Die rechtliche Stellung der Minderheiten in Deutschland, in: Frowein/Hofmann/Oeter, Das Minderheitenrecht europäischer Staaten (Berlin u.a. 1993), Teil 1, pp. 63, note 7; Blumenwitz (footnote 47), pp. 113.

A further point of dispute is the question, whether persons belonging to a minority must be citizens of the State from which they claim minority protection. Here, the issue is whether the scope of article 27 of the CCPR also covers immigrants and aliens. These two groups, which are excluded from the scope of article 27 of the CCPR according to the definition of Capotorti, are often referred to as “new minorities”.¹⁹⁸

According to *Wolfrum*¹⁹⁹ the rights granted by article 27 of the CCPR are integral part of the personal identity. In his opinion, article 27 CCPR codifies the minimal protection against forced integration and assimilation and therefore must also cover immigrant groups. Niewerth,²⁰⁰ founding his argumentation on the travaux préparatoires to article 27 CCPR, demands that immigrants must have lived at least for a certain period of time within the territory of a State before they can be eligible for minority protection. He sidesteps the question of how long this has to be exactly calling the issue a political one. This certain period of time is not demanded by the UN Human Rights Committee,²⁰¹ which includes immigrants in the scope of article 27 CCPR as a matter of self-evidence. The UN Human Rights Committee even includes aliens in the scope of article 27 CCPR. *Tomuschat*²⁰², *Wolfrum*²⁰³ and others²⁰⁴ share this view. The main argument here is that otherwise a State could arbitrarily deny certain groups their minority status simply by withholding citizenship from those groups.²⁰⁵ The UN Human Rights Committee representing an extensive minority definition even goes one step beyond the opinion of the aforementioned scholars.²⁰⁶ For the Human Rights Committee²⁰⁷ persons belonging to minorities do not even have to be resident aliens. Not only migrant workers but also mere visitors or tourists in a country shall have the rights of article 27 of the CCPR.²⁰⁸

¹⁹⁸ Vgl. Tomuschat (footnote 190), pp. 949; Wolfrum (footnote 191), pp. 153; Nowak (footnote 55), Art. 27, and Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 41; for a specific view from the angle of German law cf. Schulze-Fielitz (footnote 191), pp. 133 and Murawiek, Minderheitenschutz – für welche Minderheiten?, in: Blumenwitz/Murawiek, Aktuelle rechtliche und praktische Fragen des Volksgruppen- und Minderheitenschutzrechts (Bonn 1994), pp. 39, 52.

¹⁹⁹ Wolfrum (footnote 191), pp. 153, 163.

²⁰⁰ Niewerth (footnote 8), p. 44.

²⁰¹ Cf. UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add. 73, S. 3, Ziff. 13: „The Committee is of the view that article 27 applies to all persons belonging to minorities whether linguistic, religious, ethnic or otherwise including those who are not concentrated or settled in a particular area or a particular region or who are immigrants or who have been given asylum in Germany.“

²⁰² Tomuschat (footnote 190), p. 949, 960.

²⁰³ Wolfrum (footnote 191), p. 153, 161.

²⁰⁴ Nowak (footnote 55), Art. 27, note 16; Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 270; Niewerth (footnote 8), pp. 44.

²⁰⁵ Tomuschat (footnote 190), p. 949, 961.

²⁰⁶ Cf. the draft general comment to article 27: UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.590. Cf. also Scherer-Leydecker (footnote 8), pp. 100.

²⁰⁷ UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1: General comment No. 23 (50) (art. 27) adopted by the Human Rights Committee under Art. 40, paragraph 4, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights at its 1314th meeting on 6 April 1994.

²⁰⁸ „Just as they need not be nationals of citizens, they need not be permanent residents. Thus, migrant workers or even visitors in a State party constituting such minorities are entitled not to be denied the exercise of those rights.“ UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1: General comment No. 23 (50) (art. 27) adopted by the Human Rights Committee under Art. 40, paragraph 4, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights at its 1314th meeting on 6 April 1994.

A different view is represented by *Blumenwitz*²⁰⁹, *Hofmann*²¹⁰ and other scholars²¹¹, who base their argumentation on the fundamental differentiation that exists between citizens and aliens under international law. Citizens depend on the granting of minority protection while foreigners can claim the minimum standard of rights for aliens. According to this opinion aliens and immigrants do not have a minority status.

b) The background

The significance of the definition of the term “minority” can only be understood in the light of the underlying disputes in its context and their consequences. Logically the broader the minority definition is, the smaller the scope of minority rights must be. On the contrary, the narrower the minority definition is, the more intense a concept for the protection of minorities can be.²¹² If one agrees with the extremely broad minority definition of the UN Human Rights Committee, the set of rights for the protection of minorities cannot go way beyond the prohibition of discrimination. In view of this background it seems very plausible when the dominant opinion²¹³ denies that article 27 CCPR entails an obligation to actively promote²¹⁴ minorities.

The reasons that might have caused a reconsideration of the traditional understanding of the definition of the term “minority” are probably globalisation and modern migration movements. Globalisation has become a slogan with which the necessity to fundamentally change traditional principles in many areas seems to be justifiable. People are able and do cross national borders significantly easier than some 50 years ago to live and work in States whose citizenship they do not have, sometimes only for a short period of time, sometimes for good. Modern economy demands international mobility from the workforce in various fields. By introducing the citizenship of the Union²¹⁵ the European Union even created a new kind of citizenship.²¹⁶ All these facts lead to a change in the meaning of the concept of citizenship. To be sure, this does not mean that citizenship has become meaningless nowadays, it just means that the legal concept of citizenship experiences a shift of the center of gravity among its various implications. A modern law of minority protection cannot disregard this shift. Moreover, the migration movements at the beginning of the 21st century challenge both international law and the national legal systems in an unparalleled way.²¹⁷ Thus, a ²⁰⁹ Blumenwitz (footnote 47), p. 27.

²¹⁰ Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 7.

²¹¹ Modeen (footnote 106), p. 108; Sohn, The right of minorities, in: Henkin, The International Bill of Rights - The Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (New York 1981), p. 271, 279; Pircher, Der vertragliche Schutz ethnischer, sprachlicher und religiöser Minderheiten im Völkerrecht (Bern 1979), p. 25.

²¹² Niewerth (footnote 8), p. 48; this argumentation is also used by Murswiek to reject an extension of the law of minority protection to the foreigners and naturalized immigrants living in Germany, cf. Murswiek (footnote 201), pp. 39, 52.

²¹³ Cf. Hofmann (footnote 54), pp. 9 and Nowak (footnote 55), Art. 27, note 46. A different view is supported by the UN Human Rights Committee: cf. the general comment to article 27 IPBPR, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1.

²¹⁴ Often referred to as „affirmative action policy“.

²¹⁵ Articles 17 through 22 of the EC Treaty with the Amsterdam amendments.

²¹⁶ Cf. Zimmermann, Europäisches Gemeinschaftsrecht und Staatsangehörigkeitsrecht der Mitgliedstaaten unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Probleme mehrfacher Staatsangehörigkeit, in: EuR 1995, pp. 54.

²¹⁷ Cf. Niessen, Migrant workers, in: Eide/Krause/Rosas, Economic, Cultural and Social Rights (Dordrecht u.a.

modern law of minority protection cannot tackle these challenges by ignoring them.

Whether these new challenges in the field of minority protection can be dealt with by simply including the immigrants in the minority definition seems to be more than doubtful.

It cannot be denied that the traditional, the “classic” minorities are in a situation which differs enormously from the situation the immigrants, may they have the citizenship of their resident country or not, find themselves in.²¹⁸ Whereas with respect to the “classic” minorities preserving and protecting their specific cultural identity must be the primary goal, it is the full integration into society which should have priority with regard to immigrant groups. “Classic” minorities are normally integrated into society in quite a satisfactory way. Their worry is the permanent threat of losing their particular minority identity that results from a constant assimilative pressure from the majority culture. Immigrant groups worry primarily about acts of discrimination that occasionally pose obstacles to their entry in the working and social world of their resident country. For them learning or perfecting the language of the resident country and understanding the social behavior 1994), p. 323; Wolfrum, International law on migration reconsidered under the challenge of new population movements, in: GYIL 1995, pp. 191, Wolfrum (footnote 191), pp. 153; Sieveling, Migration und Rechtsstatus von Zuwanderern – bundesrepublikanische und europäische Aspekte, in: RuP 1992, pp. 135; Alexy, Minderheitenschutz und Grundgesetz – Zur Rechtsstellung von Zuwanderern, in: Barwig/Brinkmann/Huber/Lörcher/Schumacher, Vom Ausländer zum Bürger – FS für F. Franz und G. Müller (Baden-Baden 1994), pp. 181.

²¹⁸ Cf. Oeter, Überlegungen zum Minderheitenbegriff und zur Frage der „neuen Minderheiten“, in: Matscher (Hrsg.), Wiener Internationale Begegnung zu aktuellen Fragen nationaler Minderheiten (Kehl am Rhein 1997), pp. 229, 245. This is an important point often overlooked by many commentators.

and the functioning of the society of the majority population takes priority. Therefore, it is very clear that a protection concept that had initially been designed for minorities in the classical sense of the word simply does not suit the needs of those “new minorities”. In no way whatsoever does this mean that these “new minorities” are not worthy of being protected. It just cautions that a simple extension of the minority protection concept, a concept that had been tailored to suit the “classic” minorities, to the “new minorities” does not solve a single problem for those “new minorities”. Rather the contrary. The protection of “classic” and “new” minorities asks for differentiated approaches using different concepts.

c) Eide’s suggestion

The suggestion of UN special rapporteur *Asbjørn Eide*²¹⁹ might be a solution to the aforementioned dilemma. In contrast to the ignorant approach of the UN Human Rights Committee Eide sees the aforementioned dilemma and understands the underlying problems. He sees the solution to the problem in working out a protection concept for every minority group and particularly tailored to suit the individual needs of every group. The consequence would be a different protection standard for each different minority group.²²⁰ On the basis of a very broad general minority definition²²¹ including a guaranteed minimal protection standard, Eide wants to give the States the power to grant different sets of rights to different minority groups.

The disadvantage of Eide’s suggestion is that although a “framework definition” of the term “minority” would have been found, this only shifts the problem to a lower level, the different minority groups. Shifting the problem to a lower level might even aggravate the disputed connected to it. In place of a discussion about the minority definition we would provoke a discussion about the different protection standards for the different minority “classes”. One has to be very optimistic to expect better results from the latter discussion.

d) Comment

Nevertheless, it seems to me that Asbjørn Eide’s approach is the right one, at least considering his basic assumptions. The key to resolve the mentioned dilemma indeed seems to be the differentiation of the different minority categories.

Two observations from analyzing the standards of substantive European and international minority laws shall at this point be briefly recalled: on a political level, the suggestion to simply extend the standard of minority protection that has been reached so far to immigrant groups, seems to be totally unacceptable. To demand this seems senseless and completely futile. Suffice it to point to the explicit exclusion of the languages of immigrants from the scope of the European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages.²²² Secondly, looking at the various drafts on the law of minority protection worked out by different committees the minority definition proposed by Capotorti still ²¹⁹ Eide, Protection of Minorities – Possible ways and means of facilitating the peaceful and constructive solution of problems involving minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1993/34.

²²⁰ Eide (footnote 222), para. 27 and 28.

²²¹ Eide (footnote 222), para. 29: „a minority is any group of persons resident within a sovereign State which constitutes less than half the population of the national society and whose members share common characteristics of an ethnic, religious or linguistic nature that distinguish them from the rest of the population.“

²²² Point IV.3.

seems to offer much guidance with regard to defining the term “minority” in its classical sense.

Therefore, should during the negotiations of a minority protection clause for a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union the opportunity to codify a minority definition come up, there are two things that should be considered. First of all, a clear distinction between “classic” minorities and immigrant groups, which by the way should not even be referred to as “new minorities”, should be drawn. In other words: minority protection for (classic) minorities, integration aid for naturalized immigrants, law concerning aliens for foreigners. Secondly, the basis for a definition of minorities should be Capotorti’s definition. This definition, however, would have to be modified in at least one respect. Because the European Union is based on the principle of the prohibition of any discrimination on grounds of nationality, the citizenship requirement in Capotorti’s definition would have to be replaced with the criterion “citizenship of the Union” (articles 17 et seq. EC Treaty). In order to prevent migration movements within the Union caused by a new law on the protection of minorities, a new criterion which demands that minorities can only claim protection if they are “long established settling in traditional areas” could be introduced.²²³

The formulation of a minority definition could therefore look like this:

Article x

A minority in the sense of this charter is a group numerically inferior to the rest of the population of a State, in a nondominant position, whose members – being citizens of the Union traditionally settling in their well-defined and long-established territories – possess ethnic, religious or linguistic characteristics differing from those of the rest of the population and show, if only implicitly, a sense of solidarity, directed towards preserving their culture, traditions, religion or language.

Nevertheless, in view of the frustrating experiences of the past with regard to efforts of defining the term “minority” in international law, it seems rather improbable that a breakthrough in that respect will happen at this time. However, in the context of the codification of a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union this inability will not be detrimental if only the ECJ will be given jurisdiction over the Charter to be drafted. The power of the ECJ to control the implementation of the Charter would have to be ensured at any price.²²⁴ This is another reason why the inclusion of the Charter in the Treaties would be a great advantage. In the framework of its jurisprudence the ECJ will, sooner or later, have to define the legal term “minority”. The ECJ will have to define this term looking at the substantive provisions on minority protection and if it finds there a clear distinction between “classic” minorities and immigrants, naturalized or not, it will have sufficient guidance on how to define the term in a satisfactory way.

²²³ The feature „separate or distinct groups, well-defined and long established on the territory of a state“ seemed to be acceptable at a very early stage when the additional protocol to the ECHR was drafted. Cf. supra point IV.1. Cf. also article 1 paragraph a) of the European Charter on Regional or Minority Languages: „(...) traditionally used within a given territory of a State by nationals of that State (...).“ Cf. supra point IV.3. Cf. also article 1 paragraph a) of the draft additional protocol to the ECHR. supra point IV.4.

²²⁴ This is not self-evident as can be seen from article 46 EU Treaty.

4. Draft of a minority protection clause in the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union

As already stated, the Framework Convention of the Council of Europe for the Protection of National Minorities of 1995 should be the guideline for the substantive content for a minority protection provision in a Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Of course this provision cannot be as detailed as the content of the Framework Convention, because the Charter to be drafted is thought to have some “constitutional character”. Thus, article 27 CCPR can serve as another guideline. Finally, for the reasons contemplated supra,²²⁵ a clear distinction between minorities and immigrant groups should in any event be included. Ideally, this could be done in two separate articles, one on the protection of “classic” minorities and one on the protection of immigrant groups.

The formulation could therefore look like this:

Article y

(1) Persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities have the right to equality before the law and equal protection of the law. Any discrimination based on belonging to a minority shall be prohibited. Every person belonging to a minority shall have the right freely to choose to be treated or not to be treated as such and no disadvantage of any kind shall result from this choice. Affirmative action policies intending to promote equality in fact between persons belonging to minorities and persons belonging to the majority in all areas of economical, social, political, and cultural life, shall not be considered to be an act of discrimination. Within the framework of their general integration policy, member States shall refrain from policies and practices aimed at assimilation of minorities against their will. This applies especially to measures of any kind in the traditional settling territories of those minorities.

(2) Persons belonging to such minorities shall have the freedom to peaceful assembly and shall have the right to found associations and organizations, including political parties.

(3) Persons belonging to such minorities shall have the right to enjoy their own culture and traditions, to profess and practice their own religion or to use their own language across frontiers and also in community with other members of their group. This shall include the right to use their names in the minority language and the right to official recognition of them.

(4) In their traditional settling areas persons belonging to such minorities shall have the right to use their minority languages in relation with administrative and judicial authorities, which shall include the right to receive answers from these authorities in their minority languages. In case of an arrest a person belonging to a minority shall have the right to be informed in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of any accusation against him, and to defend himself in this language, if necessary with the free assistance of an interpreter.

²²⁵ Cf. supra point VI.3.b).

(5) Persons belonging to such minorities shall have the right to learn their minority language. In their traditional settling areas they shall have the right to be instructed in their languages. These rights shall be implemented by the member States within the frameworks of their educational systems or by permitting the right to set up and manage private educational establishments. Member States contribute financially to the latter mentioned establishments an proportional amount that equals their proportional financial engagement in public educational establishments. Moreover, the member States shall take measures in fields of education and research to foster knowledge of the culture, history, language and religion of such minorities and of the majority.

Article y

The member States respect the identity and the interests of immigrant groups. Persons belonging to such groups have the right to equality before the law and equal protection of the law. Any discrimination based on belonging to such a group shall be prohibited.

This draft sums up the European standard of the law of minority protection in “clear” formulations. In a way this draft lays down the currently maximum achievable legal protection for the European minorities, without suggesting unrealistic rights. In negotiating a minority protection provision the standard of rights should be firmly defended. Compromises may perhaps be made with regard to the way these rights are formulated. The jurisdiction of the ECJ over the Charter on Fundamental Rights of the European Union, however, has to be established at any cost.

Editors' note to CHARTE 4302/00,
Contribution avec amendments sur les propositions du Présidium soumises par Lobby Européen des Femmes (LEF) (datée le 09/05/00):

The Council has no record of the English version of this document.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 25 mai 2000CHARTE 4302/00*CONTRIB 174*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après une contribution avec amendements sur les propositions du Présidium relatives aux droits civils et politiques, droits sociaux et droits des citoyens, soumises par Lobby Européen des Femmes (LEF). ^{1 2}

¹ Ce texte existe en langues française et anglaise.

² EWL: 18 rue Hydraulique, B-1210 Brussels. Tel. +32-2- 217 90 20. Fax: +32 2 219 84 51.
E-mail: ewl@womenlobby.org. Website: <http://www.womenlobby.org>

LOBBY EUROPEEN DES FEMMES EUROPEAN WOMEN'S LOBBY

09/05/00

CONTRIBUTION DU LEF A LA REDACTION D'UNE CHARTE EUROPEENNE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX

Suite à ses contributions précédentes (CONTRIB 27 et 120), le LEF tient à féliciter la Convention du travail jusqu'à présent accomplit dans l'élaboration d'une Charte des Droits Fondamentaux ainsi que de l'inclusion d'un paragraphe consacré à la promotion de l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes.

Toutefois, le LEF manifeste son accord d'ensemble envers les critiques et les amendements avancés par l'Association des Femmes d'Europe méridionale (AFEM, CONTRIB 42 et 105) et portant sur le projet de Charte déposé par la Convention : nous souhaitons rappeler que la discrimination fondée sur le sexe ne devrait pas figurer dans une clause générale de non-discrimination. En effet, une disposition de ce type n'appuie en rien l'éradication de la discrimination directe et indirecte que subissent les femmes, ni la mise en place de l'égalité des sexes.

Par conséquent, le LEF demande l'inclusion dans la Charte d'une disposition ayant un effet direct et établissant le principe inconditionnel et fondamental de l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes, interdisant toute forme de discrimination fondée sur le sexe dans tous les domaines, et imposant des mesures positives en attendant l'instauration d'une égalité réelle. Cette disposition devrait figurer parmi les premiers articles de la Charte, dans le chapitre consacré aux droits civils et politiques, aux côtés de la déclaration du principe fondamental d'égalité et de l'interdiction de toute discrimination.

Partant, le LEF souhaite amender les propositions du Présidium de la manière suivante.

DROITS CIVILS ET POLITIQUES (CONVENT 13)

Article 1. Principe général d'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes dans tous les domaines

1. L'Union veillera au respect du principe inconditionnel et fondamental de l'égalité des sexes dans tous les domaines de sa juridiction.
2. L'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes doit être garantie et toute discrimination – directe ou indirecte – fondée sur le sexe doit être interdite. En outre, une perspective de genre doit être adoptée dans la lutte contre toutes les formes de discrimination afin d'éradiquer la discrimination multiple à laquelle beaucoup de femmes sont confrontées.

3. Des mesures positives doivent être mises en œuvre pour améliorer la situation des femmes en attendant l'instauration d'une égalité substantielle entre les femmes et les hommes.

COMMENTAIRES : Aux côtés de la proclamation du principe fondamental de l'égalité devant la loi et de l'interdiction générale de toute forme de discrimination (clause dont la liste des motifs ne devrait pas mentionner le "sexe"), une disposition devrait être exclusivement consacrée à la déclaration du principe inconditionnel et fondamental de l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes dans tous les domaines de la juridiction de l'Union, et ne pas se limiter à la fixation des conditions salariales et de travail. Ce principe pourra dans un deuxième temps être d'application dans les domaines social et économique.

Le principe général de l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes fait partie des droits fondamentaux de la personne humaine reconnus par la CJCE. Par conséquent, la Charte est tenue de transposer la jurisprudence de la Cour et rappellera ainsi les remarques énoncées par l'UE et les organes internationaux, à savoir qu'une clause générale de non-discrimination ne suffit pas pour établir une véritable égalité entre les femmes et les hommes. En outre, ce type de disposition constituerait une régression au niveau de l'égalité des sexes, dans la mesure où la discrimination fondée sur le sexe revêt une nature particulière, d'ordre structurel, qui affecte principalement les femmes, soit la moitié de la population, et non une minorité. Celles-ci sont exposées à différentes formes de discrimination que ce soit sur la base de la race, de la couleur ou l'origine ethnique ou sociale, du handicap, de l'orientation sexuelle, de l'âge, de la religion ou les convictions, ceci en addition de la discrimination de base fondée sur le sexe. Une clause séparée exclusivement consacrée à la discrimination fondée sur le sexe permettrait de mieux lutter contre la discrimination multiple et de protéger le droit des femmes à jouir effectivement de tous leurs droits et libertés fondamentaux, d'être des citoyennes à part entière, dans tous les domaines.

En dépit de l'existence de mesures internationales, européennes et nationales, qui encouragent l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes, on ne peut pas dire que ce principe soit devenu une réalité. C'est pourquoi il est nécessaire d'imposer des mesures positives à titre transitoire, en attendant que les mentalités aient changé et que les préjugés soient éliminés, afin qu'une égalité réelle et effective soit en vigueur dans tous les domaines de la juridiction de l'Union. L'article 4 §1 de la Convention sur l'élimination de toutes les formes de discrimination envers les femmes (CEDEF) ainsi que l'article 141 §1 du traité de l'Union, renvoient à la nécessité pour les États membres d'adopter des actions positives ; de même, la déclaration n°28 du traité d'Amsterdam précise que ces mesures devront avant tout viser à améliorer la situation des femmes. La Charte devrait donc énoncer des mesures positives, afin d'atteindre l'objectif d'une égalité réelle et complète.

Article 3. Droit au respect de l'intégrité

Le droit au respect et à la protection de l'intégrité physiques et mentales implique l'interdiction absolue :

- des pratiques eugéniques
- du clonage d'êtres humains
- de la traite et du commerce du corps humain, ou de ses parties, que la personne concernée ait ou non donné son accord.

COMMENTAIRE : La protection et le respect de l'intégrité ne peuvent se limiter au domaine de la médecine et de la biologie : il convient d'en élargir le champ d'action, pour y inclure l'interdiction de la traite des personnes sous toutes ses formes, et en particulier des femmes et des enfants dans un but de travail forcé ou d'exploitation sexuelle. Cette disposition reflète l'importance des traités et des conventions internationales ratifiés par la plupart des États membres, comme la "Convention pour la suppression de la traite des personnes et de l'exploitation ou de la prostitution d'autrui" (1949), qui condamne la prostitution et la traite sous toutes leurs formes en tant que violations des principes fondamentaux des droits humains. Il est indispensable de préciser que le consentement de la personne concernée est sans incidence dans la mesure où, l'expérience l'a prouvé, il est manifestement impossible de déterminer si ce consentement a été librement accordé. En outre, il est désormais indubitable que la plupart des femmes impliquées dans la prostitution n'agissent pas de leur plein gré : à ce propos, il serait opportun de reconnaître que "la liberté de choix" est un facteur relatif, situé au carrefour des options économiques, sociales, culturelles et politiques ouvertes aux femmes au sein d'une société donnée. Comme le stipule la motion adoptée par le LEF en 1988, l'inégalité des relations de pouvoir entre les femmes et les hommes entame gravement la liberté de choix.

Article 4. Interdiction de la torture et des traitements inhumains

Nul ne peut être soumis à la torture, ni à des peines et traitements inhumains et dégradants. Ce principe renvoie à toute forme de violence physique ou morale, notamment toute violence liée au sexe comme les mutilations génitales, le viol, la violence domestique, le mariage forcé, les meurtres pour une question d'honneur, y compris quand ces actes sont perpétrés au sein de la famille.

COMMENTAIRE : Une disposition condamnant toutes les formes de violence devrait instaurer l'interdiction absolue de la torture et des traitements inhumains ; elle devrait préciser explicitement que la violence ou la persécution fondées sur le sexe constituent une forme de torture. On sait pertinemment que les mutilations sexuelles, dont les femmes et les fillettes sont les premières victimes, sont encore d'actualité sur le territoire européen, au même titre que toutes les autres formes de violence liées au sexe. Non exhaustive, la liste énumérerait néanmoins les formes de violence les plus répandues subies principalement par les femmes.

Article 17: Droit d'asile et expulsion

1. Les personnes qui ne sont pas ressortissantes de l'Union ont droit d'asile dans l'Union européenne (conformément aux règles de la Convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951 et au protocole du 31 janvier 1967 relatifs au statut des réfugiés) (dans les conditions prévues par les traités).
2. L'asile doit être accordé à toute femme ou tout homme dont l'intégrité physique, psychologique ou génétique est menacée, ou qui subit des traitements inhumains ou dégradants. La persécution fondée sur le sexe, comme les mutilations sexuelles ou les autres actes de violence liées au sexe, notamment le viol, le mariage forcé, la violence domestique, les meurtres pour une question d'honneur, constitueront des motifs suffisants pour l'examen attentif d'une demande d'asile. Ceci est applicable lorsque les autorités du pays d'origine sont responsables de la persécution, qu'elles les tolèrent ou soient incapables de s'y opposer, ainsi que lorsque la violence sexuelle se produit en temps de guerre.

3. Les conditions de la mise en pratique des droits accordés aux migrants seront formulées de manière à ce que les femmes en bénéficient au même titre que les hommes. Les besoins spécifiques des femmes demandeuses d'asile et réfugiées devront être pris en compte, et même bénéficier d'une attention particulière.
4. Les expulsions collectives d'étrangers seront interdites.

COMMENTAIRES: La particularité des actes de persécution spécifiques au sexe dont souffrent principalement les femmes réfugiées et demandeuses d'asile doit figurer dans la Charte, et être considéré comme une violation des droits humains fondamentaux des femmes, suffisante pour envisager l'octroi de l'asile. Une liste explicite mais non exhaustive des persécutions sexuelles doit figurer dans la Charte. Les traitements qui menacent ou entament l'intégrité physique et psychologique des femmes doivent être considérés comme une forme de torture, qu'ils soient imposés par la loi, commis par des agents de l'état ou liés à des normes sociales ou religieuses.

Il faut également protéger les femmes contre toute discrimination dans la mise en œuvre pratique des droits et des garanties conférés aux migrants, notamment en ce qui concerne les conditions de logement et de détention, ainsi que l'accès aux services juridiques et autres.

Enfin, les besoins propres aux femmes demandeuses d'asile devraient être pris en compte : leur sécurité physique et le respect de leur vie privée doivent être garantis dans les centres d'accueil et de détention. À cet effet, des logements séparés de ceux des hommes doivent être disponibles. En outre, elles doivent avoir accès à des services spéciaux en fonction de leurs besoins sanitaires, et notamment à des conseils gynécologiques et obstétricaux. On évitera la détention des femmes en fin de grossesse et des mères allaitantes.

DROITS SOCIAUX (CONVENT 18)

Article I. Un égalité substantielle entre les femmes et les hommes

1. Il est nécessaire de garantir une égalité réelle et substantielle entre les femmes et les hommes, et d'éliminer tout type d'inégalités en matière d'emploi et de protection sociale. Ceci implique principalement le même droit à un travail librement choisi ou accepté, le droit à des conditions de travail identiques, le droit à une rémunération juste et équitable pour un travail de valeur égale, et un même droit à la sécurité sociale et à l'assistance pour les personnes concernées et leur famille.
2. Toute discrimination directe ou indirecte fondée sur le sexe est interdite dans les domaines cités au paragraphe 1.
3. Des mesures positives seront mises en œuvre pour améliorer la situation des femmes jusqu'à ce qu'une égalité réelle et effective entre les femmes et les hommes soit instaurée dans le secteur de l'emploi.

COMMENTAIRES : voir les commentaires relatifs au principe général d'égalité.

Article XII. Droit au congé parental

Les travailleuses et les travailleurs ont droit à un congé parental rémunéré d'au moins trois mois suivant la naissance ou l'adoption d'un enfant.

COMMENTAIRES : Pour améliorer le niveau d'indépendance des femmes en favorisant leur présence sur le marché de l'emploi, et parvenir à une égalité des sexes effective, il est nécessaire de partager équitablement les responsabilités familiales et le congé parental entre les femmes et les hommes. C'est pourquoi les dispositions en matière de congé parental doivent explicitement s'adresser aux hommes comme aux femmes. Une protection légale ainsi qu'un congé parental plus long et rémunéré devra être instauré, favorisant ainsi un partage équitable de la garde des enfants et des responsabilités familiales entre les femmes et les hommes.

Article XIII. Protection sociale

1. Toute personne a droit, selon les modalités propres à chaque Etat, à une protection sociale comportant, notamment, des prestations sociales d'un niveau suffisant.
2. Les femmes et les hommes doivent pouvoir accéder de manière égale à une sécurité sociale individuelle.
3. Des services de garde d'enfants abordables et de qualité doivent être accessibles à toute personne qui en a besoin.

COMMENTAIRES : Les États européens qui se sont engagés à assumer leur responsabilité sociale à l'égard de tous les citoyens doivent considérer la protection sociale comme un investissement social. Or, bien des femmes ne bénéficient toujours pas d'une protection individuelle et dépendent de leur famille et/ou de leur conjoint. Il faut donc enrayer cette discrimination structurelle et garantir aux femmes un accès à la sécurité sociale individuelle. Ce principe passe par l'insertion dans la Charte d'une clause concernant la protection sociale, qui entérinera l'individualisation des droits en matière de sécurité sociale et assurera l'accès à une garde d'enfants de qualité.

Article XIV. Droit d'accès aux soins de santé

1. Toute personne doit pouvoir bénéficier de mesures de prévention sanitaire et, en cas de maladie, accéder aux soins de santé.
2. Dans le cadre du droit à des soins de santé appropriés, les besoins spécifiques des femmes devront être pris en considération et satisfaits.

COMMENTAIRES : Pour que les besoins sanitaires de la totalité de la population soient satisfaits, les demandes spécifiques des femmes en la matière doivent également être pris en compte par la mise en place de services particuliers. Notamment, chaque femme doit pouvoir s'adresser à des services de gynécologie et d'obstétrique, et bénéficier de tous les services médicaux de prévention et de dépistage des maux proprement féminins.

DROITS DES CITOYENS (CONVENT 17)

Article A. Démocratie paritaire

1. Tout citoyen de l'Union bénéficie des droits qui lui sont conférés par l'Union et la législation nationale en matière d'égalité d'accès à la candidature aux élections et d'exercice des fonctions correspondantes.
2. Une démocratie paritaire, c'est-à-dire une représentation égale des femmes et des hommes au sein de tous les organes et de toutes les institutions de l'Union, sera établie en tant que principe fondamental de l'intégration européenne comme des institutions de l'Union.
3. Des mesures positives seront mises en œuvre afin d'encourager un accès égal des femmes et des hommes aux organes gouvernementaux et communautaires, ainsi qu'au sein des partis politiques.

COMMENTAIRES: La notion de démocratie telle que figurant dans la Charte doit être entendue comme démocratie paritaire. Néanmoins, une référence explicite à l'objectif de démocratie paritaire devrait être inscrite dans la Charte pour endiguer le problème de la sous-représentation des femmes. La question de l'implication des femmes dans la prise de décisions est à considérer dans tous les secteurs de notre société, alors que nombre des mesures adoptées pour favoriser leur participation ne concerne que la prise de décision politique. Des mesures positives s'imposent pour assurer l'instauration d'une participation égale ou d'une parité effective dans tous les domaines.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 30 May 2000
(version multilingual EN/DE)*CHARTE 4311/00*CONTRIB 178*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter different contributions from the Kolping Society of Europe. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in German, French and English. (The text of the letter in German only).

Rat der Europäischen Union
Konvent zur Erarbeitung der Charta der Grundrechte
Herrn Prof. Roman Herzog
Rue de la Loi, 175

B-1048 Bruxelles

12.05.2000 GS/So

Sehr geehrter Herr Prof. Herzog, das Kolpingwerk Europa verfolgt seit Jahren intensiv alle Schritte zur europäischen Integration und hat immer wieder das Anliegen betont, dass diese Idee der europäischen Einigung vor allem auch von den Bürgern in Europa mitgetragen werden muss.

Die Kontinentalversammlung des Kolpingwerkes Europa hat in einer Stellungnahme vom 12.09.1999 darauf verwiesen, dass das Kolpingwerk in einer Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union eine gute Möglichkeit sieht für die Bürger zu erkennen, dass die Europäische Union nicht nur eine Wirtschaftsgemeinschaft ist, sondern längst zu einer Rechtsgemeinschaft wurde, die im Kern auch eine Friedensgemeinschaft ist.

Das Kolpingwerk Europa verfolgt daher mit großem Interesse die Diskussion um die Formulierung dieser Charta der Grundrechte und möchte zum aktuellen Diskussionsstand die beigefügte Stellungnahme abgeben. Gleichzeitig fügen wir diesem Schreiben auch noch einmal die mehr grundsätzliche Erklärung der Kontinentalversammlung des Kolpingwerkes Europa vom 12.09.1999 bei und würden uns freuen, wenn diese Stellungnahmen in den Diskussionsprozess mit eingebracht werden könnten.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Dr. Michael Hanke
Vorsitzender des Kolpingwerkes Europa

Hubert Tintelott
Europasekretär

Anlagen

Contribution to discussion from the Kolping Society of Europe on the work of the Convent on the preparation of a Basic Rights Charter of the European Union

The Kolping Society of Europe explicitly welcomed the decision of the European Council in June 1999 to prepare a Basic Rights Charter of the European Union and in an initial statement dated 12.09.1999 presented a few basic considerations for the drawing-up of this Charter. In this statement the Kolping Society undertook to actively accompany the process of discussion surrounding the formulation of the Basic Rights Charter and to incorporate its own positions in this discussion process.

It is with regret that the Kolping Society of Europe views the fact that the work of the Convent on the preparation of a Basic Rights Charter of the European Union has met with only very limited resonance from the public. This in its view is a danger to the unique opportunity for citizens of the European Union to become conscious of their basic values and recognise the fact that the EU is more than an economic community and that the future dynamism of the integration process also depends on achieving a consensus on common basic values.

A discussion conducted with inadequate publicity on a Basic Rights Charter with a view to reaching a decision during the EU summit meeting in Nice on 7 and 8 December 2000 also increases the risk of this Basic Rights Charter of the EU merely being decided in Nice as a ceremonial declaration of intent and thus of extensively restricting its legal effect.

In view of these shortcomings the Kolping Society of Europe calls upon the members of the Convent and also upon the political decision-makers at a European and national level to conduct a public and also controversial discussion on the contents of the Basic Rights Charter of the EU and to strive for an adoption of this Charter as part of the European Treaties. A Basic Rights Charter of the EU as a ceremonial declaration of intent would miss the aspired-to objective of being able to clearly recognise basic rights and thus dash hopes of strengthening the citizens' acceptance of the EU through clearly recognisable basic rights. The Kolping Society of Europe will do everything in its power to inform the public about the work of the Convent.

In addition to these more general considerations the Kolping Society of Europe would like to comment on the process of discussion up to now and on two articles of the current draft dated 8 March 2000.

1. Family life

The current draft of Article 13 (3) reads as follows: "The legal, economic and social protection of the family will be guaranteed."

This formulation overlooks the central significance of the family as a basic cell of society as described time and again in other catalogues of human rights. Throughout the history of man the family has always formed the core of society and has assumed irreplaceable responsibilities in terms of regenerating society and socialising its children. Without wishing to overlook the change in the ways of life in our society such as marriage-like communities and the growing number of single parents, the fact should not be overlooked and neglected that still to the current day it is the family which still assumes the major share in regeneration of society and socialisation of its children.

For this reason the EU must be interested in strengthening families and ensuring the legal, economic and social protection of the family. The Kolping Society of Europe therefore calls upon the Convent to revert to the original version of Article 13 (3) which reads “The Union ensures the legal, economic and social protection of the family.”

2. Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

The Kolping Society of Europe views the current formulation of Article 14: “Every individual has the right to freedom of ideas, conscience and religion” to represent a reduction in the regulations as presented, for example, in Article 8 of the European Catalogue of Human Rights. The basic rights of the European Catalogue of Human Rights have already become a common “Bill of Rights” through the jurisdiction of the organs of the convention. In view of the level of basic rights protection already achieved, a legal uncertainty should be avoided through new or reduced formulations. The Kolping Society of Europe believes it to be absolutely necessary that the freedom of the individual to change his religion or Weltanschauung, as well as the freedom to practise his religion or Weltanschauung alone or in community with others publicly or privately is explicitly laid down in the EU Basic Rights Charter.

The Kolping Society of Europe will be also be attentively following the further course of discussion and reserves the right to comment on the economic and social rights which have not yet been formulated at a later date.

On behalf of the Kolping Society of Europe

signed

Anton Salesny
Europe Commissioner
International Kolping Society

Dr. Michael Hanke
Chairman
Kolping Society of Europe

Hubert Tintelott
International Secretary
International Kolping Society

Kolping Society Demands Further Discussion of a European Constitution and the Adoption of a Charta of Basic Rights

The depressingly low voter turnout for the elections to the European Parliament showed that the idea and goal of European unification is gradually fading in the minds of the people, and opinion polls in the EU member states have shown that they are increasingly sceptical about European unification and further steps in this direction. This mood among the people of the European Union underestimates the achieved level of European unity and the benefits of the alliance. The European Union has long become a community of law, which is fundamentally also a community of peace. For example, 80% of all economic legislation in the EU member states is effected by EU institutions.

But this focus on economic issues and the discussion of interests and balancing of interests ignores the fact that a society is constituted essentially by common values. Europe must therefore discuss the concepts it has of itself and according to which it wants to live tomorrow, its image of humankind, its norms and the ethical conditions of freedom. This discussion will show that, despite all national differences, the European people have enough in common in their way of thinking, their cultural expression, their concept of society and their attitude to life to agree on a common set of fundamental values.

The European Union has always engaged in such a debate, right from the beginning of its integration process, and it has always been tied up in the debate on a European constitution. A first draft constitution was already completed in 1953. But, unfortunately, this debate on a constitution was repeatedly abandoned, although many elements of a constitution were incorporated in the 5 treaties of the European Union. The signing of the Treaties of Rome launched a slow process of forming a constitution, which has the express support of the Kolping Society. This process needs new stimulation at present, which it could obtain through a Charta of Basic Rights.

The Treaty of Amsterdam reinforces the European Union's support for human rights and fundamental freedoms and expressly confirms the Union's commitment to social basic rights. And basic and human rights are largely enforced in the constitutional structures of the individual EU states. But the European Union as a centre of Europe's structural architecture needs an independent Charta of Basic Rights to unite the former constitution-like documents and permanently strengthen basic rights and ensure their consistent integration in current activities and political decisions of the European Union.

The Kolping Society of Europe supports all efforts to formulate and adopt a Charta of Basic Rights, because

- This debate can contribute to making the people aware of their basic rights and enabling them to exercise these rights.
- A separate Charta of Basic Rights would overcome the current European system of relegation, so that basic rights would more visibly become a basis of political decisions.

The Kolping Society of Europe is aware of the risks of formulating a genuine community-focused catalogue of basic rights and therefore demands that

- The Formulation of a Charta of Basic Rights be based on the already formulated European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, which has become a joint European bill of rights through the jurisdiction of the parties to the convention.
- The Charta should focus on formulating basic rights that are justiciable.
- The debate on basic rights be protected against an excessive focus on current but temporary social trends, as only such basic rights should be included in a catalogue of basic rights that are supported by a broad majority of the people.
- A balance be found between legal protection of the individual and a law-based system of government.
- Democracy should remain viable and not be paralysed by exaggerated participation rights.

The Kolping Society of Europe undertakes

To raise awareness of the necessity to adopt a Charta of Basic Rights in its chapters.

To inform members of the contents of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

To contribute to the debate on the discussion and adoption of a Charta of Basic Rights and to voice its position based on a Christian image of humankind.

Discussed and adopted by the Continental Assembly of the Kolping Society of Europe on 12 September 1999 in Cologne/Immenreuth.

For the International Kolping Society:

signed

Anton Salesny

Europe Commissioner

International Kolping Society

Dr. Michael Hanke

Chairman

Kolping Society of Europe

Hubert Tintelott

Secretary General

International Kolping Society

ENTWURF DER CHARTA DER GRUNDRECHTE DER EUROPÄISCHEN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brüssel, den 25. Mai 2000CHARTE 4312/00*CONTRIB 179*ÜBERMITTLUNGSVERMERK

Betr.: Entwurf der Charta der Grundrechte der Europäischen Union

Finden Sie bitte nachstehend eine Eingabe der Vereinigung zur Förderung des Petitionsrechts in der Demokratie e.V. ¹

¹ Dieser Text wurde nur in deutscher Sprache übermittelt.

Vereinigung zur Förderung des Petitionsrechts in der Demokratie e.V.

R. Bockhofer, Max-Planck-Str. 56, D-28357 Bremen, Tel.: 0049-421-256970

Bremen, den 13. Mai 2000

An die Mitglieder
des Grundrechte-Konvents zur Erarbeitung einer EU-Charta
c/o Herrn Prof. Dr. Roman Herzog
Postfach 86 04 45
81631 München

Sehr geehrter Herr Vorsitzender Prof. Herzog, sehr geehrte Damen, sehr geehrte Herren, wir meinen, dass für das Zusammenwachsen der Unionsbürger/innen dem Petitionsrecht eine herausgehobene Rolle zukommen sollte.

Ihren Diskussionsprozess kennen wir nicht, wohl aber den Vorschlag für die Artikel 1 bis 12 vom 8. März 2000 (CHARTRE 4149/00), der das Petitionsrecht nicht enthält.

Unseren Entwurf, den wir Ihnen zur Prüfung übermitteln, haben wir auch dem Petitionsausschuss des Europäischen Parlaments (EP) geschickt.

Unser Text (siehe Anlage) enthält für einen entsprechenden Artikel in der Charta zu viele Einzelheiten. Aber man kann daraus leicht zwei Teile machen:

A. den Artikel, vgl. Ziffern 1 und 2, ggf. noch ergänzt um zentrale Prüfbefugnisse des EP, B. einen protokollarischen Anhang, z.B. Ziffern 3 bis 8.

Wir hoffen, dass unser Vorschlag Ihre Aufmerksamkeit findet und sachlich geprüft wird.

Über das Ergebnis Ihrer Beratung würden wir gern eine Antwort erhalten.

Für Ihre verdienstvolle Aufgabe wünschen wir Ihnen Erfolg.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen

Reinhard Bockhofer

Eingabe zur Gestaltung des Petitionsrechts in einer Europäischen GrundrechtechartaA. Vorbemerkung

1. Eine Verständigung auf gemeinsame Werte und Grundrechte beschleunigt den europäischen Prozess. Die Ausarbeitung einer Grundrechtscharta wird als Einstieg der Europäischen Union in eine eigene Staatlichkeit von uns befürwortet.
2. Das Europäische Parlament ist die einzige durch allgemeine Direktwahlen legitimierte Institution des weiterhin im Aufbau und Ausbau befindlichen Europäischen Einigungswerkes. Viel spricht deshalb dafür, das Europäische Parlament als unerlässliches Bindeglied zwischen den Bürgern und der Union in seinen Rechten nachhaltig aufzuwerten.
3. Weil Bürgerrechte durch die zunehmende Übertragung von nationaler Souveränität auf die Europäische Union gefährdet sein können (sind), müssen die Bürgerinnen und Bürger der Union jetzt gemeinsam den Versuch machen, rechtliche Handlungsmöglichkeiten gegen die Europäische Union zu begründen und einzufordern. Hierzu gehört u.A. auch die Stärkung des Petitionsrechts.
4. Maßgeblicher Adressat von Petitionen muss das Europäische Parlament werden. Soll das Petitionsrecht als Grundrecht praktische Bedeutung gewinnen, sind für die Wahrheitsfindung und Tatsachenermittlung wirksame Befugnisse erforderlich, die als Minderheitenrechte ausgestaltet sind. Auf keinen Fall sollten die Befugnisse an die Mehrheit im Ausschuss gebunden sein, weil sonst den Abgeordneten kleiner Fraktionen und Länder der Handlungsspielraum beschnitten wäre. - Auf eine Klärung der Befugnisse des Petitionsausschusses z.B. gegenüber der Kommission, dem Rat sowie den Mitgliedsstaaten wurde im Vertrag von Amsterdam verzichtet. So ist die Rechtsstellung des im Jahre 1987 erstmalig eingesetzten Petitionsausschusses - im Vergleich etwa zum Petitionsausschuss des Deutschen Bundestages - ausgesprochen schwach geblieben. Die Grundrechtscharta darf diese Schwäche nicht übertünchen oder einfach fortschreiben.
5. Vom Grundsatz her sollte ein Petitionsausschuss wie ein ständiger bürgergerichteter Untersuchungsausschuss tätig sein können. Neben seinen Kontrollrechten müsste er an sich über gewisse Sanktionsmittel verfügen, wie sie wohl erst im Zuge der Entstehung einer eigenen Staatlichkeit voll verwirklicht werden können. Was sich hier schon heute sinnvoll machen lässt, ist schwer zu sagen. Zieht man hilfsweise die vom Europäischen Parlament (nach Artikel 193 EGV) eingesetzten Untersuchungsausschüsse zu Rate, finden sich eher bescheidene, kaum jedoch nachhaltig wirksame Untersuchungsrechte (vgl. Beschluss des Europäischen Parlaments, des (Minister-)Rates und der Kommission vom 19. April 1995 und Geschäftsordnung des Europäischen Parlamentes, vgl. Artikel 150, 151 ff.). Für die von uns gewünschten Regelungen geben sie leider nichts her.

B. Vorschlag für die rechtliche Ausgestaltung des parlamentarischen Petitionsrechts

- (1) Jeder hat das Recht, sich mit Petitionen (Anregungen, Anträge und Beschwerden) einzeln oder in Gemeinschaft mit anderen schriftlich an das Europäische Parlament und die zuständigen Stellen der Europäischen Union zu wenden. Der Petent hat nach der Entscheidung des Europäischen Parlaments Anspruch auf eine begründete Antwort in angemessener Zeit.
- (2) Das Europäische Parlament bestellt einen Petitionsausschuss, dem die Erarbeitung einer Beschlussempfehlung an das Europäische Parlament obliegt. Der Petitionsausschuss kann von sich aus tätig werden, wenn ihm auf andere Weise Mängel bei der Durchführung des Gemeinschaftsrechts bekannt werden, und dem Europäischen Parlament darüber berichten.
- (3) Der Petitionsausschuss hat auf Antrag eines Zehntels seiner Mitglieder das Recht
 - a. zur Erarbeitung seiner Berichte und Beschlussempfehlungen von den Organen, Gremien und Behörden der Europäischen Union
 - mündliche oder schriftliche Auskünfte und Berichte einzuholen,
 - Akten und sonstige Unterlagen einzusehen,
 - b. durch von ihm beauftragte Mitglieder jederzeit und ohne vorherige Anmeldung die von der Europäischen Union verwalteten Einrichtungen zu besuchen sowie dort Auskünfte und Gutachten einzuholen,
 - c. Petenten und beteiligte Personengruppen anzuhören,
 - d. Zeugen und Sachverständige zu vernehmen,
 - e. aufgrund von Beschwerden den Haushaltskontrollausschuss um Mithilfe zu ersuchen, juristische Personen des Privatrechts, nicht rechtsfähige Vereinigungen und natürliche Personen, soweit sie für die Europäische Union oder unter deren Aufsicht öffentlich-rechtliche Tätigkeiten ausüben, zu überprüfen, ihre Einrichtungen zu besuchen und dort Auskünfte einzuholen,
 - f. Gegenstände, die über einzelne Petitionen hinausgehen und von allgemeiner Bedeutung sind, anderen Ausschüssen zur Beratung zu überweisen und für eine Antwort in angemessener Zeit Termine zu setzen,
 - g. neben Einzelberichten über die im Ausschuss behandelten Petitionen jährlich einen Bericht über seine Tätigkeit vorzulegen.
- (4) Zutritt, Auskunft und Aktenvorlage dürfen nur verweigert werden, soweit zwingende Geheimhaltungsgründe entgegenstehen oder zu besorgen ist, dass einem Dritten ein erheblicher, nicht wieder gut zu machender Schaden entstehen würde. Die Entscheidung über die Verweigerung muss vor dem Europäischen Parlament vertreten werden.
- (5) Im Europäischen Parlament findet auf Antrag eines Zwanzigstels seiner Mitglieder eine Aussprache zu einzelnen Petitionen und zum Jahresbericht statt.
- (6) Der Petent hat Anspruch auf eine Mitteilung über den Eingang seiner Petition. Auf Antrag erhält er nähere Auskünfte über das parlamentarische Prüfverfahren und den zeitlichen Ablauf.
- (7) Wer sich in seinem Petitionsrecht verletzt sieht, kann die nochmalige Prüfung seiner Petition beantragen. Im Falle der Zurückweisung der Verfahrenskritik steht dem Petenten der Rechtsweg zum Europäischen Gerichtshof offen.
- (8) Das Nähere zum Verfahrensablauf regelt die Geschäftsordnung des Europäischen Parlaments.

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 24 May 2000CHARTE 4313/00*CONTRIB 180*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter an extract from the Press communiqué of the 106th session of the Committee of Ministers (10-11 May 2000), transmitted by the Council of Europe. ¹

¹ This text has been submitted in French and English languages.

In this context, and with regard to the proposed European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights, the Ministers underlined the need to ensure that, whatever decisions the Institutions of the Union may take concerning the Charter, it does not lead to new dividing lines in Europe. It should be fully consistent with, and not weaken, the system for the protection of human rights provided, under the European Convention, to all citizens of the Council of Europe's member States, including those of the European Union.

PROJET DE CHARTE DES DROITS FONDAMENTAUX DE L'UNION EUROPÉENNEfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Bruxelles, le 24 mai 2000CHARTE 4314/00*CONTRIB 181*NOTE DE TRANSMISSION

Objet : Projet de Charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne

Veillez trouver ci-après l'intervention de l'Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM) donnée à l'audition du 27 avril 2000. ¹

¹ Ce texte a été soumis en langues anglaise et française.

AFEM

ASSOCIATION DES FEMMES DE L'EUROPE MÉRIDIONALE

AUDITION DU 27 AVRIL 2000 - INTERVENTION DE L'AFEM^{1*}

Monsieur le Président, Mesdames, Messieurs Membres de la Convention.

L'Association des Femmes de l'Europe Méridionale (AFEM), fédération d'ONG françaises, italiennes, espagnoles, portugaises et helléniques, vous remercie de lui avoir fait l'honneur de lui accorder une audition.

L'AFEM a été parmi les premières ONG à vous soumettre des propositions concrètes (CONTRIB 16, 42, 55 et 105) qui sont pleinement soutenues par:

- le Lobby Européen des Femmes;
- l'Alliance Internationale des Femmes (AIF), la plus ancienne fédération internationale d'ONG pour l'égalité entre femmes et hommes (fondée en 1902), dotée du statut consultatif de 1ère catégorie auprès de l'ONU et de toutes les agences spécialisées de celui-ci (OIT, UNESCO etc), ainsi qu'auprès du Conseil de l'Europe;
- la Fondation Marangopoulos pour les Droits de l'Homme, ONG internationale dotée du statut consultatif de 1ère catégorie auprès de l'ONU, de l'UNESCO et du Conseil de l'Europe et habilitée à faire des réclamations collectives en vertu du Protocole additionnel à la Charte Sociale Européenne de 1995;
- le Comité International de Liaison des Associations Féminines (CILAF), ONG dotée du statut consultatif auprès du Conseil de l'Europe;
- la Ligue Hellénique pour les Droits des Femmes, ONG associée au Département d'Information Publique de l'ONU.

• CONVENT 13 - DROITS CIVILS ET POLITIQUES

Le principe fondamental de l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes dans tous les domaines

1. - L'AFEM se félicite que le Présidium ait proposé une disposition sur l'égalité entre les femmes et les hommes (CONVENT 8) et un article sur cette égalité en matière d'emploi et de protection sociale (CONVENT 18).

Cependant, d'après une jurisprudence constante de la CJCE² et selon le Traité, l'égalité entre femmes et hommes est un principe fondamental du droit communautaire - un droit fondamental de la personne humaine - une mission et un objectif de la CE³.

Le Traité impose à la CE l'obligation positive de "promouvoir" cette égalité - c'est à dire, de ne pas se contenter de l'égalité formelle, mais d'oeuvrer pour atteindre l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes - "pour toutes ses actions".

^{1*} Représentée par Me Sophia SPILIOTOPOULOS, avocate au Conseil d'État et à la Cour de cassation helléniques, experte indépendante de la Commission Européenne en matière d'égalité entre femmes et hommes, vice-présidente de l'AFEM.

² CJCE 15.6.1978, Defrenne III, 149/77, Rec 1509; 10.2.2000, Sievers, C-270/97.

³ Voy. aussi Rapport annuel de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme (1999), point 5.12.

L'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes est un principe universel, consacré aussi par des traités ratifiés par tous les États membres, tels les Pactes de l'ONU⁴ et la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations contre les femmes, récemment dotée d'un Protocole permettant des recours individuels, pour lequel l'UE souligne qu'elle a oeuvré⁵, ainsi que par la Charte Sociale Européenne (révisée) (article 20).

Elle est strictement exigée en tant que condition fondamentale d'adhésion (article 49 Traité UE) et activement promue par la coopération de l'UE avec les pays tiers⁶.

2. - Nous nous réjouissons de la proposition de M. Guy BRAIBANT (CONTRIB 63, Article I) de consacrer ce principe général, en raison de son importance, dans tous les domaines, par un des premiers articles de la Charte, et de l'appliquer aussi en matière économique et sociale. Cette proposition renforce la cohérence juridique de la Charte. Elle devrait servir de base et être complétée par la nôtre (CONTRIB 105).

3. - Dès lors, est nécessaire un article spécifique, parmi les premiers de la Charte, qui transpose l'acquis et les impératifs communautaires et internationaux comme suit:

“1. L'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes doit être garantie et appliquée dans tous les domaines; toute discrimination directe ou indirecte en raison du sexe est interdite.”

“2. Des mesures positives temporaires sont indiquées, avant tout pour améliorer la situation des femmes, jusqu'à ce que l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes soit atteinte”.

Ces dispositions doivent être reprises en matière de droits sociaux (CONVENT 18, Article I) et de droits des citoyens (CONVENT 17, Article A§2), avec les adaptations nécessaires (voy. infra).

4. - Le sexe n'est pas un motif de discrimination comme les autres. Les discriminations en raison du sexe sont de nature particulière. Elles sont engendrées par des préjugés qui se sont infiltrés dans les structures sociales et affectent surtout les femmes.

Les femmes ne sont ni une minorité ni un groupe, mais une des deux formes dans lesquelles s'incarne l'être humain. Et pourtant, elles souffrent encore, dans tous les domaines, de discriminations qui atteignent leur dignité et sont souvent multiples, en raison de leur sexe et d'autres motifs.

Cette situation, que les institutions communautaires et internationales déplorent, tout en constatant que les clauses générales de non discrimination ne suffisent pas pour y remédier⁷, a rendu

⁴ Pacte des droits civils et politiques (Art. 3); Pacte des droits économiques, sociaux et culturels (Art. 3).

⁵ Voy. Rapport de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme, op.cit., point 5.12.

⁶ Voy. Commission Européenne, Rapport 1998 sur l'égalité des chance entre femmes et hommes (COM(1999)106 final), Section 5, Rapport 1999 (COM(2000)123 final), Section 5.

⁷ Voy. Rapport de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme, op.cit., point 5.12; Préambule à la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations contre les femmes; Commission de la Condition de la Femme (ONU), Bulletin de presse WOM/1117, 12.3.1990, sur le Protocole à cette Convention permettant les recours individuels, voy. site: <http://un.org>.

nécessaires des dispositions et même des traités dont l'unique objet est l'égalité entre femmes et hommes, ainsi que d'autres mesures appropriées⁸.

Cette situation appelle des mesures positives temporaires. Celles-ci ne constituent pas des discriminations, mais des moyens pour atteindre l'égalité substantielle, selon la Convention sur l'élimination des discriminations contre les femmes (Art. 4§1) et le Traité CE (Art. 141). La Déclaration No 28 annexée au Traité d'Amsterdam précise que ces mesures doivent viser "avant tout à améliorer la situation des femmes". Elles sont aussi prévues par un nombre croissant de Constitutions nationales⁹ (une "tradition constitutionnelle commune" étant ainsi formée) et sont jugées nécessaires par les institutions communautaires¹⁰ et internationales¹¹.

La nature particulière des discriminations contre les femmes et le caractère précité des actions positives sont confirmés par la CJCE (arrêt Badeck, C-158/97, 26.3.2000).

5. - Notre Assemblée Générale a demandé par une Déclaration du 17 mars 2000 (CONTRIB 55) que soit consacré par un des premiers articles de la Charte "le droit fondamental à l'égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes dans tous les domaines" en tant que droit absolu.

Nous remercions M. Inigo MENDEZ DE VIGO, Président de la délégation du PE et Vice-Président de la Convention et Mme Catherine LALUMIÈRE, députée européenne et membre de la Convention, ex Secrétaire générale du Conseil de l'Europe, d'avoir accueilli cette Assemblée au PE lors des "Entretiens de Strasbourg"¹² ainsi que de leur soutien à notre démarche. Nous remercions aussi les députées européennes et membres de la Convention Mmes Pervenche BERÈS, Fiorella GHILLARDOTTI, Elena PACIOTTI, les députées européennes Mmes Joke SWIEBEL, Maria-Antonia AVILES-PEREA, Sylviane AINARDI, Geneviève FRAISSE, Ilda FIGUEIREDO, Marie-Hélène GILLIG, Maria IZQUIERDO ROJO, Cristiana MUSCARDINI et Elena VALENCIANO de leur participation à ces "Entretiens" et de leur soutien.

Article 3§2: Droit au respect et à la protection de l'intégrité: (notre CONTRIB 105, Art. 3): Interdiction absolue des pratiques eugéniques, du clonage des êtres humains et de la "traite" de ceux-ci, transnationale ou non, et que ce soit "avec ou sans le consentement de la personne concernée".

⁸ Tels les programmes d'action communautaires pour l'égalité entre femmes et hommes, dont le 5ème (2001-2005) couvrira tous les domaines de compétence communautaire Voy.: <http://europa.eu.int/comm/dg05>.

⁹ Constitutions allemande, article 3§2; autrichienne, article 7§2; portugaise, article 9(h); finlandaise, article 6§4; suédoise, chapitre 2§16; française, articles 3 et 4; hellénique (projet).

¹⁰ Résolution du Conseil du 12.7.1982 sur la promotion de l'égalité des chances pour les femmes, J.O. L 20/35, 28.7.82; Recommandation du Conseil 84/635/CEE du 13.12.1984 sur la promotion des actions positives pour les femmes, J.O. L 331/34, 19.12.84.

¹¹ Commission sur l'Élimination des Discriminations contre les Femmes, Recommandations générales No 5 (7e Session 1988) [Doc.NU A/43/38] et No 8 (11e Session 1991) [Doc.NU A/46/38]; Comité des Droits de l'Homme, Commentaires généraux Nos 3 et 4 (13e Session 1981) [36 UN GAOR, Supp. No 40 (A/36/40), annexe VII].

¹² Organisés par l'AFEM, le 16 mars 2000, sous le patronage du PE, avec le soutien de la Commission Européenne et du gouvernement français, sur le thème: "du Traité d'Amsterdam à la Charte des droits fondamentaux: quels enjeux pour les droits des femmes".

La traite, surtout de femmes et d'enfants, à des fins d'exploitation sexuelle, est une préoccupation majeure de l'UE (voy. Conclusions du Conseil Européen de Tampere qui a prévu votre Convention)¹³.

Article 4: Interdiction de la torture et des peines ou traitements inhumains ou dégradants: Mentionner les “mutilations sexuelles” et “toute autre forme de “violence physique ou morale, y compris celle au sein de la famille”, dont souffrent surtout femmes et enfants - préoccupation sérieuse de l'UE¹⁴ (notre CONTRIB 105, Art. 4).

Article 8: Droit à un “procès équitable”: Titre de l'article 6 CEDH, préférable à celui de “tribunal impartial”. Il s'agit du droit à une “protection juridictionnelle effective et efficace”, droit fondamental selon la CJCE. Ajouter un alinéa qui cite à titre indicatif le contenu du droit, selon la jurisprudence (CourEDH et CJCE¹⁵) et le Pacte DCP (Art. 2 et 14) ou, au moins, l'inclure dans l'exposé des motifs (v. notre CONTRIB 42, Art. 4).

Ajouter le droit des ONG de porter plainte ou d'ester en justice pour le compte ou à l'appui des victimes de violations des droits (v. notre CONTRIB 42, Art. 4).

Article 13: Vie familiale: V. notre proposition (CONTRIB 42, Art. 9), fondée sur l'article 12 de la CEDH, l'article 5 de son Protocole No 7, l'article 23 du Pacte DCP et la Convention sur les droits de l'enfant.

Article 16§3: Droit des parents d'assurer l'éducation et l'enseignement de leurs enfants selon leurs convictions, “dans la mesure où celles-ci ne contreviennent pas aux valeurs et droits reconnus par la Charte; dans l'exercice de ce droit les parents doivent agir dans l'intérêt de l'enfant” (notre CONTRIB 105, CONTRIB 97 de M. Georges PAPADIMITRIOU).

CONVENT 8 - Article 17: Droit d'asile: droit de toute personne persécutée, même ressortissante de l'UE, y compris des personnes qui “ne peuvent disposer librement d'elles-mêmes ou sont menacées dans leur liberté ou leurs droits fondamentaux ou leur intégrité physique, psychique ou génétique, que les pouvoirs publics du pays d'origine soient les auteurs de ces persécutions ou menaces, qu'ils les tolèrent, ou qu'ils soient dans l'incapacité de s'y opposer” (notre CONTRIB 42, Art. 17).

¹³ Voy. aussi Commission Européenne, Rapport 1998, op.cit., Section 4, et Rapport 1999, op.cit., Section 1; Rapport de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme, op.cit., point 5.12.

¹⁴ Ibidem.

¹⁵ V. arrêts de la CJCE dans notre CONTRIB 42, note 11 sous Article 4.

-Nous sommes d'accord avec toutes les autres propositions de droits civils et politiques.

• CONVENT 17 - DROITS DES CITOYENS

Article A§2: ajouter “l'égalité entre femmes et hommes” (supra No 4 i.f. et notre CONTRIB 105, Art. A) et “la solidarité” (v. CONTRIB 144 de M. Jürgen MEYER).

- Nous sommes d'accord avec toutes les autres propositions de droits des citoyens.

• CONVENT 18, 19 et 26 - DROITS SOCIAUX

Rappelons les déclarations officielles et solennelles de l'UE, selon lesquelles:

- “le succès économique ne peut être assuré que si les droits humains sont observés et garantis”;
 - l'UE “insiste” sur “l'universalité”, “l'équivalence”, “l'indivisibilité”, “l'unicité” et “l'interdépendance” de tous les droits, y compris les droits économiques, sociaux et culturels, dont le respect effectif elle s'efforce de promouvoir.¹⁶

Article I. Égalité substantielle entre femmes et hommes: Voy. notre proposition (CONTRIB 105, Art. I) qui reprend le principe général (supra), et transpose aussi l'acquis communautaire en matière sociale (Art. 141 Traité CE, directives-égalité).

Article VIII: Droits des enfants: L'enfant n'est pas seulement objet de protection, mais aussi sujet de droits (v. Convention sur les droits de l'enfant). Notre proposition (CONTRIB 105, Art. VIII):
1er paragraphe: principe général (Article 6 Constitution finlandaise, proposition de M. Paavo NIKULA).

2ème paragraphe: citer les droits qui ne présupposent pas la majorité. Les paragraphes de CONVENT 18 devraient suivre.

Article XI: Droit à la protection de la maternité: Il est inhérent à la dignité humaine et d'importance capitale pour la survie même de l'Europe. Dès lors, il devrait être reconnu à toute femme et être plus large que le congé de maternité, pour tenir aussi compte de l'acquis communautaire¹⁷. Durée minimum du congé: renvoyer au droit communautaire chaque fois en vigueur. (V. notre proposition, CONTRIB 105, Art. XI).

Article XII. Droits des parents: il en va de même de ces droits, ainsi que de la durée du congé parental. Ajouter aussi que *“l'organisation du temps de travail doit garantir aux femmes et aux hommes la conciliation de la vie professionnelle et familiale”*¹⁸ (V. notre CONTRIB 42, Article 23, et notre CONTRIB 105, Article XII).

Article XIV. Droit à l'aide sociale: Il serait préférable de prévoir que “toute personne a droit à un niveau de vie suffisant et décent pour elle-même et sa famille et à la protection contre l'exclusion sociale” (notre CONTRIB 42, Art. 24; cf. PacteDESC, Art. 11; Ch. Sociale, Art. 30).

¹⁶ Rapport de l'UE sur les droits de l'homme, op.cit, points 5.1, 5.2; Déclaration J. Fischer à la Commission des Droits de l'Homme, op. cit.

¹⁷ Articles 137 et 152 Traité CE; Directives 92/85 et 76/207; jurisprudence de la CJCE.

¹⁸ Commission Européenne, Rapport 1998, op.cit. Section 2, Rapport 1999, op.cit. Section 2.

Article XV. Droit à l'accès aux soins de santé: “en cas de maladie ou de grossesse”.

- Nous sommes d'accord avec toutes les autres propositions de droits sociaux.

• CONVENT 27. CLAUSES HORIZONTALES

Article H.1. Champ d'application matériel: “Les dispositions...s'adressent aux institutions et organes de l'Union et de la Communauté...ainsi qu'aux États membres, lorsque ceux-ci agissent dans le champ d'application du droit communautaire” ou “dans les domaines de compétence de l'Union et de la Communauté”. Ces expressions respectent la division de compétences et l'acquis communautaire en matière de droits fondamentaux. V. discours du Juge M. Vassilios SKOURIS, représentant de la CJCE (BODY 1, ANNEXE V) et exposé des motifs¹⁹.

L'expression de CONVENT 27 (“exclusivement dans le cadre de la mise en oeuvre du droit communautaire”) peut prêter à des malentendus et conduire à une régression par rapport à l'acquis communautaire. Il doit être clair que les droits fondamentaux doivent être respectés dans les domaines que les États membres ont cédés à la CE ou l'UE, même quand ceux-ci ne mettent pas en oeuvre le droit communautaire ou le mettent en oeuvre incorrectement.

Champ d'application personnel: V. notre proposition (CONTRIB 42): “toute personne relevant de la juridiction de l'UE, de la CE et des États membres”.

Plusieurs intervenant(e)s et des membres de la Convention ont souligné la nécessité de prévoir des obligations des particuliers. C'est à ce souci que répond notre proposition que, au moins les droits civils et politiques, ainsi que la majorité des droits sociaux, y compris les droits à l'égalité entre femmes et hommes, à la protection de la maternité et des parents et les autres droits qui constituent l'acquis communautaire puissent être invoqués “à l'encontre des organes et institutions de l'Union, de la Communauté et des États membres, comme à l'encontre des particuliers”.

Article H.2. Limitations. Nous nous félicitons du 1er paragraphe, qui marque une avancée par rapport à l'article X de CONVENT 13, en prévoyant des droits absolus. Parmi ceux-ci devraient figurer, en tout état de cause, les droits à la dignité, à la vie, à l'intégrité, à l'égalité entre femmes et hommes, comme le propose M. Guy BRAIBANT (CONTRIB 153) (cf. notre CONTRIB 105, Article X).

Article H.4. Niveau de protection. Nous nous félicitons de cet article, qui marque aussi une avancée par rapport à CONVENT 13 (Article Y), puisque il précise que la Charte contient des standards minima par rapport au droit national et international et à toutes les conventions internationales ratifiées par les États membres.

Cependant, la référence au “droit de l'Union” peut créer des confusions, puisque le “droit communautaire” n'est pas mentionné, et aussi en vue de l'incorporation de la Charte dans ce droit. Par conséquent, afin de sauvegarder le niveau éventuellement plus élevé des dispositions du droit de la CE et de l'UE autres que celles de la Charte, il serait préférable de se référer à “toute autre disposition du droit communautaire et de l'Union...”.

- DROIT À L'INFORMATION: Voy. notre proposition (CONTRIB 42), inspirée des directives-égalité²⁰: “L'Union et la Communauté européennes, ainsi que les États membres veillent à ce que les dispositions de la présente Charte soient portées à la connaissance des personnes dont elles garantissent les droits, par tout moyen approprié et efficace. Ces personnes ont le droit d'en être informées.”

¹⁹ Voy. aussi CJCE 29.5.1997, C-299/95, Kremzow, Rec. I-2637.

²⁰ Article 7 Directive 75/117/CEE, article 6 Directive 76/207/CEE.

- QUESTIONS LINGUISTIQUES: Veuillez noter que la Charte devrait se référer aux “droits de la personne humaine”, expression utilisée par la CJCE²¹, ou aux “droits humains”, plutôt qu’aux “droits de l’homme”, et que les expressions qu’elle contient devraient être ou bien neutres du point de vue du genre (p. ex. “personne”) ou bien se référer aux deux genres (p. ex. il/elle, ceux/celles).
- DÉCLARATION FINALE: L’AFEM soutient:
 - la Déclaration Commune du Forum de la Société Civile,
 - les propositions de l’EURONET sur les droits des enfants.

Monsieur le Président, Mesdames, Messieurs Membres de la Convention.

L’AFEM vous remercie de votre attention et de vos efforts pour promouvoir et garantir les droits fondamentaux en Europe. En adoptant cette Charte que vous êtes en train d’élaborer l’UE fera preuve de son attachement aux principes universels proclamés par l’article 6§1er Traité UE et de sa détermination d’assurer que ni cette disposition ni celles des articles 7 et 49 de ce Traité ne deviendront lettre morte. Elle confirmera ainsi qu’elle se veut vraiment une communauté de droit et renforcera sa crédibilité tant envers ses citoyens qu’envers la communauté internationale

La crainte exprimée par quelques uns que cette Charte risque de créer des conflits de jurisprudence entre la Cour de Strasbourg et la Cour de Luxembourg n’est pas justifiée.

Les droits fondamentaux ont été introduits en droit communautaire, en tant que normes contraignantes, par la jurisprudence de cette dernière. Cette jurisprudence, qui n’a pas créé de problèmes de conflit, va continuer à ce développer, même en l’absence de Charte, et rien ne peut l’arrêter. C’est la visibilité des droits fondamentaux et leur lisibilité, voire leur plus grande efficacité dans notre vie de tous les jours, qui sera promue par la Charte selon le mandat du Conseil Européen que vous êtes en train de mettre en oeuvre par votre autorité.

L’AFEM vous souhaite un bon aboutissement de vos travaux.

AFEM: 5, rue Villaret de Joyeuse - 75017 Paris.

Tel: 33-1-45 72 12 03. Fax: 33-1-45 72 15 03. E-mail: assafem@aol.com

²¹ V. p. ex. CJCE jurisprudence citée ci-dessus, note 1. Cette expression est d’ailleurs recommandée par le Forum des ONG réuni à Vienne en juin 1993 (Recommandation No 23).

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 24 May 2000CHARTE 4315/00*CONTRIB 182*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter a letter and a statement submitted by the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural rights.^{1 2}

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

² United Nations: Palais des Nations, CH-1211 Geneve 10. Tel: +41-22-917 9321.
Fax: +41-22-917 9022. E-mail: atikhonov.hchr@unog.ch

NATIONS UNIES

HAUT COMMISSARIAT AUX DROITS DE L'HOMME

UNITED NATIONS

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

Téléfax: (41-22)-917 9022
Télégrammes: UNATIONS, GENEVE
Téléx: 41 29 62
Téléphone: (41-22)-917 9321
Internet: www.unhchr.ch
E-mail: atikhonov.hchr@unog.ch

Address:

Palais des Nations
CH-1211 GENEVE 10

REFERENCE: G/SO 221/912

Geneva

27 April 2000

Dear Professor Herzog,

I have the honor to bring, through you as a President, to the attention of the Convention to elaborate a Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union a self-explanatory Statement adopted by the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights with respect to the discussion by the Convention of a Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union as far as it relates to the economic, social and cultural rights.

I would appreciate very much that due consideration be given by the Convention to the issues raised in the Committee's Statement.

Sincerely Yours,

Virginia Bonoan-Dandan
Chairperson
United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Professor Dr. Roman Herzog
President of the Convention to elaborate a Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union Convention Secretariat
Council Legal Service
175, rue de la Loi
B-1048 Bruxelles
Fax: 00-32-22-856-044

NATIONS UNIES
HAUT COMMISSARIAT AUX DROITS DE L'HOMME

UNITED NATIONS
HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

Téléfax: (41-22)-917 9022
Télégrammes: UNATIONS, GENEVE
Télex: 41 29 62
Téléphone: (41-22)-917 9321
Internet: www.unhchr.ch
E-mail: anikhonov.hchr@unog.ch

Address:
Palais des Nations
CH-1211 GENEVE 10
REFERENCE: G/SO 221/912

1. The United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights takes note of the impressive work presently devoted to the elaboration of a Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union to be presented to the European Council and to the European Parliament by the end of this year, which endeavours to consolidate the existing human rights standards forming part of the 'acquis communautaire', as developed by the case law of the European Court of Justice, and embracing the common constitutional traditions of Member States of the European Union, as well as the human rights enunciated in the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and the European Social Charter. The Committee notes with great interest that the most recent draft articles elaborated by the Convent refer to economic and social rights as contained in the documents Convent 18, Charte 4192/00 of 27 March 2000 and Convent 19, Charter 4193/00 of 29 March 2000, and purport to entrench such rights alongside civil and political rights with the object of rendering all human rights at the European Union fully justiciable.
2. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Convent thus endeavours to stress the indivisibility of all human rights and would like to point out that this strategy conforms with the existing international human rights obligations resting on each of the Member States of the European Union as parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.
3. Considering that in the context of the European Union, economic and monetary policies have been fully integrated, special attention should therefore be given to economic and social rights as a corollary to these steps of integration. So far, only the European Social Charter as revised, with Protocols, and the Declaration of the Community Charter of Social Rights of 1989, address these human rights issues, but they have not achieved the same degree of justiciability and enforceability as civil and political rights. The proposed articles on economic and social rights in the Draft Charter, therefore, mark a considerable step in the right direction.

4. The Committee, while wishing to express its fullest support for these proposals, would nevertheless like to point out that if economic and social rights were not to be integrated in the Draft Charter on an equal footing with civil and political rights, such negative regional signals would be highly detrimental to the full realization of all human rights at both the international and domestic levels, and would have to be regarded as a retrogressive step contravening the existing obligations of Member States of the European Union under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. In such a case, the Committee might have to raise this issue when examining reports by States parties, as a violation of the obligation under article 2(1) ICESCR 'to achieving progressively the full realization of the rights recognized' in that Covenant, i.e. taking measures geared to progressively realize and promote economic, social and cultural rights.
5. The Committee wishes to emphasize that only a Charter which will be fully binding on Member States of the European Union, and which would give every individual a justiciable right to complain about violations of civil and political, as well as economic and social rights, can fully secure the protection of all human rights.
6. Furthermore, the Committee, while noting that in the explanatory notes to each draft article on economic and social rights ample reference to the European law sources is provided, but no reference to the relevant economic and social rights' obligations existing under the International Bill of Human Rights, i.e. under the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is given. The Committee in this connection welcomes draft amendments proposed by delegates to the Convent making express reference to such treaty obligations. The Committee expresses its hope that the Convent, in drafting economic and social provisions in the Charter, will take the opportunity to remind Member States of their obligation to domestically apply the rights of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Mentioning such international rights obligations in the explanatory notes to the Draft Charter articles will ensure their widest dissemination and encourage greater awareness of these existing international obligations. That opportunity should not be missed.
7. Finally, the Committee would like to reiterate its appreciation of the important work presently being undertaken by the Convent. Efforts to integrate all human rights and to ensure full justiciability for them, at the regional level, will be a major milestone towards the full realization of all human rights.

Virginia Bonoan-Dandan
Chairperson
United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

DRAFT CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EUROPEAN UNIONfundamental.rights@consilium.eu.int

Brussels, 24 May 2000CHARTE 4317/00*CONTRIB 183*COVER NOTE

Subject : Draft Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

Please find hereafter the positionpaper submitted by the Engineering Employer's Federation (EEF).¹

¹ This text has been submitted in English language only.

EU CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS – EEF POSITION

EEF

1 The Engineering Employers' Federation (EEF) is the representative voice of the UK engineering industry. It is a nationwide federation of 13 Regional Associations and the Engineering Construction Industry Association. The EEF has a growing membership of over 5,700 companies of all sizes, employing over 900,000 people in every sector of engineering, manufacturing, engineering construction and technology-based industry.

Background

2 The decision to draw up an EU Charter of Fundamental Rights was originally taken at the Cologne European Council in June 1999. The process by which this would be done was subsequently established at the Tampere Council in October 1999 and the Helsinki Council in December 1999.

3 The EEF understood that the aim was to make existing fundamental rights more visible within the EU. Given that ratification of the Council of Europe's European Convention on Human Rights is a condition of EU membership, there appeared to be no other pressing need for a new instrument establishing such fundamental rights. On this basis the industry considered the decision to be worthy of support.

4 It was thus envisaged that the Charter would consist largely of the fundamental rights and freedoms and the basic procedural rights enshrined in:

- the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms;
- the EU Treaties; and
- traditions common to Member States.

5 These fundamental rights would therefore include:

- the right to life;
- the right to be treated with dignity;
- the right to liberty and security;
- the right to a fair trial; and
- the Treaty's four fundamental freedoms – free movement of persons, goods, services and capital – which form the business rationale for the EU.

6 However, in monitoring the work to date of the Convention charged with drafting the Charter and the contributions from the EU institutions, it has become clear to the EEF that consideration is now being given to drawing up an extensive document containing new EU rights, possibly with legal effect, rather than a brief declaratory statement of existing fundamental rights. This is of great concern to the industry.

EEF Concerns

7 These cover, principally:

- The expansion of the Charter to include new social and economic “fundamental rights”.
- The possibility that such rights will be legally binding.

New Social and Economic Fundamental Rights

8 The EEF has major concerns about the possible inclusion in the Charter of new social and economic ‘fundamental rights’, such as the right to vocational training.

9 The industry is also concerned at the apparent expansion of given rights into a general requirement. For example:

- the expansion of the requirement that men and women in the same employment receive equal pay for work of equal value into a general requirement for all workers to receive equal remuneration for work of equal value;
- the extension of the provisions of existing European legislation on Works Councils into a ‘fundamental’ right for all workers to be informed and consulted;
- the possible inclusion of a broad right to protection in cases of termination of employment.

10 The incorporation of such rights in the Treaty would effectively extend EU competence into new areas such as those governing pay and industrial relations. This could lead to incompatibility and inconsistency with existing Member State laws, e.g. those establishing a national Minimum Wage.

11 The EEF is also concerned at the possible inclusion of detailed and limited rights conferred by EU law, such as those specifying the minimum period of maternity leave. The Charter will become unnecessarily long and diffuse if every right provided by EU employment law is written into it, e.g. those on parental leave, rest periods and annual leave. It would also require constant revision. This would negate the aim of a clear and simple document carrying maximum public impact.

12 Similarly some of the other 'fundamental rights' currently being considered for inclusion are so broad as to be virtually meaningless, or at least susceptible to widely differing interpretations. An example is the right to health and safety at work. Such 'rights' could have a deleterious effect on the credibility and public acceptance of the document by raising expectations that cannot ultimately be fulfilled.

Incorporation of the Charter into the Treaty

13 The EEF understands that the status of the Charter will not be determined until after its terms are agreed. The concerns outlined above are therefore heightened by the possibility that such rights become legally binding and therefore justiciable through their incorporation in the Treaty.

14 The industry is of the view that the Charter should be a declaratory statement, if it is to be easily read and understood by citizens. By contrast a legal binding document:

- would not meet the aim of enhancing visibility;
- would be likely to have unintended consequences in view of its length and complexity; and
- would lead to great legal uncertainty for industry, impacting on competitiveness and therefore conflicting with the welcome recognition of the importance of enterprise and innovation at the recent Lisbon Summit.

15 The EEF has great concerns about the implications of the usurping of the Member State competence and the proper role of intergovernmental negotiations by creating new rights in this way. Indeed the Charter thus becomes little more than the pursuit of social and political objectives by the back door.

